No Contract Provision for Damages for Wrongful Occupation Absent Action for Wrongful Detainer — No Damages Owing When Wrongful Occupation Not Proved: Defendants defaulted on a real estate sale contract, and plaintiff exercised a provision of the contract that held defendants liable for unlawful detainer if the property was not immediately surrendered. The District Court found that plaintiff had failed to prove that defendants had actually occupied or leased the property, and concluded that plaintiffs' election of the particular contractual alternative precluded plaintiff from damages for wrongful occupation because plaintiffs' right to retain all sums paid pursuant to the contract included damages of the nature claimed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Actual occupation of plaintiffs' property was not clearly established, and defendants had a right to rely on the choice of remedies pursuant to the contract terms. The contract provided an adequate remedy in case defendants unlawfully refused to leave the property, but did not provide for damages for wrongful occupation in the absence of an action for wrongful detainer. The District Court properly found that, absent proof of wrongful occupation or an action for unlawful detainer, damages were not owing. Weter v. Archambault, 2002 MT 336, 313 M 284, 61 P3d 771 (2002).

Easement Dispute — Attorney Fees Improperly Awarded — Foy and Randoni Distinguished — Costs Sustained: Smalls brought a quiet title action against Goods for determination of an easement. Goods counterclaimed to quiet title to an easement for themselves. The District Court found in favor of the Smalls on the easement issue and awarded Smalls $8,536 in attorney fees and $759 in costs. The Supreme Court reversed on the issue of attorney fees, holding that there was no applicable exception to the general rule that attorney fees cannot be awarded absent a contractual agreement or other special circumstances. The Supreme Court held that the District Court improperly relied upon Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114 (1978), and Martin v. Randoni, 191 M 266, 623 P2d 959 (1981). The Supreme Court stated that the Randoni case stands for the proposition that fees may not be awarded as costs and that Foy is distinguishable in that in Foy, fees were awarded to a person who had sought to avoid legal action, unlike the Smalls who initiated litigation in this case. Although expressing no opinion on the applicability of former Rules 11 and 54(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), to the case before it, the Supreme Court also pointed out that fees could be awarded as a sanction under former Rule 11 and that costs could be awarded pursuant to former Rule 54(d). However, the Supreme Court did sustain the award of costs to Smalls, noting that the purposes for which costs were awarded by the District Court were of the type of costs allowable under 25-10-201. Small v. Good, 284 M 159, 943 P2d 1258, 54 St. Rep. 825 (1997).

Damages Applicable to Time of Occupation, Not Time of Use: Lindey's contended that damages incurred by Goodover for loss of use because of Lindey's encroachments should not have accrued during the winter months when Goodover did not use the property. This section authorizes damages for the time of occupation, not time of use, and Goodover was entitled to damages as long as the encroachments existed. Goodover v. Lindey's Inc., 255 M 430, 843 P2d 765, 49 St. Rep. 1059 (1992).

Estimated Damages Based on Estimated Rental Value: Defendants illegally constructed part of a garage and septic system on plaintiffs' property. Plaintiff gave uncontroverted testimony regarding damages, estimating the value of rental that he would charge a third person at $30 a month for the septic system and $120 a month for the garage. The District Court awarded plaintiffs $7,159 in damages based on the estimated rental value. The stated amount was reasonable and uncontradicted, and the trial judge was free to adopt the testimony as true and sufficient. Smithers v. Hagerman, 244 M 182, 797 P2d 177, 47 St. Rep. 1483 (1990), followed in Goodover v. Lindey's Inc., 255 M 430, 843 P2d 765, 49 St. Rep. 1059 (1992).

Costs Provided by Contract Allowable Despite Tortious Nature of Claim: In an action by plaintiff to rescind a contract for sale of real property because of alleged fraud, misrepresentation, undue influence, and unconscionability, the award of attorney fees and costs that the contract provided to the successful defendant, relating to his defense and counterclaim of wrongful occupation by the plaintiff, was proper notwithstanding the contention that the action sounded in tort and not in contract (citing Winer v. Jonal Corp., 169 M 247, 545 P2d 1094 (1976)). The underlying action was based on a contract dispute. Westlake v. Osborne, 230 M 364, 750 P2d 444, 45 St. Rep. 277 (1988).

Unlawful Detainer Distinguished From Wrongful Occupation — Damages: Personal representative took possession of real property that had been sold under contract by the deceased owner and filed action to rescind the contract because of fraud, misrepresentation, undue influence, and unconscionability. The personal representative's claims were determined to be without merit in a prior appeal of this case. Buyers counterclaimed for recovery of lost rent, based on the personal representative's unlawful possession of the property. Both parties referred to the action as one for forcible or unlawful detainer. The court held that the action was properly described as one for wrongful occupation under this section. The court further held that, in contrast to damages provided in 70-27-205 for forcible or unlawful detainer, no treble damages are provided in an action for wrongful occupation. Westlake v. Osborne, 230 M 364, 750 P2d 444, 45 St. Rep. 277 (1988).

Compensation for Personal Time Expended Properly Denied: Where the plaintiffs failed to establish title to certain real property by adverse possession and the defendants counterclaimed for damages caused by the wrongful occupation of the land, the court did not err in not awarding one defendant damages for his personal time expended in recovering the property and in preparing for trial. The time invested by the defendant is not a "cost" recoverable under 27-1-318. Martin v. Randoni, 191 M 266, 623 P2d 959, 38 St. Rep. 209 (1981).

"Costs" Not to Include Attorney Fees — No Abuse of Equity Power to Award Fees: The term "costs . . . of recovering the possession" of the property does not include attorney fees, as the statutory term "costs" does not include attorney fees. In some instances, the court's general equity powers may include the power to award attorney fees but such an award is within the discretion of the court. Martin v. Randono, 191 M 266, 623 P2d 959, 38 St. Rep. 209 (1981).

Loss of Rents as Damages — Speculative Proof: At least three estimates of the rental value of the property were offered, differing by as much as $34,500 a year. Based on this evidence, one could only speculate about what damages, if any, were suffered. Martin v. Randono, 191 M 266, 623 P2d 959, 38 St. Rep. 209 (1981).

Rental Value:

Fact that plaintiff had closed its gasoline filling station entirely because of lack of business prior to its occupancy by defendant would not prove that the property has no rental value. Pritchard Petroleum Co. v. Farmers Co-op Oil & Supply Co., 121 M 1, 190 P2d 55 (1948).

In an action for the wrongful occupation and detention of real property, the rental value thereof, during the time of such wrongful occupation, may be proved as an element of damages, under an allegation that the “reasonable value of the rents and profits for the use and occupation of the premises” is a designated sum. Leyson v. Davenport, 38 M 62, 98 P 641 (1908).

Value of the Use:

The value of the use is the value to the owner of the property, not the value to the wrongdoer. Pritchard Petroleum Co. v. Farmers Co-op Oil & Supply Co., 121 M 1, 190 P2d 55 (1948).

The value of the use is ordinarily held to be the reasonable rental value of the premises withheld. Pritchard Petroleum Co. v. Farmers Co-op Oil & Supply Co., 121 M 1, 190 P2d 55 (1948), followed in Goodover v. Lindey's Inc., 255 M 430, 843 P2d 765, 49 St. Rep. 1059 (1992).

In action to recover the value of the use and occupancy of a tract of land that had been used as a filling station, it was proper to sustain objection to testimony as to the value of the use of land with respect to each gallon of gasoline and each pound of grease sold, since it is not the withholder's gain but the rental value that measures the compensation. Pritchard Petroleum Co. v. Farmers Co-op Oil & Supply Co., 121 M 1, 190 P2d 55 (1948).

“Wrongful”: Where plaintiffs leased land to defendant for purpose of mining coal and lease did not grant defendant a right to mine by “outstroke” (which is mining by hoisting or removing ore from an adjoining mine through a shaft or opening in demised premises), to which use defendants put the land without consent, and it was not claimed that such use damaged the freehold or reversionary interest, and plaintiffs reserved no right of use in themselves, defendant's occupation was not “wrongful” within this section so as to authorize plaintiffs to recover from defendant the reasonable value of unauthorized use of plaintiffs' land. Speck v. Cottonwood Coal Co., 116 F2d 489 (9th Cir. 1940).

Unlawful Detainer: In an action in unlawful detainer by the United States against a lessee of Montana Indian lands, continuing in possession after expiration of lease and after the land was leased to a new tenant, judgment was authorized, under 70-27-205, “for three times the amount of the damages” that are under this section “the value of the use of the property for the time of” the occupation by appellant. Stoltz v. U.S., 99 F2d 283 (9th Cir. 1938).

Tenant at Sufferance:

Since this section provides that the detriment caused by the wrongful occupation of land is considered to be the value of the use of the property for the time of such occupation, an action under it, and not one in conversion to recover a crop grown on land or its value, by a purchaser at foreclosure sale from a tenant alleged to have wrongfully refused to deliver possession on demand, is the proper remedy, the crop or its value including not only the value of the use of the land but also the value of the seed planted and the time and labor of him who plants and cultivates the land. Kester v. Amon, 81 M 1, 261 P 288 (1927).

When a tenant by sufferance planted, raised, and harvested crops, he is answerable under this section for a sum equal at least to the value of the use and occupation of the land during his wrongful possession of it. Power Mercantile Co. v. Moore Mercantile Co., 55 M 401, 177 P 406 (1918).

Case Notes

Damages for Violation of Restrictive Covenants Absent Waiver: Plaintiffs alleged that defendant development corporation violated subdivision restrictive covenants, trespassed, and converted some of plaintiffs' trees. A jury found that plaintiffs suffered $350,000 in damages for the violation and that defendant had converted trees valued at $6,500, but the jury did not find defendant liable for trespass. The jury also awarded plaintiffs $1 million in punitive damages, which the trial court reduced to $25,000. On appeal, defendant contended that plaintiffs were barred from enforcing the restrictive covenants by waiver and laches. The Supreme Court disagreed. Plaintiffs did not knowingly, voluntarily, and intentionally relinquish their right to object to a large maintenance building being built next to their house, and the restrictive covenant against construction of the maintenance building was neither waived by plaintiffs nor barred by laches. However, the Supreme Court did reduce the amount plaintiffs received for conversion of their trees from $6,500 to $600, which is what the evidence would sustain. McKay v. Wilderness Dev., LLC, 2009 MT 410, 353 M 471, 221 P3d 1184 (2009).

Summary Judgment for Bank That Disbursed Funds to Constituencies Absent Showing of Conversion, Despite Presence of Attorney's Lien on Funds: Plaintiff law firm represented a woman in divorce proceedings and filed a lien against the woman for attorney fees that she allegedly owed the firm. A divorce decree was issued that awarded the woman $400,000 from a bank trust account, but no fees were awarded to the firm, which subsequently filed a collection action against the woman, the account trustees, and the bank, asserting a breach of duty, conversion, malice, and actual fraud and seeking punitive damages. However, at no time did the firm obtain a judgment on the lien or a prejudgment attachment of the trust account. The District Court granted summary judgment for the account trustees and the bank, and the firm appealed regarding the conversion claim. The Supreme Court affirmed because the firm failed to establish conversion of its lien. Without a judgment fixing the debt or a writ executing a judgment upon the trust fund account, the firm could not establish its ownership of the funds or a right to possession of them, and the mere assertion of a lien did not suffice to defeat the bank's or the trustee's fiduciary duties, so summary judgment was proper. St. Peter & Warren, P.C. v. Purdom, 2006 MT 172, 333 M 9, 140 P3d 478 (2006), following King v. Zimmerman, 266 M 54, 878 P2d 895 (1994).

Prior Ruling That Prison Escapee's Property Was Not Abandoned Not Dispositive of Later Claim That Property Was Converted: A prison escapee who was captured and returned to prison sued the prison and five prison officials for destroying the personal property that he left behind at the prison when he escaped. In a prior decision in this case, the Supreme Court ruled that there was a presumption of intent to abandon the property based on the escapee's acts, that the presumption was rebuttable, and that the escapee rebutted it, and thus his complaint was wrongly dismissed for failure to state a claim. The escapee then claimed on remand that the prison wrongfully converted his property, and defendants were granted summary judgment. The prison had a written policy that personal property left behind by an escapee was considered contraband and would be confiscated and sold or destroyed. The prior Supreme Court ruling turned on the issue of abandonment and did not control the ruling on the summary judgment motions, which turned on the issue of conversion. Defendants were entitled to raise the prison policy as a defense. It was not error to grant defendants summary judgment. Hawkins v. Mont. State Prison, 2004 MT 289, 323 M 326, 102 P3d 2 (2004).

No Breach of Partnership Duty of Loyalty and Care When Partnership Property Accounted For: One partner transferred a partnership-owned tractor to a corporation owned by his sons, allowed the sons limited use of other partnership property without charging rent, and used personal credit cards for items for which the partnership paid. The other partner contended that this constituted conversion of partnership property and a breach of the duty of loyalty and duty of care to the partnership. The District Court found no conversion or breach of duty, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Under 35-10-405, a partner has a duty to account for partnership property or benefits received from the use or appropriation of the property, and here a proper accounting was made. The tractor was paid for, the use of other partnership property was minimal, and personal credit card expenses were accounted for separately from partnership charges. Baltrusch v. Baltrusch, 2003 MT 357, 319 M 23, 83 P3d 256 (2003).

Vehicles Listed as Partnership Assets Considered Property Subject to Equal Division Upon Dissolution of Partnership: Two partners agreed that the proceeds from the sale of all partnership assets would be divided equally between them upon dissolution. The District Court included two vehicles that were titled personally to one of the partners and his wife. The other partner contended that the personal use of the vehicles constituted conversion and that he was entitled to damages and interest under this section. The Supreme Court disagreed. Under 35-10-203, partnership property includes property purchased with partnership assets even if not purchased in the name of the partnership. Further, whether property is partnership property depends on the intent of the partners, as indicated by agreement or conduct. In this case, the vehicles were used for partnership business and listed as partnership assets and therefore considered partnership property, so proceeds from the vehicles' sale were properly divided between the partners. Baltrusch v. Baltrusch, 2003 MT 357, 319 M 23, 83 P3d 256 (2003).

Breach of Fiduciary Duty in Conversion of Corporate Property Without Requisite Notice and Shareholder Approval — Punitive Damages Unavailable Absent Showing of Actual Malice or Fraud: Phil was two-thirds majority shareholder in Trifad Entertainment, Inc. (Trifad), and Brad was one-third minority shareholder and Trifad director. Following Phil's extradition to Florida on racketeering charges, Brad secured a loan for $15,000, deposited the money in the Trifad account, and then sold virtually all of Trifad's assets to himself for $15,000. In addition, Brad wrote checks on Trifad's account for taxes owed and for estimated tax payments and withdrew one-third of the remaining balance and left two-thirds in the account, all without attempting to contact Phil. Phil later sued Brad for breach of contract, breach of fiduciary duty, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and conversion and requested punitive damages, contending that Brad's actions were performed with actual malice and constituted actual fraud. At trial, Brad contended that the actions were reasonable considering Phil was in jail facing criminal charges, and Brad cross-claimed for indemnification from Trifad for litigation expenses and liabilities incurred in his capacity as Trifad director. The District Court found for Brad on all counts, but denied corporate indemnification. Both Phil and Brad appealed. The Supreme Court reversed, finding that Brad failed to comply with 35-1-823 (now repealed) by selling corporate property without the requisite notice and shareholder approval. Although contacting Phil would have been difficult, it was not impossible. However, even if Phil had been unavailable for consultation, 35-1-823 (now repealed) does not contain any exceptions to the notice and approval requirements governing the sale of corporate assets. Further, the sale constituted conversion because Brad exercised unauthorized dominion over Trifad property by transferring ownership to himself. The case was remanded for a determination of damages, including possible damages other than those provided in this section if peculiar circumstances warranted compensation for future lost income and profits. The District Court erred in concluding that Brad did not breach his fiduciary duties to Trifad; however, absent proof of actual malice or actual fraud, punitive damages were not warranted. Because a breach of fiduciary duty occurred, Brad could not claim to be wholly successful in the action, so Brad's claim for corporate indemnification also failed under 35-1-453 (now repealed). Trifad Entertainment, Inc. v. Anderson, 2001 MT 227, 306 M 499, 36 P3d 363 (2001).

Use of Replacement Cost, Rather Than Market Value, of Converted Property Resulting in Erroneous Calculation of Restitution: Pritchett entered the garage of a former employer in an effort to return two hunting rifles that he had stolen and pawned to support his gambling habit. Pritchett dropped his flashlight and, unable to find it in the dark, lit a cigarette lighter, which ignited a leaking propane bottle and caused an explosion that destroyed the garage and its contents. Pritchett was convicted of burglary and ordered to pay restitution. In calculating the victim's pecuniary loss, the District Court used replacement cost, rather than actual market value, of the garage and its contents. Pritchett argued on appeal that this method of valuation resulted in a significant overstatement of his restitution obligation. The Supreme Court found that the appropriate civil action arising out of Pritchett's destruction of the garage would be an action for conversion of personal property, the loss of which is presumed to be the value of the property at the time of conversion under this section. Thus, when personal property is converted, the restitution must be based on the market value of the goods converted. The District Court's use of the replacement cost of the items was an incorrect measure of the restitution obligation, constituting reversible error. St. v. Pritchett, 2000 MT 261, 302 M 1, 11 P3d 539, 57 St. Rep. 1093 (2000).

No Personal Jurisdiction Over Nonresident Lawyer — Jurisdiction Not Acquired Through Interstate Communications: Plaintiffs sued an out-of-state attorney, alleging theft and conversion and fraud and deceit arising out of a dispute over settlement money. On defendant's motion, the District Court dismissed the complaint for lack of personal jurisdiction. When defendant came into possession of and allegedly asserted unauthorized control over settlement checks in Idaho, defendant did not do any act that resulted in the accrual of the tort of conversion within Montana. When all representations regarding the claims took place in Idaho and the settlement was negotiated in Idaho, defendant's act of mailing the contingency fee agreement and other letters to plaintiffs in Montana did not create jurisdiction in Montana. Jurisdiction is not acquired through interstate communications pursuant to a contract to be performed in another state. Bird v. Hiller, 270 M 467, 892 P2d 931, 52 St. Rep. 288 (1995).

Presumption of Damages When Elements of Conversion Proved: A detriment is a loss suffered in person or property, and a person who suffers a detriment from another's wrongful acts is entitled to damages. Under this section, the detriment caused by wrongful conversion of personal property is presumed to be the value of the property at the time of conversion, plus interest from that time, and fair compensation for the time and money expended to pursue recovery of the property. Therefore, in conversion claims, damages are presumed once the other elements of conversion are established. Eatinger v. Johnson, 269 M 99, 887 P2d 231, 51 St. Rep. 1484 (1994).

Conversion — Finding of Absolute Ownership Not Required: Under the law of conversion, it is not necessary that plaintiff have an absolute ownership of or title to the property in question, but rather the plaintiff must have an interest in the property entitling plaintiff to possession at the time of the alleged conversion. King v. Zimmerman, 266 M 54, 878 P2d 895, 51 St. Rep. 659 (1994).

Repossession of Vehicle as Constituting Conversion — Damages: Entriken purchased a new pickup, granting the credit union a security interest in the vehicle, purchased credit disability insurance as part of the loan, and authorized payroll deduction for direct payment of the loan. Entriken was subsequently injured on the job. He notified the credit union that he was no longer working and completed the proper documents so that the disability insurance company could begin making the monthly payments. Three weeks later, Entriken received a delinquency notice but was informed by the credit union that the notice was merely a formality and that he need not worry because the disability payments would be arriving shortly. About 5 weeks later the credit union caused the vehicle to be repossessed, adding costs of repossession, storage, transportation, and legal fees to the outstanding loan balance. Without proper notice to Entriken or filing a deficiency judgment, the credit union sold the truck. Following sale of the truck, the credit union continued to receive credit disability payments as well as payroll deductions from Entriken, who was subsequently reemployed. Despite claims that Entriken had failed to properly insure the vehicle and had been delinquent in payments, the District Court correctly found that the credit union had converted the vehicle and awarded Entriken actual damages, damages for loss of use, attorney fees, and treble damages under 30-14-133. The Supreme Court affirmed the conversion question and the award of actual damages plus interest and attorney fees, reversed the award of loss of use damages as being unfounded on legal authority, and recalculated the treble damage award, under the rationale of Baird v. Norwest Bank, 255 M 317, 843 P2d 327, 49 St. Rep. 1026 (1992), to three times the actual damages rather than three times the actual damages plus the actual damages. Entriken v. Motor Coach Fed. Credit Union, 256 M 85, 845 P2d 93, 49 St. Rep. 1148 (1992).

Evidence of Conversion Clearly Conflicting — Jury to Determine Weight and Credibility of Evidence: It is within the province of the jury to determine the weight and credibility to be afforded evidence concerning conversion, and even when the evidence is clearly conflicting, the jury's determination will not be disturbed on appeal. Hansen v. Hansen, 254 M 152, 835 P2d 748, 49 St. Rep. 677 (1992), followed in Kneeland v. Luzenac America Inc., 1998 MT 136, 289 M 201, 961 P2d 725, 55 St. Rep. 541 (1998).

Instruction on Section:

When the jury heard extensive testimony during trial about the nature and duration of the relationship between the parties and determined that plaintiff was not entitled to damages for the conversion of her equipment, the finding was affirmed as based on substantial evidence even though the jury was not specifically instructed as to the evidence necessary to overcome the presumption of damages and made no findings as to any peculiar circumstances that may have existed. Hansen v. Hansen, 254 M 152, 835 P2d 748, 49 St. Rep. 677 (1992).

An instruction on the measure of damages based on the value of the grain at the time of the conversion, when defendant refused to deliver it on demand, was proper under this section. First Nat'l Bank of Kalispell v. Perrine, 97 M 262, 33 P2d 997 (1934); O'Neill v. Mont. Elev. Co., 65 M 259, 211 P 222 (1922).

In an action in conversion, the measure of damages established by this section is controlling unless special damages are pleaded and proved, in which event correct practice requires an instruction so supplementing the measure pointed out by this section as to allow such additional damages as may be warranted by the circumstances of the particular case. Ferrat v. Adamson, 53 M 172, 163 P 112 (1917).

Conversion Evidenced by Notification and Procedural Shortcomings: Johnston owned a mobile home, entitling her to possession, and Galayda owned the property on which the mobile home was located. Galayda claimed that by virtue of various notices to quit the premises, a default judgment against Johnston for back rent, and a writ of assistance directing the Sheriff to remove the mobile home, Galayda had legal authority to physically evict Johnston and her mobile home from the premises. However, a number of procedural errors occurred during the removal process that rendered the eviction actions unauthorized, including: (1) Galayda's failure under 70-24-422 to give Johnston notice to pay rent prior to filing a complaint for nonpayment and possession of the premises; (2) basing the default judgment on Galayda's incorrect sworn affidavit that Johnston owed back rent, which had in fact been paid; (3) Galayda's contract with a third party to remove the mobile home under the writ of assistance rather than having the Sheriff carry out the process, in violation of 25-13-301; (4) Galayda's service on Johnston of a notice of abandonment without sufficient facts showing absolute abandonment, in violation of 70-24-430; and (5) Galayda's failure to notify Johnston under 70-24-730 of the location of the property and of the steps necessary to reclaim the property. Failure to meet these notification and procedural steps was evidence that Johnston was wrongfully deprived of her property and constituted conversion on the part of Galayda. Johnston v. Am. Reliable Ins. Co., 253 M 253, 833 P2d 176, 49 St. Rep. 495 (1992).

Conversion: Conversion is a tort bearing a 2-year statute of limitations. Claim for unauthorized personal expenditures incurred prior to that time is barred. Northwest Plating Co. v. Hoffman, 234 M 360, 763 P2d 44, 45 St. Rep. 1971 (1988).

Unauthorized Purchases Conversion of Corporate Assets — No Breach of Contract: Defendant's unauthorized corporate expenditures for personal expenses were a conversion of corporate assets. They were not compensation in excess of the amount authorized in the employment agreement and were not a breach of contract. Northwest Plating Co. v. Hoffman, 234 M 360, 763 P2d 44, 45 St. Rep. 1971 (1988).

Compensation for Time and Money Expended — Attorney Fees: When the District Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to fair compensation for the time and money he properly expended in pursuit of his property, it was an abuse of the court's discretion to award the appellant nothing for such damages. In this section, "expenses" and "money expended" mean virtually the same thing as "costs". Attorney fees are not included in costs, and the District Court properly denied attorney fees. Kenney v. Koch, 227 M 155, 737 P2d 491, 44 St. Rep. 960 (1987).

Profit Factor in Fair Market Value: In an action for conversion, it was error for the District Court to estimate the plaintiff's profit and subtract it from the amounts testified to as being the highest market value of converted gravel. It was clearly erroneous for the District Court to value the gravel at $3.25 per cubic yard when the evidence showed that comparable gravel was sold by the plaintiff during the time period in question for up to $16.50 per cubic yard. Profit is a factor in any property's fair market value. Kenney v. Koch, 227 M 155, 737 P2d 491, 44 St. Rep. 960 (1987).

Estoppel as to Ownership — Use of Estoppel by Third Party Claiming Conversion by Estopped Person: A dairy operation that respondent and appellants attempted to start was not successful. Respondent had contributed the use of certain equipment to the operation. Respondent was estopped from asserting ownership of equipment as against the bank which made loans to appellants with the equipment as collateral because respondent allowed the bank to believe one of the appellants owned it. However, this did not establish that respondent transferred ownership of the equipment or led appellants, who claimed respondent converted the equipment when he sold it, to act on a belief that he transferred ownership. Farmers St. Bank of Victor v. Imperial Cattle Co., 218 M 89, 708 P2d 223, 42 St. Rep. 1419 (1985).

Sale of Ranch by Joint Venturer — No Conversion or Fraud as Against Other Joint Venturers: Respondent and appellants attempted to start a dairy operation on respondent's ranch. Respondent sold the ranch after concluding that the operation would not work because adequate financing could not be obtained. There was conflicting evidence concerning respondent's intentions and whether appellants knew the ranch was for sale. Respondent made his agreed contribution to the operation, paid other expenses in an effort to find financing, and used his best efforts to make the operation a success. Appellants used some of the ranch's equipment as collateral for a loan. There was substantial credible evidence for the lower court's finding that respondent was not liable for constructive fraud for failure to inform appellants that he was going to sell the ranch. Furthermore, since appellants knew respondent did not intend to transfer ownership of the equipment to any of the appellants, their claim for conversion of the equipment must also fail. Farmers St. Bank of Victor v. Imperial Cattle Co., 218 M 89, 708 P2d 223, 42 St. Rep. 1419 (1985).

Definition and Elements: Conversion has been defined in Montana case law as a distinct act of dominion wrongfully exerted over property in denial of or inconsistent with the owner's right or as an unauthorized assumption of dominion over personal property hostile to the right of the owner. The essential elements of an action for conversion are plaintiff's ownership and right of possession of the personalty, its conversion by defendant, and resulting damages. Gebhardt v. D. A. Davidson & Co., 203 M 384, 661 P2d 855, 40 St. Rep. 521 (1983), followed in Lane v. Dunkle, 231 M 365, 753 P2d 321, 45 St. Rep. 686 (1988). See also Eatinger v. Johnson, 269 M 99, 887 P2d 231, 51 St. Rep. 1484 (1994), and Willis v. Fertterer, 2013 Mt 282, 372 Mont. 108, 310 P.3d 544.

Conversion — Leased Premises: Lessor sued for failure of lessee to vacate, and lessee counterclaimed that lessor converted the premises to his own use and interrupted her peaceful possession. Lessee could not get punitive damages under the conversion theory because conversion is a tort applicable to personal chattels and a leasehold interest is not a personal chattel. Nor could punitive damages be granted for interruption of peaceful possession, as it was not proven. In the absence of a showing of tortious conduct, it was error to grant lessee punitive damages in a simple contract action. Lemley v. Allen, 203 M 37, 659 P2d 262, 40 St. Rep. 279 (1983).

Interest on Savings Account Funds Wrongfully Converted: Where the defendant wrongfully converted funds in a savings account, he must pay the rightful owner of the funds interest from the date of the conversion. Anderson v. Baker, 196 M 494, 641 P2d 1035, 39 St. Rep. 273 (1982).

Presumption Disputable: The presumption contained in 27-1-320 is a disputable one. It may be overcome by evidence of peculiar circumstances that result in greater or less injury than the statute contemplates. In the absence of proof of such special circumstances, the statutory rules govern. Graham v. Clarks Fork Nat'l Bank, 193 M 282, 631 P2d 718, 38 St. Rep. 1140 (1981), followed in Hansen v. Hansen, 254 M 152, 835 P2d 748, 49 St. Rep. 677 (1992).

Wrongful Occupation of Property — Compensation for Personal Time Expended Properly Denied: Where the plaintiffs had failed to establish title to certain real property by adverse possession and the defendants had counterclaimed for damages caused by the wrongful occupation of the land, the court did not err in not awarding one defendant damages for his personal time expended in recovering the property and in preparing for trial. The defendants' reliance upon this section is misplaced, as it is applicable only to conversions of personal property. Martin v. Randon, 191 M 266, 623 P2d 959, 38 St. Rep. 209 (1981).

Value of Lumber Wrongfully Cut: The proper measure and amount of damages for lumber wrongfully cut is the market value at the mill, not stumpage value. Rickl v. Brand S Lumber Co., 171 M 528, 559 P2d 1182 (1977). See also Hartle v. Nelson, 2000 MT 356, 303 M 264, 15 P3d 484, 57 St. Rep. 1494 (2000).

Interest:

Where special damages for time and money expended in pursuit of the property were allowed, the interest on such amount should be assessed after verdict under 31-1-110 and should not run from the time of conversion. Galbreath v. Armstrong, 121 M 387, 193 P2d 630 (1948).

Where plaintiff elected to accept value of property at time of conversion, interest from date of conversion was proper, and court erred in ordering satisfaction of judgment for amount that did not include such interest. Galbreath v. Armstrong, 121 M 387, 193 P2d 630 (1948).

When plaintiff elects to accept value of property at time of conversion, interest is allowed on that value from the date of conversion even though the value of the property is in dispute and the amount of the property converted has to be determined by the court or jury. Galbreath v. Armstrong, 121 M 387, 193 P2d 630 (1948).

Where plaintiff in an action for conversion elects to take the value of the property in money, he is entitled to its value as of the date of the conversion fixed in the complaint, if established by the evidence, and to legal interest thereon from that date, under this section. Sensiba v. Occident Elev. Co., 80 M 426, 260 P 709 (1927).

In an action for conversion, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the value of personal property at the time of its conversion, with interest from the date of the conversion. De Celles v. Casey, 48 M 568, 139 P 586 (1914).

In an action in claim and delivery, where all the evidence of value of the property was directed to the date of seizure and it was not claimed it had any usable value, the damages for detention should have been limited to interest on the amount recovered from the date of seizure to the time the verdict was returned. Webster v. Sherman, 33 M 448, 84 P 878 (1906).

Detriment — Value at Conversion: Under this section, the detriment caused by the conversion of another's personalty is presumed to be its value at the time thereof, with interest from that time. Guthrie v. Holloran, 90 M 373, 3 P2d 406 (1931).

Measure of Damages — Market Value: The measure of damages in an action for conversion is the value of the property at the time of its conversion, and this usually means its market value. Durocher v. Myers, 84 M 225, 274 P 1062 (1929).

When Option as to Damages May Be Exercised:

Plaintiff in an action in conversion may, by waiving interest, elect any date between that of the conversion and the date of the trial on which to lay his damages. Klus v. Lamire, 71 M 445, 230 P 364 (1924).

Where an action in conversion has been prosecuted with reasonable diligence, the plaintiff may exercise the option granted him by this section, of demanding the highest market value of the property at any time between the conversion and the verdict, by giving notice, if he has not otherwise limited himself by his pleading, at any time before the submission of the cause for verdict or decision. State ex rel. Broadwater Farms Co. v. Broadwater Elev. Co., 61 M 215, 201 P 687 (1921).

The giving of instructions authorizing the jury to award damages for the wrongful conversion of personal property under both the measures provided by this section, only one of which options could be taken advantage of by the injured party, was harmless error, where there was no evidence warranting the assessment of damages in accordance with one of the standards and there was no claim that the amount of the verdict was excessive or that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict. Thornton-Thomas Mercantile Co. v. Bretherton, 32 M 80, 80 P 10 (1905).

Duty to Elect:

In an action for conversion, plaintiff may elect to claim damages for the value of the chattel at the time of the alleged conversion or its highest market value at any time between the conversion and the verdict, without interest (this section), but he may not claim both. Klind v. Valley County Bank of Hinsdale, 69 M 386, 222 P 439 (1924).

The party injured must elect which of the two measures of damages provided by this section he will claim, and he may not be permitted to rely upon both in the same case. Thornton-Thomas Mercantile Co. v. Bretherton, 32 M 80, 80 P 10 (1905).

Conversion — Pleading of Damages — Plaintiff Not Deprived of Highest Market Value: Under this section, plaintiff in action for conversion does not, by pleading as his damages the value of property when converted, deprive himself of the right to insist upon damages according to the highest market value of the property at any time between the conversion and the verdict, since he is not required to plead the rule of damages but may in any appropriate way, even by oral declaration in open court, announce his determination to demand the highest market value. Williams v. Gray, 62 M 1, 203 P 524 (1921).

Plaintiff's Right to Highest Market Value Whether Inequitable or Unjust: Where plaintiff in an action in conversion has brought himself within the rule requiring diligence in prosecuting the action, the fact that the measure of damages recoverable under it may be inequitable and unjust cannot deprive him of his right to recover the highest market value of the property at any time between the conversion and the verdict, at plaintiff's option, which he might have obtained but for the wrongful act of defendant. State ex rel. Broadwater Farms Co. v. Broadwater Elev. Co., 61 M 215, 201 P 687 (1921).

Application of Section: The measure of damages applicable in an action brought by a partner to recover the value of his interest in the partnership property sold to a stranger by his copartner in violation of subsection (3) of section 7998, R.C.M. 1935 (since repealed), is that fixed by this section as the reasonable value of the property at the date of the conversion or the highest market value at any time between the conversion and the verdict. Doll v. Hennessy Mercantile Co., 33 M 80, 81 P 625 (1905).

Case Notes

Recovery of Wrongful Death Damages — Intestate Succession Laws Inapplicable — Writ of Supervisory Control Granted: The parents of an adult child who died in a motor vehicle accident alleged they were entitled to wrongful death damages, but the decedent's ex-wife, who was personal representative of the estate, alleged the decedent's parents did not have standing to claim wrongful death damages because they were not intestate or statutory heirs. The Supreme Court granted the parents' petition for supervisory control, holding that the decedent's parents could recover wrongful death damages and that although the damages were personal to the parents, they could be pursued by the personal representative on the parents' behalf. In re Estate of Bennett, 2013 MT 230, 371 Mont. 275, 308 P.3d 63, explaining Hern v. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill., 2005 MT 301, 329 Mont. 347, 125 P.3d 597.

Case-Specific Basis for Award for Loss of Consortium to Parents For Wrongful Death of Adult Child — Bear Medicine Standard of Proof — Award to Personal Representative for Grief, Sorrow, and Mental Anguish Affirmed: An adult child was killed in a vehicle accident. A jury awarded the mother, who was the personal representative of the child, $300,000 for loss of consortium and $450,000 for grief, sorrow, and mental anguish and awarded the father $200,000 for loss of consortium and $300,000 for grief, sorrow, and mental anguish. The defendant insurer appealed the awards. The Supreme Court held that because the father was not the personal representative, damages of any kind were inappropriate in the wrongful death claim, so the awards to the father were vacated. As personal representative, the mother was entitled to damages for grief, sorrow, and mental anguish, and that award was affirmed. The court then examined the loss of consortium award to the mother. In Bear Medicine v. U.S., 192 F. Supp. 2d 1053 (D.C. Mont. 2002), a federal court allowed recovery for loss of consortium and speculated that Montana would adopt a cause of action for loss of consortium for parents of adult children. However, the Supreme Court declined to define exactly under what circumstances a loss of consortium claim by parents of an adult child would stand, holding that each case must be determined on the facts and evidence presented. Significant evidence must include an extraordinarily close and interdependent relationship, such as that shown in Bear Medicine, before a loss of consortium claim may be considered. In this case, the mother did not meet the high level of proof to meet the Bear Medicine standard, so the award for loss of consortium was vacated. Hern v. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill., 2005 MT 301, 329 M 347, 125 P3d 597 (2005).

Loss of Consortium Claim Allowed Only by Personal Representative: Plaintiff sought damages for a loss of consortium for the death of her adult child in a car accident, allegedly caused by defendant's negligence. The District Court concluded that Montana law does not recognize a loss of consortium claim for the death of an adult child, so defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted. The Supreme Court agreed with the defendant petition on rehearing that a loss of consortium claim arising from a negligently inflicted death is an inextricable element of a wrongful death action that may be brought only by a personal representative of a decedent under 27-1-513 and that damages for wrongful death may be recovered only once. Plaintiff did not have standing to bring a wrongful death action under 27-1-513 because she was neither her son's heir nor his personal representative, so plaintiff's loss of consortium claim should have been dismissed as a matter of law. Allowing a separate loss of consortium claim by someone other than a personal representative would create a multiplicity of claims arising from the same wrongful death, in contravention of legislative intent. In situations when both causes of action apply, the personal representative must bring both actions together to prevent multiple actions arising from the same death. Thus, even though the District Court arrived at the correct conclusion for the wrong reason, summary judgment for defendant was affirmed. Renville v. Fredrickson, 2004 MT 324, 324 M 86, 101 P3d 773 (2004).

Calculation of Damages for Wrongful Death of Wife — Remarriage of Husband Irrelevant: Damages become fixed at the moment of the injury. Therefore, remarriage of a spouse in a wrongful death case is irrelevant and should not be referred to in any manner. Kuhnke v. Fisher, 210 M 114, 683 P2d 916, 41 St. Rep. 952 (1984).

Death of Child — Damages for Grief and Distress: Damages for the sorrow, mental distress, or grief of the parents of a deceased minor are recoverable in a wrongful death action brought pursuant to 27-1-512. Any previous decisions, to the extent they conflict with this holding, are expressly overruled. Dawson v. Hill & Hill Truck Lines, 206 M 325, 671 P2d 589, 40 St. Rep. 1689 (1983).

No Recovery for Decedent's Nonadopted Minor Stepchildren: When the issue was certified to it by the U.S. District Court, the Montana Supreme Court ruled that nonadopted minor stepchildren of a decedent cannot state a claim for the deprivation of decedent's consortium and support. Versland v. Caron Transp., 206 M 313, 671 P2d 583, 40 St. Rep. 1681 (1983).

Interfamily Tort Immunity: Personal representative does not have right superior to that of deceased. Doctrine of interfamily tort immunity is a defense to wife's personal representative's cause of action to recover wrongful death damages where husband's negligence caused wife's death. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Leary, 168 M 482, 544 P2d 444 (1975).

Allocation of Amount of Recovery: In the event of a recovery for the wrongful death of the deceased, the District Court may then take requisite action to allocate the amount of recovery in a proper pro rata share among the surviving heirs, but it is clearly not for any jury to decide what amount should be awarded to each of the several plaintiffs in such an action. State ex rel. Carroll v. District Court, 139 M 367, 364 P2d 739 (1961).

Amount of Award Found Not Excessive: In an action for damages for death by wrongful act, brought by the mother of a boy 19 years of age who was killed within the scope of his employment, a verdict for $18,000 was held not to be excessive, the mother being altogether dependent upon him for her support. Hollenback v. Stone & Webster Eng'r Corp., 46 M 559, 129 P 1058 (1913).

Consortium Loss by Widow: In an action by a widow for the death of her husband, caused by the alleged negligence of the defendant, she may recover as an element of damages the pecuniary loss, if any, because of her being deprived of the comfort, protection, society, and companionship of her husband. Mize v. Rocky Mtn. Bell Tel. Co., 38 M 521, 100 P 971 (1909).

Specific and Preventive Relief

Part Case Notes

Promissory Estoppel Does Not Require Showing of Intent to Mislead: The elements of promissory estoppel are distinct from the elements of estoppel by silence. Promissory estoppel does not require a showing of an intent to mislead. S & P Brake Supply, Inc. v. STEMCO LP, 2016 MT 324, 385 Mont. 488, 385 P.3d 567. See also NW. Potato Sales, Inc. v. Beck, 208 Mont. 310, 678 P.2d 1138 (1984), and Turner v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 2012 MT 213, 366 Mont. 285, 291 P.3d 1082.

Failure of Counteroffer Under Statute of Frauds — Handwritten Additions by Sellers' Agent Not Subscribed by Sellers — Part Performance and Equitable Estoppel Inapplicable: After Austin rejected a counteroffer on property that he was interested in buying, the agent, Everett, went to the office of the listing agent, Young, who contacted one of the two owners of the property by telephone. That owner, Cash, said that she would consider sale of the property for an additional $5,000 but that she would first have to discuss it with her brother, the other owner. Everett then added a handwritten paragraph to the rejected counteroffer, noting the sale of all of the property for $115,000 and faxed it back to Austin. When Austin received the revised counteroffer, he believed that it had been signed by Cash and, believing that a binding contract had been made, lowered the sale price of other property that he owned in California. Cash and her brother subsequently received and accepted an offer for their property from a different buyer, whereupon the Austins filed a lis pendens against Cash's property, preventing its sale to the other buyer. The Supreme Court held that because neither the sellers nor their agents signed or initialed the handwritten addition to the counteroffer, the contract was not properly subscribed by the sellers or their agents and therefore did not satisfy the statute of frauds. The Supreme Court also held that the action of the Austins in reducing the sale price of their California properties was an act in contemplation of eventual performance of the contract and not an act of part performance itself. For this reason, part performance did not excuse the application of the statute of frauds. The Supreme Court also held that in order for a court to order specific performance of a contract, there had to be a binding contract in the first place and held that because the additional language to the sale contract had not been subscribed, no contract existed. Finally, the Supreme Court held that promissory estoppel is inapplicable when a contract is clearly within the statute of frauds. Austin v. Cash, 274 M 54, 906 P2d 669, 52 St. Rep. 1119 (1995).

Contract for Deed — Title Vested in Seller — Specific Performance Proper: The Undems sold their land in 1984 without Larson's written consent as required in the contract. Larson did not file a complaint until 1987. The Undems maintained that a grant of specific performance was inappropriate because they could not transfer title they no longer had. Larson maintained that in a contract for deed, legal title to the property remains vested in the seller, and therefore specific performance was proper. The Supreme Court, noting that specific performance is an equitable remedy and a matter of the District Court's discretion, agreed with Larson that in this case, specific performance was proper. Larson v. Udem, 246 M 336, 805 P2d 1318, 47 St. Rep. 2088 (1990).

Award of Attorney Fees for Time Spent Obtaining Judgment for Specific Performance: Appellant claimed District Court erred in awarding attorney fees on respondent's counterclaim for specific performance of the parties' agreement concerning buy-out of respondent's interest in a business, contending that the court failed to award relief on the contract claim. The Supreme Court found substantial evidence that appellant failed to perform the required acts and that relief was awarded by way of specific performance. The District Court properly limited recovery to the number of hours spent by respondent's attorney in obtaining the judgment for specific performance. Proto v. Elliot, 222 M 393, 722 P2d 625, 43 St. Rep. 1358 (1986).

Award of Interest Proper: It was proper in an action for the specific performance of a settlement agreement for the District Court to award interest to the prevailing parties. The adverse party's 4-year delay of his performance of the settlement agreement clearly deprived them of the benefit of the interest on the rent he should have paid. Further, he had the use of a substantial piece of property for that period. Hass v. Hass Land Co., 217 M 246, 704 P2d 63, 42 St. Rep. 1170 (1985).

Remedy for Failure to Recognize Preference — Order to Redefine and Readvertise Position Upheld: Where the plaintiff had been denied employment for a library staff position and sued to enforce the preference required by 10-2-203, the District Court did not err in ordering the library to redefine and readvertise the position. The court found that the minimum requirements set out in the library's Notice of Position Open bore little correlation to the rating scale used in the selection process. Because the minimal qualifications were never clearly determined or clearly stated, they could not have been used in evaluating the plaintiff's application. It was therefore only fair that all applicants be given an opportunity to reapply. Crabtree v. Mont. St. Library, 204 M 398, 665 P2d 231, 40 St. Rep. 963 (1983).

Plaintiff's Election to Waive Claims in Exchange for Something: A buyer seeking specific performance of a contract for sale of a ranch did not have an absolute right to elect to waive his claim against the sellers for rents and profits for the period during which defendants were in possession of the ranch, in exchange for buyer's paying interest on the balance of the purchase price due. He was entitled to an election only if he was without blame and the sellers wrongfully deprived him of possession, neither of which was the case where buyer's first payment was late, though not so late as to bar specific performance, and the sellers acted in good faith. Stoddard v. Gookin, 203 M 435, 661 P2d 865, 40 St. Rep. 554 (1983).

27-1-401. When specific or preventive relief permitted.

Case Notes

No Basis for Damages Absent Evidence of Wrongful Detainer — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff sought damages for defendant's detention of a tractor in which plaintiff had a security interest. Defendant moved to dismiss the claims, and the District Court granted summary judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Claim and delivery require that the claimant prove that property is wrongfully detained and that the claimant has the right to immediate possession at the time that the action is brought. However, in this case, there was insufficient evidence that defendant wrongfully detained the tractor because defendant had no contractual relationship with plaintiff regarding the tractor and owed no contractual duty to return the tractor to plaintiff. Absent evidence of wrongful detainer, there was no basis for plaintiff to recover damages, so summary judgment was proper. 1st Bank v. Winderl, 2002 MT 339, 313 M 306, 60 P3d 998 (2002).

Monetary Damages — Specific Performance Inapplicable: In a breach of contract action seeking damages, the District Court instead ordered the return of a truck. Neither 27-1-411 nor this section was applicable under the facts in this case. It was error to order specific performance when monetary damages was the only appropriate remedy. Merkes v. Mapston, 257 M 408, 849 P2d 210, 50 St. Rep. 332 (1993).

Award of Interest Proper: It was proper in an action for the specific performance of a settlement agreement for the District Court to award interest to the prevailing parties. The adverse party's 4-year delay of his performance of the settlement agreement clearly deprived them of the benefit of the interest on the rent he should have paid. Further, he had the use of a substantial piece of property for that period. Hass v. Hass Land Co., 217 M 246, 704 P2d 63, 42 St. Rep. 1170 (1985).

Specific Performance — Court as Court of Equity: A June 1976 agreement between the parties provided that plaintiff would advance money for the downpayment in the purchase of real property in Billings and would receive certain benefits, including a 50% interest in the property, in return. Plaintiff was to control any contractual arrangements until defendant had contributed, by payment of the monthly installments, a sum equal to the downpayment. In 1977, prior to the equalization of contributions, plaintiff entered negotiations to sell the property. No agreement between plaintiff and defendant was reached regarding the sale, and plaintiff filed suit seeking specific performance of the agreement. Plaintiff was granted summary judgment allowing him exclusive control of contractual negotiations concerning the land for 1 year. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that in a specific performance case the District Court sits as a court of equity and is empowered to determine questions involved in the case and do complete justice. It was within the power of the trial court to restore the parties to the status quo, and the period of 1 year for plaintiff to control was not unreasonable. Downs v. Smyk, 185 M 16, 651 P2d 1238, 39 St. Rep. 1786 (1982).

Money Judgment Equivalent to Specific Performance: In an action on a contract for deed, a request for a money judgment for the balance of the purchase price that may be awarded in an action at law has been considered identical to a decree of specific performance, which requires the buyer to pay the balance of the purchase price. Glacier Campground v. Wild Rivers, Inc., 182 M 389, 597 P2d 689 (1978), followed in Aveco Properties, Inc. v. Nicholson, 229 M 417, 747 P2d 1358, 44 St. Rep. 2098 (1987).

Photographers: The taking of photographs, either by licensed or unlicensed photographers, is not a nuisance, and an injunction could not be had to prevent the activities of unlicensed photographers. St. Bd. of Examiners in Photography v. Keller, 120 M 364, 185 P2d 503 (1947).

When Injunctive Relief May Be Granted: Though a court of equity has no criminal jurisdiction, where a penalty is provided by a statute for a violation of its provisions, such as the 8-hour law relating to workmen in underground mines, and where there is some interference, actual or threatened, with property or other personal rights, equity may grant injunctive relief, notwithstanding the employer may thereafter be punished criminally for the infringement of such rights. Contention that plaintiff employees are estopped from seeking relief because in pari delicto with defendant company was held not meritorious. Butte Miners' Union No. 1 v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 112 M 418, 118 P2d 148 (1941).

Injunctive Relief Appropriate to Criminal Prosecution: Injunction is an equitable remedy, and as a general rule a court of equity will take no part in the administration of the criminal law and may not enjoin either the commission of crimes or their prosecution and punishment. State ex rel. Stewart v. District Court, 77 M 361, 251 P 137 (1926).

No Basis for Damages Absent Evidence of Wrongful Detainer — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff sought damages for defendant's detention of a tractor in which plaintiff had a security interest. Claim and delivery require that the claimant prove that property is wrongfully detained and that the claimant has the right to immediate possession at the time that the action is brought. Real Estate Sale — Payment of Full Value by Plaintiff as Part of Judgment: Defendants, on behalf of plaintiff, exercised their option to purchase for $100,000 a ranch they leased. Plaintiff paid $10,000 downpayment required by owner and was to pay defendants $15,000 on November 1, 1973, and the same amount after the following January 1, at which time plaintiff would be deeded defendants' interest and would take over the payments to owner. Plaintiff paid $2,000 on November 2, and three tenders of the rest of the first $15,000 payment were made prior to December 12, 1973, and refused by defendants. Plaintiff sued on that date for specific performance and was granted it, the court ordering plaintiff to pay defendants $28,000 with interest from the date of the judgment in return for a warranty deed. Defendants were in possession of the property during the suit and paid the remainder due the owner, insurance, and taxes, and made improvements. There was no indication plaintiff wanted the ranch as a personal residence. The effect of the judgment was to give plaintiff for $40,000 a ranch he contracted to pay $130,000 for. The Supreme Court ruled that the relative expenditures and benefits of the parties during litigation must be considered, such as defendants' payments and improvements and their use of the property, in order to determine what plaintiff should ultimately pay defendants for the ranch. The case was remanded for consideration of this issue. Stoddard v. Gookin, 203 M 435, 661 P2d 865, 40 St. Rep. 554 (1983).

Specific Performance — Court as Court of Equity: A June 1976 agreement between the parties provided that plaintiff would advance money for the downpayment in the purchase of real property in Billings and would receive certain benefits, including a 50% interest in the property, in return. Plaintiff was to control any contractual arrangements until defendant had contributed, by payment of the monthly installments, a sum equal to the downpayment. In 1977, prior to the equalization of contributions, plaintiff entered negotiations to sell the property. No agreement between plaintiff and defendant was reached regarding the sale, and plaintiff filed suit seeking specific performance of the agreement. Plaintiff was granted summary judgment allowing him exclusive control of contractual negotiations concerning the land for 1 year. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that in a specific performance case the District Court sits as a court of equity and is empowered to determine questions involved in the case and do complete justice. It was within the power of the trial court to restore the parties to the status quo, and the period of 1 year for plaintiff to control was not unreasonable. Downs v. Smyk, 200 M 334, 651 P2d 1238, 39 St. Rep. 1786 (1982).

No Basis for Damages Absent Evidence of Wrongful Detainer — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff sought damages for defendant's detention of a tractor in which plaintiff had a security interest. Defendant moved to dismiss the claims, and the District Court granted summary judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Claim and delivery require that the claimant prove that property is wrongfully detained and that the claimant has the right to immediate possession at the time that the action is brought. However, in this case, there was insufficient evidence that defendant wrongfully detained the tractor because defendant had no contractual relationship with plaintiff regarding the tractor and owed no contractual duty to return the tractor to plaintiff. Absent evidence of wrongful detainer, there was no basis for plaintiff to recover damages, so summary judgment was proper. 1st Bank v. Winderl, 2002 MT 339, 313 M 306, 60 P3d 998 (2002).

Purchaser Not Entitled to Claim Benefit of Failure of Condition Precedent to Contract When Purchaser Caused Failure — Condition Precedent May Be Waived Only by Party Who Benefits, Not by Party Who Is Bound by Condition. Bender v. Rosman, 2023 MT 140, 413 Mont. 89, 532 P.3d 855.

Purchaser to Bear Risk of Loss to Property When Contract Specified Closing Date, Purchaser Repeatedly Interfered With Appraisal Process, Purchaser's Actions Delayed Completion of Sale, and Property Burned Down 2 Months After Specified Closing Date — Equity Requires That Purchaser Not Be Rewarded for His Actions. Bender v. Rosman, 2023 MT 140, 413 Mont. 89, 532 P.3d 855.

Stipulation to Land Exchange — Pecuniary Relief Inadequate — Agreement Sufficiently Clear to Enforce Specific Performance: The parties were adjoining landowners who had entered into a stipulation whereby they would trade small portions of property and survey and draw a new boundary line. Although the survey was never conducted, they abided by the other terms in the stipulation for several years. Later, after the defendants notified the plaintiff she was trespassing on property that was to be conveyed to her pursuant to the stipulation, the plaintiff filed an action seeking specific performance to have the property transferred to her. The District Court ruled in the plaintiff's favor and ordered the parties to comply with all terms in the original stipulation within 90 days. The defendants appealed, arguing that the stipulation was not sufficiently clear to compel specific performance. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that the stipulation, which included a diagram of the parcels to be traded, was sufficient to compel specific performance. It also held that specific performance was proper because pecuniary relief in the case was inadequate. Miller v. Kleppen, 2019 MT 83, 395 Mont. 286, 438 P.3d 806.

Decree of Specific Performance — Enforcement of Purchase Option in Lease Agreement — Remand for Establishment of Performance Schedule: McDonald constructed a restaurant on leased real property in Bozeman. The lease included a provision allowing McDonald a limited option to purchase the property. The property was appraised pursuant to the lease conditions, and McDonald indicated that he was prepared to purchase the property at the appraised price. The lessors refused to complete the transaction, resulting in an action by McDonald to enforce the agreement. The District Court found that the option provision contained all material terms and was legally enforceable and that the requirements of the option had been met, so specific performance was awarded to McDonald. The lessors appealed. The remedy of specific performance is allowed under this section, and contracts for the sale of real property are specifically enforceable under 27-1-419 because it is presumed that the breach of an agreement to transfer real property cannot be adequately relieved by pecuniary compensation. The lessors contended that the option clause was ambiguous and represented only “an agreement to agree” and that a further contract between the parties was necessary if the option was to be enforced. The Supreme Court noted that the option clause set forth the time in which the option was exercisable, the method for calculating the purchase price and interest rate, the method by which the purchase price would be paid, and the parties’ rights in case of default. Thus, the option contained all the material terms to make the acts necessary to purchase the property clearly ascertainable and was not ambiguous. The lessors nevertheless complained that the option provision did not state who was responsible for paying taxes or provide fully for forfeiture remedies. However, under Keaster v. Bozik, 191 M 293, 623 P2d 1376 (1981), absolute certainty in every detail is not a prerequisite for specific performance and collateral matters, such as responsibility for taxes and insurance, need not be expressed in the contract. The District Court’s finding that the purchase option was enforceable was therefore affirmed, but the Supreme Court remanded to allow the District Court to set up a schedule for performance of the obligations and the commencement of interest, as required in Keaster. McDonald v. Cosman, 2000 MT 126, 299 M 499, 6 P3d 956, 57 St. Rep. 522 (2000), distinguishing Henkel v. Hewitt Agency, Inc., 206 M 303, 671 P2d 582 (1983), and Quirin v. Weinberg, 252 M 386, 830 P2d 537 (1992).

Specific Performance Proper: When a contract for sale of property provided for specific performance and did not contain a provision requiring that the buyer keep the property in the USDA Conservation Reserve Program (CRP), a disagreement between the parties over the property’s participation in CRP was not material to the main purpose of the agreement and did not abrogate the remedy of specific performance. Peuse v. Malkuch, 275 M 221, 911 P2d 1153, 53 St. Rep. 135 (1996).

Buy/Sell Agreement — Specific Performance Available: A buy/sell contract provided that sale of land was contingent upon the buyer being able to obtain financing. The only remaining event to occur to finalize the financing process was an appraisal of the land, but the sellers refused to cooperate in the appraisal process. The District Court did not err in determining that the contract was valid and specifically enforceable when the record showed that the plaintiff was able to obtain financing as required by the contract. Hofmann v. George, 267 M 292, 883 P2d 826, 51 St. Rep. 1007 (1994).

Specific Performance of Property Buyout Proper: In 1960, four couples entered a property agreement regarding the use and maintenance of a vacation cabin on Holter Lake. Each couple received an undivided one-fourth interest in the property. The agreement contained a provision allowing cotenants to buy out a couple’s interest for $1,000. Over the years, all the parties died except Berger, who in 1991 tendered $1,334 to Baker’s estate for her interest in the property, which by then constituted a one-third share. Because good consideration was part of the original agreement and the parties entered the agreement with free and equal bargaining powers, knowing that they could predecease the other couples and leave the surviving couple or spouse with full ownership of the property, specific performance of the original agreement was proper despite the fact that the property had increased in value significantly over time. Baker v. Berger, 265 M 21, 873 P2d 940, 51 St. Rep. 389 (1994).

Monetary Damages — Specific Performance Inapplicable: In a breach of contract action seeking damages, the District Court instead ordered the return of a truck. Neither 27-1-401 nor this section was applicable under the facts in this case. It was error to order specific performance when monetary damages was the only appropriate remedy. Merkes v. Mapston, 257 M 408, 849 P2d 210, 50 St. Rep. 332 (1993).

Buy/Sell Agreement Expressly Providing for Remedy of Specific Performance: The defendants argued that the plaintiffs were not entitled to specific performance on a buy/sell agreement for real property. The Supreme Court found that the subsequently proposed contract by the defendants did not conform to the buy/sell agreement, that the buy/sell agreement provided for specific performance, and that the plaintiffs were not unwilling to perform in accordance with the buy/sell agreement and therefore were entitled to specific performance. Smith v. Johnson, 245 M 137, 798 P2d 106, 47 St. Rep. 1661 (1990).

Negotiation of Terms After Entering Buy/Sell Agreement: The Supreme Court found that the buy/sell agreement for real property entered into by the parties contained all the essential terms needed to constitute a contract and that therefore the plaintiffs were entitled to sue for specific performance. Smith v. Johnson, 245 M 137, 798 P2d 106, 47 St. Rep. 1661 (1990).

Mutuality of Performance in Deficiency Judgment: The District Court properly ordered sale of land when specific performance was contractually compelled; but in the deficiency judgment and right of redemption, it provided only that the "interest held by the defendant" be sold. Because 27-1-414 requires mutuality of performance, the contract seller's interest must also be sold. Specific performance was found to be a requirement to transfer title of the real property. Aveco Properties, Inc. v. Nicholson, 229 M 417, 747 P2d 1358, 44 St. Rep. 2098 (1987).

Parties Agree to Specific Performance as Available Remedy: In a case involving buyer's breach of a buy-sell contract for the sale of real property, the court properly granted specific performance to the sellers. The court held that when, as in this case, the parties to the contract expressly agree in writing that specific performance is an available remedy and the sellers perform all material conditions precedent, specific performance may be compelled. Hillstrom v. O'Neil, 226 M 452, 736 P2d 126, 44 St. Rep. 795 (1987).

Award of Attorney Fees for Time Spent Obtaining Judgment for Specific Performance: Appellant claimed District Court erred in awarding attorney fees on respondent's counterclaim for specific performance of the parties' agreement concerning buy-out of respondent's interest in a business, contending that the court failed to award relief on the contract claim. The Supreme Court found substantial evidence that appellant failed to perform the required acts and that relief was awarded by way of specific performance. The District Court properly limited recovery to the number of hours spent by respondent's attorney in obtaining the judgment for specific performance. Proto v. Elliot, 222 M 393, 722 P2d 625, 43 St. Rep. 1358 (1986).

Contract Terms Not Definite — No Specific Performance: Only where all the terms of the agreement are definite may a contract be specifically enforced. The Supreme Court, finding that the terms of a real estate buy-sell agreement were so indefinite as to be without meaning unless rewritten, reversed the District Court's order requiring a real estate agency to sell the property in question. Henkel v. Hewitt Agency, Inc., 206 M 303, 671 P2d 582, 40 St. Rep. 1674 (1983).

Option Contract — Uncertainty Created by Option and Time for Exercise of Option: Plaintiff and realtor authorized to sell lots for corporation executed a contract under which plaintiff deposited $500, would pay $5,000 upon payment to plaintiff at a future uncertain time of a bonus in that amount, and would pay the balance of the purchase price within 90 days of the $5,000 payment and be given title. The contract was later modified to provide that if the bonus was not paid by January 1, 1980, plaintiff could either purchase the lot by paying the balance of the purchase price beyond the deposit within 90 days or choose to not purchase and to receive back the deposit. That it was not known when, if ever, the bonus would be received and that it was not clear which option plaintiff would select if the bonus was not paid did not make the contract too uncertain to be specifically enforceable by plaintiff. Absolute certainty in every detail of a contract is not a prerequisite to specific performance of the contract. Naylor v. Hall, 201 M 59, 651 P2d 1010, 39 St. Rep. 1953 (1982).

Property Subject to Buy-Sell Destroyed — No Unjust Enrichment — Specific Performance Proper: In 1979 defendants sold an apartment building to the Browns. Browns assumed a first mortgage and executed a note to defendants secured by a second mortgage. Insurance payable to defendants was carried to the extent of the second mortgage. Browns became delinquent in their payments, and defendants filed an action to foreclose their second mortgage but did not pursue it. Plaintiffs contacted defendants in April 1981 concerning the purchase of their second mortgage at a lower price, and the parties entered a buy-sell agreement. The plaintiff agreed with Browns to purchase their interest and receive a deed to the property. Under that agreement, plaintiff was to assume the Browns' indebtedness, including the second mortgage. A fire destroyed the building in May 1981, and plaintiffs sent a rescission notice to Browns and tendered to defendants full payment and an Assignment of Mortgage form. Defendants refused both, and plaintiffs sued for specific performance. Defendants answered, raising various defenses, including the fact that the source of the tender was not from a rehabilitation loan as contemplated in the buy-sell agreement and that plaintiff would be unjustly enriched because of insurance payable on the building. Defendants' contention that plaintiff was not entitled to specific performance because the tender was not from the rehabilitation loan specified in the contract rings hollow when they later conceded that after the fire there was no way plaintiff could obtain the loan because no building existed. Plaintiff also contended that specific performance could not lie because the subject matter of the contract was substantially destroyed before the contract was closed. Here, it was the buyer who sought specific performance, and the contract contained a clause giving both parties the right to specific performance. Regardless of the decision of the court, one party would gain substantially from the insurance proceeds. Unjust enrichment theory applies when no contract exists and the court implies a contract in law. Here, a contract did not exist, and specific performance was proper because there was nothing unjust or oppressive in requiring defendants to follow through on their end of the deal. Maxted v. Barrett, 198 M 81, 643 P2d 1161, 39 St. Rep. 780 (1982), followed in Marco & Co., LLC v. Deaconess/Billings Clinic Health Sys., 1998 MT 26, 287 M 293, 954 P2d 1116, 55 St. Rep. 91 (1998).

Option Agreement — Sufficiency of Consent and Consideration: The defendant appealed from a judgment granting specific performance of an option agreement to the plaintiff and ordering the property involved conveyed to the plaintiff. On appeal, the Supreme Court rejected the defendant's contention that the writing involved was not an option agreement because it failed to meet the essential requirements for the validity of a contract. In particular, he contended that there was a lack of consent and that the consideration was legally insufficient. The Supreme Court found the actual payment of $1 and actual participation in a family corporate dissolution sufficient consideration for the agreement. A memorandum here acted as an offer, and a binding agreement resulted from action on that offer by the offeree. The trial court was affirmed. Van Atta v. Schillinger, 191 M 472, 625 P2d 73, 38 St. Rep. 426 (1981).

Certainty of Option Contract — Specific Performance of Reformed Contract: Where the plaintiff and defendant entered into an option contract giving the plaintiff an option to purchase certain real estate but the parties failed to specify the interest which would be retained by the defendant in certain improvements and failed to specify the dates upon which the downpayment and annual payments would be made and the date upon which interest would accrue, the contract was nonetheless sufficiently definite to allow its enforcement by specific performance. At trial, the court took testimony of the parties and reformed the contract so as to make it sufficiently definite as to the defendant's retained interest to allow specific performance. The fact that certain dates were not specified is not fatal to the contract, as it need not be absolutely certain in every detail, and where a time of performance is not specified, a reasonable time will be implied. Keaster v. Bozik, 191 M 293, 623 P2d 1376, 38 St. Rep. 194 (1981).

Specific Performance — Failure to Tender Purchase Price — Excuse: Plaintiff and defendants entered into a buy-sell agreement for a parcel of land. The agreement was prepared by defendants' real estate agent. The agreement failed to note a 60-foot roadway and utility easement. Defendants in the meantime sold an adjoining parcel of land, including an interest in the 60-foot easement. Plaintiff sued for specific performance of the buy-sell agreement. Plaintiff was excused from tendering the purchase price because defendants by selling the adjoining parcel subject to the easement indicated their refusal and inability to perform the agreement. Plaintiff is entitled to specific performance of that part of the agreement defendants are now able to convey, notwithstanding that it is the very same title plaintiff refused to accept in the first instance. Chadwick v. Giberson, 190 M 88, 618 P2d 1213, 37 St. Rep. 1723 (1980).

Roadway — Interest in Real Property: The District Court did not err in granting the remedy of specific performance under 27-1-411 for breach of an agreement to establish a roadway in a specified route because the right to a roadway granted in a written instrument is an interest in real property under 70-17-101, and money damages under 27-1-419 are presumed to be an inadequate remedy for breach of an agreement to transfer real property. Silva v. McGuinness, 189 M 252, 615 P2d 879, 37 St. Rep. 1401 (1980).

Specific Performance Appropriate Because of Speculative Nature of Money Damages: In 1946, the Link Brothers built a tram railroad at the Lewis and Clark Caverns State Park. The ownership, operation, and maintenance of the tram was turned over to the state. The agreement required that the state operate and maintain the tram and remit a percentage of the fares to the Link Brothers. The tram was discontinued and the track removed in 1976. In an action for specific performance, the court ordered the state to restore the tram to a fit condition. Specific performance was the appropriate remedy because of the speculative nature of determining the amount of money damages. Link v. St., 180 M 469, 591 P2d 214 (1979).

Valid Contract Required: In order for equity to decree specific performance, it is necessary that there be in existence and in effect a contract valid at law and binding upon the parties against whom performance is sought, for specific performance is never applicable where there is no obligation to perform. Schwedes v. Romain, 179 M 466, 587 P2d 388 (1978), followed in Thornton v. Songstad, 263 M 390, 868 P2d 633, 51 St. Rep. 104 (1994). Schwedes and Thornton were followed in Austin v. Cash, 274 M 54, 906 P2d 669, 52 St. Rep. 1119 (1995).

Evidence: Court properly admitted extrinsic evidence in hearing on specific performance of contract to sell realty since contract description was general and surveyor's description was by metes and bounds, but both parties had originally agreed as to the location of the property and had signed the contract. Milkovich v. Orr, 529 P2d 1382 (1975) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports).

Real Estate Sale: Agreement to sell real estate, giving general description of the property, which had been signed by all parties, was enforceable by specific performance since there was no question as to the location of the property and the purchasers had obtained a survey and made the downpayment with the approval of the sellers' agents. Milkovich v. Orr, 529 P2d 1382 (1975) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports).

Inadequate Relief by Pecuniary Compensation:

Under principle that monetary damages are presumed inadequate as remedy in contract for purchase of land, purchaser was entitled to specific performance notwithstanding seller's contention that presumption was rebutted by testimony of purchaser that he could ascertain damages if not allowed to obtain the property. Brown v. Griffin, 150 M 498, 436 P2d 695 (1968).

Where complaint alleged breach of a contract to convey land described therein, it was sufficient to raise the presumption that pecuniary compensation would not afford adequate relief, within subsection (2) of this section, though there was no allegation of special circumstances showing that plaintiff had no adequate remedy at law. Christiansen v. Aldrich, 30 M 446, 76 P 1007 (1904).

Waiver of Invalidity: The objection that a contract in suit is invalid under the Statute of Frauds is waived where the point that the contract, to be enforceable, must be in writing was not raised either in the pleadings or by objection to the introduction of evidence. Alley v. Peeso, 88 M 1, 290 P 238 (1930).

Case Notes

No Error in Finding of No Unjust Enrichment: Plaintiff contended that defendant company was unjustly enriched when a promissory note was unilaterally entered into by one of the owners of defendant business without the knowledge or authorization of the other owners. The District Court held that the company was not unjustly enriched, and on appeal the Supreme Court affirmed. The company had no knowledge of the speculative transaction between plaintiff and the owner until shortly before suit was filed, so plaintiff could show no misconduct or fault on the company's part, nor was the owner authorized to engage in entering promissory notes on the company's behalf. Thus, the District Court did not err in holding that the company was not unjustly enriched. Estate of Pruyn v. Axmen Propane, Inc., 2009 MT 448, 354 M 208, 223 P3d 845 (2009). See also Maxted v. Barrett, 198 M 81, 643 P2d 1161 (1982), and Bank of America, N.A. v. Alexander, 2017 MT 31, 386 Mont. 305, 389 P.3d 1020.

Terms of Attempted Easement Too Vague to Enforce — Deed Insufficient to Constitute Easement by Reservation: The founders of plaintiff homeowners' association recorded a declaration of conditions in 1973 that set aside certain undescribed property for parking and that provided that the homeowners' association would be formed after 75% of subdivision lots were sold and if 75% of lot owners voted to form an association. The homeowners' association was finally formed about 33 years later, but the property set aside for parking was never used and was ultimately sold in 1992. When the association eventually required more room for parking, they sought to enforce the declaration, but access to the property was denied by the current owner. The association filed an action to quiet title, but the District Court granted summary judgment for the landowner, so the association appealed. The Supreme Court held that the 1973 declaration and the 1992 deed did not result in an enforceable easement allowing the association to use the property, noting that a grant of an easement may be subject to conditions precedent, but if the uncertain event upon which the obligation hinges does not take place, the obligation does not materialize.

The association never used the property for parking, so an easement never materialized. An agreement that requires parties to agree to material terms in the future is not an enforceable agreement. The court also found that the scope and terms of the attempted easement were too vague to be specifically enforced, and the 1992 deed was insufficient to constitute an easement by reservation. Therefore, summary judgment for the landowner was proper and the District Court was affirmed. Holter Lakeshores Homeowners Ass'n, Inc v. Thurston, 2009 MT 146, 350 M 362, 207 P3d 334 (2009).

Agreement to Agree to Future Lease Terms Unenforceable: Defendant agreed to lease plaintiff farmland on a cash per acre basis for 5 years with an option to extend the lease on terms to be determined later. Toward the end of the 5-year lease, defendant offered to sell the land to plaintiff, but plaintiff declined, so defendant sold the land to a third party, and plaintiff filed a complaint alleging breach of the lease agreement. Both parties moved for summary judgment, and the District Court concluded that because the lease extension language constituted an agreement to agree and was vague and unenforceable, defendant was entitled to summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Because the parties failed to include complete and material terms for determining the duration and payments for another lease term in the negotiation clause, the clause was rendered unenforceable, and specific performance was unavailable to enforce an agreement to agree to material terms in the future. Additionally, damages were not clearly ascertainable and calculation of damages was also untenable under the lease extension, so plaintiff could not recover damages. GRB Farm v. Christman Ranch, Inc., 2005 MT 59, 326 M 236, 108 P3d 507 (2005), following Steen v. Rustad, 132 M 96, 313 P2d 1014 (1957), Riis v. Day, 188 M 253, 613 P2d 696 (1980), and *Quirin v. Prohibition on Use of Injunction to Enforce Negative Covenants in Personal Services Contracts: Plaintiff broadcasting company had exclusive rights to broadcast Montana State University-Bozeman (MSU) athletic contests, and at the request of the university, plaintiff entered an exclusive contract with the MSU football coach for broadcast rights for a 1-hour program during football season, in addition to several commercials. The university subsequently sought bids for a new broadcast contract, and plaintiff notified the university that there was a potential conflict concerning the contract with the coach. The university ultimately contracted with another broadcasting company and notified the coach that he was expected to provide interviews with the new company. Plaintiff then sought a temporary restraining order restricting the coach from performing services elsewhere during the term of the contract. The request was denied, and plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Section 27-19-103(5), coupled with the specific contract enforcement prohibition in subsection (1) of this section, prohibits the use of injunctive relief to enforce negative covenants contained in personal services contracts that prevent a party from performing services elsewhere during the life of the contract, and Montana courts may not enjoin the violation of a contract when specific performance is barred by Montana law. Reier Broadcasting Co., Inc. v. Kramer, 2003 MT 165, 316 M 301, 72 P3d 944 (2003). See also Anderson v. Neal Institutes Co., 173 P 779 (Calif. App. 1918), and Titus v. Superior Court, 368 P2d 874 (Ariz. 1962).

Engagement Ring Given in Contemplation of Marriage Considered Gift — Conditional Gift Analysis: Albinger gave Harris a $29,000 diamond engagement ring when the two promised to marry. The relationship was strained, resulting in breakups and the return of the ring to Albinger several times, but each time the couple reconciled, and the ring was returned to Harris. Following their final separation, Albinger told Harris to "take the car, the horse, the dog, and the ring", so Harris moved to Kentucky, marriage plans evaporated, and Harris refused to return the ring. Albinger filed in District Court to settle ownership of the ring. The District Court found the ring to be a gift in contemplation of marriage, implying that the existence of a condition attached to the gift, and held that Albinger was entitled to return of the ring upon failure of the condition of marriage. Harris appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. The rights and duties of parties regarding property exchanges in contemplation of marriage are determined by existing law and common-law principles. A gift is a transfer of personal property made voluntarily and without consideration, and the essential elements of an inter vivos gift are donative intent, voluntary delivery, and acceptance by the recipient. Delivery, which manifests the intent of the giver, must turn over dominion and control of the property to the recipient, and when made without condition, such a gift becomes irrevocable upon acceptance, so the Supreme Court will not void the transfer when the giver experiences a change of heart. The only revocable gift recognized under Montana law is a gift in view of death, and a gift causa mortis may be revoked by the giver at any time and is revoked by the giver's recovery from the illness or escape from the peril under which the gift was made. However, the Supreme Court declined to analogize gifts in contemplation of marriage with a gift in contemplation of death. Further, a purported gift that is part of the inducement for an agreement to do or not do a certain thing becomes the consideration essential to contract formation. An exchange of promises creates a contract to marry, albeit an unenforceable one, so when an engagement ring is given as consideration for the promise to marry, a contract is formed and legal action to recover the ring is barred by the abolition of breach of promise actions in 27-1-602. Here, the engagement ring was an unconditional, completed gift upon acceptance, and a completed gift is not revocable. Thus, the ring remained in Harris's ownership and control. Albinger v. Harris, 2002 MT 118, 310 M 27, 48 P3d 711 (2002).

Decree of Specific Performance — Enforcement of Purchase Option in Lease Agreement — Remand for Establishment of Performance Schedule: McDonald constructed a restaurant on leased real property in Bozeman. The lease included a provision allowing McDonald a limited option to purchase the property. The property was appraised pursuant to the lease conditions, and McDonald indicated that he was prepared to purchase the property at the appraised price. The lessors refused to complete the transaction, resulting in an action by McDonald to enforce the agreement. The District Court found that the option provision contained all material terms and was legally enforceable and that the requirements of the option had been met, so specific performance was awarded to McDonald. The lessors appealed. The remedy of specific performance is allowed under 27-1-411, and contracts for the sale of real property are specifically enforceable under 27-1-419 because it is presumed that the breach of an agreement to transfer real property cannot be adequately relieved by pecuniary compensation. The lessors contended that the option clause was ambiguous and represented only "an agreement to agree" and that a further contract between the parties was necessary if the option was to be enforced. The Supreme Court noted that the option clause set forth the time in which the option was exercisable, the method for calculating the purchase price and interest rate, the method by which the purchase price would be paid, and the parties' rights in case of default. Thus, the option contained all the material terms to make the acts necessary to purchase the property clearly ascertainable and was not ambiguous. The lessors nevertheless complained that the option provision did not state who was responsible for paying taxes or provide fully for forfeiture remedies. However, under Keaster v. Bozik, 191 M 293, 623 P2d 1376 (1981), absolute certainty in every detail is not a prerequisite for specific performance and collateral matters, such as responsibility for taxes and insurance, need not be expressed in the contract. The District Court's finding that the purchase option was enforceable was therefore affirmed, but the Supreme Court remanded to allow the District Court to set up a schedule for performance of the obligations and the commencement of interest, as required in Keaster. McDonald v. Cosman, 2000 MT 126, 299 M 499, 6 P3d 956, 57 St. Rep. 522 (2000), distinguishing Henkel v. Hewitt Agency, Inc., 206 M 303, 671 P2d 582 (1983), and Quirin v. Weinberg, 252 M 386, 830 P2d 537 (1992).

Discussions Regarding Land Trade Insufficient to Create Contractual Obligation: Parties discussed a land exchange and worked together with a surveyor in placing stakes and laying out lines for the exchange. Weinberg contended that these actions constituted partial performance sufficient to trigger specific enforcement of the agreement. However, the discussions regarding the land trade were insufficient to create a contractual obligation. Absent a showing of consideration or evidence or indicia of what the parties agreed to and the terms of their agreement, an enforceable agreement did not exist. Quirin v. Weinberg, 252 M 386, 830 P2d 537, 49 St. Rep. 331 (1992).

Improper to Issue Injunction if Contract Obligation Cannot Be Specifically Enforced: Contract between the parties dealt with present and future obligations concerning the construction of a sewage treatment facility and the handling of wastes. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the lower court's granting of an injunction on the grounds that the performance required under the contract was not clear enough to allow for specific performance. Therefore, it was not sufficiently certain to warrant the issuing of an injunction. Westland Enterprises, Inc. v. Boyne USA, Inc., 237 M 186, 772 P2d 309, 46 St. Rep. 724 (1989).

Certainty and Completeness of Contract:

Those matters which are merely subsidiary, collateral, or which go to the performance of the contract are not essential, and therefore need not be expressed in the informal agreement. Majors v. The Shining Mtns., 230 M 373, 750 P2d 449, 45 St. Rep. 283 (1988); Steen v. Rustad, 132 M 96, 313 P2d 1014 (1957).

A contract to be specifically enforced must be complete and certain in all essential matters included within its scope. Nothing must be left to conjecture or surmise or be so vague as to make it impossible for the court to glean the intent of the parties from the instrument or the acts sought to be enforced. Steen v. Rustad, 132 M 96, 313 P2d 1014 (1957).

Absolute certainty and completeness in every detail are not prerequisites of specific performance, only reasonable certainty and completeness being required. Majers v. The Shining Mtns., 230 M 373, 750 P2d 449, 45 St. Rep. 283 (1988); Gropp v. Lotton, 160 M 415, 503 P2d 661 (1972); Steen v. Rustad, 132 M 96, 313 P2d 1014 (1957).

Before a decree of specific performance may be awarded, the contract sought to be specifically performed must, under subsection (6) of this section, not only be certain but also complete. Reeves v. Littlefield, 101 M 482, 54 P2d 879 (1936).

A writing acknowledging receipt of a sum of money in part payment "for ranch of 200 acres (describing it by section, township and range), water rights of located 1869 and 1871. If not as I say and represent the money to be returned", intended by the parties as the basis for future negotiations and superseded by a formal deed executed a few days later, was incapable of specific performance because too indefinite and lacking in mutuality. Kofoed v. Bray, 69 M 78, 220 P 532 (1923).

An agreement to enter into an agreement upon terms to be afterward settled between the parties cannot, as a general rule, be enforced. Livingston Water-Works v. Livingston, 53 M 1, 162 P 381 (1916); Monahan v. Allen, 47 M 75, 130 P 768 (1913); Long v. Needham, 37 M 408, 96 P 731 (1908), distinguished in Reeves v. Littlefield, 101 M 482, 54 P2d 879 (1936).

Contract Terms Not Definite — No Specific Performance: Only where all the terms of the agreement are definite may a contract be specifically enforced. The Supreme Court, finding that the terms of a real estate buy-sell agreement were so indefinite as to be without meaning unless rewritten, reversed the District Court's order requiring a real estate agency to sell the property in question. Henkel v. Hewitt Agency, Inc., 206 M 303, 671 P2d 582, 40 St. Rep. 1674 (1983).

Arbitration Clause Unenforceable: An architect's service contract contained a standardized arbitration clause. At issue were questions of law and mixed questions of law and fact. Neither party consented to arbitrate the dispute. Without the consent of the parties, the clause was unenforceable under this section. Ace Plumbing & Heating, Inc. v. School District, 204 M 81, 662 P2d 1327, 40 St. Rep. 678 (1983) (decided prior to 1985 amendment of 27-1-412).

Property Subject to Buy-Sell Destroyed — No Unjust Enrichment — Specific Performance Proper: In 1979 defendants sold an apartment building to the Browns. Browns assumed a first mortgage and executed a note to defendants secured by a second mortgage. Insurance payable to defendants was carried to the extent of the second mortgage. Browns became delinquent in their payments, and defendants filed an action to foreclose their second mortgage but did not pursue it. Plaintiffs contacted defendants in April 1981 concerning the purchase of their second mortgage at a lower price, and the parties entered a buy-sell agreement. The plaintiff agreed with Browns to purchase their interest and receive a deed to the property. Under that agreement, plaintiff was to assume the Browns' indebtedness, including the second mortgage. A fire destroyed the building in May 1981, and plaintiffs sent a rescission notice to Browns and tendered to defendants full payment and an Assignment of Mortgage form. Defendants refused both, and plaintiffs sued for specific performance. Defendants answered, raising various defenses, including the fact that the source of the tender was not from a rehabilitation loan as contemplated in the buy-sell agreement and that plaintiff would be unjustly enriched because of insurance payable on the building. Defendants' contention that plaintiff was not entitled to specific performance because the tender was not from the rehabilitation loan specified in the contract rings hollow when they later conceded that after the fire there was no way plaintiff could obtain the loan because no building existed. Plaintiff also contended that specific performance could not lie because the subject matter of the contract was substantially destroyed before the contract was closed. Here, it was the buyer who sought specific performance, and the contract contained a clause giving both parties the right to specific performance. Regardless of the decision of the court, one party would gain substantially from the insurance proceeds. Unjust enrichment theory applies when no contract exists and the court implies a contract in law. Here, a contract did not exist, and specific performance was proper because there was nothing unjust or oppressive in requiring defendants to follow through on their end of the deal. Maxted v. Barrett, 198 M 81, 643 P2d 1161, 39 St. Rep. 780 (1982).

Specific Performance — Failure to Tender Purchase Price — Excuse: Plaintiff and defendants entered into a buy-sell agreement for a parcel of land. The agreement was prepared by defendants' real estate agent. The agreement failed to note a 60-foot roadway and utility easement. Defendants in the meantime sold an adjoining parcel of land, including an interest in the 60-foot easement. Plaintiff sued for specific performance of the buy-sell agreement. Plaintiff was excused from tendering the purchase price because defendants by selling the adjoining parcel subject to the easement indicated their refusal and inability to perform the agreement. Plaintiff is entitled to specific performance of that part of the agreement defendants are now able to convey, notwithstanding that it is the very same title plaintiff refused to accept in the first instance. Chadwick v. Giberson, 190 M 88, 618 P2d 1213, 37 St. Rep. 1723 (1980).

Valid Contract Required: In order for equity to decree specific performance, it is necessary that there be in existence and in effect a contract valid at law and binding upon the parties against whom performance is sought, for specific performance is never applicable where there is no obligation to perform. Schwedes v. Romain, 179 M 466, 587 P2d 388 (1978), followed in Quirin v. Weinberg, 252 M 386, 830 P2d 537, 49 St. Rep. 331 (1992), and Austin v. Cash, 274 M 54, 906 P2d 669, 52 St. Rep. 1119 (1995).

Specificity of Property Description: When there was no dispute between the parties as to the identity of real property to be sold and when the agents of the sellers, the sellers, and the buyers approved a subsequent survey of the property, the court did not err in granting specific performance for the sale of the property. Milkovich v. Orr, 529 P2d 1382 (1975) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports).

Lease With Option to Buy: Plaintiff was entitled to specific performance of agreement by which defendants gave plaintiff an exclusive option to purchase land under the existing lease for $8,500; plaintiff's method of exercising the option was to pay defendants $1,500 before November 1, 1951; that sum would constitute the downpayment on the property; payment of the balance was provided for by the plaintiff delivering to the defendants two-thirds of the crop raised each year, such crop share to cover the payment due and owing on the contract for that year; and it was further provided that the plaintiff was to summer fallow 45 acres of land during the year 1951. Steen v. Rustad, 132 M 96, 313 P2d 1014 (1957).

27-1-413. Specific performance not to be oppressive.

Case Notes

Oppressive to Require Specific Performance — Party Not to Receive Title After Paying Full Purchase Price: The parties, Gandy and Eschler, entered into an agreement releasing each other from the performance of a real estate purchase contract upon the payment of $20,000 by Eschler to Gandy. Eschler defaulted on the payments, and Gandy brought an action seeking specific performance requiring Eschler to pay the underlying contract price of $258,640 or in the alternative the $20,000. The Supreme Court held that Gandy could not seek specific performance because he no longer had title to the property and it would be oppressive to require Eschler to pay the full purchase price required by the contract and to not receive the property after having performed. Gandy v. Eschler, 261 M 355, 862 P2d 1116, 50 St. Rep. 1357 (1993).

27-1-414. Right to specific performance to be mutual.

Case Notes

Ability of Both Parties to Perform Contract Obligations Required to Obtain Specific Performance: The parties, Gandy and Eschler, entered into an agreement releasing each other from the performance of a real estate purchase contract upon the payment of $20,000 by Eschler to Gandy. Eschler defaulted on the payments, and Gandy brought an action seeking specific performance requiring Eschler to pay the underlying contract price of $258,000 or in the alternative the $20,000. The Supreme Court held that Gandy could not seek specific performance because he no longer had title to the property and therefore could not transfer the property to Eschler if Eschler were required to fulfill his contract obligation and pay the full purchase price. Gandy v. Eschler, 261 M 355, 862 P2d 1116, 50 St. Rep. 1357 (1993).

Mutuality of Performance in Deficiency Judgment: The District Court properly ordered sale of land when specific performance was contractually compelled; but in the deficiency judgment and right of redemption, it provided only that the "interest held by the defendant" be sold. Because 27-1-414 requires mutuality of performance, the contract seller's interest must also be sold. Specific performance was found to be a requirement to transfer title of the real property. Aveco Properties, Inc. v. Nicholson, 229 M 417, 747 P2d 1358, 44 St. Rep. 2098 (1987).

Execution and Delivery of Quitclaim Deed — Lack of Mutuality for Agreement to Reconvey: The District Court found that a quitclaim deed was executed and delivered by the Morins to the Mapstons before a typewritten note was signed by Mapstons to convey the subject property to Morins. This central finding of fact was held to be clearly supported in the evidence. The legal effect of the finding is that the quitclaim deed constituted a gift to Mapstons, no consideration being necessary. The transfer vested all actual title which Morins then had, since no different intention was expressed or necessarily implied. The typewritten note cannot be specifically enforced by Morins because they had not received an adequate consideration for the contract and because the contract lacks mutuality. Moreover, no involuntary trust was created. Morin v. Mapston, 217 M 403, 705 P2d 118, 42 St. Rep. 1283 (1985).

Property Subject to Buy-Sell Destroyed — No Unjust Enrichment — Specific Performance Proper: In 1979 defendants sold an apartment building to the Browns. Browns assumed a first mortgage and executed a note to defendants secured by a second mortgage. Insurance payable to defendants was carried to the extent of the second mortgage. Browns became delinquent in their payments, and defendants filed an action to foreclose their second mortgage but did not pursue it. Plaintiffs contacted defendants in April 1981 concerning the purchase of their second mortgage at a lower price, and the parties entered a buy-sell agreement. The plaintiff agreed with Browns to purchase their interest and receive a deed to the property. Under that agreement, plaintiff was to assume the Browns' indebtedness, including the second mortgage. A fire destroyed the building in May 1981, and plaintiffs sent a rescission notice to Browns and tendered to defendants full payment and an Assignment of Mortgage form. Defendants refused both, and plaintiffs sued for specific performance. Defendants answered, raising various defenses, including the fact that the source of the tender was not from a rehabilitation loan as contemplated in the buy-sell agreement and that plaintiff would be unjustly enriched because of insurance payable on the building. Defendants' contention that plaintiff was not entitled to specific performance because the tender was not from the rehabilitation loan specified in the contract rings hollow when they later conceded that after the fire there was no way plaintiff could obtain the loan because no building existed. Plaintiff also contended that specific performance could not lie because the subject matter of the contract was substantially destroyed before the contract was closed. Here, it was the buyer who sought specific performance, and the contract contained a clause giving both parties the right to specific performance. Regardless of the decision of the court, one party would gain substantially from the insurance proceeds. Unjust enrichment theory applies when no contract exists and the court implies a contract in law. Here, a contract did not exist, and specific performance was proper because there was nothing unjust or oppressive in requiring defendants to follow through on their end of the deal. Maxted v. Barrett, 198 M 81, 643 P2d 1161, 39 St. Rep. 780 (1982).

Option to Purchase in Mining Agreement: The rule that contracts which do not involve mutuality cannot be specifically enforced is modified in favor of a holder of an option to purchase in a mining agreement. The option may be specifically enforced because the purpose of the agreement is to vest in one of the parties the privilege of determining whether the agreement is to be executed. This is necessary because of the great cost involved in investigating the value of the mine. Rogers v. Relyea, 184 M 1, 601 P2d 37 (1979).

Buy/Sell Signed by One of Two Purchasers: A buy/sell agreement was signed by one of two purchasers on behalf of himself and the other purchaser. In a suit for specific performance, the failure of one of the purchasers to sign the contract does not prevent the purchasers from obtaining specific performance. Ingalls v. Brady, 180 M 443, 591 P2d 200 (1979).

Specific Performance of Lease Option — Conditions Precedent: The court properly denied plaintiff's motion for summary judgment on an action for specific performance of a lease option agreement when he failed to show that he fully and fairly performed conditions precedent. Seifert v. Seifert, 173 M 501, 568 P2d 155 (1977).

Sale of Mining Property: Vendee of a contract for the sale of mining property cannot compel specific performance by the vendor, where the contract called for the vendee to deposit a specific amount of cash in the bank and the vendee had not done so. Sidwell v. The New Mine Sapphire Synd., 130 M 189, 297 P2d 299 (1956), followed in Rocky Mtn. Bank v. Stuart, 280 M 74, 928 P2d 243, 53 St. Rep. 1305 (1996). (Dissenting opinion, 130 M 189, 297 P2d 299 (1956).)

Application of Section:

Where plaintiff has done everything under the contract except to issue and deliver the certificates of stock to defendant and this can be specifically enforced, this section does not prevent plaintiff from specific performance to compel defendant to assign an oil and gas lease which was entered into. Bull Creek Oil & Gas Dev. v. Bethel, 127 M 222, 258 P2d 960 (1953).

Where plaintiff, after agreeing with defendant that he would put up money to purchase a gas and oil lease, did not put it up, he could not compel the defendant to transfer a half interest in the lease since to be entitled to specific performance he must show that he has performed his part of the agreement. McDonald v. Stewart, 127 M 188, 259 P2d 799 (1953).

As a general rule of equity, a contract will not be specifically enforced unless there is mutuality of obligation and remedy, i.e., where one of the parties is not bound by the contract, he cannot call upon the courts to compel specific performance by the other party, which rule is substantially embodied in this section. Templeton v. Williard, 83 M 317, 272 P 522 (1928), distinguished in Bull Creek Oil & Gas Dev. v. Bethel, 127 M 222, 258 P2d 960 (1953).

Under this section, the vendor of land under a contract giving him the privilege to declare all of the deferred payments immediately due upon failure to make any one of them may maintain an action against the vendee to compel specific performance of the contract on his part by paying the balance of the purchase price. Saint v. Beal, 66 M 292, 213 P 248 (1923).

Under this section, when either of the parties to an obligation is entitled to specific performance, the other party is also entitled to it, the remedy being mutual. Saint v. Beal, 66 M 292, 213 P 248 (1923).

Waiver of Performance: Unless performance is waived or excused, a plaintiff seeking to enforce a contract must perform his obligations and plaintiff's willful violation of an essential covenant of a contract is a defense to specific enforcement of the contract. McDonald v. Stewart, 127 M 188, 259 P2d 799 (1953).

Option to Repurchase: Want of mutuality did not preclude specific enforcement of written option to repurchase liquor business, where defendant's obligation under decree was conditioned upon payment by plaintiff of amounts found by the court to be due defendant. Brubaker v. D'Orazi, 120 M 22, 179 P2d 538 (1947).

Reconveyance of Realty: Where plaintiff conveyed real property to his partner to be used in the partnership business under the condition that the partner assume certain mortgage payments and if he failed to do so, plaintiff would be entitled to again become the sole owner of the property and the partner entitled to repayment of the money he invested in the business, a decree awarding specific performance by reconveyance of the realty, conditioned that plaintiff mortgage all the partnership property to secure defendant's refund under his counterclaim, the court finding that a money judgment against plaintiff would probably be uncollectible, was sustained by the evidence. Hall v. Lommasson, 113 M 272, 124 P2d 694 (1942).

Exchange of Land: Where a party seeking specific performance of an agreement for an exchange of land tendered a deed and offered to do equity, the remedy became mutual, the fact that when the agreement was made the element of mutuality may have been absent then becoming immaterial. Hogan v. Thrasher, 72 M 318, 233 P 607 (1925).

Case Notes

Mistake as to Taxes — May Negate Specific Performance as Remedy: Double AA Corporation sought specific performance to require Newland & Company, a trust company, to convey land that it held in trust and had entered into a contract to sell to Double AA. The Supreme Court found that the evidence showed that Shirley Bragg, who had agreed to the sale on behalf of the trust, had been incorrectly advised that unless the trust sold the ranch prior to the death of her mother, the trust would be liable for a substantial amount of taxes upon her mother's death. The Supreme Court held that in light of all the equities of the case, Bragg's mistake regarding taxes was a sufficient reason to deny specific performance and to limit Double AA's remedy to money damages. Double AA Corp. v. Newland & Co., 273 M 486, 905 P2d 138, 52 St. Rep. 1073 (1995). See also Stovall v. Watt, 187 M 439, 610 P2d 164 (1980).

Execution and Delivery of Quitclaim Deed — Lack of Consideration for Agreement to Reconvey: The District Court found that a quitclaim deed was executed and delivered by the Morins to the Mapstons before a typewritten note was signed by Mapstons to convey the subject property to Morins. This central finding of fact was held to be clearly supported in the evidence. The legal effect of the finding is that the quitclaim deed constituted a gift to Mapstons, no consideration being necessary. The transfer vested all actual title which Morins then had, since no different intention was expressed or necessarily implied. The typewritten note cannot be specifically enforced by Morins because they had not received an adequate consideration for the contract and because the contract lacks mutuality. Moreover, no involuntary trust was created. Morin v. Mapston, 217 M 403, 705 P2d 118, 42 St. Rep. 1283 (1985).

Unclean Hands Doctrine — Applicability — Divorce Agreement: Where wife sought to avoid compliance with terms of decree of dissolution, arguing that husband's unclean hands prevented specific performance under 27-1-415, the court held that section is only applicable to contracts. It is not applicable to the enforcement of a settlement agreement incorporated into a decree of dissolution, which must be enforced as a judgment. The unclean hands doctrine is not a defense to enforcement of a judgment, especially when the defense is based on acts occurring before the entry of judgment, and the judgment has not been set aside. Lawrence v. Lawrence, 197 M 262, 642 P2d 1043, 39 St. Rep. 548 (1982).

Option Agreement — Sufficiency of Consent and Consideration: The defendant appealed from a judgment granting specific performance of an option agreement to the plaintiff and ordering the property involved conveyed to the plaintiff. On appeal, the Supreme Court rejected the defendant's contention that the writing involved was not an option agreement because it failed to meet the essential requirements for the validity of a contract. In particular, he contended that there was a lack of consent and that the consideration was legally insufficient. The Supreme Court found the actual payment of $1 and actual participation in a family corporate dissolution sufficient consideration for the agreement. A memorandum here acted as an offer, and a binding agreement resulted from action on that offer by the offeree. The trial court was affirmed. Van Atta v. Schillinger, 191 M 472, 625 P2d 73, 38 St. Rep. 426 (1981).

Five Dollars as Sufficient Consideration — Option Enforceable by Specific Performance: Where the plaintiff and defendant entered into an option contract giving the plaintiff the option to purchase certain lands belonging to the defendant worth approximately $200,000 and the contract recited a consideration of $5 for an irrevocable 6-month option and a revocable 6-month option, the consideration was sufficient to create a valid contract as well as adequate to allow the equitable remedy of specific enforcement. The buyer's efforts to obtain an FHA loan also constituted part of the consideration. In the absence of evidence of fraud, if the purchase price for the land is adequate, even nominal consideration is adequate to support an option. Keaster v. Bozik, 191 M 293, 623 P2d 1376, 38 St. Rep. 194 (1981).

Breach of Agreement to Convey Land — Bad Faith — Damages — Refusal to Compel Specific Performance: A parcel of land owned by one Edmund Andrett had been leased for several years to parties named Hardy. After Andrett's death, Lillian Watt became the owner of the land, still subject to a Hardy lease. Prior to the expiration of the lease, Watt and the Hardys were disputing lease rental payments. Watt believed that the Hardy lease had expired and that the Hardys were in default on rental payments. For this reason, she contacted attorney Mason and asked him to find a new tenant. Unknown to Watt or her attorney, however, the leasing agency which Andrett had used for years before his death had renewed a lease and purchase option with the Hardy son March 1, 1968, which lease wasn't recorded until November 22, 1969. Meanwhile, attorney Mason had leased the farmland to the Stovalls, with an option to purchase, which lease was dated March 3, 1969, and recorded, previous to the Hardy lease, on September 22, 1969. The court balanced the equities of the ensuing chaos and decided that between the Hardys and the Stovalls the total circumstances favored the result reached by the trial court, upholding the sale of the land to the Hardys. The court also affirmed the damages against Lillian Watt for her breach of the agreement with the Stovalls. In so doing, they noted Lillian Watt, directly and indirectly through her attorney, kept information about sale of the land from the Stovalls unfairly and failed to answer some of their inquiries by mail and telephone. The court concluded that Watt's conduct constituted bad faith. The damages were the difference between the value of the land, as found by the trial court, and the actual contract price. Stovall v. Watt, 187 M 439, 610 P2d 164 (1980). See also Double AA Corp. v. Newland & Co., 273 M 486, 905 P2d 138, 52 St. Rep. 1073 (1995).

Valid Contract Required: In order for equity to decree specific performance, it is necessary that there be in existence and in effect a contract valid at law and binding upon the parties against whom performance is sought, for specific performance is never applicable where there is no obligation to perform. Schwedes v. Romain, 179 M 466, 587 P2d 388 (1978), followed in Austin v. Cash, 274 M 54, 906 P2d 669, 52 St. Rep. 1119 (1995).

Contract Barred at Law as in Equity: The legal deficiencies of inadequacy of consideration and lack of consent are equally applicable to bar enforcement of a written contract at law as in equity. Schlegel v. Moorhead, 177 M 456, 582 P2d 336 (1978).

Transferee of Stock — Speculative Damages — Specific Performance: The granting of specific performance is discretionary, and where the awarding of damages for breach of an agreement to transfer shares of stock would not have been appropriate due to the speculative value of the stock, a decree of specific performance was proper. Where one acquires or purchases property, knowing that the property is subject to a contract to be sold to another, he may be compelled to perform the contract in the same manner and to the same extent as his grantor. Myhre v. Myhre, 170 M 410, 554 P2d 276 (1976).

Denial of Specific Performance — Concealment of Information: Where the court did not find affirmative misrepresentation in the formation of a contract, it was not necessarily inconsistent to find that specific performance of the contract would be unjust and unreasonable due to concealment of information in answer to a party's question in the preformation discussions. Schlegel v. Moorhead, 170 M 391, 553 P2d 1009 (1976).

Inadequate Consideration — Oil and Gas Lease: Where production records of producing wells in close proximity to the area covered by an oil and gas lease showed that the lease was entered into for a rental below that of the area, the District Court properly found that there was inadequate consideration. Schlegel v. Moorhead, 170 M 391, 553 P2d 1009 (1976).

Assignment of Liquor License: In case where city held liquor license that it assigned to the lessee-operator of the municipal airport lounge facility then permitted reassignment directly from one lessee to the next as proprietorship of the lounge changed, city's willingness to renew current operator's lease and permit the assignment of the license was not sufficient consideration to permit the city to obtain specific performance of lease clause requiring reassignment of license to city upon termination of the lease. State ex rel. Victor's, Inc. v. District Court, 169 M 110, 545 P2d 1098 (1976).

Just and Reasonable: In an action for specific performance of a contract of sale made by a receiver appointed in a mortgage foreclosure, the District Court must look to the real parties in interest and refuse relief if the contract was not just and reasonable or if performance would operate more harshly upon the parties than its refusal would upon the plaintiff seeking performance. Interior Sec. Co. v. Campbell, 55 M 459, 178 P 582 (1919).

Defenses to Specific Performance: The evident meaning of this section is that any one of its subsections furnishes a defense to an action for specific performance. In other words, when specific performance is sought against a party, he may interpose any one of the defenses named above, and if he can maintain it, he defeats the action. The burden of proof as to such defense is upon him who asserts it. In re Grogan's Estate, 38 M 540, 100 P 1044 (1909); Finlen v. Heinze, 28 M 548, 73 P 123 (1903).

Inadequate Consideration — Transfer of Mining Claim: Where complainant's entry on defendant's land for the purpose of locating a mining claim was wholly ineffectual as against defendant for that purpose, a contract by which complainants agreed to transfer to defendant an undivided one-third interest in the lead or lode, in consideration of defendant's transfer to plaintiffs of an undivided two-thirds interest therein, together with the necessary amount of real estate covered by the location, etc., in settlement of the rights of the parties without litigation, was not based on a sufficient consideration to support a suit for specific performance under (1) of this section. Traphagen v. Kirk, 30 M 562, 77 P 58 (1904).

Inadequate Consideration — Burden of Proof: A party seeking specific performance of a contract is required to set forth the consideration therefor, and the burden of proof that such consideration is inadequate is on the party resisting specific performance. Finlen v. Heinze, 28 M 548, 73 P 123 (1903).

Case Notes

Specific Performance Proper — Conditions Precedent Performed: Defendants appealed the District Court's order of specific performance transferring property to the plaintiff, arguing that the plaintiff was not entitled to specific performance because he failed to perform conditions precedent of exchanging separate property and paying for one-half of the property at issue. The Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that the plaintiff properly transferred the separate property and was not obligated to pay for one-half of the property because the defendants had anticipatorily breached the contract. Boyne USA, Inc. v. Spanish Peaks Dev., LLC, 2013 MT 1, 368 Mont. 143, 292 P.3d 432.

Completion of Survey Not Condition Precedent: Buyer breached buy-sell agreement, claiming he is entitled to rescission because of sellers' refusal to permit a survey of the real property prior to closing of the sale. The court properly held that there is no language in the contract indicating completion of a survey to be a condition precedent to closing. Because the sellers had performed all material conditions precedent, they are entitled to specific performance. Hillstrom v. O'Neil, 226 M 452, 736 P2d 126, 44 St. Rep. 795 (1987).

Parties Agree to Specific Performance as Available Remedy: In a case involving buyer's breach of a buy-sell contract for the sale of real property, the court properly granted specific performance to the sellers. The court held that when, as in this case, the parties to the contract expressly agree in writing that specific performance is an available remedy and the sellers perform all material conditions precedent, specific performance may be compelled. Hillstrom v. O'Neil, 226 M 452, 736 P2d 126, 44 St. Rep. 795 (1987).

Specific Performance of Lease Option — Conditions Precedent: The court properly denied plaintiff's motion for summary judgment on an action for specific performance of a lease option agreement when he failed to show that he fully and fairly performed conditions precedent. Seifert v. Seifert, 173 M 501, 568 P2d 155 (1977).

Abandonment — Estoppel: Where there was no evidence that the purchaser intended to abandon a contract for the sale of a ranch and no evidence the sellers so intended and the sellers pressed for payment and received some payment, specific performance of the contract was proper and seller was estopped from not complying with the contract. Maxted v. Stenberg, 166 M 460, 534 P2d 864 (1975).

Cash Deposit — Failure to Make: Vendee of a contract for the sale of mining property cannot compel specific performance by the vendor, where the contract called for the vendee to deposit a specific amount of cash in the bank and he had not done so. An allegation in the complaint that the vendee had deposited a substantial sum in the bank was not sufficient since the contract called for a specific amount. Sidwell v. The New Mine Sapphire Synd., 130 M 189, 297 P2d 299 (1956), followed in Rocky Mtn. Bank v. Stuart, 280 M 74, 928 P2d 243, 53 St. Rep. 1305 (1996). Purchaser Not Entitled to Claim Benefit of Failure of Condition Precedent to Contract When Purchaser Caused Failure — Condition Precedent May Be Waived Only by Party Who Benefits, Not by Party Who Is Bound by Condition. Bender v. Rosman, 2023 MT 140, 413 Mont. 89, 532 P.3d 855.

Purchaser to Bear Risk of Loss to Property When Contract Specified Closing Date, Purchaser Repeatedly Interfered With Appraisal Process, Purchaser's Actions Delayed Completion of Sale, and Property Burned Down 2 Months After Specified Closing Date — Equity Requires That Purchaser Not Be Rewarded for His Actions. Bender v. Rosman, 2023 MT 140, 413 Mont. 89, 532 P.3d 855.

Stipulation to Land Exchange — Pecuniary Relief Inadequate — Agreement Sufficiently Clear to Enforce Specific Performance: The parties were adjoining landowners who had entered into a stipulation whereby they would trade small portions of property and survey and draw a new boundary line. Although the survey was never conducted, they abided by the other terms in the stipulation for several years. Later, after the defendants notified the plaintiff she was trespassing on property that was to be conveyed to her pursuant to the stipulation, the plaintiff filed an action seeking specific performance to have the property transferred to her. The District Court ruled in the plaintiff's favor and ordered the parties to comply with all terms in the original stipulation within 90 days. The defendants appealed, arguing that the stipulation was not sufficiently clear to compel specific performance. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that the stipulation, which included a diagram of the parcels to be traded, was sufficient to compel specific performance. It also held that specific performance was proper because pecuniary relief in the case was inadequate. Miller v. Kleppen, 2019 MT 83, 395 Mont. 286, 438 P.3d 806.

Decree of Specific Performance — Enforcement of Purchase Option in Lease Agreement — Remand for Establishment of Performance Schedule: McDonald constructed a restaurant on leased real property in Bozeman. The lease included a provision allowing McDonald a limited option to purchase the property. The property was appraised pursuant to the lease conditions, and McDonald indicated that he was prepared to purchase the property at the appraised price. The lessors refused to complete the transaction, resulting in an action by McDonald to enforce the agreement. The District Court found that the option provision contained all material terms and was legally enforceable and that the requirements of the option had been met, so specific performance was awarded to McDonald. The lessors appealed. The remedy of specific performance is allowed under 27-1-411, and contracts for the sale of real property are specifically enforceable under this section because it is presumed that the breach of an agreement to transfer real property cannot be adequately relieved by pecuniary compensation. The lessors contended that the option clause was ambiguous and represented only "an agreement to agree" and that a further contract between the parties was necessary if the option was to be enforced. The Supreme Court noted that the option clause set forth the time in which the option was exercisable, the method for calculating the purchase price and interest rate, the method by which the purchase price would be paid, and the parties' rights in case of default. Thus, the option contained all the material terms to make the acts necessary to purchase the property clearly ascertainable and was not ambiguous. The lessors nevertheless complained that the option provision did not state who was responsible for paying taxes or provide fully for forfeiture remedies. However, under Keaster v. Bozik, 191 M 293, 623 P2d 1376 (1981), absolute certainty in every detail is not a prerequisite for specific performance and collateral matters, such as responsibility for taxes and insurance, need not be expressed in the contract. The District Court's finding that the purchase option was enforceable was therefore affirmed, but the Supreme Court remanded to allow the District Court to set up a schedule for performance of the obligations and the commencement of interest, as required in Keaster. McDonald v. Cosman, 2000 MT 126, 299 M 499, 6 P3d 956, 57 St. Rep. 522 (2000), distinguishing Henkel v. Hewitt Agency, Inc., 206 M 303, 671 P2d 582 (1983), and Quirin v. Weinberg, 252 M 386, 830 P2d 537 (1992).

Party May Choose to Breach Contract and Pay Damages: American Music Co. (AMC) sued Higbee and requested a preliminary injunction for Higbee's not honoring the parties' contract by replacing AMC's gambling machines with other machines. The Supreme Court stated that an injunction was not available because a party has a right to breach a contract if the party is willing to pay the damages caused by the breach and, in the present case, the amount of damages could be determined. Am. Music Co. v. Higbee, 1998 MT 150, 289 M 278, 961 P2d 109, 55 St. Rep. 586 (1998).

Mistake as to Taxes — May Negate Specific Performance as Remedy: Double AA Corporation sought specific performance to require Newland & Company, a trust company, to convey land that it held in trust and had entered into a contract to sell to Double AA. The Supreme Court found that the evidence showed that Shirley Bragg, who had agreed to the sale on behalf of the trust, had been incorrectly advised that unless the trust sold the ranch prior to the death of her mother, the trust would be liable for a substantial amount of taxes upon her mother's death. The Supreme Court held that in light of all the equities of the case, Bragg's mistake regarding taxes was a sufficient reason to deny specific performance and to limit Double AA's remedy to money damages. Double AA Corp. v. Newland & Co., 273 M 486, 905 P2d 138, 52 St. Rep. 1073 (1995). See also Stovall v. Watt, 187 M 439, 610 P2d 164 (1980).

Specific Performance of Property Buyout Proper: In 1960, four couples entered a property agreement regarding the use and maintenance of a vacation cabin on Holter Lake. Each couple received an undivided one-fourth interest in the property. The agreement contained a provision allowing cotenants to buy out a couple's interest for $1,000. Over the years, all the parties died except Berger, who in 1991 tendered $1,334 to Baker's estate for her interest in the property, which by then constituted a one-third share. Because good consideration was part of the original agreement and the parties entered the agreement with free and equal bargaining powers, knowing that they could predecease the other couples and leave the surviving couple or spouse with full ownership of the property, specific performance of the original agreement was proper despite the fact that the property had increased in value significantly over time. Baker v. Berger, 265 M 21, 873 P2d 940, 51 St. Rep. 389 (1994).

Roadway — Interest in Real Property: The District Court did not err in granting the remedy of specific performance under 27-1-411 for breach of an agreement to establish a roadway in a specified route because the right to a roadway granted in a written instrument is an interest in real property under 70-17-101, and money damages under 27-1-419 are presumed to be an inadequate remedy for breach of an agreement to transfer real property. Silva v. McGuinness, 189 M 252, 615 P2d 879, 37 St. Rep. 1401 (1980).

Rebuttable Presumptions:

Under principle that monetary damages are presumed inadequate as remedy in contract for purchase of land, purchaser was entitled to specific performance notwithstanding seller's contention that presumption was rebutted by testimony of purchaser that he could ascertain damages if not allowed to obtain the property. Brown v. Griffin, 150 M 498, 436 P2d 695 (1968).

The presumption that breach of agreement to transfer personal property can be adequately relieved by pecuniary compensation is rebuttable and was overcome by trial court's express finding to the contrary in action for specific performance of written option to repurchase retail liquor business. Brubaker v. D'Orazi, 120 M 22, 179 P2d 538 (1947).

Application of Section:

Where defendant vendee in a suit seeking specific performance introduced no evidence in opposition to the presumption declared by this section, he was in no position to contend on appeal that the vendor had an adequate remedy at law by a suit for damages. Conner v. Helvik, 105 M 437, 73 P2d 541 (1937).

Under this section, it is presumed that the breach of an agreement to sell or exchange land cannot be adequately compensated in damages, and where the court on ample evidence found that plaintiff in his action for specific performance could not be made whole by damages, the contention that specific performance should not have been decreed has no merit. Hogan v. Thrasher, 72 M 318, 233 P 607 (1925).

Sufficiency of Complaint:

In an action for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of lands, it is not necessary for the complaint to allege that the plaintiff has no complete or adequate remedy at law in damages. Lowery v. Cole, 47 M 64, 130 P 410 (1913); Christiansen v. Aldrich, 30 M 446, 76 P 1007 (1904); Ide v. Leiser, 10 M 5, 24 P 695 (1890).

It is not necessary, in an action for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of real property, for the plaintiff, asking for a preliminary injunction, to allege that he has no adequate remedy at law; when it appears that the defendant has refused to comply with his contract, the presumption attaches that the plaintiff has suffered detriment, which is irreparable in an action for damages; he is, therefore, prima facie entitled to invoke the aid of equity to obtain equitable relief, namely, the performance of the contract. Lowery v. Cole, 47 M 64, 130 P 410 (1913); Christiansen v. Aldrich, 30 M 446, 76 P 1007 (1904); Ide v. Leiser, 10 M 5, 24 P 695 (1890).

Contract for Deed — Title Vested in Seller — Specific Performance Proper: The Undems sold their land in 1984 without Larson's written consent as required in the contract. Larson did not file a complaint until 1987. The Undems maintained that a grant of specific performance was inappropriate because they could not transfer title they no longer had. Larson maintained that in a contract for deed, legal title to the property remains vested in the seller, and therefore specific performance was proper. The Supreme Court, noting that specific performance is an equitable remedy and a matter of the District Court's discretion, agreed with Larson that in this case, specific performance was proper. Larson v. Udem, 246 M 336, 805 P2d 1318, 47 St. Rep. 2088 (1990).

Suspension of Performance Upon Material Breach of Contract: As part of a contract for sale of real property, seller agreed to obtain release of mortgage within 1 year, and failure to do so constituted a material breach entitling buyer to suspend performance. Sjoberg v. Kravik, 233 M 33, 759 P2d 966, 45 St. Rep. 1270 (1988).

Case Notes

Personal Representative Bound by Buyout Provision in Property Agreement — Specific Performance Proper: In 1960, four couples entered a property agreement regarding the use and maintenance of a vacation cabin on Holter Lake. Each couple received an undivided one-fourth interest in the property. The agreement contained a provision allowing cotenants to buy out a couple's interest by two methods: (1) through a voluntary inter vivos sale by a couple to the cotenants for $1,000 or the value of a couple's interest after a contribution toward the purchase of the interest of any former couple; or (2) through a compulsory buyout of a surviving spouse's interest at death. Over the years, all the parties died except Berger, who in 1991 tendered $1,334 to Baker's estate for her interest in the property, which by then constituted a one-third share. Baker's personal representative refused the tender on grounds that the agreement was unenforceable, but the District Court granted Berger specific performance of the agreement. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the lower court decision as a proper use of discretion, holding that: (1) even under the maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius, transfer of a surviving spouse's interest in the property was prohibited; (2) generally contracts made by a decedent are specifically enforceable against the decedent's personal representatives, heirs, devisees, and assigns even when they were not a party to the original agreement; (3) the agreement contained an express covenant to sell that justified enforcement of the agreement against the estate; and (4) despite any increase in the fair market value of the property, good consideration was established under the original terms of the agreement, so no new consideration was required, and Berger was entitled to receive what was contained in the original bargain. Baker v. Berger, 265 M 21, 873 P2d 940, 51 St. Rep. 389 (1994).

Corporate Officers Purchasing Property Corporation Had Agreed to Sell — Specific Performance Against: Plaintiff and realtor authorized to sell lots for corporation executed a 1975 contract under which plaintiff deposited $500, would pay $5,000 upon payment to plaintiff at a future uncertain time of a bonus in that amount, and would pay the balance of the purchase price within 90 days of the $5,000 payment and be given title. The contract was later modified to provide that if the bonus was not paid by January 1, 1980, plaintiff could either purchase the lot by paying the balance of the purchase price beyond the deposit within 90 days or choose not to purchase and to receive back his deposit. The contract became an option contract on January 1, 1980, when the bonus had not been paid by that time. Plaintiff had the option to choose at that time, and when he chose to purchase, there was then a binding contract under which either party was entitled to specific performance. The executive officers of the corporation, who prior to January 1, 1980, had in their official capacity sold the lot to themselves knowing of the agreement between plaintiff and realtor, were liable to perform the contract in the same manner as the corporation was obligated to perform it, and plaintiff was entitled to specific performance against the executive officers. Naylor v. Hall, 201 M 59, 651 P2d 1010, 39 St. Rep. 1953 (1982).

Case Notes

Effect on Lease: This section fortifies a holding that when a tax claim has been removed as a cloud on title, a lease given by the tax claimant no longer constitutes a cloud on the title even though the lessee was not a party to the quiet title action. Purcell v. Gibbs, 133 M 481, 326 P2d 679 (1958).

Distinguished From Action to Quiet Title:

Title may be cleared under this section, providing for cancellation of instruments aimed at a particular instrument under a complaint pointing out the specific grounds relied upon to establish invalidity, or 70-28-101 for the purpose of quieting title under which inquiry into the whole title to the property is permissible, the court being given broad powers, including that of removing clouds and canceling instruments and where the rule against collateral attack upon judgments does not apply to tax deeds issued under 15-18-202 (now repealed), plaintiff being entitled to introduce evidence of irregularities, defects, and omissions as well as the deed itself. Sanborn v. Lewis & Clark County, 113 M 1, 120 P2d 567 (1941).

In an action to quiet title under 70-28-101, as distinguished from one brought under this section to remove a cloud on title, the complaint alleging that the defendant claims an adverse estate or interest is sufficient without further defining it, whereas under the latter section the pleader must state facts disclosing the apparent validity of the instrument attacked and its actual invalidity. Slette v. Review Publishing Co., 71 M 518, 230 P 580 (1924), explained in Ryan v. Bloom, 120 M 443, 186 P2d 879 (1947). See also Hopkins v. Walker, 244 US 486, 61 L Ed 1270, 37 S Ct 711 (1917).

What Plaintiff Must Show to Justify Cancellation:

The rule announced in Glacier County v. Schlinski, 90 M 136, 300 P 270 (1931), that in attacking a tax deed the particular defects on which the pleader relies to defeat the deed must be clearly and specifically pointed out applies to actions brought under this section. Sanborn v. Lewis & Clark County, 113 M 1, 120 P2d 567 (1941).

The rule that in a suit to remove a particular cloud from the plaintiff's title, the facts showing that title and the existence and invalidity of the instrument or record sought to be eliminated as a cloud are essential parts of the plaintiff's cause of action and must be alleged in the bill is the same in respect of suits to remove clouds under this section, as distinguished from suits to quiet title under 70-28-101. Hopkins v. Walker, 244 US 486, 61 L Ed 1270, 37 S Ct 711 (1917), distinguished in Marshall v. Desert Properties Co., 103 F2d 551 (9th Cir. 1939).

To justify the cancellation of an instrument under this section the plaintiff must show that injury may result to him if the instrument is left outstanding; the court cannot interfere if the instrument is invalid and its invalidity appears directly or constructively upon its face. Hicks v. Rupp, 49 M 40, 140 P 97 (1914).

Where real estate is sold under a deed warranting title against encumbrances, the grantor may, after he has parted with title, maintain suit to have a mortgage, placed on record after he became the owner and of the existence of which he was unaware, canceled of record. Kersten v. Coleman, 50 M 82, 144 P 1092 (1914).

Section Applicable to Oil and Gas Leases: An action to have an oil and gas lease declared terminated and canceled of record for failure of the lessee to commence drilling operations or make the stipulated payment in lieu thereof is one in equity and falls within the provisions of this section, authorizing cancellation to remove a cloud upon title. Am. Sur. Co. of New York v. Butler, 86 M 584, 284 P 1011 (1930); McNamer Realty Co. v. Sunburst Oil & Gas Co., 76 M 332, 247 P 166 (1926).

Purpose of Action Under This Section: The purpose of an action brought under this section to have an oil and gas lease declared void and terminated by the failure of the lessee to observe its conditions is to clear the record of an apparent cloud in the shape of an instrument that has ceased to have any effect but still remains of record, and in such a case the equitable rules as to relief from a forfeiture are not applicable. McNamer Realty Co. v. Sunburst Oil & Gas Co., 76 M 332, 247 P 166 (1926).

Complaint Under This Section Held to State Cause of Action:

Allegations of the complaint showing that a land contract sought to be canceled was of record, that the purchaser was in possession of the premises, and that by its terms the latter was shown to have an equitable interest in them was sufficient to show that the instrument was of such a character as to constitute it a menace to plaintiff's title if left outstanding. Hammond-Dodson Co. v. Slattery, 67 M 489, 216 P 323 (1923).

In an action to cancel instruments claimed to constitute clouds upon the title to mining property, thus preventing plaintiff from obtaining a bidder upon execution sale under a judgment in a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) foreclosure proceeding, the complaint was held insufficient to state a cause of action under this section (conceding, but not deciding, that the action could be maintained under those sections) for failure to allege the facts showing the apparent validity of the instruments claimed to constitute clouds as well as the facts showing their invalidity. Heavilin v. O'Connor, 61 M 507, 202 P 1115 (1921).

When Insufficient to Admit Cancellation:

Where plaintiff in his action to remove a cloud from the title to property had based his cause of action upon the levy of a Writ of Attachment, his contention on appeal that the Writ was improperly levied and therefore constituted no lien upon the property deprives him of the relief asked for, since if it constituted no lien it cast no cloud which needed removal. Newman v. N. Mont. Ass'n of Credit Men, 63 M 545, 208 P 914 (1922).

Complaint in an action to remove a cloud from the title to real property was fatally defective for failure to state facts sufficient to disclose the apparent validity of the instrument attacked and its actual invalidity. Poulos v. Lyman Bros. Co., 63 M 561, 208 P 598 (1922), distinguished in Slette v. Review Publishing Co., 71 M 518, 230 P 580 (1924).

Animal Cruelty — Sufficient Evidence to Support County Costs of Boarding Animals: The defendant was charged with several counts of animal cruelty related to the operation of a dog kennel, and the animals were taken to a number of shelters. After being convicted, the defendant was sentenced to pay the costs to the county for caring for the animals. The defendant disputed the amount of costs, stating that the county would have incurred some of the included costs regardless of her case, and she appealed that portion of the costs. The Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that all of the costs were reasonably supported by the evidence. St. v. Warren, 2019 MT 49, 395 Mont. 15, 439 P.3d 357.

Part 5 Right to Bring Action or Assert Defense

Part Case Notes

How State Law Preempted by Federal Law: The Montana Supreme Court recognizes three ways in which federal law may preempt state law. First, Congress may include a preemption clause in a federal statute that expressly provides that state law may not apply in the area governed by the federal statute. Second, federal law may supersede state law when a state law actually conflicts with a federal law. This conflict preemption occurs either when one cannot comply with both federal and state law or when the state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress. Third, Congress may imply its intent to preempt state law in a particular area when regulation of the area is so comprehensive that it is reasonable to conclude that Congress intended to occupy the field and leave no room for supplementary state regulation. In analyzing whether preemption has occurred, the Supreme Court starts with the presumption that the historic powers of the states were not to be superseded by federal law unless that was the clear and manifest purpose of Congress. Fenno v. Mtn. W. Bank, 2008 MT 267, 345 M 161, 192 P3d 224 (2008). See also Favel v. Am. Renovation & Constr. Co., 2002 MT 266, 312 M 285, 59 P3d 412 (2002), and Vitullo v. Int'l Bd. of Elec. Workers, Local 206, 2003 MT 219, 317 M 142, 75 P3d 1250 (2003).

Wrongful Discharge of Bank Officer Whistleblower Not Preempted by Federal Law: A bank officer was dismissed after blowing the whistle on a bank's lending practices. The officer filed a state wrongful discharge claim. The bank argued that federal law in 12 U.S.C. 24 (Fifth) and 12

U.S.C. 1831j(a)(1) preempted the state claim. The District Court agreed and granted summary judgment for the bank. The officer appealed and the Supreme Court reversed. Preemption cannot shield a bank from tort liability for dismissing an employee in violation of a state public policy that is consistent with the purpose of federal statutes, nor may a bank avail itself of the federal “at pleasure” provision unless one cannot comply with both state and federal law or the state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress. The state retaliatory discharge provision comports with the purpose of the federal whistleblower statute and does not present an obstacle to the federal law, nor does a conflict exist between the policies of the state and federal law, because both laws protect employees who take steps in their employment to promote the enforcement of laws and regulations. Fenno v. Mtn. W. Bank, 2008 MT 267, 345 M 161, 192 P3d 224 (2008), following Tiede v. CorTrust Bank, N.A., 748 NW 2d 748 (S. Dak. 2008). See also Favel v. Am. Renovation & Constr. Co., 2002 MT 266, 312 M 285, 59 P3d 412 (2002).

State Remedy and State Court Enforcement of Contract Wages Required by Federal Davis-Bacon Act: The District Court had subject matter jurisdiction of state contract law claims against a contractor and subcontractors by workers hired to build housing on Malmstrom Air Force base under a contract between the contractor and the Air Force. The workers claimed that they were not paid the prevailing wages required by the federal Davis-Bacon Act. The defendants claimed that there was no private right of action and that the workers had not exhausted their federal administrative remedies. The evidence showed that the workers extensively used the administrative remedies, taking all proper steps to attempt to administratively resolve the dispute. The workers were not seeking to enforce the Davis-Bacon Act labor standards; they sought to enforce a contract that includes wages required by the Act, a subtle but important distinction. The Act does not preempt the workers’ right to a state enforcement action, using state remedies, under the facts of this case. That right is in keeping with Montana’s longstanding policy and constitutional guarantee in Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const., of citizens’ access to Montana courts when they are aggrieved. As third-party beneficiaries of the contract, the workers have the right to sue in state court to enforce the contract under state law. Favel v. Am. Renovation & Constr. Co., 2002 MT 266, 312 M 285, 59 P3d 412 (2002).

27-1-501. Survival of cause of action or defense — death or disability or transfer of interest.

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

1987 Amendment: Inserted “(2) Actions brought under this section and 27-1-513 must be combined in one legal action and any element of damages may be recovered only once.”

Case Notes

Death of Criminal Appellant — Appeal Moot Unless Personal Representative Demonstrates Otherwise — Prior Case Law Overruled: A criminal defendant passed away 1 month after filing his appeal with the Supreme Court. After his public defender filed a notice of his death, the state filed a motion to dismiss the appeal as moot. The Supreme Court considered whether to abate the appeal ab initio or to dismiss it as moot. Given that a conviction is presumed valid, the Supreme Court concluded that abating an appeal is inappropriate and overruled precedent, particularly St. v. Holland, 1998 MT 67, 288 Mont. 164, 955 P.2d 1360. Rather, the death of a criminal defendant renders an appeal moot unless the defendant’s personal representative can demonstrate there are appellate issues not rendered moot by the defendant’s death. St. v. Benn, 2012 MT 33, 364 Mont. 153, 274 P.3d 47.

Medical Negligence — Right of Tribal Member to Pursue State Court Action Against Nontribal Member — State Court Jurisdiction: The plaintiff alleged medical negligence against a medical clinic that cared for the plaintiff’s husband, who was a member of the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes. The plaintiff was not a tribal member, the clinic was not affiliated with a tribe, and the acts took place both on and off the reservation. The District Court held that state courts do not have jurisdiction on the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Reservation over actions for medical negligence. The plaintiff appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. The court noted that it is well established under both state and federal law that tribal members may bring civil actions against nontribal members in state court, and that tribal autonomy and self-government are not impeded when a state allows an Indian to seek relief in state court against a non-Indian for a claim arising in Indian country. This right of access to courts applies to residents of each Montana Indian reservation. Therefore, the plaintiff was not precluded from bringing the medical negligence action in state court and the state court had jurisdiction to hear the case. Morigeau v. Gorman, 2010 MT 36, 355 Mont. 225, 225 P.3d 1260. See also State ex rel. Iron Bear v. District Court, 162 Mont. 335, 512 P.2d 1292 (1973), and Three Affiliated Tribes of the Fort Berthold Reservation v. Wold Eng'r, 476 US 877 (1986).

Compensation for Lost Household Services Not Appropriate in Survivorship Action — Award Not Erroneous When No Double Damages Awarded: Damages for compensation of lost household services are legitimate in a personal injury claim and a wrongful death action, but not in a survivorship action. However, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in the present survivorship case by awarding damages for compensation of lost household services when the damages did not constitute impermissible double recovery and were within the range of damages to which plaintiffs were entitled. Hern v. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill., 2005 MT 301, 329 M 347, 125 P3d 597 (2005).

Damages for Loss of Established Course of Life — Limited to Personal Injury Claims: Damages for loss of established course of life are unique to Montana and are limited to personal injury claims as opposed to survivorship claims, as expressed in Oberson v. U.S., 311 F. Supp. 2d 917 (D.C. Mont. 2004). This species of damages is intended to compensate for an injured person's loss of what the person once had and the accompanying realization that the person will live life without ever recovering the previous course of life. In the present case, the District Court incorrectly instructed the jury that it could award damages for loss of established course of life in a survivorship action. Hern v. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill., 2005 MT 301, 329 M 347, 125 P3d 597 (2005).

Reopening of Litigation for Injured Members of Class Action — Summary Judgment Proper: After plaintiffs settled with the insurer for damages incurred in the death of plaintiffs' daughter, a class action suit concerning insurance stacking provisions allowed plaintiffs to reopen their case and seek further damages from the insurer. Plaintiffs filed another damage claim with the insurer, but the claim was denied, so plaintiffs sued the insurer seeking full recovery of their damages. Plaintiffs filed a combined motion for summary judgment and motion to strike affirmative defenses, and defendant filed a cross-motion to bar plaintiffs from relitigating the wrongful death and survivorship action. The parties agreed that there were no genuine issues of material fact, and the District Court granted plaintiffs' motion and denied defendant's motion. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. As injured members of the certified class, plaintiffs were clearly entitled to relitigate their claims. The affirmative defenses that plaintiffs sought to strike did not include estoppel or res judicata, but those defenses were inapplicable in light of the scope of the class action agreement allowing reopening of litigation. Absent an issue of material fact, summary judgment for plaintiffs was appropriate. Hern v. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill., 2005 MT 301, 329 M 347, 125 P3d 597 (2005).

Venue in Matter Involving Multiple Defendants — Plaintiff's Venue Alternatives Properly Exercised: Plaintiff's husband was killed in an accident at the city bus barn in Lewis and Clark County in Helena. Plaintiff filed a survivorship/wrongful death action in Silver Bow County against defendant city in Lewis and Clark County and against defendant gas company with its principal place of business in Silver Bow County. The city moved for a change of venue to Lewis and Clark County, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the city argued that because Gabriel v. School District No. 4, 264 M 177, 870 P2d 1351 (1994), and Wentz v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 14, 928 P2d 237 (1996), established that the proper venue for trial of a combined survivorship/wrongful death action is either the county where the survivorship action arose or the county where the wrongful death claim arose and that neither claim in this case arose in Silver Bow County, Silver Bow County was not a proper venue. Plaintiff contended that under 25-2-117, when there are multiple defendants, a proper place for trial of any defendant is proper for all defendants. The Supreme Court agreed with plaintiff. Although Gabriel and Wentz approved counties where survivorship or wrongful death actions arose as proper venues, neither case established those counties as exclusive venues for survivorship/wrongful death actions. In cases with multiple defendants pursuant to 25-2-117, including defendants that are both political subdivisions and private entities, 25-2-126, which provides venue for actions against political subdivisions, does not prevail over 25-2-122, which provides venue for tort actions, but rather provides alternative venue options to a plaintiff. The plaintiff properly exercised a venue option here, and denial of the change of venue motion was affirmed. Meyer v. Mont. Power Co., LLC, 2005 MT 66, 326 M 283, 109 P3d 269 (2005), distinguishing Whalen v. Mont. Right to Life Ass'n, 2002 MT 328, 313 M 204, 60 P3d 972 (2002).

Conditions for Seeking Damages in Survival and Wrongful Death Actions: A survival action belongs to the decedent's estate, allowing recovery for injury to the deceased from the action causing death, and damages recoverable in the action are personal to the decedent, so the estate's right of recovery is identical to the decedent's right, had the decedent lived. Only the personal representative may sue for damages suffered by the decedent in a survival action. Neither the surviving spouse nor any other heir has a legal right to pursue the action unless appointed personal representative. In a survival action, the decedent's estate may recover damages for: (1) lost earnings from the time of injury to death; (2) the present value of the decedent's reasonable earnings during the decedent's life expectancy; (3) medical and funeral expenses; (4) pain and suffering; and (5) other special damages. No Montana law requires an offset of lost future earnings for economic consumption, and an award for future earnings should not be reduced on account of economic consumption. By contrast, a wrongful death action is personal to the decedent's heirs and independent of any cause of action available to the estate and seeks to compensate the heirs for the harm or damages that they personally suffered as a result of the decedent's death. Generally, a wrongful death plaintiff may recover for: (1) loss of consortium; (2) loss of comfort and society; and (3) the reasonable value of the monetary contributions that the decedent would have provided for the support, education, training, and care of the heirs during the life expectancy of the decedent and survivors. Thus, a reduction for economic consumption and the cost of maintenance applies in wrongful death actions. Therefore, in survival actions, the decedent's estate is entitled to recover the full value of the lost future earnings including that portion attributable to economic consumption, while in wrongful death actions, the decedent's heirs are not entitled to the economic consumption allocation. Payne v. District Court, 2002 MT 313, 313 M 118, 60 P3d 469 (2002), following Burns v. Eminger, 84 M 397, 276 P 437 (1929), and Swanson v. Champion Int'l Corp., 197 M 509, 646 P2d 1166 (1982). Swanson and Payne were followed in Hern v. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill., 2005 MT 301, 329 M 347, 125 P3d 597 (2005), and In re Estate of Lambert, 2006 MT 229, 333 M 444, 143 P3d 426 (2006).

Supervisory Control of Issue Related to Wrongful Death and Survival Action and Evidence of Economic Consumption: Plaintiff sought supervisory control of an action related to evidence of economic consumption as it pertained to a survival action and wrongful death. The Supreme Court found that allowing the District Court to permit the jury to consider evidence of economic consumption in this case would be a mistake of law constituting a deviation from well-established jurisprudence that would alter the cost of and preparation for trial, affect settlement negotiations, and call into question the value of any potential verdict, resulting in additional time and expense for appellate resolution and subsequent litigation. Any remedy available to plaintiff on direct appeal would thus prove inadequate, resulting in a gross injustice. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that this was an appropriate case in which to exercise supervisory control. Payne v. District Court, 2002 MT 313, 313 M 118, 60 P3d 469 (2002), followed in In re Estate of Lambert, 2006 MT 229, 333 M 444, 143 P3d 426 (2006).

Death of Defendant in Criminal Case Abates Case Entirely — Prior Cases Clarified: Holland was convicted in District Court of criminal syndicalism by accountability and other offenses and appealed his conviction. Holland died after the case had been briefed to the Supreme Court but before it was decided, so the state moved to dismiss. Holland's counsel opposed the motion to dismiss, arguing that it was in the best interests of society and the judicial system to allow the appeal to be decided on its merits. The Supreme Court noted that its earlier opinions in the cases of St. v. Lawrence, 122 M 277, 201 P2d 756 (1949), St. v. Pichette, 125 M 327, 237 P2d 1076 (1951), St. v. Hale, 128 M 116, 270 P2d 993 (1954), St. v. Koble, 129 M 605, 285 P2d 837 (1955), St. v. Clark-Kotarski, 156 M 527, 486 P2d 876 (1971), and St. v. Cripps, 177 M 410, 582 P2d 312 (1978), all held that the death of a defendant abates an appeal. The Supreme Court pointed out that 37-61-401(2) requires that a civil case go forward notwithstanding the death of a party but that in criminal cases, no case or controversy remains when a defendant dies and that if a deceased defendant's sentence were affirmed on appeal, it would be impossible to execute the sentence. The Supreme Court also noted, citing State ex rel. Fletcher v. District Court, 260 M 410, 859 P2d 992 (1993), that it does not render advisory opinions and that the former Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure (now superseded) provide for substitution of a personal representative in the case of the death of a party in a civil action, but there is no such provision for criminal cases. The Supreme Court held that upon the death of the defendant, the prosecution of a criminal case, including fines, abates in its entirety. The Supreme Court's prior opinions were clarified to the extent that opinions in those cases were not consistent with its present opinion. St. v. Holland, 1998 MT 67, 288 M 164, 955 P2d 1360, 55 St. Rep. 282 (1998). Holland was overruled in St. v. Benn, 2012 MT 33, 364 Mont. 153, 274 P.3d 47, in which the Supreme Court ruled that the death of a criminal defendant renders the appeal moot unless the defendant's personal representative can demonstrate that there are appellate issues not rendered moot by the defendant's death.

Wrongful Death — Survival Action — Venue: Plaintiffs husband suffered a heart attack in Rosebud County and later died in Yellowstone County. Plaintiff sued in Yellowstone County. Rosebud County and other defendants moved to change venue. The District Court refused, and the Supreme Court affirmed. That the wrongful death action is combined with a survivorship action that could have been brought in Rosebud County because the survivorship action arose there does not render Yellowstone County an improper place for trial for both. Wentz v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 14, 928 P2d 237, 53 St. Rep. 1277 (1996).

Award of Punitive Damages Against Estate of Deceased Tortfeasor: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court noted that because under this section a cause of action or defense does not abate because of the death of a party but survives and may be maintained by the party's representatives, punitive damages may be assessed against the estate of a deceased tortfeasor. Whether it is appropriate to assess punitive damages to set an example is a question for the trier of fact. Tillett v. Lippert, 275 M 1, 909 P2d 1158, 53 St. Rep. 1 (1996).

Proceeds of Wrongful Death or Survival Claim — Ownership by Heirs or Survivors: Under Swanson v. Champion Int'l Corp., 197 M 509, 646 P2d 1166 (1982), the ownership of proceeds from settlement of wrongful death or survival claims belongs to the heirs or the estate, respectively. In this case, a $95,000 settlement draft was paid to settle claims against the insured driver in exchange for his release from claims for wrongful death and personal injury. The draft was made payable to the estate and to the estate's attorney. However, the estate offered evidence that there was no agreement to pay any fee to the attorney from those proceeds. Applying Swanson, the evidence created a factual issue regarding ownership of the proceeds and accrued interest sufficient to preclude summary judgment and a directed verdict requested by the attorney regarding payment of fees. Eatinger v. Johnson, 269 M 99, 887 P2d 231, 51 St. Rep. 1484 (1994).

Wrongful Death — Survival of Action — Tribal Court Jurisdiction: In a suit arising out of an on-reservation automobile accident involving no tribal members, the Tribal Court of the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes of the Flathead Reservation has subject matter jurisdiction over the wrongful death and survivorship claims and personal jurisdiction over the tortfeasor, a nonmember resident of the reservation. Initiation of a probate action in the state court did not deprive the tribal court of jurisdiction over the survivorship claim. Hinshaw v. Mahler, 42 F3d 1178 (9th Cir. 1994).

Proper Venue for Wrongful Death Action: As set out in Carroll v. W.R. Grace & Co., 252 M 485, 830 P2d 1253 (1992), because death is a necessary element in a wrongful death action, a wrongful death action accrues at the time of the death rather than on the date of injury, for statute of limitations purposes. The corollary to Carroll is that for purposes of determining venue under 25-2-126, a wrongful death claim arises where the death occurs. Gabriel v. School District No. 4, 264 M 177, 870 P2d 1351, 51 St. Rep. 217 (1994). However, see Meyer v. Mont. Power Co., LLC, 2005 MT 66, 326 M 283, 109 P3d 269 (2005), in which it was held that in cases with multiple defendants, neither Gabriel nor Meyer establish those counties where survivorship or wrongful death actions arose as exclusive venues for survivorship/wrongful death actions.

Indian Health Service as Representative of Indigent Indian Child: Since Indian Health Service assumed the role of Indians' advocate and facilitator in ensuring that their health care needs are met, it may proceed under this section as representative of an indigent Indian child to seek reimbursement from the county for any previous payment of the child's medical bills. McNabb v. Bowen, 829 F2d 787 (9th Cir. 1987).

Deceased Defendant in Tort Action — Unmarried Without Children or Estate — Action Against Parents as Successors in Interest: Where the defendant in a tort action was deceased, it was not error to dismiss the deceased and his estate and substitute his parents as successors in interest to the deceased. The deceased was unmarried and childless at the time of his death and left no estate. There was no representative, and under this section his parents, as successors in interest, are the proper parties. Such substitution is permitted under former Rule 17(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), without adversely affecting any applicable Statute of Limitations. Simonson v. White, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986).

Jury Verdict on Wrongful Death — Survival Claims Inconsistent: In this medical malpractice case, the jury awarded $75,000 on the wrongful death claim and zero on the survival claim. This verdict was totally inconsistent and contrary to the mandates of law; therefore, a new trial was properly granted under 25-11-102. The same act of negligence by the defendant was the basis for both actions. If the negligence which caused personal injury to the living victim caused his later death, a jury would be compelled to award damages for his personal injury as well as awarding damages on the wrongful death claim. Rudeck v. Wright, 218 M 41, 709 P2d 621, 42 St. Rep. 1380 (1985), distinguished, with regard to liability for negligent design and supervision of a water pipeline project, in Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248, 51 St. Rep. 623 (1994), also distinguished, in a case involving contested evidence of survivorship damages, in Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700, 53 St. Rep. 17 (1996), and followed in Brockie v. Omo Constr., Inc., 268 M 519, 887 P2d 167, 51 St. Rep. 1322 (1994).

Personal Representative's Right to Pursue Wrongful Death Action Instead of Survivorship Action: A decedent's personal representative clearly has a prior right to pursue a wrongful death action on behalf of the heirs in order to avoid the diseconomies and confusion caused by a plethora of lawsuits. Decedent's wife could thus, as his personal representative, pursue a wrongful death action. Decedent's ex-wives claimed that the personal representative had improperly failed to file a survivorship action instead of a wrongful death action in the hopes that she could (unfairly) increase her portion of any recovery. In re Pegg's Estate, 209 M 71, 680 P2d 316, 41 St. Rep. 558 (1984).

General Discussion of Wrongful Death and Survival Actions: For general discussion of wrongful death and survival actions, see Swanson v. Champion Int'l Corp., 197 M 509, 646 P2d 1166, 39 St. Rep. 639 (1982). See also Sorum v. Rieder & Co., 205 M 98, 666 P2d 1221, 40 St. Rep. 1120 (1983), for discussion of application of Swanson rule.

Action to Declare Marriage Invalid: Earl Adams married his first cousin and 2 months later commenced an action for a declaration of invalidity of his marriage. While this action was pending, Earl died. This action did not abate by reason of his death. His personal representatives may continue the action. Adams v. Adams, 185 M 63, 604 P2d 332 (1979), overruled, with regard to elements of collateral estoppel, in Dagel v. Great Falls, 250 M 224, 819 P2d 186, 48 St. Rep. 919 (1991).

Interfamily Tort Immunity Survival: Personal representative of wife was barred by interfamily tort immunity doctrine where defense arose prior to husband's death, as husband's personal representative would be able to avail himself of defense. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Leary, 168 M 482, 544 P2d 444 (1975).

Order for New Trial Reversed: Where a case has been fully and ably submitted and the verdict is supported by the evidence and there is nothing incredible in the verdict, a new trial should not be granted and the original jury verdict should be allowed to stand. Beebe v. Johnson, 165 M 96, 526 P2d 128 (1974).

Wrongful Death Action:

The defendant's negligence caused a boat collision which injured the decedent and knocked him into the water. The injuries were not serious enough to cause death, but the decedent drowned after being knocked into the water. In order for the decedent's cause of action for his injuries to survive, there has to be an appreciable period of time between the collision and his death. Stephens v. Brown, 160 M 453, 503 P2d 667 (1972), followed in Starkenburg v. St., 282 M 1, 934 P2d 1018, 54 St. Rep. 214 (1997).

Decedent's mother was real party in interest in wrongful death action where decedent left no surviving wife or children and his father was dead. Cowan v. Pac. Gamble Robinson Co., 232 F. Supp. 403 (D.C. Mont. 1964).

A cause of action in favor of one whose death results from the wrongful act of another, under this section (a general survival statute), survives the death of the wrongdoer as well as the death of the party whose rights were infringed. Anderson v. Wirkman, 67 M 176, 215 P 224 (1923).

This section creates no new right of action, and the representative's right is conditioned upon the right of the party to maintain an action himself; hence, in a case of instantaneous death, the representative cannot recover for conscious suffering by his deceased before death, since deceased himself would have no action. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry. v. Clement, 226 F 426 (9th Cir. 1915).

Loss of Earnings: Where, in survivorship action under this section, jury returned verdict based only upon personal property belonging to decedent destroyed in accident and awarded no damages for loss of earning capacity, District Court did not abuse its discretion in granting new trial on damages only, since jury could not "disregard uncontradicted, credible nonopinion evidence" establishing decedent's earning capacity. Putman v. Pollei, 153 M 406, 457 P2d 776 (1969), distinguished, in a case involving contested evidence of survivorship damages, in Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700, 53 St. Rep. 17 (1996).

Personal Injuries Action: Suit for personal injuries filed by decedent prior to his death survived in favor of administratrix of his estate. Pickett v. Kyger, 151 M 87, 439 P2d 57 (1968).

Transfer of Interest: Where an action is pending at the time of a transfer of a portion of the original plaintiff's interest, the provisions of this section become applicable. White v. Connor, 138 M 1, 354 P2d 722 (1960).

Change of Venue: A motion seeking a change of venue under 25-2-201 is not a defense within the meaning of this section. McGraff v. McGillvray, 135 M 256, 342 P2d 736 (1959).

Criminal Prosecution: Though a civil action does not abate by the death of a party if the cause of action survives, in a criminal prosecution the death of the convicted person abates the appeal. St. v. Lawrence, 122 M 277, 201 P2d 756 (1949), followed and clarified in St. v. Holland, 1998 MT 67, 288 M 164, 955 P2d 1360, 55 St. Rep. 282 (1998). Holland was overruled in St. v. Benn, 2012 MT 33, 364 Mont. 153, 274 P.3d 47, in which the Supreme Court ruled that the death of a criminal defendant renders the appeal moot unless the defendant's personal representative can demonstrate that there are appellate issues not rendered moot by the defendant's death.

Workers' Compensation Cases: The widow of an employee insured under the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act) and killed in the performance of his duties, after being awarded workmen's compensation, had the right, as heir and administratrix, to bring a negligence action against the driver of the car which killed her husband and employ an attorney to conduct the case, the latter being given a first lien upon his client's cause of action by 37-61-420, which cannot be affected by subrogation of the claim under the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act). Hardware Mut. Cas. Co. v. Butler, 116 M 73, 148 P2d 563 (1944).

Attachment: Attachment is a "proceeding" within the meaning of this section, authorizing substitution of parties in an action or proceeding; since plaintiff under the facts stated could, under section 93-2801, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed and replaced by former Rule 17(a), M.R.Civ.P., now superseded), have maintained his action as trustee of an express trust and this section authorizes substitution of the assignee of a cause of action as plaintiff, there appeared no reason why an amendment substituting himself as owner of the cause of action in an action commenced by him as trustee would affect the continuing force of the levy so long as it will not change the cause of action. N. Mont. Ass'n of Credit Men v. Hauge, 111 M 56, 105 P2d 1102 (1940).

Foreign Administrator of Defendant: Although an action for tort survives the death of the wrongdoer under this section and the action is transitory wherever service may be had, such action was not maintainable against an administratrix in Washington in a federal court in Washington since it was not one on "contract" under the Washington probate law, and since a Washington citizen could not bring such an action, denial did not violate equality of treatment under the United States Constitution. Muir v. Kessinger, 35 F. Supp. 116 (D.C. Mont. 1940).

Appeal After Transfer of Interest: Where a landowner commenced suit to enjoin an irrigation district from assessing the land for interest on bonds of the district but pending appeal transferred its interest to another corporation, the appealing district was not deprived of its right to have the judgment against it reviewed because of the transfer. Rosebud Land & Improvement Co. v. Carterville Irrigation District, 102 M 465, 58 P2d 765 (1936).

Assignor Continuing Pending Action: Though under section 93-2801, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed and replaced by former Rule 17(a), M.R.Civ.P., now superseded), every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, where an action on a claim is pending at the time of its assignment, it may, under this section, be continued in the name of the assignor. Osborne v. McDonald, 91 M 83, 5 P2d 568 (1931).

Claim Against Decedent's Estate: Where an action is pending against a decedent at the time of his death, the action does not abate, under this section, if the plaintiff presents his claim to the executor or administrator of decedent's estate for allowance or rejection as required by section 91-2714, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed). In re Stevenson's Estate, 87 M 486, 289 P 566 (1930).

Removal of Public Officer: A proceeding for the removal of a County Commissioner from office on a charge of illegal collection of fees, resulting in his ouster, did not abate with his death, and his personal representative was entitled to prosecute the appeal taken by defendant during his lifetime. St. v. Russell, 84 M 61, 274 P 148 (1929).

Seduction and Breach of Promise: An action for either breach of promise or seduction survives and may be maintained against the administrator of the estate of defendant. Kennedy v. Rogan, 52 M 242, 156 P 1078 (1916).

Directors' Liability Survives: The right of action given by a statute requiring the annual preparation and filing of a report by the directors of a domestic trading corporation, showing the financial affairs of the company and, in case of their default, making these directors liable for debts of the corporation while the default continues, survives their death and may be prosecuted against their estates. First Nat'l Bank v. Cottonwood Land Co., 51 M 544, 154 P 582 (1916), explained in Anderson v. Wirkman, 67 M 176, 215 P 224 (1923). See N. Pac. Ry. v. Crowell, 245 F 668 (D.C. N.J. 1917).

Personal Injuries to Minor Decedent: Under this section, the administrator of the estate of a minor who died before action could be brought to recover damages for personal injuries, which he survived for an appreciable length of time, could properly bring suit in that behalf, and the contention that either the parent or guardian was the proper party plaintiff, under 27-1-512, was without merit. Melzner v. N. Pac. Ry., 46 M 162, 127 P 146 (1912).

Cause of Action Presupposed: Every survival statute presupposes the existence of a cause of action in favor of the injured party. Such a statute does not create a new cause of action but only carries forward the right that the injured party had before his death. Dillon v. Great N. Ry., 38 M 485, 100 P 960 (1909). See also Starkenbug v. St., 282 M 1, 934 P2d 1018, 54 St. Rep. 214 (1997), as to the rule that death may not be instantaneous for survival of a cause of action.

Dower Right Survives: An action by a widow to recover a dower right and for the value of rents and profits does not abate upon her death but survives to her legal representative. Lynde v. Wakefield, 19 M 23, 47 P 5 (1896), explained in Melzner v. N. Pac. Ry., 46 M 162, 127 P 146 (1912).

Substitution of Assignee as Plaintiff: The assignee of an account to whom it has been transferred by the original plaintiff after a complaint and answer have been filed, and who has been substituted as plaintiff, may prove the assignment although it was not pleaded in the complaint. Campbell v. Irvine, 17 M 476, 43 P 626 (1896).

Defense Survives: A defense does not abate by the death of a defendant after the commencement of an action, although there has been no service of summons, but survives under this section and may be maintained by his representatives. Lavell v. Frost, 16 M 93, 40 P 146 (1895).

27-1-502. Survival of counterclaim — death or assignment.

Case Notes

Use of Damage Judgments to Offset Damages Against Assignor Arising From Breach of Wellhead Purchase Contracts: First Security Bank filed a complaint in which it sought to recover amounts allegedly owed by Northern Montana Gas Company (Northern) to Montana Pacific Oil & Gas Company (MOPOG) based on wellhead purchase contracts that Northern allegedly breached. Northern's answer included defenses under this section, claiming a right to offset against any recovery obtained by the bank the amount of judgments entered in its favor against First Security Bank's assignor, MOPOG, and defenses under 27-1-503, claiming that its right to offset could not be defeated when MOPOG assigned its claim to the bank and when that claim was ultimately asserted by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC). The trial court concluded that the FDIC, as the bank's receiver, was entitled to damages and that none of the judgments could be set off against FDIC. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that when read in the context of this section, "cross-demands" necessarily refers to claims between the parties and that this section does not limit setoff to claims arising out of the same transaction, but refers only to counterclaims that could have been set up in the same action. Because at the time that MOPOG assigned its rights to First Security its obligation already existed and because Northern was entitled to assert that obligation as a basis for setoff, pursuant to 27-1-503, Northern's right survived the assignment. The District Court relied on the general rule that in the absence of an express assumption of liability, an assignee is not liable for an assignor's obligation. However, that holding fails to recognize the difference between a counterclaim for affirmative relief and a defense that simply seeks to reduce the plaintiff's recovery dollar-for-dollar based on a defense that could have been asserted against the assignor. Pursuant to former Rules 13(b) and 13(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), any claim that Northern had against MOPOG could have been permissibly set up as a counterclaim if MOPOG had sued Northern for breach of the wellhead purchase contracts. Therefore, Northern's right to offset survived the assignment by MOPOG to the bank. Although a setoff requires mutuality, all mutuality requires is that the defendant have a right to assert the claim against the plaintiff or its assignor that forms the basis for setoff. Thus, the Supreme Court affirmed the award of damages to FDIC and reversed the District Court, holding that judgments could not be used to setoff the bank's damage award because pursuant to this section, Northern had a right to offset those amounts against any claim by MOPOG and pursuant to 27-1-503, the right to offset that amount survived the assignment by MOPOG of its rights to First Security Bank. Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp. v. N. Mont. Gas Co., 274 M 371, 908 P2d 1357, 52 St. Rep. 1276 (1995).

Medical Negligence — Right of Tribal Member to Pursue State Court Action Against Nontribal Member — State Court Jurisdiction: The plaintiff alleged medical negligence against a medical clinic that cared for the plaintiff's husband, who was a member of the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes. The plaintiff was not a tribal member, the clinic was not affiliated with a tribe, and the acts took place both on and off the reservation. The District Court held that state courts do not have jurisdiction on the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Reservation over actions for medical negligence. The plaintiff appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. The court noted that it is well established under both state and federal law that tribal members may bring civil actions against nontribal members in state court, and that tribal autonomy and self-government are not impeded when a state allows an Indian to seek relief in state court against a non-Indian for a claim arising in Indian country. This right of access to courts applies to residents of each Montana Indian reservation. Therefore, the plaintiff was not precluded from bringing the medical negligence action in state court and the state court had jurisdiction to hear the case. Morigeau v. Gorman, 2010 MT 36, 355 Mont. 225, 225 P.3d 1260. See also State ex rel. Iron Bear v. District Court, 162 Mont. 335, 512 P.2d 1292 (1973), and Three Affiliated Tribes of the Fort Berthold Reservation v. Wold Eng'r, 476 US 877 (1986).

Use of Damage Judgments to Offset Damages Against Assignor Arising From Breach of Wellhead Purchase Contracts: First Security Bank filed a complaint in which it sought to recover amounts allegedly owed by Northern Montana Gas Company (Northern) to Montana Pacific Oil & Gas Company (MOPOG) based on wellhead purchase contracts that Northern allegedly breached. Northern's answer included defenses under 27-1-502, claiming a right to offset against any recovery obtained by the bank the amount of judgments entered in its favor against First Security Bank's assignor, MOPOG, and defenses under this section, claiming that its right to offset could not be defeated when MOPOG assigned its claim to the bank and when that claim was ultimately asserted by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC). The trial court concluded that the FDIC, as the bank's receiver, was entitled to damages and that none of the judgments could be set off against FDIC. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that when read in the context of 27-1-502, "cross-demands" necessarily refers to claims between the parties and that 27-1-502 does not limit setoff to claims arising out of the same transaction, but refers only to counterclaims that could have been set up in the same action. Because at the time that MOPOG assigned its rights to First Security its obligation already existed and because Northern was entitled to assert that obligation as a basis for setoff, pursuant to this section, Northern's right survived the assignment. The District Court relied on the general rule that in the absence of an express assumption of liability, an assignee is not liable for an assignor's obligation. However, that holding fails to recognize the difference between a counterclaim for affirmative relief and a defense that simply seeks to reduce the plaintiff's recovery dollar-for-dollar based on a defense that could have been asserted against the assignor. Pursuant to former Rules 13(b) and 13(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), any claim that Northern had against MOPOG could have been permissibly set up as a counterclaim if MOPOG had sued Northern for breach of the wellhead purchase contracts. Therefore, Northern's right to offset survived the assignment by MOPOG to the bank. Although a setoff requires mutuality, all mutuality requires is that the defendant have a right to assert the claim against the plaintiff or its assignor that forms the basis for setoff. Thus, the Supreme Court affirmed the award of damages to FDIC and reversed the District Court, holding that judgments could not be used to setoff the bank's damage award because pursuant to 27-1-502, Northern had a right to offset those amounts against any claim by MOPOG and pursuant to this section, the right to offset that amount survived the assignment by MOPOG of its rights to First Security Bank. Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp. v. N. Mont. Gas Co., 274 M 371, 908 P2d 1357, 52 St. Rep. 1276 (1995).

Substitution of Parties: Defendant in a mortgage foreclosure suit based on nonpayment of a promissory note that had been assigned by the payee to another and transferred by the latter to the former after default had been entered was not prejudiced by an amendment of the complaint, after default, by substitution of the original payee for the assignee as party plaintiff, since any defense he may have had against the payee on the note, whether negotiable in the first instance or nonnegotiable, was equally available to him against the assignee, plaintiff in the foreclosure suit. Price v. Skylstead, 69 M 453, 222 P 1059 (1924).

Receiver as Assignee: A receiver of an insolvent commercial bank acts as assignee of the insolvent, and as such must, in the collection of its assets, recognize the right of setoff where it exists, just as the bank would have been compelled to do had it sought to enforce collection prior to insolvency. Aetna Accident & Liab. Co. v. Miller, 54 M 377, 170 P 760 (1918); Williams v. Johnson, 50 M 7, 144 P 768 (1914).

Payment to Assignor: Where the maker of a nonnegotiable contract made for the payment of money or personal property pays the assignor without notice of an assignment of such contract and in good faith takes an acquittance, such payment constitutes a complete defense to an action by the assignee. Cornish v. Woolverton, 32 M 456, 81 P 4 (1905).

Nonnegotiable Instruments:

This section is not in conflict with 28-2-206, nor does one in anywise limit the operation of or expand the other. Cornish v. Woolverton, 32 M 456, 81 P 4 (1905); Stadler v. First Nat'l Bank, 22 M 190, 56 P 111 (1899).

The change in the rule of the common law, whereby the assignee of a nonnegotiable contract could not maintain an action thereon in his own name but only in the name of the assignor, brought about by section 93-2801, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), was the reason for and rendered necessary the enactment of this section. Cornish v. Woolverton, 32 M 456, 81 P 4 (1905); Stadler v. First Nat'l Bank, 22 M 190, 56 P 111 (1899).

Setoff of Intermediate Claim: This section does not permit the setoff against the assignee of a demand against the assignor arising between the endorsement and notice thereof. Where a debtor of a bank has deposits, the certificates of which have not matured, the insolvency of the bank will not give the debtor the right to have such deposits set off against his debt. Stadler v. First Nat'l Bank, 22 M 190, 56 P 111 (1899), distinguished in Apple v. Edwards, 92 M 524, 16 P2d 700 (1932).

Minority Tolling Inapplicable to Survival Claim: A minor was injured in an ATV accident and died the next day. The father sued the doctor for wrongful death and survival medical malpractice. The District Court held that minority tolling did not apply to the action and the father appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. A survival action belongs to a decedent's estate, and only the estate's personal representative may bring the survival action. In the case of a minor, only the adult personal representative of the estate may bring a survival medical malpractice claim regarding injuries the deceased allegedly sustained as a minor, regardless of whether the action involves injury to a minor younger or older than 4 years of age. Minority tolling does not apply to the time after a child's death when, as here, the father and not the child was the person entitled to bring the survival action. In this case, the minor died the day after the doctor first became involved in the minor's care, so minority tolling extended the limitations period by no more than 1 day. Thus, the District Court properly held that minority tolling did not apply to the survival action or to the wrongful death action against the doctor. Runstrom v. Allen, 2008 MT 281, 345 M 314, 191 P3d 410 (2008), following In re Estate of Lambert, 2006 MT 229, 333 M 444, 143 P3d 426 (2006), and distinguishing Payne v. District Court, 2002 MT 313, 313 M 118, 60 P3d 469 (2002).

Loss of Consortium Claim Independent as to Damages, but Derivative as to Liability: Mickelson was injured when the fire truck that he was driving was struck by a Montana Rail Link (MRL) train. His spouse and children sought damages for loss of consortium. The District Court held that the loss of consortium claims should be reduced by the percentage of negligence attributed to Mickelson. When a plaintiff's contributory negligence is determined to be not greater than the tortfeasor's negligence, then damages for loss of consortium, being independent and not contingent upon the rights or liabilities of a parent or spouse, may not be reduced by the other spouse's negligence. However, because the language in 27-1-702 provides that any damages allowed must be diminished in the proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to the person recovering, a loss of consortium claim is considered independent as to damages and derivative as to liability. In other words, a defendant must be more liable for a plaintiff's injuries than the plaintiff before there can be any recovery, whether it is on the plaintiff's personal injury claim or on a loss of consortium claim stemming from those injuries. For example, if plaintiff is determined to be 50% or less contributorily negligent for plaintiff's injuries, then a spouse or child could recover 100% of a loss of consortium claim; however, if plaintiff is determined to be 51% or more contributorily negligent for plaintiff's injuries, then a spouse or child would recover nothing on a loss of consortium claim. Therefore, the Supreme Court directed that, on retrial, any contributory negligence attributable to Mickelson could not be imputed to the spouse and children to reduce a loss of consortium award, but if Mickelson was found more liable than MRL, there could be no recovery for loss of consortium. Mickelson v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 111, 299 M 348, 999 P2d 985, 57 St. Rep. 446 (2000), following Herold v. Burlington N., Inc., 761 F2d 1241 (8th Cir. 1985).

Elements Necessary for Minor Child to Establish Claim for Loss of Parental Consortium: In Montana, the elements necessary for a minor child to establish a claim for loss of parental consortium are: (1) a third party tortiously causes the parent to suffer a serious, permanent, and disabling mental or physical injury compensable under Montana law; and (2) the parent's ultimate condition of mental or physical impairment must be so overwhelming and severe that it causes the parent-child relationship to be destroyed or nearly destroyed. If the tortfeasor is not subject to liability to the parent under tort principles, the child cannot sustain a cause of action for loss of parental consortium. If the parent could not recover from the tortfeasor for purely mental or emotional injury absent a physical component, the child cannot bring an action for consortium loss resulting from that injury. The destruction or near destruction of the parent-child relationship is a necessary element in establishing the cause of action, not merely a factor in computing damages. Keele v. St. Vincent Hosp. & Health Care Center, 258 M 158, 852 P2d 574, 50 St. Rep. 475 (1993), following Villareal v. St. Dept. of Transportation, 774 P2d 213 (Ariz. 1989). In North Pacific Ins. Co. v. Stucky, 2014 MT 299, 377 Mont. 25, 338 P.3d 56, the Supreme Court held that the elements necessary for an adult child to establish a claim for loss of parental consortium are the same as those for a minor child as adopted in Keele.

Right of Child to Cause of Action for Loss of Parental Consortium — Injury by Third Party: Minor children are entitled to the support, aid, protection, affection, society, discipline, guidance, and training of their parents. Therefore, a minor child who has been deprived of these rights by the tortious injury to a parent by a third party has a separate cause of action for loss of parental consortium. However, any one element of damages for the injury may be recovered only once. Pence v. Fox, 248 M 521, 813 P2d 429, 48 St. Rep. 550 (1991).

Operation and Effect: At common law an infant plaintiff sued by guardian ad litem, but under statutes of this state he may appear by his general guardian or his guardian ad litem. Melzner v. N. Pac. Ry., 46 M 162, 127 P 146 (1912); Flaherty v. Butte Elec. Ry., 40 M 454, 107 P 416 (1910).

Thus, the District Court properly held that minority tolling did not apply to the survival action or to the wrongful death action against the doctor. Runstrom v. Allen, 2008 MT 281, 345 M 314, 191 P3d 410 (2008), following In re Estate of Lambert, 2006 MT 229, 333 M 444, 143 P3d 426 (2006), and distinguishing Payne v. District Court, 2002 MT 313, 313 M 118, 60 P3d 469 (2002).

Reopening of Litigation for Injured Members of Class Action — Summary Judgment Proper: After plaintiffs settled with the insurer for damages incurred in the death of plaintiffs' daughter, a class action suit concerning insurance stacking provisions allowed plaintiffs to reopen their case and seek further damages from the insurer. Plaintiffs filed another damage claim with the insurer, but the claim was denied, so plaintiffs sued the insurer seeking full recovery of their damages. Plaintiffs filed a combined motion for summary judgment and motion to strike affirmative defenses, and defendant filed a cross-motion to bar plaintiffs from relitigating the wrongful death and survivorship action. The parties agreed that there were no genuine issues of material fact, and the District Court granted plaintiffs' motion and denied defendant's motion. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. As injured members of the certified class, plaintiffs were clearly entitled to relitigate their claims. The affirmative defenses that plaintiffs sought to strike did not include estoppel or res judicata, but those defenses were inapplicable in light of the scope of the class action agreement allowing reopening of litigation. Absent an issue of material fact, summary judgment for plaintiffs was appropriate. Hern v. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill., 2005 MT 301, 329 M 347, 125 P3d 597 (2005).

Loss of Consortium Claim Allowed Only by Personal Representative: Plaintiff sought damages for a loss of consortium for the death of her adult child in a car accident, allegedly caused by defendant's negligence. The District Court concluded that Montana law does not recognize a loss of consortium claim for the death of an adult child, so defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted. The Supreme Court agreed with the defendant petition on rehearing that a loss of consortium claim arising from a negligently inflicted death is an inextricable element of a wrongful death action that may be brought only by a personal representative of a decedent under 27-1-513 and that damages for wrongful death may be recovered only once. Plaintiff did not have standing to bring a wrongful death action under 27-1-513 because she was neither her son's heir nor his personal representative, so plaintiff's loss of consortium claim should have been dismissed as a matter of law. Allowing a separate loss of consortium claim by someone other than a personal representative would create a multiplicity of claims arising from the same wrongful death, in contravention of legislative intent. In situations when both causes of action apply, the personal representative must bring both actions together to prevent multiple actions arising from the same death. Thus, even though the District Court arrived at the correct conclusion for the wrong reason, summary judgment for defendant was affirmed. Renville v. Fredrickson, 2004 MT 324, 324 M 86, 101 P3d 773 (2004).

Proceeds of Wrongful Death or Survival Claim — Ownership by Heirs or Survivors: Under Swanson v. Champion Int'l Corp., 197 M 509, 646 P2d 1166 (1982), the ownership of proceeds from settlement of wrongful death or survival claims belongs to the heirs or the estate, respectively. In this case, a $95,000 settlement draft was paid to settle claims against the insured driver in exchange for his release from claims for wrongful death and personal injury. The draft was made payable to the estate and to the estate's attorney. However, the estate offered evidence that there was no agreement to pay any fee to the attorney from those proceeds. Applying Swanson, the evidence created a factual issue regarding ownership of the proceeds and accrued interest sufficient to preclude summary judgment and a directed verdict requested by the attorney regarding payment of fees. Eatinger v. Johnson, 269 M 99, 887 P2d 231, 51 St. Rep. 1484 (1994).

Supreme Court Recognizes Wrongful Death Claim for Stillborn Fetus: Alexa Strzelczyk brought a wrongful death action against her physician for the death of her full-term, stillborn fetus. The defendant, Jett, removed the case to federal court because neither party still resided in Montana. The federal court certified the case to the state Supreme Court because of the state court's decision in Kuhnke v. Fisher, 210 M 114, 683 P2d 916 (1984), holding that under state law at that time, wrongful death statutes did not support a claim for the death of a stillborn fetus. The federal court noted that the statutes had been revised since the 1984 decision. The Supreme Court ruled that the revised statutes provided for an action for the wrongful death of a "person", rather than "minor child", and that a child conceived but not yet born is defined as an "existing person" under the law, so far as may be necessary for its interest in the event of its subsequent birth. The Supreme Court noted that "live" birth is not statutorily required. The Supreme Court also held that each case must be considered carefully to determine if the circumstances make it "necessary" for the fetus to be determined to be a person in order to protect some interest. Strzelczyk v. Jett, 264 M 153, 870 P2d 730, 51 St. Rep. 206 (1994).

Allocation of Award for Wrongful Death of Child to One Parent Only: While generally both parents are entitled to share any award for the wrongful death of a child, where evidence demonstrated that only the mother could reasonably be expected to suffer damages, including loss of consortium, mental anguish, and loss of future support, it was not error for the District Court to allocate all proceeds of the wrongful death action to the mother. In re Estate of Farnum, 224 M 304, 730 P2d 391, 43 St. Rep. 2205 (1986).

One-Action Rule Not Applicable to Death of Minor — Action for Wrongful Death of Child Settled by Personal Representative — Allocation of Proceeds: The one-action rule applied to wrongful death of an adult under 27-1-513, providing that only one action may be brought by the personal representative, does not apply to the wrongful death of a child in 27-1-512, under which either parent may bring an action. However, where the mother was properly appointed personal representative, it was not error for the probate court to authorize her to settle both the wrongful death action and the survival action, which could only be settled by the personal representative, and to approve allocation of the proceeds of the settlement between the two actions. In re Estate of Farnum, 224 M 304, 730 P2d 391, 43 St. Rep. 2205 (1986).

Child's Death Occurring Prior to Amendment of This Section Providing That Wrongful Death Action May Be Brought by Either Parent — Second Action by Father Permissible — Lack of Standing by Defendant to Challenge Constitutionality of Statute: Prior to its amendment in 1975, section 93-2809, R.C.M. 1947 (now recodified as 27-1-512), provided that an action for wrongful death of a child was to be brought by the child's father, unless the father was dead or had deserted the family. In those instances, the mother could bring the lawsuit. The statute was amended to provide that either parent may bring such an action. Barrett's daughter was killed in an automobile accident 2 weeks before the statute was amended. Barrett and his wife were divorced in 1969, prior to the child's death. The mother was the child's legal custodian. Ten weeks after the amendment went into effect, the mother filed a wrongful death action. The mother settled the case and as personal representative of the child's estate executed a release of all claims arising from the accident. Barrett had not been made a party to the lawsuit or notified of the proceedings, nor did he share in the proceeds of the settlement; however, he was aware of the lawsuit prior to its settlement. In 1978, Barrett filed a wrongful death action on his own behalf. The District Court, over appellant's objection, conducted a jury trial at which Barrett prevailed. The Supreme Court affirmed. The court agreed with appellant's contention that normally there can be only one wrongful death action arising from a death. But the court ruled that, in this case, the father's suit was permissible because an action for wrongful death accrues in the statutory designee at the time of death and the amendment had not been made retroactive. The court further held that appellant lacked standing to challenge the constitutionality of the original statute because appellant was not injured by the alleged under-inclusiveness of the statute. Barrett v. Soyland, 221 M 160, 717 P2d 1090, 43 St. Rep. 712 (1986).

No Wrongful Death Action for Death of Unborn Child: In view of the rule for calculating the periods of minority set forth in 41-1-102, an unborn fetus is not a "minor child" within the meaning of 27-1-512 and an action for the wrongful death of an unborn child cannot be maintained under present state law. Kuhnke v. Fisher, 210 M 114, 683 P2d 916, 41 St. Rep. 952 (1984), distinguished in Strzelczyk v. Jett, 264 M 153, 870 P2d 730, 51 St. Rep. 206 (1994).

Death of Child — Damages for Grief and Distress: Damages for the sorrow, mental distress, or grief of the parents of a deceased minor are recoverable in a wrongful death action brought pursuant to 27-1-512. Any previous decisions, to the extent they conflict with this holding, are expressly overruled. Dawson v. Hill & Hill Truck Lines, 206 M 325, 671 P2d 589, 40 St. Rep. 1689 (1983).

General Discussion of Wrongful Death and Survival Actions: For general discussion of wrongful death and survival actions, see Swanson v. Champion Int'l Corp., 197 M 509, 646 P2d 1166, 39 St. Rep. 639 (1982). See also *Sorum v. Personal Injury — When Strict Liability Applies — Harmless Error: Plaintiffs purchased a used dirt bike from the defendant. Both plaintiffs were injured riding the motorcycle and brought an action in strict liability, and alternately, in negligence. The case was submitted to the jury on the negligence theory only. The jury found that the plaintiffs' actions were the proximate cause of the accident in both cases and that the defendant was not negligent. On appeal, the plaintiffs alleged error in the failure to submit the case to make a pretrial ruling on the strict liability theory. The Supreme Court held that the plaintiffs could not have been prejudiced by the court's failure to instruct on strict liability because: (1) in this particular case the jury's findings of no negligence on the part of the defendant in adjusting the brakes would foreclose a finding by defect by reason of brake maladjustment; (2) plaintiffs did not carry their burden to establish a causal relationship between brake maladjustment and the accident in that the testimony fails to prove that the accident was caused by defective brakes rather than caused by the bike hitting the ditch at a time the driver was inattentive. Likewise, since the jury found the defendant to be not negligent, any error in instructions on affirmative defenses was harmless. Therefore, the instructions pertaining to assumption of risk did not require review. Evangeline v. Billings Cycle Center, 192 M 106, 626 P2d 841, 38 St. Rep. 550 (1981).

Interfamily Tort Immunity Doctrine: Where wife could not have maintained tort action against husband for injuries received in automobile accident allegedly due to husband's negligence, there was no cause of action to flow to her personal representative and son could not maintain action as her personal representative after her death. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Leary, 168 M 482, 544 P2d 444 (1975).

Jurisdiction — Indian Plaintiff: Montana has jurisdiction to hear action for wrongful death brought by Indian plaintiff against non-Indian as a result of automobile accident within the boundaries of the reservation, since all persons have free access to Montana courts and equal protection of its laws. McCrea v. Busch, 164 M 442, 524 P2d 781 (1974), followed in Lambert v. Ryzik, 268 M 219, 886 P2d 378, 51 St. Rep. 1250 (1994).

Limitation of Actions: An action by an adoptive father and natural grandfather under this section is an action for an injury to a pecuniary interest of the parent, therefore one for an injury to a property right that must be commenced within 2 years from the date the claim arose under 27-2-207. LaTray v. Mannix Elec. Co., 148 M 303, 419 P2d 744 (1966), but see Bryant v. Hall, 157 M 28, 482 P2d 147 (1971).

Mother Bringing Action:

Decedent's mother was real party in interest in wrongful death action where decedent left no surviving wife or children and his father was dead. Cowan v. Pac. Gamble Robinson Co., 232 F. Supp. 403 (D.C. Mont. 1964).

The complaint, in an action brought by the mother of a child to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by the latter, must set forth that the father was dead or had deserted his family at the time the action was commenced, and in the absence of such allegation the complaint fails to state a cause of action. Martin v. Butte, 34 M 281, 86 P 264 (1906).

Amount of Verdict:

A verdict of $15,195 was not excessive in an action by father for wrongful death of his 5-year-old son. Wyant v. Dunn, 140 M 181, 368 P2d 917 (1962).

Damages awarded for injury to a minor cover both the child's cause of action pursuant to section 93-2805, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), and the parents' cause of action, pursuant to this section. Chavez v. U.S., 192 F. Supp. 263 (D.C. Mont. 1961).

Argument of Counsel: In an action by a father for the wrongful death of his infant son, it was not reversible error for the trial court to permit the plaintiff's counsel, over objection, in their argument to the jury, to suggest a mathematical basis for fixing damages for loss of love, affection, and companionship on a per diem basis, where the trial judge instructed the jury that any remark of counsel not sustained by the evidence should be disregarded. Wyant v. Dunn, 140 M 181, 368 P2d 917 (1962).

Interest on Verdict: Where the amount due a father for the wrongful death of his minor son was not ascertained (or ascertainable) until after the jury had returned its verdict, interest was allowable only from the date the verdict was rendered. Wyant v. Dunn, 140 M 181, 368 P2d 917 (1962).

Causes of Action Distinguished:

In the case of an injury to a minor, there arise two causes of action, one in favor of the minor under section 93-2805, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), and the other in favor of the parents under this section. Chavez v. U.S., 192 F. Supp. 263 (D.C. Mont. 1961).

In the case of a personal injury to a minor, one cause of action arises in his own favor and another in favor of the parents for loss of services during minority; in case of death the action in favor of the minor survives and may be prosecuted by his administrator (this section), and recovery of damages by a parent, either as guardian ad litem of the living child or as administrator of the estate of the decedent in the surviving action, is no bar to recovery by the parent in his own right for damages by reason of injury to the child (subject to an exception not involved herein). Burns v. Eminger, 84 M 397, 276 P 437 (1929), distinguished in Marinkovich v. Tierney, 93 M 72, 17 P2d 93 (1932).

Death of Child: Insofar as this section authorizes a guardian to prosecute an action for injury to his ward, it relates only to such an action as the minor has during his lifetime; while, in case of the death of the minor from such injury, his action or right of action survives and is to be maintained by his personal representative. Melzner v. N. Pac. Ry., 46 M 162, 127 P 146 (1912).

Federal Employers' Liability Act: In an action, under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, brought by the personal representative of one injured while employed by a common carrier in interstate commerce, the complaint must allege and the proof show that there are in existence persons answering the description of the beneficiaries named in the statute. Melzner v. N. Pac. Ry., 46 M 162, 127 P 146 (1912).

Earnings After Majority of Child: In an action for the death of his minor son, the plaintiff can recover for pecuniary benefits reasonably to be expected to be received from the deceased after his majority, in view of this section, 27-1-323, permitting the award of such damages as may be just, and 40-6-214, making it the duty of children to support a parent who is unable to maintain himself. Gilman v. G. W. Dart Hardware Co., 42 M 96, 111 P 550 (1910).

Guardian Ad Litem Bringing Action: The provisions of this section are not exclusive, but the minor may proceed under section 93-2805, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), and sue by his guardian ad litem. Flaherty v. Butte Elec. Ry., 40 M 454, 107 P 416 (1910).

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

1987 Amendment: Near beginning, after "When", inserted "injuries to and", after "person" deleted "not being a minor", substituted "the personal representative of the decedent's estate" for "his heirs or personal representatives", and made minor change in phraseology.

Case Notes

Recovery of Wrongful Death Damages — Intestate Succession Laws Inapplicable — Writ of Supervisory Control Granted: The parents of an adult child who died in a motor vehicle accident alleged they were entitled to wrongful death damages, but the decedent's ex-wife, who was personal representative of the estate, alleged the decedent's parents did not have standing to claim wrongful death damages because they were not intestate or statutory heirs. The Supreme Court granted the parents' petition for supervisory control, holding that the decedent's parents could recover wrongful death damages and that although the damages were personal to the parents, they could be pursued by the personal representative on the parents' behalf. In re Estate of Bennett, 2013 MT 230, 371 Mont. 275, 308 P.3d 63, explaining Hern v. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill., 2005 MT 301, 329 Mont. 347, 125 P.3d 597.

Minority Tolling Inapplicable to Survival Claim: A minor was injured in an ATV accident and died the next day. The father sued the doctor for wrongful death and survival medical malpractice. The District Court held that minority tolling did not apply to the action and the father appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. A survival action belongs to a decedent's estate, and only the estate's personal representative may bring the survival action. In the case of a minor, only the adult personal representative of the estate may bring a survival medical malpractice claim regarding injuries the deceased allegedly sustained as a minor, regardless of whether the action involves injury to a minor younger or older than 4 years of age. Minority tolling does not apply to the time after a child's death when, as here, the father and not the child was the person entitled to bring the survival action. In this case, the minor died the day after the doctor first became involved in the minor's care, so minority tolling extended the limitations period by no more than 1 day. Thus, the District Court properly held that minority tolling did not apply to the survival action or to the wrongful death action against the doctor. Runstrom v. Allen, 2008 MT 281, 345 M 314, 191 P.3d 410 (2008), following In re Estate of Lambert, 2006 MT 229, 333 M 444, 143 P.3d 426 (2006), and distinguishing Payne v. District Court, 2002 MT 313, 313 M 118, 60 P.3d 469 (2002).

Case-Specific Basis for Award for Loss of Consortium to Parents For Wrongful Death of Adult Child — Bear Medicine Standard of Proof — Award to Personal Representative for Grief, Sorrow, and Mental Anguish Affirmed: An adult child was killed in a vehicle accident. A jury awarded the mother, who was the personal representative of the child, $300,000 for loss of consortium and $450,000 for grief, sorrow, and mental anguish and awarded the father $200,000 for loss of consortium and $300,000 for grief, sorrow, and mental anguish. The defendant insurer appealed the awards. The Supreme Court held that because the father was not the personal representative, damages of any kind were inappropriate in the wrongful death claim, so the awards to the father were vacated. As personal representative, the mother was entitled to damages for grief, sorrow, and mental anguish, and that award was affirmed. The court then examined the loss of consortium award to the mother. In Bear Medicine v. U.S., 192 F. Supp. 2d 1053 (D.C. Mont. 2002), a federal court allowed recovery for loss of consortium and speculated that Montana would adopt a cause of action for loss of consortium for parents of adult children. However, the Supreme Court declined to define exactly under what circumstances a loss of consortium claim by parents of an adult child would stand, holding that each case must be determined on the facts and evidence presented. Significant evidence must include an extraordinarily close and interdependent relationship, such as that shown in Bear Medicine, before a loss of consortium claim may be considered. In this case, the mother did not meet the high level of proof to meet the Bear Medicine standard, so the award for loss of consortium was vacated. Hern v. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill., 2005 MT 301, 329 M 347, 125 P.3d 597 (2005).

Compensation for Lost Household Services Not Appropriate in Survivorship Action — Award Not Erroneous When No Double Damages Awarded: Damages for compensation of lost household services are legitimate in a personal injury claim and a wrongful death action, but not in a survivorship action. However, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in the present survivorship case by awarding damages for compensation of lost household services when the damages did not constitute impermissible double recovery and were within the range of damages to which plaintiffs were entitled. Hern v. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill., 2005 MT 301, 329 M 347, 125 P3d 597 (2005).

Damages for Loss of Established Course of Life — Limited to Personal Injury Claims: Damages for loss of established course of life are unique to Montana and are limited to personal injury claims as opposed to survivorship claims, as expressed in Oberson v. U.S., 311 F. Supp. 2d 917 (D.C. Mont. 2004). This species of damages is intended to compensate for an injured person's loss of what the person once had and the accompanying realization that the person will live life without ever recovering the previous course of life. In the present case, the District Court incorrectly instructed the jury that it could award damages for loss of established course of life in a survivorship action. Hern v. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill., 2005 MT 301, 329 M 347, 125 P3d 597 (2005).

Reopening of Litigation for Injured Members of Class Action — Summary Judgment Proper: After plaintiffs settled with the insurer for damages incurred in the death of plaintiffs' daughter, a class action suit concerning insurance stacking provisions allowed plaintiffs to reopen their case and seek further damages from the insurer. Plaintiffs filed another damage claim with the insurer, but the claim was denied, so plaintiffs sued the insurer seeking full recovery of their damages. Plaintiffs filed a combined motion for summary judgment and motion to strike affirmative defenses, and defendant filed a cross-motion to bar plaintiffs from relitigating the wrongful death and survivorship action. The parties agreed that there were no genuine issues of material fact, and the District Court granted plaintiffs' motion and denied defendant's motion. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. As injured members of the certified class, plaintiffs were clearly entitled to relitigate their claims. The affirmative defenses that plaintiffs sought to strike did not include estoppel or res judicata, but those defenses were inapplicable in light of the scope of the class action agreement allowing reopening of litigation. Absent an issue of material fact, summary judgment for plaintiffs was appropriate. Hern v. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill., 2005 MT 301, 329 M 347, 125 P3d 597 (2005).

Venue in Matter Involving Multiple Defendants — Plaintiff's Venue Alternatives Properly Exercised: Plaintiff's husband was killed in an accident at the city bus barn in Lewis and Clark County in Helena. Plaintiff filed a survivorship/wrongful death action in Silver Bow County against defendant city in Lewis and Clark County and against defendant gas company with its principal place of business in Silver Bow County. The city moved for a change of venue to Lewis and Clark County, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the city argued that because Gabriel v. School District No. 4, 264 M 177, 870 P2d 1351 (1994), and Wentz v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 14, 928 P2d 237 (1996), established that the proper venue for trial of a combined survivorship/wrongful death action is either the county where the survivorship action arose or the county where the wrongful death claim arose and that neither claim in this case arose in Silver Bow County, Silver Bow County was not a proper venue. Plaintiff contended that under 25-2-117, when there are multiple defendants, a proper place for trial of any defendant is proper for all defendants. The Supreme Court agreed with plaintiff. Although Gabriel and Wentz approved counties where survivorship or wrongful death actions arose as proper venues, neither case established those counties as exclusive venues for survivorship/wrongful death actions. In cases with multiple defendants pursuant to 25-2-117, including defendants that are both political subdivisions and private entities, 25-2-126, which provides venue for actions against political subdivisions, does not prevail over 25-2-122, which provides venue for tort actions, but rather provides alternative venue options to a plaintiff. The plaintiff properly exercised a venue option here, and denial of the change of venue motion was affirmed. Meyer v. Mont. Power Co., LLC, 2005 MT 66, 326 M 283, 109 P3d 269 (2005), distinguishing Whalen v. Mont. Right to Life Ass'n, 2002 MT 328, 313 M 204, 60 P3d 972 (2002).

Loss of Consortium Claim Allowed Only by Personal Representative: Plaintiff sought damages for a loss of consortium for the death of her adult child in a car accident, allegedly caused by defendant's negligence. The District Court concluded that Montana law does not recognize a loss of consortium claim for the death of an adult child, so defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted. The Supreme Court agreed with the defendant petition on rehearing that a loss of consortium claim arising from a negligently inflicted death is an inextricable element of a wrongful death action that may be brought only by a personal representative of a decedent under this section and that damages for wrongful death may be recovered only once. Plaintiff did not have standing to bring a wrongful death action under this section because she was neither her son's heir nor his personal representative, so plaintiff's loss of consortium claim should have been dismissed as a matter of law. Allowing a separate loss of consortium claim by someone other than a personal representative would create a multiplicity of claims arising from the same wrongful death, in contravention of legislative intent. In situations when both causes of action apply, the personal representative must bring both actions together to prevent multiple actions arising from the same death. Thus, even though the District Court arrived at the correct conclusion for the wrong reason, summary judgment for defendant was affirmed. Renville v. Fredrickson, 2004 MT 324, 324 M 86, 101 P3d 773 (2004).

Police Dispatcher Credibility Having No Bearing on Wrongful Death Action Given City's Admission of Negligence: Plaintiff requested that a medical team be sent to her home to attend to her husband who was in respiratory arrest, but the police dispatcher sent the medics to the wrong address. The husband subsequently died, and the wife brought a wrongful death and negligence action against the city. The city admitted negligence, but the jury found for the city, holding that the city's negligence was not a substantial factor in the death. Plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Given the city's admission of negligence, the dispatcher's failure to report the address confusion did not make the city's negligence or liability for the death any more or less probable. Further, the dispatcher's credibility, even if damaged by the revelation of the misdirection, had no bearing on the case, nor did plaintiff indicate how impairment of the dispatcher's credibility would matter, given the admission of negligence by the city. Christofferson v. Great Falls, 2003 MT 189, 316 M 469, 74 P3d 1021 (2003).

No Prejudicial Error in Failure to Give Negligent Homicide Mental State Instruction in Wrongful Death Action When Other Instructions Adequately Reflect Negligence: Samson's son was killed by Bercier, a youth who walked away from a nonsecure, supervised licensed youth group home. Samson sued the state for foreseeable negligence. To boost the theory of foreseeability, Samson offered a jury instruction that defined Bercier's conduct as reckless and postulated therefrom that the conduct was foreseeable because of Bercier's background, seeking to undermine the state's theory that the shooting was an unforeseeable accident. The District Court refused to offer the instruction, instead instructing the jury on elements of wrongful death, and Samson appealed. The state argued that the mental state of Bercier was not a controlling issue and contended that it was not necessary to instruct the jury on the mental state of negligent homicide because the instructions as a whole properly included the key concepts of a wrongful death action. The Supreme Court agreed with the state. The fundamental issue concerned the state's negligence, not Bercier's mental state. Nevertheless, Samson was still able to present the foreseeability theory under the instructions that were given, so failure to give Samson's offered instruction did not result in prejudice to Samson's case. It is within a District Court's discretion to decide how to instruct the jury, taking into account the theories of the contending parties, and absent an abuse of discretion, the District Court was affirmed. Samson v. St., 2003 MT 133, 316 M 90, 69 P3d 1154 (2003). See also Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122 (1996).

State Not Liable for Unforeseeable Accident — Intervening Criminal Act of Third Person — Expert Testimony on Foreseeability Proper: Samson's son was killed by Bercier, a youth who walked away from a nonsecure, supervised licensed youth group home. Samson sued the state for negligence. The jury returned a verdict for the state, and Samson appealed. Rather than retry the case and evaluate the facts to determine whether the state was negligent, the Supreme Court reviewed the verdict to determine if there was substantial evidence to support it and determined that there was. In order to sustain a negligence action, plaintiff must establish a legal duty on the part of defendant, a breach of that duty, causation, and damages. In cases involving a dispute over the intervening criminal act of a third party, foreseeability must be analyzed twice—first with regard to the existence of a legal duty and second with regard to proximate causation. Samson contended that the District Court erred in allowing the state to present evidence in the form of expert testimony and to argue that the shooting was an unforeseeable accident. The state argued that the expert testimony was relevant and aided the jury. Given the need to determine the foreseeability of Bercier's actions, the expert testimony was properly allowed. Further, in cases alleging an intervening cause, juries must be instructed that the specific injury to plaintiff need not have been foreseen. Samson v. St., 2003 MT 133, 316 M 90, 69 P3d 1154 (2003), affirming Lacock v. 4B's Restaurants, Inc., 277 M 17, 919 P2d 373 (1996). See also Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999), and St. v. LaTray, 2000 MT 262, 302 M 11, 11 P3d 116 (2000).

Conditions for Seeking Damages in Survival and Wrongful Death Actions: A survival action belongs to the decedent's estate, allowing recovery for injury to the deceased from the action causing death, and damages recoverable in the action are personal to the decedent, so the estate's right of recovery is identical to the decedent's right, had the decedent lived. Only the personal representative may sue for damages suffered by the decedent in a survival action. Neither the surviving spouse nor any other heir has a legal right to pursue the action unless appointed personal representative. In a survival action, the decedent's estate may recover damages for: (1) lost earnings from the time of injury to death; (2) the present value of the decedent's reasonable earnings during the decedent's life expectancy; (3) medical and funeral expenses; (4) pain and suffering; and (5) other special damages. No Montana law requires an offset of lost future earnings for economic consumption, and an award for future earnings should not be reduced on account of economic consumption. By contrast, a wrongful death action is personal to the decedent's heirs and independent of any cause of action available to the estate and seeks to compensate the heirs for the harm or damages that they personally suffered as a result of the decedent's death. Generally, a wrongful death plaintiff may recover for: (1) loss of consortium; (2) loss of comfort and society; and (3) the reasonable value of the monetary contributions that the decedent would have provided for the support, education, training, and care of the heirs during the life expectancy of the decedent and survivors. Thus, a reduction for economic consumption and the cost of maintenance applies in wrongful death actions. Therefore, in survival actions, the decedent's estate is entitled to recover the full value of the lost future earnings including that portion attributable to economic consumption, while in wrongful death actions, the decedent's heirs are not entitled to the economic consumption allocation. Payne v. District Court, 2002 MT 313, 313 M 118, 60 P3d 469 (2002), following Burns v. Eminger, 84 M 397, 276 P 437 (1929), and Swanson v. Champion Int'l Corp., 197 M 509, 646 P2d 1166 (1982). Swanson and Payne were followed in Hern v. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill., 2005 MT 301, 329 M 347, 125 P3d 597 (2005), and In re Estate of Lambert, 2006 MT 229, 333 M 444, 143 P3d 426 (2006).

Supervisory Control of Issue Related to Wrongful Death and Survival Action and Evidence of Economic Consumption: Plaintiff sought supervisory control of an action related to evidence of economic consumption as it pertained to a survival action and wrongful death. The Supreme Court found that allowing the District Court to permit the jury to consider evidence of economic consumption in this case would be a mistake of law constituting a deviation from well-established jurisprudence that would alter the cost of and preparation for trial, affect settlement negotiations, and call into question the value of any potential verdict, resulting in additional time and expense for appellate resolution and subsequent litigation. Any remedy available to plaintiff on direct appeal would thus prove inadequate, resulting in a gross injustice. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that this was an appropriate case in which to exercise supervisory control. Payne v. District Court, 2002 MT 313, 313 M 118, 60 P3d 469 (2002).

Wrongful Death — Survival Action — Venue: Plaintiff's husband suffered a heart attack in Rosebud County and later died in Yellowstone County. Plaintiff sued in Yellowstone County. Rosebud County and other defendants moved to change venue. The District Court refused, and the Supreme Court affirmed. That the wrongful death action is combined with a survivorship action that could have been brought in Rosebud County because the survivorship action arose there does not render Yellowstone County an improper place for trial for both. Wentz v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 14, 928 P2d 237, 53 St. Rep. 1277 (1996).

Wrongful Death — Survival of Action — Tribal Court Jurisdiction: In a suit arising out of an on-reservation automobile accident involving no tribal members, the Tribal Court of the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes of the Flathead Reservation has subject matter jurisdiction over the wrongful death and survivorship claims and personal jurisdiction over the tortfeasor, a nonmember resident of the reservation. Initiation of a probate action in the state court did not deprive the tribal court of jurisdiction over the survivorship claim. Hinshaw v. Mahler, 42 F3d 1178 (9th Cir. 1994), overruled concerning general propositions on tribal jurisdiction in Strate v. A-1 Contractors, 520 US 438, 137 L Ed 2d 661, 117 S Ct 1404 (1997).

Proceeds of Wrongful Death or Survival Claim — Ownership by Heirs or Survivors: Under Swanson v. Champion Int'l Corp., 197 M 509, 646 P2d 1166 (1982), the ownership of proceeds from settlement of wrongful death or survival claims belongs to the heirs or the estate, respectively. In this case, a $95,000 settlement draft was paid to settle claims against the insured driver in exchange for his release from claims for wrongful death and personal injury. The draft was made payable to the estate and to the estate's attorney. However, the estate offered evidence that there was no agreement to pay any fee to the attorney from those proceeds. Applying Swanson, the evidence created a factual issue regarding ownership of the proceeds and accrued interest sufficient to preclude summary judgment and a directed verdict requested by the attorney regarding payment of fees. Eatinger v. Johnson, 269 M 99, 887 P2d 231, 51 St. Rep. 1484 (1994).

Wrongful Death — Survival of Action — Tribal Court Jurisdiction: In a suit arising out of an on-reservation automobile accident involving no tribal members, the Tribal Court of the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes of the Flathead Reservation has subject matter jurisdiction over the wrongful death and survivorship claims and personal jurisdiction over the tortfeasor, a nonmember resident of the reservation. Initiation of a probate action in the state court did not deprive the tribal court of jurisdiction over the survivorship claim. Hinshaw v. Mahler, 42 F3d 1178 (9th Cir. 1994).

Proper Venue for Wrongful Death Action: As set out in Carroll v. W.R. Grace & Co., 252 M 485, 830 P2d 1253 (1992), because death is a necessary element in a wrongful death action, a wrongful death action accrues at the time of the death rather than on the date of injury, for statute of limitations purposes. The corollary to Carroll is that for purposes of determining venue under 25-2-126, a wrongful death claim arises where the death occurs. Gabriel v. School District No. 4, 264 M 177, 870 P2d 1351, 51 St. Rep. 217 (1994), followed in Wentz v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 14, 928 P2d 237, 53 St. Rep. 1277 (1996). However, see Meyer v. Mont. Power Co., LLC, 2005 MT 66, 326 M 283, 109 P3d 269 (2005), in which it was held that in cases with multiple defendants, neither Gabriel nor Meyer establish those counties where survivorship or wrongful death actions arose as exclusive venues for survivorship/wrongful death actions.

Supreme Court Recognizes Wrongful Death Claim for Stillborn Fetus: Alexa Strzelczyk brought a wrongful death action against her physician for the death of her full-term, stillborn fetus. The defendant, Jett, removed the case to federal court because neither party still resided in Montana. The federal court certified the case to the state Supreme Court because of the state court's decision in Kuhnke v. Fisher, 210 M 114, 683 P2d 916 (1984), holding that under state law at that time, wrongful death statutes did not support a claim for the death of a stillborn fetus. The federal court noted that the statutes had been revised since the 1984 decision. The Supreme Court ruled that the revised statutes provided for an action for the wrongful death of a "person", rather than "minor child", and that a child conceived but not yet born is defined as an "existing person" under the law, so far as may be necessary for its interest in the event of its subsequent birth. The Supreme Court noted that "live" birth is not statutorily required. The Supreme Court also held that each case must be considered carefully to determine if the circumstances make it "necessary" for the fetus to be determined to be a person in order to protect some interest. Strzelczyk v. Jett, 264 M 153, 870 P2d 730, 51 St. Rep. 206 (1994).

When Wrongful Death Action Accrues: No claim exists until all elements of a cause of action occur pursuant to 27-2-102, and death is an element of a wrongful death claim under this section. Therefore, a wrongful death action in Montana accrues at the time of decedent's death. Carroll v. W.R. Grace & Co., 252 M 485, 830 P2d 1253, 49 St. Rep. 24 (1992).

Negligence Action for Failure to Prevent Suicide — General Rule — Exceptions: Plaintiff brought a wrongful death action founded on negligence for failure of defendant to prevent the suicide of plaintiff's uncle. Regarding civil liability for suicide, the Supreme Court expressly adopted the general rule set out in 41 ALR 4th 353 that negligence actions for the suicide of another will generally not lie because the act of suicide is considered a deliberate intervening act exonerating the defendant from legal responsibility. The two narrow exceptions deal with: (1) causing another to commit suicide; and (2) allowing the imposition of a duty to prevent suicide but only in a custodial situation where suicide is foreseeable. A landlord-tenant relationship did not meet the criteria for establishing a custodial relationship. Krieg v. Massey, 239 M 469, 781 P2d 277, 46 St. Rep. 1839 (1989), cited in Marazzato v. Burlington N. RR Co., 249 M 487, 817 P2d 672, 48 St. Rep. 804 (1991). See also Gourneau v. Hamill, 2013 MT 300, 372 Mont. 182, 311 P.3d 760.

One-Action Rule Not Applicable to Death of Minor — Action for Wrongful Death of Child Settled by Personal Representative — Allocation of Proceeds: The one-action rule applied to wrongful death of an adult under 27-1-513, providing that only one action may be brought by the personal representative, does not apply to the wrongful death of a child in 27-1-512, under which either parent may bring an action. However, where the mother was properly appointed personal representative, it was not error for the probate court to authorize her to settle both the wrongful death action and the survival action, which could only be settled by the personal representative, and to approve allocation of the proceeds of the settlement between the two actions. In re Estate of Farnum, 224 M 304, 730 P2d 391, 43 St. Rep. 2205 (1986).

Jury Verdict on Wrongful Death — Survival Claims Inconsistent: In this medical malpractice case, the jury awarded $75,000 on the wrongful death claim and zero on the survival claim. This verdict was totally inconsistent and contrary to the mandates of law; therefore, a new trial was properly granted under 25-11-102. The same act of negligence by the defendant was the basis for both actions. If the negligence which caused personal injury to the living victim caused his later death, a jury would be compelled to award damages for his personal injury as well as awarding damages on the wrongful death claim. Rudeck v. Wright, 218 M 41, 709 P2d 621, 42 St. Rep. 1380 (1985), distinguished, with regard to liability for negligent design and supervision of a water pipeline project, in Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248, 51 St. Rep. 623 (1994), and also distinguished, in a case involving contested evidence of survivorship damages, in Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700, 53 St. Rep. 17 (1996).

Mother as Proper "Heir" to Bring Wrongful Death Action: When decedent was killed in an auto accident, her only surviving relatives of any degree of kinship mentioned in the intestate succession statute were her mother and a sister, who filed a joint petition for a declaratory judgment as to who could maintain an action for decedent's wrongful death. The District Court correctly ruled that the mother was the sole heir for purposes of bringing the action. The court applied the intestate succession statutory definition of "heirs" in effect at the time the wrongful death act was amended to allow only the "heirs and personal representatives" of the decedent to recover. "Heirs" means those who take upon decedent's death under the intestacy statute. In re Norwest Capital Management & Trust Co., 215 M 399, 697 P2d 930, 42 St. Rep. 493 (1985).

Right of Minor Children to Bring Wrongful Death Action Though Spouse Survives: The issue of a decedent who is survived by his spouse may maintain an action for damages under 27-1-513, even though the Uniform Probate Code (UPC) now defines "heirs" as those who are entitled to the property of the decedent under intestate succession and, under the intestate succession statutes, a surviving spouse is entitled to all of the estate. Prior to enactment of the UPC, minor children could bring a wrongful death action. That right was not repealed by adoption of the UPC. Section 72-1-106 does not obviate a minor's right since the UPC provisions control only if other statutory provisions conflict with probate, guardianship, and estate matters. Wrongful death is not within these subjects. Johnson v. Marias River Elec. Co-op, Inc., 211 M 518, 687 P2d 668, 41 St. Rep. 1528 (1984).

Personal Representative's Right to Pursue Wrongful Death Action Instead of Survivorship Action: A decedent's personal representative clearly has a prior right to pursue a wrongful death action on behalf of the heirs in order to avoid the diseconomies and confusion caused by a plethora of lawsuits. Decedent's wife could thus, as his personal representative, pursue a wrongful death action. Decedent's ex-wives claimed that the personal representative had improperly failed to file a survivorship action instead of a wrongful death action in the hopes that she could (unfairly) increase her portion of any recovery. In re Pegg's Estate, 209 M 71, 680 P2d 316, 41 St. Rep. 558 (1984).

Probate Court's Jurisdiction Over Wrongful Death Action in Another District: Estate was being probated in one District Court, and personal representative's wrongful death action was being considered in another district. The probate court exceeded its jurisdiction when it assumed jurisdiction over the settlement of the wrongful death action, approved it, and ordered dismissal of the action. The Supreme Court stated that whether the proceeds of the settlement or award in the wrongful death action belonged to the estate or to the heirs was pertinent to the issue of the probate court's jurisdiction over the wrongful death action and that the probate court had jurisdiction only if the proceeds belonged to the estate. The Supreme Court did not appear to definitively decide the underlying issue, though it leaned toward the traditional rule that the proceeds belong to the heirs, are personal to them, and constitute no part of the estate. The court stated that it was for the Legislature to decide whether a District Court acting as a probate court should have some jurisdiction over a wrongful death claim filed in another District Court. In re Pegg's Estate, 209 M 71, 680 P2d 316, 41 St. Rep. 558 (1984).

No Recovery for Decedent's Nonadopted Minor Stepchildren: When the issue was certified to it by the U.S. District Court, the Montana Supreme Court ruled that nonadopted minor stepchildren of a decedent cannot state a claim for the deprivation of decedent's consortium and support. Versland v. Caron Transp., 206 M 313, 671 P2d 583, 40 St. Rep. 1681 (1983).

General Discussion of Wrongful Death and Survival Actions: For general discussion of wrongful death and survival actions, see Swanson v. Champion Int'l Corp., 197 M 509, 646 P2d 1166, 39 St. Rep. 639 (1982). See also Sorum v. Rieder & Co., 205 M 98, 666 P2d 1221, 40 St. Rep. 1120 (1983), for discussion of application of Swanson rule.

Proof of Source of Blood Used for Blood Tests: There was no merit to the argument that defendants, sued for wrongful death, failed to prove that blood used for blood alcohol tests admitted in evidence came from motor vehicle accident victims where plaintiff did little more than selectively present testimony at trial and the persons who took the blood samples had no doubt that they were taken from victims. McAlpine v. Midland Elec. Co., 194 M 154, 634 P2d 1166, 38 St. Rep. 1577 (1981).

Availability of Wrongful Death Remedy Under Former Law: The defendants in this wrongful death and survival action owned a rental house leased to the plaintiff. The plaintiff's husband died of an electrical shock received through the plumbing of the house. The plaintiff appealed the granting of a summary judgment motion to the defendants. The Residential Landlord and Tenant Act was adopted after this case arose, so its adoption of the doctrine of implied warranty of habitability was inapplicable. The Supreme Court here examined case law prior to the new statute and overruled a holding in the Dier case that if the landlord fails to repair, after notice, the tenant may himself repair, within a certain limit, or move out; but he has no redress in damages for injury to person or property consequent upon the landlord's failure to repair. That holding was not applicable to cases involving tenant suits for personal injuries against a landlord. Citing Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const., the court said that it would be patently unconstitutional to deny a tenant all causes of action for personal injuries or wrongful death arising out of the alleged negligent management of rental premises by a landlord. A repair and deduct statute provides no alternative remedy for damages caused by personal injury or wrongful death. The duty of care in section 58-607, R.C.M. 1947, now 27-1-701, was held applicable. This is a duty to exercise ordinary care in the management of the premises to avoid exposing persons thereon to an unreasonable risk of harm, subject to the defenses of contributory negligence or assumption of risk. Corrigan v. Janney, 192 M 99, 626 P2d 838, 38 St. Rep. 545 (1981).

Interfamily Tort Immunity: Personal representative does not have right superior to that of deceased. Doctrine of interfamily tort immunity is a defense to wife's personal representative's cause of action to recover wrongful death damages where husband's negligence caused wife's death. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Leary, 168 M 482, 544 P2d 444 (1975).

Limitation of Actions: An action under this section for wrongful death is governed by the 3-year limitation rather than by the 2-year limitation. Bryant v. Hall, 157 M 28, 482 P2d 147 (1971), overruling Smith v. Wiprud, 154 M 325, 463 P2d 317 (1969).

One Action for Wrongful Death: This section specifically provides that there can be but one action for a wrongful death and that such action must be prosecuted and maintained by the personal representative. State ex rel. Carroll v. District Court, 139 M 367, 364 P2d 739 (1961).

Substitution of Parties: District Court was directed to deny petition of decedent's divorced wife, guardian ad litem of decedent's and her children, to intervene in wrongful death action, commenced by the widow as administratrix and trustee for the decedent's minor children, and to strike from the files the complaint in intervention as an attempted substitution of party plaintiffs in a wrongful death action. State ex rel. Carroll v. District Court, 139 M 367, 364 P2d 739 (1961).

Municipal Liability: In enforcing city ordinances and laws, a city policeman is acting as an agent of the state, and the city, therefore, is not responsible in damages for his conduct. Kingfisher v. Forsyth, 132 M 39, 314 P2d 876 (1957).

Workers' Compensation Cases: The widow of an employee insured under the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act) and killed in the performance of his duties, after being awarded workmen's compensation, had the right, as heir and administratrix, to bring a negligence action against the driver of the car which killed her husband and employ an attorney to conduct the case, the latter being given a first lien upon his client's cause of action by 37-61-420, which cannot be affected by the subrogation provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act (now Workers' Compensation Act). Hardware Mut. Cas. Co. v. Butler, 116 M 73, 148 P2d 563 (1944).

Parties Plaintiff: The right of action for damages given by this section to the heirs or personal representative of an adult whose death is caused by wrongful act or negligence is solely for the benefit of the heirs, the representative merely acting as their trustee and the amount recovered not being a part of decedent's estate; hence the complaint of an administrator setting forth the damages sustained by decedent's father and mother was not open to demurrer on the ground of misjoinder of parties plaintiff (the administrator and the heirs) or causes of action, recovery by the administrator barring a subsequent action by the heirs. Batchoff v. Butte Pac. Copper Co., 60 M 179, 198 P 132 (1921).

Derivative Nature of Action:

This section does not create a cause of action in favor of the wife and children of one, not a minor, killed by the wrongful act or neglect of another, because of the wrong done to them; the words of the statute "wrongful act or neglect of another" imply actionable wrong or negligence toward the decedent and not toward his surviving wife and children. Melville v. Butte-Balaklava Copper Co., 47 M 1, 130 P 441 (1913).

Where a man not a minor has been killed by the wrongful act or neglect of another, the right of his widow and children to recover damages depends upon whether the decedent, had he survived his injuries, could have recovered, inasmuch as they claim under him. Melville v. Butte-Balaklava Copper Co., 47 M 1, 130 P 441 (1913).

Joinder of Employer and Employee: A master and his servant may properly be joined as defendants in an action for personal injuries directly caused by the negligence of the servant, for which negligent act the master is answerable under the doctrine of respondeat superior. Knuckey v. Butte Elec. Ry., 41 M 314, 109 P 979 (1910).

Adult Children of Decedent as Plaintiffs: As this section does not limit the right of recovery for the death of a parent to minors, it was for the jury to say, under the evidence, whether the children of the deceased, both of legal age, suffered damage through the death of their father and what sum would compensate them. Hollingsworth v. Davis-Daly Estates Copper Co., 38 M 143, 99 P 142 (1909).

Imputed Liability: While this section imposes responsibility upon all whose actual wrongdoing contributes to the death of another, whether they be employees or employers, indemnitees or indemnitors, responsibility for reputed wrongdoing is imposed upon but one class, namely, employers; and the rule of expressio unius est exclusio alterius therefore operates to exclude all liability of indemnitors, except for actual, as distinguished from imputed, wrongdoing. Northam v. Cas. Co. of Am., 177 F 981 (9th Cir. 1909).

Exemplary Damages: There is no reason why 27-1-221, relative to exemplary damages, should not apply to actions begun by virtue of the legislative permission granted by this section when the defendant is charged primarily as the wrongdoer. Olsen v. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co., 35 M 400, 89 P 731 (1907).

Marriage of Plaintiff: Where plaintiff in an action for her seduction brought under this section married one other than defendant between the time of the commencement of the action and the trial, such marriage did not abate the action. Taylor v. Rann, 106 M 588, 80 P2d 376 (1938).

Statute of Limitations: Where acts of intercourse under a promise of marriage continued from September 1932 until November 1, 1935, the cause of action accrued at the time the first act of intercourse was completed, and the action was barred by 27-2-204, 2 years thereafter, in September 1934. The court rejected the contention that continued acts constituted one transaction and Statute of Limitations started to run at the time of the last act. Taylor v. Rann, 106 M 588, 80 P2d 376 (1938).

27-1-602. Cause of action for breach of promise abolished — right to damages for fraud and unjust enrichment preserved.Case Notes

Failure to Establish Misconduct or Fault on Part of Defendant — Unjust Enrichment Claim — Summary Judgment Proper: Lessees claimed that lessors were unjustly enriched when the lessors received the insurance proceeds from a fire that destroyed the building in which the lessees' business and its inventory were located. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly granted summary judgment to the lessors because the lessees did not establish misconduct or fault on the part of the lessors and the lessees themselves were behind on making contractual payments on behalf of the lessors. Hinebauch v. McRae, 2011 MT 270, 362 Mont. 358, 264 P.3d 1098.

Engagement Ring Given in Contemplation of Marriage Not Considered Gift — Conditional Gift Analysis: Albinger gave Harris a $29,000 diamond engagement ring when the two promised to marry. The relationship was strained, resulting in breakups and the return of the ring to Albinger several times, but each time the couple reconciled, and the ring was returned to Harris. Following their final separation, Albinger told Harris to "take the car, the horse, the dog, and the ring", so Harris moved to Kentucky, marriage plans evaporated, and Harris refused to return the ring. Albinger filed in District Court to settle ownership of the ring. The District Court found the ring to be a gift in contemplation of marriage, implying that the existence of a condition attached to the gift, and held that Albinger was entitled to return of the ring upon failure of the condition of marriage. Harris appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. The rights and duties of parties regarding property exchanges in contemplation of marriage are determined by existing law and common-law principles. A gift is a transfer of personal property made voluntarily and without consideration, and the essential elements of an inter vivos gift are donative intent, voluntary delivery, and acceptance by the recipient. Delivery, which manifests the intent of the giver, must turn over dominion and control of the property to the recipient, and when made without condition, such a gift becomes irrevocable upon acceptance, so the Supreme Court will not void the transfer when the giver experiences a change of heart. The only revocable gift recognized under Montana law is a gift in view of death, and a gift causa mortis may be revoked by the giver at any time and is revoked by the giver's recovery from the illness or escape from the peril under which the gift was made. However, the Supreme Court declined to analogize gifts in contemplation of marriage with a gift in contemplation of death. Further, a purported gift that is part of the inducement for an agreement to do or not do a certain thing becomes the consideration essential to contract formation. An exchange of promises creates a contract to marry, albeit an unenforceable one, so when an engagement ring is given as consideration for the promise to marry, a contract is formed and legal action to recover the ring is barred by the abolition of breach of promise actions in this section. Here, the engagement ring was an unconditional, completed gift upon acceptance, and a completed gift is not revocable. Thus, the ring remained in Harris's ownership and control. Albinger v. Harris, 2002 MT 118, 310 M 27, 48 P3d 711 (2002).

Failure to Keep Promise to Pay Medical Bills if Injured Person Travels to Exam — No Fraud: The District Court properly granted the church summary judgment on issues of fraud and misrepresentation in an action arising after plaintiff fell and was injured on church property. Plaintiff claimed that the church agreed in writing to pay medical bills if plaintiff would travel to Salt Lake City for a medical exam. Plaintiff did so, and the church failed to pay. The promise to pay money in the future was not a representation, the first element of a prima facie case for fraud or misrepresentation. Davis v. Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, 258 M 286, 852 P2d 640, 50 St. Rep. 535 (1993).

Relationship Created by Contract Gives Rise to Action in Tort if Separate Duty Exists — Repeated False Statements After Breach of Contract Created Separate Tort Duty — Record of Substantial Credible Evidence to Support Jury's Finding of Negligent Misrepresentation. Romo v. Shirley, 2022 MT 249, 411 Mont. 111, 522 P.3d 401.

Federal Railroad Safety Act and Hazardous Materials Transportation Act — No Preemption When Federal Regulations Do Not Subsume State Law: In a writ of supervisory control filed by a railroad company regarding a grant of summary judgment by the Asbestos Claims Court that the court's claims under the Federal Railroad Safety Act (FRSA) and the federal Hazardous Materials Transportation Act were not preempted, the Supreme Court held that the decision of the Asbestos Claims Court was correct because under the FRSA the company must have established that the regulations do more than touch on or relate to the subject matter of the claim and that the regulations subsumed the state law relied on in the claim, which the company was unable to do. Regarding the Hazardous Materials Transportation Act, the company's preemption claim failed because the Act does not include ore-containing asbestos as a hazardous material. BNSF Ry. Co. v. Asbestos Claims Court, 2020 MT 59, 399 Mont. 180, 459 P.3d 857.

Reasonable Basis in Law for Conditioning Insurer's Payment — Bad Faith Award Improper: The plaintiff, the guardian ad litem of a man who was severely injured in a car accident, filed suit against the defendant, the insurer of the driver, alleging bad faith. The plaintiff claimed that the defendant had acted in bad faith by refusing to pay policy limits without first getting a lien release from TRICARE, the insurer of the injured man, for its payment of medical expenses. The District Court granted the plaintiff summary judgment and held the defendant liable for a consent judgment of nearly $1.5 million. On appeal, Supreme Court reversed, ruling that the defendant had a reasonable basis in law for conditioning the payment of its policy limits as it had, and remanded the matter to the District Court to grant summary judgment in favor of the defendant. West v. United Services Auto. Ass'n, 2016 MT 285, 385 Mont. 292, 384 P.3d 58.

Knowledge of Defendant Critical in Assessing Foreseeability of Plaintiff: The plaintiff's daughter committed suicide at a boarding school. Contrary to the school's policy, the daughter was admitted even though she had a history of suicide attempts, and this information was not conveyed to those working with her. The plaintiff sued the school and a number of interrelated entities. At trial, the District Court limited the evidence to what the daughter knew, what was within her general knowledge, or what was directly related to her death. The District Court did not permit the plaintiff to introduce evidence of the defendants' knowledge or of their prior bad acts, ruling that the evidence would be too prejudicial. A jury concluded that the defendants were not liable for the daughter's suicide. On appeal, the plaintiff argued that the District Court abused its discretion in not allowing evidence of the defendants' prior acts and their knowledge. She argued that the evidence was relevant in determining whether the daughter was a "foreseeable plaintiff" for purposes of negligence. The Supreme Court agreed with the plaintiff, holding that the determination of whether a plaintiff is foreseeable depends on the knowledge of the defendants, citing Fisher v. Swift Transp. Co., 2008 MT 105, 342 Mont. 335, 181 P.3d 601. The Supreme Court remanded the case to District Court for a new trial. Newman v. Lichfield, 2012 MT 47, 364 Mont. 243, 272 P.3d 625.

Criminal Endangerment and Failure to Act — Parent-Child Duty Applicable to Children in Cohabiting Households: A jury convicted the defendant of criminal endangerment for swinging her boyfriend's 6-month-old child headfirst against the child's crib, causing serious bodily injury to the child. On appeal, the defendant argued that the District Court erred in instructing the jury on criminal endangerment predicated on the defendant's failure or omission to act because the defendant had no legal duty to aid the child. Following the rationale of St. ex rel. Kuntz v. District Court, 2000 MT 22, 298 Mont. 146, 995 P.2d 951, which recognized a mutual reliance duty owed between two people who were not closely related but lived together, the Supreme Court held that the parent-child duty applies to children present in households of cohabiting adults. Because the defendant established a personal relationship similar to that of a parent with the victim, a common-law duty to protect the victim from harm existed, and the defendant's breach of that duty constituted an appropriate basis for her conviction of criminal endangerment. St. v. Hocter, 2011 MT 251, 362 Mont. 215, 262 P.3d 1089.

Alleged Misrepresentation of Nature of Horse — County Where Contract Performed Considered Place Where Tort Committed for Venue Purposes: Plaintiff contracted to purchase a gentle, broken horse in Yellowstone County and was subsequently injured while riding the horse in Silver Bow County, where plaintiff filed a tort action alleging misrepresentation of the nature of the horse. Defendants moved for a change of venue to Yellowstone County, but the motion was denied, so defendants appealed and the Supreme Court reversed. General application of tort venue law requires that a tort action be filed either in the county where the defendant resides or in the county where the offending actions of the tort were taken or committed. In this case, the contract for sale of the horse was performed in Yellowstone County, making that county a proper venue for a contract claim. Further, the alleged tortious conduct of misrepresentation of the nature of the horse also occurred in Yellowstone County. Thus, the tort was committed in Yellowstone County for venue purposes. Deichl v. Savage, 2009 MT 293, 352 M 282, 216 P3d 749 (2009).

Federal Railroad Safety Liability Preemption — Shanklin Clarified, Not Overruled by Subsequent Federal Legislation: In Norfolk S. Ry. Co. v. Shanklin, 529 US 344 (2000), the U.S. Supreme Court held that when federal funds are used to install warning devices at railroad crossings, the preemption clause of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (FRSA), 49 U.S.C. 20106 (1994), preempts state law tort claims. In 2007, Congress amended the preemption clause by adding an additional subsection clarifying state law causes of action. However, the amendment did not overrule the Shanklin preemption analysis or effect a substantive change to FRSA's preemption clause, but instead simply clarified the scope of the preemption clause, so the Shanklin preemption remains in effect. Smith v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2008 MT 225, 344 M 278, 187 P3d 639 (2008).

No Liability of Equine Activity Sponsor for Unavoidable Risks or Inherent Risks of Which Participant Is or Should Be Aware: Equine activity sponsors have no duty to protect participants from unavoidable risks or from the inherent risks of equine activities of which the participant is or should be aware. As long as the participant expects a risk inherent in equine activities, the equine activity sponsor is not liable for injury suffered as a result of that risk. McDermott v. Carie, LLC, 2005 MT 293, 329 M 295, 124 P3d 168 (2005). See also Fishman v. GRBR, Inc., 2017 MT 245, 389 Mont. 41, 403 P.3d 660.

Sufficient Evidence to Support Jury Verdict That Principal Breached Fiduciary Duty to Its Agent: An insured brought an action against Deonier, an insurance agent, and Paul Revere Life Insurance Company (Revere) to recover benefits and damages after the insured's claim was denied on grounds of a preexisting condition, despite the incontestability clause in the policy. The agent cross-claimed against the company for indemnity and breach of fiduciary duty, contending that there was a significant amount of evidence that Revere planned to assert the Forman defense in Montana (see Mass. Cas. Ins. Co. v. Forman, 516 F2d 425 (5th Cir. 1975), in which an insurer asserted a legal defense to the incontestability clause based on its definition of sickness as excluding disabilities that manifested themselves prior to the date of issue of the policy) and that Revere's failure to inform Deonier of its intention to invoke the defense was a clear breach of Revere's duty to inform its agents of a risk of pecuniary loss from potential lawsuits. Revere asserted that pursuant to Doetl v. Colonial Life & Accident Ins. Co., 505 F. Supp. 127 (D.C. Mont. 1981), in which a Montana federal District Court endorsed the Forman defense, it had no reason to believe that its policy interpretation might be in violation of Montana law and therefore did not breach its duty to inform its agents of risk of pecuniary loss. In the first Deonier case, Deonier & Associates v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 2000 MT 238, 301 M 347, 9 P3d 622 (2000), the Supreme Court reversed the lower court's summary judgment in favor of Revere that held that there had not been a breach of fiduciary duty and remanded the case back to the lower court for a jury trial on the issue of liability and damages. The jury found for Deonier and awarded her $150,000 in compensatory damages and $1 million in punitive damages, which the trial court reduced to $375,000. The trial court denied Revere's motion for judgment as a matter of law that it had not breached its fiduciary duty. The Supreme Court affirmed on the basis that Deonier had presented evidence that Revere knew it would assert the Forman defense and that such an action might lead to pecuniary damages for its agents, and therefore there existed a legally sufficient evidentiary basis for a reasonable jury to find that a breach of fiduciary duty had occurred. Deonier & Associates v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 2004 MT 297, 323 M 387, 101 P3d 742 (2004).

No Evidence of False Representation of Material Fact — Claim of Negligent Misrepresentation Properly Dismissed: Plaintiff claimed that vinyl siding was sold, furnished, and installed on her home under misleading circumstances because the installer failed to clearly identify the relationship with the siding manufacturer. However, plaintiff failed to specify any false statements made by either the installer or the manufacturer that led her to believe that this was true. Absent evidence demonstrating the primary element of the cause of action, plaintiff's negligent representation claim failed as a matter of law. Osterman v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 2003 MT 327, 318 M 342, 80 P3d 435 (2003), following Yellowstone II Dev. Group, Inc. v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 2001 MT 41, 304 M 223, 20 P3d 755 (2001).

Defaulting Buyer Under Unambiguous Written Contract Cannot Rely Upon Expectations Not Covered by Contract to Avoid Contract — Disposition of Downpayment Amounts Paid and Due — County Not Liable for Negligent Misrepresentation as to Recordability of Deeds and Seller's Title Insurer Not Liable for Loss in Marketability: Documents for the sale and purchase of two sections of land unambiguously showed, and it was undisputed, that the resale of 20-acre parcels by the buyer, the immediate acceptance by the county of 20-acre resale deeds of a type that would make subdivision review unnecessary, and the ability to resell without having to undergo subdivision review were not parts of the bargain. The parties knew that these things were contemplated, but the documents did not refer to them or make them a part of the contract. Before the contract was made, the county indicated that it would accept the 20-acre resale deeds. The deal fell through when the county changed its position after the contract was signed. The buyer failed to pay the whole downpayment, and the seller terminated the contract and kept the paid portion of the downpayment. Precontract discussions on the matter must be disregarded as parol evidence because the documents were unambiguous and did not refer to the matter. The buyer was not entitled to rescind the contract and have the paid portion of the downpayment returned based on mutual mistake or failure of consideration. There was no mutual mistake because the parties knew that it was not a certainty that the county would accept the deeds. There was no failure of consideration because the resale, county acceptance of the deeds, and avoidance of subdivision review were not part of the written contract. In addition, the need for a subdivision review would not make the land unmarketable; at most, its market value decreased and it would take longer to sell it. Furthermore, a party in default is not entitled to rescission. The seller was entitled to terminate the contract. The seller was also entitled to keep an amount of the paid portion of the downpayment equal to the amount by which the contract price for the land exceeded the market value of the land at the time of the breach. The seller was not entitled to keep the remainder of the paid portion of the downpayment or to a judgment for the unpaid portion of the downpayment because the contract did not provide for that remedy. The county was not liable in tort to the seller for negligent misrepresentation, and the buyer's title insurance company was not liable to the seller for the loss in the marketability of the land caused by the need for subdivision review. Yellowstone II Dev. Group, Inc. v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 2001 MT 41, 304 M 223, 20 P3d 755 (2001), overruled in Mary J. Baker Revocable Trust v. Cenex Harvest St., Cooperatives, Inc., 2007 MT 159, 338 M 41, 164 P3d 851 (2007), to the extent that Yellowstone II held that the determination of whether a term in a contract is ambiguous is not a question involving parol evidence.

Imposition of Liability as Matter of Law as Sanction for Discovery Abuse: Following extensive discovery requests, plaintiffs moved to compel discovery and for sanctions. The District Court imposed liability as a matter of law upon defendants as a sanction for discovery abuse. The court based its decision on findings that defendants: (1) misrepresented their corporate ownership and control; (2) falsely represented in briefs and at hearing that all pertinent documents had been provided; (3) knowingly withheld and concealed significant information; (4) falsely represented their involvement with equipment design and construction standards; and (5) falsely represented that certain investigation documents had been prepared for purposes of litigation. Citing In re Adoption of R.D.T., 239 M 33, 778 P2d 416 (1989), defendants contended on appeal that the court's use of deposition testimony solicited subsequent to defendants' discovery responses invoked the wisdom of hindsight, resulting in a Kafkaesque nightmare. After examining the record and noting sufficient evidence supporting the District Court's findings of defendants' repeated and willful concealment and misrepresentation of facts during discovery, the Supreme Court held that defendants had misconstrued both R.D.T. and Franz Kafka, noting that if anyone in the case were guilty of creating a nightmare, it was defendants through their refusal to comply with rules of discovery and civil procedure and to disclose information necessary for the proper presentation of plaintiffs' case. Imposition of liability as a matter of law as a sanction for discovery abuses was affirmed. Bulen v. Navajo Refining Co., Inc., 2000 MT 222, 301 M 195, 9 P3d 607, 57 St. Rep. 912 (2000), following First Bank v. Heidema, 219 M 373, 711 P2d 1384 (1986).

Criminal Liability Based on Failure to Act When Self-Preservation at Issue — No Legal Duty to Perform Legal Duty at Personal Risk: For criminal liability to be based on a failure to act, there must be a legally imposed duty to act and the person must be physically capable of performing the act. When self-preservation is at stake, the law does not require a person to save another's life by sacrificing one's own. No crime is committed by a person who in saving one's own life in the struggle for the only means of safety causes the death of another. Accountability may still exist for the results of the peril into which one person places another, but the law does not require a person to risk serious bodily injury to perform a legal duty. (See 40 Am. Jur. Homicide § 116 (1999).) State ex rel. Kuntz v. District Court, 2000 MT 22, 298 M 146, 995 P2d 951, 57 St. Rep. 111 (2000), following St. v. Mally, 139 M 599, 366 P2d 868 (1961), and distinguishing People v. Beardsley, 113 NW 1128 (1907). See also Burns v. Fisher, 132 M 26, 313 P2d 1044 (1957).

Justifiable Use of Force — No Duty to Assist Aggressor in Zone of Risk — Revival of Duty to Summon Aid: Kuntz was charged with negligent homicide for stabbing Becker and then failing to immediately call for medical assistance. Kuntz pleaded justifiable use of force. The state contended that even if the use of force was justified, a proved subsequent failure by Kuntz to summon aid could constitute a gross deviation from ordinary care. The Supreme Court held that when a person justifiably uses force to fend off an aggressor, that person has no duty to assist the aggressor in any manner that could conceivably create the risk of bodily injury to that person or to other persons. This absence of a duty necessarily includes any conduct that would require the person to remain in or return to the zone of risk created by the original aggressor. The victim has but one duty after fending off an attack, and that is the duty owed to one's self, as a matter of self-preservation, to seek and secure safety away from the place where the attack occurs. Thus, a person who justifiably acts in self-defense is temporarily afforded the same status as an innocent bystander (see Pope v. St., 396 A2d 1054 (Md. 1979)). However, the duty to summon aid may in fact be revived but only after the victim has fully exercised the right to secure safety from personal harm. Only then may a legal duty be imposed to summon aid for the person placed in peril by an act of self-defense, and before that duty is imposed, there must be a showing that: (1) the person had knowledge of the facts indicating a duty to act; and (2) the person was physically capable of performing the act. Even so, a proved breach of the legal duty may still fall short of negligent homicide, which requires a gross deviation from an ordinary or reasonable standard of care. To find a person who justifiably acts in self-defense criminally culpable for causing the death of the aggressor, the failure to summon aid must be the cause in fact of the aggressor's death, not the justified use of force itself. State ex rel. Kuntz v. District Court, 2000 MT 22, 298 M 146, 995 P2d 951, 57 St. Rep. 111 (2000), following St. v. Bier, 181 M 27, 591 P2d 1115, 36 St. Rep. 466 (1979), and followed in St. v. Bowen, 2015 MT 246, 380 Mont. 433, 356 P.3d 449.

Sale of Trust Lands Within Flathead Reservation — No Jurisdiction Found for Purposes of Breach of Contract, Fraud, and Negligent Misrepresentation: Neuman, an enrolled member of the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes, sought assistance from the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) to clear the title to trust land within the Flathead Reservation so that Neuman could sell it. He also engaged a real estate broker. Both Neuman and prospective buyers, the Krauses, made considerable efforts to consummate the sale, but Neuman was informed by the BIA that there was a substantial cloud on the title. Neuman therefore terminated the listing agreement, and the Krauses sued for damages, alleging breach of contract, fraud, constructive fraud, fraud in the inducement, and negligent misrepresentation. The District Court, on the recommendation of a special master and after applying the test laid out in State ex rel. Iron Bear v. District Court, 162 M 335, 512 P2d 1292 (1973), found a lack of subject matter jurisdiction. The Supreme Court held that 25 U.S.C. 345 and 28 U.S.C. 1353 vest exclusive jurisdiction in the federal courts over disputes involving allotted lands within Indian reservations and that 28 U.S.C. 1360 preempted its jurisdiction. The Supreme Court also held that the Krauses' lawsuit was a dispute involving title to allotted lands even though the action was a tort claim and breach of contract claim because all of the Krauses' claims could not be separated from questions of title to Indian trust lands. Noting that it had already held in In re Marriage of Wellman, 258 M 131, 852 P2d 559 (1993), that an attempt by state courts to adjudicate rights in Indian trust land for the purpose of money damages was precluded by federal law, the Supreme Court held that it made no difference that the Krauses had deleted from their complaint a prayer for specific performance. The claims could still not be separated from the issue of title to Indian lands. Krause v. Neuman, 284 M 399, 943 P2d 1328, 54 St. Rep. 937 (1997). In In re Estate of Big Spring, 2011 MT 109, 360 Mont. 370, 255 P.3d 121, the Supreme Court overruled Iron Bear in its entirety and Krause v. Neuman to the extent it relied on the Iron Bear test.

FELA Action — Conflicting Evidence Found to Be Substantial Evidence — No Negligence Found in Application of Baggage Weight Standards: McGregor, a ticket agent for Amtrak, sued Amtrak for damages under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) for injuries that she sustained while lifting heavy baggage off a train car onto a baggage cart. McGregor claimed that Amtrak was negligent in adoption and enforcement of its baggage weight limits allowing passengers to pack and employees to lift baggage up to 75 pounds for carriage by Amtrak. Citing Lee v. Kane, 270 M 505, 893 P2d 854 (1995), the Supreme Court found that the evidence conflicted as to whether Amtrak was negligent but found that it was still substantial evidence from which a reasonable mind might conclude that Amtrak was not negligent. McGregor v. Nat'l RR Passenger Corp., 284 M 178, 943 P2d 1269, 54 St. Rep. 834 (1997).

Tort of Malicious Defense Not Recognized in Montana: The plaintiff alleged that the defendant had never intended to engage in litigation yet allowed her attorney to indicate to the plaintiff's bank that litigation was pending. This action resulted in certain funds of the plaintiff being held by the bank, thereby damaging the plaintiff's business relations. The plaintiff argued that the defendant's opposition to the suit against her for tortious interference with a business relation constituted the tort of malicious defense. The Supreme Court held that the tort of malicious defense has never been recognized in Montana. The court stated that it was not deciding if the tort should be recognized but that under the facts, the defendant's actions were not malicious and the tort was not applicable. Smith v. Barrett, 242 M 37, 788 P2d 324, 47 St. Rep. 514 (1990).

Liability of Tortfeasors Acting in Concert: Two defendants who were passengers in a car that was involved in a chase of and subsequent accident with another vehicle claimed that because they were not in control of the vehicle and did not make any encouraging statements to the driver, they could not be held liable for a tort or for injuries resulting from the accident. However, undisputed facts showed that they voluntarily joined in the pursuit for the purpose of eventually assaulting the occupants of the other vehicle and that they helped to free their own vehicle when it became stuck on a fence, thereby substantially assisting in the chase and encouraging the driver's actions. These facts showed that they acted in concert as tortfeasors, as defined in part in Restatement (Second) of Torts 876 (1979), and were subject to liability; therefore, a partial summary judgment for plaintiff on the issue of liability was proper. Sloan v. Fauque, 239 M 383, 784 P2d 895, 46 St. Rep. 1767 (1989). But see Newman v. Lichfield, 2012 MT 47, 364 Mont. 243, 272 P.3d 625, in which the District Court properly denied partial summary judgment when the plaintiff did not definitively show that the defendants knew that the tortfeasor had breached a duty to the plaintiff's daughter and nonetheless provided substantial assistance or encouragement to the tortfeasor.

Accepted Work Rule Doctrine — Contractor Nonliability: The District Court properly granted summary judgment in favor of a contractor on the issue of negligence based on the accepted work rule doctrine. The doctrine, first recognized in Ulmen v. Schwieger, 92 M 331, 12 P2d 856 (1932), is based on the rule that an independent contractor is not liable to third parties for injuries that occur after the work has been completed and turned over to and accepted by the employer. Instead, the person employing the contractor is substituted as the responsible party. The Supreme Court affirmed the doctrine by refusing to extend contractor liability to foreseeable injury caused by negligent construction. Harrington v. LaBelle's of Colo., Inc., 235 M 80, 765 P2d 732, 45 St. Rep. 2176 (1988), overruled by Pierce v. ALSC Architects, P.S., 270 M 97, 890 P2d 1254, 52 St. Rep. 93 (1995).

Comparison of Conduct in Ascertaining Damages: Willful or wanton conduct may be compared with like conduct for the purpose of ascertaining damages. Refusing an offered instruction on comparing like conduct was error. Gurnsey v. Conklin Co., Inc., 230 M 43, 751 P2d 151, 45 St. Rep. 1 (1988), citing Simonson v. White, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986).

Negligence in Selection of Contractor — Employer Liability: In an action involving a fertilizer salesman, the Supreme Court applied the general rule of section 411, Restatement (Second) of Torts, which provides that an employer is subject to liability for physical harm to third persons caused by his failure to exercise reasonable care to employ a competent and careful contractor to do work that involves a risk of physical harm unless it is skillfully and carefully done. Gurnsey v. Conklin Co., Inc., 230 M 43, 751 P2d 151, 45 St. Rep. 1 (1988).

Certified Question — Interspousal Tort Immunity Abolished: In an original proceeding for declaratory judgment on two certified questions from U.S. District Court, the Supreme Court held that it abolished the defense of interspousal tort immunity in Miller v. Fallon County, 222 M 214, 721 P2d 342, 43 St. Rep. 1185 (1986), because historical reasons for that immunity were no longer valid. Therefore, that doctrine did not bar claim of wife-passenger against her husband-driver for negligence in operation of motor vehicle. (See also 40-2-109.) Noone v. Fink, 222 M 273, 721 P2d 1275, 43 St. Rep. 1258 (1986).

Insurer's Duty to Settle Third-Party Claim Within Policy Limits — Evidence to Support Bad Faith: Plaintiff, a Kalispell ophthalmologist, pierced Frisnegger's eyeball with a needle while administering a local anesthetic to his eyelid. A cataract formed on the eye. Plaintiff notified his local insurance agent and on his direction notified defendant in writing that defendant was entirely at fault. Frisnegger filed suit against plaintiff. Defendant did not feel the claim was worth over $45,000 and refused to settle within the policy limits of $100,000. A jury verdict was returned for Frisnegger in the amount of $175,000. Plaintiff then brought suit against defendant alleging negligence and bad faith on the part of defendant for failure to settle the claim within policy limits. A jury verdict awarding plaintiff compensatory damages of $250,000 and punitive damages of $300,000 was returned. On appeal, the Supreme Court stated that the duty to accept a reasonable offer within policy coverage limits arises from an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing that neither party will do anything which will injure the right of the other to receive the benefits of the agreement. One of the usual benefits of liability insurance is the settlement of claims without litigation or at least without trial if the cause is litigated. The implied obligation of good faith and fair dealing requires the insurer to settle in an appropriate case, although not required by the express terms of the policy. Where a liability insurance company by the terms of its policy obtains from the insured an irrevocable power to determine whether to accept or reject an offer of compromise, a fiduciary duty between the insured and insurer is created. The court applied the six-factor test set out in Jessen v. O'Daniel, 210 F. Supp. 317 (D.C. Mont. 1982). The court found that the failure of defendant through its agents to follow established standards of investigation, evaluation, negotiation, and communication with its insured were sufficient factors to uphold the jury's finding of bad faith. Gibson v. W. Fire Ins. Co., 210 M 267, 682 P2d 725, 41 St. Rep. 1048 (1984). See also Dunfee v. Baskin-Robbins, Inc., 221 M 447, 720 P2d 1148, 43 St. Rep. 964 (1986).

Possible Differing Conclusions — No Directed Verdict: Plaintiff applied to defendant for health coverage for himself and his family. He met with an agent who filled out the application, which was signed by both parties. Plaintiff was not given a copy of the application or contract and was not advised that the application was part of the contract. The application was accepted. The family contracted medical bills which defendant declined to pay, claiming that the bills stemmed from "preexisting conditions" not covered by the contract. Defendant then unilaterally canceled the contract, claiming plaintiff had misrepresented his family's health in the application, and plaintiff filed suit. Defendant moved for a directed verdict on the issues of actual and constructive fraud and the tort of bad faith, which was denied. If the representations that induced the plaintiff to enter the contract were false, he would have a case in fraud. If the contract were breached, a cause of action may sound in tort, although it arises out of a breach of contract, if the defaulting party by breaching the contract also breaches the duty to act in good faith owed to the other party independently of the contract. The evidence viewed in a light most favorable to plaintiffs indicated reasonable men could differ as to the conclusions drawn from the evidence. Therefore, the directed verdict was properly denied. Weber v. Blue Cross of Mont., 196 M 454, 643 P2d 198, 39 St. Rep. 245 (1982).

Rescue Doctrine — Applicable Only While Harm Happening: The "rescue" doctrine, which provides relief when injury occurs to a person attempting to prevent harm caused by another, is applicable only when the rescue is necessary to halt damage, not after damage has occurred and further possibility of harm has been eliminated. Kiamas v. Mon-Kota, 196 M 357, 639 P2d 1155, 39 St. Rep. 161 (1982).

Duty Owed to Business Invitee: Krone wrenched her knee while being shown a parcel of rural property by McCann, a realtor. Krone cannot describe what caused her injury; she only knows that she stumbled over something, possibly an old corral pole or a mound of dirt. The parties agree that Krone was a business invitee when she was injured. The duty owed to a business invitee is to use ordinary care to keep the premises reasonably safe and to warn the invitee of any hidden or lurking dangers. The property owner is not an insurer against all accidents and injuries to invitees. In this case there were no facts presented indicating that the property owner breached a duty owed to Krone, and the District Court properly granted defendant's motion for summary judgment. Krone v. McCann, 196 M 260, 638 P2d 397, 39 St. Rep. 10 (1982), distinguished in Vincelette v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 273 M 408, 903 P2d 1374, 52 St. Rep. 1035 (1995), overruled, as to the standard that a property owner is absolved of liability because a dangerous condition upon the premises is open and obvious, in Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748, 54 St. Rep. 1422 (1997), and followed in Gentry v. Douglas Hereford Ranch, Inc., 1998 MT 182, 290 M 126, 962 P2d 1205, 55 St. Rep. 737 (1998).

Availability of Doctrine of Equitable Estoppel: An estoppel arises only when a party by his conduct or acquiescence has caused another in good faith to change his position for the worse. A letter of instruction and joint assignment of funds, unenforceable for lack of consideration and mutuality, was not relied upon by the plaintiff to its detriment since the modular home in question had already been manufactured and delivered by the plaintiff when the letter was executed. Boise Cascade Corp. v. First Sec. Bank of Anaconda, 183 M 378, 600 P2d 173 (1979).

Selensky-Foust v. Mercer, 2022 MT 97, 408 Mont. 488, 510 P.3d 78.

Evidence of Other Slip and Falls Not Admissible — Not Substantially Similar: The District Court did not err when it did not allow plaintiffs to introduce evidence of other falls on the defendant’s clinic campus. A District Court has broad discretion to determine whether evidence is relevant and admissible. Evidence of other falls is not admissible to prove negligence. The evidence is admissible to show the existence of danger, defect, or knowledge. A prior accident must be “substantially similar to” and “not too remote from the accident in question” to qualify for admission. As applied, the District Court properly concluded that evidence of other falls was not similar to the plaintiffs’ as the other falls occurred in parking lots rather than on sidewalks or at sister facilities not on the defendant’s main hospital campus. Nolan v. Billings Clinic, 2020 MT 167, 400 Mont. 326, 467 P.3d 545.

Finding of Strict Liability Due to Abnormally Dangerous Activity Negated by Common Carrier Exception — Railroad Company Subject to Ordinary Negligence: After engaging in an analysis under Restatement (Second) of Torts 520 and holding that a railroad company’s handling of asbestos constituted an abnormally dangerous activity, the Supreme Court adopted Restatement (Second) of Torts 521, known as the common carrier exception, and determined that because the company’s activity was undertaken in furtherance of a public duty it could not be held strictly liable for damages resulting from its transporting of vermiculite. The company remained liable for ordinary negligence. BNSF Ry. Co. v. Asbestos Claims Court, 2020 MT 59, 399 Mont. 180, 459 P.3d 857.

Strict Liability Allowed: Uphill landowners maintained a 4.5-million-gallon manmade pond on their mountain property that breached and caused damage to landowners downhill. The downhill landowners sued on a theory of strict liability, and the District Court agreed, reviewing the six factors of strict liability and finding that four supported strict liability and two were in balance. The Supreme Court reviewed for correctness and affirmed the decision of the District Court. Covey v. Brishka, 2019 MT 164, 396 Mont. 362, 445 P.3d 785, followed in Brishka v. St., 2021 MT 129, 404 Mont. 228, 487 P.3d 771, holding that in a separate case on the same issues, the Brishkas were collaterally estopped from relitigating causation and from introducing undisclosed expert testimony that was not allowed in Covey.

Spoliation Inapplicable to Criminal Case: At trial on charges of driving under the influence, the defendant filed a motion in limine to exclude the results of her breath test. She argued, in part, that the city had intentionally spoliated evidence by deleting information related to the machine used for her breath test. Following her conviction, the defendant appealed the denial of the motion in limine to the Supreme Court, which affirmed, noting that spoliation is not applicable to criminal proceedings. St. v. Jeffries, 2018 MT 17, 390 Mont. 189, 410 P.3d 972.

Reasonable Basis in Law for Conditioning Insurer's Payment — Bad Faith Award Improper: The plaintiff, the guardian ad litem of a man who was severely injured in a car accident, filed suit against the defendant, the insurer of the driver, alleging bad faith. The plaintiff claimed that the defendant had acted in bad faith by refusing to pay policy limits without first getting a lien release from TRICARE, the insurer of the injured man, for its payment of medical expenses. The District Court granted the plaintiff summary judgment and held the defendant liable for a consent judgment of nearly $1.5 million. On appeal, Supreme Court reversed, ruling that the defendant had a reasonable basis in law for conditioning the payment of its policy limits as it had, and remanded the matter to the District Court to grant summary judgment in favor of the defendant. West v. United Services Auto. Ass'n, 2016 MT 285, 385 Mont. 292, 384 P.3d 58.

Use of Cutting Torch for Scrap Metal Not Inherently Dangerous — No Joint Venture: The plaintiff sued the defendants, his neighbor and a scrap metal business, for damage to his property caused by a fire. The neighbor had agreed to let the scrap metal business remove scrap metal from the neighbor's property and the proceeds from the sale of the scrap metal would be split between the defendants. However, an employee of the scrap metal business caused a fire when he was cutting scrap metal with a cutting torch and the fire spread to the plaintiff's neighboring property. The plaintiff argued that his neighbor was vicariously liable for the damage because the neighbor was in a joint venture with the scrap metal business and because the use of a cutting torch is an inherently dangerous activity. The District Court disagreed and granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that evidence of profit sharing is not determinative for establishing a joint venture and that the use of a cutting torch is not inherently dangerous because simple, easy-to-follow precautions can be taken to avoid danger. Pearson v. McPhillips, 2016 MT 257, 385 Mont. 171, 381 P.3d 579.

Election of Remedies — Breach of Contract Damages Selected by Plaintiffs — Error for Court to Award Negligence Damages: The plaintiffs and the defendant city had an agreement whereby the city would collect fees from those hooking up to sewer lines that were constructed by the plaintiffs and then forward the payments to the plaintiffs. After the city failed to collect payments under the contract, the plaintiffs filed both contract and negligence claims against the city. Ultimately, the District Court required the plaintiffs to choose whether to pursue the contract claims or the negligence claims so as not to receive double damages, and the plaintiffs chose to pursue the contract claims. The District Court later awarded a small sum related to the negligence claims, and the city appealed the award to the Supreme Court. The court held that the District Court had erred by granting the award given the plaintiffs' election of contract damages and reversed it. Folsom v. Livingston, 2016 MT 238, 385 Mont. 20, 381 P.3d 539.

Alleged Misrepresentations Not False at Time They Were Made — Montana Consumer Protection Act — Negligent Misrepresentation: The plaintiff purchased a home from the defendant based on representations that the Yellowstone Club would build ski-out access. After the plaintiff purchased the home, the Yellowstone Club declared bankruptcy and the ski-out access was not constructed as planned. The plaintiff sued the defendant, alleging breach of contract, negligent misrepresentation, and violation of the Montana Consumer Protection Act. The District Court granted summary judgment to the defendant on the contract claims; however, after a bench trial, it found for the plaintiff on the remaining claims. On appeal, the defendant argued that at the time the statements were made, they were not false because the Yellowstone Club had intended to construct the access and the bankruptcy was unanticipated. The Supreme Court agreed with the defendant, holding that both the negligent misrepresentations and the Consumer Protection Act claims required that the defendant's statements must be false at the time they were made. WLW Realty Partners, LLC v. Continental Partners VIII, LLC, 2015 MT 312, 381 Mont. 333, 360 P.3d 1112.

Cumulative Work-Related Injury — FEOLA — Discovery of Injury Question of Fact: The plaintiff filed claims against the defendant railroad, his longtime employer, under the Federal Employers' Liability Act for cumulative trauma injury. The plaintiff filed a motion for the District Court to hold that, as a matter of law, his claims were not barred by the statute of limitations. The District Court, however, concluded that at what point in time the plaintiff discovered his injury, and therefore when the statute of limitations began to run, was a question of fact for the jury. After a jury ruled in favor of the defendant, the plaintiff appealed to the Supreme Court, arguing that the District Court had erred in allowing the jury to decide whether or not his claims were barred by the statute of limitations. After a lengthy discussion of the continuing tort theory in cumulative injury cases, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's decision to submit the question of discovery of the injury to the jury. Anderson v. BNSF Ry., 2015 MT 240, 380 Mont. 319, 354 P.3d 1248.

Loss of Video Footage — Improper Finding That Statements in Brief Opposing Sanctions for Spoliation of Evidence Did Not Constitute Judicial Admissions: The plaintiff requested that a store manager retain footage of her fall at the store the previous day. The plaintiff filed a negligence claim against the defendant related to the fall and, upon learning that the video footage had been erased, filed a motion for discovery sanctions. In its brief opposing sanctions, the defendant agreed with some of the plaintiff's statements regarding the content of the footage. During trial, however, the defendant made arguments about the video footage that contradicted those made in its earlier brief. The plaintiff appealed the District Court's decision, arguing that the statements in the defendant's brief constituted judicial admissions and that the District Court abused its discretion when it did not treat those statements as judicial admissions at trial. The Supreme Court ruled that the statements in the brief were judicial admissions and remanded the case for a new trial. Bilesky v. Shopko Stores Operating Co., LLC, 2014 MT 300, 377 Mont. 58, 338 P.3d 76.

Tort Claims Not Precluded by Parties Contracting on Same Matter: The parties entered into an agreement for the defendant to purchase the plaintiff's home. After the defendant reneged on the agreement, the plaintiff filed an action for fraud, deceit, and negligence. The District Court dismissed the claims based on its conclusion that the plaintiff's injuries resulted from the defendant's breach of contract and therefore she was precluded from bringing any tort claims against him. The plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court explained that tort claims are not prohibited simply because the parties have entered into a contract on the same matter. However, given that the plaintiff had offered only speculative statements regarding the fraud and deceit claims, the Supreme Court agreed with the District Court's grant of summary judgment on behalf of the defendant on those claims, but it remanded the matter to the District Court to allow the negligence claim to proceed. Dewey v. Stringer, 2014 MT 136, 375 Mont. 176, 325 P.3d 1236.

Elements of Negligent Misrepresentation Against Financial Institution: Plaintiffs sued their mortgage lender for negligently misrepresenting the status of their loan. The District Court granted summary judgment for the defendants but did not address the elements of negligent misrepresentation. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that negligent misrepresentation against a financial institution is governed by the Restatement (Second) of Torts, and because several genuine issues of material fact existed, summary judgment was reversed. Morrow v. Bank of America, N.A., 2014 MT 117, 375 Mont. 38, 324 P.3d 1167, following St. Bank of Townsend v. Maryann's, Inc., 204 Mont. 21, 664 P.2d 295 (1983), and Brown v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 197 Mont. 1, 640 P.2d 453 (1982), and distinguished in House v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n, 2021 MT 45, 403 Mont. 287, 481 P.3d 820.

Mortgage Servicer's Behavior May Result in Fiduciary Duty Toward Debtor: Although the relationship between a bank and a mortgage customer generally does not give rise to fiduciary responsibilities, if a mortgage servicer goes beyond the ordinary role of a lender of money and actively advises a mortgage customer beyond the customary debtor-creditor relationship, the servicer may owe the customer a fiduciary duty. Morrow v. Bank of America, N.A., 2014 MT 117, 375 Mont. 38, 324 P.3d 1167, distinguished in House v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n, 2021 MT 45, 403 Mont. 287, 481 P.3d 820.

Breach of Insurance Contract — Stipulated Judgment Not Proper Measure of Damages: The victim of a car accident in which her father was killed entered into a stipulated settlement and judgment with the negligent driver, her mother, for $2.7 million. The insurer refused to pay the stipulated judgment. After the Supreme Court ruled that the insurer had improperly denied her claim, the plaintiff filed a claim for breach of the insurance contract and sought damages in the amount of the stipulated judgment. While the Supreme Court agreed that the insurer had breached the insurance contract, it did not agree that the judgment reflected the proper amount of damages and remanded the case to the District Court to determine the amount of damages, if any, related to the insurer's breach of the contract. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Freyer, 2013 MT 301, 372 Mont. 191, 312 P.3d 403.

Reasonable Basis in Law for Denial — No Application to Claim for Breach of Contract: The conservator for a baby girl who had suffered minor injuries in a car accident that killed her father demanded payment for her claims. The insurer denied the claims based on its belief that it had already paid out the maximum coverage under the policy. However, in St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Freyer (Freyer I), 2010 MT 191, 357 Mont. 329, 239 P.3d 143, the Supreme Court concluded that the insurer owed the daughter for her claims. Following the Supreme Court's decision, the conservator filed new claims against the insurer, including a claim for breach of the insurance contract. The insurer argued that it had a reasonable basis in law for denying the daughter's claims. Applying this rationale, the District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the insurer. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that while the "reasonable basis in law" defense applies to bad faith claims, it does not apply to a breach of contract claim. The court reversed and remanded the case to the District Court to determine the proper measure of damages related to the breach of contract. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Freyer, 2013 MT 301, 372 Mont. 191, 312 P.3d 403.

Negligent Misrepresentation Claim Fails: Because the evidence did not render a title company employee's statement untruthful when it was made and established that the employee had reasonable grounds for believing what she told a landowner to be true, the landowner could not prove a claim of negligent misrepresentation. Harpole v. Powell County Title Co., 2013 MT 257, 371 Mont. 543, 309 P.3d 34, followed in WLW Realty Partners, LLC v. Continental Partners VIII, LLC, 2015 MT 312, 381 Mont. 333, 360 P.3d 1112.

Scriveners' Error — Statement in Brief Not Considered Judicial Admission — No Abuse of Discretion: The defendant sought dismissal of a negligence claim on the grounds that the plaintiff made an admission in a trial brief indicating that the defendant's actions were "reasonable and necessary". The day after the defendant sought dismissal, the plaintiffs filed a notice of errata to correct the alleged "scriveners' error", and the District Court denied the defendant's motion to dismiss the claim. On appeal, the Supreme Court distinguished Kohne v. Yost, 250 Mont. 109, 818 P.2d 360 (1991), and held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the statement did not constitute a judicial admission. Weaver v. St., 2013 MT 247, 371 Mont. 476, 310 P.3d 495. However, see Bilesky v. Shopko Stores Operating Co., LLC, 2014 MT 300, 377 Mont. 58, 338 P.3d 76, in which the Supreme Court ruled that statements made in pretrial briefing constituted judicial admissions, warranting a new trial.

Negligence in Motor Vehicle Accident — Venue Proper in County Where Collision Occurred, Not Where Vehicle Came to Rest: The parties were involved in a car accident in Teton County. As a result of the collision, the plaintiff's vehicle was propelled over the county line into Cascade County. The plaintiff filed a negligence claim in Cascade County against the driver of the other vehicle. The defendant filed a motion to change venue, arguing that Cascade County was not a proper venue because the tort did not occur there and no defendant resided there. The plaintiff urged the District Court to apply the rationale in Circle S Seeds of Mont., Inc. v. Mont. Merchandising, Inc., 2006 MT 311, 335 Mont. 16, 157 P.3d 671, to conclude that venue was proper in Cascade County. The court declined and granted the defendant's motion to change venue. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed and agreed that although the plaintiff suffered injuries in Cascade County, for purposes of venue, the tort was committed in the county where the cars collided. Yeager v. Morris, 2013 MT 44, 369 Mont. 90, 296 P.3d 1164.

Legal Malpractice Claim Denied — Summary Judgment in Favor of Defendant Attorney Proper: In an appeal of a legal malpractice case, the Supreme Court held that a pro se litigant cannot appear on behalf of another person or entity, and thus the plaintiff lacked standing to seek relief on behalf of her husband, who she alleged had been misrepresented in a criminal proceeding. The same analysis precluded consideration of the civil malpractice claims since the attorney's handling of the civil claims belonged to the plaintiff's bankruptcy estate. Lucas v. Stevenson, 2013 MT 15, 368 Mont. 269, 294 P.3d 377.

Failure to Provide Expert Testimony Regarding Firefighting Tactics — No Negligence: The plaintiff claimed that Billings firefighters negligently fought a fire at his home, but he failed to present expert testimony. The city of Billings countered with testimony from firefighters regarding fire tactics. The District Court held that the plaintiff's negligence claim failed due his failure to provide the requisite expert testimony, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Albert v. Billings, 2012 MT 159, 365 Mont. 454, 282 P.3d 704, citing Massman v. Helena, 237 Mont. 234, 773 P.2d 1206 (1989), and Dayberry v. E. Helena, 2003 MT 321, 318 Mont. 301, 80 P.3d 1218.

Negligent Misrepresentation — District Court in Best Position to Judge Credibility of Witnesses — Findings of Fact Affirmed: Plaintiffs sued a surveying company and its owner for misrepresenting the boundaries of their property. The plaintiffs alleged that they had met with an employee of the surveying company prior to buying the parcel and he told them that the property consisted of waterfront property. Relying on his information, the plaintiffs purchased the parcel and built a structure on property belonging to a neighboring landowner. The plaintiffs sued for negligent misrepresentation. While the plaintiffs claimed that they met with the surveying company employee prior to purchasing the property, the employee testified that he met with them the year after the purchase of the property, and thus they had not relied on his data for the purchase. In weighing the contradictory testimony, the District Court found the plaintiffs to be more credible. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's order finding the surveying company liable and awarding the plaintiffs damages, noting that a trial court is in the best position to assess credibility and that the evidentiary record did not indicate to the Supreme Court that a mistake had been made. Kurtzenacker v. Davis Surveying, Inc., 2012 MT 105, 365 Mont. 71, 278 P.3d 1002.

Expert Needed to Establish Standard of Care in Road Closure Case — Summary Judgment Proper in Absence of Expert — District Court Affirmed: The plaintiff's husband was killed when, as he was waiting for road crews to clear fallen debris from high winds, a tree fell on his parked car. The road was closed shortly after the incident. The plaintiff sued the Department of Transportation (Department) for negligence, claiming that it should have closed the road earlier pursuant to its own policies and procedures. After the deadline for expert disclosure had passed and the plaintiff had not named an expert on the standard of care, the Department filed a motion for summary judgment, arguing that the understanding of the multiple interrelated factors a Department employee must consider in determining whether to close a road is outside the experience of the common juror. The plaintiff argued that an expert on the standard of care was not necessary because the Department's own policies and procedures were evidence of the standard of care. The District Court agreed with the Department and granted it summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court, citing Dayberry v. City of East Helena, 2003 MT 321, 318 Mont. 301, 80 P.3d 1218, and the proposition that a lay jury of ordinary training and intelligence would not understand the complexities of what must be considered in determining whether to close a road. Dubiel v. Dept. of Transportation, 2012 MT 35, 364 Mont. 175, 272 P.3d 66, followed in Dulaney v. St. Farm Fire & Cas. Ins. Co., 2014 MT 127, 375 Mont. 117, 324 P.3d 1211.

Sufficient Evidence of Implied Contract to Preclude Summary Judgment — City Ordinance Not Bar to Liability: The plaintiffs sued the city of Dillon for damages after their water service was interrupted, claiming breach of contract, negligence, and infliction of emotional distress. The District Court granted summary judgment to the city, reasoning that no contract existed between the parties because the city commission never approved a contract for the plaintiffs' water service, as required by a city ordinance, and the plaintiffs' claims were barred by a city ordinance that provided that the city could shut off water and avoid liability for the resulting interruption of water service. The Supreme Court reversed. The city's conduct manifested the existence of a contract to furnish water to the plaintiffs' lot, and therefore the city was estopped from asserting that no contract existed. Because the city ordinance that bars claims arising from a break in water service applies only to situations in which the city decides to shut off water services, rather than when water is shut off from a creek and main line freezing as occurred in this case, summary judgment for the city was not appropriate. Conner v. Dillon, 2012 MT 21, 364 Mont. 8, 270 P.3d 75.

Liability of Parent for Child's Alleged Negligent Driving — Theories of Negligent Entrustment and Vicarious Liability Under Family Purpose Doctrine Rejected: Following a car accident, the plaintiffs sued both the teenage driver (defendant) for negligence and her mother for negligent entrustment and vicarious liability under the family purpose doctrine. The District Court granted the mother summary judgment after analyzing the three elements in Crisafulli v. Bass, 2001 MT 316, 308 Mont. 40, 38 P.3d 842, and concluding that there was no evidence to establish that the mother should have known that her daughter was an incompetent driver. The District Court also rejected the application of the family purpose doctrine. A jury subsequently found that the defendant was not negligent. On appeal, the plaintiffs claimed the District Court had erred in granting the mother summary judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that the defendant had never received any traffic citations and had never been involved in an accident. Therefore, the plaintiffs failed to meet their burden of proof that the mother should have known that her daughter was an incompetent driver or would drive in a manner that would create an unreasonable risk to others. Similarly, the Supreme Court rejected the application of the family purpose doctrine in this case as there was no agency relationship between the mother and daughter. A family relationship alone will not satisfy the agency relationship for applying the family purpose doctrine. Styren Farms, Inc. v. Roos, 2011 MT 299, 363 Mont. 41, 265 P.3d 1230.

Elements of Negligent Misrepresentation Action Against Accountant: In a case in which two banks brought an action against an accounting firm for damages caused by an unqualified audit statement, the Supreme Court set forth the elements of a third-party negligent misrepresentation claim against an accountant under Restatement (Second) of Torts 552. W. Sec. Bank v. Eide Bailly, LLP, 2010 MT 291, 359 Mont. 34, 249 P.3d 35.

Professional Negligence and Negligent Misrepresentation Distinguished — Restatement of Torts 552 Controls Third-Party Negligent Misrepresentation — Accountant's Duty of Care to Third Parties: After Eide Bailly, an accounting firm, issued an unqualified opinion stating that an audit of IMC, a mortgage company, showed that its financial statements didn't contain misstatements, the holding company owning IMC was purchased by plaintiff Glacier Bank, which merged the holding company into plaintiff Western Bank. When it was later discovered that an employee of IMC had manipulated IMC's financial records to make IMC appear more profitable than it was, the plaintiffs sued Eide Bailly, alleging that Eide Bailly owed a duty of care to the plaintiffs. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's ruling that no duty of care was owed. Citing Jim's Excavating Service v. HKM Associates, 265 Mont. 494, 878 P.2d 248 (1994), and the Restatement (Second) of Torts, 552 (1977), the Supreme Court held that the plaintiffs had failed to rebut the affidavits from Eide Bailly that it didn't intend to supply the information to the plaintiffs and that it didn't know the plaintiffs would receive the accounting statement. The Supreme Court therefore affirmed the District Court's grant of summary judgment for defendant Eide Bailly. Relying upon Jim's Excavating, the Supreme Court also distinguished professional negligence claims from claims for third-party negligent misrepresentation claims but treated the case before the court as a case of third-party negligent misrepresentation. W. Sec. Bank v. Eide Bailly, LLP, 2010 MT 291, 359 Mont. 34, 249 P.3d 35.

No Error in Jury Instruction — Learned Intermediary Doctrine Not Determinative: A jury awarded $3.2 million to Stevens for Novartis' failure to warn of side effects associated with the drug Zometa. Novartis appealed on several grounds, including that the District Court erred by instructing the jury that Novartis had a duty to warn health care professionals other than Stevens' prescribing physician. Novartis argued that pursuant to the "learned intermediary" doctrine, its duty to warn extended only to the prescribing physician. The Supreme Court disagreed, but on different grounds. The instruction allowed the jury to find that the label was inadequate or that the information provided to the prescribing physician was inadequate. Novartis could not prove the jury considered the duty to warn in reaching its verdict and thus could not prove prejudicial error on this basis. The scope of the "learned intermediary" doctrine was not determinative. Stevens v. Novartis Pharmaceuticals Corp., 2010 MT 282, 358 Mont. 474, 247 P.3d 244.

City Council Denial of Subdivision Exemption Not Violative of Constitutional Protections: The Missoula City Council denied plaintiffs' applications for exemptions from subdivision requirements, and plaintiffs appealed on grounds that denial of the applications constituted violations of constitutional rights of equal protection and public participation, was a taking, and was a tortious violation of the city council's statutory duties. The District Court granted summary judgment for the city on all the claims and plaintiffs appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The equal protection argument was merely a bald assertion that was largely unclear and poorly supported, failing to demonstrate a discriminatory purpose, and was properly dismissed on summary judgment. The takings claim failed because plaintiffs never possessed a right to obtain an exemption, but instead only lost the opportunity to obtain an exemption, and the discretion to grant or deny the exemption was properly exercised by the city council. Plaintiffs raised the public participation claim in District Court but failed to discuss the issue in briefs on appeal, so the Supreme Court declined to consider the issue. The claim of a tortious violation of the city council's statutory duties also failed as a cognizable negligence claim because plaintiffs failed to prove that the council's actions damaged plaintiffs. Roe v. Missoula, 2009 MT 417, 354 M 1, 221 P3d 1200 (2009). See also Gudmundsen v. State ex rel. Mont. St. Hosp. Warm Springs, 2009 MT 56, 349 M 297, 203 P3d 813 (2009).

Evidence of Product Test Results Not Relevant to Compensatory Damages but Relevant to Punitive Damages: Plaintiffs sued the manufacturer of a child car seat for strict product liability after their 4-month-old child suffered fatal brain injuries in a vehicle rollover. Plaintiffs contended that the seat contained a design defect that caused the child's death. At trial, the District Court disallowed evidence of tests conducted pursuant to federal standards as the tests applied to the question of both compensatory and punitive damages. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed that because the case presented a strict product liability issue emphasizing maximum protection for the consumer and placing risk of loss on the manufacturer, evidence of the tests was not relevant to the question of compensatory damages, in that strict liability law rejects concepts such as reasonableness and foreseeability that are fundamental to negligence law. However, test compliance evidence was relevant to the issue of punitive damages. Defendant may or may not have been able to convince the jury that its compliance with the tests showed that defendant had not evinced deliberate indifference to the welfare of users of the car seat, but the District Court erred in preempting the debate by not allowing defendant to explain itself. The Supreme Court remanded for purposes of reconsidering the appropriateness of punitive damages after defendant was allowed to present evidence of the car seat's test compliance. Malcolm v. Evenflo Co., Inc., 2009 MT 285, 352 M 325, 217 P3d 514 (2009). See also Sunburst School District No. 2 v. Texaco, Inc., 2007 MT 183, 338 M 259, 165 P3d 1079 (2007), and Two Leggings v. Gatrell, 2023 MT 160, 413 Mont. 172, 534 P.3d 668, holding that evidence of racial motivation is admissible when considered for the exclusive purpose of determining a punitive damages award.

No Negligence in Officers' Response to Robbery Call or in Brief Detention of Robbery Victim: Plaintiff worked at a convenience store when a person entered the store, held a knife to plaintiff's throat, and robbed the store. Plaintiff managed to dial 9-1-1, but could not speak with police. Officers determined where the call came from and surrounded the store. However, even though officers could see two people inside, it was not possible to determine who was involved in the robbery. Meanwhile, plaintiff was taken to a back room and raped. Officers arrested the perpetrator immediately after he left the store and then ordered any other persons inside to exit. Plaintiff then left the store and was subdued and handcuffed for about 30 seconds before officers determined that she was an employee and had been raped. Plaintiff subsequently sued the county, law enforcement agencies, and several individual officers for negligently responding to the situation, allowing plaintiff to be raped, and improperly arresting plaintiff when she left the store. The District Court granted summary judgment for defendants and plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Under the circumstances, the officers responded quickly and professionally and got plaintiff to a safe position and to medical care as immediately as possible. The officers did not have custody or control of either the plaintiff or the robber at the time the rape occurred and therefore were in no position to undertake specific actions to protect the plaintiff until she came out of the store and her identity and role in the events were established. Additionally, the brief detention of plaintiff was justified and provided no cause of action against defendants. Gonzales v. Bozeman, 2009 MT 277, 352 M 145, 217 P3d 487 (2009).

Applicable Standard for Evaluating Damages for Parasitic Emotional Distress Claims—Sacco Standard Applicable Only to Independent Claims of Negligent or Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress: The "serious or severe" standard for emotional distress announced in Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), applies only to independent claims of negligent or intentional infliction of emotional distress. For claims of emotional distress as an element of damage for an underlying tort claim, known as parasitic emotional distress damages, the Supreme Court adopted the standard set forth in Montana Pattern Jury Instruction 25.02, 15.01-03, as cited in Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008), that when emotional distress damages are allowed in the absence of independent tort claims, an instruction should be given that the law does not set a definite standard by which to calculate compensation for mental and emotional suffering and distress. Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2009 MT 248, 351 M 464, 215 P3d 649 (2009), followed in Ammondson v. NW. Corp., 2009 MT 331, 353 M 28, 220 P3d 1 (2009), and McVey v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2013 MT 346, 372 Mont. 511, 313 P.3d 191, and overruling Johnson v. Supersave Mkt., Inc., 211 M 465, 686 P2d 209 (1984), Noonan v. First Bank Butte, 227 M 329, 740 P2d 631 (1987), First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P2d 84 (1989), and similar cases that suggest that a plaintiff must make a threshold showing of serious or severe emotional distress before a claim for parasitic emotional distress damages is allowed to go to the jury.

Horse Biting Person Considered Unusual, Not Abnormal Behavior — Summary Judgment on Negligence Claim Affirmed: Peterson was bitten by Eichhorn's horse, which was pastured on property adjoining Peterson's. Peterson sued Eichhorn on grounds that Eichhorn kept a domestic animal with an abnormally dangerous tendency to bite people and was strictly liable for Peterson's injuries. The District Court granted summary judgment for Eichhorn, and Peterson appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Peterson relied on Restatement (Second) of Torts 509 (1977) for the proposition that the possessor of a domestic animal with dangerous propensities abnormal to its class is liable for harm done by the animal to another, even though the owner has exercised the utmost care to prevent it from doing harm. The court declined to apply the Restatement in this case because the record was void of any evidence that: (1) the horse's tendency to bite, if there was one, amounted to a dangerous propensity; (2) if the horse had a dangerous propensity for biting, that propensity was abnormal to its class; and (3) Eichhorn knew that the horse had a dangerous propensity abnormal to its class. Peterson admitted that, based on personal experience, horses are unpredictable and are capable of biting, but contended that it is unusual for a mare to bite. However, unusual does not equate with abnormal, and Peterson presented no substantial evidence that the horse's behavior was anything other than the behavior of a typical horse as described by Peterson. Summary judgment for Eichhorn was not erroneous. Peterson v. Eichhorn, 2008 MT 250, 344 M 540, 189 P3d 615 (2008).

No Objection to Comments Regarding Defendant's Intent in Negligence Trial — No Curative Instruction Required: Schuff asserted that the trial court erred by not giving a curative instruction regarding the fact that the jury need not consider Jackson's intent or mental status when deciding whether Jackson negligently operated his boat, resulting in injury to Schuff. However, Schuff did not object to the comments believed to have improperly prejudiced the jury by introducing evidence of Jackson's intent, and certain aspects of Jackson's intent were raised by Schuff's counsel on cross-examination. Thus, the trial court did not err in concluding that a curative instruction was unnecessary. Schuff v. Jackson, 2008 MT 81, 342 M 156, 179 P3d 1169 (2008).

Application of Montana Negligence Law to Snowmobile Accident on Federal Forest Service Trail: This case involved a Federal Tort Claims Act action brought by a snowmobiler who was severely injured on a U.S. Forest Service signed and maintained trail by members of the injured person's party who were following him. The Ninth Circuit Court certified to the Montana Supreme Court a question on the appropriate standard of care and received the Montana Supreme Court's response in Oberson v. U.S. Dept. of Agriculture, 2007 MT 293, 339 M 519, 171 P3d 715 (2007). The Ninth Circuit Court held that the actions of the Forest Service in signing the snowmobile trail involved in the action did not rise to the type of policy decisions that are not subject to the Federal Tort Claims Act. Applying the Montana negligence standards and foreseeability of risk from the response, the Ninth Circuit Court held that the negligence elements were applied correctly relating to the accident. Oberson v. U.S. Dept. of Agriculture, 514 F3d 989 (9th Cir. 2008).

Lack of Predictability in Jury's Verdict Not Grounds for Reversal — Alteration of Judgment and New Trial Denied: After falling on ice outside her office and breaking her ankle, Seeley sued the owner of the building for negligence for defective design and failing to remove ice and snow from the walkway. The jury found that the owner was negligent, but determined that the negligence did not cause Seeley's fall and injuries. Seeley moved to alter the judgment and for a new trial on damages, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the weight and credibility of the evidence lies with the jury and that although a verdict may be difficult to explain, the lack of predictability in the jury's judgment does not warrant reversal of the verdict. Here, the jury weighed conflicting evidence that defective design caused Seeley's fall against evidence that Seeley's haste and carelessness caused her fall and attributed Seeley's haste and carelessness as the cause. The Supreme Court declined to disturb the verdict absent evidence that the findings were inherently impossible to believe. Denial of Seeley's motion to alter the judgment and for a new trial was affirmed. Seeley v. Kreitzberg Rentals, LLC, 2007 MT 97, 337 M 91, 157 P3d 676 (2007).

Application of Improper Paint to Water Treatment Center Pipes — Definition of Physical Injury in Context of Commercial General Liability Insurance Contract: Plaintiff entered a contract with the city of Libby for construction of a water treatment plant. Plaintiff then entered a subcontract with defendant to paint the filter tanks and pipes at the plant. Plaintiff was listed as an additional insured on defendant's commercial general liability insurance policy. Defendant used an improper paint, and the city sued plaintiff as the general contractor for repainting costs. The insurer refused to defend or indemnify plaintiff, claiming that policy exclusions precluded coverage for the city's claim. Plaintiff successfully argued in District Court that the exclusions applied only to defendant as the named insured. On appeal, the Supreme Court considered whether the policy language referring to physical injury to tangible property covered the application of improper paint, concluding that the policy applied. Physical injury refers to a physical and material alteration resulting in a detriment. The policy covered property damage, including loss of use, and application of the improper paint physically and materially altered the tanks and pipes, resulting in a detriment to the city. The District Court was affirmed. Swank Enterprises, Inc. v. All Purpose Serv., Ltd., 2007 MT 57, 336 M 197, 154 P3d 52 (2007), following Lindsay Drilling v. USF&G, 208 M 91, 676 P2d 203 (1984).

Evidence of Driver's Conduct Allowed to Establish Passenger's Comparative Negligence: Elisha was killed while riding on Jason's motorcycle after Jason failed to negotiate a turn. Elisha's parents sued the state for negligence in constructing and maintaining the road. Although he was a nonparty, the state sought to introduce evidence of Jason's alleged intoxication, excessive speed, and misaimed headlight in an attempt to establish Elisha's alleged comparative negligence. The District Court disallowed the evidence, but on appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Under Buck v. St., 222 M 423, 723 P2d 210 (1986), a driver's negligence cannot be imputed to a passenger for purposes of comparative negligence. However, if sufficient evidence exists to show that in the exercise of ordinary care the passenger should have chosen not to ride with an intoxicated driver, the jury should be instructed on the separate issue of negligence involving the passenger and should decide the issue of the passenger's comparative negligence. Additionally, a finding that the passenger was subjectively aware of the driver's alleged negligence or intoxication is not required before the passenger may be found comparatively negligent. Faulconbridge v. St., 2006 MT 198, 333 M 186, 142 P3d 777 (2006).

Blatant, Systematic Abuse of Discovery — Default Judgment Awarded: Plaintiff slipped and fell in defendant's locker room and sustained serious injuries. Defendant refused to answer many of plaintiff's interrogatories until the eve of trial, including requests for information regarding other falls and injuries and subsequent remedial measures. At trial, the jury found for defendant on the issue of liability, and plaintiff moved for an amended judgment or a new trial based on defendant's alleged abuse of the discovery process, but the motions were denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the evidence sought through discovery was highly relevant and probative and that the state improperly concealed the evidence by asserting baseless objections in response to the discovery requests, which directly contravened the express purpose of discovery and severely undermined the integrity of the litigation. In addition, pursuant to Rule 407, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), defendant was not entitled to withhold relevant evidence of subsequent remedial measures. Although the trial court may generally decide the proper sanction for discovery abuse, this was an exceptional case in which defendant's discovery abuse was so blatant and systematic that the only proper sanction was a default judgment on the issue of liability. Defendant's pattern of willful and bad faith conduct outweighed the general preference for trial on the merits, and defendant demonstrated clear disregard for resolution on the merits by seeking to gain a strategic advantage by concealing important evidence and asserting frivolous objections. Therefore, the Supreme Court granted plaintiff a default judgment on the issue of liability and remanded for a determination of plaintiff's damages. Richardson v. St., 2006 MT 43, 331 M 231, 130 P3d 634 (2006), following Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748 (1997), Kissock v. Butte Convalescent Center, 1999 MT 322, 297 M 307, 992 P2d 1271 (1999), and Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002 (2000). See also Jerome v. Pardis, 240 M 187, 783 P2d 919 (1989), and Kraft v. High Country Motors, Inc., 2012 MT 83, 364 Mont. 465, 276 P.3d 908.

Use of Redacted Pretort Release to Establish Statutory Liability Shield Allowed: A pretort form indicating a prospective release from liability for negligence is illegal. However, it was not improper for a trial court to allow introduction of a redacted version of an illegal exculpatory agreement to show that an equine activity sponsor was statutorily protected from liability from unavoidable risks or from the inherent risks of equine activities of which the participant was or should have been aware. In the present case, plaintiff failed to cite authority or establish error by the trial court in admitting the redacted agreement, and the Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's denial of plaintiff's motion for a new trial on grounds that the redacted agreement was improperly admitted in evidence. McDermott v. Carie, LLC, 2005 MT 293, 329 M 295, 124 P3d 168 (2005).

No Right to Expectation of Privacy in Public Criminal Records or Negligence in Use of Records: In 1998, Barr applied for a part-time airport security officer position and consented to a background check. A 10-year check revealed no arrests, and Barr was hired. About 1 month later, another security officer requested a criminal background check on Barr, which revealed a 1968 arrest in Alaska for criminal nonsupport. Prior to the end of Barr's probationary period, his employment was terminated, and he sued the airport authority. Barr's claim was summarily dismissed. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that under 44-5-103, Barr's Alaska arrest was public information that anyone could access and its dissemination was not improper and that coupled with Barr's consent to the background check, Barr had no constitutional expectation of privacy in the criminal record. Barr's negligence claims also failed because he failed to offer proof of all elements of common-law negligence. Summary judgment for defendants was affirmed. Barr v. Great Falls Int'l Airport Authority, 2005 MT 36, 326 M 93, 107 P3d 471 (2005).

Emotional Distress Over Loss of Adult Child Not So Severe as to Be Compensable: Plaintiff argued that she suffered extreme emotional distress as the result of her son's death, allegedly caused by defendant's negligence. Applying the test for emotional distress in Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), the District Court held that plaintiff's emotional distress was insufficiently severe to support her claim, so defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that plaintiff's testimony that "life goes on" and that it was a loss that she "must learn to deal with" showed a philosophical strength that would likely be absent in a case of severe emotional distress. Plaintiff's emotional distress was not so severe as to rise to the level of a compensable claim, so the District Court was affirmed. Renville v. Fredrickson, 2004 MT 324, 324 M 86, 101 P3d 773 (2004).

Loss of Consortium Claim Allowed Only by Personal Representative: Plaintiff sought damages for a loss of consortium for the death of her adult child in a car accident, allegedly caused by defendant's negligence. The District Court concluded that Montana law does not recognize a loss of consortium claim for the death of an adult child, so defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted. The Supreme Court agreed with the defendant petition on rehearing that a loss of consortium claim arising from a negligently inflicted death is an inextricable element of a wrongful death action that may be brought only by a personal representative of a decedent under 27-1-513 and that damages for wrongful death may be recovered only once. Plaintiff did not have standing to bring a wrongful death action under 27-1-513 because she was neither her son's heir nor his personal representative, so plaintiff's loss of consortium claim should have been dismissed as a matter of law. Allowing a separate loss of consortium claim by someone other than a personal representative would create a multiplicity of claims arising from the same wrongful death, in contravention of legislative intent. In situations when both causes of action apply, the personal representative must bring both actions together to prevent multiple actions arising from the same death. Thus, even though the District Court arrived at the correct conclusion for the wrong reason, summary judgment for defendant was affirmed. Renville v. Fredrickson, 2004 MT 324, 324 M 86, 101 P3d 773 (2004).

Sufficient Evidence of City's Willful or Wanton Misconduct to Preclude Summary Judgment — Negligence Claim Against City Barred by Recreational Use Statute: Plaintiff was injured on June 20, 2001, after falling through a damaged plank on the Polson city dock, and filed suit against the city for negligently maintaining the premises and for failing to warn of the unsafe condition. The District Court granted summary judgment for the city on grounds that plaintiff failed to present evidence in support of the claim that the city was aware of the defective plank before June 20 or that the city acted willfully or wantonly. The court also concluded that plaintiff's negligence claim was precluded by 70-16-302, the recreational use statute. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the facts, when considered in a light most favorable to plaintiff, were sufficient to raise a genuine issue as to whether the city's failure to timely repair the damaged plank or warn plaintiff of the danger constituted willful or wanton misconduct, precluding summary judgment and warranting a trial on the issue. However, the Supreme Court agreed that the recreational use statute barred plaintiff's negligence claim. Jobe v. Polson, 2004 MT 183, 322 M 157, 94 P3d 743 (2004).

Sledding in City Park Considered Recreational Purpose for Which City Immune From Liability: Plaintiff was injured on a sledding hill at a city park. The trial court held that the city was immune from liability pursuant to 70-16-302. Citing Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71 (2000), plaintiff contended that because city parks are freely available to the public, it was unnecessary for the law to encourage availability by limiting a city's tort liability. The Supreme Court disagreed and distinguished Dobrocke, holding that the use of city parks is discretionary, unlike the use of city streets and boulevards that was at issue in Dobrocke, so the legislative rationale behind 70-16-302 to encourage the availability of recreational areas applied. Winter sports, such as sledding, are explicitly listed in the statute as a recreational purpose, so summary judgment for the city was affirmed. Weinert v. Great Falls, 2004 MT 168, 322 M 38, 97 P3d 1079 (2004).

Preclusion of Evidence of Federal Safety Standards Not Error Absent Contract Guaranteeing Safety by Contractor on Jobsite: Grover was a carpenter who was injured after falling from the roof of a home that he was working on. Grover sued the general contractor for negligently failing to maintain a safe workplace. The District Court granted the contractor's motion in limine to prohibit the introduction of federal safety standards as evidence of the contractor's negligence.

The jury found for the contractor, and on appeal, Grover asserted that the District Court abused its discretion in not allowing the evidence. However, the Supreme Court affirmed. The homeowner, not the general contractor, exercised actual oversight responsibilities on the project, including project design, permitting, provision of tools, hiring and firing of employees, and safety concerns. The contract under which Grover was hired did not address a project safety program, safety devices, safeguards, or protective equipment, and the contractor neither assumed nor exercised the authority to create safe working conditions. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow admission of job safety standards as evidence of the contractor's negligence. Grover v. Cornerstone Constr. N.W., Inc., 2004 MT 148, 321 M 477, 91 P3d 1278 (2004), following Shannon v. Howard S. Wright Constr. Co., 181 M 269, 593 P2d 438 (1979), and Gibby v. Noranda Minerals Corp., 273 M 420, 905 P2d 126 (1995).

No Evidence of False Representation of Material Fact — Claim of Negligent Misrepresentation Properly Dismissed: Plaintiff claimed that vinyl siding was sold, furnished, and installed on her home under misleading circumstances because the installer failed to clearly identify the relationship with the siding manufacturer. However, plaintiff failed to specify any false statements made by either the installer or the manufacturer that led her to believe that this was true. Absent evidence demonstrating the primary element of the cause of action, plaintiff's negligent representation claim failed as a matter of law. Osterman v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 2003 MT 327, 318 M 342, 80 P3d 435 (2003), following Yellowstone II Dev. Group, Inc. v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 2001 MT 41, 304 M 223, 20 P3d 755 (2001).

Failure to Provide Expert Testimony Regarding Adequacy of Swimming Pool Depth for Diving — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff was injured diving into a municipal swimming pool and sued the city for negligence and strict liability. Administrative rules adopted in 1985 set standards articulating board lengths for various pool depths, but the rules apply only to pools constructed or remodeled after June 28, 1985, and the pool in question was constructed in 1972, so the rules did not apply. Further, 50-53-107 does not define a particular standard of conduct to which public pool operators must conform, but rather imposes a general duty on a city to keep a pool safe. Absent an applicable standard, plaintiff was required to present expert testimony to assist jurors in determining whether the pool depth was unreasonably dangerous for the diving board length. Plaintiff offered no expert testimony on the subject, thus failing to establish a prima facie case of liability, so the District Court properly granted summary judgment to the city. Dayberry v. E. Helena, 2003 MT 321, 318 M 301, 80 P3d 1218 (2003), followed in Dubiel v. Dept. of Transportation, 2012 MT 35, 364 Mont. 175, 272 P.3d 66, and Dulaney v. St. Farm Fire & Cas. Ins. Co., 2014 MT 127, 375 Mont. 117, 324 P.3d 1211.

Negligence During House Moving — Breach of House Moving Agreement — Remand for Determination of Causation and Damages: Kelly entered an agreement with Hall to move four of Kelly's housing units. Hall agreed to obtain cargo insurance on each unit but did not do so. During the move, two units were damaged, and Kelly filed a claim against Hall's insurer for remuneration. The claim was denied, and the insurer sought a declaratory judgment against both Hall and Kelly. Kelly filed negligence and breach of contract claims against Hall, and Hall counterclaimed for breach of contract against Kelly. The District Court concluded that Kelly failed to establish negligence, that both parties breached the contract, and that neither party could recover against the other. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the finding that Hall breached the contract by failing to obtain cargo insurance and that, based on the presumption against conditions precedent and inconclusive evidence, Kelly also breached the contract and thus could not recover breach of contract damages. However, there was no evidence to rebut Kelly's negligence claim, nor did the District Court address the damages that Hall conceded occurred during the move. Because it was error to find that Kelly failed to establish negligence, the case was remanded for trial on causation and damages. Scottsdale Ins. Co. v. Hall, 2003 MT 188, 316 M 460, 73 P3d 819 (2003).

No Prejudicial Error in Failure to Give Negligent Homicide Mental State Instruction in Wrongful Death Action When Other Instructions Adequately Reflect Negligence: Samson's son was killed by Bercier, a youth who walked away from a nonsecure, supervised licensed youth group home. Samson sued the state for foreseeable negligence. To boost the theory of foreseeability, Samson offered a jury instruction that defined Bercier's conduct as reckless and postulated therefrom that the conduct was foreseeable because of Bercier's background, seeking to undermine the state's theory that the shooting was an unforeseeable accident. The District Court refused to offer the instruction, instead instructing the jury on elements of wrongful death, and Samson appealed. The state argued that the mental state of Bercier was not a controlling issue and contended that it was not necessary to instruct the jury on the mental state of negligent homicide because the instructions as a whole properly included the key concepts of a wrongful death action. The Supreme Court agreed with the state. The fundamental issue concerned the state's negligence, not Bercier's mental state. Nevertheless, Samson was still able to present the foreseeability theory under the instructions that were given, so failure to give Samson's offered instruction did not result in prejudice to Samson's case. It is within a District Court's discretion to decide how to instruct the jury, taking into account the theories of the contending parties, and absent an abuse of discretion, the District Court was affirmed. Samson v. St., 2003 MT 133, 316 M 90, 69 P3d 1154 (2003). See also Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122 (1996).

Insurer Required to Pay Undisputed Medical Coverage Without Settlement Agreement When Liability Reasonably Clear — No Bad Faith Claim for Pre-Watters Conditioned Settlement Offer: Defendant insurer offered to pay plaintiffs the policy limit of $1 million in exchange for a full release of claims against the insureds. Plaintiffs refused to provide a release, the case went to trial, and plaintiffs were awarded more than $3 million. Plaintiffs then counterclaimed against the insurer, claiming that refusal to pay the undisputed medical claims without a release violated 33-18-201(6) and (13). The Supreme Court noted that the purpose of 33-18-201 is to ensure prompt payment of damages for which an insurer is clearly obligated. Thus, pursuant to Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997), and Watters v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 2000 MT 150, 300 M 91, 3 P3d 626 (2000), the insurer had a duty to pay plaintiffs' undisputed medical expenses up to the limits of its coverage and without the benefit of a settlement agreement. Nevertheless, because the insurer made its settlement offer in 1998, more than 2 years prior to the Watters decision, the insurer had an arguably reasonable basis under 33-18-242 for asserting that it was entitled to condition payment of policy limits on plaintiffs' provision of a release of claims, so the insurer was not liable for acting in bad faith in violation of 33-18-201. Shilhanek v. D-2 Trucking, Inc., 2003 MT 122, 315 M 519, 70 P3d 721 (2003), overruling Juedeman v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 253 M 278, 833 P2d 191 (1992), and overruling Watters to the extent that Watters implies that an insurer's obligation under Ridley is limited to the minimum coverage required by the Motor Vehicle Safety-Responsibility Act. See also High Country Paving, Inc. v. United Fire & Cas. Co., 2019 MT 297, 398 Mont. 191, 454 P.3d 1210.

Question of Material Fact Regarding Law Firm's Handling of Real Estate Contract — Summary Judgment Improperly Granted: Plaintiff sued its law firm for work performed in writing a contract for a real estate transaction. Plaintiffs expert opined that the firm violated the standard of care when it: (1) had a nonattorney with no contract drafting experience draft the initial agreement and insert an inaccurate legal description of the property obtained from plaintiffs' own engineering firm; (2) used the phrase "more or less" to cure defects in the property description when the legal description was clearly deficient; (3) failed to include a provision that required the seller to sign future applications for a final plat; and (4) failed to execute proper escrow documents to prevent the seller from having veto power over any proposed development of the property. The law firm presented its own expert to refute the allegations. The District Court analyzed the allegations of negligence, applying the legal malpractice standards in Lorash v. Epstein, 236 M 21, 767 P2d 1335 (1989), and, finding no issues of material fact, granted the law firm's motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed, finding that summary judgment was improper. The conflicting expert testimony itself raised a material issue of fact regarding the standard of care that required resolution by a trier of fact. Further, material questions remained concerning whether the law firm's independent failure to recognize a problem with the legal description contributed as a cause to plaintiffs' damages, whether the firm followed the requisite standard of care in drafting the escrow agreement, and whether the purported terms of the escrow agreement satisfied the requisite standard of care. Babcock Place Ltd. Partnership v. Berg, Lilly, Andriolo, & Tollefsen, P.C., 2003 MT 111, 315 M 364, 69 P3d 1145 (2003).

Duty of Railroad to Construct and Maintain Safe Railroad Crossing — Summary Dismissal of Liability Case Against County for Road Construction Proper: The North Alaska road crossing was built in the early 1920s through the cooperative efforts of the county and the railroad. The crossing was entirely on railroad property, and the railroad allowed access to the county over the years to maintain the road and to erect signs on the railroad's right-of-way. Fisch was injured in 1998 when his dump truck was struck by a train at the crossing. The railroad sought to ascribe liability to the county for negligent design and construction of the crossing. The county denied all allegations of negligence, and the District Court granted summary judgment to the county on the issue of liability. The railroad appealed on grounds that ARM 18.6.311 required the county to construct and maintain the roadway through the crossing in a safe manner. The Supreme Court disagreed. The clear intent of the administrative rule was to limit application of the rule to projects arising from the state's allocation of federal funds made available to improve the safety of railroad crossings and did not address road-rail alignment or crossing design. The historical ambiguity of whether the railroad or the county chose the exact location for the crossing raised no genuine issue of material fact and was irrelevant to the question of which entity had the duty to construct and maintain the crossing. Rather, under 69-14-602, that duty was statutorily assigned to and rested clearly with the railroad. Thus, summary dismissal of the liability claim against the county was proper. Fisch v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2003 MT 76, 315 M 13, 67 P3d 267 (2003).

Disclosure of Building Leakage and Source of Water Not Material Fact: Plaintiffs purchased a building in Philipsburg for use as a residence. Water began seeping into the basement a couple of years later, and plaintiffs sued the sellers for breach of the warranty of habitability and the city because the source of the water may have been from a broken water line nearby. The District Court summarily dismissed the claim against the sellers because the sellers' knowledge of prior leakage was not a material fact and because the question of the source of the water was not material to the transaction between the parties. Plaintiffs appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Plaintiffs all but conceded that the prior leakage was not important when they did not disclose the leakage to the bank when they refinanced the property. Further, plaintiffs' initial claim against the sellers was for nondisclosure of the leakage without regard to the source, so summary judgment was not precluded because the source was not essential to the case against the sellers. Bond v. Philipsburg, 2003 MT 74, 315 M 7, 67 P3d 255 (2003).

No Requirement That Private Property Be Available for Public Use Before Landowner Liability Shield Applies — Landowner Immune From Suit Absent Consideration or Evidence of Misconduct: Saari went inner tube sledding with a church group on a hill at a ski resort after the resort was closed for the day. The group paid no fees to use the hill and did not rent or purchase equipment from the resort operator. During that evening, Saari lost control and crashed in a creek bed, suffering injuries which subsequently caused Saari's death. Saari's estate sued the resort operator on six negligence counts, including survival action, wrongful death, negligence, premises liability, attractive nuisance, and infliction of emotional distress. The District Court held that 70-16-302 precluded liability by the operator because there was no duty of care owed to Saari and granted summary judgment to the operator on all counts. The estate appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. By its terms, 70-16-302 provides for landowner liability when a recreational user gives valuable consideration to the landowner in exchange for using the property or when the landowner acts with willful or wanton misconduct. While conceding that Saari paid no consideration for use of the ski hill, the estate nevertheless argued that the operator generally benefited from after-hours sledders, which constituted consideration. However, no legal authority was advanced for the proposition that economic benefits received at a different point in time constituted valuable consideration given by Saari on the night in question, and these speculative statements did not give rise to a genuine issue of material fact. Moreover, the operator's failure to prevent or supervise after-hours sledding did not constitute willful or wanton misconduct. An absence of evidence cannot establish the existence of a genuine issue of material fact. Finally, the estate cited Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158 (1992), for the proposition that a question of fact existed regarding whether the property was open to the public. Under Simchuk, if the land upon which an injury occurs is not available for public use, the landowner does not enjoy the limited liability afforded by 70-16-302. However, a public use requirement would essentially negate the "without permission" language of the statute and exceed the parameters of the statute, and because the statute contains no express language that property be open for public use before the liability shield applies, the Supreme Court overruled Simchuk to that extent. Summary judgment on all counts was proper. Saari v. Winter Sports, Inc., 2003 MT 31, 314 M 212, 64 P3d 1038 (2003).

Interpretation of Uniform Building Code Ordinance Matter of Law — Violation May Constitute Negligence Per Se: Chambers was injured after falling into a pit at the Helena garbage transfer station. A Uniform Building Code (UBC) ordinance required guardrails on most landings and ramps, except on the loading side of loading docks. The District Court held that the pit did not fit the loading dock exception and that the city's failure to install guardrails was negligence per se. The city argued that interpretation of the UBC ordinance was a finding of fact that the trial court improperly removed from the province of the jury because the court made credibility determinations and weighed the evidence. Chambers maintained that, like statutes, interpretation of a UBC ordinance is a question of law. The Supreme Court agreed with Chambers. Violation of a UBC ordinance is a matter of law, violation of which may constitute negligence per se, and in this case, it was undisputed that the city was subject to the ordinance and that there were no guardrails installed along the transfer station pit. Chambers was a member of the class of persons that the ordinance was designed to protect and met the elements of negligence per se. Further, pursuant to Montana pattern jury instructions, it is up to the jury to decide whether a statute has been violated. Once the trial court determined that the city was negligent per se, the jury instruction should not have been given because there were no more undisputed issues regarding violation of the statute. The only remaining determination was whether the loading dock exception applied to the pit, and that was a statutory interpretation for the court to decide. The plain language of the UBC ordinance and its exception did not include a pit design such as that used at the transfer station, so the trial court correctly interpreted the ordinance and held the city negligent per se. Chambers v. Helena, 2002 MT 142, 310 M 241, 49 P3d 587 (2002).

Negligence Per Se — New Trial Granted When Evidence Insufficient to Justify Jury Verdict: Chambers was injured after falling into a pit at the Helena garbage transfer station. The District Court found the city to be negligent per se and submitted the issues of causation and damages to the jury. The jury found that the city's negligence was not the cause of the accident. The District Court held that the verdict was based on insufficient evidence because the city was negligent per se and that Chambers fell over an edge that was required to have a fall protection device, so Chambers was granted a new trial on causation. The city appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Chambers met the burden of showing that the city's negligence was a substantial factor in the accident, and there was insufficient evidence for the jury to find otherwise, so a new trial on causation was proper. Chambers v. Helena, 2002 MT 142, 310 M 241, 49 P3d 587 (2002). See also Brockie v. Omo Constr., Inc., 255 M 495, 844 P2d 61 (1992).

Whether Activity Considered Abnormally Dangerous Question of Law — Trial Court Required to Consider Restatement Factors in Determination of Abnormally Dangerous Activity: The question of whether an activity is abnormally dangerous, thereby subjecting the operator to strict liability, is a question of law for courts to decide. The question cannot rest on one factor alone; rather, the court must consider all the factors in Restatement (Second) of Torts 520 (1976). Even though one factor may ultimately weigh more heavily than the others, a trial court must at least explicitly consider all the factors listed in the Restatement, and failure to independently consider those factors constitutes an incomplete determination of whether the activity is abnormally dangerous as a matter of law, warranting remand. Chambers v. Helena, 2002 MT 142, 310 M 241, 49 P3d 587 (2002), clarifying Matkovic v. Shell Oil Co., 218 M 156, 707 P2d 2 (1985), and Dvorak v. Matador Serv., Inc., 223 M 98, 727 P2d 1306 (1986).

Sufficient Evidence That Damages Not Result of State Negligence to Submit Case to Jury — Judgment as Matter of Law Not Appropriate: Pula sued in federal court, alleging negligence against the city of Chinook, Blaine County, three Chinook police officers, the County Sheriff, and the state, related to an incident of rape of Pula by another inmate while Pula was incarcerated in Blaine County jail. All the claims were settled except the claim against the state, which was dismissed and subsequently refiled in state District Court. At trial, Pula moved for judgment as a matter of law, contending that the state presented no admissible evidence to counter the claims of duty, breach, causation, and damages. The District Court denied the motion and sent the case to the jury. The jury found that the state was negligent, but that its negligence was not the cause of Pula's injuries. Pula appealed the denial of the motion for judgment as a matter of law, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The state presented substantial evidence that the damages suffered by Pula were not the result of the state's negligent acts or omissions, and the evidence was sufficient to submit the case to the jury, so judgment as a matter of law was not appropriate. Pula v. St., 2002 MT 9, 308 M 122, 40 P3d 364 (2002).

Liability of Parent for Child's Injury to Third Person Based on Parent's Failure to Exercise Reasonable Care of Child — Restatement of Torts as Reasonable Expression of Parent's Duty — Kienenberger Reversed: Crisafulli attended an auction conducted by Bass's auction company and was injured when Bass's son rode a bicycle through the crowd of spectators while handling auction tickets and hit Crisafulli. The District Court applied J.L. v. Kienenberger, 257 M 113, 848 P2d 472 (1993), granting summary judgment to Bass on grounds that parents have no independent duty to control the behavior of their children. Crisafulli contended that Kienenberger was distinguishable and that the District Court should instead have followed Restatement (Second) of Torts 316 (1965). That section of the Restatement does not make a parent liable for the torts of a child, but imposes liability on the parent for the parent's own failure to exercise a duty of reasonable care, then narrowly defines the circumstances under which that duty arises by requiring that the parent knows of the ability to control the child and understands the necessity for doing so, and then further conditions liability on a finding that the parent's failure created an unreasonable risk of harm to a third person. The Supreme Court concluded that imposition of liability under these limited and exceptional circumstances, in the absence of any legislative policy to the contrary, was a reasonable expression of a parent's duty in Montana and adopted the Restatement, overruling Kienenberger to the extent that it was inconsistent. The District Court's order granting summary judgment to Bass on the issue was reversed. Crisafulli v. Bass, 2001 MT 316, 308 M 40, 38 P3d 842 (2001). See also Mitchell v. Wiltfong, 604 P2d 79 (Kans. Ct. App. 1979), and Styren Farms, Inc. v. Roos, 2011 MT 299, 363 Mont. 41, 265 P.3d 1230.

Denial of General Liability Coverage Based on Liquor Liability Exclusion — Failure to Raise Alternative Negligence Theory — Summary Judgment Proper: Cusenbary was injured when a bar patron drove a car through the wall of Mortensen's tavern. Mortensen was covered by USF&G Co. under a general liability policy, but the insurance included a liquor liability exclusion. When Mortensen tendered the claim to USF&G Co. for defense, the company denied coverage and refused to defend based on the exclusion, so Cusenbary's claim was tried to a jury and Mortensen was found guilty of negligence (see Cusenbary v. Mortensen, 1999 MT 221, 296 M 25, 987 P2d 351 (1999)). Mortensen then assigned all rights to coverage under the general liability policy to Cusenbary. Cusenbary then sued USF&G Co., contending that the company had a duty to indemnify Mortensen for negligent behavior in management of the bar, separate from the negligent conduct of serving alcohol to an intoxicated patron, because the separate conduct was not excluded by the liquor liability exclusion. The District Court granted summary judgment for USF&G Co., holding that the separate conduct related directly to the improper service or sale of alcohol and that Mortensen failed to set forth evidence supporting an alternative negligence theory, so as a matter of law, Mortensen's judgment was excluded by the express language of the policy. The Supreme Court affirmed, citing Sheffield Ins. Co. v. Lighthouse Properties, Inc., 234 M 395, 763 P2d 669 (1988). All claims and arguments at trial were related to Mortensen's negligence in serving alcohol, and no assertion was ever made that the proposed evidence was relevant to any other theory of negligence or to any other theory. All of the claims arose from serving alcohol and were thus excluded from coverage. Cusenbary v. USF&G Co., 2001 MT 261, 307 M 238, 37 P3d 67 (2001).

Absence of Genuine Issue of Material Fact Regarding Negligent Installation of Septic System — Summary Judgment Proper: Prior to the Sherrards' purchase of property for building a home and horse arena, they had the county sanitarian issue a resite evaluation that addressed ground water levels and designated appropriate septic systems to service each building. The sanitarian approved a permit for a shallow cap system for the horse arena. The system was subject to state regulations requiring minimum 12-inch trenches and prohibiting installation where the water table reached within 5 feet of the natural ground surface. The Sherrards contracted with Prewett to install the system. Prewett dug a hole for the septic tank, dug 36-inch deep trenches for lateral pipes in the drain field, placed washed gravel and pipes in the trenches, and prepared the system for inspection. The next day, the new county sanitarian inspected the system, found standing ground water in the septic tank and observed water in the lateral trenches, fixed the ground water level at 27 inches below the natural surface, and because the ground water level was too high to meet county and state requirements, revoked the Sherrards' permit. The Sherrards then sued Prewett for negligent installation of the system. The District Court determined that because the ground water depth was less than 5 feet and the shallow cap system could not meet regulations, the object of the contract between the parties was illegal and the Sherrards could not proceed with their contract-based claim. Therefore, the court concluded that no genuine issue of material fact existed and granted summary judgment for Prewett, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The Sherrards' bare denial of the 27-inch ground water level and their speculation about the ground water level at the time that the original permit was issued, were insufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact because they constituted mere denial, speculation, or conclusory statements. The material fact was not whether the ground water level was precisely 27 inches below the surface, but whether it was 5 feet or more below the surface as required by state regulations. To prevail, the Sherrards needed to come forward with substantial and material evidence with regard to the ground water level at the horse arena, but they failed to do so, so summary judgment was proper. Sherrard v. Prewett, 2001 MT 228, 306 M 511, 36 P3d 378 (2001).

No Assumption of Risk in Purchase of Damaged Real Property — Summary Judgment Reversed: Koelzer owned an inn by a mining and power generation site near Colstrip. Koelzer discovered that mining activity had damaged the inn and filed a complaint in 1994 against the mining and power generation companies, but did not pursue the damage claim. In 1996, Dale and Shawonda Lewis approached Koelzer about purchasing the inn, and the issue of the damages and Koelzer's claim came up. The Lewises inspected the inn and discovered additional damages, which led Koelzer to reassert the damage claim, but the claim was again unresolved. Nevertheless, the Lewises offered to buy the inn, and title was eventually conveyed to Dale's parents, who were able to secure financing. Koelzer notified the companies by fax that the inn had been sold and requested that the companies work with Dale on the structural damage discussed in the past. About 1 year later, Dale received an estimate of $91,000 to repair the damages and filed a nuisance complaint and a complaint seeking compensation from the companies for damages, after the Lewises acquired title to the inn in 1998. The District Court dismissed the Lewises' claim for damages arising after title was acquired on grounds that the Lewises had assumed the risk of those damages when they purchased the property. On appeal, the District Court was reversed on the issue of postpurchase damages. Under Mead v. M.S.B., Inc., 264 M 465, 872 P2d 782 (1994), assumption of risk is no longer available as a separate affirmative defense in negligence cases. Instead, that defense now merges into the general liability scheme of comparative negligence in which the conduct of the parties is compared based on evidence of negligence and contributory negligence, as established by reasonable and prudent person standards. Here the questions of whether the Lewises negligently purchased an inn that they knew might be subject to future damages or whether those future damages were sufficiently foreseeable to be taken into account in the purchase price of the inn were questions of fact for a jury and should not have been dismissed by summary judgment. Lewis v. Puget Sound Power & Light Co., 2001 MT 145, 306 M 37, 29 P3d 1028 (2001).

Failure to Show That but for Negligent Legal Advice, Deportation Could Have Been Successfully Defended — Professional Negligence Claim Properly Dismissed: Fang, a Chinese citizen and lawful permanent United States resident employed by Montana State University-Bozeman, was involved in a domestic dispute with his wife that resulted in charges of assault. Fang consulted Bock, who worked at the university legal services offices, regarding the possibility of deportation. Bock in turn consulted Rice, an attorney who had made a presentation on immigration law at a seminar that Bock had attended, and asked if a misdemeanor domestic abuse charge was grounds for deportation. Rice informed Bock that the federal Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) would not initiate deportation proceedings until the commission of two misdemeanors. Bock relayed that information to Fang, who relied at least in part on the information and pleaded guilty to family member assault. However, in 1996, Congress enacted a new immigration statute (see 8 U.S.C. 1227(a)(2)(E)(i)) that provides that domestic violence convictions are deportable offenses. Several weeks after pleading guilty, Fang received a notice to appear and face deportation. After hiring new counsel, Fang moved to withdraw the guilty plea. The District Court granted the motion on grounds that the failure of Bock to inform Fang of the possibility of removal to China constituted ineffective assistance of counsel, and the INS agreed to suspend further proceedings until the resolution of charges against Fang. Based on the advice of his new counsel, Fang reached a plea agreement with the Gallatin County Attorney to plead guilty to an amended charge of assault. Following conviction, the INS again moved to deport Fang, and based on the fact that assault also constitutes a crime of violence against a protected person pursuant to federal immigration law, Fang was ordered to be deported. Fang then filed a complaint against Bock, seeking damages for professional negligence and negligent supervision and treble damages under 37-61-406. The District Court applied Lorash v. Epstein, 236 M 21, 767 P2d 1335 (1989), and determined that Fang could not satisfy the last element of the test for a prima facie case of professional negligence, which requires a showing that but for such negligence, Fang would have successfully defended against the offense. The court then summarily dismissed the case. Fang appealed, contending that because of Bock's advice, he was exposed to the possibility of removal from this country and had to spend substantial amounts of money to avoid that exposure. Pursuant to Lorash, the Supreme Court had to determine whether Fang would have been exposed to the possibility of removal from this country with or without Bock's advice, in light of the offenses to which Fang pleaded guilty, the statutory basis for deportation, and the immigration judge's explanation for the deportation order. Under either charge, Fang was guilty of an offense of violence against a protected person—his wife. The title of the offense was irrelevant because for purposes of immigration law, misdemeanor assault is considered just as much a crime of violence against a spouse as family member assault. Further, Fang's argument that a different result was compelled by the fact that the assault conviction was subsequently expunged based on a deferred prosecution also failed because under federal case law, no effect is to be given to a state action that purports to remove a guilty plea or conviction by operation of a state rehabilitative statute. Thus, Fang's situation was a result of the conduct that he admitted and was the same following correct legal advice as it was following Bock's incorrect advice. Although Bock misinformed Fang, that advice did not lead to Fang's predicament, nor would the money that he spent to have the first conviction set aside have changed the result. Fang could not prove that but for negligent legal advice he could have avoided deportation, and Bock was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fang v. Bock, 2001 MT 116, 305 M 322, 28 P3d 456 (2001).

Defaulting Buyer Under Unambiguous Written Contract Cannot Rely Upon Expectations Not Covered by Contract to Avoid Contract — Disposition of Downpayment Amounts Paid and Due — County Not Liable for Negligent Misrepresentation as to Recordability of Deeds and Seller's Title Insurer Not Liable for Loss in Marketability: Documents for the sale and purchase of two sections of land unambiguously showed, and it was undisputed, that the resale of 20-acre parcels by the buyer, the immediate acceptance by the county of 20-acre resale deeds of a type that would make subdivision review unnecessary, and the ability to resell without having to undergo subdivision review were not parts of the bargain. The parties knew that these things were contemplated, but the documents did not refer to them or make them a part of the contract. Before the contract was made, the county indicated that it would accept the 20-acre resale deeds. The deal fell through when the county changed its position after the contract was signed. The buyer failed to pay the whole downpayment, and the seller terminated the contract and kept the paid portion of the downpayment. Precontract discussions on the matter must be disregarded as parol evidence because the documents were unambiguous and did not refer to the matter. The buyer was not entitled to rescind the contract and have the paid portion of the downpayment returned based on mutual mistake or failure of consideration. There was no mutual mistake because the parties knew that it was not a certainty that the county would accept the deeds. There was no failure of consideration because the resale, county acceptance of the deeds, and avoidance of subdivision review were not part of the written contract. In addition, the need for a subdivision review would not make the land unmarketable; at most, its market value decreased and it would take longer to sell it. Furthermore, a party in default is not entitled to rescission. The seller was entitled to terminate the contract. The seller was also entitled to keep an amount of the paid portion of the downpayment equal to the amount by which the contract price for the land exceeded the market value of the land at the time of the breach. The seller was not entitled to keep the remainder of the paid portion of the downpayment or to a judgment for the unpaid portion of the downpayment because the contract did not provide for that remedy. The county was not liable in tort to the seller for negligent misrepresentation, and the buyer's title insurance company was not liable to the seller for the loss in the marketability of the land caused by the need for subdivision review. Yellowstone II Dev. Group, Inc. v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 2001 MT 41, 304 M 223, 20 P3d 755 (2001), overruled in Mary J. Baker Revocable Trust v. Cenex Harvest St., Cooperatives, Inc., 2007 MT 159, 338 M 41, 164 P3d 851 (2007), to the extent that Yellowstone II held that the determination of whether a term in a contract is ambiguous is not a question involving parol evidence.

Negligence and Strict Liability Action for Damages by Pesticide Not Preempted by FIFRA — McAlpine Overruled: Plaintiffs brought an action for damages allegedly suffered when a pesticide was applied at the building where they worked. The District Court granted summary judgment for the pesticide manufacturer on the basis that the claims were preempted by the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (FIFRA) and McAlpine v. Rhone-Poulenc Ag Co., 285 M 224, 947 P2d 474 (1997), because all of the theories of liability were based on inclusions in or omissions from the pesticide labels. In particular, 7 U.S.C. 136v(b) provides that a state may not impose or continue in effect any requirement for labeling or packaging in addition to or different from those required under the federal law. On appeal, the Supreme Court overruled McAlpine and instead applied Medtronic, Inc. v. Lohr, 518 US 470 (1996), concluding that Congress, through FIFRA, intended only to preempt states from imposing positive law requirements in the form of regulations and laws and did not intend to extinguish damage remedies under state common law. The word "requirements" in section 136v(b) means enactments of positive law by legislative or administrative bodies, not state law damage actions. The case was reversed and remanded for further proceedings. Sleath v. West Mont Home Health Serv., Inc., 2000 MT 381, 304 M 1, 16 P3d 1042, 57 St. Rep. 1629 (2000).

Open-Range No Duty Rule — Applies Only to Relationship Between Livestock Owner and Other Landowners: Larson-Murphy struck a bull while driving at night and suffered extensive injuries. The lower court dismissed her case with no accompanying legal memorandum providing a legal basis for its decision. However, the bull's owners had argued that they could not be held liable based on the no duty rule of open-range law. The Supreme Court stated that open-range laws allow certain livestock to legally occupy a highway but that state laws also permit a motorist to legally occupy the same highway. There is no statute that provides that a livestock owner is not liable for injuries suffered by motorists colliding with the livestock owner's livestock. Therefore, the Supreme Court stated that any assertion of legal duties arising from the legal relationship between owners of livestock and motorists is beyond the scope of Montana's statutory open-range doctrine. The Supreme Court held that because both livestock and a motorist may have an equal right to lawfully occupy a highway, the livestock owner and the motorist each owe the other a legal duty to use the highway so as not to injuriously interfere with the other's right of use. Therefore, ascertaining the precise standard of care that each owes the other must be viewed in light of the circumstances under which the harm occurs. The Supreme Court reversed the directed verdict in favor of the defendants and remanded the case for a determination by the trier of fact to determine if the bull's owners had violated their duty of care to Larson-Murphy. Larson-Murphy v. Steiner, 2000 MT 334, 303 M 96, 15 P3d 1205, 57 St. Rep. 1411 (2000).

Real Estate Sale — Acknowledgment of Offer as Acceptance of Offer — Elements of Negligent Misrepresentation Fulfilled: When Frye, a real estate broker, brought May a written offer to purchase May's gas station, Frye asked that May initial the offer to show acknowledgment or receipt of the offer, and May initialed the line reading "Seller Signature". At some later time, some of the terms of the rejected offer were incorporated into a counteroffer above May's initials, and the counteroffer was accepted by the buyer without May's knowledge. May consummated the sale and then sued Frye. The Supreme Court held that the District Court improperly granted Frye's motion for summary judgment and held that May had shown sufficient evidence of negligent misrepresentation to survive a motion for summary judgment. May v. ERA Landmark Real Estate of Bozeman, 2000 MT 299, 302 M 326, 15 P3d 1179, 57 St. Rep. 1256 (2000).

Damages for Tort of Spoliation of Evidence: The speculative nature of damages is inherent in the uncertainties of proof relevant to the tort of spoliation of evidence, but the speculative nature of such damages should not bar recovery. Thus, the interest of plaintiff to recover the entire amount of damages that would have been received if the underlying action had been pursued successfully must be balanced with defendant's interest in not providing plaintiff with a windfall. Taking these interests into consideration, it is necessary that damages be discounted to account for the uncertainties. Therefore, damages arrived at through reasonable estimation based on relevant data should be multiplied by the significant possibility that plaintiff would have won the underlying suit had the spoliated evidence been available. Oliver v. Stimson Lumber Co., 1999 MT 328, 297 M 336, 993 P2d 11, 56 St. Rep. 1303 (1999). See also Holmes v. Amerex Rent-A-Car, 710 A2d 846 (D.C. 1998).

Independent Tort of Intentional Spoliation of Evidence Recognized — Elements: After a review of decisions in those jurisdictions that have recognized the tort of spoliation of evidence, the Supreme Court adopted the tort of intentional spoliation of evidence, although that tort was not present in this case. Elements of intentional spoliation of evidence include: (1) the existence of a potential lawsuit; (2) defendant's knowledge of the potential lawsuit; (3) the intentional destruction of evidence designed to disrupt or defeat the potential lawsuit; (4) disruption of the potential lawsuit; (5) a causal relationship between the act of spoliation and the inability to prove the lawsuit; and (6) damages. As with negligent spoliation of evidence, a plaintiff bringing a claim for intentional spoliation of evidence is required to prove a causal relationship between the act of spoliation and the inability to prove the lawsuit and damages. Oliver v. Stimson Lumber Co., 1999 MT 328, 297 M 336, 993 P2d 11, 56 St. Rep. 1303 (1999). See also Coleman v. Eddy Potash, Inc., 905 P2d 185 (N. Mex. 1995).

Independent Tort of Negligent Spoliation of Evidence Recognized — Elements: After a review of decisions in those jurisdictions that have recognized the tort of spoliation of evidence, the Supreme Court adopted the tort of negligent spoliation of evidence. Elements of negligent spoliation include: (1) the existence of a potential civil action; (2) a legal or contractual duty to preserve evidence relevant to that action; (3) destruction of that evidence; (4) significant impairment of the ability to prove the potential civil action; (5) a causal connection between the destruction of the evidence and the inability to prove the lawsuit; (6) a significant possibility of success of the potential civil action if the evidence were available; and (7) damages. As with intentional spoliation of evidence, a plaintiff bringing a claim for negligent spoliation of evidence is required to prove a causal relationship between the act of spoliation and the inability to prove the lawsuit and damages. Oliver v. Stimson Lumber Co., 1999 MT 328, 297 M 336, 993 P2d 11, 56 St. Rep. 1303 (1999). See also Holmes v. Amerex Rent-A-Car, 710 A2d 846 (D.C. 1998).

Mutual Mistake of Fact Sufficient to Set Aside Release in FELA Action: A release in an action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA), 45 U.S.C. 51 through 60, may be set aside on the basis of mutual mistake of fact in executing the release. A mutual mistake of fact is sufficient to avoid a release only when the mistake goes to the nature of the injury and the mistaken belief is held by both parties. In the present case, Bevacqua signed releases purporting to settle all injury claims, but was lulled into signing because of repeated assurances by doctors who examined him at the employer's request, assured him that nothing was wrong, and authorized him to return to work. Under FELA, this mutual mistake of fact was sufficient to set aside the releases. Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273, 55 St. Rep. 469 (1998), following *Callen v. Failure of Stucco Product — No Agency Relationship Between Contractor-Applicator and Manufacturer — No Negligence or Strict Liability Found — Leave to Amend Complaint Denied: Sunset Point Partnership (Sunset), a condominium developer, sued Wolstein, d/b/a Stuc-O-Flex Systems; Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc.; and Melton and Fischer, d/b/a Melton Fischer Construction (Melton/Fischer). Sunset's complaint alleged breach of contract, breach of warranty, indemnity, negligence, and strict liability in tort because a stucco-like product that Wolstein, as a subcontractor with Melton/Fischer, applied to the exterior of condominium buildings developed problems. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc., on each of the five counts in Sunset's complaint, holding that there was no evidence of negligence or breach of contract or warranty by Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc., and no evidence of agency between Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc., and Melton/Fischer. Sunset appealed. Citing previous decisions by it to the effect that in order for there to be ostensible agency the principal and not the agent must have taken steps to lead a third party to the belief that an agency relationship existed, the Supreme Court held that there was no evidence of actual or ostensible agency between Melton/Fischer and Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc., As to Sunset's claim of negligence, the Supreme Court answered Sunset's argument that Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc., was negligent in failing to provide adequate training, supervision, and instruction to Wolstein by pointing out that Sunset's complaint only alleged negligence against the defendants in the "manner in which they applied" Stuc-O-Flex and that there was no record evidence indicating a duty on the part of Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc., to train and supervise Wolstein. Concerning Sunset's claim for strict liability, the Supreme Court noted that Sunset had only alleged defective application of Stuc-O-Flex and had not alleged a defective product. Moreover, the Supreme Court pointed out that Sunset's own expert testified that: (1) there was nothing inherently defective about Stuc-O-Flex; (2) Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc., did not sell a "system" consisting of the material on which the product was applied and the product, but only sold the product itself; and (3) therefore only that product was guaranteed. In its review of the District Court's denial of Sunset's motion to amend its complaint to add the seller of the product as a defendant, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's decision, pointing out that the litigation was 2 years old by the time that Sunset made its untimely motion to amend. Sunset Point Partnership v. Stuc-O-Flex Int'l, Inc., 1998 MT 42, 287 M 388, 954 P2d 1156, 55 St. Rep. 141 (1998).

Premises Liability — Distinctions Between Natural and Altered Conditions Overruled — Restatement of Torts 343A(1) Adopted — Limberhand Followed: Donna took her child to school and, because it was winter and a plowed path led from her car to an entrance to the school, walked over the snow-covered path to reach the school. On her return over the same path, Donna slipped and fell, injuring herself. She sued the school district for negligence. The District Court granted the school district's motion for summary judgment, applying the standard for premises liability involving distinctions between altered and natural conditions upon the premises. The Supreme Court held that its past opinions had created confusion in the law of premises liability because those cases made artificial distinctions between natural and altered accumulations of snow and ice that are open and obvious and noted that the Supreme Court had previously decided other cases setting forth the standard that a property owner is absolved from liability because a dangerous condition upon the premises is open and obvious. The Supreme Court adopted the standard contained in section 343A(1) of the Restatement (Second) of Torts (1965) and discussed in Limberhand v. Big Ditch Co., 218 M 132, 706 P2d 491 (1985), that a landowner must be determined to have acted reasonably under the circumstances in order to escape liability. In so doing, the Supreme Court expressly overruled contrary language in Regedahl v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 149 M 229, 425 P2d 335 (1967), Luebeck v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 152 M 88, 446 P2d 921 (1968), Willis v. St. Peter's Hosp., 157 M 417, 486 P2d 593 (1971), Uhl v. Abrahams, 160 M 426, 503 P2d 26 (1972), *Demaree v. Because the snow-covered path was known and obvious to Donna and because there was no testimony contradicting testimony for the school district that the path and sidewalks were appropriately maintained for persons going to and coming from the school, the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the District Court. Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748, 54 St. Rep. 1422 (1997).

Defendant's Statements at Trial Not Binding Judicial Admission — New Trial Not Warranted: The defendant's testimony at trial that the automobile accident was all the defendant's fault was either a legal conclusion based on the defendant's understanding of the facts as the defendant knew them or was the expression of the defendant's personal opinion. Therefore, the statements were not statements of fact and were not judicial admissions. The District Court did not err in denying the plaintiffs' alternative motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and new trial. DeMars v. Carlstrom, 285 M 334, 948 P2d 246, 54 St. Rep. 1178 (1997), followed in Papich v. Quality Life Concepts, Inc., 2004 MT 116, 321 M 156, 91 P3d 553 (2004), and *Sunset Irrigation District v. Damage to Crops by Herbicide — Extent of Preemption by FIFRA — Claims for Breach of Express and Implied Warranty Not Preempted — Negligence and Strict Liability Preempted — Remedy for Prevention of Discovery by Summary Judgment: McAlpine applied Weedone LV6, a herbicide manufactured by Rhone-Poulenc and distributed by Ben Taylor, to crops of barley and spring wheat. After several weeks of cool morning temperatures, McAlpine noticed damage to his crops, which experts from Montana State University (now Montana State University-Bozeman) and the Montana Department of Agriculture said was caused by cool temperatures after application of the herbicide. The McAlpines brought a civil action against Rhone-Poulenc, claiming damages from negligence, breach of express and implied warranty, and strict liability. The District Court granted summary judgment for the defendants on the basis that the plaintiffs' claims were based on deficiencies in the label on Weedone LV6 and that those claims were preempted by the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (FIFRA). Citing Wis. Pub. Intervenor v. Mortier, 501 US 597 (1991), and Cipollone v. Liggett Group, Inc., 505 US 504 (1992), the Supreme Court interpreted the FIFRA preemption statement, 7 U.S.C. 136v(b), to preempt only claims based upon negligence in labeling and not to preempt the appellants' claims based upon either express or implied warranty or strict liability. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that the appellants must be given the opportunity to prove that Rhone-Poulenc and Ben Taylor breached their warranty by designing, manufacturing, and marketing a product that was inherently defective and that the same defendants are strictly liable for designing, manufacturing, and marketing an unreasonably dangerous product. In response to Rhone-Poulenc's argument that the McAlpines failed to offer any evidence to defeat summary judgment, the Supreme Court pointed out that because the District Court granted summary judgment, the McAlpines were prevented from conducting complete discovery and that until discovery was completed, it was premature for the Supreme Court to conclude that the McAlpines' evidence was insufficient. McAlpine v. Rhone-Poulenc Ag Co., 285 M 224, 947 P2d 474, 54 St. Rep. 1123 (1997), overruled in Sleath v. West Mont Home Health Serv., Inc., 2000 MT 381, 304 M 1, 16 P3d 1042, 57 St. Rep. 1629 (2000), holding that state common-law negligence and strict liability claims based on or implicating pesticide labels are not preempted by FIFRA. Following the 1997 remand, the McAlpines settled with Ben Taylor, Inc., and proceeded to trial against Rhone-Poulenc on a theory of strict products liability, claiming that Weedone LV6 was a defective product because its propensity to damage or destroy crops in conjunction with cold weather was a danger outside the expectations of the ordinary consumer. Rhone-Poulenc acknowledged that the crop damage was caused by the phenoxy herbicide, but argued that the damage was not unreasonably dangerous and that liability exists only when a product is sufficiently dangerous. The trial court instructed the jury that it must find that the herbicide was in a "defective condition unreasonably dangerous", rather than merely in a defective condition, and the jury returned a verdict for Rhone-Poulenc. The McAlpines appealed. The Supreme Court previously held in McJunkin v. Kaufman, 229 M 432, 748 P2d 910 (1987), that a product is defective if it is unreasonably dangerous, but a plaintiff is not required to show that a product is defective and also that it is unreasonably dangerous, because establishing that a product is unreasonably dangerous is merely a means of proving that it is defective. Thus, the "defective condition unreasonably dangerous" language creates a vague and imprecise dual test and should not have been submitted to the jury because it was not plain, clear, and concise. The jury should have been required to find merely that the product was in a defective condition, so the case was again remanded. Further, the decision in Sleath, id., also applied on remand, so evidence of the product label was admissible in further proceedings. McAlpine v. Rhone-Poulenc Ag Co., 2000 MT 383, 304 M 31, 16 P3d 1054, 57 St. Rep. 1644 (2000).

Bank Loan for Purchase of Contaminated Real Property — Negligent Misrepresentation, Constructive Fraud, and Punitive Damages — Summary Judgment Reversed: After the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Department of Environmental Quality) discovered that soil had been contaminated with gasoline leaking from Habets' and other service station gas tanks in violation of 75-10-715, Habets entered into a buy-sell agreement for sale of his service station to Mattingly. Mattingly then met with First Bank Vice President Joe Dolan to secure financing. Dolan conducted a physical inspection of the service station property in order to obtain an impression of the value of the property and to determine whether First Bank would be secure in its loan. At the time of his inspection, Dolan was aware of the contamination caused by the service station gas tanks. The loan was approved by the First Bank loan committee made up of Dolan, Susan Hemmer, the bank president, and John Mulcare, an owner of another service station, all three of whom were aware of the contamination but did not discuss it with Mattingly or the loan committee. Mattingly learned of the contamination much later when he tried to sell the station. He then brought an action against Habets, Habets' realtor, and First Bank, alleging constructive fraud, negligence, and negligent misrepresentation by First Bank and seeking punitive damages. The District Court granted summary judgment to First Bank on all issues. The Supreme Court, following Kitchen Krafters, Inc. v. Eastside Bank of Mont., 242 M 155, 789 P2d 567 (1990), which was overruled, with regard to the elements for a claim of negligent misrepresentation against a financial institution, in Morrow v. Bank of America, N.A., 2014 MT 117, 375 Mont. 38, 324 P.3d 1167, stated that a threshold issue in a claim of negligent misrepresentation is whether the defendant made a representation as to a past or existing material fact upon which the claim is based. The Supreme Court pointed out that except for some basic facts involving the existence of the contamination, Dolan's visit to the gas station, and the action of the loan committee, the parties disagreed over the nature, scope, and import of the valuation of the property; disagreed whether First Bank's appraisal of the property and approval of the Mattingly loan constituted a representation as to the value of the property; and, if it was a representation, disagreed over whether Mattingly relied upon that representation. Citing McGregor v. Cushman/Mommer, 220 M 98, 714 P2d 536 (1986), the Supreme Court also stated that special circumstances may support a claim for constructive fraud when a party makes misleading statements concerning the physical condition or commercial value of real estate and pointed out that a jury might find that representations by First Bank with regard to the property would constitute these "special circumstances". Concerning the requirement of 28-2-406 that in a claim for constructive fraud one party must gain an advantage over the other, the Supreme Court cited the fact that upon closing the sale of the station to Mattingly, First Bank was able to pay off a loan for the property made to Habets and that in making the loan to Mattingly, First Bank was able to collect interest income from the loan. Because there were facts in dispute as to the foregoing issues, the Supreme Court held that summary judgment was not appropriate and that the District Court erred in granting summary judgment in favor of First Bank. Because 27-1-221 allows punitive damages against a party guilty of actual fraud or malice, the Supreme Court also reversed the District Court on the issue of punitive damages. Mattingly v. First Bank of Lincoln, 285 M 209, 947 P2d 66, 54 St. Rep. 1116 (1997).

Premises Liability — Conflict Between Deposition and Affidavit of Same Witness — Affidavit Not Based Upon Personal Knowledge: Herron sued Columbus Hospital, alleging that he had been injured by a malfunctioning automatic door in the hospital's professional building and that the hospital had knowledge of the defective condition of the door. The hospital moved for summary judgment, and Herron opposed the motion. In support of his opposition to the hospital's motion, Herron filed an affidavit of Lyle Skinner, a maintenance employee, alleging that the hospital knew of the defective condition of the doors. The hospital then deposed Skinner and filed parts of his deposition in further support of its motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court pointed out that Skinner's affidavit and his deposition conflicted as to what doors in which building Skinner had performed maintenance on and also conflicted as to which doors Skinner had discussed with his superiors. Skinner's affidavit also stated that the doors would frequently malfunction, but his deposition showed that Skinner had not worked on the doors in question. Citing In re Estate of Michael v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 264 M 261, 871 P2d 272 (1994), the Supreme Court held that when there is a conflict between an affidavit and the same witness's deposition, the affidavit statements do not raise a genuine issue of material fact for the purposes of summary judgment proceedings. Regarding those portions of the affidavit that did not conflict with the deposition, the Supreme Court, relying upon Cooper v. Sisters of Charity, 265 M 205, 875 P2d 352 (1994), held that an affidavit submitted for the purpose of summary judgment must be based upon personal knowledge of the affiant and that if the affidavit does not meet that requirement, it does not raise a genuine issue of material fact. Because Herron provided no evidence to resist the hospital's motion for summary judgment other than Skinner's affidavit, the Supreme Court held that Herron had not met his burden in the summary judgment proceeding and held that the District Court had properly granted the hospital's motion. Herron v. Columbus Hosp., 284 M 190, 943 P2d 1272, 54 St. Rep. 840 (1997).

Disposal of Section 1983 Federal Claim Requiring Gross Negligence Not Res Judicata as to Ordinary Negligence Claim Under State Law in State Court: To support her 42 U.S.C. 1983 claim in the federal courts, which denied the claim, plaintiff had to prove gross negligence. Therefore, those courts' findings that the conduct of the police officer who shot and killed her husband was reasonable and not a breach of duty did not constitute res judicata with respect to plaintiff's negligence action under state law against the same parties arising from the shooting. In the state court action, plaintiff only had to prove ordinary negligence, which was not considered or decided in the federal courts. Scott v. Henrich, 283 M 97, 938 P2d 1363, 54 St. Rep. 512 (1997).

Expert Testimony Not Needed on Insurance Agent's Standard of Care in Procuring Requested Insurance: In an insureds' negligence and contract action against an insurance agency for failure to procure requested coverage, an insurance agent testified as to the duties and responsibilities of an insurance agent when asked to procure specific insurance. Expert testimony on the insurance agent's standard of care and breach of the standard was not required. Fillinger v. NW. Agency, Inc., of Great Falls, 283 M 71, 938 P2d 1347, 54 St. Rep. 500 (1997).

Assumption of Risk Inapplicable to Contract Action — Harmless Error: Garrison sued Averill, a real estate broker, in contract for defrauding him by failing to disclose the true facts concerning an easement on real property purchased by Garrison. The District Court found that Garrison had "assumed the risk" of subsequent damages by failing to read the terms of the easement. The Supreme Court held that assumption of risk is ordinarily a tort term associated with personal injury actions, but held that because the District Court did not continue with any more analysis or conclusion after its reference to assumption of risk and because the District Court found that Averill did not breach his duty of care to Garrison, the reference by the District Court to assumption of risk was harmless error. Garrison v. Averill, 282 M 508, 938 P2d 702, 54 St. Rep. 454 (1997).

Evidence by Both Parties Regarding Elements of Liability — Summary Judgment Improper: When both parties produced evidence and testimony to support their arguments concerning the elements of negligence in contention, a summary or directed verdict was inappropriate. Because the determinative question was one of fact and both sides presented facts in support of their positions, the conflicting evidence on questions regarding duty, breach of duty, and causation precluded summary judgment in light of genuine issues of material fact. Contreras v. Vannoy Heating & Air Conditioning, Inc., 270 M 393, 892 P2d 557, 52 St. Rep. 246 (1995).

Standard of Care for Nonemergency Dental Care: Burlinghams sued dentist Mintz, alleging that Mintz's negligence caused Candance Burlingham's injury. Applying the standard of care set out in Negaard v. Feda, 152 M 47, 446 P2d 436 (1968), the District Court excluded two of Burlinghams' standard of care experts, one a suburban dentist from St. Louis and the other an oral surgeon from Albany, Oregon, on grounds that the experts had no idea of the standard of care in Eureka, Montana, or a similar community, and lacking expert testimony, the court summarily dismissed plaintiffs' case. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the standard of care enunciated in Negaard was no longer appropriate for nonemergency dental care in Montana. The Supreme Court noted that the foundation for testimony must necessarily include evidence that the witness is familiar with the standard of care at the time when and the place where the alleged act of negligence occurred. Expert testimony may consist of direct or indirect knowledge of the standard of care in the community where the act occurred or in a similar community and may be based on evidence that the standard of care for a procedure at issue is the same in all communities, regardless of size or location. If the basis of the witness's familiarity with the applicable standard of care is that the standard is uniform throughout the country and evidence to the contrary is presented, then the issue raised by the contrary evidence goes to the weight of the witness's testimony but does not preclude its admission. In the case at hand, Burlinghams presented two appropriate experts who were familiar with the applicable nonemergency standard of care for dentists in the community, by either direct or indirect knowledge, thereby meeting their burden of establishing a prima facie case. The District Court erred by excluding the experts and granting summary judgment. Burlingham v. Mintz, 270 M 277, 891 P2d 527, 52 St. Rep. 181 (1995), overruling, to the extent in conflict, Negaard v. Feda, 152 M 47, 446 P2d 436 (1968).

Board Action in Seeking Injunction — No Intentional Interference With Business: The Board of Dentistry received a complaint from a dentist who claimed Kandarian was practicing dentistry without a license by performing temporomandibular joint dysfunction evaluations. The Board discussed the complaint in an open meeting, releasing the contents of the complaint to the press at the same time, and subsequently filed for an injunction seeking to enjoin Kandarian from the practice. The Board's action was not tortious but rather was authorized by statute. Thus, Kandarian's claim that the Board negligently released the contents of its complaint, negligently filed suit, and intentionally interfered with his business was properly dismissed by summary judgment. St. v. Kandarian, 268 M 408, 886 P2d 954, 51 St. Rep. 1381 (1994).

Mental Health Professional Testimony on Behavior Modification and Evaluation of Medical Emergency — Jury Verdict of No Negligence Supported by Substantial Evidence: Joshua died after suffering a seizure while in the custody of the Sheriff in a soft cell. Buhr, his personal representative, sued the county, the Sheriff, and others. At trial, Buhr's expert testified that anyone observing Joshua lying in the soft cell should have realized that he was having a medical emergency. However, a mental health professional and a Deputy Sheriff testified that they both observed Joshua and that what they saw was consistent with Joshua's being asleep. Another mental health professional also testified on the issue of the use of police officers to use force in putting Joshua in a police car in an attempt to break Joshua's violent outbursts, saying that those actions were an acceptable behavior modification approach. On both issues, the Supreme Court found that there was substantial credible evidence to support the jury's verdict. Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994).

Assumption of Risk Not Separate Defense in Ski Area Operator Negligence Action: The defense of assumption of risk, other than as specified in Montana's skier responsibility statutes, is not a separate defense in a claim by skiers for injuries that are alleged to result from the negligence of ski area operators. Mead v. M.S.B., Inc., 264 M 465, 872 P2d 782, 51 St. Rep. 348 (1994).

Salesman Personally Liable for Negligent Misrepresentation: Plaintiffs purchased a subdivision parcel from defendant and subsequently contracted with defendant, a sales agent for a home center, to purchase a modular home to be placed on the parcel. Relying on defendant's advice and assurance that the property would be properly prepared, plaintiffs installed the home on concrete piers instead of a full foundation. Upon learning from engineering reports that extensive water damage to the home was caused by foundation instability, plaintiffs filed an action, alleging that the defendant had falsely misrepresented that the land had been properly prepared prior to installation of the home. Affirming the District Court decision, the Supreme Court ruled that the defendant was personally liable for selling property as appropriate for a modular home and for unreasonably representing to plaintiffs that the home was suitable for the pier-type foundation. Williams v. DeVinney, 259 M 354, 856 P2d 546, 50 St. Rep. 831 (1993).

Charitable Immunity Rejected: Montana has never adopted the doctrine of charitable immunity, and the District Court properly declined to allow the defense in a church member's action against a church for breach of fiduciary duty. Davis v. Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, 258 M 286, 852 P2d 640, 50 St. Rep. 535 (1993).

No Applicability to "Management" of Children: This section does not impose liability on a parent for negligent "management" of children. J.L. v. Kienenberger, 257 M 113, 848 P2d 472, 50 St. Rep. 182 (1993), and distinguished, with regard to the inapplicability of the standard to civil rights cases brought under Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, in Vortex Fishing Sys., Inc. v. Foss, 2001 MT 312, 308 M 8, 38 P3d 836 (2001).

Failure to Show Negligent Delay by Hospital of Request for Ambulance: A jury finding that the hospital did not negligently fail to timely transmit an ambulance request to the fire department was adequately supported by a hospital employee's testimony that she immediately relayed a telephoned request for an ambulance to the fire department and by evidence that the ambulance arrived about 7 minutes after victim collapsed. Testimony to the contrary was subject to contradictions. Hogan v. Flathead Health Center, Inc., 255 M 388, 842 P2d 335, 49 St. Rep. 997 (1992).

Limited Application of Nondelegable Duty Exception to Respondeat Superior Doctrine: Application of the nondelegable duty exception to the respondeat superior doctrine is limited to instances of safety in which the subject matter is inherently dangerous. The Supreme Court declined to modify the presently accepted version of the doctrine by adopting the exception, set out in section 214 of Restatement (Second) of Agency, that a master or other principal who is under a duty to provide protection for or to have care used to protect others or their property and who confides the performance or duty to a servant or other person is subject to liability to others for harm caused to them by the failure of the agent to perform the duty. Noting that there are several reasons for and against extending the liability of an employer when an intentional tort is committed only because or by virtue of the employment situation, the court opted to leave adoption of such a major doctrinal change to the Legislature. Maguire v. St., 254 M 178, 835 P2d 755, 49 St. Rep. 688 (1992), followed in Estate of Strever v. Cline, 278 M 165, 924 P2d 666, 53 St. Rep. 576 (1996).

Landowner Derivation of Economic Benefit as Voiding Liability Limitation: A private tennis/basketball court was not open to the public, and a valuable consideration was paid by members of a home owner's association for its use. The economic benefit derived by the association placed the property beyond the scope of the recreational use statute, 70-16-302, the clear intent of which is to grant a landowner relief from liability to any person gratuitously present for a recreational purpose. The valuable consideration need not flow directly from the injured party to the landowner in order to retain tort liability; the consideration need only be paid by someone to create access to the property for the ultimate user. Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158, 49 St. Rep. 473 (1992).

Substantial Evidence of Negligence:

Although in conflict with defendant's version of facts, substantial evidence existed to support plaintiff's claim. It was foreseeable that a freestanding light standard could fall and injure anyone in its path and that someone could act with a minimal amount of force in a manner to intervene with the standard's stability. The Supreme Court will not retry a case simply because the jury chooses to believe one side's evidence to the exclusion of the other and will not disturb a jury's negligence findings unless the results are inherently impossible to believe. Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158, 49 St. Rep. 473 (1992).

In reviewing the trial of a suit for damages suffered in a car accident, the Supreme Court refused to overturn a jury verdict of no negligence by respondent when the evidence indicated the following: (1) the respondent was traveling at a reasonable rate of speed; (2) respondent's headlamps were on and aimed properly; and (3) appellant and his companion were walking on the road, facing away from traffic, and wearing dark clothes on a dark night. Kukuchka v. Ziemet, 219 M 155, 710 P2d 1361, 42 St. Rep. 1916 (1985).

Statements of Counsel as Binding on Client — New Trial Warranted: In closing arguments during a negligence trial that resulted in a jury finding of no negligence on behalf of defendant, defense counsel made unequivocal statements which, when taken in full context with the rest of his closing argument, constituted judicial admissions on the issue of negligence of his client that had the effect of a confessory pleading. Noting that the admissions of counsel are binding on the client, the Supreme Court granted a new trial, notwithstanding counsel's assertion that the statements were merely suggestions on the theory of the case. Kohne v. Yost, 250 M 109, 818 P2d 360, 48 St. Rep. 886 (1991), distinguished in DeMars v. Carlstrom, 285 M 334, 948 P2d 246, 54 St. Rep. 1178 (1997), and Weaver v. St., 2013 MT 247, 371 Mont. 476, 310 P.3d 495. See also Bilesky v. Shopko Stores Operating Co., LLC, 2014 MT 300, 377 Mont. 58, 338 P.3d 76, in which the Supreme Court ruled that statements made during pretrial briefing constituted judicial admissions, warranting a new trial.

No Negligence Regarding Repayment Term of Loan: Borrowers argued that bank was negligent in structuring a loan, but they cited no authority to support the proposition that a negligence action may be based on a repayment term of a lawful contract bargained between two parties. Absent the existence of a fiduciary duty, which bank did not have with respect to the loan, the law does not support such a claim. Richland Nat'l Bank & Trust v. Swenson, 249 M 410, 816 P2d 1045, 48 St. Rep. 730 (1991).

Negligence Action for Failure to Prevent Suicide — General Rule — Exceptions: Plaintiff brought a wrongful death action founded on negligence for failure of defendant to prevent the suicide of plaintiff's uncle. Regarding civil liability for suicide, the Supreme Court expressly adopted the general rule set out in 41 ALR 4th 353 that negligence actions for the suicide of another will generally not lie because the act of suicide is considered a deliberate intervening act exonerating the defendant from legal responsibility. The two narrow exceptions deal with: (1) causing another to commit suicide; and (2) allowing the imposition of a duty to prevent suicide but only in a custodial situation where suicide is foreseeable. A landlord-tenant relationship did not meet the criteria for establishing a custodial relationship. Krieg v. Massey, 239 M 469, 781 P2d 277, 46 St. Rep. 1839 (1989), cited in Marazzato v. Burlington N. RR Co., 249 M 487, 817 P2d 672, 48 St. Rep. 804 (1991). See also Gourneau v. Hamill, 2013 MT 300, 372 Mont. 182, 311 P.3d 760.

Relationship of Negligent Misrepresentation to Fraud and Negligence Liability: Depending on circumstances, negligent misrepresentation can give rise to a case of constructive fraud under 28-2-406. Yet under Restatement (Second) of Torts 552, a negligent misrepresentation may be insufficient to constitute actual or constructive fraud but nevertheless give rise to negligence liability under this section through the want of ordinary care of the defendant in managing his property or person. In the latter case, the test of liability is the exercise of reasonable care and is subject to comparative negligence. Bottrell v. Am. Bank, 237 M 1, 773 P2d 694, 46 St. Rep. 561 (1989), followed in Mattingly v. First Bank of Lincoln, 285 M 209, 947 P2d 66, 54 St. Rep. 1116 (1997).

Establishment of Professional Negligence Action Against Attorney — Proof Required: To establish a professional negligence action, the plaintiff must prove that the professional owed him a duty and that the professional failed to live up to that duty, causing damages to the plaintiff. In pursuing a negligence or breach of contract action against an attorney, the plaintiff must initially establish the existence of an attorney-client relationship. The plaintiff must then establish that the acts constituting negligence or breach of contract occurred, proximately causing damages to the plaintiff. Finally, the plaintiff must establish that but for the negligence or breach of contract, the client would have been successful in the prosecution or defense of the action. Lorash v. Epstein, 236 M 21, 767 P2d 1335, 46 St. Rep. 151 (1989), followed in Merzlak v. Purcell, 252 M 527, 830 P2d 1278, 49 St. Rep. 139 (1992), Kane v. Miller, 258 M 182, 852 P2d 130, 50 St. Rep. 488 (1993), Fang v. Bock, 2001 MT 116, 305 M 322, 28 P3d 456 (2001), and Babcock Place Ltd. Partnership v. Berg, Lilly, Andriolo, & Tollefsen, P.C., 2003 MT 111, 315 M 364, 69 P3d 1145 (2003), and citing Christy v. Saliterman, 179 NW 2d 288 (Minn. 1970).

Liquor Liability Provision Unambiguous — No Separate Theory of Negligence: The plaintiff, injured by an automobile driver served liquor by the defendant tavern owner, sued the owner on negligence theory. The plaintiff argued that the tavern owner's liability based on negligence is distinguished from liability based on the sale or service of liquor. The court disagreed, holding that summary judgment was proper because the insurance policy provision excluding liquor liability coverage was clear and unambiguous and all claims against the tavern owner relate to the sale or service of liquor. Sheffield Ins. Co. v. Lighthouse Properties, Inc., 234 M 395, 763 P2d 669, 45 St. Rep. 1999 (1988). An amended complaint was later filed that attempted to set forth an additional theory of liability not based on the sale of alcohol. The theory was that an ordinary duty of due care was owed the bar patron based on his status as business invitee and that the bartender breached that duty by allowing patron to leave the bar in the company of an obviously intoxicated person. However, the amended complaint was still based on actions related to the sale of alcohol and was therefore barred by res judicata. The District Court did not err when it held that the insurance policy also excluded liability for acts alleged in the amended complaint. Sheffield Ins. Co. v. Lighthouse Properties, Inc., 252 M 321, 828 P2d 1369, 49 St. Rep. 274 (1992), followed in Cusenbary v. USF&G Co., 2001 MT 261, 307 M 238, 37 P3d 67 (2001).

Power Company Liable for Poorly Maintained Outside Wire That Caused Fire That Destroyed Building: In an action against the power company for negligently inspecting and maintaining a power line to a building, resulting in a fire that destroyed the building, substantial evidence existed to support the jury verdict and to deny a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Two tenants testified that just before the fire their lights flickered and their radio was making static, the two tenants and another person witnessed arcing, a tenant and fireman witnessed a loose wire, an expert testified that the fire was caused by the wire, and pictures appeared to show that other power lines in the area were poorly maintained. Stout v. Mont. Power Co., 234 M 303, 762 P2d 875, 45 St. Rep. 1926 (1988).

Real Estate Transaction — Liability for Latent and Obvious Defects: Defendant bought a house without knowledge of latent defects and sold it to plaintiff, who purchased under the same circumstances. Defendant asserted plaintiff's unreasonable failure to investigate constituted contributory negligence. The District Court allowed plaintiff recovery for latent defects but denied recovery for obvious defects, which distinction properly addressed plaintiff's contributory negligence. By carefully apportioning the burden of the defects between the parties, the court properly balanced the responsibilities of buyer and seller in the transaction. Wagner v. Cutler, 232 M 332, 757 P2d 779, 45 St. Rep. 1092 (1988).

Unlawful Conduct Not Necessarily Bar to Negligence Action: Plaintiff and defendant were engaged in the illegal activity of hunting coyotes from defendant's airplane without a proper permit when the plane crashed. The pari delicto doctrine, found in 1-3-215, does not bar plaintiff's negligence action against the defendant as pilot. Conduct prohibited by law that is not strongly condemned by public policy as a matter of serious criminal conduct or delinquency may not be sufficient to bar recovery. The hunting statute in issue is not of a type involving conduct of which the law so strongly disapproves as a matter of public policy that access to the courts should be denied for tort purposes. In light of this holding, the court overrules two prior Montana cases that relied on the pari delicto doctrine to bar lawsuits. The two are Melville v. Butte-Balaklava Copper Co., 47 M 1, 130 P 441 (1913), and Jackson v. Lomas, 60 M 8, 198 P 434 (1921). Waller v. Engelke, 227 M 470, 741 P2d 385, 44 St. Rep. 1241 (1987). However, see Patten v. Raddatz, 271 M 276, 895 P2d 633, 52 St. Rep. 439 (1995), in which the court applied the doctrine of in pari delicto to bar recovery when prostitution and drug consumption constituted the primary purpose of the contract.

Nuisance Action — Contributory Negligence as Defense: The Supreme Court cited 58 Am. Jur. 2d Nuisances 221 in holding that contributory negligence can be a defense in a nuisance action. Wilhelm v. Great Falls, 225 M 251, 732 P2d 1315, 44 St. Rep. 211 (1987), clarified, with regard to the distinction between an absolute nuisance and a qualified nuisance, in Barnes v. Thompson Falls, 1999 MT 77, 294 M 76, 979 P2d 1275, 56 St. Rep. 321 (1999).

No Invasion of Legally Protected Interest — Damage Award Reversed: The Supreme Court, applying the test outlined in Johnson v. Super Save Mkt., Inc., 211 M 465, 686 P2d 209, 41 St. Rep. 1495 (1984), reversed the award of damages as they related to emotional distress because the evidence failed to disclose any invasion of a legally protected interest in bringing about the severe emotional distress. Proto v. Elliot, 222 M 293, 722 P2d 625, 43 St. Rep. 1358 (1986).

Interspousal Tort Immunity Abolished: The defense of interspousal tort immunity is abolished, overruling previous decisions to the contrary. The historical reasons for retention of immunity, i.e., unity of husband and wife as one person, family harmony, and the possibility of fraud and collusion, are no longer valid. Miller v. Fallon County, 222 M 214, 721 P2d 342, 43 St. Rep. 1185 (1986).

Pre-Injury Release Form: The trial court committed reversible error by granting summary judgment to defendant employer on the basis of a pre-injury release form signed by the plaintiff. The fact the waiver is a private contract is not determinative in this case. Such waiver is invalid and violates public policy if it seeks to exempt one from liability for those actions specified in 28-2-702. Miller v. Fallon County, 222 M 214, 721 P2d 342, 43 St. Rep. 1185 (1986). See also McDermott v. Carie, LLC, 2005 MT 293, 329 M 295, 124 P3d 168 (2005).

Sudden Emergency Instruction — No Longer to Be Used: The Supreme Court held that the sudden emergency instruction may no longer be used because the instruction, which provided a test for actions done in the course of a sudden emergency, added nothing to the established law applicable to any negligence case and might only leave an impression in the minds of jurors that a driver is somehow excused from the ordinary standard of care because an emergency existed. Simonson v. White, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986).

Negligence Special Verdict Form — Harmless Error on Strict Liability Instruction: Plaintiff contended that it was error for the trial court to give a particular instruction as he contended it was an incomplete and misleading statement of the law of strict liability. The Supreme Court held that any alleged error was harmless because the plaintiff did not object to a special verdict form that required the jury to decide the case on negligence alone. Kleinsasser v. Superior Derrick Serv., Inc., 218 M 371, 708 P2d 586, 42 St. Rep. 1662 (1985). See also Drilcon, Inc. v. Roil Energy Corp., Inc., 230 M 166, 749 P2d 1058, 45 St. Rep. 114 (1988).

Abnormally Dangerous Activity — Strict Liability for Resulting Personal Injury: A person who carries on an abnormally dangerous activity is strictly liable for harm to persons resulting from such activity, although the person engaged in such activity has exercised the utmost care to prevent the harm. In so holding, the Supreme Court adopted the general rule set forth in Restatement (Second) of Torts, section 519 (1976), and also adopted the definition of abnormally dangerous activity contained in section 520 of the Restatement. Matkovic v. Shell Oil Co., 218 M 156, 707 P2d 2, 42 St. Rep. 1482 (1985).

Personal Injury From Abnormally Dangerous Activity — Contributory Negligence No Defense: The doctrine of contributory negligence is not a defense to an action to recover damages for personal injury arising from an abnormally dangerous activity conducted by a defendant. Matkovic v. Shell Oil Co., 218 M 156, 707 P2d 2, 42 St. Rep. 1482 (1985).

Sufficient Proof of Existence, Cause, and Permanency of Physical Injury: In a tort suit for damages for a back injury, plaintiff was competent to testify as to his past and present condition and his testimony was sufficient for the jury to determine whether there was an injury. However, the testimony was not sufficient to prove permanency or cause of the injury when his testimony was disputed and permanency and cause were not apparent from the injury itself. Since the trial court gave the issue of permanency to the jury with insufficient proof, error occurred and a new trial on the issue of damages was ordered. Cain v. Stevenson, 218 M 101, 706 P2d 128, 42 St. Rep. 1428 (1985), followed in Moralli v. Lake County, 255 M 23, 839 P2d 1287, 49 St. Rep. 872 (1992).

Respondeat Superior — Accident Caused by Insurance Agent: Defendant insurance company's agent participated in a Dillon rodeo, went to a barbecue at his Dillon home, and in the evening consumed alcohol at several Dillon bars. On the way home from the bars, he struck plaintiff while driving an auto the agent leased from insurer's wholly owned service company, which had a common board of directors with insurer. Plaintiff sued defendants under respondeat superior. There was evidence agent sold insurance as a result of participating in group recreational and social activities. Summary judgment for insurer was refused because there was a fact question as to whether agent's activities during the night in question were within the course and scope of his work as an insurance agent. However, summary judgment was granted in favor of the service company as there was no evidence that agent was acting as the agent of the service company at the time of the accident. Vollmer v. Bramlette, 594 F. Supp. 243, 41 St. Rep. 1964 (D.C. Mont. 1984).

Test of Whether Emotional Distress Merits Compensation: The Supreme Court adopted the species of case approach that requires a factual analysis of each case to determine whether the alleged "emotional distress" merits compensation. In determining whether the distress is compensable absent a showing of physical or mental injury, the court looks to whether tortious conduct results in a substantial invasion of a legally protected interest and causes a significant impact upon the person of plaintiff. In the instant case, plaintiff's right to liberty was violated when he was arrested, handcuffed, frisked, booked, and charged for issuing a bad check for which he had made restitution months before. Johnson v. Super Save Markets, Inc., 211 M 465, 686 P2d 209, 41 St. Rep. 1495 (1984).

Malpractice in Prescribing Medication — Where Tort Is Committed: A Fergus County resident traveled to Yellowstone County, where a Billings doctor prescribed medicine that allegedly caused seizures and other injuries. She sued the doctor for malpractice. Any malpractice occurred in Yellowstone County, where the diagnosis and prescription were made. That is where the tort was committed, not in Fergus County where the medicine was taken and the injury occurred. Therefore, proper venue was in Yellowstone County. The mere allegation that the doctor failed to monitor the patient's use of the medication did not on its face allege that a tort was committed in Fergus County. Howard v. Dooner Laboratories, Inc., 211 M 312, 688 P2d 279, 41 St. Rep. 1381 (1984), distinguished in Carter v. Nye, 266 M 226, 879 P2d 729, 51 St. Rep. 781 (1994).

Motor Vehicle Accident — Sudden Emergency Instruction Usually Improper: As defendant passed codefendant driving downhill, codefendant speeded up and defendant cut in front of him while only 20 feet from an oncoming vehicle. Codefendant overturned in the other lane, and the next two oncoming vehicles were involved in a collision with him. Defendant's proposed sudden emergency doctrine instruction was properly refused. The instruction should not be given in an ordinary motor vehicle accident case. It is unnecessary and confusing, and the ordinary rules of negligence are applicable and sufficient. Further, a test for giving the instruction is that the perilous situation was not created by the person confronted by it and whom the instruction favors; in this case, whether defendant was negligent was very much in dispute, and the instruction was a comment on the evidence as it implied no negligence on his part. Ewing v. Esterholt, 210 M 367, 684 P2d 1053, 41 St. Rep. 1095 (1984).

Negligence Instruction Commenting on Evidence — Theory of Instruction Covered by Other Instructions: Defendant's instruction based on the theory that codefendant was 100% negligent was denied because the court believed it commented on the evidence. Other instructions adequately covered the theory that codefendant was 100% negligent, and the jury found the codefendant 100% negligent. The instruction was thus properly denied. Ewing v. Esterholt, 210 M 367, 684 P2d 1053, 41 St. Rep. 1095 (1984).

Legal Malpractice Complaint — Upheld Under Liberal Rules of Pleading: In a legal malpractice suit, the defendant-attorney moved to dismiss the action on the grounds that the complaint did not state a cause of action because the complaint did not specifically allege that had it not been for the negligence of the attorney, the client would have won the lawsuit. The District Court dismissed the case. The Supreme Court reversed, ruling that under Montana's liberal rules of pleading, the complaint was sufficient. R.H. Schwartz Constr. Specialties, Inc. v. Hanrahan, 207 M 105, 672 P2d 1116, 40 St. Rep. 1926 (1983).

Directed Verdict for Plaintiff Upheld: A directed verdict was proper when no evidence was presented at the trial to prove that the defendant breached any duty which caused the damages complained of by the plaintiff. Robertson v. Hughes, 204 M 515, 668 P2d 1025, 40 St. Rep. 1041 (1983).

Limitations of Actions — Nuisances: If a nuisance is abatable, it cannot be considered a permanent nuisance. Therefore the nuisance is of a temporary and continuous character and gives rise to a separate cause of action each time it causes damage. The applicable Statute of Limitations is 2 years. Haugen Trust v. Warner, 204 M 508, 665 P2d 1132, 40 St. Rep. 1036 (1983). In Burley v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2012 MT 28, 364 Mont. 77, 273 P.3d 825, the Supreme Court, relying upon Restatement (Second) of Torts 839, adopted a reasonably abatable standard for continuing torts. See also Christian v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2015 MT 255, 380 Mont. 495, 358 P.3d 131.

Prior Guilty Plea — Irrelevant to Misconduct or Punitive Damages: Defendant and plaintiff, who was 16, were drinking and driving at a high rate of speed in Anaconda. Defendant was driving plaintiff's car when he lost control and hit a house. Plaintiff was severely injured. At a trial for damages based on negligence, plaintiff's counsel sought to introduce evidence of defendant's having pleaded guilty to two prior incidents of supplying intoxicating beverages to minors. Defendant's attorney moved for a motion in limine, which was denied. The jury awarded compensatory and punitive damages. On appeal the Supreme Court reversed, holding that the evidence of appellant's prior guilty pleas did not have the tendency to make the existence of his alleged willful and wanton misconduct on the night in question more or less probable. The evidence was irrelevant to establishing misconduct on the night in question or for establishing a basis for punitive damages. The fact that defendant had purchased alcohol for minors did not go toward establishing his operation of the vehicle in a reckless fashion, the act complained of. Therefore the evidence was also irrelevant toward showing a basis for punitive damages. Derenberger v. Lutey, 207 M 1, 674 P2d 485, 40 St. Rep. 902 (1983), overruled on another point in Martel v. Mont. Power Co., 231 M 96, 752 P2d 140, 45 St. Rep. 460 (1988).

No Interspousal Immunity for Property Damages: There is no interspousal tort immunity for property damage claims by one spouse against the other. Norick v. Dove Constr., 204 M 57, 662 P2d 1318, 40 St. Rep. 660 (1983).

No Parental Immunity: A parent is not immune from a negligence suit brought against him by a child under the age of emancipation injured in the operation of a motor vehicle. Transamerica Ins. Co. v. Royle, 202 M 173, 656 P2d 820, 40 St. Rep. 12 (1983).

Defendant Entirely Liable — Evidence Not Permitting Apportionment: Plaintiff injured his back when the seat in the locomotive he was operating broke and threw him backward. Plaintiff had had two prior back injuries which had been successfully treated. Defendant objected to the following instruction, contending it was an improper statement of the law: "Where a pre-existing condition exists which has been aggravated by the accident, it is your duty, if possible, to apportion the amount of disability and pain between that caused by the pre-existing condition and that caused by the accident. But if you find that the evidence does not permit such an apportionment, then the defendant is liable for the entire disability." The Supreme Court found the instruction proper, relying on an analogous situation in Azure v. Billings, 182 M 234, 596 P2d 460 (1979), and held that a plaintiff should not go uncompensated should the evidence not permit an apportionment of injuries and damages. Callihan v. Burlington N., Inc., 201 M 350, 654 P2d 972, 39 St. Rep. 2158 (1982), followed in Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273, 55 St. Rep. 469 (1998).

Assumption of Risk Standards Not to Be Included in Negligence Instructions: A jury instruction in a negligence action provided that one aspect of contributory negligence was whether or not plaintiff had assumed the risk. Another instruction provided the traditional "reasonable and prudent person" standard for negligence. Because assumption of risk is governed by a subjective standard and traditional negligence is governed by an objective standard, the two instructions were contradictory. The doctrine of assumption of risk is no longer applicable in Montana. Jury instructions may not contain any of the subjective standards of assumption of risk. Abernathy v. Eline Oil Field Services, Inc., 200 M 205, 650 P2d 772, 39 St. Rep. 1688 (1982), followed in Mead v. M.S.B., Inc., 264 M 465, 872 P2d 782, 51 St. Rep. 348 (1994).

Conflicting Special Verdicts — New Trial Ordered: After becoming stuck in a snowdrift on the highway, the plaintiff got out of his vehicle to shovel it out, leaving his son in the vehicle. Plaintiff was injured and his son was killed when their vehicle was struck by defendant's truck. The jury found that the defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries but not the son's death. Because two conflicting verdicts were reached from the same evidence, a new trial was required. Abernathy v. Eline Oil Field Services, Inc., 200 M 205, 650 P2d 772, 39 St. Rep. 1688 (1982).

Dangerous Instrumentalities — Negligence Proved by Circumstantial Evidence: While a coemployee was showing plaintiff a large projectile, it exploded and both of plaintiff's legs were severed. Plaintiff gave circumstantial evidence that the projectile was similar to those used at State's National Guard firing range, that the coemployee collected junk items and had found the projectile, that other persons had found similar shells at the range, and that there were no other sources where coemployee could have found the projectile. Defendants gave evidence that the projectile had not been used at the range. It could not be said there was a complete absence of proof preventing plaintiff from having a jury resolution of his suit against the Guard, the State, and the State's Department of Military Affairs. A jury of 12 could infer without resort to speculation that the projectile came from the firing range and was not compelled to accept defendants' testimony, which could be properly weighed against plaintiff's proof, leaving the jury free to make the factual determination. There was substantial credible evidence to affirm the finding that the projectile was negligently left at the range. Jacques v. Mont. Nat'l Guard, 199 M 493, 649 P2d 1319, 39 St. Rep. 1565 (1982).

Auto Negligence Suit — Admission of Reinjury Evidence — Denial of Evidence on Workers' Compensation Claim for Reinjury: Evidence that personal injury tort claimant reinjured his back at work some 10 months after accident in which his back was injured as a result of defendant's alleged negligence was properly admitted into evidence, but evidence that he had a pending workers' compensation claim arising from the reinjury was properly excluded by the trial judge. Allers v. Willis, 197 M 499, 643 P2d 592, 39 St. Rep. 745 (1982).

Dismissal of Battery Counterclaim — Sole Evidence Claimant's Self-Contradicted Testimony: Dismissal of battery counterclaim made in personal injury case arising from motor vehicle collision was not reversible error where defendant's only evidence on the alleged battery was his own testimony, his testimony was contradicted by his statements in a deposition, and he had refused a discovery request to produce his physician's medical report and had not called his physician to the stand. The counterclaim was frivolous, fanciful, gauzy, or merely suspicious, even when construed in the light most favorable to defendant. Allers v. Willis, 197 M 499, 643 P2d 592, 39 St. Rep. 745 (1982).

Excessiveness of Damages — Award for Back Injury and Loss of Earnings: Award of approximately $75,000 for impairment of earning capacity, $52,000 compensatory damages, and $15,000 punitive damages to plaintiff whose auto was hit from the rear on an icy road by defendant who was intoxicated did not constitute excessive damages. Plaintiff alleged that his back and neck were permanently injured and that as a result he would experience pain for the rest of his life whenever he participated in strenuous activities. He had been a manual laborer all his adult life, was out of work for 6 months after the accident, and fell and reinjured his back 9 months after the collision and had not returned to work as of the date of the opinion on appeal, April 15, 1982. Allers v. Willis, 197 M 499, 643 P2d 592, 39 St. Rep. 745 (1982).

Negligence in Performing Contractual Duty — No Privity Required: A prime contractor contracted separately with a steel supplier to supply steel and with a subcontractor to erect the steel. Because the supplier was delayed in delivering the steel, the subcontractor suffered financial losses. The subcontractor could properly maintain an action against the supplier for negligence in the performance of its duties arising out of the steel supply contract with the prime contractor. Privity of contract was not required. Hawthorne v. Kober Constr. Co., 196 M 519, 640 P2d 467, 39 St. Rep. 294 (1982), followed in Tynes v. Bankers Life Co., 224 M 350, 730 P2d 1115, 43 St. Rep. 2243 (1986), and Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248, 51 St. Rep. 623 (1994), in which it was held that a third-party contractor may successfully recover for purely economic loss against a project engineer or architect when the design professional knew or should have foreseen that the particular plaintiff or an identifiable class of plaintiffs was at risk in relying on the information supplied.

Jury Instruction — Attorney Negligence: In action for damages arising when the wrong person was sued in a prior action and the suit was pursued to default judgment against plaintiff, who notified defendant that it had sued the wrong person but did not defend the suit, the District Court did not err in giving the standard negligence instruction instead of defendant's requested instruction tailored to the duty owed by an attorney. Shahrokhfar v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 194 M 76, 634 P2d 653, 38 St. Rep. 1669 (1981).

Availability of Wrongful Death Remedy Under Former Law: The defendants in this wrongful death and survival action owned a rental house leased to the plaintiff. The plaintiff's husband died of an electrical shock received through the plumbing of the house. The plaintiff appealed the granting of a summary judgment motion to the defendants. The Residential Landlord and Tenant Act was adopted after this case arose, so its adoption of the doctrine of implied warranty of habitability was inapplicable. The Supreme Court here examined case law prior to the new statute and overruled a holding in the Dier case that if the landlord fails to repair, after notice, the tenant may himself repair, within a certain limit, or move out; but he has no redress in damages for injury to person or property consequent upon the landlord's failure to repair. That holding was not applicable to cases involving tenant suits for personal injuries against a landlord. Citing Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const., the court said that it would be patently unconstitutional to deny a tenant all causes of action for personal injuries or wrongful death arising out of the alleged negligent management of rental premises by a landlord. A repair and deduct statute provides no alternative remedy for damages caused by personal injury or wrongful death. The duty of care in section 58-607, R.C.M. 1947, now 27-1-701, was held applicable. This is a duty to exercise ordinary care in the management of the premises to avoid exposing persons thereon to an unreasonable risk of harm, subject to the defenses of contributory negligence or assumption of risk. Corrigan v. Janney, 192 M 99, 626 P2d 838, 38 St. Rep. 545 (1981).

Corporate Defendant's Right of Indemnity From Joint Tortfeasor — Fraudulent Misrepresentation: Where the plaintiff sued for damages caused by the defendants' fraud in the execution of a contract for deed for the sale of a shale and concrete block plant, alleging misrepresentation by the defendant company and its president, and the record showed that both the company's plant manager and its president made misrepresentations concerning the status of the company's compliance with air and water pollution control laws, the court erroneously required the company's president to indemnify the company for the judgment against it. Because the company is responsible as a principal for the fraudulent misrepresentations of its plant manager, the company and its president were joint tortfeasors and were in pari delicto. As a general rule, one compelled to pay damages for the negligent or tortious act of another is not entitled to indemnity from the latter where both parties are joint tortfeasors or in pari delicto. Poulsen v. Treasure St. Indus., Inc., 192 M 69, 626 P2d 822, 38 St. Rep. 218 (1981), followed in St. v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2009 MT 414, 353 M 497, 220 P3d 1115 (2009).

Damage to Prescriptive Easement — Injunction Denied: The District Judge properly denied the plaintiffs' request for an injunction and their claim for damages for rutting and disrepair of the roadway where the testimony showed that plaintiffs kept the roadway up despite use of it by defendants and defendants' use of the roadway was consistent with defendants' interest in the land. Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981).

Negligence in Maintenance of an Irrigation Ditch: Although plaintiffs' contention that an owner of an irrigation ditch is not an absolute insurer is correct, where the testimony shows: (1) that there were erosion and cutting away of the cross-claimants' soil on both sides of the ditch; (2) that there had been "bad washing"; and (3) that it would take $5,500 to make the irrigation system suitable to prevent further washing on cross-claimants' land and to repair past damage, there was substantial evidence to support the findings of negligence and damages of $5,500. Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981).

Availability of Affirmative Defenses to Railroad — Absolute Liability: Plaintiff was employed by a subsidiary of Burlington Northern and was injured in an accident involving Burlington's railroad cars. The Supreme Court decided the federal Safety Appliance Act applied despite the fact the railroad cars involved in the accident were on a siding where loading operations were handled by the subsidiary. Noting that the U.S. Supreme Court has declared that the question of whether a railroad can assert contributory negligence or assumption of risk as defenses in a case involving a nonrailroad employee depends entirely on state law, the Supreme Court cited its 1966 holding that, where the theory of absolute liability applies, liability is established when it is proved that a statute has been violated and there is a proximate cause connection between the violation and the resulting injuries. Proximate cause in a case under the Safety Appliance Act is decided using the definition that prevails under state law. Comparing the 1966 case under the Scaffolding Act with this case, the Supreme Court denied the defendant the two defenses. The Supreme Court also noted that railroad employees are entitled to a more liberal standard imposing liability than nonrailroad employees. Reynolds v. Burlington N., Inc., 190 M 383, 621 P2d 1028, 37 St. Rep. 1883 (1980).

Evidence of Prior Accidents: Evidence of prior accidents, while inadmissible for the purpose of proving negligence, is nevertheless admissible for the purpose of showing the existence of a danger or defect and notice thereof. Such evidence of prior accidents, however, must show situations substantially similar to or not too remote from the accident in question, although absolute identity of circumstances is not necessary. Here, where there was no offer of proof as to what the prior accidents would have shown, the Supreme Court could not determine admissibility, and therefore no reversible error was committed. Runkle v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982 (1980). See also Kissock v. Butte Convalescent Center, 1999 MT 322, 297 M 307, 992 P2d 1271, 56 St. Rep. 1288 (1999).

Postaccident Installation of Signals: In a negligence action concerning a train-truck collision, the trial court excluded evidence of the railroad later placing electric signal devices at the crossing where the accident occurred. In this case, experts testified for the railroad that the crossing was not extrahazardous. The fact the automatic signals were installed on the crossing after the accident would have been relevant for the purpose of impeachment as well as to show feasibility. It was prejudicial error to exclude this evidence. Runkle v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982 (1980).

Standard of Care of Youthful Motorist: A youth driving an automobile is held to the same standard of care as an adult, which is the degree of care that would be exercised by a reasonable and prudent operator under the same circumstances. In Montana, the general rule is that after a child has reached the age of 14 years he is presumed, as a matter of law, to be capable of contributory negligence. Wollaston v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 192, 612 P2d 1277 (1980).

Intentional Torts Arising During Worker's Compensation Settlement: An injured employee brought suit against the workers' compensation insurance carrier and the insurance adjuster for the intentional torts of fraud, conversion, and infliction of emotional distress. The suit was brought after the injured employee prevailed in his claim for workers' compensation. The Supreme Court said this suit is not barred by the exclusivity provision of 39-71-411. The claimed injury is distinct from the original on-the-job injury; it occurred after the employment relation terminated and it is not covered by the Workers' Compensation Act. Hayes v. Aetna Fire Underwriters, 187 M 148, 609 P2d 257 (1980), followed in Spadaro v. Midland Claims Serv., Inc., 227 M 445, 740 P2d 1105, 44 St. Rep. 1221 (1987).

Jury Instruction — Assumption of Risk: Plaintiff contends that it was error to instruct the jury concerning assumption of risk because the facts of this case do not involve the type of negligent behavior to which assumption of risk applies. Plaintiff contends assumption of risk applies only to a relationship between a plaintiff and a defendant, not between a plaintiff and a third party. The instruction was a correct statement of the law as it existed at the time. Conflicting evidence was admitted at trial as to whether plaintiff assumed the risk of his injuries by riding with an incompetent driver, so the instruction was properly given. Penn v. Burlington N., Inc., 185 M 223, 605 P2d 600 (1980).

Jury Instruction — Evidence to Be Offered: Plaintiff contends that it was error to fail to instruct the jury that the Public Service Commission was negligent as a matter of law for failing to act on the petition of the Rosebud County Commissioners requesting installation of warning devices at the railroad crossing where the accident occurred. Such an instruction would have injected an issue upon which neither side offered any evidence at trial. It is not error to refuse an instruction that is not supported by the evidence. Penn v. Burlington N., Inc., 185 M 223, 605 P2d 600 (1980).

Negligent Entrustment: Negligent entrustment, a theory which provides that an actor is negligent if he allows a third party to use an object under the actor's control when the actor knows or has reason to know of an unreasonable risk of harm to others, is a type of contributory negligence imputed to the entrustor, not the entrustee. Penn v. Burlington N., Inc., 185 M 223, 605 P2d 600 (1980). See also McGinnis v. Hand, 1999 MT 9, 293 M 73, 972 P2d 1126, 56 St. Rep. 39 (1999).

Tort Actions Arising Out of Breach of Contract: A party has a cause of action in tort arising out of a breach of contract only if the defaulting party, by breaching the contract, also breaches a duty owed to the complaining party independently of the contract. Boise Cascade Corp. v. First Sec. Bank of Anaconda, 183 M 378, 600 P2d 173 (1979), following First Sec. Bank of Bozeman v. Goddard, 181 M 407, 593 P2d 1040 (1979).

Evidence of Alteration of Accident Scene After the Accident Excluded: Evidence of subsequent repairs or improvements by a defendant altering the scene of an accident may not be admitted in evidence to show negligence on the part of the defendant. The evidence erroneously admitted here put before the jury the idea that the State, by constructing an additional guardrail at the scene of the accident after the accident, admitted to antecedent negligence. Cech v. St., 183 M 75, 598 P2d 584 (1979), affirmed on rehearing, 184 M 522, 604 P2d 97 (1979).

Railroad Crossings — Deceased Violating Statute: Notwithstanding prior negligence of railroad, where deceased was negligent and in violation of statutes at time of collision, liability will not attach to railroad. Roberts v. Burlington N., Inc., 171 M 143, 556 P2d 1243 (1976).

Condition of Exterior Steps: Steps used for ingress and egress to a restaurant do not come within the exception to the general rule that an abutting owner is not liable for the condition of the sidewalk in front of his premises. Steen v. Grenz, 167 M 279, 538 P2d 16 (1975).

Notice of Train at Railroad Crossing: Ordinarily a train moving over a crossing is effective and adequate warning of its presence. A railroad company may be negligent only when there are peculiar and unusual facts and circumstances rendering the situation unusually hazardous. Frank v. Burlington N., Inc., 167 M 293, 538 P2d 333 (1975).

Reckless and Wanton Misconduct: Contributory negligence is no bar to recovery for injuries caused by reckless and wanton misconduct, and where the defendant was driving on the wrong side of the road at night with his lights off, the court was in error in refusing to instruct the jury as to willful and wanton negligence. Mallory v. Cloud, 167 M 115, 535 P2d 1270 (1975).

Joint Tortfeasor—Obligation—In Pari Delicto: A joint tortfeasor is not entitled to contribution or indemnity. If a wrongdoer merely furnishes a condition for a subsequent wrongdoer, the tortfeasors are not in pari delicto, but if their independent acts concur in establishing the basis for liability, they are in pari delicto and indemnity is allowed. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Toyota Motor Sales, 166 M 221, 531 P2d 1337 (1975).

Sudden Emergency: The court properly instructed the jury in the doctrine of sudden emergency, where a driver who was legally passing a logging truck which suddenly turned left in front of her was too close to stop, and so chose to dodge between the truck and another vehicle in order to avoid a collision. Beebe v. Johnson, 165 M 96, 526 P2d 128 (1974); but see Simonson v. White, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986).

Purpose of Statute: The purpose of this statute is twofold: (1) to fix primary responsibility and liability on the tortfeasor whose conduct occasioned the loss or injury; and (2) to make the victim whole. Haynes v. County of Missoula, 163 M 270, 517 P2d 370, 69 ALR 3d 1008 (1973).

Release Void as Contrary to Public Policy: This section, together with 28-2-701(2) and 1-3-204, was broad enough to render illegal any exculpatory clause or release relieving a potential tortfeasor from all liability for future negligent conduct where such clause or release was contrary to public policy or against the public interest; release relieving County Fair Board from any liability to livestock while on fairgrounds was illegal and unenforceable as contrary to public policy and against public interest and precluded county from disclaiming liability in negligence action for exhibitor's horses killed in barn fire on county fairgrounds; suppression of release in exhibitor's negligence action was not error or ground for new trial. Haynes v. County of Missoula, 163 M 270, 517 P2d 370, 69 ALR 3d 1008 (1973).

Livestock on Highway: It was not negligent for owner of livestock to pasture horses in area of open range country in which horses might wander onto highway during course of grazing, in absence of evidence that owner willfully and intentionally drove horse onto highway right-of-way. Bartsch v. Irvine Co., 149 M 405, 427 P2d 302 (1967), overruled, to the extent that Bartsch holds that a livestock owner, pursuant to Montana's open-range doctrine, owes absolutely no duty to motorists on public highways in open-range areas, in Larson-Murphy v. Steiner, 2000 MT 334, 303 M 96, 15 P3d 1205, 57 St. Rep. 1411 (2000).

Employee of Foreign Corporation—Removal to Federal Court: Where employee of foreign corporation allegedly placed crate of oranges in aisle of corporation's store, resulting in injury to customer when he tripped over the crate, action against foreign corporation and its resident employee, who was joined as John Doe, was not served with process, and did not appear, was not removable by corporation to federal court on ground of diversity of citizenship. Jensen v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 24 F. Supp. 585 (D.C. Mont. 1938).

Instruction Substantially in Words of Statute: If error was committed by instructing the jury in a personal injury action, substantially in the words of this section, that a person is responsible for an injury occasioned to another by his want of ordinary care or skill, etc., objected to as declaring that defendant was responsible for the injuries sustained by plaintiff, it was cured by an instruction that the court was not to be understood as intimating that defendant in what he did was negligent. Mellon v. Kelly, 99 M 10, 41 P2d 49 (1935).

DUTY OF CARE

Defamation and Tortious Interference Claims Rooted in Tort Despite Employment Relationship—Statute of Limitations Governing State Contracts Did Not Apply: A university soccer coach was dismissed after an investigation involving his university-issued cell phone revealed text and telephone communications that were allegedly with agents of an escort service. The dismissal was covered by local and national news outlets, and some articles included information from the coach's personnel file and cell phone. The coach sued the university, alleging violation of his right of privacy, defamation, and breach of contract in his initial complaint and substituting claims for tortious interference, negligence, and invasion of privacy in an amended complaint. The District Court found that the 1-year statute of limitations in 18-1-402 applied because the coach's claims all sounded in contract, and so the complaint was untimely filed. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the coach's right of privacy, invasion of privacy, and negligence claims all arose out of his contract-based employment relationship with the university and thus were contractual claims subject to the 1-year statute of limitations. However, it found that his claims for defamation and tortious interference were tort-based. It found that the university's duty to not commit the acts alleged by the coach arose independently from its employment relationship with the coach and would have existed even in the absence of such a contractual relationship. Because those claims sounded in tort, the longer statute of limitation in 27-2-204 applied and those claims were not barred. Plakorus v. Univ. of Mont., 2020 MT 312, 402 Mont. 263, 477 P.3d 311.

Duty of Care — Restatement (Second) of Torts 324A Adopted as Additional Prerequisite: On extraordinary review in an asbestos case, the Supreme Court addressed whether the District Court erroneously concluded that an insurer owed a duty of care to warn third-party employees of its insured of a known risk of airborne asbestos exposure based merely on foreseeability of harm and related public policy. The Supreme Court adopted a formulation of Restatement (Second) of Torts 324A as an additional prerequisite for determining whether one who affirmatively undertakes to render aid or services to a third party owes a duty of reasonable care to others regarding foreseeable risks of harm directly created or resulting from the conduct of the third party. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the insurer owed a direct common-law duty under Restatement (Second) of Torts 324A(b)-(c) to use reasonable care under the circumstances to warn third-party employees of the known risk of exposure to airborne asbestos in the insured's workplace. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Md. Cas. Co. v. Asbestos Claims Court, 2020 MT 70, 399 Mont. 279, 460 P.3d 882.

Discretionary Decision Within Regular Functions — Public Duty Doctrine Applied: Personnel for the Jefferson County Sheriff's Office forwarded a minor's case file to the County Attorney's office without independently investigating the allegations in the file. After the allegations were found to be greatly exaggerated and the charges dropped, the minor's parents sued the Sheriff's office. They argued that forwarding the case file without investigating constituted a negligent affirmative act that rendered the public duty doctrine inapplicable. The District Court found that an investigation was required by neither rule nor statute and the failure to investigate was not an affirmative act but, rather, an omission protected by the public duty doctrine. Renenger v. St., 2018 MT 228, 392 Mont. 495, 426 P.3d 559.

Duty Not to Injure Others — Application to Law Enforcement Officers: A law enforcement officer responded to a neighborhood disturbance and observed the suspect running into a driveway, over a retaining wall, and into the plaintiff's yard. The plaintiff came out of his house to investigate the commotion. The officer heard the plaintiff approaching, turned around to see the plaintiff, and tackled the plaintiff due to self-protection instinct. The plaintiff later reported a torn rotator cuff and sued the officer, alleging state law negligence and a 42 U.S.C. 1983 violation. The case was removed to federal court and appealed to the Ninth Circuit Court. The Ninth Circuit Court certified the following state law question, as reformulated by the Montana Supreme Court: "Under Montana law, when a plaintiff claims he was injured directly by an officer's affirmative acts, does the public-duty doctrine exclude all duties that may arise pursuant to generally applicable principles of negligence?" The Supreme Court found that the public duty doctrine is not so broad as to provide an exemption from the statutory duty imposed by 27-1-701 and 28-1-201 to not injure others as a result of lack of ordinary care. In other words, although the public duty doctrine provides that an officer does not owe a legal duty to an individual plaintiff when the plaintiff alleges harm suffered from the officer's breach of the general duty to protect and preserve the peace, a law enforcement officer is not exempt from owing a duty of care to a plaintiff directly injured by the officer's affirmative acts. Bassett v. Lamantia, 2018 MT 119, 391 Mont. 309, 417 P.3d 299.

Public Duty Doctrine Inapplicable: Plaintiff sued the city of Columbia Falls for negligence, premises liability, breach of professional duties, and wrongful death after her husband died following a skateboarding accident on a subdivision walking path, the design of which the city had monitored and approved. The District Court applied the public duty doctrine and granted the city summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The public duty doctrine does not apply when a governmental defendant has a specific duty to a plaintiff arising from generally applicable principles of law that would support a tort claim, i.e., if a private person would be liable to the plaintiff for the acts that were committed by the government, then the governmental entity would be similarly liable. Because the city was actively involved in the design of the walking path and exercised its statutory and contractual authority to approve it, the city could be held liable for violation of a statutory duty and the voluntary assumption of a duty to act with ordinary care; therefore, the District Court erred in applying the public duty doctrine. Kent v. Columbia Falls, 2015 MT 139, 379 Mont. 190, 350 P.3d 9.

Landlord Not Liable for Tenants' Mixed Breed Dog — Animal Liability and Premises Liability Separate Claims: The plaintiffs sued the defendant landlord and defendant tenants after both of their children were bitten by the tenants' dog. On summary judgment against the landlord, the plaintiffs stipulated that there was no evidence in the record that the landlord was aware the dogs had previously bitten anyone. The District Court concluded that the plaintiffs' negligence claim failed because the landlord did not know the dogs were vicious and that the plaintiffs' strict liability claim failed because the dog was not a purebred pit bull breed. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that injury by animal and premises liability are separate theories of liability and that absence of liability under one theory does not preclude recovery under the other. However, the plaintiffs' claim failed because there was insufficient evidence to conclude that the landlord had reason to know the dogs were vicious and because the record did not demonstrate that the dogs were inherently vicious by nature of their breed. Knapton v. Monk, 2015 MT 111, 379 Mont. 1, 347 P.3d 1257.

Student Not Subject to Restraint on Liberty — No Custodial or Special Relationship: A high school student was caught on campus with a tin of chewing tobacco and was disciplined by being suspended from all extracurricular activities. The student became distraught upon realizing the suspension would bar him from the state wrestling tournament; he went home and committed suicide that afternoon. The student's mother sued the school board and the superintendent, alleging that her son's death was the direct and proximate result of the school board's negligence. The District Court granted summary judgment to the board. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that because suicide is generally considered a deliberate intervening act, the board was entitled to summary judgment. Because the student had no history of mental health problems, the suicide was unforeseeable, and therefore the board owed no legal duty to the student. Additionally, the mother could not show a special relationship between the student and the school board because the board had no obligation to exercise custodial care over the student, who was not in the custody of the board and was in his own home when he committed suicide. Gourneau v. Hamill, 2013 MT 300, 372 Mont. 182, 311 P.3d 760.

Tardy Public Duty Doctrine Defense Not Allowed: In a suit for negligent firefighting techniques, the state submitted a proposed pretrial order claiming that the public duty doctrine applied and that the state did not owe a specific duty to the plaintiff. The District Court determined that the public duty doctrine was an affirmative defense that was waived after the state failed to plead or otherwise raise it, and alternatively, even if it was not an affirmative defense it prejudiced the plaintiffs. On appeal, the Supreme Court declined to analyze whether the public duty doctrine must be raised as an affirmative defense, and it upheld the District Court on the grounds that raising the defense at such a late stage in the proceedings would unfairly prejudice the plaintiffs. Weaver v. St., 2013 MT 247, 371 Mont. 476, 310 P.3d 495.

Premises Liability — Duty of Care to Independent Contractor — Status Irrelevant: After the plaintiff slipped and fell while working and sustained personal injuries, the plaintiff sued the defendant who owned the building and leased space to the third party for whom the plaintiff contracted to provide cleaning services. The District Court, relying on construction law cases, granted summary judgment to the defendant, concluding that the defendant owed no duty of care to the plaintiff because the plaintiff was an independent contractor working for a third party. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, concluding that the plaintiffs' status as an independent contractor was not relevant in an ordinary premises liability case and that the status of an injured party does not affect a property owner's general duty of care, which depends on the degree of ordinary care that a reasonable person would use under the same or similar circumstances. Steichen v. Talcott Properties, LLC, 2013 MT 2, 368 Mont. 169, 292 P.3d 458.

Public Duty Doctrine Inapplicable for City Playground Injury: The public duty doctrine did not apply in a negligence claim against a city for the failure to maintain a playground area given the applicability of clear and established rules of premises liability. Based on an analysis of foreseeability, it was reasonable and proper to hold the city to a duty to exercise reasonable care in maintaining its public parks. Gatlin-Johnson v. Miles City, 2012 MT 302, 367 Mont. 414, 291 P.3d 1129, followed in Kent v. Columbia Falls, 2015 MT 139, 379 Mont. 190, 350 P.3d 9.

No Error in Jury Instruction — Learned Intermediary Doctrine Not Determinative: A jury awarded $3.2 million to Stevens for Novartis' failure to warn of side effects associated with the drug Zometa. Novartis appealed on several grounds, including that the District Court erred by instructing the jury that Novartis had a duty to warn health care professionals other than Stevens' prescribing physician. Novartis argued that pursuant to the “learned intermediary” doctrine, its duty to warn extended only to the prescribing physician. The Supreme Court disagreed, but on different grounds. The instruction allowed the jury to find that the label was inadequate or that the information provided to the prescribing physician was inadequate. Novartis could not prove the jury considered the duty to warn in reaching its verdict and thus could not prove prejudicial error on this basis. The scope of the “learned intermediary” doctrine was not determinative. Stevens v. Novartis Pharmaceuticals Corp., 2010 MT 282, 358 Mont. 474, 247 P.3d 244.

Driver Who Directed Another Driver to Turn In Front of Him Assumed Duty of Care: Plaintiff was riding his bicycle and was injured when a vehicle traveling in the opposite direction was waved through to make a turn in the plaintiff's path by another driver who was blocking the turning driver's view of the plaintiff. Because the driver who waved the other vehicle through assumed a duty to act with reasonable care, the District Court's grant of a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim was reversed. Lokey v. Breuner, 2010 MT 216, 358 Mont. 8, 243 P.3d 384.

Road Maintenance — Nondelegable Duty of Care Precluding Common-Law Indemnity Claim: Comer was fatally injured in a fall on a Butte sidewalk that was within the state highway system, and her estate sued the state and the county. The state sought summary judgment against the county on a common-law indemnity claim, but summary judgment was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Under 60-2-204, the state is required to maintain all public highways. The county was merely an agent of the state regarding highway maintenance, and federal law provides that it is the duty of the state to maintain projects constructed under the provisions of federal-aid statutes. This statutorily imposed duty curtails the state's ability to abrogate its duty of care through a contract with the county, and the state's statutory duty of care to Comer existed independently of any duties delegated to the county through construction contracts. The state may enter contracts with third parties for the maintenance of sidewalks, but the contracts do not remove the state's nondelegable statutory duty of care. Thus, the state's breach of its independent duty of care precluded the state's common-law indemnity claim, and the state lacked the clean hands necessary to obtain common-law indemnity. Under these circumstances it was also proper to place the state on the verdict form, and because the state bore the majority of responsibility for Comer's accident, the state's cross-claim for common-law indemnity was properly denied. St. v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2009 MT 414, 353 M 497, 220 P3d 1115 (2009), following State ex rel. Helena v. District Court, 167 M 157, 536 P2d 1182 (1975). See also Rogers v. W. Airlines, 184 M 170, 602 P2d 171 (1979).

Governmental Entity Liable for Tortious Acts of Contractor Transporting Prisoners: Paull was a prisoner who was injured in an auto accident while being extradited to Park County by a private prisoner transportation service. The District Court summarily dismissed Paull's tort claim against the state and county for his injuries after the state and county argued that they owed Paull no actionable duty because the injuries were inflicted by the transportation company or its employees and that Paull's injuries were not foreseeable. The court concluded that the state owed Paull no duty because the state had no contractual or agency relationship with the company and that the county had no duty because a contractor-independent contractor relationship existed between the county and the company. Paull appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. The court first addressed the county's liability, considering whether the county had a contractor-independent contractor relationship with the company. Under Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348 (2000), an exception to the general rule that contractors are not liable for torts of their independent contractors applies if the activity is inherently or intrinsically dangerous. The District Court found that the activity in question was driving, which commonly is not an inherently dangerous activity, so the Beckman exception did not apply. The Supreme Court disagreed. Transportation of prisoners is more than just driving and is an inherently dangerous activity; therefore, under Beckman, a county or other governmental entity that contracts to have prisoners transported by an independent contractor may be held vicariously liable for injuries caused by the contractor. Any claim must still be established under the ordinary rules of negligence, requiring proof of the existence of a legal duty on the part of the contractor, breach of duty, causation, and damages. A contractor is not liable for every tort by an independent contractor engaged in inherently dangerous work, but only those torts that arise from risks caused by engaging in the dangerous activity. Here, the risk of driver misconduct was an inherent danger in the transportation of prisoners and part of the peculiar risk of harm arising from that activity. Likewise, the state had a duty to exercise ordinary care in returning Paull to Montana for probation revocation proceedings. Although the state was not strictly liable for any injury during prisoner transportation regardless of fault, the state may be held liable for tortious acts or omissions of its agents undertaking prisoner transportation if the state allows other entities to do the work. Because the acts or omissions of the transportation company for which the state or county might be liable were yet to be determined, summary judgment was inappropriate, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Paull v. Park County, 2009 MT 321, 352 M 465, 218 P3d 1198 (2009). However, see Stricker v. Blaine County, 2019 MT 280, 398 Mont. 43, 453 P3d 897, holding that a county could not be held vicariously liable for a hospital's negligent treatment of an inmate in its custody.

Failure to Have Anesthesiologist Immediately Available Not Considered Breach of Standard of Care — Summary Dismissal of Medical Malpractice Claim Against Anesthesiologist Affirmed: Parents sued an anesthesiologist partnership for failing to have an anesthesiologist immediately available at all relevant times during the birth of twins. The District Court granted summary judgment for defendants, and the parents appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The parents failed to produce expert testimony establishing defendants' breach of any applicable standard of medical care, and the undisputed facts showed that there was no breach of any standard of care for failure to have an anesthesiologist immediately available at all relevant times. B.J. & J.J. v. Schultz, 2009 MT 245, 351 M 436, 214 P3d 772 (2009).

No Duty of Care Owed by School District for Student's Unforeseeable Conduct: A student handed in a typing assignment that contained violent themes and unspecified threats. The student was counseled, but no subsequent actions were taken. About 17 months later, the student ran over a woman in an incident that resembled one of the themes in the typing assignment. The victim sued the school district for negligence, but summary judgment was granted for the school district on grounds that no duty was owed to the victim. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that, based on the facts known to the school district at the time of its allegedly negligent conduct, it was not foreseeable that 17 months later the student would intentionally run over a pedestrian off school grounds after school hours. The school district therefore had no duty to protect the victim from the student, so summary judgment for the school district was proper. Emanuel v. Great Falls School District, 2009 MT 185, 351 M 56, 209 P3d 244 (2009), distinguishing Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006), Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999), and LaTray v. Havre, 2000 MT 119, 299 M 449, 999 P2d 1010 (2000).

Reasonable Foreseeability of Intentional or Reactive Striking Between Boys With Sticks: During a lacrosse game in gym class between 14-year-old high school freshman boys, one student struck another in the eye with a lacrosse stick. The District Court found that the striking was foreseeable as a matter of law and was not an intervening cause that severed the causal chain. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed. It was clearly foreseeable that intentional or reactive striking would occur under these circumstances, and the striking was not an intervening cause sufficient to break the causal chain. Partial summary judgment for plaintiff on the issue was proper. Larchick v. Diocese of Gt. Falls-Billings, 2009 MT 175, 350 M 538, 208 P3d 836 (2009), following Fisher v. Swift Transp. Co., Inc., 2008 MT 105, 342 M 335, 181 P3d 601 (2008). See also Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006).

No Evidence of Breach of Duty to Exercise Care in Keeping Animal — Negligence Claim Properly Denied: Two or three of Eichhorn's horses broke through a fence from Basta's property onto Peterson's property. Peterson herded the horses back onto Basta's property, the fence was secured, and Peterson decided to inform Basta about what had transpired. On the way back to her property, Peterson decided to feed another of Eichhorn's horses that was also corralled on Basta's property, but that was not one of the horses that had earlier trespassed, and the horse bit Peterson. Peterson sued Eichhorn on grounds that Eichhorn negligently breached the duty of care in keeping the horse in a manner to prevent the horse from causing foreseeable damages to persons in Peterson's position. The District Court summarily dismissed the negligence claim, and on appeal the Supreme Court affirmed. Peterson failed to establish the existence of a genuine issue of material fact as to whether Eichhorn's keeping of the horse in the corral on Basta's property fell below the degree of care required to prevent the horse from biting a person standing beside the corral and gratuitously throwing hay to the horse. Absent a showing of a breach of the duty of care, the negligence claim failed, and summary judgment was proper. Peterson v. Eichhorn, 2008 MT 250, 344 M 540, 189 P3d 615 (2008).

City Alley Not Considered Common Area or Sidewalk for Which Landlord Has Maintenance Responsibility: Willden was visiting her son in an apartment building owned by defendant when she slipped and fell in an icy alley, sustaining injuries. Willden sued defendant and the landlord of the apartment building on the other side of the alley, alleging that the landlords had a duty under 70-24-303 and under the city code to keep the alley clean and safe. The District Court granted summary judgment for defendants, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Section 70-24-303 requires a landlord to keep safe all common areas on the landlord's premises. However, the landlords in this case did not own or have control over the city-owned alley, nor could the alley be considered a common area for which the landlords were responsible, so 70-24-303 did not apply. The city code required landowners to keep sidewalks free of ice and snow, but the alley was not a sidewalk, so the city code also did not apply. Willden's argument that the landlords of adjacent properties had a duty to keep the alley free of ice and snow that presented a hazard to guests visiting their tenants also failed. Willden's use of the alley as a guest was indistinguishable from general public use of that alley at any time for any lawful purpose. The Supreme Court declined to create a requirement that adjacent landowners have a legal duty to keep a public way that is owned by a municipality free from an accumulation of ice and snow or to post a notice warning persons that the public way might be slippery. Willden v. Neumann, 2008 MT 236, 344 M 407, 189 P3d 610 (2008), distinguishing Piedalue v. Clinton Elementary School District, 214 M 99, 692 P2d 20 (1984), and Limberhand v. Big Ditch Co., 218 M 132, 706 P2d 491 (1985).

Questions of Duty of Care and Proximate Cause Inappropriate for Summary Judgment — Remand: Highway patrol officer Fisher was investigating a traffic accident when he was struck by a semitruck owned by Swift Transportation Company (Swift) that was being removed from the accident scene. Fisher sued Swift for negligence, alleging that the Swift driver owed Fisher a duty of care. The District Court found that Fisher was a foreseeable plaintiff as a matter of law, but granted partial summary judgment for Swift on the issue of causation, and held that Fisher's injuries were unforeseeable as a matter of law. Fisher appealed. The Supreme Court agreed that the Swift driver owed Fisher a duty of care based on the driver's legal duty to drive in a careful and prudent manner and at a reduced speed no greater than is reasonable and prudent under the conditions existing at the point of operation when approaching a stationary, authorized emergency vehicle. Citing Mang v. Eliasson, 153 M 431, 458 P2d 777 (1969), the court also agreed that Fisher was a foreseeable plaintiff because Fisher was within the foreseeable zone of risk and that the Swift driver could reasonably have foreseen that his negligent conduct could have resulted in injury to Fisher. Additionally, no policy considerations barred the imposition of statutory duties on the Swift driver. The court also disagreed with the District Court's conclusion that Fisher's injury was unforeseeable as a matter of law, concluding that reasonable minds could differ as to whether the injury was a foreseeable result of the Swift driver's negligence and that the issue of proximate cause was best left to the factfinder for resolution. Thus, the question of whether the Swift driver's conduct, in a natural and continuous sequence, helped produce Fisher's injury constituted a genuine issue of material fact that was inappropriate for resolution by summary judgment. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Fisher v. Swift Transp. Co., Inc., 2008 MT 105, 342 M 335, 181 P3d 601 (2008). See also Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006), and Newman v. Lichfield, 2012 MT 47, 364 Mont. 243, 272 P.3d 625.

Gross Negligence Standard of Care in Snowmobile Liability Law Violative of Equal Protection — Ordinary Standard of Care Applicable to Snowmobile Liability: Musselman was severely injured in a snowmobile accident on U.S. Forest Service land, and Musselman's guardian sued the Forest Service under the Federal Tort Claims Act. The Forest Service argued that its decision not to mark the trail was discretionary under federal law and that Montana's snowmobile liability statutes relieved the Forest Service from a duty to warn of the hazardous trail because a snowmobile area operator had no duty under 23-2-653(3) to eliminate, alter, control, or lessen the risk inherent in the sport of snowmobiling. The federal District Court rejected both affirmative defenses and concluded that neither the gross negligence standard of liability in 23-2-653 nor the willful or wanton conduct standard of liability in 70-16-302 applied, but rather that the ordinary care standard of liability in this section applied, and apportioned liability between the Forest Service and the snowmobilers. The case was appealed to the Ninth Circuit Court, which affirmed in all respects except the determinative question of which standard of care applied. Three questions were certified to the Montana Supreme Court for resolution, including whether the gross negligence standard of care in 23-2-653 was constitutional and, if not, whether the willful or wanton conduct standard of liability in 70-16-302 or the ordinary care standard of liability in this section applied. The Supreme Court concluded that the same rationale applied to skiers in Brewer v. Ski-Lift, Inc., 234 M 109, 762 P2d 226 (1988), also applied to snowmobile area operators. The gross negligence standard of care in 23-2-653 is overbroad, extends beyond its stated purpose, fails to pass rational basis review, and violates the equal protection clause in Art. II, sec. 4, Mont. Const. The remainder of the snowmobile area operator law was left intact. The general recreational use willful or wanton conduct standard of liability in 70-16-302 was held inapplicable. Rather, the ordinary care standard of liability in this section governed the Forest Service's actions in this case. Oberson v. U.S. Dept. of Agriculture, Forest Serv., 2007 MT 293, 339 M 519, 171 P3d 715 (2007).

No Exception Shown to Rule on Nonliability of Owner to Employee of Subcontractor — Summary Judgment Proper: Fabich filed for damages from an injury received after a fall from scaffolding while working as an employee of a subcontractor at defendant's power plant. The District Court found that defendant was not liable and granted summary judgment for defendant. Fabich appealed on grounds that the court incorrectly rejected Fabich's theories of liability. Generally, an owner, employer, or general contractor does not have a duty to prevent injuries to an independent contractor's employees, but Fabich asserted that defendant nevertheless had a duty under three recognized exceptions to the general rule, claiming that defendant negligently exercised retained control, that the activity was inherently dangerous, and that defendant had a nondelegable duty (see Umbs v. Sherrodd, Inc., 246 M 373, 805 P2d 519 (1991), and Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348 (2000)). The Supreme Court examined each exception and affirmed summary judgment. First, Fabich's theory of negligence in exercising retained control failed because defendant did not retain control over the working circumstances. Second, the theory of inherently dangerous activity failed because the hazards associated with the job were normally encountered in the workplace and did not call for particular precautions. Third, there was nothing in the contract establishing that defendant assumed responsibility for initiating, maintaining, and supervising safety precautions, so defendant had no nondelegable duty. Absent a genuine issue of material fact regarding defendant's liability, summary judgment was proper. Fabich v. PPL Mont., LLC, 2007 MT 258, 339 M 289, 170 P3d 943 (2007).

No Negligence Ascribed to Trucking Company for Failure to Train and Supervise Driver: Hoffman was rear-ended by a logging truck while attempting a turn off of a two-lane highway, and Hoffman sued the trucking company that employed the driver on grounds that the company failed to adequately train and supervise the driver. The jury found that the company was not liable, and Hoffman appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Hoffman relied solely on the driver's deplorable driving record and pointed out that the company's training practices differed from other companies, but presented no evidence that the company's lack of training and supervision caused Hoffman's injuries. The company met federal requirements by checking the driver's driving record prior to employment and by requiring the driver to take a drug test after the accident. The jury properly weighed the evidence and determined that Hoffman failed to show that the company breached its duty of care in training or supervising the driver, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the verdict. Hoffman v. Austin, 2006 MT 289, 334 M 357, 147 P3d 177 (2006), following Ele v. Ehnes, 2003 MT 131, 316 M 69, 68 P3d 835 (2003).

Bank to Exercise Ordinary Care in Settling Checks — Common Law That Bank Exercise Ordinary Care in Processing Checks Preempted by Uniform Commercial Code: Hughes brought common-law claims against a bank for failing to exercise ordinary care in processing checks and for communications that the bank made regarding check processing. A bank that receives a check from a depositor must use ordinary care, as defined in the Uniform Commercial Code (U.C.C.), in settling those checks. However, when a check is processed by automated means, reasonable commercial standards do not require the bank to examine the check, subject to certain exceptions. To the extent that common-law claims relate to processing checks, the specific provisions of the U.C.C. prevail, so Hughes' claims regarding the propriety of the bank's check processing were preempted. However, because the U.C.C. does not address misrepresentation in communications, Hughes' common-law and equitable claims for negligence were not preempted by the U.C.C., and the District Court committed reversible error by failing to consider whether common-law and equitable principles supplement the U.C.C.-defined duty of ordinary care with respect to the bank's representations about the check settlement process. Valley Bank of Ronan v. Hughes, 2006 MT 285, 334 M 335, 147 P3d 185 (2006).

Introduction by Defendant of Nonparty Conduct Allowed Only to Show That Conduct Was Superseding Intervening Cause of Plaintiff's Damages: Elisha was killed while riding on Jason's motorcycle after Jason failed to negotiate a turn. Elisha's parents sued the state for negligence in constructing and maintaining the road. Although he was a nonparty, the state sought to introduce evidence of Jason's alleged intoxication, excessive speed, and misaimed headlight. The state recognized that Montana law precludes a defendant from apportioning liability to a nonparty, but argued that evidence of Jason's conduct was admissible to negate causation pursuant to Pula v. St., 2002 MT 9, 308 M 122, 40 P3d 364 (2002), and to rebut breach of duty. The District Court disallowed the evidence. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. After revisiting Pula, the court concluded that a defendant may introduce nonparty conduct only to demonstrate that the conduct was a superseding intervening cause of plaintiff's damages, which means an unforeseeable event that occurs after the defendant's original act of negligence. The question then became whether Jason's conduct was foreseeable and whether the state, as the entity that designed and maintained the road, might reasonably have foreseen as probable that Jason might drive in a negligent manner. The court cited Buck v. St., 222 M 423, 723 P2d 210 (1986), for the holding that driver error is anticipated and that the fact that a driver was arguably negligent does not cut off the state's liability for negligence in the design and maintenance of a road. Faulconbridge v. St., 2006 MT 198, 333 M 186, 142 P3d 777 (2006), followed in Larchick v. Diocese of Gt. Falls-Billings, 2009 MT 175, 350 M 538, 208 P3d 836 (2009).

Question of Fact Whether State Liable After Contracting With County for Maintaining Road Five Weeks Before Accident — State Motion for Summary Judgment Properly Denied: Five weeks before a fatal accident, the state contracted with the county to maintain a section of road where an accident had previously occurred. When the fatal accident occurred, the state moved for summary judgment on grounds that the state was no longer responsible, but the District Court declined to allow the state to introduce evidence of the contract or to dismiss the state from suit. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed in part, noting the state's duty concerning the original construction and design of the road and duty to keep highways in a reasonably safe condition for ordinary use. It was a question for the jury whether 5 weeks was a reasonable time for the county to remedy the road's deficiencies, so denial of summary judgment was proper. However, the District Court erred by disallowing evidence regarding the contract because it was appropriate for the jury to evaluate the reasonableness of the state's contention that it no longer had responsibility for the road's condition or the accident in light of the contract provisions. The Supreme Court noted that on remand, the contract evidence was not admissible for purposes of apportioning liability to the county. Faulconbridge v. St., 2006 MT 198, 333 M 186, 142 P3d 777 (2006).

Failure to Admit Person to Jail When Committed by Competent Authority — Negligence Per Se Argument Not Considered for First Time on Appeal: Russell violated the terms of his suspended sentence and was ordered to report to the county jail no later than 8 a.m. on December 28, 1998. When Russell appeared at the jail, a written order of commitment could not be found, so Russell was turned away. When Prindel was subsequently injured by Russell, Prindel argued that failure to admit Russell to jail constituted negligence per se on the part of the county. However, Prindel did not allege any elements of negligence per se in the action, so the Supreme Court declined to address the issue on appeal. Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006).

Failure to Admit Person to Jail When Committed by Competent Authority Negligent Violation of Duty of Care: Russell violated the terms of his suspended sentence and was ordered to report to the county jail no later than 8 a.m. on December 28, 1998. When Russell appeared at the jail, a written order of commitment could not be found, so Russell was turned away. On December 30, Russell stabbed Prindel at a party, and Russell was sentenced to life in prison for attempted homicide. Prindel subsequently sued the county, alleging that the failure to incarcerate Russell on the 28th, despite a court order that Russell begin serving a sentence on that day, amounted to negligence that proximately caused Prindel's injury. The District Court granted summary judgment to the county, concluding that the county had no duty to prevent Russell from injuring Prindel and that the issue of causation need not be addressed. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The county's argument that it had no duty of care without a written order was without merit because the oral pronouncement of sentence constituted the competent authority to incarcerate Russell, and the jail's ignorance of the commitment order did not diminish the court order's status as a competent authority. The county had a special relationship of custody under 7-32-2205 to take Russell into custody for the protection of the public, and failure to do so was negligence as a matter of law. Russell posed a foreseeable risk, Prindel was a foreseeable plaintiff, and the county owed a duty to Prindel to exercise reasonable care to protect him against Russell. Reasonable minds could differ as to whether Russell's act of stabbing Prindel was so unforeseeable as to sever the chain of causation, so summary judgment for the county was error. Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006), following Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999), and LaTray v. Havre, 2000 MT 119, 299 M 449, 999 P2d 1010 (2000).

No Abuse of Discretion in Jury Instructions Regarding Negligence, Res Ipsa Loquitur, and Exception to HIV Informed Consent Provision: Howard contended that the trial court abused its discretion by providing insufficient jury instructions that did not allow the jury to determine whether defendant acted recklessly, by failing to inform the jury that the AIDS Prevention Act required defendant to pay per se damages if defendant acted negligently or recklessly by failing to get consent from Howard's alleged significant other prior to administering an HIV test, and by refusing an instruction on res ipsa loquitur permitting proof by circumstantial evidence. The Supreme Court found no abuse of the trial court's discretion. The jury found no breach of defendant's standard of care, so there could be no finding that defendant acted recklessly, and the issue of damages was moot. A res ipsa loquitur instruction was unnecessary because restraints applied on Howard at the hospital were not necessarily the cause of Howard's back injury, which also may have been caused by a seizure rather than the hospital's actions. Last, a material question existed whether Howard's girlfriend was actually a significant other under the AIDS Prevention Act, so the trial court's instruction on the guidelines regarding when an HIV test may be ordered without informed consent adequately informed the jury on the issue. Howard v. St. James Community Hosp., 2006 MT 23, 331 M 60, 129 P3d 126 (2006).

Preclusion of Evidence of Duty of Care to Supervise Ranch Help — Summary Judgment Proper: Elizabeth sued her husband, Robert, for damages that she received while helping perform chores on Robert's ranch, including being accidentally injected with sheep serum by Robert's father. However, Elizabeth failed to produce any evidence that Robert had any duty to supervise his father, so the trial court granted Robert's motion in limine, precluding any evidence or testimony regarding the accidental injection, including evidence by Elizabeth's expert regarding the cause of her injuries, and ultimately granted summary judgment to Robert. Elizabeth appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. In order to recover for personal injuries, Elizabeth was required to establish a legal duty, a breach of that duty, and damages proximately caused by the breach. Elizabeth did not establish a legal duty, so partial summary judgment for Robert was proper. Absent a legal duty, the evidence regarding the accidental injection and the expert's opinion concerning Elizabeth's injury was irrelevant and properly excluded. Without expert testimony, Elizabeth was unable to present evidence regarding causation and could not prevail on the negligence claim, so summary judgment for Robert was proper. Nelson v. Nelson, 2005 MT 263, 329 M 85, 122 P3d 1196 (2005).

No Showing That Defendants' Actions in School Bus Incident More Than Likely Caused Student's Physical and Mental Injuries — Factors in Judicial Determination of Duty of Care — Summary Dismissal of School District Liability Proper: A student returning home on a school bus from a performance with the school pep band asked the director to stop the bus so that the student could use the restroom, but the director refused. The student was subsequently disciplined by the school for various actions related to the incident and soon after became seriously ill. The student and his parents filed an action against the school district, the director, and the bus driver, alleging that various breaches of the duty of care triggered or accelerated the student's development of diabetes and caused his posttraumatic stress disorder. The District Court granted summary judgment for defendants, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The existence of a duty of care depends on the foreseeability of the risk and on a weighing of the policy considerations for and against the imposition of liability, including: (1) moral blame attributable to defendant's conduct; (2) prevention of future harm; (3) extent of the burden placed on defendant; (4) consequences to the public of imposing a duty; and (5) availability of insurance for the risk involved. Further, the law of torts holds a defendant liable only for injuries to others that were to the defendant at the time reasonably foreseeable. A defendant owes a duty with respect to risks and hazards whose likelihood made the conduct unreasonably dangerous and hence negligent in the first instance. The specific injury need not be foreseeable, rather the question is whether defendant could have foreseen that the conduct would result in injury to plaintiff. The District Court here concluded that defendants owed no duty of care because the student's injuries were not foreseeable, which was an erroneous focus on the particular injury rather than on the foreseeability that defendants' conduct could result in the injury. However, if a plaintiff fails to offer proof of any one of the elements of negligence—duty, breach, causation, and damages—then summary judgment in favor of defendant is proper. The question remained whether plaintiffs' experts adequately established causation, and the Supreme Court held that they did not. The experts testified that defendants' conduct could have caused or accelerated the student's injuries, but under Butler v. Domin, 2000 MT 312, 302 M 452, 15 P3d 1189 (2000), the testimony did not meet the threshold of establishing that defendants' actions more than likely caused the injuries. Absent a causal connection between defendants' actions and the student's injuries, summary judgment for defendants was proper. Hinkle v. Shepherd School District No. 37, 2004 MT 175, 322 M 80, 93 P3d 1239 (2004), distinguishing Kolar v. Bergo, 280 M 262, 929 P2d 867 (1996).

Attorney's Duty of Care Owed to Estate Beneficiary — Standing of Estate to Bring Legal Malpractice Action: A personal representative brought a legal malpractice damage suit on behalf of the estate against an attorney who drafted a trust document and will. Before granting summary judgment to the attorney, the District Court raised the issue of whether the estate and personal representative had standing to bring the suit, based on a questionable fiduciary relationship between the plaintiffs and the attorney. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that as a representative of the decedent, the estate stood in the shoes of the decedent and was thus considered to be in privity with the attorney, so the estate had standing to bring a malpractice claim. Further, the question of whether the trust and the personal representative had standing was a question of fact to be determined at trial, so summary judgment was precluded and the case remanded for further proceedings. Watkins Trust v. Lacosta, 2004 MT 144, 321 M 432, 92 P3d 620 (2004).

No Violation of Pretrial Order Precluding Evidence of Negligence by Plaintiff's Employer — New Trial Properly Denied: Plaintiff was employed by a vocational day-care program that took developmentally disabled persons on day outings. Plaintiff was assaulted by a developmentally disabled person from a group home managed by defendant corporation and sued the corporation for negligence for failing to control the assailant. Before trial, the District Court granted plaintiffs' motion to exclude any evidence of negligence by plaintiff's employer and ruled that defendant had a special relationship of custody and control over the disabled person and thus had a legal duty of care to those placed within the foreseeable zone of risk created by any breach of that duty. Nevertheless, the jury found for defendant, and plaintiffs' motion for a new trial was denied. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that when defense counsel repeatedly referred to the individual planning process for the assailant, in which plaintiff's employer was a partner, blame for the injury was thereby shifted to plaintiff's employer in violation of the pretrial order and prevented plaintiffs from receiving a fair trial. The Supreme Court disagreed, pointing out that plaintiffs opened the door by presenting evidence regarding the individual planning process in questioning plaintiffs' first witness and that both parties subsequently presented evidence about the process. Further, evidence regarding the individual planning process was relevant to a limit on defendant's ability to monitor the assailant and did not equate to evidence of negligence by plaintiff's employer, nor did defense counsel ever attempt to establish that any breach of legal duty by the employer led to plaintiffs' injury. Thus, the District Court did not manifestly abuse its discretion in denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, and the verdict was affirmed. Papich v. Quality Life Concepts, Inc., 2004 MT 116, 321 M 156, 91 P3d 553 (2004), distinguishing Cech v. St., 183 M 75, 598 P2d 584 (1979), Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1998 MT 47, 288 M 1, 955 P2d 160 (1998), St. v. Ingraham, 1998 MT 156, 290 M 18, 966 P2d 103 (1998), Unmack v. Deaconess Medical Center, 1998 MT 262, 291 M 280, 967 P2d 783 (1998), and Lopez v. Josephson, 2001 MT 133, 305 M 446, 30 P3d 326 (2001).

Sufficient Evidence That Group Home Not Negligent in Failing to Control Resident: Plaintiff was employed by a vocational day-care program that took developmentally disabled persons on day outings. Plaintiff was assaulted by a developmentally disabled person from a group home managed by defendant corporation and sued the corporation for negligence for failing to control the assailant. Before trial, the District Court granted plaintiffs' motion to exclude any evidence of negligence by plaintiff's employer and ruled that defendant had a special relationship of custody and control over the disabled person and thus had a legal duty of care to those placed within the foreseeable zone of risk created by any breach of that duty. Nevertheless, the jury found for defendant, and plaintiffs' motion for a new trial was denied. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that the jury's finding was not supported by sufficient evidence, but the Supreme Court disagreed. Credible evidence was presented that defendant followed protocols regarding the assailant's behavioral medication and behavioral modification program, that it adequately communicated information on the assailant's condition through incident reports, daily logs, and a 24-hour call system, and that the state monitoring agency had no issues with the way defendant conducted business. The evidence was sufficient for the jury to find that defendant did not breach the duty of care, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the verdict. Papich v. Quality Life Concepts, Inc., 2004 MT 116, 321 M 156, 91 P3d 553 (2004).

Duty of Contractor to Adhere to Building Code — Liability for Radon Damage Properly Submitted to Jury: A contractor built an indoor tennis facility, and the facility developed water leakage and radon damage. The District Court submitted the question of radon mitigation damages to the jury, which the contractor contended was error because neither the construction contract nor building codes required radon mitigation. However, the building code did require installation of a subsurface vapor barrier and proper sized gravel, which the contractor did not install, and breach of the duty to install the barrier and proper gravel resulted in damages, including radon damages. Thus, submission of radon damages to the jury was proper. Glacier Tennis Club at the Summit, LLC v. Treweek Constr. Co., Inc., 2004 MT 70, 320 M 351, 87 P3d 431 (2004).

No Attorney Negligence Given Reasonable Representation — Jury Verdict Affirmed: Plaintiffs contended that defendant, their attorney, was negligent by failing to obtain and review all relevant documents in order to explain the nature of a business transaction in order for plaintiffs to make an informed decision and that by failing in this duty, the attorney negligently allowed plaintiffs to make a binding commitment to sell the business. After 5 days of trial, which included conflicting testimony from experts for both parties, a jury found that the attorney was not negligent. After reviewing the record, the Supreme Court affirmed. When viewed in the light most favorable to the attorney, there was sufficient credible evidence to support the jury's conclusion that the attorney met the duty of care to plaintiffs. Moreover, it was within the standard of care for the attorney to rely on the opinion of a financial consultant as to the reasonableness of the financial tests contained in the sale agreement. The court declined to reverse a jury verdict that was supported by substantial credible evidence. Byers v. Cummings, 2004 MT 69, 320 M 339, 87 P3d 465 (2004).

Duty of State to Maintain University Library in Safe Condition: Plaintiff's child fell through the second story railing at the Montana State University-Bozeman library and suffered brain injuries. Just weeks before, another child fell thorough the same stairway. In determining negligence, the District Court granted plaintiff partial summary judgment on the issue of duty of care and breach of the duty. The state appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the state had a duty of ordinary care to prevent children from falling through the railing at the public building and that the state breached that duty because the state had notice from the previous accident that there was a defect, yet the state did not cure, remove, or warn of the defect. Foreseeability was established at the time of the previous accident, so the state was liable despite a relatively accident-free history at the library and the fact that the building was grandfathered in under an older version of the building code in effect when the building was constructed. Henricksen v. St., 2004 MT 20, 319 M 307, 84 P3d 38 (2004), following Wiley v. Glendive, 272 M 213, 900 P2d 310 (1995).

Failure to Instruct Jury on Greater Duty of Care in Situation of Greater Danger — Reversible Error: The Schuffs were injured while riding in Jackson's boat when Jackson failed to negotiate a submerged rock formation that he knew was there. Jackson admitted error during operation of the boat but maintained that his conduct nevertheless conformed to that of an ordinary prudent boater under the same or similar circumstances. The jury found that Jackson was not negligent, and the Schuffs appealed. The Supreme Court agreed. The fact that Jackson admitted error did not establish negligence per se. Evidence was sufficient for the jury to find that Jackson was operating the boat in a manner consistent with other ordinarily prudent boaters under the same circumstances. Further, the Schuffs failed to timely object to Jackson's interjection of the defenses of unavoidable accident and assumption of risk, so motion for a new trial was properly denied on those grounds. However, the Supreme Court found that the jury instructions did not include information regarding the possible greater duty of care in situations in which the danger is known to be greater or on Jackson's statutory duty not to operate the boat at a speed greater than would permit stopping the boat within an assured clear distance. Failure to properly instruct the jury was prejudicial error, so the case was remanded for a new trial. Schuff v. Jackson, 2002 MT 215, 311 M 312, 55 P3d 387 (2002), followed in Dale v. Three Rivers Tel. Co-ops, Inc., 2004 MT 74, 320 M 401, 87 P3d 489 (2004).

On remand, the jury in a new trial again found that Jackson did not violate 23-2-523 by failing to operate his boat in a reasonable and prudent manner, and again Schuff appealed. However, the Supreme Court affirmed because even though Schuff was given a full opportunity to make her case, she was unable to muster the necessary evidence to overcome the defense. The jury was properly instructed on Jackson's duty of care, and the trial court did not err in allowing Jackson's expert witnesses to testify regarding the safest way to navigate the area in question. Schuff v. Jackson, 2008 MT 81, 342 M 156, 179 P3d 1169 (2008).

Failure to Produce Evidence in Contradiction of Investigating Officer's Conclusions Regarding Cause of Accident — Summary Judgment Proper: Ten-year-old Vivier was riding her bicycle and, turning unexpectedly in front of a vehicle, was struck and injured. Vivier's parents sued the state Department of Transportation and Lewis and Clark County for negligently failing to make the road safe. The District Court granted summary judgment to the county on grounds that the county did not have a duty with respect to the design and construction of the road and granted summary judgment to the Department on grounds that the Department did not have a duty to undertake road reconstruction simply because standards of construction had changed since the road was originally constructed. The court also determined that the Viviers failed to submit evidence tending to show that the accident was caused by a design or construction problem. The Viviers appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. A cause of action for negligence has four elements, including duty, breach, causation, and damages, and summary judgment is proper if the moving party establishes that one element lacks any genuine issue of material fact and the nonmoving party does not come forward with proof that a genuine issue exists. In this case, regardless of whether the county or the Department had a duty to improve the road, the evidence showed that the accident occurred because the child turned in front of the vehicle before the driver had a chance to react, not because the condition of the road prevented the driver from maneuvering to avoid the accident. The Viviers failed to produce any facts to contradict the investigating officer's conclusions with regard to the cause of the accident, and the District Court's grant of summary judgment to the county and Department was correct. Vivier v. Dept. of Transportation, 2001 MT 221, 306 M 454, 35 P3d 958 (2001).

No Negligence by Irrigation District for Failure to Warn of Unforeseeable Flood: Plaintiffs' property was damaged by an unprecedented flood caused by an ice jam on the Clark Fork River. Plaintiffs alleged that the local irrigation district was liable for breaching its duty to construct and maintain an irrigation system that would protect the property and for failing to warn of the flooding conditions to allow plaintiffs the opportunity to protect their property. The District Court held that the irrigation district had no duty to prevent the flood or to warn of the impending natural disaster, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The first element that plaintiffs must establish in a negligence action is the existence of a duty of care, and the measure of a duty of care owed is the scope of the risk that the negligent conduct foreseeably entails. Thus, the primary factor in determining whether the irrigation district owed a duty of care was whether it was foreseeable, as a matter of law, that the district's acts or omissions would pose a risk of injury to plaintiffs. Here, substantial evidence supported the conclusion that the risk that flooding would damage plaintiffs' property was unforeseeable, so the district had no duty to erect or maintain flood control structures to prevent the unforeseeable event. The district also exercised reasonable care in the maintenance of the irrigation system that was in place. Further, plaintiffs failed to advance any applicable authority that would impose upon the district a duty to warn of the unforeseeable flood because mere knowledge of the dangerous situation, of which plaintiffs themselves had become aware the night of the flood, did not impose a legal duty to warn. Gaudreau v. Clinton Irrigation District, 2001 MT 164, 306 M 121, 30 P3d 1070 (2001), following Estate of Strever v. Cline, 278 M 165, 924 P2d 666 (1996).

When Claim for Relief Accrues for Failure of Construction Contract to Be Awarded to Lowest Bidder — No Negligence by Engineering Firm in Handling of Bidding Process on Public Works Contract: The city of Glasgow hired an engineering firm to prepare plans, specifications, and bid documents for a municipal sewer improvement project, including review of bid results and bid award recommendations. Debcon, Inc. (Debcon), submitted the lowest bid, but the engineering firm's review showed significant mathematical errors in Debcon's bid and some question as to the ability of Debcon to perform. The engineering firm recommended that the contract be awarded to a different bidder, and Debcon sued both the city and the engineering firm, alleging negligence in the award of the construction contract. The District Court concluded that Debcon lacked standing to assert a duty of care owed to it by the city and that the negligence claim against the engineering firm must also fail as a matter of law because the firm owed no duty of care to Debcon, an essential element for asserting negligence as a claim for relief. Debcon did not appeal the judgment in favor of the city, but did appeal the judgment in favor of the firm. The Supreme Court cited a long line of cases back to 1910 for the proposition that, absent a duty, no breach of duty can be established and no negligence action can be maintained. An unsuccessful bidder has no standing in mandamus or otherwise to control the discretion in the award of a contract to the lowest responsible bidder, which may not be the lowest pecuniary bidder. A claim for relief from the award of a public contract accrues under the following conditions: (1) plaintiff must timely assert its claim as an aggrieved taxpayer; (2) the claim must seek a remedy, such as an injunction, writ of mandamus, or declaratory judgment, that will protect the rights of the aggrieved taxpayer from the potential harm that will occur; and (3) plaintiff must then show that the process by which the public works contract was awarded resulted from an abuse of discretion, i.e., that discretion was tainted by an act of bad faith, fraud, corruption, or arbitrariness. The Supreme Court in this case declined to follow Debcon's contention that a new duty of care should be constructed from whole cloth that would allow Debcon, as the aggrieved low bidder, to recover lost profits or other expectancy damages under a negligence theory. The District Court properly concluded that the engineering firm, serving as project engineer for the city of Glasgow, did not owe Debcon, as a failed bidder, a duty of care in its handling of the public works contract bidding process under a negligence theory. Debcon's claim for relief was a claim for which relief could not be granted as a matter of law. Further, Debcon did not enjoy contractual privity with the engineering firm, so absent a statutory provision that would sustain a bad faith claim, a claim of bad faith did not lie. Summary judgment in favor of the engineering firm was proper. Debcon, Inc. v. Glasgow, 2001 MT 124, 305 M 391, 28 P3d 478 (2001), following O'Brien v. Drinkenberg, 41 M 538, 111 P 137 (1910), and its progeny, Koich v. Cvar, 111 M 463, 110 P2d 964 (1941), and State ex rel. Sletten Constr. Co. v. Great Falls, 163 M 307, 516 P2d 1149 (1973), and followed, with regard to standing to challenge the letting of a contract to provide public school transportation, in Hickey v. Baker School District No. 12, 2002 MT 322, 313 M 162, 60 P3d 966 (2002).

No Duty of Volunteer Fire Department to Direct Traffic During "Boot Drive" Fundraiser: The Laurel Volunteer Fire Department sponsored a Fourth of July fireworks display for the benefit of the community, which included a "boot drive" fundraiser to help raise money for the display. The fundraiser entailed fire department personnel standing near the edge of the road while holding a cowboy boot and inviting people driving by to contribute by throwing money or checks into the boot. Two fire department personnel conducted a boot drive at an interstate highway exit ramp on the night of July 4, 1994. Jacobs and Coates exited the freeway and got in line behind a string of slow-moving vehicles, slowly advancing and then stopping each time that a vehicle went through the stop sign. Bruce exited the freeway behind Jacobs and Coates but did not notice the line of cars until it was too late to avoid a collision. Jacobs and Coates were injured and sued the fire department, claiming that the boot drive caused traffic to build up on the exit ramp and that as the sponsors of the fireworks display, the fire department owed a duty to warn people about and manage the traffic. The District Court granted the fire department's motion in limine and dismissed the action as a matter of law, concluding that no causation existed between the accident and the boot drive. Jacobs and Coates appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Citing Jackson v. St., 1998 MT 46, 287 M 473, 956 P2d 35 (1998), the court noted that a judicial determination of duty involves various policy considerations, including: (1) the moral blame attributable to the defendant's conduct; (2) the prevention of future harm; (3) the extent of the burden placed on the defendant; (4) the consequences to the public of imposing that duty; and (5) the availability of insurance for the risk involved. Although a duty may have been owed by the fire department to ensure safe passage at the event itself, the fire department had no duty to ensure that every spectator arrived safely at the event. The fire department did not spill anything or block traffic on the freeway, nor did it create a hazardous condition for travelers coming to and from fire department property. Thus, after evaluating the factors regarding duty, the Supreme Court found no duty owed by the fire department to regulate traffic on or around the interstate highway. Further, in order to sustain a negligence claim, Jacobs and Coates needed to prove not only negligence on the part of the fire department but also a causal relationship between that negligence and the injury. Here, Jacobs and Coates offered no evidence of a causal connection between the accident and the boot drive. Neither of them saw fire department personnel at the off ramp or soliciting donations prior to the accident, no witness testified to any negligent behavior by the fire department personnel who conducted the boot drive, and Jacobs and Coates did not even produce a witness who saw the boot drive at all during that evening. Dismissal as a matter of law was therefore proper. Jacobs v. Laurel Volunteer Fire Dept., 2001 MT 98, 305 M 225, 26 P3d 730 (2001).

Lack of Justification in Relying on Allegedly False Information — Claim of Negligent Misrepresentation Properly Dismissed: Following termination from employment with Bitterroot International Systems, Inc. (Bitterroot), Knutson sought to exercise his buyout rights under the shareholders' agreement. Bitterroot refused to pay and sought rescission on grounds of negligent misrepresentation, alleging that Bitterroot relied on Knutson's allegedly false information regarding the value of stock acquired through purchase of another company. However, the definition of negligent misrepresentation set out in St. Bank of Townsend v. Maryann's, Inc., 204 M 21, 664 P2d 295 (1983), requires that the party asserting that defense was justified in relying on the allegedly false information. In this case, Spencer, majority shareholder and president of both Bitterroot and the company that was acquired, knew the respective values of both companies and their stocks and knew that the book values were disparate at the time of the transaction. Thus, Spencer's assertion that he was misled by Knutson was neither credible nor supported by the record, and the District Court correctly dismissed Spencer's claim of negligent misrepresentation. Knutson v. Bitterroot Int'l Sys., Inc., 2000 MT 203, 300 M 511, 5 P3d 554, 57 St. Rep. 800 (2000).

Misvaluation of Corporate Stock Not Constituting Breach of Fiduciary Duty: Following termination from employment with Bitterroot International Systems, Inc. (Bitterroot), Knutson sought to exercise his buyout rights under the shareholders' agreement. Bitterroot refused to pay and sought rescission on grounds that Knutson breached his fiduciary duty to Bitterroot, arguing that Knutson's mistaken valuation of stock acquired during the purchase of another business constituted a breach of that duty. Bitterroot did not contend that Knutson acted in bad faith, but only that he was wrong about the stock value. Applying the standard in 35-1-443 (now repealed), the Supreme Court found that Knutson's inaccurate stock valuation did not constitute a breach of fiduciary duty and that the District Court did not err in dismissing Bitterroot's claim that Knutson breached his fiduciary obligation. Knutson v. Bitterroot Int'l Sys., Inc., 2000 MT 203, 300 M 511, 5 P3d 554, 57 St. Rep. 800 (2000). See also 18A Am. Jur. 2d Corporations §451 and 18B Am. Jur. 2d Corporations §1705.

Duty of City to Inspect City Property for Hazards: Plaintiff was injured after tripping on a fence wire while walking her dog at night in an unmaintained grassy area on city right-of-way next to a city street. Plaintiff contended that the city was negligent in allowing a dangerous and hazardous condition to exist on a public right-of-way and guilty of negligence per se under 81-4-105 for allowing a public nuisance. The District Court granted summary judgment, determining as a matter of law that the city owed plaintiff no duty of care because: (1) she was not walking on a sidewalk, street, or path of any kind; (2) the city did not invite her to travel in that area; and (3) there were no city lights or signs in the vicinity. On appeal, plaintiff cited Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748 (1997), contending that the city ignored its duty to maintain the public streets, sidewalks, and rights-of-way within corporate limits in a reasonably safe condition for public travel by never going onto the premises, mowing it, raking it, or removing debris and that if routine maintenance had been done, the wire would have been found and removed. The Supreme Court agreed. The city's contention that it did not owe a duty of care in this case, because there was nothing in the area suggesting that it was a walkway or inviting the public to use it as such, failed under the Richardson test because of the city's neglect in exercising ordinary care or skill in the management of its property. Reasonable minds could differ on whether the city should have taken some action to inspect or maintain the property, so summary judgment was improper and thus reversed for a jury determination of negligence, including possible contributory negligence. Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71, 57 St. Rep. 718 (2000).

Double Analysis of Foreseeability in Dispute Over Intervening Act of Third Party — Duty of Police to Protect Hospital Worker From Intoxicated Person in Voluntary Custody: Havre police received a report of two girls fighting downtown. They responded and found two intoxicated women fighting, one of whom appeared to require medical treatment. LaTray was working as a nurse at a hospital emergency room when police officers delivered the woman for treatment, accompanied by her sister. The injured woman was placed in protective custody, but neither woman was arrested. When attempting to administer medical care to the injured woman, LaTray was intentionally assaulted and injured by the sister, and LaTray filed an action against the city police officers for negligently failing to exercise proper control over the sister. The District Court found that because the intentional assault was not reasonably foreseeable as a matter of law, there was no duty owed LaTray by the city, and summary judgment was granted to the city. The Supreme Court held that intervening criminal acts of third persons are not automatically unforeseeable as a matter of law, but rather must be addressed in the foreseeability context on a case-by-case basis (see Starkenburger v. St., 282 M 1, 934 P2d 1018 (1997)). Although foreseeability is ordinarily analyzed only under the duty element of negligence, in a dispute over intervening criminal acts of a third party, foreseeability must be analyzed twice: first with regard to the existence of a legal duty and, second, with regard to proximate causation (see Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999)). The city relied on Phillips v. Billings, 233 M 249, 758 P2d 772 (1988), arguing that because LaTray did not claim the existence of a special relationship or otherwise show that the officers owed LaTray a greater duty of care than that owed to the general public, the city owed LaTray no duty of care. The Supreme Court noted that Phillips has been clarified in Nelson v. Driscoll, 1999 MT 193, 295 M 363, 983 P2d 972 (1999), which stated that a duty to protect third persons arises only when a police officer actually makes an arrest or otherwise takes possession or custody of an individual. Although the officers did not actually arrest the sister or otherwise have a basis for taking her into custody in this case, the officers voluntarily undertook possession or custody in transporting her to the hospital and consequently harbored the ability to control her actions and prevent an unreasonable risk of harm to third persons like LaTray, who falls within the scope of the risk that negligent supervision would foreseeably entail. Thus, the Supreme Court held that, as a matter of law, the city owed a duty of reasonable care to adequately supervise the sister so as to prevent harm to a third person who would foreseeably be placed within the scope of risk arising from negligent supervision. Whether the city breached that duty is an issue for the jury because the causal issue of intervening acts of third parties normally involves questions of fact. Viewed in the light most favorable to LaTray, there was sufficient evidence of the sister's irascible conduct to raise a jury question as to whether she posed a danger to those around her on the day in question, and reasonable jurors could differ as to whether she presented a foreseeable risk of injury to persons in her immediate vicinity. These contested issues of material fact precluded a grant of summary judgment as a matter of law, and the case was reversed and remanded for a new trial. LaTray v. Havre, 2000 MT 119, 299 M 449, 999 P2d 1010, 57 St. Rep. 497 (2000), followed, with regard to appropriateness of summary judgment on issues of negligence, in Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006). See also Morrow v. FBS Ins. Montana-Hoiness LaBar, Inc., 230 M 262, 749 P2d 1073 (1988), and *Estate of Strever v. No Duty Constituting Negligence When Danger or Risk Unforeseeable — Summary Judgment Proper Absent Material Fact Regarding Legal Duty: The father could not reasonably foresee that, by giving his child permission to go to a friend's house to play, the child would go to the house of a different friend, participate along with other children in burning a photograph using gasoline, and be burned when another friend accidentally kicked the container of flaming gasoline onto his child. The duty element of negligence turns primarily on foreseeability, and if a reasonably prudent defendant can foresee neither any danger of direct injury nor any risk from an intervening cause, there is no negligence. Ordinarily, negligence actions involve questions of fact and are not susceptible to summary judgment, but in this case, reasonable minds could not differ regarding the absence of material fact regarding any duty owed by the father, so summary judgment was proper as a matter of law. Poole v. Poole, 2000 MT 117, 299 M 435, 1 P3d 936, 57 St. Rep. 489 (2000), following Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122 (1996). See also Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999), and Gourneau v. Hamill, 2013 MT 300, 372 Mont. 182, 311 P3d 760.

Inherent Danger of Trenching Activity — Vicarious Liability of Employer for Injuries Caused by Subcontractor's Failure to Reduce Risks: Beckman was working to replace a waterline in a trench in Butte when the trench collapsed. At the time, Beckman was an employee of an independent contractor who had been hired by a developer to replace the city waterline as part of the upgrade to another project that the developer was constructing, as required by Butte-Silver Bow. Beckman filed a complaint against Butte-Silver Bow, seeking damages for personal injuries sustained in the collapse. Under Umbs v. Sherrodd, Inc., 246 M 373, 805 P2d 519 (1991), employers are generally not liable for the torts of their independent contractors, except when: (1) there is a nondelegable duty based on a contract; (2) the activity is inherently or intrinsically dangerous; and (3) the general contractor negligently exercises control reserved over a subcontractor's work. The District Court found that trenching activity was not inherently or intrinsically dangerous and granted Butte-Silver Bow's motion for summary judgment. The court, citing Kemp v. Bechtel Constr. Co., 221 M 519, 720 P2d 270 (1986), ruled as a matter of law that trenching activities did not fall under the inherently dangerous exception because Beckman's injury could have been avoided through standard precautions. On appeal, the Supreme Court decided that the analysis of the inherently dangerous activity exception in Kemp was manifestly wrong, and overruled that case and its progeny. Instead, the court reaffirmed the holding in Ulmen v. Schwieger, 92 M 331, 12 P2d 856 (1932), in which it was determined that the vicarious liability of an employer of a subcontractor was contingent on the nature of the work performed and not on the existence of standard precautions. An employer is therefore vicariously liable for injuries to others caused by a subcontractor's failure to take precautions to reduce unreasonable risks associated with engaging in an inherently dangerous activity. Risks associated with people working in trenches where a cave-in can cause death or serious bodily injury are well recognized in the construction industry as intrinsically or inherently dangerous and are recognized as such as a matter of law. Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348, 57 St. Rep. 466 (2000), overruling Micheletto v. St., 244 M 483, 798 P2d 989 (1990), and Kemp v. Big Horn County Elec. Co-op, Inc., 244 M 437, 798 P2d 999 (1990). Beckman was followed in Cunnington v. Gaub, 2007 MT 12, 335 M 296, 153 P3d 1 (2007).

Material Question Whether County Negligently Exercised Control Over Subcontractor as Precluding Summary Judgment: Beckman was working to replace a waterline in a trench in Butte when the trench collapsed. At the time, Beckman was an employee of an independent contractor who had been hired by a developer to replace the city waterline as part of the upgrade to another project that the developer was constructing, as required by Butte-Silver Bow. Beckman filed a complaint against Butte-Silver Bow, seeking damages for personal injuries sustained in the collapse. Under Umbs v. Sherrodd, Inc., 246 M 373, 805 P2d 519 (1991), employers are generally not liable for the torts of their independent contractors, except when: (1) there is a nondelegable duty based on a contract; (2) the activity is inherently or intrinsically dangerous; and (3) the general contractor negligently exercises control reserved over a subcontractor's work. The District Court cited Micheletto v. St., 244 M 483, 798 P2d 989 (1990), and Kemp v. Big Horn County Elec. Co-op, Inc., 244 M 437, 798 P2d 999 (1990), in holding that the county did not assume a nondelegable duty of safety by contract, finding that Butte-Silver Bow never agreed to supervise the safety of the trenching operations and therefore did not assume a nondelegable duty based on contract that extended to Beckman. Thus, summary judgment was granted to Butte-Silver Bow. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the District Court correctly recognized the distinction between a nondelegable contractual duty and a duty based on the negligent exercise of retained control. However, Micheletto and Kemp provide an incorrect statement of the doctrine of retained control. Here, despite the lack of a written contract, the county retained the means with which to both discover and cure any unreasonably dangerous conditions. The terms of the water mains extension document, which provided that the county may supervise the water extension project, required the county to furnish a qualified construction inspector to monitor work performed during the installation of the water supply system and required that the materials and methods of construction conform to county requirements. The terms, combined with the fact that county employees were present during the trenching operation, constituted sufficient facts to preclude summary judgment for the county. The case was reversed and remanded. Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348, 57 St. Rep. 466 (2000). See also Stepanek v. Kober Constr., 191 M 430, 625 P2d 51 (1981).

Improper Jury Instruction Regarding Speed of Train — Applicable Law of Case: Mickelson was injured when the fire truck that he was driving was struck by a Montana Rail Link (MRL) train and sought damages. MRL moved for summary judgment, arguing that the subject of train speed was preempted by CSX Transp., Inc. v. Easterwood, 507 US 658, 123 L Ed 2d 387, 113 S Ct 1732 (1993). The District Court denied MRL's motion, ruling that a negligence action based on a state law duty to slow or stop a train to avoid a specific individual hazard was not preempted under CSX. Nevertheless, the court's instructions to the jury stated that "Under the laws governing the speed of trains, a train crew has no duty to slow a train until a reasonable and prudent train operator has reason to believe, based upon the circumstances present, that the operator of a motor vehicle will not yield to the train and there is a substantial risk of a collision" and that "Montana law does not provide the driver of an emergency vehicle any special privilege in relation to railroad crossings. Emergency vehicle drivers must follow the requirements when approaching and crossing railroad crossings as any other vehicle driver". Following jury deliberations, MRL was found not liable. The Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion in instructing the jury on the speed of trains because the instructions did not state the applicable law of the case. As set out in Runkle v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982 (1980), whether a railroad is negligent in a particular manner, such as failing to reduce train speed, is a question of fact for the jury. Here, the jury instructions improperly removed the question of train speed from jury consideration, compelling the jury to conclude that the train crew did not have a duty to do anything more than they did, rather than deciding whether the facts and circumstances of this case constituted a specific individual hazard. Mickelson v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 111, 299 M 348, 999 P2d 985, 57 St. Rep. 446 (2000).

Expert Testimony Necessary to Establish Applicable Standard of Care Owed by Physician Who Treats Referred Patient — Functional Capacities Evaluation: Even though a physician-patient relationship may not exist when a test is administered at the request of a third party, a physician nevertheless owes a duty to an examinee who is not that physician's patient to exercise care commensurate with the examiner's professional training and experience. The standard of care applicable to the administration of a functional capacities evaluation (FCE) can be established only through expert testimony that takes into account the training and experience of the physical therapist relative to administering the FCE. Romans v. Lusin, 2000 MT 84, 299 M 182, 997 P2d 114, 57 St. Rep. 363 (2000). See also Webb v. T.D., 287 M 68, 951 P2d 1008, 54 St. Rep. 1502 (1997).

School District Not Liable for Injury of Child on Playground — Witness Credibility as Question for Jury — Limited Review of Jury Verdict: The Morgans complained that the school district was liable for a teacher's negligence because their daughter, who needed close supervision, was injured on playground equipment at recess. The jury found in favor of the teacher. The Morgans sought a new trial on grounds of insufficient evidence to support the verdict. The Supreme Court's review of a jury verdict is necessarily very limited, and a jury verdict will not be reversed

if it is supported by substantial credible evidence. The gist of the Morgans' appeal concerned the credibility and consistency of statements made by the only witness to the accident—the teacher. Witness credibility is a matter for determination by the jury after proper instruction from the court. Thus, the Supreme Court deferred to the properly instructed jury's evaluation of the teacher's credibility and affirmed the verdict. Morgan v. Great Falls School District No. 1, 2000 MT 28, 298 M 194, 995 P2d 422, 57 St. Rep. 134 (2000), following Whiting v. St., 248 M 207, 810 P2d 1177, 48 St. Rep. 396 (1991), Lee v. Exch., 1998 MT 286, 291 M 456, 969 P2d 277, 55 St. Rep. 1165 (1998). Morgan was followed, with regard to the limited scope of review of a jury verdict and the test for substantial credible evidence, in Benson v. Diverse Computer Corp., 2004 MT 114, 321 M 140, 89 P3d 981 (2004).

Duty to Preserve Evidence in Relation to Third-Party Spoliator: Generally, in order to prevail in a tort action, plaintiff must show by a preponderance of evidence that defendant breached a legal duty to plaintiff and that the breach was the cause of plaintiff's damages. A duty to preserve evidence may arise in relation to a third-party spoliator when: (1) the spoliator voluntarily undertakes to preserve the evidence and a person reasonably relies on it to that person's detriment; (2) the spoliator entered into an agreement to preserve the evidence; (3) there has been a specific request to the spoliator to preserve the evidence; or (4) there is a duty to do so based upon a contract, statute, regulation, or some other special circumstance or relationship. Oliver v. Stimson Lumber Co., 1999 MT 328, 297 M 336, 993 P2d 11, 56 St. Rep. 1303 (1999). See also Johnson v. United Serv. Auto. Ass'n, 79 Cal. Rep. 2d 234 (Cal. Ct. App. 1998).

Special Relationship of Custody or Control by Prerelease Center — Responsibility for Public Safety Within Zone of Risk — Foreseeability: A prerelease center entered a contract with the Department of Corrections to supervise residents like Gardipee, who walked away from the center and subsequently injured Lopez. The District Court granted summary judgment for the center on grounds that the attack on Lopez was unforeseeable. Generally, there is no duty to protect others against harm by third persons, but in this case, the contract created a special relationship of custody or control, in turn creating a special responsibility upon the center to protect those members of the public who would be placed within the foreseeable zone of risk created by negligent supervision of a prerelease resident. As a matter of law, the center owed a duty of reasonable care to all persons present within the zone of danger created by the center's failure to exercise reasonable care in supervising Gardipee. Here, reasonable minds could differ as to whether it was reasonably foreseeable by the center that a failure to supervise Gardipee could pose an unreasonable risk of harm to Lopez in particular. There was a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the center knew or should have known that there was enmity between Gardipee and Lopez and a possibility of violence if Gardipee escaped, as well as whether Gardipee's attack was a superseding cause of the harm to Lopez. Both questions were suitable for resolution by a trier of fact, precluding summary judgment. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded for a trial on the merits. Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081, 56 St. Rep. 771 (1999).

Actionable Section 1983 Claim Under State-Created Danger Theory: A government official who, while acting under color of state law, deprives an individual of constitutionally protected rights may be subject to personal liability for civil damages pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 1983. Generally, a government official's failure to protect an individual from harm does not constitute a due process violation. Inaction by the state, even when a danger is known, does not trigger a due process obligation except under the "state-created danger" theory, derived from DeShaney v. Winnebago County Dept. of Social Services, 489 US 189, 103 L Ed 2d 249, 109 S Ct 998 (1989), which provides that a constitutional duty to protect may be imposed when state actors have affirmatively acted to create plaintiff's danger or to render plaintiff more vulnerable to it. Adopting the test in Huffman v. County of Los Angeles, 147 F3d 1054 (9th Cir. 1998), the Supreme Court held that to assert an actionable 42 U.S.C. 1983 claim under the state-created danger theory, plaintiff must demonstrate that the state acted affirmatively, with deliberate indifference, in creating a foreseeable danger to plaintiff, leading to deprivation of plaintiff's constitutional rights. In the present case, material facts existed as to whether an officer affirmatively and with deliberate indifference placed a woman in danger, increased her vulnerability to danger, or deprived her of her right to life; thus, summary dismissal of her husband's personal liability claim against the officer was reversible error. Nelson v. Driscoll, 1999 MT 193, 295 M 363, 983 P2d 972, 56 St. Rep. 744 (1999). See also Wood v. Ostrander, 879 F2d 583 (9th Cir. 1989), and Kneipp v. Tedder, 95 F3d 1199 (3rd Cir. 1996).

Public Duty Doctrine as Applied to Law Enforcement Personnel — Exception in Cases of Special Relationship: Trina admitted that she had been drinking when stopped in her vehicle by Officer Driscoll, who nevertheless believed that sufficient probable cause did not exist to arrest the woman. Instead, thinking Trina might be impaired, the officer suggested a ride home or that Trina walk the 2-mile distance and warned Trina about returning to the vehicle. Trina decided instead to walk to a phone and call for a ride and was killed in traffic. Trina's husband brought suit for civil damages under 42 U.S.C. 1983, claiming that the officer breached the duty to protect, in violation of Trina's due process rights. The District Court summarily dismissed the claim, holding that because no probable cause existed for Trina's arrest, the officer had no duty to protect Trina from harm and that without a duty, the action failed. The public duty doctrine provides that a police officer's duty to protect and preserve the peace is owed to the public at large rather than to a particular person, unless a special relationship exists, thus giving rise to a special duty that is more particular than that owed to the public. A special relationship is established: (1) by a statute intended to protect a specific class of persons, of which the plaintiff is a member, from a particular type of harm; (2) when a government agent undertakes specific action to protect a person or property; (3) by governmental actions that reasonably induce detrimental reliance by a member of the public; and (4) under certain circumstances when the agency has actual custody of the plaintiff or of a third person who harms the plaintiff. Relying on Stewart v. Standard Publishing Co., 102 M 43, 55 P2d 694 (1936), the Supreme Court agreed that although the officer may not have initially owed Trina a duty to protect, that duty was assumed as a matter of law when the officer prevented the woman from driving her car and ensured that she did not attempt to drive. The question of whether the duty to protect was breached is a question of fact for the jury, so summary dismissal was improper. *Nelson v. Sufficient Evidence of No Manufacturing Defect in Tractor Kingpin: Having been properly instructed in product liability law, the jury found that a kingpin, which is the device by which a trailer is attached to a tractor, did not have a manufacturing or design defect at the time of sale that rendered it a defectively designed product, for the manufacture of which liability would ascribe. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, finding the following substantial evidence in support of the jury's decision: (1) two experts testified that any component subject to cyclic loading will develop fatigue cracking in service; (2) an expert testified that the kingpin was adequately radiused with a stress relief groove that allowed the kingpin to properly bottom on the attachment plate, opining that if the kingpin were designed with a larger radius, the stress relief groove would be eliminated and the kingpin would not properly bottom on the attachment plate; and (3) gouges in the kingpin indicated that it may have been abused or misused during its lifetime. The jury's findings were not inherently impossible to believe, so judgment was affirmed. Baldauf v. Arrow Tank & Eng'r Co., Inc., 1999 MT 81, 294 M 107, 979 P2d 166, 56 St. Rep. 337 (1999).

Question of Duty of Highway Contractors to Maintain Road Construction Site in Reasonably Safe Condition — Summary Judgment Precluded: Schmidt was injured on his motorcycle in a road construction area. He sued the contractor, Washington Contractors Group, and the subcontractor, Alpine Construction, for personal injuries. The District Court entered summary judgment for Washington and Alpine, concluding that significant uncontroverted evidence supported the theory that neither breached its standard of care. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that both Washington and Alpine had a duty of ordinary care in maintaining the road construction site in a reasonably safe condition, not the duty of a possessor of premises as in Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748, 54 St. Rep. 1422 (1997), but rather the duty of acting as a reasonable, prudent person would under the circumstances. Questions of fact remained as to: (1) whether the contractors complied with the Manual of Uniform Traffic Control Devices (MUTCD) and, if so, whether mere compliance equated with the exercise of due care, given the condition of the exit ramp; (2) where warning road signs were placed and whether the placement complied with the MUTCD; (3) whether the pavement height differential was unreasonably dangerous to motorcycles; and (4) whether evidence of three other motorcycle accidents that happened at the same spot within 72 hours of Schmidt's accident was sufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact regarding whether the contractors were on notice of an unreasonably dangerous condition that required remediation and possibly warnings over and above the requirements of the MUTCD. Reasonable minds could differ regarding whether a breach of the contractors' duty of ordinary care caused Schmidt's accident and subsequent damages; therefore, summary judgment was precluded, and the case was reversed and remanded for further proceedings. Schmidt v. Washington Contractors Group, Inc., 1998 MT 194, 290 M 276, 964 P2d 34, 55 St. Rep. 814 (1998), distinguishing Wiley v. Glendive, 272 M 213, 900 P2d 310 (1995), and followed in *Faulconbridge v. No Duty of Attorney to Nonclient in Child Custody Case: An attorney must be able to vigorously advocate a client's interests in litigation without being compromised by obligations to nonclients. If an attorney were considered to owe the same duty of care to both a parent and child in an adversarial custody case, neither parent nor child would be served effectively. Because the interests of a parent and those of a child may not be identical, the attorney's duty runs solely to the client except if the conduct rises to the level of deceit or collusion or is intentionally reckless. Rhode v. Adams, 1998 MT 73, 288 M 278, 957 P2d 1124, 55 St. Rep. 303 (1998). See also Crane Creek Ranch, Inc. v. Cresap, 2004 MT 351, 324 M 366, 103 P3d 535 (2004), and *Redies v. Full and Accurate Disclosure of Adoption Information Required: The Jacksons' adoptive son required extensive medical and psychological therapy. The Jacksons sued the state, contending that the state had a legal duty to inform them of the boy's condition and of his parents' medical backgrounds and that failure to do so constituted negligent misrepresentation, negligent nondisclosure, negligence based on lack of informed consent, and negligent supervision. The state contended that the imposition of a common-law or statutory duty to disclose the background information would conflict with its duty to maintain confidentiality of the birth parents' medical records. The District Court dismissed the claims, concluding that the state owed the Jacksons no duty of care upon which the negligence claims could be premised. Citing the opinions of several courts of other states, the Supreme Court held that recognizing a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation in the adoption context would promote public policy and ensure that adoptive parents would assume parenting responsibilities in an informed manner. Anything less than the exercise of due care in the dissemination of information to prospective adoptive parents is unacceptable. Although a slight burden is imposed on the state in providing the information, that burden is justified in light of the compelling need for adoptive parents to receive all available information regarding a child who might soon be a permanent member of the family. Full disclosure of a child's medical and familial background is warranted not only to enable adoptive parents to obtain timely and appropriate medical care for the child but also to enable them to make an intelligent and informed decision to adopt. Summary judgment was reversed. (Note: See 42-3-101, wherein the 1997 Legislature enacted a statutory requirement that social and medical histories of the birth families must be provided to a prospective adoptive parent.) Jackson v. St., 1998 MT 46, 287 M 473, 956 P2d 35, 55 St. Rep. 183 (1998).

Physician's Standard of Care Toward Examinee Sent to Physician by Examinee's Employer or Insurer or by Some Other Third Party: At the request of the workers' compensation insurer of an injured worker's employer, a physician examined the worker. He reported his findings to, and his fee was paid by, the insurer. He wrote the worker a letter telling her that she had a back sprain, that no treatment was needed, and that she had an impairment rating of 2% of the whole person. She went back to work, suffered a severely herniated disc in her back, and has significant physical limitations as a result. She sued the doctor for negligence. He claimed that he did not have a physician-patient relationship with her and therefore had no duty of care toward her. The Supreme Court held that based on this section, a physician who performs an examination of an employee, insured, or other person at the request of a third party has a duty to exercise the level of care required by the physician's professional training and experience and the duty to exercise ordinary care to: (1) discover those conditions that pose imminent danger to the examinee's physical and mental well-being; (2) take reasonable steps to communicate any such condition to the examinee; and (3) ensure that when the physician advises an examinee about a condition, the advice comports with the standard of care for the profession. The court stated that it was not thereby concluding that the physician has the same duty of care as toward a patient. Webb v. T.D., 287 M 68, 951 P2d 1008, 54 St. Rep. 1502 (1997).

Absence of Evidence of Defective Vehicle Window Design — Failure to Warn Not Defect — Jury Verdict Affirmed: As Wise drove a Ford Escort through a car wash, one of the side windows imploded when water was sprayed on it, injuring Wise, who sued Ford Motor Company for damages. The District Court properly applied the standards of product tort liability, including Ford's liability for failure to warn of a danger in its product as a separate theory of product liability. Alternate causes of the breakage were not necessarily eliminated, and the jury could have found that Wise did not meet his burden of proof by way of circumstantial evidence. The jury found in favor of Ford. Evidence supported the verdict that the vehicle was not defectively designed or defective for Ford's failure to warn that the side windows could break. Because the jury had substantial evidence upon which to base its decision that the vehicle did not have an unreasonably dangerous defective condition, judgment was affirmed. Wise v. Ford Motor Co., 284 M 336, 943 P2d 1310, 54 St. Rep. 909 (1997).

Mortgagee's Right to Assert, on Mortgagee's Behalf, Mortgagor's Contract and Tort Claims for Damage to Property: The mortgagee alleged that the engineering firm hired by the mortgagor knowingly laid improper pipe in the land, resulting in the state's disapproval of the pipe. The mortgagee could not sue the engineering firm for breach of contract and for breach of professional duty owed to the mortgagor under the theory that the mortgagee was a direct creditor of the mortgagor and was entitled to execute on any asset of the mortgagor and that the contract and breach of professional duty claims were assets. The mortgagee would have to be a judgment creditor of the mortgagor with a claim against the mortgagor that had been reduced to judgment before the mortgagee could sue the engineering firm for breach of the firm's contract with and professional duty to the mortgagor. Turner v. Kerin & Associates, 283 M 117, 938 P2d 1368, 54 St. Rep. 522 (1997).

Insurance Agent's Failure to Procure Requested Coverage — Duty of Insured to Read Policy and Confirm Requested Coverage: The jury reasonably found that it was not unreasonable for husband and wife to have not read the insurance policy covering their outfitting business and that it was reasonable for them to act in reliance upon the representations of their insurance agent. The insureds did not have an absolute duty to read the policy. Failure to read a policy might amount to contributory negligence, but that is a question for the jury. The husband testified that he asked the agent for a policy that would cover everything, especially if someone were hurt on a horse, and that he was told that it would. He asked the same question for a number of years each time that the policy was renewed and was always given an affirmative answer. The agent testified that the husband frequently asked about and was concerned about "horse rider" coverage. When an accident occurred involving a horse, the agent told the husband that the bills would be paid. However, the insurance company failed to pay the bills, and the insured sued the agent for negligence and breach of contract. Fillinger v. NW. Agency, Inc., of Great Falls, 283 M 71, 938 P2d 1347, 54 St. Rep. 500 (1997). See also Bailey v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2013 MT 119, 370 Mont. 73, 300 P.3d 1149, in which the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court's award of summary judgment to the insurer was improper because a genuine issue of material fact existed as to why discrepancies in coverage occurred when the insureds transferred their automobile policy from Oregon to Montana and requested that the insurer procure the same coverage.

Parole Officer Duty of Care to Supervise Parolees — Jury Instruction Properly Given: Corliss was paroled, after serving time for an execution-style slaying with a handgun, under the condition that he not possess a firearm. While on a visit, with the approval of his parole officer, to Washington state to look for work, Corliss failed to return to Montana within the established time, failed to see a parole officer in Washington, had a temporary restraining order obtained against him by a girlfriend because of threats made to her and her family, and had an altercation with his wife involving a handgun. In neither instance of violence did Corliss's parole officer investigate the circumstances of the violence. Later, Corliss shot and killed one friend of his girlfriend and injured another. Both the estates of the deceased woman and the wounded woman brought actions against the state for negligent supervision of Corliss's parole. The state objected to an instruction given by the District Court concerning a parole officer's duty of care, claiming that there must be some special relationship between the parole officer and the person injured by a parolee in order for a duty of care to arise. The Supreme Court reviewed statutes defining negligence, statutes describing the general duty of one individual toward another, and statutes concerning parole and concluded that Robbins had a general duty to exercise reasonable care in the supervision of Corliss and had a duty to the killed and injured women in particular. Starkenburg v. St., 282 M 1, 934 P2d 1018, 54 St. Rep. 214 (1997). See also Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081, 56 St. Rep. 771 (1999).

Federal Law — Duty of Care Owed by General Contractor to Subcontractor's Employee — Inherent Danger Exception: Felling of trees in a right-of-way corridor in a national forest where over 20% of the trees were snags and where all trees had to be felled was inherently dangerous under Montana law. Therefore, the United States had a nondelegable duty to ensure that the logging contractor employed proper safety precautions, and breach of duty rendered the United States liable to an injured logger under the Federal Tort Claims Act. McMillan v. U.S., 112 F3d 1040 (9th Cir. 1997).

Duty of Care of Firearm Owner — Independent Intervening Criminal and Negligent Acts as Superseding Firearm Owner's Negligent Breach of Duty: An 11-year-old boy died as the result of a gunshot wound inflicted with a handgun stolen by the boy and three friends from under the seat of Susanj's vehicle. The boy's mother brought a negligence action against Susanj, claiming that his act of leaving the vehicle unattended and unlocked in a public thoroughfare contributed to the boy's death. The District Court summarily dismissed the action after determining that Susanj owed no legal duty to the boy because: (1) Susanj was unaware of previous thefts in the area that would compel him to lock his vehicle; (2) Susanj did not allow entry into the vehicle; (3) Susanj did not have an open display of the firearm that would lure the boys into the vehicle to steal the weapon; and (4) the boy was not an innocent party, but rather a participant in the burglary. However, the Supreme Court stated that given the foreseeability of the risk involved in the improper and unsafe use and storage of a firearm and the strong policy considerations favoring safe and prudent use and storage, as a matter of law, a firearm owner has a duty to the general public to use and store a firearm in a safe and prudent manner, taking into consideration the type of firearm, whether it is loaded or unloaded, whether the ammunition is in close proximity or easily attainable, and the location and circumstances of its use and storage. Susanj's failure to exercise ordinary care in storing a dangerous instrumentality like a loaded handgun and ammunition under the seat of his unlocked vehicle constituted a breach of the duty of care. However, the boys' two intervening criminal acts of theft from the vehicle and the intervening grossly negligent act of one boy waving the gun around with his finger on the trigger and trying to unload the gun while high on marijuana were reasonably unforeseeable and cut off all liability on Susanj's part for the boy's death. Summary dismissal of the negligence action was proper based on the independent superseding criminal and grossly negligent acts. (See 27-1-709.) Estate of Strever v. St., 259 M 393, 856 P2d 954 (1993), stating that if a plaintiff's injury is caused by the intervening acts of a third party, the defendant's actions cannot be viewed as the proximate cause of the injury, and distinguished in *Cusenbary v. Sale of Home by Realtors — Negligent Misrepresentation, Actual and Constructive Fraud, and Real Estate Licensing and Consumer Protection Laws — Expert Witnesses Unnecessary to Prove Standard of Care: Durbins purchased a home through the seller's realtors. Contrary to the representations of the realtors, Durbins discovered that the property had no legal septic system, that the household water was unsafe to use for any purpose, and that the access road was located on the neighbor's property. Durbins brought an action against the realtors, alleging negligent misrepresentation, actual and constructive fraud, and statutory violations involving the Montana real estate licensing laws and the Montana Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act of 1973. The defendants sought and achieved dismissal of the case on the grounds that Durbins failed to prove through expert testimony the applicable standard of care of the realtors. The Supreme Court held that because Durbins did not allege professional misrepresentation, the issues of whether the realtors negligently misrepresented the facts, were guilty of actual or constructive fraud, or were guilty of the statutory violations alleged by Durbins, were questions resolvable by common knowledge. The questions did not turn on a standard peculiarly within the knowledge of an expert witness, and scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge was not necessary to assist the jury. The Supreme Court therefore held that Durbins were not required to provide expert standard of care testimony to establish any of the violations. Durbin v. Ross, 276 M 463, 916 P2d 758, 53 St. Rep. 471 (1996).

Landowner's Duty Toward Employee-Painter Who Fell off Ladder: Porter and his wife owned a business named Personal Touch Services. Galarneau hired them to do miscellaneous work at his house, including cleaning, grounds maintenance, repairs, and painting. While preparing to paint a 22-foot-high inside wall, Porter fell off a ladder that he had borrowed. He died later in the day. Galarneau was in his business office in Minnesota at the time of the fall. Galarneau had no common-law landowner duty toward Porter beyond maintaining his premises in a reasonably safe condition and warning of hidden or lurking dangers, and there was no evidence that he breached that duty. Porter v. Galarneau, 275 M 174, 911 P2d 1143, 53 St. Rep. 99 (1996).

Negligent Failure to Illuminate Sidewalk as Question of Fact — Resolution by Jury Rather Than Summary Judgment: Brown was injured on Demaree's unlit sidewalk stepdown landing while delivering a newspaper. The trial court granted Demaree's motion for summary judgment, holding that while a property owner has a duty to maintain sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition and to warn of hidden and lurking dangers, Demaree had done all that society could reasonably ask in this regard. The court noted that Brown had carried a flashlight but chose not to use it and that requiring a home owner to constantly illuminate property would place an unreasonable burden on the home owner that the law did not contemplate. Ordinarily, negligence actions involve questions of fact and are not susceptible to summary judgment. In this case, reasonable minds could differ on whether Demaree should have illuminated the sidewalk or warned of the sidewalk stepdown landing and the question should have been resolved by a jury. The test to be applied by the jury is not whether some other landowner under different factual circumstances is or is not required to illuminate property, but rather whether the landowner keeps a premises reasonably safe and warns of hidden dangers while taking into consideration the use to which the property is put and its setting, location, and other physical characteristics, along with the type of person who would foreseeably visit the premises and the type of hazard or unsafe condition alleged. Summary judgment was reversed, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Brown v. Demaree, 272 M 579, 901 P2d 567, 52 St. Rep. 819 (1995), following Limberhand v. Big Ditch Co., 218 M 132, 706 P2d 491 (1985), and distinguishing Fuchs v. Huether, 154 M 11, 459 P2d 689 (1969). See also Welton v. Lucas, 283 M 202, 940 P2d 112, 54 St. Rep. 562 (1997).

Duty of Seller of Used Automobile — Jury Instructions: The jury found defendant not negligent in the death of the plaintiff's wife by carbon monoxide poisoning resulting from a faulty exhaust system on a used car sold by defendant. Plaintiff appealed on grounds that the District Court failed to properly instruct the jury based on the evidence presented and the applicable law. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the District Court has discretion when deciding how to instruct a jury and the Supreme Court will not overturn that decision absent an abuse of discretion. The seller of used automobiles has a duty to discover and repair defects that are patent and discoverable through a reasonable inspection. After the vehicle is sold, the owner has a duty to maintain the vehicle in a reasonably safe condition. Foley v. Harrison Ave. Motor Co., 267 M 200, 883 P2d 100, 51 St. Rep. 1042 (1994).

Ski Area's Duties Not Limited to Statutory Duties: In response to an injured skier's allegations of negligence, the ski area asserted that its duties were limited to those set forth in 23-2-733 and that because the skier did not allege any breach of the statutory duties, the ski area was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Applying a court's role in statutory construction to simply ascertain and declare what is contained in the section's terms and substance without inserting what has been omitted, the Supreme Court found that in neither the original enactment of 23-2-733 nor in subsequent amendments did the Legislature provide that a ski area's only duties were those enumerated in that section and that there was no other duty of due care owed by operators to skiers. The duty of due care is imposed by this section. In holding that the operator's duties were not limited to those listed in 23-2-733, the court interpreted the statute in a way that would give it effect rather than in a way that would render it unconstitutional. Mead v. M.S.B., Inc., 264 M 465, 872 P2d 782, 51 St. Rep. 348 (1994).

Malpractice Action Against Veterinarians to Be Supported by Expert Testimony: Zimmerman argued that the lower court erred in dismissing his suit for malpractice against Robertson, a veterinarian, on the basis that Zimmerman had failed to produce any expert medical testimony supporting his claims. In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court extended the requirement for expert testimony to malpractice suits against veterinarians. Zimmerman v. Robertson, 259 M 105, 854 P2d 338, 50 St. Rep. 703 (1993), followed in Newville v. St., 267 M 237, 883 P2d 793, 51 St. Rep. 758 (1994), requiring expert testimony in a negligence action against a counselor. Newville was followed in May v. ERA Landmark Real Estate of Bozeman, 2000 MT 299, 302 M 326, 15 P3d 1179, 57 St. Rep. 1256 (2000), requiring expert testimony to establish a standard of care in a negligence action against a real estate agent.

National Standard of Care Rejected to Ensure Provision of Medical Services to Rural Communities — Expert Witness Subject to Locality Rule: Falcon brought a medical malpractice suit on behalf of his mother's estate, alleging that the treatment she had received in 1988 was not up to the legal standard of medical care promulgated by the national accrediting organization under which the hospital had elected to operate. The Supreme Court held that, as a matter of public policy, in order to ensure that medical services would be provided to rural communities, the national standards did not apply. The court also affirmed the lower court's decision to exclude the testimony of the plaintiff's expert witness because the witness was not familiar with the standard of practice in Glasgow or a similar Montana locality. The court also held that a defendant doctor is entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law if the plaintiff fails to establish the applicable standard of care by competent medical testimony. Falcon v. Cheung, 257 M 296, 848 P2d 1050, 50 St. Rep. 276 (1993).

Licensee or Invitee — Duty of Care: While visiting her son Brian and his family in Texas for the holidays, Doris was asked to show the family home to prospective buyers while Brian was at work. To enhance the appearance of the kitchen, Doris washed and waxed the floor, but she slipped on a wet spot and broke her hip and then sued Brian for negligence. Doris maintained that she was an invitee because her showing the house conferred an economic benefit on Brian and that Brian therefore had a duty to exercise reasonable care to eliminate a condition that posed an unreasonable risk of harm to her, of which he had either actual or constructive knowledge. Brian maintained that his mother was only a licensee because the primary purpose of her visit was to spend time with the family and that the incidental chores undertaken by her as licensee did not convert her status to that of invitee. (See also Prestwood v. Taylor, 728 SW 2d 455 (Tex. Ct. App. 1987).) The trial court properly held that Doris was a licensee because there was no evidence of business dealings between the parties or actual pecuniary benefit to Brian. Brian's liability was conditioned on his actual knowledge that the defect existed and that it was dangerous. (See also St. v. Tennison, 509 SW 2d 560 (Tex. 1974).) Absent proof of his actual knowledge of the dangerous condition, Brian had no duty to warn Doris or to repair the defect. Barrows v. Barrows, 256 M 78, 844 P2d 119, 49 St. Rep. 1145 (1992).

No Direct Relationship Between Outrageous Event and Third Party — No Extension of Liability for Emotional Distress: Maguire's mentally disabled daughter was raped and impregnated while a resident at the Montana Developmental Center (MDC). The District Court allowed Maguire to maintain an action in tort for emotional distress related to the stress caused by Maguire's being required to make her daughter's pregnancy decisions. Applying the guidelines in Versland v. Caron Transport, 206 M 313, 671 P2d 583 (1983), for determining whether there was a negligent infliction of emotional distress, the Supreme Court held that because no direct relationship existed between any outrageous act and Maguire, to find an independent cause of action went beyond the rationale of Versland and the requirement of the victim's physical presence at the accident or event. Faced with the question of whether the causation and the foreseeability requirements were met when the presence requirement was not, the court found that MDC did not assume a duty of care toward Maguire. Refusing to increase the spiral of liability beyond that determined by other jurisdictions, the court declined to extend liability to allow Maguire to recover for either negligent or intentional infliction of severe emotional distress. Maguire v. St., 254 M 178, 835 P2d 755, 49 St. Rep. 688 (1992), followed in Estate of Strever v. Cline, 278 M 165, 924 P2d 666, 53 St. Rep. 576 (1996).

State's Duty to Provide Institutional Care: The state has a duty under 53-20-142, not inconsistent with the theories of negligent hiring, negligent supervision, and agency, to provide proper care for persons admitted to a residential facility, and it was error for the District Court to refuse to instruct on those theories in a case in which that statutory duty was called into question. Maguire v. St., 254 M 178, 835 P2d 755, 49 St. Rep. 688 (1992).

Evidence of Adequate Medical Care — Jury Finding of Lack of Medical Malpractice Affirmed: On appeal from judgment based on a jury verdict finding no medical malpractice for injuries sustained by a premature infant, the Supreme Court affirmed, finding sufficient evidence derived from expert testimony to establish a reasonable basis for the jury conclusion that medical care met or exceeded the applicable standard of care under the circumstances. Silvis v. Hobbs, 251 M 407, 824 P2d 1013, 49 St. Rep. 62 (1992).

Landowner's Act Increasing Hazard: The defendant landowner argued that it could not be held liable for the plaintiff's injury when its only affirmative act was to remove the accumulated snow on a walkway. The Supreme Court held that the question of whether a landowner's action increased an existing hazard was a proper one for the jury. Davis v. Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, 244 M 61, 796 P2d 181, 47 St. Rep. 1302 (1990), overruled, as to the distinction between liability based upon natural versus altered accumulations of ice or snow that are open and obvious, in Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748, 54 St. Rep. 1422 (1997).

Employer's Duty of Care in Termination of Employees: The plaintiff, based upon a theory of negligence, alleged that the employer had a duty to exercise reasonable care in carrying out decisions concerning the termination of employees. The Supreme Court held that an employer had no duty to use reasonable care in decisionmaking. The court went on to state that a terminated employee's claim could be based only on the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. A breach of the covenant must be based on an intentional act by the employer. Heltborg v. Modern Mach., 244 M 24, 795 P2d 954, 47 St. Rep. 1254 (1990), followed in Kittelson v. Archie Cochrane Motors, Inc., 248 M 512, 813 P2d 424, 48 St. Rep. 535 (1991).

Theory of Nondelegable Duty Inapplicable to Provision of Nonemergency Hospital Services: Plaintiffs contended that they were entitled to partial summary judgment on the issue of a hospital's vicarious liability under the theory that the hospital had a nondelegable duty to provide safe radiology services to the public, relying on Jackson v. Power, 743 P2d 1376 (Alaska 1987). The Supreme Court distinguished Jackson as limited to emergency room treatment by a doctor provided by a hospital and not extending to the situation where a patient is treated by his own doctor in an emergency room provided by the hospital as a convenience to doctors. The court affirmed the general rule that a hospital is not liable for the negligence of a physician functioning as an independent contractor and that the doctor rather than the hospital has the primary duty to provide for the treatment of his patients. Estates of Milliron v. Francke, 243 M 200, 793 P2d 824, 47 St. Rep. 1134 (1990).

Near Privity Rule Applied to Accountants: The plaintiff brought an action against an accountant for negligent performance of an audit and negligent misrepresentation of financial information. The plaintiff had not retained the defendant but had relied on the audit in purchasing a business from the party that had requested the audit. The Supreme Court adopted the "near privity" rule, stating that an accountant may owe a duty to a third party but only if the accountant knows that a specific third party intends to rely on his work and only if the reliance is in connection to a particular transaction of which the accountant is aware. Thayer v. Hicks, 243 M 138, 793 P2d 784, 47 St. Rep. 1082 (1990), followed in Durbin v. Ross, 276 M 463, 916 P2d 758, 53 St. Rep. 471 (1996). See also W. Sec. Bank v. Eide Bailly, LLP, 2010 MT 291, 359 Mont. 34, 249 P.3d 35.

General Practitioner's Standard of Care — Geographical Limitation Eliminated: The Supreme Court adopted a new standard of care to be applied prospectively to treatment extended to patients, commencing on March 31, 1990. The court ruled that a nonboard-certified general practitioner is held to the standard of care of a reasonably competent general practitioner acting in the same or similar circumstances in the same or a similar community in the United States. The new rule abandons the "locality" rule that was limited to Montana communities and reverses anything to the contrary in Tallbull v. Whitney, 172 M 326, 564 P2d 162 (1977). Chapel v. Allison, 241 M 83, 785 P2d 204, 47 St. Rep. 101 (1990).

No Duty Owing to Student Injured in Extracurricular Activity During Summer: The plaintiff, a high school student, sustained injuries while attending a privately sponsored summer cheerleading clinic. She sued her high school district as the party responsible for its students during extracurricular activities and as principal of its agent, the cheerleading adviser, for negligent supervision. In the plaintiff's appeal of summary judgment in favor of the school district, the Supreme Court held that a school does not owe a duty to a student for an extracurricular activity during the summer months when the activity is governed by independent parties. Rollins v. Blair, 235 M 343, 767 P2d 328, 46 St. Rep. 39 (1989).

No Duty to Protect Absent Probable Cause to Arrest — No Police Negligence: A car driven by Buffalohorn entered an intersection against a red light and collided with a car occupied by Phillips and Hake, who suffered injuries. Buffalohorn was intoxicated at the time of the accident. About 2 hours prior to the accident, police detained and questioned Buffalohorn in connection with another accident, but at that time it was determined that Buffalohorn was not involved or extremely intoxicated. The Supreme Court rejected Phillips' argument that under Restatement (Second) of Torts 319 (1965), the officers had a duty to control Buffalohorn's potentially dangerous actions because imposition of a duty under section 319 depends on the ability to control the third person. Absent probable cause to arrest, no duty flowed from the officers to Phillips to protect Phillips from later actions of Buffalohorn, and Phillips' claim of police negligence was summarily dismissed. Phillips v. Billings, 233 M 249, 758 P2d 772, 45 St. Rep. 1463 (1988), followed in Estate of Strever v. Cline, 278 M 165, 924 P2d 666, 53 St. Rep. 576 (1996), and distinguished in Nelson v. Driscoll, 1999 MT 193, 295 M 363, 983 P2d 972, 56 St. Rep. 744 (1999), clarifying that the imposition of a duty to protect under Restatement (Second) of Torts 319 (1965) depends on whether the officer takes charge of the alleged dangerous person and that the officer's duty to protect is owed to third persons, not to the person with whom the officer has a custodial relationship.

Standard of Care of Licensed Minor Driver: It was error for the District Court to give an instruction in a pedestrian/automobile accident case stating that a child is not held to the same standard of care as an adult. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that a 16-year-old with a valid Montana driver's license is held to the same standard of care while driving an automobile as an adult in the same circumstances. Cooper v. Rosston, 232 M 186, 756 P2d 1125, 45 St. Rep. 978 (1988).

Attorney Not Negligent for Preparation of Fill-in-the-Blank Contracts: Defendant sought indemnification for damages from his former attorney, alleging that but for the attorney's negligence, he would not be in breach of contract. The attorney had prepared fill-in-the-blank contracts for defendant's use in land purchases. The attorney was absolved from liability for defendant's failure to perform under the contract terms because the attorney drafted the contracts with a reasonable degree of care for defendant's purposes, he based the contract on information supplied by defendant, and he made no guarantee of the validity of the instrument. Schilke v. Bean, 232 M 125, 755 P2d 565, 45 St. Rep. 930 (1988).

FELA, Not State Statutory Law, as Providing Remedy for Common Law Claims: Claimant sought compensation from a Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) self-insurer for an alleged breach of the common law duty of good faith and fair dealing. Claimant argued that because FELA did not specifically address the problem of unfair claims settlement practices, the duties imposed by Montana statutory and common law were not preempted by FELA and should apply. The federal District Court found no authority for this novel proposition in holding that the rights and duties of an employee and employer subject to FELA depend on the terms of the Act itself and on common law as interpreted by the federal courts; therefore, FELA presents the exclusive remedy in all actions falling within the ambit of the Act to the exclusion of state statutory and common law. Toscano v. Burlington N. RR Co., 678 F. Supp. 1477, 45 St. Rep. 367 (D.C. Mont. 1987).

Summary Judgment Proper Upon Failure to Show Evidence of Due Care: When a fire, caused by a floating power line, burned plaintiff's house and property, the District Court granted partial summary judgment, ruling that Montana Power Company (MPC) negligently failed to exercise the proper duty of care in the inspection and maintenance of its utility lines. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the grant of summary judgment, ruling that when the defendant has a high standard of care and the plaintiff provides clear evidence of negligence, it becomes incumbent upon the defendant to provide evidence to show due care was exercised. If the defendant fails to provide such evidence, summary judgment is proper. Ogden v. Mont. Power Co., 229 M 387, 747 P2d 201, 44 St. Rep. 2068 (1987).

Ranch Owner Not "Keeper" of Dog — Summary Judgment Proper: A meter reader bitten by a dog while delivering a company calendar sued both the ranch foreman who owned the dog and the ranch owner, contending the ranch owner was jointly responsible as "keeper" of the dog. The District Court found that the ranch owner was not the "keeper" of the dog, as described in 3A C.J.S. Animals 205(b), since he did not own, have possession of, manage, control, or care for the animal as owners are accustomed to do. Since the ranch owner had provided materials to the foreman to build a fence and dog pen and an agreement was made to keep the dog in the pen unless accompanied by the foreman, the ranch owner clearly met the duty of reasonable and ordinary care required of Montana landowners. There being no factual question whether the ranch owner was the animal's "keeper", summary judgment was proper. Criswell v. Brewer, 228 M 143, 741 P2d 418, 44 St. Rep. 1408 (1987), followed in Vennes v. Miller, 1998 MT 23, 287 M 263, 954 P2d 736, 55 St. Rep. 84 (1998), and distinguished in Knapton v. Monk, 2015 MT 111, 379 Mont. 1, 347 P.3d 1257.

Failure of Alter Ego and Principal/Agency Theories in Proving Duty of Parent Company to Provide Safe Workplace — No Separate Liability for Injury Covered by Subsidiary's Workers' Compensation: Plaintiff was an employee of a subsidiary company and argued that the subsidiary was so controlled by the parent company that the corporate cloak should be cast aside allowing suit against the parent company. The Supreme Court found no suggestion that the parent company was engaged directly in the business of the subsidiary or that the parent company was an operating entity engaged in operating its business at the place of injury. There was no indication that the subsidiary was used as a subterfuge to defeat public convenience, justify wrong, or perpetuate fraud; therefore, summary judgment was not precluded by the alter ego or principal/agency theory. Further, the subsidiary had discharged its responsibility for plaintiff by securing workers' compensation insurance, with the result that neither the parent company nor its subsidiary would be separately subject to liability for the injury which was covered by workers' compensation. Thornock v. Pack River Management Co., 227 M 524, 740 P2d 1119, 44 St. Rep. 1284 (1987).

Duty of Care Owed by General Contractor to Subcontractor's Employee — Inherent Danger Exception: Montana follows the general rule that absent reserved control over the subcontractor's operations, the general contractor and owner are not liable for injuries to subcontractor's employees. However, the duty of care is not delegable by the general contractor or owner to the subcontractor if the work is "inherently dangerous" or involves "peculiar risks", in which case the general contractor or owner must exercise reasonable care to ensure measures are taken to mitigate the risk. In this case, a subcontractor's employee was injured when a ditch he was digging caved in. Standard safety measures had not been employed by the subcontractor although required by the contract. The court found that ditchdigging is not inherently dangerous when done with the standard precautions, and therefore there was no nondelegable duty under the inherent danger exception. A strongly worded dissent joined by three justices would have applied the exception and remanded for a determination by a jury whether there was inherent danger and, if so, whether the general contractor exercised reasonable care to mitigate the danger. Kemp v. Bechtel Constr. Co., 221 M 519, 720 P2d 270, 43 St. Rep. 1022 (1986), overruled in Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348, 57 St. Rep. 466 (2000). See McCall v. U.S. Dept. of Energy, 914 F2d 191 (9th Cir. 1990), in which the court of appeals, relying on Kemp, held that because Montana has adopted sections 416 and 427 of the Restatement (Second) of Torts, under the Federal Tort Claims Act, the government may not be held vicariously liable for the negligence of an independent contractor but may be held liable when its own employees through their own negligent conduct have breached the nondelegable duty to ensure a safe workplace for employees of independent contractors engaged in inherently dangerous work. Kemp and McCall were followed in McMillan v. U.S., 112 F3d 1040 (9th Cir. 1997).

Questions of Anticipated Harm and Duty of Ordinary Care as Material Issues of Fact — Summary Judgment Improper: In reversing a summary judgment as improper, the Supreme Court found that material questions of fact for a jury existed on the issues of whether: (1) the town of Whitehall should have anticipated that harm would be caused by the condition of the sidewalk despite the knowledge and obviousness of the condition; and (2) the town of Whitehall exercised ordinary care to keep the sidewalk reasonably safe. Even if it appeared that recovery under these issues was very remote, they constituted genuine issues of material fact; therefore, summary judgment was not appropriate. Kaiser v. Whitehall, 221 M 322, 718 P2d 1341, 43 St. Rep. 846 (1986). However, see Yager v. Deane, 258 M 453, 853 P2d 1214, 50 St. Rep. 610 (1993).

Duty to Warn of Known Danger — Lack of Warning of Known Danger as Defect: In a tort action over injury caused by a hay baler, the Supreme Court held, based on the holding of Brown v. N. Am. Mfg. Co., 176 M 98, 576 P2d 711 (1978), that it was error to instruct the jury that a manufacturer has no duty to warn a person who claims to be entitled to a warning if the person actually knows of the danger. Under the facts of this case, there is a duty to warn of a known danger if the product is unreasonably dangerous and lack of such warning can make an otherwise nondefective product defective. Tacke v. Vermeer Mfg. Co., 220 M 1, 713 P2d 527, 43 St. Rep. 123 (1986). Recognition of a failure to warn claim and the Brown criteria were applied in Riley v. Am. Honda Motor Co., Inc., 259 M 128, 856 P2d 196, 50 St. Rep. 714 (1993). See also Emery v. Federated Foods, Inc., 262 M 83, 863 P2d 426, 50 St. Rep. 1454 (1993).

Attractive Nuisance Not Applicable to Certain Artificial Streams or Bodies of Water: The degree of care of one who maintains on his land an artificial stream or body of water for a useful purpose, where the stream or body of water has natural characteristics, is no greater than the degree of care required of one through whose land flows a natural stream or whose land contains a natural body of water. The owner or user of an artificial stream or body of water having natural characteristics is bound to no special duty of care or precaution for the protection of children who may enter therein, unless there is in or about the artificial stream or body of water some peculiar danger, in the nature of a hidden peril or trap for the unwary, of which the owner or user has or ought to have notice. The doctrine of attractive nuisance as such does not apply to such artificial streams or bodies of water any more than it applies to natural streams or bodies of water. Limberhand v. Big Ditch Co., 218 M 132, 706 P2d 491, 42 St. Rep. 1460 (1985). Following Limberhand, the court of appeals held that under Montana law, the duty of care owed by a landowner does not depend on whether the injured party was a trespasser, licensee, or invitee. Berge v. Boyne USA, Inc., 779 F2d 1445 (9th Cir. 1986).

Duty of Care Not Dependent on Status of Injured Party: The duty of care of a property owner does not depend on the status of a party injured on the property, whether tenant, social guest, invitee, or trespasser. The question is always whether the landowner exercised ordinary care in the circumstances. Limberhand v. Big Ditch Co., 218 M 132, 706 P2d 491, 42 St. Rep. 1460 (1985), overruling Cereck v. Albertson's Inc., 195 M 409, 637 P2d 509 (1981), following Corrigan v. Janney, 192 M 99, 626 P2d 838 (1981), and followed in Kaiser v. Whitehall, 221 M 322, 718 P2d 1341, 43 St. Rep. 846 (1986), Estate of Strever v. Cline, 278 M 165, 924 P2d 666, 53 St. Rep. 576 (1996), and Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748, 54 St. Rep. 1422 (1997). However, see Yager v. Deane, 258 M 453, 853 P2d 1214, 50 St. Rep. 610 (1993).

Extension of Landowner's Liability to Hazards on Adjoining Land: The fact that an irrigation ditch in which plaintiff's son drowned is not on property owned by defendant apartment owner but on adjoining land does not as a matter of law bar plaintiff's wrongful death action against defendant landowner. Limberhand v. Big Ditch Co., 218 M 132, 706 P2d 491, 42 St. Rep. 1460 (1985).

Contractor's Duty to Subcontractor: Sections 50-71-201 and 50-71-202 require a contractor to furnish a subcontractor with a safe place to work. A subcontractor is an employee of the contractor for purposes of 50-71-201. Cain v. Stevenson, 218 M 101, 706 P2d 128, 42 St. Rep. 1428 (1985).

Jury Instructions — "Locality Rule" Standard Not Relevant for Judging Medical Specialist — "Loss of Chance": Woman sued her doctor, a national board certified orthopedic surgeon, for damages for alleged negligent medical treatment. Defendant had treated plaintiff for misdiagnosed knee problems for 4 months without ordering diagnostic X-rays before referring plaintiff for surgery to out-of-state doctor who discovered a giant cell tumor in plaintiff's knee. Plaintiff alleged that defendant's failure to order diagnostic films early in treatment resulted in her losing any chance to have less radical surgery and preserve her natural knee. Jury returned verdict in favor of defendant, and plaintiff appealed. Supreme Court vacated District Court judgment and remanded for new trial. Supreme Court held that District Court committed reversible error by instructing jury on the "locality rule" as appropriate standard of care rather than giving plaintiff's proposed instruction holding board certified specialists to national standards of the specialty. Supreme Court also held that on retrial, plaintiff is entitled to a "loss of chance" instruction. The trier of fact should determine whether defendant's negligence was a substantial factor in reducing plaintiff's chances of obtaining a better result rather than whether plaintiff would have obtained a better result with earlier diagnosis. Aasheim v. Humberger, 215 M 127, 695 P2d 824, 42 St. Rep. 235 (1985); holding explained and extended to include Board-certified family practitioners in Glover v. Ballhagen, 232 M 427, 756 P2d 1166, 45 St. Rep. 1168 (1988).

Expert Testimony Required for Title Insurance Company Standard of Care: In 1975, plaintiff negotiated to sell his property and a commitment for title insurance was ordered from defendant. The defendant issued a title commitment, but it contained no reference to a quiet title action or decree whereby plaintiff and his father had determined separate ownership of various parcels. In 1977, a judgment against plaintiff's father was entered and a Writ of Execution was levied on the father's and plaintiff's property. Plaintiff then brought an action to amend the judgment in the quiet title action nunc pro tunc to reflect the separate ownership. Plaintiff then brought this action to recover costs of the nunc pro tunc action. Plaintiff presented no expert testimony as to the standard of care of a title insurance company. Defendant appealed from an adverse judgment, contending the absence of expert testimony failed to establish a prima facie case of negligence. The Supreme Court, relying on Prosser, Law of Torts, 4th Ed. (1971), and Hill v. Squibb & Sons, 181 M 199, 592 P2d 1383 (1979), held that title examination is complex and intricate and beyond the common understanding of lay persons. Plaintiff must produce expert testimony to establish the standard of care required of a title insurance company. Without such testimony a prima facie case of negligence was not established. Doble v. Lincoln County Title Co., 215 M 1, 692 P2d 1267, 42 St. Rep. 128 (1985), distinguished in Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Realty Title Co., 1999 MT 69, 294 M 6, 978 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 286 (1999).

Duty to Warn of Known Dangers on Ingress or Egress: Baide operates a trailer park adjacent to the Clinton Elementary School. In the past a loop road, with a bridge spanning an irrigation ditch, connected the park to a main street. The irrigation ditch and bridge were on Baide's property. The bridge was destroyed by a truck. Baide then barricaded the bridge, piled gravel in front of the ditch, and put up a warning sign. Four months later, Baide conveyed the property to the Clinton School District. Three months later, plaintiff took a tenant to Baide's trailer park, went down the loop road, and drove into the irrigation ditch. She brought suit for damages to her property and for personal injuries. The District Court granted Baide's motion for summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that Baide would owe no duty to plaintiff if he were a mere vendor of the land. However, as a landowner and operator of the trailer park, he owed a duty to invitees on his premises to have the premises reasonably safe or to warn of hidden dangers. The duty of an occupier of premises extends beyond the premises to the entrances into and exits from the premises, and it is his duty to warn his customers of hidden hazards upon, around, or beyond the premises if he would reasonably expect use of the adjacent area in connection with his invitation. Since Baide's barriers and warning signs were not in place at the time of the accident, a significant question of fact existed as to whether he had provided safe egress. Summary judgment was reversed. Piedalue v. Clinton Elementary School District, 214 M 99, 692 P2d 20, 41 St. Rep. 2344 (1984).

Products Liability — Applicable to Commercial Case — Duty of Care: Plaintiffs sued manufacturer of chemical potato sprout suppressant when use of the product caused erratic growing results in potato crop. District Court jury found defendant liable for damages based on theories of strict liability, negligence, and breach of warranty. Supreme Court affirmed. Supreme Court held that jury was properly charged that a manufacturer has a duty to use reasonable care to give warning of dangerous condition of a product to those he expects to use the product or those endangered by its foreseeable use. Use of accepted form of instructions for personal injury cases that was modified to fit a property damage case was not error. Streich v. Hilton-Davis, 214 M 44, 692 P2d 440, 41 St. Rep. 2310 (1984), followed in Krueger v. Gen. Motors Corp., 240 M 266, 783 P2d 1340, 46 St. Rep. 2114 (1989), and Wood v. Old Trapper Taxi, 286 M 18, 952 P2d 1375, 54 St. Rep. 1263 (1997).

Negligent Hiring and Negligent Entrustment: Insurer's agent participated in a Dillon rodeo, went to a barbecue at his Dillon home, and then went drinking in Dillon bars. While driving home in a vehicle he leased from a service company that was a wholly owned subsidiary of and had a common board of directors with insurer, he struck plaintiff, who sued insurer for negligent hiring and service company for negligent entrustment of the vehicle to agent. Insurer and service company sought summary judgment. That one to whom a vehicle is entrusted is licensed does not alone negate a finding of negligent entrustment. Since the record showed agent had at least once before been in an accident while intoxicated and it was alleged service company knew or should have known the agent had a propensity to drive while intoxicated, there was a material question of fact whether service company breached the duty not to entrust a vehicle to an incompetent driver, and summary judgment as to the service company was denied. Insurer's motion for summary judgment on the negligent hiring issue was denied, the court stating that it could find no Montana case on the negligent hiring doctrine. The questions of whether insurer should have foreseen that it was hiring a dangerous driver, that it was negligent in hiring the agent, and that the negligence proximately caused plaintiff's injuries were considered to be questions of fact not properly disposed of on summary judgment. The court also indicated that whether agent was acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the accident was not an issue. Vollmer v. Bramlette, 594 F. Supp. 243, 41 St. Rep. 1964 (D.C. Mont. 1984).

Negligence Resulting in Imprisonment — Damages for Emotional Distress: Plaintiff brought an action for damages resulting from appellant's negligence in causing an arrest and imprisonment. Plaintiff's wife issued a check on his account to Super Save without plaintiff's knowledge. The check was dishonored for insufficient funds. Super Save referred the matter to a collection agency. Although plaintiff later paid Super Save, the collection agency and County Attorney's office were never so apprised by Super Save. Almost a year after writing the check, plaintiff was arrested, handcuffed, frisked, booked, and fingerprinted. The District Court, in a jury trial, awarded $17,000 in damages. The Supreme Court held that Super Save owes its patrons the duty to exercise reasonable care to avoid arrest and criminal charges for nonpayment of a bad check for which restitution has been made. It breached that duty by cashing the check without requiring the proper identification and by failing to terminate the collection process. Damages for emotional distress were upheld in spite of the fact that there was no injury. Johnson v. Super Save Markets, Inc., 211 M 465, 686 P2d 209, 41 St. Rep. 1495 (1984).

Duty of Invitor to Invitee — Obvious Danger: A possessor of land is not liable to his invitees for physical harm caused to them by any activity or condition on the land whose danger is known or obvious to them unless the possessor should anticipate the harm despite such knowledge or obviousness. Kronen v. Richter, 211 M 208, 683 P2d 1315, 41 St. Rep. 1312 (1984), followed in Cooper v. Sisters of Charity of Leavenworth Health Serv. Corp., 265 M 205, 875 P2d 352, 51 St. Rep. 484 (1994). Kronen was overruled, as to the standard that a property owner is absolved of liability because a dangerous condition upon the premises is open and obvious, in Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748, 54 St. Rep. 1422 (1997).

Elevators on Premises — Highest Duty of Care: Plaintiff was injured when she opened an elevator door and fell 15 feet because the elevator car was not on the floor level. In determining the duty of care the building owner owed to plaintiff, the parties agreed that plaintiff was an invitee. A property owner's duty of care toward an invitee is to use ordinary care to keep the premises reasonably safe and to warn the invitee of any hidden or lurking dangers. The Supreme Court adopted a higher duty of care in the operation of an elevator, however. The elevator performs the function of a common carrier in transporting people from one floor to another. Experience teaches that the public reposes trust in those who furnish that carriage that they will be transported safely from one floor to another. With respect to the operation of the elevator itself, the premises owner owes the highest degree of care. Cash v. Otis Elevator Co., 210 M 319, 684 P2d 1041, 41 St. Rep. 1077 (1984).

Jury Instructions — No Determinable Basis for Imposing Higher Standard of Care Upon Contractors: In an action to recover for injuries against several contractors who were allegedly negligent in the construction of a dumbwaiter that injured plaintiff, the court gave a general instruction on negligence. The court rejected proposed instructions regarding a manufacturer's duty of care, since no manufacturing was involved. The court also rejected instructions delineating the contractor's duties and requiring a higher standard of care than that chargeable to a lay person. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the District Court had properly rejected the proposed instructions and distinguished this case from Williams v. Mont. Nat'l Bank, 167 M 24, 534 P2d 1247 (1975). The court found that there was no statutory or other basis determinable which would have required that the jury be instructed to apply a higher level of care to the independent contractors than to the landowner. Gee v. Egbert, 209 M 1, 679 P2d 1194, 41 St. Rep. 515 (1984).

Employee Suit Against Employer's Parent Corporation — Mere Holding Company Not Liable: Under the workers' compensation law provision that an employee may sue a third party in tort for causing injury to an employee, the employee may sue the parent corporation of a subsidiary corporation for which the employee works but must establish that the parent corporation had an independent duty toward the employee. In the present case, the facts failed to establish that any duty was breached by the parent corporation. The parent corporation was simply a holding company that carried on no business other than operating through its subsidiaries. Any negligence of the subsidiary employer in regard to employee's products liability theory could not be passed on to the parent corporation. Mitchell v. Shell Oil Co., 579 F. Supp. 1326, 41 St. Rep. 278 (D.C. Mont. 1984).

Children Under One's Control — Duty of Care: A father sued YMCA for injury allegedly incurred by his 6-year-old son, who was found submerged in the YMCA pool. The jury was properly charged that when a person undertakes the control or supervision of a child, he has the duty to use reasonable care to protect the child from injury and that though he is not an insurer of the child's safety he is required to use reasonable care commensurate with the reasonably foreseeable risk of harm to which the child might be subjected while under the person's control and supervision. The instruction expressed the idea that the reasonable care to be accorded must be commensurate with the child's age and maturity. The father's counsel fully argued the proper standard of care, and the father's substantial rights were not prejudiced by failure to give his requested instructions stating that a greater degree of care is owed to a child than to an adult. Johnson v. YMCA, 201 M 36, 651 P2d 1245, 39 St. Rep. 1937 (1982).

Locomotives — Standards of Care — Writ of Supervisory Control: Petition for Writ of Supervisory Control, brought by plaintiff suing railroad in crossing accident case, was granted where District Court incorrectly decided that federal law preempted the field of warning devices on locomotives and that the jury could thus not deliberate on the question of whether railroad had the duty to equip its locomotives with devices other than those required by federal law. A jury trying a railroad crossing accident case should be allowed to decide whether a railroad has a common-law duty to equip its locomotives with various warning devices. Henry v. District Court, 198 M 8, 645 P2d 1350, 39 St. Rep. 430 (1982).

Snowbanks From Plowing Parking Lot — Business Invitee: In a customer's suit against a supermarket for injuries sustained when she fell while climbing over a snowbank created by the plowing of the parking lot, summary judgment for the supermarket was reversed and the case remanded for trial, as it could reasonably be inferred that the piling of snow in front of the store entrance increased the hazard created by the natural accumulation of snow and ice and that the supermarket should have anticipated the injuries received as a result of the dangerous condition. The snowbank was between the parking lot and the store and had a path cut through it that customer did not use as it had a water puddle in it and she assertedly believed she could not step over it. Customer walking from a snowplowed shopping center parking lot toward entrance to a supermarket was a business invitee for purpose of determining the duty owed her by supermarket while she was on the premises. Cereck v. Albertson's, Inc., 195 M 409, 637 P2d 509, 38 St. Rep. 1986 (1981), partially overruled in Limberhand v. Big Ditch Co., 218 M 132, 706 P2d 491, 42 St.

Rep. 1460 (1985), and overruled, as to the distinction between liability based upon natural versus altered accumulations of ice or snow that are open and obvious and as to the standard that a property owner is absolved of liability because a dangerous condition upon the premises is open and obvious, in Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748, 54 St. Rep. 1422 (1997).

Grounds for Denial of Proposed Jury Instruction — Primary Duty of Avoiding Collision: The appellant claimed error in the trial court's denial of his proposed jury instruction stating that the primary duty of avoiding an accident is on a vehicle approaching from the rear when the vehicle in front has signaled for 100 feet. This was an inaccurate statement of the law, and as given, the jury instructions adequately explained the duties of the passing motorist and the left-turning motorist. Even if it had been a correct statement of the law, the proposed statement would have added nothing to the jury's understanding of the applicable law. Burns v. U & R Express, 191 M 343, 624 P2d 487, 38 St. Rep. 302 (1981). See also Wheeler v. Bozeman, 232 M 433, 757 P2d 345, 45 St. Rep. 1173 (1988).

Dog Bite — No Duty of Defendant to Plaintiff: Where the defendant purchased a duplex subject to a preexisting lease that allowed the lessee to keep a dog in the duplex and required the defendant to give the lessee 15 days' notice to dispose of the dog if it created a nuisance and the plaintiff's child was later bitten by the dog 8 days after the defendant purchased the duplex, the court did not err in granting summary judgment for the defendant. Before a claim for relief may be made against a defendant for negligence, the existence of a duty to the plaintiff must be shown. The defendant had no legal duty to the plaintiff because the defendant had no control over the dog and no right to dispose of it prior to the child's injury. Roy v. Neibauer, 191 M 224, 623 P2d 555, 38 St. Rep. 173 (1981), cited in Ganz v. U.S. Cycling Fed'n, 273 M 360, 903 P2d 212, 52 St. Rep. 1030 (1995).

Duty to Provide Safe Working Place — Railroad Employee: In a case brought by an employee injured while working for a subsidiary of a railroad, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff was owed the duty to provide him with a safe place to work. Noting that giving the jury information about the subsidiaries might well have been highly prejudicial to the defendant railroad, the Supreme Court nonetheless felt obliged to consider it in this case. The plaintiff was working directly in the operations of the railroad in every sense of the word. The railroad would not be absolved of the responsibility to provide a safe place to work for employees who are technically employed by a subsidiary corporation but whose employment is directly related to the operations of a railroad. Closeness of the businesses of the parent and subsidiary companies was a factor in the court's conclusion that both corporations owed the duty to provide the plaintiff with a safe place to work. Reynolds v. Burlington N., Inc., 190 M 383, 621 P2d 1028, 37 St. Rep. 1883 (1980).

Icy Condition — Social Guest — Duty of Landlord: Rennick, a social guest of Hoover's tenant, slipped on ice in a common area of Hoover's apartment and broke his ankle. The issue is whether the landlord owes a duty to Rennick to remove a known icy condition in a common area. The duty owed a social guest of a tenant is the same as the duty owed an invitee, which is to use ordinary care to keep the premises reasonably safe and to warn the invitee of any hidden or lurking danger. This duty is satisfied if the condition is actually known or obvious. Under Montana law the icy condition is not unreasonably dangerous, and since the plaintiff had actual knowledge of the condition of the premises, there is no duty, no breach of duty, and no negligence as a matter of law. Rennick v. Hoover, 186 M 167, 606 P2d 1079 (1980), overruled, as to the standard that a property owner is absolved of liability because a dangerous condition upon the premises is open and obvious, in Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748, 54 St. Rep. 1422 (1997).

Summary Judgment — Failure to Show Breach of Duty: Scott was hired by Robson to fell trees. Scott was injured while engaging in a stage of the operation that he had no obligation to perform. In a suit to recover for his injuries, Scott failed to show that Robson breached any duty to keep the premises reasonably safe or to warn of any hidden or lurking danger. Foreseeability is of prime importance in establishing the element of duty. The District Court properly granted summary judgment in favor of Robson as a result of Scott's failure to establish a breach of duty. Scott v. Robson, 182 M 528, 597 P2d 1150 (1979), followed in J.L. v. Kienenberger, 257 M 113, 848 P2d 472, 50 St. Rep. 182 (1993).

No Negligence in the Absence of a Duty: It is not negligence to fail to anticipate injury that can come about only as a result of the negligence of another. Green v. Hagele, 182 M 155, 595 P2d 1159 (1979), followed in Anderson v. Werner Enterprises, Inc., 1998 MT 333, 292 M 284, 972 P2d 806, 55 St. Rep. 1350 (1998). However, see Pierce v. ALSC Architects, P.S., 270 M 97, 890 P2d 1254, 52 St. Rep. 93 (1995).

Duty of Landlord — Unsafe Condition: A landlord is liable for repairs that are negligently made only if four elements are present: (1) the landlord must make a negligent repair or improvement; (2) the repair or improvement must make the land more dangerous or give a deceptive appearance of safety; (3) the lessee can neither know nor should he know of the danger; (4) there must be physical harm caused by the condition. Upon discovery of the dangerous condition, the duty shifts to the tenant to either make the premises safe or to warn. Knowledge of the condition precludes the tenant's recovery. Hayes v. U.S., 475 F. Supp. 681 (D.C. Mont. 1979), following Parrish v. Witt, 171 M 101, 555 P2d 741 (1976).

Breach of Duty to Warn: Corporation was liable for death of plaintiff's dairy cows pastured on a strip of land adjoining electric substation of corporation and for losses occasioned by poisoning resulting from its use upon grass and weeds of chemical spray that it knew was dangerous to animals, where it failed to warn plaintiff of the danger. Hopkins v. Ravalli County Elec. Co-op, Inc., 144 M 161, 395 P2d 106, 12 ALR 3d 1096 (1964).

NEGLIGENCE AS A MATTER OF LAW

City Ordinance on Snow Removal Properly Omitted From Jury Instruction — No Proof of Violation: The District Court did not err when it did not instruct the jury on a municipal ordinance regarding snow removal from a premises' sidewalks within 24 hours of snowfall. The District Court found the ordinance inapplicable to establish negligence per se. Additionally, the court properly allowed plaintiffs to offer evidence that there was an ordinance relating to removal of snow from walkways such as those at the defendant's clinic but refused to admit conclusory evidence that the defendant violated the ordinance unless there was proof of a violation such as adjudication through a competent court. Nolan v. Billings Clinic, 2020 MT 167, 400 Mont. 326, 467 P.3d 545.

Clear Dispute of Facts — Motion for Summary Judgment on Negligence Claim Properly Denied: The District Court properly denied the plaintiff's motion for summary judgment on negligence per se because there was a clear dispute of fact of whether the plaintiff was within the unmarked crosswalk at the time of the collision. Maier v. Wilson, 2017 MT 316, 390 Mont. 43, 409 P.3d 878.

Locomotive Inspection Act Claim — Railroad Employee Injury — Cause of Accident Proper Question for Jury: The plaintiff, an employee of a railroad, pursued a cause of action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) coupled with the Locomotive Inspection Act (LIA) for a work-related injury that prevented him from working as a conductor for 6 months. The District Court allowed the jury to weigh the evidence regarding whether snow and ice on the locomotive steps caused the plaintiff to slip, and a verdict was returned in favor of the railroad. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court after determining that the employee's burden of proof differs in a FELA case, which requires a showing of negligence, whereas a LIA case requires proof of a statutory or regulatory violation. As applied, there was sufficient evidence to support the jury's determination that the railroad was not liable for the plaintiff's injury due to the presence of ice and snow on the locomotive steps. Martin v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2015 MT 167, 379 Mont. 423, 352 P.3d 598.

Nondelegable Duty to Provide Safe Workplace — Availability of Contributory Negligence Defense: The District Court held that defendant employer owed plaintiff employee a nondelegable duty of care to maintain a safe workplace and that employer's breach of that duty caused plaintiff's injuries as a matter of law. The District Court then allowed defendant to argue contributory negligence, which plaintiff asserted was an improper delegation of defendant's safe workplace duty. While recognizing the nondelegable duty under 50-71-201, the Supreme Court also noted that 27-1-702 imposes on a plaintiff the duty to conform to a standard of conduct for plaintiff's own protection so that plaintiff's conduct does not constitute a legally contributing cause that operates along with defendant's negligence in bringing about plaintiff's harm. Citing Edie v. Gray, 2005 MT 224, 328 M 354, 121 P3d 516 (2005), and Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007), the court harmonized the two concepts by holding that establishing the existence of negligence per se settles only the questions of duty and breach, but a plaintiff must still prove causation before recovering damages, and a jury may weigh or compare evidence of negligence from a statutory violation that constitutes a proximate cause of the injury along with other evidence of negligence on the part of both parties. As provided in Shannon v. Howard S. Wright Constr. Co., 181 M 269, 593 P2d 438 (1979), and Stepanek v. Kober Constr., 191 M 430, 625 P2d 51, 38 St. Rep. 385 (1981), contributory negligence remains available as a defense to a defendant who has breached its nondelegable duty to provide a safe workplace if evidence demonstrates that: (1) the employee has some reasonable means or opportunity to avoid the hazard without endangering employment; or (2) the harm in question was not a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the employer's breach of the safety duty. In this case, the evidence created a genuine issue of material fact as to whether plaintiff had been contributorily negligent, so it was proper for the trial court to submit the issue to the jury and for the jury to apportion negligence between the parties in reaching a verdict. Olson v. Shumaker Trucking & Excavating Contractors, Inc., 2008 MT 378, 347 M 1, 196 P3d 1265 (2008).

Relationship Between Negligence Per Se and Apportionment of Negligence Under Comparative Negligence: Montana's comparative negligence scheme requires the factfinder to consider the negligence of the claimant, injured person, defendants, and third-party defendants, even if a party proceeds under a claim of negligence per se or if the factfinder determines that one or more persons were negligent per se. In the absence of an express statutory provision to the contrary, a claim of negligence per se or a determination that a person was negligent per se, including traffic violations, does not preclude the defense of contributory negligence or bar the apportionment of negligence based on a comparative negligence scheme. Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007), following Reed v. Little, 209 M 199, 680 P2d 937 (1984), and Edie v. Gray, 2005 MT 224, 328 M 354, 121 P3d 516 (2005), and distinguishing Woods v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry., 2004 MT 332, 324 M 151, 104 P3d 1037 (2004).

Jury Instruction on Comparative Negligence Improper Absent Evidence of One Party's Negligence: A landlord who failed to maintain rental property in a safe condition was negligent per se. Pursuant to Reed v. Little, 209 M 199, 680 P2d 937 (1984), even in negligence per se cases, the factfinder must apportion negligence between the parties in reaching a verdict. Therefore, the trial court in this case gave the jury an instruction on comparative negligence. However, there was no evidence to show that plaintiff was negligent in any way, and all liability for plaintiff's injury on defendant's rental property lay with defendant. Thus, giving the instruction on comparative negligence was an abuse of the trial court's discretion. Edie v. Gray, 2005 MT 224, 328 M 354, 121 P3d 516 (2005).

Landlord Who Fails to Provide Safe Rental Property Negligent Per Se — Summary Judgment on Liability Proper: Plaintiff was injured in a fall in the staircase of a rental home because the stairwell light was not functional. Plaintiff claimed that the defendant landlord was negligent for failing to provide a safe and habitable premises and moved for partial summary judgment on the liability issue. The trial court denied the motion, and the jury found for defendant. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Under 70-24-303, a landlord is required to keep rental premises in a fit and habitable condition and to maintain electrical facilities in good and safe working order. Defendant could have avoided liability by entering a separate written agreement signed by all parties in which plaintiff agreed to repair the light, but no such agreement existed, so defendant was negligent per se, and summary judgment for plaintiff was proper. Defendant's attempt to shift responsibility to plaintiff for failing to notify defendant of the inoperative light was misplaced because the duty of repair is on the landlord and there is no duty of the tenant to notify. Edie v. Gray, 2005 MT 224, 328 M 354, 121 P3d 516 (2005).

Summary Judgment on Negligence Claim Affirmed Absent Showing of Breach of Duty of Care: Bonilla claimed that the University of Montana was negligent in providing a chair at a concert that Bonilla attended when the chair broke and Bonilla was injured. Ordinarily, the determination of whether a defendant breached a legal duty is not susceptible to summary judgment unless the evidence is undisputed or susceptible to only one conclusion by reasonable people. However, Bonilla failed to produce any evidence explaining how or why the chair broke and whether it was due to the breach of any duty by the University. Bonilla never reported the incident, so the University had no record of the incident. The only evidence offered to support a negligence claim was Bonilla's own testimony that the chair would not have broken unless there was a problem with it. University officials explained their policy of assuring the safety of their chairs and of selecting chairs for durability and quality. The University met its burden of demonstrating the absence of material fact regarding any breach of a duty of care, while Bonilla did not meet the burden of showing that the University breached a duty of care. Summary judgment for the University was affirmed. Bonilla v. Univ. of Mont., 2005 MT 183, 328 M 41, 116 P3d 823 (2005).

No Right to Expectation of Privacy in Public Criminal Records or Negligence in Use of Records: In 1998, Barr applied for a part-time airport security officer position and consented to a background check. A 10-year check revealed no arrests, and Barr was hired. About 1 month later, another security officer requested a criminal background check on Barr, which revealed a 1968 arrest in Alaska for criminal nonsupport. Prior to the end of Barr's probationary period, his employment was terminated, and he sued the airport authority. Barr's claim was summarily dismissed. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that under 44-5-103, Barr's Alaska arrest was public information that anyone could access and its dissemination was not improper and that coupled with Barr's consent to the background check, Barr had no constitutional expectation of privacy in the criminal record. Barr's negligence claims also failed because he failed to offer proof of all elements of common-law negligence. Summary judgment for defendants was affirmed. Barr v. Great Falls Int'l Airport Authority, 2005 MT 36, 326 M 93, 107 P3d 471 (2005).

Violation of Federal Railroad Safety Regulations Negligence Per Se — Evidence of Contributory Negligence Disallowed: Railroad employee Woods accompanied track supervisor Holloway to inspect a section of track. Holloway exceeded the authorized limits of the track warrant and proceeded another 4 miles down the track where the inspection vehicle was struck by a train and Woods was killed. Following an investigation, the railroad concluded that Holloway's violation of the working limits caused Woods's death. Woods's widow moved for partial summary judgment that the railroad was negligent per se, but the motion was denied. The widow then requested a ruling that Woods was not contributorily negligent, but the motion was denied as untimely. The jury found that Woods was 50% negligent, and the award to the widow was reduced by half. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) governing the case is a remedial statute, the specific intent of which is to prevent railroad accidents and casualties. Federal railroad administration regulations are reviewed and construed as a comprehensive scheme of protection for railroad workers, and an interpretation of federal railroad administration regulations that leads to an unreasonable or absurd result will be rejected in favor of an interpretation that leads to a reasonable result. To conclude that federal railroad administration regulations define working limits but do not prohibit exceeding them would lead to an absurd result. Thus, the trial court erred in concluding that violation of the working limits of the track warrant was not negligence per se. FELA also provides that an employee will not be held liable for contributory negligence when a railroad's violation of any statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to an employee's injury or death, and the restriction against the use of contributory negligence as a defense applies to regulation violations as well, so it was also error for the trial court to allow the railroad to argue Woods's contributory negligence. The case was remanded for judgment reinstating the entire jury award. Woods v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry., 2004 MT 332, 324 M 151, 104 P3d 1037 (2004), following Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273 (1998), and distinguished in Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007).

Legal Duty of Sheriff to Protect Domestic Violence Victim — Exception to Public Duty Doctrine Immunity Created Between Sheriff and Victim: Plaintiffs' mother was a domestic violence victim who was killed by her husband. Plaintiffs sued the County Sheriff for negligently failing to take action to protect the victim. A jury found the Sheriff negligent and awarded plaintiffs $358,000. The Sheriff moved for judgment as a matter of law, and the District Court granted the motion and vacated the jury verdict, finding that no special relationship existed between the victim and the Sheriff under the domestic violence statutes that would trigger a legal duty upon the Sheriff to protect the victim. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted an exception to the public duty doctrine's immunity provision in cases when a special relationship between the victim and an officer has been created. The domestic violence statutes created such a special relationship, which gave rise to a special duty by virtue of the victim's status as a member of a protected class. The Sheriff had a statutory duty to protect the victim with a notice of her rights under 46-6-602, and by failing to give the victim the required notice, the jury could conclude that the Sheriff was negligent and, arguably, negligent per se. Although arrest of the husband was discretionary, the Sheriff also had a mandatory duty under 46-6-603 to seize the husband's weapon, which had been displayed during a prior domestic dispute, but failed to do so. Thus, the jury had sufficient evidence to conclude that the Sheriff's negligence or negligent per se conduct led to the victim's death, and the District Court committed reversible error in granting judgment to the contrary. Massee v. Thompson, 2004 MT 121, 321 M 210, 90 P3d 394 (2004), following Nelson v. Driscoll, 1999 MT 193, 295 M 363, 983 P2d 972 (1999).

Preservation of Right to Argue Sufficient Evidence of Negligence on Appeal From Judgment as Matter of Law: Plaintiffs' mother was a domestic violence victim who was killed by her husband. Plaintiffs sued the County Sheriff for negligently failing to take action to protect the victim. A jury found for the plaintiffs. The Sheriff moved for judgment as a matter of law, and the District Court granted the motion and vacated the jury verdict, finding that the domestic violence statutes did not trigger mandatory legal duties upon the Sheriff regarding arrest and seizure. On appeal, the Sheriff argued that because plaintiffs did not specifically appeal from the District Court's refusal to instruct the jury that violations of the arrest and weapon seizure provisions of the domestic violence law were negligence per se, plaintiffs could not argue on appeal that evidence that the statutes were violated supported the verdict. The Supreme Court examined the definitions of common-law negligence and negligence per se, noting that the jury was given the full panoply of instructions on common-law negligence and that despite the fact that negligence per se instructions were not given, plaintiffs nevertheless argued that violation of the statutes was evidence of negligence. Pursuant to Nehring v. LaCounte, 219 M 462, 712 P2d 1329 (1986), even if a violation of a statute does not constitute negligence per se, the violation may nonetheless be considered as evidence of negligence. Because plaintiffs appealed from the judgment as a matter of law, they preserved their right to argue on appeal that the jury had before it sufficient evidence of negligence. Massee v. Thompson, 2004 MT 121, 321 M 210, 90 P3d 394 (2004).

Disallowance of Jury Instruction Regarding Heightened Standard of Care of Driver in Vicinity of Children: Fifteen-year-old Hanson was struck by Edwards's car while crossing an intersection near a school. The intersection had no sidewalks, curbs, or painted lines delineating a crosswalk. Hanson sought a jury instruction that a motorist operating in an area in which children are known to likely be present has a heightened standard of care, relying on Okland v. Wolf, 258 M 35, 850 P2d 302 (1993). The instruction was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that a person's duty of care varies depending on the circumstances at the time and place in question, so in this case, as in Okland, the standard negligence instruction permitted Hanson to argue that the circumstances required a heightened standard and was thus considered adequate. Hanson v. Edwards, 2000 MT 221, 301 M 185, 7 P3d 419, 57 St. Rep. 907 (2000).

Disallowance of Jury Instruction Regarding Motorist's Affirmative Duty to Ascertain Whether Intersection Clear and to Anticipate Presence of Pedestrians: Hanson was struck by Edwards's car while crossing an intersection that had no sidewalks, curbs, or painted lines delineating a crosswalk. Hanson sought a jury instruction that a motorist has an affirmative duty to ascertain whether an intersection is clear before proceeding and a duty to anticipate that pedestrians may be present in the intersection. The instruction was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the instruction that was given, which clarified a driver's obligation to yield the right-of-way to a pedestrian in a crosswalk and a pedestrian's obligation to avoid moving into the path of a vehicle that is too close for the driver to yield, was a proper statement of law under 61-8-504 and that the trial court did not err in refusing to give Hanson's proposed instruction regarding a driver's affirmative duties. Hanson v. Edwards, 2000 MT 221, 301 M 185, 7 P3d 419, 57 St. Rep. 907 (2000).

Unmarked Crosswalk at Every Intersection: Hanson was struck by Edwards's car while crossing an intersection that had no sidewalks, curbs, or painted lines delineating a crosswalk. Hanson moved for a directed verdict on grounds that because he was in an unmarked crosswalk, which gave him the right-of-way, Edwards was negligent as a matter of law. The motion was denied, and the trial court refused to instruct the jury that an unmarked crosswalk exists at every intersection pursuant to 61-1-209 (now repealed, see 61-8-101). The Supreme Court examined legislative intent and, reading 61-1-209 (now repealed, see 61-8-101) in pari materia with 61-8-502, concluded that Montana law provides for a crosswalk on any portion of a roadway at an intersection. The jury should have been so instructed, and failure to do so was reversible error. Hanson v. Edwards, 2000 MT 221, 301 M 185, 7 P3d 419, 57 St. Rep. 907 (2000).

Classification of Nuisances — Per Se or Per Accidens — Absolute or Qualified: A nuisance action may be based upon conduct of a defendant that is either intentional, negligent, reckless, or ultrahazardous. Thus, negligence is merely one type of conduct upon which liability for nuisance may be based. In general, a nuisance may be classified as either a nuisance per se or at law or as a nuisance per accidens or in fact. A nuisance per se is an inherently injurious act, occupation, or structure that is a nuisance at all times and under any circumstances, without regard to location or surroundings. A nuisance per accidens is one that becomes a nuisance by virtue of circumstances and surroundings. In turn, nuisances may be classified as either absolute or qualified. An absolute nuisance, similar to a nuisance per se, is a nuisance the substance of which is not negligence and that obviously exposes a person to probable injury. A qualified nuisance is a nuisance dependent on negligence that consists of anything done lawfully but so negligently or carelessly done or permitted as to create a potential and unreasonable risk of harm, which in due course results in injury to another. When determining how a plaintiff can bring a nuisance action against a defendant who is engaged in a statutorily authorized endeavor, when 27-30-101(2) indicates that authorized activities may not be considered a nuisance, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff must show, pursuant to a particularized assessment of the authorizing statute, that: (1) the defendant completely exceeded its statutory authority, resulting in a nuisance; or (2) the defendant was negligent in carrying out its statutory authority, resulting in a qualified nuisance. In the present case, the city of Thompson Falls was statutorily authorized to construct the city's storm and sewer drain system, which Barnes alleged to be a nuisance. Given a verdict of no negligence, the city was not negligent in its operation or maintenance of the storm drain behind Barnes's duplex and thus would not have been liable for a qualified nuisance because of the incidental flooding of Barnes's property. Therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing Barnes's proposed instructions on nuisance because the instructions constituted a misstatement of the law. Barnes v. Thompson Falls, 1999 MT 77, 294 M 76, 979 P2d 1275, 56 St. Rep. 321 (1999), citing 58 Am. Jur. 2d Nuisances § 9 and 66 C.J.S. Nuisances §§ 3, 5. The Barnes criteria for consideration of unequivocal legislative intent and whether a defendant's activity falls outside statutory authority were applied to shooting ranges in Tally Bissell Neighbors, Inc. v. Eyrie Shotgun Ranch, LLC, 2010 MT 63, 355 Mont. 387, 228 P.3d 1134.

Limited Applicability of Involuntary Action Rule to Negligence Per Se in Driving Accidents When Driver Violates Traffic Law While Reacting to Highway Obstacle or Hazard: Seeking to reconcile past disparate holdings regarding liability of a motor vehicle driver who violates a traffic law while reacting to a highway obstacle or hazard and injures another party who has complied with traffic laws, the Supreme Court held that drivers must anticipate certain obstacles and adverse driving conditions that are common to Montana roads, such as small furry animals, deer, chuckholes, and swirling snow. Only under extremely limited circumstances, such as sudden brake failure, will a violation of a motor vehicle statute not constitute negligence per se. In this case, Craig was involved in an auto accident when the other vehicle swerved to avoid a deer and the driver and passenger in the other vehicle died. Injuries resulting from swerving to miss the deer arose from negligence per se, and Craig's motion for partial summary judgment on the issue of liability should have been granted. Craig v. Schell, 1999 MT 40, 293 M 323, 975 P2d 820, 56 St. Rep. 167 (1999), following Duchesneau v. Silver Bow County, 158 M 369, 492 P2d 926 (1971), overruling Lyndes v. Scofield, 180 M 177, 589 P2d 1000 (1979), and clarifying Graham v. Rolandson, 150 M 270, 435 P2d 263 (1967), Farris v. Clark, 158 M 33, 487 P2d 1307 (1971), Kudrna v. Comet Corp., 175 M 29, 572 P2d 183 (1977), Eslinger v. Ringsby Truck Lines, Inc., 195 M 292, 636 P2d 254, 38 St. Rep. 1863 (1981), Simonson v. White, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986), Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 233 M 515, 761 P2d 401, 45 St. Rep. 1694 (1988), and Cameron v. Mercer, 1998 MT 134, 289 M 172, 960 P2d 302, 55 St. Rep. 531 (1998).

Violation of Statute or Regulation as Negligence Per Se Under FELA: In an action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA), 45 U.S.C. 51 through 60, the violation of a statute or regulation automatically constitutes breach of the employer's duty and negligence per se and results in liability if the violation contributed in fact to the employee's injury. The presence of negligence per se precludes the necessity for the employee to prove foreseeability or other common-law components of negligence. Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273, 55 St. Rep. 469 (1998), following Kernan v. Am. Dredging Co., 355 US 426, 2 L Ed 2d 382, 78 S Ct 394 (1958), and Walden v. Ill. Cent. Gulf RR, 975 F2d 361 (7th Cir. 1992), and followed in Woods v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry., 2004 MT 332, 324 M 151, 104 P3d 1037 (2004).

Lengthy Instructions Not Erroneous if Law Properly Stated: Joshua Lloyd suffered a seizure after being transferred to the Kalispell Regional Hospital's security room. His personal representative sued the hospital and others. During trial, the District Court instructed the jury on negligence per se by giving lengthy instructions that counsel claimed were too complicated for the jury to understand. Citing Walden v. St., 250 M 132, 818 P2d 1190 (1991), the Supreme Court held that if the instructions properly state the law, the fact that the instructions are lengthy serves no basis for reversing the District Court. Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994). See also Tanner v. Dream Island, Inc., 275 M 414, 913 P2d 641, 53 St. Rep. 208 (1996).

No Error in Instruction Quoting Statute Verbatim: Joshua Lloyd suffered a seizure after being transferred to the Kalispell Regional Hospital's security room. His personal representative sued the hospital and others. During trial, the District Court instructed the jury on negligence per se by quoting mental health statutes verbatim to the jury. The Supreme Court said that giving jury instructions by quoting directly from the statutes may not be the best practice, but noted that the instructions proposed by opposing counsel were also direct quotations of mental health statutes. Given that situation, the Supreme Court held that there was no error in giving jury instructions in the form of direct quotations from the statutes. Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994).

No Negligence Per Se by Mental Health Cooperative Evaluation at Variance With Statute — Jury Verdict Supported by Substantial Evidence: Joshua died after suffering a seizure while in the custody of the Sheriff in a soft cell. Buhr, his personal representative, sued the county, the Sheriff, and others. Testimony at trial showed that despite the implication in 53-21-129(2) that Joshua be examined by a professional person, he was instead examined by Russell, who was not a professional person. Testimony showed that Russell then consulted with Harris, who was a professional person. Based upon the consultation, Harris agreed that Joshua needed to be placed in an emergency mental health hold status. The Supreme Court noted that although conflicting evidence may have been presented as to whether this procedure violated the statute, the evidence was presented to the jury based upon an appropriate instruction to which there was no objection. The Supreme Court held that the jury's verdict finding no negligence was supported by substantial evidence. Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994).

Disputed Facts — No Error in Failure to Direct Verdict of Negligence Per Se: Chad was hit, while on his bicycle, by a car driven by Matt. Matt testified that he stopped and looked at the intersection but did not see Chad on his bicycle. Chad's counsel requested that the District Court direct the jury to find that Matt was negligent as a matter of law, which the District Court refused to do. Citing Payne v. Sorenson, 183 M 323, 599 P2d 362 (1979), the Supreme Court held that a directed verdict would have been appropriate only if the undisputed facts showed that Matt was negligent. Here, there was a dispute as to whether Chad could have been seen if Matt had looked to see what could be seen. Because of the conflicting evidence, only the jury could resolve the issue. Chambers v. Pierson, 266 M 436, 880 P2d 1350, 51 St. Rep. 921 (1994).

Actions Causing Injury Not Reasonably Foreseeable — Liability Absolved: Broadbrooks escaped from custody, apparently became intoxicated, passed out in his apartment while smoking, and then started a fire when he allowed his cigarette to fall onto the couch, damaging the apartment. The apartment insurer brought suit against the Sheriff for negligently allowing Broadbrooks to escape and for negligently failing to apprehend Broadbrooks after the escape was discovered. The District Court summarily dismissed the claim, holding that as a matter of law, the negligence action must fail because the required element of proximate cause could not be proved. The Supreme Court applied the ordinarily prudent person standard set out in Kiger v. Dept. of Institutions, 245 M 457, 802 P2d 1248 (1990), holding that Broadbrooks' actions and their consequences were not reasonably foreseeable and acted as supervening causes of the insurer's injuries, thereby absolving the Sheriff of liability. USF&G v. Camp, 253 M 64, 831 P2d 586, 49 St. Rep. 372 (1992).

Failure of Bicyclist to Wear Helmet — Evidence Inadmissible on Question of Negligence or Damages: Applying the rationale set out in Kopischke v. First Cont. Corp., 187 M 471, 610 P2d 668 (1980), the Supreme Court held that because Montana law does not require a bicyclist to wear a helmet, the bicyclist's failure to wear a helmet ordinarily does not constitute negligence on the part of the state. Therefore, the jury was properly instructed that the bicyclist's failure to wear a helmet was not a legal cause of the accident and did not constitute negligence on the part of the state. The evidence was not admissible on the question of damages under the Kopischke rationale. Walden v. St., 250 M 132, 818 P2d 1190, 48 St. Rep. 893 (1991).

Failure to Yield as Negligence as Matter of Law — Summary Judgment Proper: Defendant, who was involved in an automobile collision, admitted that he failed to yield the right-of-way to plaintiff's vehicle. Because defendant had a duty to yield, his failure to do so was negligence as a matter of law, and the District Court erred in denying defendant partial summary judgment. Olson v. Parchen, 249 M 342, 816 P2d 423, 48 St. Rep. 718 (1991), distinguished in Okland v. Wolf, 258 M 35, 850 P2d 302, 50 St. Rep. 412 (1993).

Finding of Negligence Not Necessary in Every Accident: Plaintiff was a passenger in a truck involved in a collision in which each driver claimed the other was negligent, but the jury attributed negligence to neither. Plaintiff cited Aemisegger v. Herman, 215 M 347, 697 P2d 925 (1985), in claiming he was entitled to a new trial because that kind of accident cannot happen absent negligence and because a violation of basic traffic rules constitutes negligence per se. The Supreme Court distinguished Aemisegger because in that case, there was clear evidence of fault. The Supreme Court noted that simply because there is an accident does not mean someone must be negligent. The trial court did not err in refusing plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the basis that defendants were negligent as a matter of law. Brookings v. Thompson, 248 M 249, 811 P2d 64, 48 St. Rep. 418 (1991).

Failure to Follow National Accounting Standards Not Negligence as Matter of Law: An accountant certified that his audit would be completed in accordance with certain national accounting standards. At the time, those standards had not been adopted by the Montana Board of Public Accountants. The lower court instructed the jury that failure to follow the standards was negligence as a matter of law. The Supreme Court ruled that it was error on the lower court's part to so instruct the jury; however, the accountant had stated that he would follow the national standards and therefore was bound by them, making the lower court's instruction harmless error. Thayer v. Hicks, 243 M 138, 793 P2d 784, 47 St. Rep. 1082 (1990).

Violation of Maintenance and Design Standards — Negligence Per Se: Violations of maintenance and design standards intended to protect the public are negligence per se. Martel v. Mont. Power Co., 231 M 96, 752 P2d 140, 45 St. Rep. 460 (1988).

Disposal of Personal Injury Case by Summary Judgment — Negligence as a Matter of Law: Summary judgment is rarely proper in personal injury cases because of the peculiarly exclusive nature of the concept of negligence. Negligence is normally a question of fact; however, in certain cases where reasonable minds cannot differ, the cause of an accident may be a question of law for the court to determine. In determining comparative negligence between a driver who passed while visibility in the left lane was obstructed and the state's obligation to provide and maintain safe highways, the only conclusion to be reached was that the driver's negligence exceeded that of the state. Summary judgment was proper in determining negligence as a matter of law. Brohman v. St., 230 M 198, 749 P2d 67, 45 St. Rep. 139 (1988), citing Hartley v. Washington, 698 P2d 77 (Wash. 1985), followed in Medders v. Joyes, 233 M 183, 758 P2d 769, 45 St. Rep. 1409 (1988), Christopherson v. White, Inc., 250 M 118, 817 P2d 1165, 48 St. Rep. 891 (1991), and Pappas v. Midwest Motor Express, Inc., 268 M 347, 886 P2d 918, 51 St. Rep. 1288 (1994), and distinguished in Dillard v. Doe, 251 M 379, 824 P2d 1016, 49 St. Rep. 85 (1992), in which there was substantial active negligence by both parties upon which reasonable minds could differ as to the degree of comparative negligence. Dillard was followed in Craig v. Schell, 1999 MT 40, 293 M 323, 975 P2d 820, 56 St. Rep. 167 (1999). See also Okland v. Wolf, 258 M 35, 850 P2d 302, 50 St. Rep. 412 (1993).

Strict Liability for Railroad Safety Under Federal Act — Contributory Negligence No Factor — Summary Judgment Proper: A motion for summary judgment was properly granted to claimant when the railroad admitted violation of portions of the federal Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C. 1, et seq., since under the Act violation by a carrier of a specific safety requirement is held to constitute negligence as a matter of law regardless of a showing of negligence on an employee's part. Plouffe v. Burlington N., Inc., 224 M 467, 730 P2d 1148, 43 St. Rep. 2341 (1986). See also Weber v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2011 MT 223, 362 Mont. 53, 261 P.3d 984, which held that the District Court erred in granting the railroad's motion for judgment as a matter of law on the injured railroad employee's Locomotive Inspection Act claim when the evidence presented at trial indicated the locomotive was not performing properly and the locomotive's failure created an unnecessary danger of carbon monoxide exposure to the employee.

Propane Explosion Injuring Electricians — Landowners Not Negligent: Electricians were injured by an explosion in a residential water pump house caused by leaking propane from a tank uphill of the pump house. The Supreme Court held that there was substantial evidence to uphold the jury's verdict that the landowners were not negligent. Harden v. Yerger, 222 M 234, 721 P2d 751, 43 St. Rep. 1225 (1986).

Negligence as Proper Basis for Recovery — Wrongful Discharge: A negligence claim and a claim for breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing may arise out of the same occurrence, include the same facts, and only involve different theories of law; therefore, negligence is a proper basis for recovery in wrongful termination cases. Flanigan v. Prudential Fed. S&L Ass'n, 221 M 419, 720 P2d 257, 43 St. Rep. 941 (1986), following Crenshaw v. Bozeman Deaconess Hosp., 213 M 488, 693 P2d 487, 41 St. Rep. 2251 (1984), and followed in Rupnow v. Polson, 234 M 66, 761 P2d 802, 45 St. Rep. 1734 (1988).

Negligence as Matter of Law Incompatible With Issue of Comparative Negligence: It would be error to find negligence as a matter of law in a case in which a question of comparative negligence exists. Kukuchka v. Ziemet, 219 M 155, 710 P2d 1361, 42 St. Rep. 1916 (1985).

Surgeon's Failure to Remove Foreign Object Negligence Per Se: In this medical malpractice action, the Supreme Court adopted the rule of negligence per se in holding that a surgeon is negligent as a matter of law when he leaves a foreign object inside his patient during surgery. The surgeon bears the responsibility of the surgical procedure. Other persons also may be negligent and liable as concurrent tortfeasors or subsequent tortfeasors, but the surgeon who initially was negligent and whose original negligence set in motion the concurrent and following negligent acts or omissions should not be allowed to avoid his liability. Rudeck v. Wright, 218 M 41, 709 P2d 621, 42 St. Rep. 1380 (1985), distinguished, with regard to liability for negligent design and supervision of a water pipeline project, in Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248, 51 St. Rep. 623 (1994).

Failure to Prevent Rear-End Collision — Negligence as Matter of Law: Appellant was stopped at a traffic light. The road conditions were icy. Respondent approached the intersection in the same lane and direction of travel as the appellant. Respondent braked and slowed his vehicle but failed to reach a complete stop and collided with appellant's vehicle. Respondent's exercise of care was not sufficient to avoid the collision, and under the facts of this case he was negligent as a matter of law. Aemisegger v. Herman, 215 M 347, 697 P2d 925, 42 St. Rep. 420 (1985), distinguished in Brookings v. Thompson, 248 M 249, 811 P2d 64, 48 St. Rep. 418 (1991), in which it was held that simply because there is an accident does not mean someone must be negligent.

Motor Vehicle Negligence as Matter of Law — Motion Granted: The trial court properly granted motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, since defendant is guilty of negligence as a matter of law for failure to keep a proper lookout. At the time defendant "rear ended" plaintiff, the road was dry and the weather clear and sunny. No contributory negligence was alleged or proved. The only reasonable conclusion is that defendant negligently failed to keep a proper lookout. Garza v. Peppard, 213 M 25, 689 P2d 279, 41 St. Rep. 1922 (1984).

Evidence Sufficient to Instruct on Driving Under Influence — Statutory Violation and Proximate Cause Instructions: During the course of a tort trial involving an automobile accident, some evidence was produced indicating the driver may have consumed some alcohol prior to the accident, and drug paraphernalia was found in his car. There was sufficient evidence to instruct the jury regarding driving under the influence. It was not error to give a jury instruction stating that a Montana statute makes it unlawful to drive under the influence because the instruction must be read in conjunction with other instructions, one of which provides that although conduct in violation of a statute constitutes negligence as a matter of law, such a violation is of no consequence unless it was the proximate cause of an injury suffered by the plaintiff. Foreman v. Minnie, 211 M 441, 689 P2d 1210, 41 St. Rep. 1478 (1984).

Violation of Administrative Code — Evidence of Negligence: Plaintiff was injured when she opened an elevator door and fell 15 feet because the elevator car was not at the floor level. The trial court found defendants negligent as a matter of law and submitted causation and contributory negligence to the jury. Defendants appealed. The trial court's negligence ruling was premised on defendant's violation of an administrative safety code. The Supreme Court held that with respect to the operation of an elevator, the premises owner owes the highest degree of care. The court relied on Stepanek v. Kober Constr., 191 M 430, 625 P2d 51, 38 St. Rep. 385 (1981), to hold that violation of an administrative code is evidence of negligence but is not negligence per se. The fact that the Legislature mandated the adoption of the administrative code does not change this holding. The Legislature did not adopt the code by reference. Therefore, violation of the code was evidence of negligence and not negligence per se. Because this evidence was unrefuted as regards the premises owner, who merely defended by showing reliance on the elevator company, the trial court was correct in directing a finding of negligence against the premises owner. The premises owner would be liable under nondelegable duty. The elevator company judgment was vacated to determine if a code violation existed at the time of the last inspection. Cash v. Otis Elevator Co., 210 M 319, 684 P2d 1041, 41 St. Rep. 1077 (1984).

Negligence Per Se — Membership in Protected Class Required: Solberg was involved in a one-vehicle accident. He was taken to jail and charged with driving while intoxicated and driving without a valid driver's license. He pleaded guilty to both offenses on the following day, was unable to pay the fine imposed, and was ordered to serve time in jail. Two days later Solberg was found dead in his cell from alcohol-related withdrawal symptoms. Solberg's personal representative brought a wrongful death action against Yellowstone County. At the trial, the District Court refused to give an instruction finding defendant negligent as a matter of law. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that 53-24-303, as interpreted in Azure v. Billings, 182 M 234, 596 P2d 460 (1979), was not applicable, as Solberg was not a member of the class protected by the statute, the publicly intoxicated. Solberg was charged with two criminal offenses to which he pleaded guilty. Whether defendant breached the common-law duty owed by a jailer to a prisoner was a question for the jury. Solberg v. Yellowstone County, 203 M 79, 659 P2d 290, 40 St. Rep. 308 (1983).

Jury Instruction — Negligence Per Se: Section 69-4-201 specifically incorporates only the construction standards of the National Electrical Safety Code rather than the code in its entirety. In the absence of specific statutory incorporation, the provisions of the National Electrical Safety Code can only furnish evidence of a standard of care to be considered in determining negligence. Therefore, the District Court's refusal to instruct the jury that violation of any provision of the National Electrical Safety Code constitutes negligence per se was proper. Barmeyer v. Mont. Power Co., 202 M 185, 657 P2d 594, 40 St. Rep. 23 (1983), overruled in Martel v. Mont. Power Co., 231 M 96, 752 P2d 140, 45 St. Rep. 460 (1988), and followed with respect to the Architects' Handbook of Professional Practice in Taylor, Thon, Thompson & Peterson v. Cannaday, 230 M 151, 749 P2d 63, 45 St. Rep. 102 (1988). See also Harwood v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 285 M 481, 949 P2d 651, 54 St. Rep. 1257 (1997).

Violation of Regulation Not Negligence Per Se: In an action brought by an employee of a subcontractor against the defendant general contractor for damages for injuries in a fall from the subcontractor's scaffolding, the Supreme Court declined to hold that violations by the subcontractor of OSHA scaffolding regulations constituted negligence per se. As the general rule has been to consider the violation of regulations as merely evidence of negligence, the Supreme Court adopted the general rule. Stepanek v. Kober Constr., 191 M 430, 625 P2d 51, 38 St. Rep. 385 (1981). The general rule was applied in Hash v. St., 248 M 155, 807 P2d 1363, 48 St. Rep. 277 (1991), and Harwood v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 285 M 481, 949 P2d 651, 54 St. Rep. 1257 (1997).

Jury Instruction on Negligence as Matter of Law — Effect of Department Manual: Plaintiff contended that it was error to refuse to instruct the jury that the state and Burlington Northern were negligent as a matter of law in failing to place signals on the railroad crossing where the accident occurred in conformity with the Department of Highways' (now Department of Transportation's) Manual on Traffic Control Devices. The manual, however, does not have equal dignity with statutory law. Before the defendants can be charged with negligence in violating the manual, it must first be determined that the crossing was extrahazardous and that failure to install additional warning signals was the proximate cause of defendant's injuries. These were questions of fact for the jury since conflicting evidence was offered at trial, so no error was committed by failing to give the requested instructions. Penn v. Burlington N., Inc., 185 M 223, 605 P2d 600 (1980).

CAUSATION

Lack of Nonspeculative Evidence in Causative Chain — Summary Judgment Precluded. Kosteletzky v. Peas in a Pod, LLC, 2022 MT 195, 410 Mont. 239, 518 P.3d 840.

Evidence of Other Slip and Falls Not Admissible — Not Substantially Similar: The District Court did not err when it did not allow plaintiffs to introduce evidence of other falls on the defendant's clinic campus. A District Court has broad discretion to determine whether evidence is relevant and admissible. Evidence of other falls is not admissible to prove negligence. The evidence is admissible to show the existence of danger, defect, or knowledge. A prior accident must be "substantially similar to" and "not too remote from the accident in question" to qualify for admission. As applied, the District Court properly concluded that evidence of other falls was not similar to the plaintiffs' as the other falls occurred in parking lots rather than on sidewalks or at sister facilities not on the defendant's main hospital campus. Nolan v. Billings Clinic, 2020 MT 167, 400 Mont. 326, 467 P.3d 545.

Causation in Legal Malpractice Claim — Summary Judgment Not Proper — Plaintiffs Not Required to Show Claim Would Have Been Successful: An attorney missed a statute of limitations deadline in a medical malpractice case by failing to file an application with the Montana Medical Legal Panel before filing a complaint in District Court, as required under 27-6-301 and 27-6-701. After the medical malpractice claim was dismissed, the plaintiffs filed a legal malpractice case against the attorney, but the District Court dismissed the legal malpractice case during summary judgment on the grounds that the plaintiffs did not carry the burden of showing that the underlying medical malpractice claim would have been successful. On appeal, the Supreme Court revisited Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 Mont. 342, 916 P.2d 122 (1996), Babcock Place Ltd. Partnership v. Berg, Lilly, Andriolo, & Tollefsen, P.C., 2003 MT 111, 315 Mont. 364, 69 P.3d 1145, and Fisher v. Swift Transp. Co., Inc., 2008 MT 105, 342 Mont. 335, 181 P.3d 601, and determined that it was error for the District Court to require the plaintiffs to prove that the medical malpractice case would have been successful given that there was no independent intervening cause after the plaintiffs' injury. All that was required was a showing that the plaintiffs' injury (not being able to pursue the case) would not have occurred but for the attorney's negligent conduct. Labair v. Carey, 2012 MT 312, 367 Mont. 453, 291 P.3d 1160. On remand in Labair v. Carey, 2016 MT 272, 385 Mont. 233, 383 P.3d 226, the Supreme Court determined that the plaintiffs more probably than not would have recovered a settlement. Thus, the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment as a matter of law on this first element of settlement damages.

Admissibility of Infectious Disease Specialist Testimony — Qualified to Testify on Standard of Care and Causation for Radiologist's Procedure: Plaintiffs, as representatives of the estate of a deceased patient, filed a medical malpractice claim against a radiologist and a hospital based on allegations that the defendants departed from the applicable standard of care by failing to adhere to proper infection control measures, which negligently caused the patient's death. On a summary judgment motion, the District Court excluded the testimony of the plaintiffs' proposed expert witness, an infectious disease specialist, on the grounds that he was not qualified to testify as an expert under 26-2-601 because he is not a radiologist and does not perform the procedure at issue. On appeal, the Supreme Court determined that the infectious disease specialist satisfied the requirements of 26-2-601 based on his qualifications and that the District Court's holding to the contrary was an abuse of discretion. The proposed expert was qualified to give testimony regarding the standard of care for the radiologist and the hospital as well as an opinion regarding causation. Beehler v. E. Radiological Associates, P.C., 2012 MT 260, 367 Mont. 21, 289 P.3d 131, distinguishing Butler v. Domin, 2000 MT 312, 302 Mont. 452, 15 P.3d 1189.

Product Liability — Failure to Warn — Flexible Standard of Proof for Causation: The Supreme Court clarified that its ruling on causation in Riley v. American Honda Motor Co., 259 Mont. 128, 856 P.2d 196 (1993), did not limit the “flexible standard of proof” standard for establishing causation in product liability cases as enunciated in Brandenburger v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc., 162 Mont. 506, 513 P.2d 268 (1973). The court ruled that Riley was distinguishable because the plaintiff in this case was killed by his injuries and therefore could not testify as to whether he would have read and heeded a warning if there had been one. Patch v. Hillerich & Bradsby Co., 2011 MT 175, 361 Mont. 241, 257 P.3d 383.

Finding of Liability Establishing Causation of Injury — No Need for Jury to Consider Evidence of Cause: Plaintiff sued the city of Bozeman for lost profits and alleged constructive fraud, negligent misrepresentation, and intentional interference with prospective economic advantage related to a real estate purchase and development issue. During the course of litigation, the District Court, as a sanction for discovery abuse, ordered that the city was liable for interfering with the property purchase and development, resulting in injury to plaintiff. The city appealed on grounds that the sanction establishing the city's liability included the element of causation. The Supreme Court affirmed. Once liability was settled through the sanction order, causation of the injury was also established, and the jury did not need to consider evidence of the cause of the injury. The only question left for the jury was the amount of damages, and the District Court did not err when it instructed the jury that some damages must be awarded. Once the city's liability was established, an expert's estimate of the loss, based on a reasonable computation and the best evidence available under the circumstances, was sufficient to support the amount of damages fixed by the jury. Delaney & Co. v. Bozeman, 2009 MT 441, 354 M 181, 222 P.3d 618 (2009), following Burk Ranches, Inc. v. St., 242 M 300, 790 P.2d 443 (1990).

Proper Admission of Evidence of Preexisting Conditions in Suit for Damages From Auto Accident — Denial of Judgment as Matter of Law on Causation Affirmed: The District Court limited but did not preclude defendant's admission of evidence of plaintiff's preexisting conditions in a case following an auto accident that injured plaintiff. Following admission of the evidence, plaintiff contended that defendant failed to prove preexisting conditions and moved for judgment as a matter of law on the issue of causation, but the trial court denied the motion and allowed the issue to go to the jury. On appeal, plaintiff contended that the trial court erred in allowing the evidence and in denying the motion for judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's holding that plaintiff's preexisting head, cervical, and lumbar injuries, chronic pain, and depression were similar if not identical to the types of injuries attributed by plaintiff to the accident. The evidence was relevant and properly admitted. Because the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the evidence, denial of plaintiff's motion for judgment was also proper, correctly leaving the causation issue to the jury. Clark v. Bell, 2009 MT 390, 353 M 331, 220 P.3d 650 (2009). See also Truman v. District Court, 2003 MT 91, 315 M 165, 68 P.3d 654 (2003), and Ele v. Ehnes, 2003 MT 131, 316 M 69, 68 P.3d 835 (2003).

Admissibility of Summary of Medical Expenses Not Error When Injury Obvious and Plaintiff Competent: At a personal injury trial, the District Court allowed plaintiff to introduce a one-page summary of plaintiff's medical expenses. Defendant asserted on appeal that plaintiff's medical providers should have been required to lay the foundation for admission of the summary. The Supreme Court disagreed. Plaintiff's injuries comprised the type of injuries that a lay person could infer had resulted from plaintiff's accident, and plaintiff was competent to testify regarding the injuries and past expenses incurred as a result of the injuries. Thus, admission of the summary was not an abuse of discretion. McCormack v. Andres, 2008 MT 182, 343 M 424, 185 P.3d 973 (2008), following Moralli v. Lake County, 255 M 23, 839 P.2d 1287 (1992).

Failure to Establish More Probable Than Not Causal Link Between Prior and Present Injuries — Introduction of Alternative Causation Evidence Precluded: Defendant admitted that her negligence caused plaintiff's head, neck, and back injuries in an auto accident. Defendant sought to introduce evidence at trial of plaintiff's 1993 auto accident when plaintiff suffered a whiplash injury, plaintiff's 1996 work-related injury when plaintiff suffered neck and back injuries while lifting a computer, and plaintiff's 1999 auto accident when plaintiff suffered head, neck, and back injuries. The District Court granted plaintiff's motion in limine to exclude evidence related to the prior accidents, and defendant appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court correctly determined that defendant had failed to establish a “more probable than not” causal connection between the prior and present injuries, as required under Henricksen v. St., 2004 MT 20, 319 M 307, 84 P3d 38 (2004). Defendant’s mere speculation of a causal connection constituted an insufficient basis for admitting the alternate causation evidence. McCormack v. Andres, 2008 MT 182, 343 M 424, 185 P3d 973 (2008).

Foreseeability Not Required in Breach of Contract Action Under Uniform Commercial Code When Injury Results From Breach of Warranty: A breach of contract action under the Uniform Commercial Code does not require foreseeability if injury to person or property proximately results from any breach of warranty. Rothing v. Kallestad, 2007 MT 109, 337 M 193, 159 P3d 222 (2007).

Negligence for Injury — New Trial Warranted When Evidence of Pain and Mental Distress Uncontroverted: Hoffman was rear-ended by a logging truck while attempting a turn off of a two-lane highway. The jury resolved conflicting evidence and concluded that the truck driver was 50% negligent in causing the accident, but limited Hoffman’s damage award to past medical expenses even though Hoffman presented uncontroverted evidence of other damages, including pain and suffering, mental distress, and depression. The Supreme Court reversed. Once the jury concluded that the driver caused Hoffman’s injuries, the jury was not free to disregard Hoffman’s uncontroverted evidence, and the case was remanded for a new trial as to Hoffman’s damages for pain and mental distress. Hoffman v. Austin, 2006 MT 289, 334 M 357, 147 P3d 177 (2006), following Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48 (1997), and Renville v. Taylor, 2000 MT 217, 301 M 99, 7 P3d 400 (2000), and distinguishing Ele v. Ehnes, 2003 MT 131, 316 M 69, 68 P3d 835 (2003).

Introduction by Defendant of Nonparty Conduct Allowed Only to Show That Conduct Was Superseding Intervening Cause of Plaintiff’s Damages: Elisha was killed while riding on Jason’s motorcycle after Jason failed to negotiate a turn. Elisha’s parents sued the state for negligence in constructing and maintaining the road. Although he was a nonparty, the state sought to introduce evidence of Jason’s alleged intoxication, excessive speed, and misaimed headlight. The state recognized that Montana law precludes a defendant from apportioning liability to a nonparty, but argued that evidence of Jason’s conduct was admissible to negate causation pursuant to Pula v. St., 2002 MT 9, 308 M 122, 40 P3d 364 (2002), and to rebut breach of duty. The District Court disallowed the evidence. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. After revisiting Pula, the court concluded that a defendant may introduce nonparty conduct only to demonstrate that the conduct was a superseding intervening cause of plaintiff’s damages, which means an unforeseeable event that occurs after the defendant’s original act of negligence. The question then became whether Jason’s conduct was foreseeable and whether the state, as the entity that designed and maintained the road, might reasonably have foreseen as probable that Jason might drive in a negligent manner. The court cited Buck v. St., 222 M 423, 723 P2d 210 (1986), for the holding that driver error is anticipated and that the fact that a driver was arguably negligent does not cut off the state’s liability for negligence in the design and maintenance of a road. Faulconbridge v. St., 2006 MT 198, 333 M 186, 142 P3d 777 (2006).

Failure to Admit Person to Jail When Committed by Competent Authority Negligent Violation of Duty of Care: Russell violated the terms of his suspended sentence and was ordered to report to the county jail no later than 8 a.m. on December 28, 1998. When Russell appeared at the jail, a written order of commitment could not be found, so Russell was turned away. On December 30, Russell stabbed Prindel at a party, and Russell was sentenced to life in prison for attempted deliberate homicide. Prindel subsequently sued the county, alleging that the failure to incarcerate Russell on the 28th, despite a court order that Russell begin serving a sentence on that day, amounted to negligence that proximately caused Prindel’s injury. The District Court granted summary judgment to the county, concluding that the county had no duty to prevent Russell from injuring Prindel and that the issue of causation need not be addressed. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The county’s argument that it had no duty of care without a written order was without merit because the oral pronouncement of sentence constituted the competent authority to incarcerate Russell, and the jail’s ignorance of the commitment order did not diminish the court order’s status as a competent authority. The county had a special relationship of custody under 7-32-2205 to take Russell into custody for the protection of the public, and failure to do so was negligence as a matter of law. Russell posed a foreseeable risk, Prindel was a foreseeable plaintiff, and the county owed a duty to Prindel to exercise reasonable care to protect him against Russell. Reasonable minds could differ as to whether Russell’s act of stabbing Prindel was so unforeseeable as to sever the chain of causation, so summary judgment for the county was error.

Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006), following Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999), and LaTray v. Havre, 2000 MT 119, 299 M 449, 999 P2d 1010 (2000).

Preclusion of Evidence of Duty of Care to Supervise Ranch Help — Summary Judgment Proper: Elizabeth sued her husband, Robert, for damages that she received while helping perform chores on Robert's ranch, including being accidentally injected with sheep serum by Robert's father. However, Elizabeth failed to produce any evidence that Robert had any duty to supervise his father, so the trial court granted Robert's motion in limine, precluding any evidence or testimony regarding the accidental injection, including evidence by Elizabeth's expert regarding the cause of her injuries, and ultimately granted summary judgment to Robert. Elizabeth appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. In order to recover for personal injuries, Elizabeth was required to establish a legal duty, a breach of that duty, and damages proximately caused by the breach. Elizabeth did not establish a legal duty, so partial summary judgment for Robert was proper. Absent a legal duty, the evidence regarding the accidental injection and the expert's opinion concerning Elizabeth's injury was irrelevant and properly excluded. Without expert testimony, Elizabeth was unable to present evidence regarding causation and could not prevail on the negligence claim, so summary judgment for Robert was proper. Nelson v. Nelson, 2005 MT 263, 329 M 85, 122 P3d 1196 (2005).

Use of Settlement Evidence Allowed to Show Bias of Witness, Not Liability: Rule 408, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), does not allow for evidence of settlements in order to prove or disprove liability. Plaintiffs contended that the District Court improperly allowed settlement evidence when defendant cross-examined plaintiffs' contractor regarding a settlement between the contractor and plaintiffs. Citing Pula v. St., 2002 MT 9, 308 M 122, 40 P3d 364 (2002), the Supreme Court disagreed. The witness was not asked about the settlement in order to address issues of liability, but rather to illustrate the bias of the witness. Inquiry into the settlement, including the settlement amount, was pertinent to the credibility of the witness, and the District Court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the evidence. Tripp v. Jeld-Wen, Inc., 2005 MT 121, 327 M 146, 112 P3d 1018 (2005).

Violation of Federal Railroad Safety Regulations Negligence Per Se — Evidence of Contributory Negligence Disallowed: Railroad employee Woods accompanied track supervisor Holloway to inspect a section of track. Holloway exceeded the authorized limits of the track warrant and proceeded another 4 miles down the track where the inspection vehicle was struck by a train and Woods was killed. Following an investigation, the railroad concluded that Holloway's violation of the working limits caused Woods's death. Woods's widow moved for partial summary judgment that the railroad was negligent per se, but the motion was denied. The widow then requested a ruling that Woods was not contributorily negligent, but the motion was denied as untimely. The jury found that Woods was 50% negligent, and the award to the widow was reduced by half. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) governing the case is a remedial statute, the specific intent of which is to prevent railroad accidents and casualties. Federal railroad administration regulations are reviewed and construed as a comprehensive scheme of protection for railroad workers, and an interpretation of federal railroad administration regulations that leads to an unreasonable or absurd result will be rejected in favor of an interpretation that leads to a reasonable result. To conclude that federal railroad administration regulations define working limits but do not prohibit exceeding them would lead to an absurd result. Thus, the trial court erred in concluding that violation of the working limits of the track warrant was not negligence per se. FELA also provides that an employee will not be held liable for contributory negligence when a railroad's violation of any statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to an employee's injury or death, and the restriction against the use of contributory negligence as a defense applies to regulation violations as well, so it was also error for the trial court to allow the railroad to argue Woods's contributory negligence. The case was remanded for judgment reinstating the entire jury award. Woods v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry., 2004 MT 332, 324 M 151, 104 P3d 1037 (2004), following Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273 (1998), and distinguished in Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007).

No Contemporaneous Impact Requirement for Determining Negligent Infliction of Emotional Distress — Sacco Rule Applicable: Wages' son was injured by a vehicle driven by defendant's insured. Although Wages did not witness the accident, he sued defendant insurer for severe emotional distress as a result of the insured's negligent operation of the vehicle. Both parties moved for summary judgment. The District Court cited Treichel v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 280 M 443, 930 P2d 661 (1997), for the proposition that an individual who witnesses a family member sustain injury or death states a claim for negligent infliction of emotional distress, but an individual who is not at the scene to witness the accident may state a claim for loss of consortium. The court granted summary judgment to defendant. Wages appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. The court distinguished Treichel and held that the District Court should instead have applied the rule from Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), that an independent cause of action for infliction of emotional distress will arise in circumstances in which serious or severe emotional distress to a claimant was the reasonably foreseeable consequence of a negligent or intentional act or omission. Duty and foreseeability are inextricably linked, and both must be determined by the trial court. The case was remanded for further proceedings in light of Sacco. Wages v. First Nat'l Ins. Co. of America, 2003 MT 309, 318 M 232, 79 P3d 1095 (2003).

State Not Liable for Unforeseeable Accident — Intervening Criminal Act of Third Person — Expert Testimony on Foreseeability Proper: Samson's son was killed by Bercier, a youth who walked away from a nonsecure, supervised licensed youth group home. Samson sued the state for negligence. The jury returned a verdict for the state, and Samson appealed. Rather than retry the case and evaluate the facts to determine whether the state was negligent, the Supreme Court reviewed the verdict to determine if there was substantial evidence to support it and determined that there was. In order to sustain a negligence action, plaintiff must establish a legal duty on the part of defendant, a breach of that duty, causation, and damages. In cases involving a dispute over the intervening criminal act of a third party, foreseeability must be analyzed twice—first with regard to the existence of a legal duty and second with regard to proximate causation. Samson contended that the District Court erred in allowing the state to present evidence in the form of expert testimony and to argue that the shooting was an unforeseeable accident. The state argued that the expert testimony was relevant and aided the jury. Given the need to determine the foreseeability of Bercier's actions, the expert testimony was properly allowed. Further, in cases alleging an intervening cause, juries must be instructed that the specific injury to plaintiff need not have been foreseen. Samson v. St., 2003 MT 133, 316 M 90, 69 P3d 1154 (2003), affirming Lacock v. 4B's Restaurants, Inc., 277 M 17, 919 P2d 373 (1996). See also Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999), and St. v. LaTray, 2000 MT 262, 302 M 11, 11 P3d 116 (2000).

Failure to Prove Conduct a Cause in Fact of Alleged Damage — Summary Judgment Proper: Abraham's townhouse basement flooded, so Nelson, the builder of the townhouse, was sued for negligently designing and building the residence, breaching implied warranties of quality workmanship, good construction, and habitability, and causing the basement to flood. Causation is one of four elements that must be proved in a negligence action, and except in cases of intervening cause, proof of causation is satisfied by proof that a party's conduct was a cause in fact of the damage alleged. Here, when Nelson presented Abraham's deposition testimony that Abraham did not know the cause of the flooding, Nelson met the initial burden of demonstrating that no material question of fact existed regarding the element of causation, and the burden shifted to Abraham to provide facts to prove causation. However, Abraham could not merely point to lack of evidence as the factor creating a material question, nor did Abraham's suspicions or unsupported conclusory or speculative statements raise a genuine issue of material fact. Abraham could not merely rest on evidence of Nelson's negligence, but rather was required to show that Nelson's negligence was the cause in fact of Abraham's injury. Abraham failed to submit facts to create a material question upon which the District Court could determine whether Nelson's actions in designing and building the townhouse were the cause in fact of the flooding, so summary judgment for Nelson was proper. Abraham v. Nelson, 2002 MT 94, 309 M 366, 46 P3d 628 (2002). See also Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122 (1996), Gentry v. Hamill, 2013 MT 300, 372 Mont. 182, 311 P.3d 760.

Admissibility of Evidence of Intervening Negligence Relevant to Issue of Causation: Pula sued in federal court, alleging negligence against the city of Chinook, Blaine County, three Chinook police officers, the County Sheriff, and the state, related to an incident of rape of Pula by another inmate while Pula was incarcerated in Blaine County jail. All the claims were settled except the claim against the state, which was dismissed and subsequently refiled in state District Court. At trial, the District Court allowed evidence concerning the actions of Blaine County. Pula alleged that the evidence improperly allowed the state to apportion blame or responsibility to nonparty defendants, in violation of substantive due process and the holding in Plumb v. District Court, 279 M 363, 927 P2d 1011 (1996). The Supreme Court disagreed. The issue here was not how to apportion blame among several liable parties, but whether the state's acts or omissions could be said to be the cause of the intervening negligence of another. Evidence of the county's conduct was relevant to the issue of causation in Pula's negligence claim and thus was properly admitted. Pula v. St., 2002 MT 9, 308 M 122, 40 P3d 364 (2002), followed in Tripp v. Jeld-Wen, Inc., 2005 MT 121, 327 M 146, 112 P3d 1018 (2005).

Failure to Produce Evidence in Contradiction of Investigating Officer's Conclusions Regarding Cause of Accident — Summary Judgment Proper: Ten-year-old Vivier was riding her bicycle and, turning unexpectedly in front of a vehicle, was struck and injured. Vivier's parents sued the state Department of Transportation and Lewis and Clark County for negligently failing to make the road safe. The District Court granted summary judgment to the county on grounds that the county did not have a duty with respect to the design and construction of the road and granted summary judgment to the Department on grounds that the Department did not have a duty to undertake road reconstruction simply because standards of construction had changed since the road was originally constructed. The court also determined that the Viviers failed to submit evidence tending to show that the accident was caused by a design or construction problem. The Viviers appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. A cause of action for negligence has four elements, including duty, breach, causation, and damages, and summary judgment is proper if the moving party establishes that one element lacks any genuine issue of material fact and the nonmoving party does not come forward with proof that a genuine issue exists. In this case, regardless of whether the county or the Department had a duty to improve the road, the evidence showed that the accident occurred because the child turned in front of the vehicle before the driver had a chance to react, not because the condition of the road prevented the driver from maneuvering to avoid the accident. The Viviers failed to produce any facts to contradict the investigating officer's conclusions with regard to the cause of the accident, and the District Court's grant of summary judgment to the county and Department was correct. Vivier v. Dept. of Transportation, 2001 MT 221, 306 M 454, 35 P3d 958 (2001).

Proximate Cause Determination Needed in Alleging Negligence Per Se or Common-Law Negligence in Swimming Pool Drowning — Summary Judgment Proper: Following a drowning at the swimming pool of Custer's Inn, the estate of the victim filed a wrongful death action, alleging that the inn's negligence per se in failing to comply with state swimming pool safety statutes and regulations was the proximate cause of the drowning. In granting the inn's motion for summary judgment, the District Court ruled that the estate had failed to plead common-law negligence. On appeal, the Supreme Court outlined the five elements established in VanLuchene v. St., 244 M 397, 797 P2d 932 (1990), to prove negligence per se and the four elements established by the court in numerous decisions necessary to prove common-law negligence. In affirming the District Court's grant of summary judgment for the inn, the court ruled that under either theory of negligence, a plaintiff's claim must fail as a matter of law if the defendant's conduct did not cause the alleged damages. In this case, the estate failed to establish any material dispute that the failure of the inn to comply with swimming pool safety statutes and regulations was the proximate cause of the victim's drowning death. Schwabe v. Custer's Inn Associates, 2000 MT 325, 303 M 15, 15 P3d 903, 57 St. Rep. 1370 (2000), overruled in Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007), to the extent that Schwabe held that breach of a statutory duty under a negligence per se claim may also carry the added advantage of foreclosing common law defenses.

Failure to Establish Negligence Per Se When City Not Owner of Fence That Caused Injury: Plaintiff was injured after tripping on a fence wire while walking her dog at night in an unmaintained grassy area on city right-of-way next to a city street. Plaintiff contended that the city was negligent per se for creating or maintaining a public or private nuisance in violation of 81-4-105. The District Court found, and the Supreme Court agreed, that the city was not negligent per se because in order to establish negligence per se, it must be proved among other things that a defendant violated a particular statute and that the statute was intended to regulate a member of the defendant's class. Section 81-4-105 applies to the owner of a nuisance fence, but nothing in the record indicated that the city owned a fence in the area of the accident that would make the city a member of the regulated class or that the city created or maintained a nuisance fence. The city could not be in violation of a statute that it had no duty to observe. Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71, 57 St. Rep. 718 (2000).

Notice of Defect Not Required Before Landowner's Duty of Care Exists Toward Persons Injured on Property — Sullivan and Buck Overruled: Plaintiff was injured after tripping on a fence wire while walking her dog at night in an unmaintained grassy area on city right-of-way next to a city street. The District Court determined that under Montana law, a city must have notice of a defect in its streets and sidewalks before being held liable for an accident occurring as a result of the defect, citing Wiley v. Glendive, 272 M 213, 900 P2d 310 (1995), and since the city had no notice of the wire, it could not be held liable. The Supreme Court distinguished the Wiley pronouncement of required notice as based largely on dicta and went on to examine the cases that Wiley was based on, including Sullivan v. Butte, 104 M 225, 65 P2d 1175 (1937), and Buck v. St., 222 M 423, 723 P2d 210 (1986). The court then overruled Sullivan and Buck to the extent that notice of a defect is required before a landowner, whether it be the state, a city, a corporation, or a private individual, has a duty of care to persons injured on the landowner's property and instead applied Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748 (1997), which established the standard for premises liability based on the landlord's exercise of ordinary care or skill in the management of property. A property owner who never maintains the land will never have notice of defects until someone is injured. It would not make sense to hold that landowners who never inspect or maintain their property are not exposed to liability because they could not discover a defect, while landowners who do inspect and maintain their property are exposed to liability. Thus, the District Court erred in concluding that the city's failure to have notice of the wire precluded relief against it as a matter of law. Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71, 57 St. Rep. 718 (2000). See also Brown v. Demaree, 272 M 579, 901 P2d 567 (1995).

Defense of Comparative Negligence Inapplicable to Medical Malpractice Case When Patient's Pretreatment Behavior Furnishes Need for Care That Later Becomes Subject of Malpractice Claim: Plaintiff's daughter had asthma, was allergic to horses, and had a long history of breathing difficulties, but nevertheless went horseback riding. She stopped breathing and collapsed, ultimately suffering irreversible brain damage and death. The mother sued the physicians at the hospitals where the daughter was taken for treatment, alleging that the physicians were negligent in failing to intubate the daughter immediately and that the physicians' negligence caused the daughter's injury and death. The physicians argued that the daughter had already suffered a severe brain injury because of oxygen deprivation brought on by her asthma and that it was her own negligence, not that of the physicians, that caused her death. The District Court allowed the physicians to present arguments and jury instructions on comparative negligence. In assisting a jury to decide a case involving a patient's fault as a defense in a medical malpractice case, it is necessary to first clarify the sequence of events in relation to the interwoven doctrines of contributory or comparative negligence, proximate cause, and avoidable consequences (see Bryant v. Calontone, 669 A2d 286 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1996)). The temporal headings under which the patient's conduct is to be examined are: (1) the pretreatment period; (2) the treatment period during which the alleged malpractice occurred; and (3) the postmalpractice period. A patient's conduct before seeking medical treatment is merely a factor that a physician should consider in treating the patient. When the patient's negligent act merely precedes that of the physician and provides the occasion for medical treatment, contributory negligence is not a permissible defense and the physician's negligent act is considered an intervening act that does not bar a patient from recovering (see Durphy v. Kaiser, 698 A2d 459 (D.C. 1977)). In the present case, the patient's actions were clearly pretreatment conduct and not to be considered as evidence of fault that could offset any negligent conduct by the physicians. Thus, the Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion in giving instructions on comparative negligence because in a medical malpractice action, jury instructions on a patient's comparative negligence are appropriate only when the patient's negligent conduct occurs contemporaneous with or subsequent to treatment. Further, allowing evidence of the daughter's prior acts denied the mother a fair and impartial trial, and the District Court also abused its discretion in failing to grant the mother's motion for a mistrial, constituting reversible error. Harding v. Deiss, 2000 MT 169, 300 M 312, 3 P3d 1286, 57 St. Rep. 696 (2000), followed, with regard to treatment at an accident scene by law enforcement personnel responding to allegedly negligent conduct of DUI that occurred prior to the accident, in Cutler v. Jim Gilman Excavating, Inc., 2003 MT 314, 318 M 255, 80 P3d 1203 (2003).

Proof Required to Show Causation in Action Alleging Spoliation of Evidence: A third-party spoliator should not be forced to pay damages to a plaintiff who has only a frivolous underlying claim, so some threshold showing of causation and damages is required. Recovery for loss of a plaintiff's ability to prove the underlying case and a third party's interest in only compensating plaintiff for the third party's harmful conduct must be balanced in determining the standard of proof for causation in an independent cause of action for negligent or intentional spoliation of evidence. Balancing those interests requires plaintiff to show a nexus between the destroyed evidence and the impairment of proving the underlying suit. Therefore, in order to prove causation, plaintiff must show that: (1) the underlying claim was significantly impaired because of the spoliation of evidence; (2) a causal relationship exists between the projected failure of success in the underlying action and the unavailability of the destroyed evidence; and (3) the underlying action would enjoy a significant possibility of success if the spoliated evidence still existed. With respect to the third prong of causation, plaintiff must demonstrate a substantial and realistic possibility of succeeding, but need not demonstrate that success was more likely than not. Oliver v. Stimson Lumber Co., 1999 MT 328, 297 M 336, 993 P2d 11, 56 St. Rep. 1303 (1999). See also Holmes v. Amerex Rent-A-Car, 710 A2d 846 (D.C. 1998).

Clarification of General Requirement of Substantially Similar Circumstances as Precedent to Admission of Evidence of Prior Accident: Evidence of prior accidents, although inadmissible to prove negligence, may be admitted for other purposes, such as to show: (1) the existence of a particular physical condition or defect; (2) the dangerousness of the condition or defect; (3) the possibility that the condition or defect might cause an accident or injury of the type alleged; (4) cause in fact; and (5) knowledge of the condition or defect. (See Modern Evidence: Doctrine and Practice, Mueller & Kirkpatrick, § 4.8 at 281, 282 (1995), and McCormick on Evidence § 200 at 844-847, 4th Ed. (1992).) Regarding the degree of identity of circumstances required when offering prior accident evidence for the sole purpose of notice or knowledge, the general requirement of substantially similar circumstances is relaxed or less strict when the evidence is proffered to show notice rather than dangerousness or causation, and a lack of exact similarity of conditions will not preclude admission under these circumstances if the accident was of a kind that should have served to warn defendant. In proving notice, there may be dissimilarities between the accidents; however, the differences affect the weight of the evidence, but not necessarily the admissibility. Here, Kisko slipped and fell in defendant's parking lot. The District Court excluded proffered evidence of a fall by another person in the same parking lot days earlier because it occurred at a different time of day under different physical circumstances. The Supreme Court disagreed and reversed, holding that the minor spatial and temporal differences existing between the two slip-and-fall accidents went to the weight rather than admissibility of the evidence in supporting an inference that defendant had notice or knowledge of the icy conditions. The circumstances surrounding the prior accident were not so remote or dissimilar from Kisko's accident that the probative value was substantially outweighed by unfair prejudice to defendant. Kisko v. Butte Convalescent Center, 1999 MT 322, 297 M 307, 992 P2d 1271, 56 St. Rep. 1288 (1999). See also Runkle v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982, 37 St. Rep. 995 (1980), *Bailey v. S. Pac. Substantial Credible Evidence to Support Jury Verdict — Verdict Affirmed: Plaintiff was injured when a donkey savagely bit her arm. Defendant treated her at the local hospital. Plaintiff endured several surgeries and eventually lost her arm below the elbow. She sued defendant, claiming that defendant's negligence subjected her to an increased risk of harm and lessened her chances for a better result. The jury found that defendant was negligent but that the negligence did not cause injury to plaintiff. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that there was substantial credible evidence in the record to support the jury's verdict. Much of the testimony of plaintiff's expert witness was contradicted by defendant's expert witnesses. An attack upon a jury verdict alleging that it is not supported by the evidence is proper only when there is a complete absence of any credible evidence in support of the verdict. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to alter or amend the judgment or for a new trial. Campbell v. Canty, 1998 MT 278, 291 M 398, 969 P2d 268, 55 St. Rep. 1137 (1998), followed in Upky v. Marshall Mtn., LLC, 2008 MT 90, 342 M 273, 180 P3d 651 (2008), and in Stubblefield v. W. Yellowstone, 2013 MT 78, 369 Mont. 322, 298 P.3d 419.

FELA — Stipulation That Jury Awards Not Be Added Together — Greater Award Subsuming Smaller Awards: Under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA), 45 U.S.C. 51 through 60, an injured railroad worker is entitled to recover damages if the negligence of the railroad played any part, no matter how slight, in causing the injury or death for which damages are sought. In the present case, the jury found independent railroad negligence and causation in each of three work-related incidents that played a part in the condition of Bevacqua's knee. Under FELA, Bevacqua was entitled to judgment of $200,000 for a 1973 injury, $320,000 for a 1980 injury, and $40,000 for a 1990 injury. However, the parties stipulated that the jury awards for each incident would not be added together, precluding any double recovery. The Supreme Court held that Bevacqua was entitled to $320,000, the greatest of the jury awards, and that under the terms of the stipulation, the smaller awards were subsumed in the greater award. Bevacqua v. Union Pac.

RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273, 55 St. Rep. 469 (1998), following Rogers v. Mo. Pac. RR Co., 352 US 500, 1 L Ed 2d 493, 77 S Ct 443 (1957).

Jury's Use of Dictionary Definitions Conflicting With Instructions: The jury used an ordinary dictionary and a legal dictionary, improperly given to the jury by the bailiff at the jury's request, to look up the terms "proximate cause" and "prudent". The definitions relating to causation did not contain the foreseeability element that was contained in an instruction given to the jury. The jury's conduct constituted improper independent research on extraneous material that redefined the critical element of causation by effectively eliminating from the instruction any reference to foreseeability. This was sufficient to demonstrate probable prejudice and potential injury to defendant, against whom the jury returned a verdict in this action. At the very least, there was a reasonable probability that the jury's misconduct influenced its decision, and as a consequence, defendant's substantial rights were compromised, along with his right to a fair trial. The trial judge's denial of a new trial was reversed, and the case was remanded. Allers v. Riley, 273 M 1, 901 P2d 600, 52 St. Rep. 920 (1995).

New Standard for Negligent or Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress — Proof of Serious or Severe Emotional Stress Required: A photographer for a Belgrade newspaper sued the newspaper and a city police officer, alleging that both falsely and maliciously conspired to criminally prosecute the photographer for stealing photographs from the newspaper. After the District Court granted the newspaper and officer a summary judgment motion, the Supreme Court, after reviewing cases using the traditional approach, reversed and remanded the case for determination under a new standard for negligent or intentional infliction of emotional distress. Applying the new standard, the Supreme Court held that an independent cause of action for infliction of emotional distress will arise in circumstances in which serious or severe emotional distress to a claimant, as defined in Comment j of the Restatement (Second) of Torts, was the reasonably foreseeable consequence of a negligent or intentional act or omission. The difference between negligent infliction and intentional infliction lies not in the elements of the tort but in the nature and culpability of the defendant's conduct. Punitive damages may be requested in a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. It is for the court to determine whether the evidence of serious or severe emotional distress can be found; it is for the jury to determine whether, on the evidence, it has in fact existed. Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411, 52 St. Rep. 407 (1995). But see Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2009 MT 248, 351 M 464, 215 P3d 649 (2009), where the Sacco "serious or severe" standard was limited to independent claims of negligent or intentional infliction of emotional distress. Sacco was followed in Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124, 57 St. Rep. 144 (2000), Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 292, 302 M 289, 16 P3d 992, 57 St. Rep. 1238 (2000), Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2001 MT 269, 307 M 269, 38 P3d 148 (2001), Wages v. First Nat'l Ins. Co. of America, 2003 MT 309, 318 M 232, 79 P3d 1095 (2003), McConkey v. Flathead Elec. Co-op, 2005 MT 334, 330 M 48, 125 P3d 1121 (2005), and Judd v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2008 MT 181, 343 M 416, 186 P3d 214 (2008). Sacco was distinguished, with regard to the inapplicability of the standard to civil rights cases brought under Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, in Vortex Fishing Sys., Inc. v. Foss, 2001 MT 312, 308 M 8, 38 P3d 836 (2001), and clarified in Henricksen v. St., 2004 MT 20, 319 M 307, 84 P3d 38 (2004), to the extent that when there is a physical manifestation of bodily harm resulting from emotional distress, such as posttraumatic stress disorder, this bodily harm is sufficient evidence that the emotional distress is genuine and severe. See also Turner v. Burlington N. Santa Fe RR Co., 338 F3d 1058 (9th Cir. 2003).

Components of Causation Element of Negligence Claim: The causation element of a negligence claim includes two components: (1) that the defendant's act is the cause in fact of the injury; and (2) that the injury is the direct or indirect result, proximately caused by the negligent act. Stated another way, proximate cause is an act or omission that, in a natural and continuous sequence unbroken by any new, independent cause, produces injury and without which the injury would not have occurred. In the case at hand, a lapse of from 45 seconds to 1 minute between the entry of a snowplow onto the highway and the subsequent accident led to the conclusion that the manner in which the plow entered that highway was not the proximate cause of the accident. Hatch v. Dept. of Highways, 269 M 188, 887 P2d 729, 51 St. Rep. 1512 (1994).

Injury While Lifting Door Not Part of Continuous Sequence Establishing Proximate Cause: Bossard injured his arm while lifting a sliding door on Johnson's property back onto its track. The Supreme Court held that although Johnson knew that the door could come off its track, he could not foresee that Bossard would injure his arm lifting the door into place and that therefore there was a link missing in the chain of causation, thus negating proximate cause. Bossard v. Johnson, 265 M 272, 876 P2d 627, 51 St. Rep. 494 (1994).

Insufficient Evidence of Causation — Summary Judgment Properly Granted: Logan was discharged from her job at Metra and later obtained employment with the Yellowstone County Sheriff's office, where she suffered a repetitive motion injury. She sued Yellowstone County, claiming that the county breached her employment contract. The county moved for summary judgment, claiming that there was insufficient evidence of causation to support the action, and the District Court dismissed the action. The Supreme Court held that there was no substantial evidence from which the trier of fact could find that Logan's discharge from her job at Metra caused her repetitive motion injury because the injury was not foreseeable. Logan v. Yellowstone County, 263 M 218, 868 P2d 565, 51 St. Rep. 22 (1994).

No Causal Link Between Lack of Warning and Accidental Injury — Directed Verdict Proper: As set out in Brown v. N. Am. Mfg. Co., 176 M 98, 576 P2d 711 (1978), a showing of proximate cause is a necessary predicate to plaintiff's recovery in strict liability. In arguing the causation element, Riley contended that: (1) his testimony relating to his respect for machinery and concern for safety was sufficient evidence from which to infer that he would have ridden a motorcycle differently had a warning of the propensity to wobble been given; and (2) alternatively, he was entitled to a rebuttable presumption that he would have followed a warning had one been given. However, Riley's testimony on respect and concern was general rather than direct, unequivocal testimony that he would have altered his conduct had a warning been given, which is necessary to support a causal relationship. Although the Supreme Court has cited Comment j of Restatement (Second) of Torts 402A (1965) in recognizing the failure to warn claim itself, the specific language of the Comment that gives rise to the rebuttable presumption has not been adopted. Rather than adopt the Comment wholesale, the court, consistent with Brown and its successors, required a showing of a causal link between the lack of a warning and the accident and injuries in a failure to warn claim. Absent that showing, a directed verdict on the claim was proper. Riley v. Am. Honda Motor Co., Inc., 259 M 128, 856 P2d 196, 50 St. Rep. 714 (1993), followed in Wood v. Old Trapper Taxi, 286 M 18, 952 P2d 1375, 54 St. Rep. 1263 (1997). In Patch v. Hillerich & Bradsby Co., 2011 MT 175, 361 Mont. 241, 257 P.3d 383, the Supreme Court concluded that Riley was not intended to limit the flexible standard of proof in product liability cases and that Riley is only one method for proving causation.

Collision of Third Vehicle at Accident Site Not Foreseeable: After a car owned by Nigg rolled into the median of the interstate highway, O'Connor slowed his vehicle to look at the accident scene and was struck from behind by Drapella. O'Connor sued Nigg, but the District Court held that O'Connor's injury was not proximately caused by Nigg's negligence and granted summary judgment. The Supreme Court held that summary judgment was proper because Nigg could not be held to foresee O'Connor's negligence in slowing to watch the accident scene and that O'Connor's negligence was an independent, intervening cause breaking the chain of causation. O'Connor v. Nigg, 254 M 416, 838 P2d 422, 49 St. Rep. 817 (1992).

Parolee's Shooting of Plaintiff Not Foreseeable: The Department of Institutions miscalculated the prisoner's parole eligibility date and paroled him before he was eligible to be released. The plaintiff was shot by the parolee and sued the Department for negligence. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's ruling that the Department was not liable because it could not have reasonably foreseen that the parolee would shoot someone. Kiger v. St., 245 M 457, 802 P2d 1248, 47 St. Rep. 2206 (1990), followed, with regard to applicability of the ordinarily prudent person standard in determining negligence for intervening acts, in USF&G v. Camp, 253 M 64, 831 P2d 586, 49 St. Rep. 372 (1992), and in King v. St., 259 M 393, 856 P2d 954, 50 St. Rep. 848 (1993).

Failure to Instruct on Proximate Cause: The defendant argued that the lower court erred in not giving a jury instruction on the necessity of the plaintiff proving proximate cause. The Supreme Court ruled that it was error to fail to give a proximate cause instruction but that it was not reversible error because the defendant had never argued that there was an intervening event breaking the chain of causation. Davis v. Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, 244 M 61, 796 P2d 181, 47 St. Rep. 1302 (1990), followed in Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122, 53 St. Rep. 428 (1996).

Accountant Negligence — Subsequent Events Not Intervening Causes: The plaintiff relied on the defendant's audit and purchased a business that the audit showed as profitable when in reality it was insolvent. The defendant argued that subsequent events, such as the loss of employees, competition, and the lack of market, were intervening causes. The Supreme Court held that not all intervening events cut off the defendant's liability. Only if the intervening cause is reasonably unforeseeable will it be considered a supervening event breaking the chain of causation. The court found that substantial evidence existed to support the jury's finding of liability on the defendant's part. Thayer v. Hicks, 243 M 138, 793 P2d 784, 47 St. Rep. 1082 (1990).

Jury to Examine Chain of Causation: The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the verdict in favor of the plaintiff on the basis that the jury had not been properly instructed on the chain of causation. The court held that the jury was to consider whether or not the damages suffered by the plaintiff were a foreseeable consequence of the defendant's acts or whether the damages were the result of subsequent intervening events. Kitchen Krafters, Inc. v. Eastside Bank of Mont., 242 M 155, 789 P2d 567, 47 St. Rep. 602 (1990), followed in Sizemore v. Mont. Power Co., 246 M 37, 803 P2d 629, 47 St. Rep. 2252 (1990), Whiting v. St., 248 M 207, 810 P2d 1177, 48 St. Rep. 396 (1991), and Gibby v. Noranda Minerals Corp., 273 M 420, 905 P2d 126, 52 St. Rep. 1042 (1995), distinguished in Califato v. Gerke, 258 M 68, 852 P2d 121, 50 St. Rep. 428 (1993), and overruled, as to consideration of "foreseeability" in cases not involving intervening causes, in Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122, 53 St. Rep. 428 (1996). See also Lacock v. 4B's Restaurants, Inc., 277 M 17, 919 P2d 373, 53 St. Rep. 492 (1996).

Developer Unable to Prove Reliance on County Representations Sole Cause of Damages: In a prior appeal, the Supreme Court held that the developer had not shown that representations by the county were the sole cause of his damages. Upon remand, the developer argued that he was entitled to an evidentiary hearing to prove that the representations were the sole cause of damages. The Supreme Court held that no right to an evidentiary hearing existed because the court had held as a matter of law that the developer was not justified in relying on the county's opinion and the developer had no right to try and prove in a second hearing that which he could not prove in the first. Young v. Flathead County, 241 M 223, 786 P2d 658, 47 St. Rep. 226 (1990).

Builders Not Liable for Negligence After Relinquishment of Control: The liability of builders is terminated once work is finished and control and ownership is transferred to the subsequent owners. Papp v. Rocky Mtn. Oil & Minerals, Inc., 236 M 330, 769 P2d 1249, 46 St. Rep. 400 (1989).

Summary Judgment Proper — No Reasonable Difference of Opinion That Defendant Did Not Cause Injury: Plaintiff parents appealed a summary judgment order in an action alleging a university's negligence caused injury to their minor daughter who had consumed alcohol and was involved in a motorcycle accident while under the supervision of a university program. Although the university assumed a custodial role similar to that of a high school when it undertook to have plaintiffs' daughter live on its campus, supervised by university personnel, and thus was charged with exercising reasonable care, there was no room for a reasonable difference of opinion as to whether someone other than the defendant university was the intervening cause of the daughter's injury. Therefore, summary judgment for the university based on proximate cause was proper. Graham v. Mont. St. Univ., 235 M 284, 767 P2d 301, 45 St. Rep. 2389 (1988).

Duty of Plaintiff When Multiple Causes of Damage Appear: The Supreme Court cited Valley Inland Pac. Constructors, Inc. v. Clackamas Water District, 603 P2d 1381 (Oreg. 1979), in holding that when more than one possible cause of damage appears, the plaintiff must eliminate causes other than those for which the defendant is responsible. Failure to separate causes and damage barred plaintiff from arguing proximate cause. Young v. Flathead County, 232 M 274, 757 P2d 772, 45 St. Rep. 1047 (1988), followed in USF&G v. Camp, 253 M 64, 831 P2d 586, 49 St. Rep. 372 (1992).

"Proximate Cause" Defined: In Montana, proximate cause is one in which "a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new, independent cause, produces injury, and without which the injury would not have occurred". Young v. Flathead County, 232 M 274, 757 P2d 772, 45 St. Rep. 1047 (1988), citing Jimison v. U.S., 267 F. Supp. 674 (D.C. Mont. 1967), and Sztaba v. Great N. Ry. Co., 147 M 185, 411 P2d 379 (1966), and followed in Bickler v. The Racquet Club Heights Associates, 258 M 19, 850 P2d 967, 50 St. Rep. 409 (1993). See also Sizemore v. Mont. Power Co., 246 M 37, 803 P2d 629, 47 St. Rep. 2252 (1990), and Hatch v. Dept. of Highways, 269 M 188, 887 P2d 729, 51 St. Rep. 1512 (1994).

Indemnification Action — Defense of Contributory Negligence Unavailable: Contributory negligence is not available in Montana as a defense in an action for indemnification. Jones v. Aero-Chem Corp., 680 F. Supp. 338, 45 St. Rep. 360 (D.C. Mont. 1987).

Comparative Negligence Consideration Properly Precluded Where One Party Not Negligent: District Court awarded damages to a commercial trout company upon a finding that failure of the trout farm was proximately caused by a breach of contract and misrepresentation by the bank and its agent. Upon appeal, bank claimed trial court erred in failing to compare conduct of agent with trout company's principal shareholders. The Supreme Court found no legal error in trial court's decision to preclude consideration of comparative negligence by trout company shareholders where there was insufficient evidence to indicate any negligent action by those shareholders. Crystal Springs Trout Co. v. First State Bank of Froid, 225 M 122, 732 P2d 819, 44 St. Rep. 90 (1987).

Removal of IV Not Proximate Cause of Death: Following surgery and upon doctor's order, a nurse removed an internal jugular vein catheter (IV) from patient Juedeman. Shortly after removal of the IV, Juedeman lapsed into a coma and died 11 days later. Survivors brought an action against the hospital, alleging that negligent removal of the IV had caused an air embolism, resulting in the death. The District Court returned a verdict for the hospital. On appeal, the survivors claimed the court erred in giving a "proximate cause" rather than "legal cause" jury instruction. They maintained that the hospital's negligence, along with Juedeman's preexisting condition, were concurring causes of the death. The Supreme Court, however, affirmed the District Court decision, stating that no evidence supported the survivors' argument that the hospital's negligence was a substantial cause of Juedeman's death. Juedeman v. Mont. Deaconess Medical Center, 223 M 311, 726 P2d 301, 43 St. Rep. 1747 (1986).

Summary Judgment — Failure to Show Proximate Cause: Dvorak was a welder for Beall, which repaired truck tankers used to haul commodities. Matador delivered to Beall for repairs a tanker that had hauled substances contaminated by toxic hydrogen sulfide. Despite Dvorak's discovery and report of remaining contaminants, a Beall foreman ordered him to enter the tank to complete the repairs. Dvorak subsequently collapsed and received injuries as a result of exposure to the hydrogen sulfide. Dvorak filed suit, claiming that Beall and Matador were liable under an intentional tort exception to the exclusivity provision of workers' compensation laws. The District Court granted Beall's summary judgment motion. On appeal, Dvorak argued that Matador was strictly liable for engaging in an abnormally dangerous activity and negligent for failing to warn of the protections needed against hydrogen sulfide dangers. The District Court granted Matador's summary judgment motion, concluding that Beall's conduct was the sole proximate cause of Dvorak's injuries. On appeal, the Supreme Court stated that without Beall's negligent conduct Dvorak's injuries would not have occurred. Thus, Matador's failure to warn was not the proximate cause of the accident. Accordingly, since Beall's conduct proximately caused the accident, Matador was not strictly liable. Dvorak v. Matador Serv., Inc., 223 M 98, 727 P2d 1306, 43 St. Rep. 1562 (1986), distinguished, with regard to foreseeability and its relation to proximate cause, in Sizemore v. Mont. Power Co., 246 M 37, 803 P2d 629, 47 St. Rep. 2252 (1990).

Driver as Sole Proximate Cause of Accident Without Consideration of Continuing Negligence — Improper Jury Instruction: Issues of fact were submitted to the jury on a special verdict devised by the District Court. The jury decided that the state and county were both negligent but that the negligence was not a proximate cause of the accident. On the basis of the special verdict, the District Court entered judgment in favor of the state and county. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that one of the District Court's instructions improperly allowed the jury to determine that the driver was the sole proximate cause of the injuries to herself and her passengers without giving consideration to the continuing nature of the negligence of the state and county to and through the time of the accident. Buck v. St., 222 M 423, 723 P2d 210, 43 St. Rep. 1384 (1986), distinguished in Yager v. Deane, 258 M 453, 853 P2d 1214, 50 St. Rep. 610 (1993), and overruled, to the extent that notice of a defect is required before a landowner, whether it be the state, a city, a corporation, or a private individual, has a duty of care to persons injured on the landowner's property, in Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71, 57 St. Rep. 718 (2000).

Rear-End Collision — Liability of Following Driver Who Must Make Sudden Stop: Although the court has held that a following driver has the primary duty of avoiding a collision with a driver in front of him, the court has never addressed a situation where the following defendant must make an emergency stop when the plaintiff in front unexpectedly collides with a third vehicle that suddenly pulls in front of the plaintiff. Summary judgment for the following defendant was proper where he was not speeding and all the evidence showed the driver who pulled in front of the plaintiff was at fault and not the defendant. The mere fact that defendant was behind plaintiff and hit her vehicle was not prima facie evidence of negligence. Birky v. Johnson, 220 M 413, 716 P2d 198, 43 St. Rep. 488 (1986).

Bar Selling to Intoxicated Minor — Liability to Minor: A bar or tavern operator who serves an intoxicated minor may be liable in damages for injuries subsequently sustained by the minor. The imbibers' acts of drinking alcoholic beverages served by the bar or tavern operator and then becoming involved in an injury-producing accident may be reasonably foreseeable events that may no longer protect a defendant from liability for negligence. Under the state's system of comparative negligence, it is for the jury to determine the degree of negligence attributable to the plaintiff and defendant. Neither the plaintiffs nor the defendant's acts have to be the sole proximate cause of the injuries. Bissett v. DMI, Inc., 220 M 153, 717 P2d 545, 43 St. Rep. 252 (1986).

"Substantial Factor" Rule to Apply: The substantial factor rule applies when two causes concur to bring about an injury and either cause would have been sufficient for the result. Thus, it applied in this case when the necessity for amputation of the leg of a state prison inmate could have been caused either by the inmate's preexisting condition of arteriosclerosis of the blood vessels of the legs or by the negligence of doctors treating him for an ingrown toenail. Kyriss v. St., 218 M 162, 707 P2d 5, 42 St. Rep. 1487 (1985), distinguished in Juedeman v. Mont. Deaconess Medical Center, 223 M 311, 726 P2d 301, 43 St. Rep. 1747 (1986). See also Niles v. Big Sky Eyewear, 236 M 455, 771 P2d 114, 46 St. Rep. 504 (1989).

Hit-and-Run Synonymous With Cause-and-Run — Physical Contact of Vehicles Not Required: While approaching a bridge, insured swerved to avoid a vehicle that had crossed the centerline into insured's lane. Insured hit a bridge abutment, his passenger was injured, and the other driver continued on and was never found. The insured's uninsured motorist coverage required physical contact between the two vehicles, though 33-23-201 did not. The court held, in a case of first impression, that the physical contact requirement defeated the purpose of and was repugnant to the statute and that coverage attached. The court also stated that, in other states in which the issue had arisen, there had been no flood of fraudulent claims involving so-called phantom vehicles and that the terms "hit-and-run" and "cause-and-run" were synonymous in this context, the former being a baseball colloquialism used to describe violation of a statute requiring a motorist involved in an accident to stop and render assistance and identification whether or not there was physical contact. The court cited with approval Hammon v. Farmers Ins. Group, 692 P2d 1202 (Idaho App. 1984), which ruled a physical contact requirement void as contrary to a statute strikingly similar to and in pertinent part the same as 33-23-201. McGlynn v. Safeco Ins. Co. of America, 216 M 379, 701 P2d 735, 42 St. Rep. 882 (1985).

Negligent Restoration of Electricity to Structure — Not Proximate Cause of Fire: Plaintiff presented expert witness testimony of a professor of electrical engineering to support its contention that its grain elevator burned as a direct result of negligent restoration of electrical power to the elevator. Defendant power company presented as expert witnesses three experienced linemen who testified that the power was properly restored to the elevator, but that it caught fire due to negligence by elevator employees in not curing defective wiring that had caused the transformer to trip and a small fire to start before restoration of power and ultimate destruction of the elevator. The jury found defendant company negligent, but that its negligence was not the proximate cause of the fire. On appeal, the Supreme Court refused to reverse the jury decision. The plaintiff's evidence was not so overwhelming that there was no room for an honest difference of opinion on the issue of causation. Farmers Union GTA v. Mont. Power Co., 216 M 289, 700 P2d 994, 42 St. Rep. 815 (1985).

Jury Instructions — "Locality Rule" Standard Not Relevant for Judging Medical Specialist — "Loss of Chance": Woman sued her doctor, a national board certified orthopedic surgeon, for damages for alleged negligent medical treatment. Defendant had treated plaintiff for misdiagnosed knee problems for 4 months without ordering diagnostic X-rays before referring plaintiff for surgery to out-of-state doctor who discovered a giant cell tumor in plaintiff's knee. Plaintiff alleged that defendant's failure to order diagnostic films early in treatment resulted in her losing any chance to have less radical surgery and preserve her natural knee. Jury returned verdict in favor of defendant, and plaintiff appealed. Supreme Court vacated District Court judgment and remanded for new trial. Supreme Court held that District Court committed reversible error by instructing jury on the "locality rule" as appropriate standard of care rather than giving plaintiff's proposed instruction holding board certified specialists to national standards of the specialty. Supreme Court also held that on retrial, plaintiff is entitled to a "loss of chance" instruction. The trier of fact should determine whether defendant's negligence was a substantial factor in reducing plaintiff's chances of obtaining a better result rather than whether plaintiff would have obtained a better result with earlier diagnosis. Aasheim v. Humberger, 215 M 127, 695 P2d 824, 42 St. Rep. 235 (1985).

Evidence Sufficient to Instruct on Driving Under Influence — Statutory Violation and Proximate Cause Instructions: During the course of a tort trial involving an automobile accident, some evidence was produced indicating the driver may have consumed some alcohol prior to the accident, and drug paraphernalia was found in his car. There was sufficient evidence to instruct the jury regarding driving under the influence. It was not error to give a jury instruction stating that a Montana statute makes it unlawful to drive under the influence because the instruction must be read in conjunction with other instructions, one of which provides that although conduct in violation of a statute constitutes negligence as a matter of law, such a violation is of no consequence unless it was the proximate cause of an injury suffered by the plaintiff. Foreman v. Minnie, 211 M 441, 689 P2d 1210, 41 St. Rep. 1478 (1984).

Legal Malpractice Complaint — Upheld Under Liberal Rules of Pleading: In a legal malpractice suit, the defendant-attorney moved to dismiss the action on the grounds that the complaint did not state a cause of action because the complaint did not specifically allege that had it not been for the negligence of the attorney, the client would have won the lawsuit. The District Court dismissed the case. The Supreme Court reversed, ruling that under Montana's liberal rules of pleading, the complaint was sufficient. R.H. Schwartz Constr. Specialties, Inc. v. Hanrahan, 207 M 105, 672 P2d 1116, 40 St. Rep. 1926 (1983).

Parked and Disabled Vehicle Not Proximate Cause of Accident — Verdict Supported by Substantial Evidence: Where the defendant parked his stalled pickup truck at the side of a frontage road and turned on the floodlights of the hay grinder he was pulling before leaving the truck to seek help, but the truck was nevertheless struck by the plaintiff's vehicle, the Supreme Court found that the jury verdict for the defendant was supported by substantial evidence. The record showed that the plaintiff had seen the defendant's lights from one-half mile away but failed to avoid the accident. The jury found defendant 0% negligent and plaintiff 100% negligent; it was entitled to conclude, as it did, that no negligence on the part of the defendant was the proximate cause of the accident. Griffel v. Faust, 205 M 372, 668 P2d 247, 40 St. Rep. 1370 (1983).

Trailer Swinging Into Wrong Lane When Driver Swerves to Avoid Collision — No Negligence — No New Trial: Undisputed evidence showed plaintiff was partly in defendant's lane on two-lane road while driving through a curve and that the approaching defendant responded by swerving to the right to avoid a head-on collision. The swerve caused a trailer that defendant was hauling behind his tractor-trailer truck to swing into plaintiff's lane and collide with plaintiff. There was no evidence that defendant was driving unsafely prior to that or that he was in any way negligent. Defendant acted reasonably and prudently, and plaintiff's actions supported a finding that he was the proximate cause of his injuries. The jury verdict found defendant was not negligent. It was an abuse of discretion and reversible error for the court to grant plaintiff a new trial, for there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict. Shannon v. Hulett, 205 M 345, 668 P2d 228, 40 St. Rep. 1349 (1983).

Proximate Cause — Circumstantial Evidence — Standard of Proof: Circumstantial evidence sufficient to prove proximate cause in a civil action need not exclude every reasonable conclusion other than the conclusion sought to be established. It is sufficient if it affords a basis for a reasonable inference by the trier of fact, even if there are other reasonable inferences that might be drawn by that trier of fact. Jacques v. Mont. Nat'l Guard, 199 M 493, 649 P2d 1319, 39 St. Rep. 1565 (1982).

Superseding Cause — Jury Instruction: Although an instruction on superseding cause did not involve the clearest or best language possible, it essentially stated the rules set down in Halsey v. Uithof, 166 M 319, 532 P2d 686 (1975). Goodnough v. St., 199 M 9, 647 P2d 364, 39 St. Rep. 1170 (1982).

Inferring Injury Caused by Auto Accident: Jury trying personal injury action could properly choose to infer from the evidence presented that an auto accident allegedly caused by negligence of defendant was the direct cause of plaintiff's injuries, and Supreme Court would not supplant jury's findings with one of its own. Allers v. Willis, 197 M 499, 643 P2d 592, 39 St. Rep. 745 (1982), followed in Moralli v. Lake County, 255 M 23, 839 P2d 1287, 49 St. Rep. 872 (1992).

Concurrent Negligence: Plaintiff tenants alleged that a fire which destroyed the building was caused by the landlord's negligence, and there was evidence that the fire started in rooms leased by one of the tenants. An instruction that when the negligent conduct of two or more persons contributes concurrently as the proximate causes of an injury, the conduct of each person is a proximate cause of the injury, regardless of the extent to which each contributes to the injury, and that a cause is concurrent if it was operative at the moment of the injury and acted with another cause to produce the injury was fairly designed to meet an issue raised by the evidence, and it was not error to give the instruction. Swenson v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 141, 635 P2d 978, 38 St. Rep. 1588 (1981).

"Mere Happening" Instruction — Propriety — No Inference Except Res Ipsa Loquitur: Plaintiff, a mail carrier, was attempting to negotiate a left turn. Evidence was unclear as to whether he signaled for the turn. The roadway into which he was attempting to turn was a private driveway, open to public use. While turning he was struck by defendant who was attempting to pass. The road was lined for passing and visibility was clear. The jury was instructed that "[t]he mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone, does not give rise to legal inference that it was caused by negligence or that any party to this action was negligent or otherwise at fault." The Supreme Court said that it can be confusing to a jury to give this instruction and recommended against it. It was not prejudicial error to give this instruction in this case in light of the facts of the case and other instructions given. The Supreme Court affirmed that the “mere happening” instruction is totally incompatible in res ipsa loquitur cases. It is the law in negligence cases that negligence may not be inferred from the happening of an accident but that res ipsa loquitur is an exception to the rule. Sampson v. Snow, 194 M 392, 632 P2d 1122, 38 St. Rep. 1441 (1981).

Person Causing Injury to Himself: One who has been proximately the cause of loss or injury to himself cannot be heard to say that someone else should compensate him for his loss, even though such other person had brought about the condition, in the order of causation, which produced the injury. This is the rule declared in this section. County of Silver Bow v. Davies, 40 M 418, 107 P 81 (1910).

RES IPSA LOQUITUR

No Abuse of Discretion in Jury Instructions Regarding Negligence, Res Ipsa Loquitur, and Exception to HIV Informed Consent Provision: Howard contended that the trial court abused its discretion by providing insufficient jury instructions that did not allow the jury to determine whether defendant acted recklessly, by failing to inform the jury that the AIDS Prevention Act required defendant to pay per se damages if defendant acted negligently or recklessly by failing to get consent from Howard’s alleged significant other prior to administering an HIV test, and by refusing an instruction on res ipsa loquitur permitting proof by circumstantial evidence. The Supreme Court found no abuse of the trial court’s discretion. The jury found no breach of defendant’s standard of care, so there could be no finding that defendant acted recklessly, and the issue of damages was moot. A res ipsa loquitur instruction was unnecessary because restraints applied on Howard at the hospital were not necessarily the cause of Howard’s back injury, which also may have been caused by a seizure rather than the hospital’s actions. Last, a material question existed whether Howard’s girlfriend was actually a significant other under the AIDS Prevention Act, so the trial court’s instruction on the guidelines regarding when an HIV test may be ordered without informed consent adequately informed the jury on the issue. Howard v. St. James Community Hosp., 2006 MT 23, 331 M 60, 129 P3d 126 (2006).

Inference of Negligence Based on Res Ipsa Loquitur — Mere Happening of Accident Not Considered Evidence of Negligence: Bonilla was injured when a chair allegedly collapsed at a University of Montana concert. Bonilla asserted that under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, the collapse of the chair in and of itself allowed the inference that the chair broke as a result of some negligence by the University. The Supreme Court cited Restatement (Second) of Torts 328D, regarding when the inference of negligence pursuant to res ipsa loquitur may arise: (1) the event is of a kind that ordinarily does not occur in the absence of negligence; (2) other responsible causes, including the conduct of plaintiff and third persons, are sufficiently eliminated by the evidence; and (3) the indicated negligence is within the scope of the defendant’s duty to the plaintiff. Here, Bonilla’s own action, although perhaps innocent, may well have precipitated the collapse of the chair, and Bonilla offered no evidence that the University owed him any duty of care that was breached. Because other responsible causes, including Bonilla’s own conduct, were not eliminated by evidence, the District Court properly found that res ipsa loquitur did not apply, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Bonilla v. Univ. of Mont., 2005 MT 183, 328 M 41, 116 P3d 823 (2005).

Plaintiff’s Burden to Establish Prima Facie Case Not Relieved by Res Ipsa Loquitur: In order for the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur to apply, permitting an inference of negligence on the part of one in control of an instrumentality that causes injury, not only must the elements of the doctrine be met, but plaintiff also has the burden of making a prima facie case that defendant breached a duty of care. Here, plaintiff did not establish the standard of care applicable to administration of a functional capacities evaluation through expert testimony, nor did plaintiff establish a breach of the standard by the person who administered the test. Absent a prima facie case, res ipsa loquitur did not apply and summary judgment for defendant was proper. Romans v. Lusin, 2000 MT 84, 299 M 182, 997 P2d 114, 57 St. Rep. 363 (2000). See also Clark v. Norris, 226 M 43, 734 P2d 182, 44 St. Rep. 444 (1987).

Medical Malpractice — Res Ipsa Loquitur Not Applicable to Prove Prima Facie Case — Exclusive Control Element Missing: Plaintiff’s hip replacement surgery was terminated after an incision was made because an improperly sized prosthetic device was shipped by the supplier and was not discovered by hospital staff prior to surgery. The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not applicable because the prosthetic device was not under the exclusive control of the defendant hospital at the time of the injury. The doctrine is not applicable to allow plaintiff to avoid producing the expert testimony required to establish a prima facie case of duty of care and breach of that duty. Dalton v. Kalispell Regional Hosp., 256 M 243, 846 P2d 960, 50 St. Rep. 54 (1993), followed in Estate of Nielsen v. Pardis, 265 M 470, 878 P2d 234, 51 St. Rep. 591 (1994).

Fire of Unknown Origin — Res Ipsa Loquitur Inapplicable: The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not usually applicable in cases of fires of unknown origin, which may occur in the absence of negligence. Valley Properties Ltd. Partnership v. Steadman's Hardware, Inc., 251 M 242, 824 P2d 250, 49 St. Rep. 13 (1992), following Wright v. U.S., 472 F. Supp. 1153 (D.C. Mont. 1979).

Res Ipsa Loquitur Not Applicable in Medical Malpractice Case: The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply in a medical malpractice case where there is no evidence to show that the result ordinarily would not have occurred had the defendant exercised due care or that the result was not to be anticipated. Hunter v. Missoula Community Hosp., 230 M 300, 750 P2d 106, 45 St. Rep. 220 (1988), citing Negaard v. Estate of Feda, 152 M 47, 446 P2d 436 (1968), and overruled on other grounds in Burlingham v. Mintz, 270 M 277, 891 P2d 527, 52 St. Rep. 181 (1995).

Test for Medical Malpractice: Before the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur can be applied in a medical malpractice case, the plaintiff must prove that the result complained of rarely occurs and that it is not an inherent risk of the procedure. Clark v. Norris, 226 M 43, 734 P2d 182, 44 St. Rep. 444 (1987), followed in Estate of Nielsen v. Pardis, 265 M 470, 878 P2d 234, 51 St. Rep. 591 (1994).

Res Ipsa Loquitur — Products Liability — Auto Accident — Not Applicable to Manufacturer and Seller: Res ipsa loquitur is generally applied to human conduct, not to defective products. The control that manufacturer and seller of used auto exercised over it with respect to the time it was involved in accident was so remote that any causal connection between their duty toward purchaser, who was driving it when it went out of control and crashed, and purchaser's injuries was broken. In addition, other reasonable causes of the accident were not eliminated and the allegations of purchaser and her passenger were purely speculative. Therefore, no reasonable inference that manufacturer and seller were negligent could be made and res ipsa loquitur did not apply. Brothers v. Gen. Motors Corp., 202 M 477, 658 P2d 1108, 40 St. Rep. 226 (1983), followed in Rix v. Gen. Motors Corp., 222 M 318, 723 P2d 195, 43 St. Rep. 1296 (1986).

"Res Ipsa" Doctrine Inapplicable to Grass and Forest Fire: A grass and forest fire burned a large area in a canyon near Missoula. Property owners sued a power company for damages, alleging among other things that the fire was caused by a malfunction in a powerline running through the canyon. The trial court refused plaintiff's requested res ipsa loquitur instruction. The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's action, ruling that an element necessary to the application of the res ipsa doctrine was missing, i.e., that the event is of a kind which ordinarily does not occur in the absence of negligence. The court stated that in this case it is not possible to say that a fire not physically connected with defendant's line speaks of negligence on the part of the defendant in the construction or maintenance of its line. Barmeyer v. Mont. Power Co., 202 M 185, 657 P2d 594, 40 St. Rep. 23 (1983).

Res Ipsa Loquitur — Exclusive Control Not Essential: To establish the liability of a pilot in an airplane crash, the plaintiff asserted the theory of res ipsa loquitur. Because the defendant offered evidence of defective equipment to negate a presumption of the pilot's negligence, the trial court refused to submit the issue of res ipsa loquitur to the jury. The trial court erred. Although proof of exclusive control assists a plaintiff in establishing res ipsa loquitur, concurrent causes may exist and yet not foreclose reliance on the theory. In this case, proof of equipment failure did not deny the application of the theory because pilot error may have combined with equipment failure to produce the crash. Tompkins v. NW. Union Trust Co. of Helena, 198 M 170, 645 P2d 402, 39 St. Rep. 845 (1982).

Res Ipsa Loquitur — Unexplainable Accident — Equally Plausible Causes: Each side produced testimony seeking to explain an otherwise unexplainable airplane crash. The theory of res ipsa loquitur could be applied because this testimony did not amount to two equally plausible causes. Tompkins v. NW. Union Trust Co. of Helena, 198 M 170, 645 P2d 402, 39 St. Rep. 845 (1982), distinguished in Barmeyer v. Mont. Power Co., 202 M 185, 657 P2d 594, 40 St. Rep. 23 (1983).

Inference of Res Ipsa Loquitur — Modular Home Defects: When an instrumentality that causes injury without any fault of the injured person is under the exclusive control of another at the time of the injury, and the injury does not occur in the ordinary course of things if the one having control uses proper care, and each of these elements of res ipsa loquitur is found to exist, the law infers negligence on the part of the one in control as the cause of the injury. In modular home purchasers' suit against manufacturer for damages arising from, among other things, leaky roof and defects caused by sagging floor, where manufacturer contended that the floor defects could have been caused by purchasers' structural remodeling below the floor and that the purchasers had exclusive control of the house before the roof began to leak, there was a factual question whether all the elements of res ipsa loquitur existed, and a jury instruction on the doctrine was proper where it was made conditional on a finding by the jury that all elements of the doctrine existed. Little v. Grizzly Mfg., 195 M 419, 636 P2d 839, 38 St. Rep. 1994 (1981).

"Mere Happening" Instruction — Propriety — No Inference Except Res Ipsa Loquitur: Plaintiff, a mail carrier, was attempting to negotiate a left turn. Evidence was unclear as to whether he signaled for the turn. The roadway into which he was attempting to turn was a private driveway, open to public use. While turning he was struck by defendant who was attempting to pass. The road was lined for passing and visibility was clear. The jury was instructed that "[t]he mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone, does not give rise to legal inference that it was caused by negligence or that any party to this action was negligent or otherwise at fault." The Supreme Court said that it can be confusing to a jury to give this instruction and recommended against it. It was not prejudicial error to give this instruction in this case in light of the facts of the case and other instructions given. The Supreme Court affirmed that the "mere happening" instruction is totally incompatible in res ipsa loquitur cases. It is the law in negligence cases that negligence may not be inferred from the happening of an accident but that res ipsa loquitur is an exception to the rule. Sampson v. Snow, 194 M 392, 632 P2d 1122, 38 St. Rep. 1441 (1981).

Res Ipsa Loquitur — Elements — Conflicting Evidence on Causation: The elements necessary for the application of res ipsa loquitur are as follows: (1) The instrumentality which caused the injury must be within the exclusive control of the defendant. (2) The injury must be one that does not ordinarily occur if the party in control uses proper care. (3) The injury must not be due to any fault on the part of the injured person. There was conflicting testimony concerning the pitman arm on the Ford automobile. One expert said the pitman arm broke, causing the accident, while another expert said the pitman arm broke as a result of the accident. Under these facts and circumstances, the doctrine of res ipsa is not applicable because the second element cannot be shown to exist. Mets v. Granrud, 186 M 265, 606 P2d 1384 (1980), overruled in Tomkins v. NW. Union Trust Co. of Helena, 198 M 170, 645 P2d 402, 39 St. Rep. 845 (1982).

Res Ipsa Applied in Fire Case: A rebuttable presumption of negligence arises when an instrumentality which causes injury, without any fault of the injured person, is under the exclusive control of the defendant at the time of the injury and the injury is such that in the ordinary course of things it does not occur if the one having such control uses proper care. The court applied the above stated rule of res ipsa loquitur where the cause of the fire in question involved a truck, soiled sleeping bags, and a warehouse in the possession of defendant. Wright v. U.S., 472 F. Supp. 1153 (D.C. Mont. 1979).

Res Ipsa Loquitur — Elements Generally: Four elements are necessary in res ipsa loquitur cases: (1) defendant's exclusive knowledge of the cause of the accident; (2) lack of fault by the injured person; (3) that such an injury as the plaintiff's would not normally occur absent the defendant's negligence; and (4) the defendant's exclusive control at the time of the injury of the instrument that caused the injury. Hash v. Mont. Power Co., 164 M 493, 524 P2d 1092 (1974).

Application to Fire Started at Electrical Box: The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply to a fire that started at an electrical meter box attached to plaintiff's building, where the exact cause of the fire had not been determined, the plaintiff was in control of the circuit breakers and electrical devices within the building, the meter box was vulnerable to the entry of moisture, dust, and foreign objects, and there was a dearth of any evidence that the fire would not have happened without negligence on the part of the defendant. Hash v. Mont. Power Co., 164 M 493, 524 P2d 1092 (1974).

WILLFUL ACTS

Intentional Trespass Does Not Require Proof of Specific Intent: While civil trespass is an intentional tort, intentional trespass does not require proof of specific intent, i.e., that the tortfeasor intended to enter or remain on property owned or controlled by another. The intent element of civil trespass only requires proof that the tortfeasor intentionally entered or remained, or caused a third party or thing to enter or remain, on the property of another regardless of the tortfeasor's knowledge, lack of knowledge, or good faith mistake as to actual property ownership or right. Davis v. Westphal, 2017 MT 276, 389 Mont. 251, 405 P.3d 73.

No Evidence to Support Malicious Prosecution or Abuse of Process Claim — District Court Dismissal of Attorney Deceit Claim Improper: In a suit for malicious prosecution, abuse of process, and attorney deceit, the District Court did not err by granting judgment in favor of the defendant on the malicious prosecution claim or by awarding summary judgment to the defendant on the abuse of process claim when the plaintiff failed to prove the elements necessary to establish the claims. The plaintiff failed to prove malicious prosecution when, for purposes of establishing probable cause, all of the parties reasonably believed the facts gave rise to a valid claim. The plaintiff also failed to prove abuse of process despite his allegations that the ulterior purpose of the suit was to coerce him into paying damages. Payment of damages is a legitimate purpose for a civil action, and no facts existed to demonstrate that the defendant acted with an improper ulterior purpose. However, the District Court erred by granting summary judgment to the defendant on the attorney deceit claim when a trier of fact could find that the defendant acted deceitfully with the intent to deceive opposing counsel. Spoja v. White, 2014 MT 9, 373 Mont. 269, 317 P.3d 153, following Plouffe v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2002 MT 64, 309 Mont. 184, 45 P.3d 10, Hughes v. Lynch, 2007 MT 177, 338 Mont. 214, 164 P.3d 913, and Judd v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2008 MT 181, 343 Mont. 416, 186 P.3d 214.

City Playground Injury — City Liable if Willful or Wanton Misconduct Shown: Based on agreement of the parties, the Supreme Court assumed, without deciding, that playing in a city park constituted a “recreational purpose” under the recreational use statute. The issue of whether the city committed willful or wanton misconduct for failure to maintain a park and the playground area was remanded to the District Court. Gatlin-Johnson v. Miles City, 2012 MT 302, 367 Mont. 414, 291 P.3d 1129.

Third-Party Tortious Interference Established — Calculated Course to Negate Contract: A District Court concluded that a third-party defendant tortiously interfered with a contract to exchange property between the petitioner and the respondents. In affirming the District Court, the Supreme Court concluded that the facts demonstrated that the third-party defendant engaged in a calculated course to negate the contract by disrupting the respondents’ relationship with their attorney, enticing the petitioner with offers that exceeded the value the petitioner would have contractually received from the respondents, and seeking a judgment declaring the exchange void. Emmerson v. Walker, 2010 MT 167, 357 Mont. 166, 236 P.3d 598.

Sufficient Evidence of City’s Willful or Wanton Misconduct to Preclude Summary Judgment — Negligence Claim Against City Barred by Recreational Use Statute: Plaintiff was injured on June 20, 2001, after falling through a damaged plank on the Polson city dock, and filed suit against the city for negligently maintaining the premises and for failing to warn of the unsafe condition. The District Court granted summary judgment for the city on grounds that plaintiff failed to present evidence in support of the claim that the city was aware of the defective plank before June 20 or that the city acted willfully or wantonly. The court also concluded that plaintiff’s negligence claim was precluded by 70-16-302, the recreational use statute. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the facts, when considered in a light most favorable to plaintiff, were sufficient to raise a genuine issue as to whether the city’s failure to timely repair the damaged plank or warn plaintiff of the danger constituted willful or wanton misconduct, precluding summary judgment and warranting a trial on the issue. However, the Supreme Court agreed that the recreational use statute barred plaintiff’s negligence claim. Jobe v. Polson, 2004 MT 183, 322 M 157, 94 P3d 743 (2004).

Mortgage Against Party’s Interest in Property Granted Pursuant to Dissolution — No Tortious Interference With Business, Prima Facie Tort, or Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress: When George and Joyce were divorced, the District Court granted George exclusive possession of the ranch until it could be sold and the proceeds divided between the parties. During the course of the dissolution proceedings, Joyce took out several loans for living expenses. After the dissolution, Joyce consolidated the $150,000 in loans, and the bank executed a mortgage on Joyce’s interest in the ranch to secure the loan. When George found out about the mortgage and security interest, he became distraught because he believed that he would not be able to obtain loans on the property to enable him to conduct ranch obligations and meet his operations. George subsequently filed suit against Joyce, the bank, and the bank president, who was Joyce’s son-in-law, alleging tortious interference with business relationships, prima facie tort, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The District Court granted the defendants’ motion for summary judgment, and George appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Applying Farrington v. Buttrey Food & Drug Stores Co., 272 M 140, 900 P2d 277 (1995), the court concluded that the acts of Joyce and the bank were legal and that, standing alone, the acts did not give rise to any presumption or inference that the acts were done to harm George. The court also declined to recognize a separate cause of action for prima facie tort under the facts of this case. Applying Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), the court further concluded that because the defendants’ acts were legal, no claim for emotional distress could arise from those acts. Absent material facts evidencing malicious intent or damages, summary judgment was proper. Pospisil v. First Nat’l Bank of Lewistown, 2001 MT 286, 307 M 392, 37 P3d 704 (2001).

Damages Proper for Emotional Distress Based on Sale of Real Estate — Punitive Damages Appropriate: The Maloneys were promised an option to purchase property adjacent to their own, hoping to build their retirement home near Glacier Park. The real estate agent who listed the property was aware of the Maloneys' option but sold to another instead. That person then developed the property, building a 3,000-square-foot home on the very site that the Maloneys had desired and within sight of the Maloneys' residence, and then listed the newly developed property for almost six times what the Maloneys could have paid had the option been properly offered. A special master concluded, and the District Court agreed, that the Maloneys had suffered and were entitled to compensation for the shock, worry, anger, disappointment, and frustration that they had suffered and would continue to suffer in light of the inherent duration of the Maloneys' adjacent ownership. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that under French v. Ralph E. Moore, Inc., 203 M 327, 661 P2d 844, 40 St. Rep. 481 (1983), emotional distress damages may result from negligent or intentional damage to property arising from interference with the use and enjoyment of land and that under Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982), compensatory damages could include compensation for humiliation, embarrassment, distress, and ridicule associated with interference with plaintiffs' use of their private property. The private property interest at issue here sufficiently involved the use and enjoyment of land to fall within these holdings. Further, the award of punitive damages was also affirmed in this instance despite defendant's claims of the special master's improper estimation of net worth, a syntax error, and the special master's improper recognition of punitive damages assessed against defendant in a prior case. Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124, 57 St. Rep. 144 (2000), followed in Rubin v. Hughes, 2022 MT 74, 408 Mont. 219, 507 P.3d 1169, affirming that a nuisance claim demonstrating an interference with the enjoyment of property may support an award of parasitic emotional distress damages. See also Recovery for Negligent Infliction of Emotional Distress Attendant to Economic Loss: A Reassessment, Sandor & Berry, 37 Ariz. L. Rev. 1247 (1995).

Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress — Pressuring Church Member Not to Sue Church for Accident: In an action by a church member injured in a fall on church property, the District Court properly determined that the church's conduct was not sufficiently outrageous to support a separate tort claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Plaintiff claimed that the church denied her an award status indicating membership in good standing, denied a church calling, threatened excommunication, pressured her to sign releases, stated she was unworthy and dishonest, and attempted to dissuade her from going to court. The first three items were not admissible in evidence. Davis v. Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, 258 M 286, 852 P2d 640, 50 St. Rep. 535 (1993).

Tortious Interference With Business as Creating Liability for Punitive Damages Over and Above Contract Damages: The Supreme Court, relying on Bolz v. Meyers, 200 M 286, 651 P2d 606 (1982), held that a party may breach a contract and may also separately and distinctly engage in conduct, outrageous in nature, that tortiously interferes with the other party's business relations. A prima facie case of interference with contractual or business relations requires intentional and willful acts: (1) calculated to cause damage to the plaintiff or the plaintiff's business; (2) done with the unlawful purpose of causing damage or loss, without justifiable cause on the part of the actor; and (3) resulting in actual damages and loss. Defendants' tortious interference with plaintiffs' business relationships entitled plaintiff to punitive damages. Daniels v. Dean, 253 M 465, 833 P2d 1078, 49 St. Rep. 535 (1992).

No Tortious Interference With Borrower's Business Relationships: To establish a prima facie case of tortious interference with business relations, a person must show intentional and willful acts that are calculated to damage the person's business without right or justifiable cause and that are done with the unlawful purpose of causing damage or loss. Lender bank was merely exercising its right granted by a security agreement when, prior to notifying borrower, bank notified a business with which borrower had an account receivable that bank had a specific assignment from borrower of accounts receivable and requested the business to issue future payments with both bank and borrower as payees. Bank did not commit tortious interference with borrower's business relationships. Richland Nat'l Bank & Trust v. Swenson, 249 M 410, 816 P2d 1045, 48 St. Rep. 730 (1991), followed in St. v. Kandarian, 268 M 408, 886 P2d 954, 51 St. Rep. 1381 (1994), and, with respect to the test for tortious interference with a business relationship, Farrington v. Buttrey Food & Drug Stores Co., 272 M 140, 900 P2d 277, 52 St. Rep. 667 (1995).

Intentional Interference With Third-Party Contract: The defendant claimed to have a personal service contract with the plaintiff. When the plaintiff refused to honor the alleged service contract, the defendant contacted the lessee of a gravel pit owned by the defendant and ordered the lessee to refuse to honor a contract the lessee had with the plaintiff to sell gravel to the plaintiff. The plaintiff had to obtain the needed gravel elsewhere at an additional cost of $7,500. The Supreme Court affirmed that the defendant had no right to interfere with the contract, based on the defendant's ownership of the quarry, and that the defendant's interference was intentional and resulted in a loss to the plaintiff, making the defendant liable for the damages suffered by the plaintiff. Tindall v. Konitz Contracting, Inc., 240 M 345, 783 P2d 1376, 46 St. Rep. 2182 (1989).

Intentional Trespass: The Supreme Court affirmed the jury's verdict that defendants were not liable for intentional trespass for flood damage to plaintiffs' property. The defendants' dam had been built before they purchased the property, making it clear that they had not intentionally caused any water to enter the plaintiffs' land. Guenther v. Finley, 236 M 422, 769 P2d 717, 46 St. Rep. 477 (1989). However, see Olsen v. Milner, 2012 MT 88, 364 Mont. 523, 276 P.3d 934, in which the court ruled that a workshop that encroached on another party's property and was built during a boundary dispute constituted intentional trespass and that the trespassing party was liable for damages.

Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress — Not Yet Recognized: The Supreme Court stated that, while it has yet to decide under what facts it will recognize the tort, it has at least decided some situations where it will not. See Frigon v. Morrison-Maierle, Inc., 233 M 113, 760 P2d 57, 45 St. Rep. 1344 (1988), First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P2d 84, 46 St. Rep. 291 (1989), and Doochan v. Bigfork School District No. 38, 247 M 125, 805 P2d 1354, 48 St. Rep. 121 (1991). Phillip R. Morrow, Inc. v. FBS Ins. Mont.-Hoiness Labar, Inc., 236 M 394, 770 P2d 859, 46 St. Rep. 455 (1989). See also Foster v. Albertsons, Inc., 254 M 117, 835 P2d 720, 49 St. Rep. 638 (1992), in which a directed verdict, granted solely on the basis that an intentional infliction of emotional distress claim was brought as a separate cause of action, was remanded on grounds that the prima facie case evidence established the threshold level of conduct necessary to survive a motion for a directed verdict. However, see Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411, 52 St. Rep. 407 (1995), in which the court adopts a new standard for negligent or intentional infliction of emotional distress in circumstances in which serious or severe emotional distress to the claimant was the reasonably foreseeable consequence of a negligent or intentional act or omission. See also Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124, 57 St. Rep. 144 (2000), in which the Sacco standard was applied and the relevance of First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P2d 84, 46 St. Rep. 291 (1989), was affirmed because it addressed the "serious" or "severe" element articulated in Sacco, which is synonymous with the "significant impact" element found in Johnson v. Supersave Mkt., Inc., 211 M 465, 686 P2d 209, 41 St. Rep. 1495 (1984).

Intentional Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage: The trial court granted defendant's motion for directed verdict, dismissing the intentional interference claim on the basis that plaintiff failed to show that defendant improperly interfered in the award of a subcontract to another instead of to the plaintiff. The Supreme Court reversed, stating that although early cases required proof of improper motive as an essential part of plaintiff's cause of action, it is now agreed that upon a showing of an intentional interference with an existing contractual relation, the burden of proving that the interference was justified rests with the defendant. Phillip R. Morrow, Inc. v. FBS Ins. Mont.-Hoiness Labar, Inc., 236 M 394, 770 P2d 859, 46 St. Rep. 455 (1989).

Emotional Distress — Endorsing Standard in Restatement (Second) of Torts: The Supreme Court endorsed the standard found in the Restatement (Second) of Torts that a cause of action for emotional distress arises only if the invasion of the party's interest is substantial and the impact significant. The court indicated that the endorsement was not a departure from prior law but rather a new interpretation of the existing significant impact requirement. First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P2d 84, 46 St. Rep. 291 (1989), followed in Lueck v. United Parcel Serv., 258 M 2, 851 P2d 1041, 50 St. Rep. 401 (1993), and affirmed in Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124, 57 St. Rep. 144 (2000), to the extent that it addressed the "serious" or "severe" element articulated in Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411, 52 St. Rep. 407 (1995), which is synonymous with the "significant impact" element found in Johnson v. Supersave Mkt., Inc., 211 M 465, 686 P2d 209, 41 St. Rep. 1495 (1984). See also Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411, 52 St. Rep. 407 (1995).

Malicious Prosecution Not to Be Asserted as Cross-Complaint or Counterclaim: The Supreme Court ruled that one of the basic elements of malicious prosecution is the termination of a prior proceeding in favor of the alleging party necessarily implying that an action for malicious prosecution cannot be asserted by cross-complaint or counterclaim in the original proceeding. The court further held that use of the legal process to resolve a good faith controversy cannot constitute a basis for damages. First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P2d 84, 46 St. Rep. 291 (1989).

Comparison Where Willful or Wanton Misconduct by Both Parties: While Derenberger v. Lutey, 207 M 1, 674 P2d 485, 40 St. Rep. 902 (1983), held that there may not be a comparison between negligence and willful or wanton misconduct because they represent different kinds of conduct, it is not inconsistent to allow comparison of like conduct of parties, regardless of its label, for the purpose of ascertaining damages. Although such comparison between negligence and willful or wanton misconduct by both parties may not be directly compared under the comparative negligence statute at 27-1-702, such a rule would be consistent with both 27-1-702 and 27-1-701. Simonson v. White, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986). See also Flanigan v. Prudential Fed. S&L Ass'n, 221 M 419, 720 P2d 257, 43 St. Rep. 941 (1986).

Insurer Exemption for Intentional Bodily Injury: Insurer was properly granted a summary judgment on its claims that it had no obligation to defend or pay a judgment against the insured, who had struck a coworker in the face twice. The policy excluded bodily injury either expected or intended from the standpoint of the insured. Whether insured intended the specific injuries (left cheekbone broken in three places) was not a question of fact precluding summary judgment. When an assailant strikes another in the face, it is irrelevant for purposes of such an insurance exclusion that the assailant causes a different injury than he subjectively intended. The court will not impose upon the insurer the impossible task of proving that the insured specifically intended to break the victim's cheekbone in three places by striking him with his fist. Mut. Serv. Cas. Ins. Co. v. McGehee, 219 M 304, 711 P2d 826, 42 St. Rep. 2038 (1985), followed in Burns v. Underwriters Adjusting Co., 234 M 508, 765 P2d 712, 45 St. Rep. 2089 (1988), and in Am. States Ins. Co. v. Willoughby, 254 M 218, 836 P2d 37, 49 St. Rep. 708 (1992).

Commission of Bad Faith Tort Against Depositor by Bank: The District Court did not err in instructing the jury to consider recovery by bank depositor against the bank under bad faith tort principles and to accordingly consider punitive damages. The depositor and his nephew opened a checking account with a card requiring the signatures of both on checks. They then formed a partnership. The nephew induced the bank to change the card so that he could issue checks without the depositor's signature. The bank did not notify the depositor of the change or obtain his authorization for it. The bank told depositor his signature was not needed but did not tell him about the new card, and depositor disagreed. Later the bank told him it would not change its policy of honoring checks signed only by the nephew. When depositor's attorney told bank not to do so, the bank stated the card required only one signature and the bank would not change the card unless both the nephew and the depositor requested it. The bank then told depositor the card was lost but later that day produced both cards. Depositor sued, and the bank subsequently took various negative and detrimental actions against his credit status, refused loans of a type formerly granted, canceled his ready reserve account, and refused to pay several items presented before he was notified that the account had been canceled. Tribby v. NW. Bank of Great Falls, 217 M 196, 704 P2d 409, 42 St. Rep. 1133 (1985).

27-1-702. Comparative negligence — extent to which contributory negligence bars recovery in action for damages.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendments: Chapter 293 near end of section, before "attributable", substituted "percentage of negligence" for "amount of negligence"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 18, 1997.

Chapter 429 at beginning substituted "Contributory fault does not bar recovery" for "Contributory negligence shall not bar recovery"; after "recover" substituted "tort damages for death of a person" for "damages for negligence resulting in death"; after "property" substituted "if the contributory fault was not greater than the fault of the defendant or the combined fault of all defendants and nonparties" for "if such negligence was not greater than the negligence of the person or the combined negligence of all persons against whom recovery is sought"; near end, after "diminished", substituted "in proportion to the percentage of fault attributable" for "in the proportion to the amount of negligence attributable"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective on occurrence of contingency.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 293, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, the Montana Supreme Court, in Plumb v. District Court, 927 P.2d 1011, 53 St. Rep. 1187 (1996), recently declared unconstitutional portions of Montana's comparative negligence statute because it failed to provide an opportunity for a nonparty to defend oneself, and it required the plaintiff to act in a dual capacity by requiring that the plaintiff represent nonparties; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Supreme Court also recognized in Plumb that parties who settle represent the single exception for fair apportionment of liability under third-party practice rules; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Supreme Court has recognized that the Legislature may alter tort causes of action to promote legitimate state interests; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature believes that the policy of the state is that claimants, defendants, and other potentially liable persons should be held responsible to the extent of individual fault; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature has retained joint and several liability, but modified it because of that policy; and

WHEREAS, the current system of modified joint and several liability must permit a consideration of the fault attributable to parties who settle or are released for the modified system to be operative; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature believes that a claimant who enters into a settlement or covenant not to sue does so because the claimant has made a considered judgment that the agreement is in the claimant's best interests; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature intends that the liability of persons who settle or are released and who may share in the responsibility for a tort cause of action be considered by the trier of fact and apportioned a percentage of damages according to their negligence; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature believes that the percent credit rule, rather than the dollar credit rule, more accurately reflects the basis for comparative negligence, which apportions liability according to the percentage of individual negligence.

THEREFORE, the Legislature finds it appropriate to pass legislation addressing the concerns raised by the Montana Supreme Court and to accomplish the Legislature's objectives of allocating liability on the basis of individual negligence, encouraging fair settlements that accurately reflect potential liability, and permitting the allocation of a percentage of liability to persons who settle or are released and are found to be partially or wholly responsible."

The preamble attached to Ch. 429, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, efforts of the Legislature to amend the comparative negligence statute, which is premised on a modified joint and several liability scheme, have repeatedly been struck down by the Montana Supreme Court; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Supreme Court rulings prohibiting the consideration of fault attributable to nonparties impair the effectiveness of the current modified joint and several liability system in Montana; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature intends that the policy of the state should be a system of comparative fault in which persons are held responsible only to the extent to which they cause or contribute to the harm; and

WHEREAS, the current system of joint and several liability, which apportions all liability only among parties to the action, fails to apportion liability among all tortfeasors according to their equitable share of fault; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature recognizes that public policy favors fair settlements that accurately reflect the liability of settled or released parties; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature is concerned with the present inequitable results of solvent defendants having to pay for the liability of insolvent, immune, or settled parties; and

WHEREAS, the present system of joint and several liability for all tort actions does not reflect the state's policy of liability in proportion to fault; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature recognizes that joint and several liability should be retained for certain situations; and

WHEREAS, at least ten other states have abrogated the doctrine of joint and several liability, except for specific situations; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature has the power to alter tort causes of action to promote legitimate state interests.

THEREFORE, the Legislature declares that the doctrine of joint and several liability is abolished, except for specific causes of action, and is replaced with a comparative fault system utilizing the principles of several liability."

Applicability: Section 4, Ch. 293, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] [27-1-702, 27-1-703, and 27-1-704] applies to causes of action that arise on or after [the effective date of this act]." Effective April 18, 1997.

Nonseverability: Section 5, Ch. 293, L. 1997, was a nonseverability clause.

Severability: Section 9, Ch. 429, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

1987 Amendment: Near end of section, after "person", inserted "or the combined negligence of all persons".

Severability: Section 3, Ch. 505, L. 1987, was a severability section.

Case Notes

Assumption of Risk	916
General	918

ASSUMPTION OF RISK

Indemnity Agreement Redundant of Protection Afforded by Contributory Negligence: Langemo had an agreement with Montana Rail Link and Burlington Northern Santa Fe Railroad to establish access via a private railroad crossing to Langemo's property. After Langemo was injured at the crossing, the railroads counterclaimed against Langemo for indemnification pursuant to the private crossing agreement. The District Court held that although 28-2-702 precluded the railroads from being indemnified for their own negligence, the indemnity agreement was enforceable as applied to Langemo's negligent acts or omissions and allowed the railroads to enforce their indemnity claim at the same time that they claimed the right to a reduction in Langemo's damage award based on contributory negligence. The Supreme Court reversed, concluding that the indemnity agreement was redundant of the protection afforded by the contributory negligence statute. Langemo's recovery would already be reduced by any negligence attributable to Langemo, so the railroads could not rely on additional protection from the indemnity agreement. Langemo v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2001 MT 273, 307 M 293, 38 P3d 782 (2001).

No Assumption of Risk in Purchase of Damaged Real Property — Summary Judgment Reversed: Koelzer owned an inn by a mining and power generation site near Colstrip. Koelzer discovered that mining activity had damaged the inn and filed a complaint in 1994 against the mining and power generation companies, but did not pursue the damage claim. In 1996, Dale and Shawonda Lewis approached Koelzer about purchasing the inn, and the issue of the damages and Koelzer's claim came up. The Lewises inspected the inn and discovered additional damages, which led Koelzer to reassert the damage claim, but the claim was again unresolved. Nevertheless, the Lewises offered to buy the inn, and title was eventually conveyed to Dale's parents, who were able to secure financing. Koelzer notified the companies by fax that the inn had been sold and requested that the companies work with Dale on the structural damage discussed in the past. About 1 year later, Dale received an estimate of $91,000 to repair the damages and filed a nuisance complaint and a complaint seeking compensation from the companies for damages, after the Lewises acquired title to the inn in 1998. The District Court dismissed the Lewises' claim for damages arising after title was acquired on grounds that the Lewises had assumed the risk of those damages when they purchased the property. On appeal, the District Court was reversed on the issue of postpurchase damages. Under Mead v. M.S.B., Inc., 264 M 465, 872 P2d 782 (1994), assumption of risk is no longer available as a separate affirmative defense in negligence cases. Instead, that defense now merges into the general liability scheme of comparative negligence in which the conduct of the parties is compared based on evidence of negligence and contributory negligence, as established by reasonable and prudent person standards. Here the questions of whether the Lewises negligently purchased an inn that they knew might be subject to future damages or whether those future damages were sufficiently foreseeable to be taken into account in the purchase price of the inn were questions of fact for a jury and should not have been dismissed by summary judgment. Lewis v. Puget Sound Power & Light Co., 2001 MT 145, 306 M 37, 29 P3d 1028 (2001).

Irrelevant and Prejudicial Evidence of Consumption of Alcohol by Plaintiff: Violette pulled out of a store's parking lot in front of Havens, and the two collided. Havens sued the state, claiming negligent failure to place a stoplight at the parking lot entrance. It was not error to deny Havens' motion to exclude evidence of his alcohol consumption before the accident when the state opposed the motion by stating that it would show that the consumption was a cause of the accident. However, this forced Havens to introduce evidence of, and to address, his alcohol consumption. In addition, the state offered no evidence that Havens' alcohol consumption helped cause the accident and the state's medical expert and a law enforcement officer both testified that Havens was not negligent. Evidence of the alcohol consumption prejudiced the whole trial. It was reversible error to deny a motion for a new trial. Havens v. St., 285 M 195, 945 P2d 941, 54 St. Rep. 1108 (1997), followed in St. v. Ingraham, 1998 MT 156, 290 M 18, 966 P2d 103, 55 St. Rep. 611 (1998), and distinguished in St. v. English, 2006 MT 177, 333 M 23, 140 P3d 454 (2006).

Assumption of Risk Defense Precluded Under Federal Employers' Liability Act: A railroad employee sued the railroad for injuries he received on the job. The railroad sought to introduce the defense of contributory negligence. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's ruling that in reality the railroad was attempting to introduce the defense of assumption of risk, which is precluded under the Federal Employers' Liability Act. Kalanick v. Burlington N. RR Co., 242 M 45, 788 P2d 901, 47 St. Rep. 532 (1990).

Personal Injury From Abnormally Dangerous Activity — Assumption of Risk as Defense — Apportionment: Although in Montana a person is strictly liable for injury to persons resulting from his abnormally dangerous activity, the defense of assumption of risk is available, and where found it is to be treated like the defense of contributory negligence and apportioned as under this section. Matkovic v. Shell Oil Co., 218 M 156, 707 P2d 2, 42 St. Rep. 1482 (1985).

Strict Liability — Assumption of Risk Governed by Section: Assumption of risk is an available defense in a strict liability case, and if the defense is found to exist, plaintiff's conduct must be compared with that of the defendant. The same Montana law that governs comparison of contributory negligence controls comparison of assumption of risk. Kuiper v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 207 M 37, 673 P2d 1208, 40 St. Rep. 1861 (1983).

Products Liability — Assumption of Risk: Assumption of risk is an available defense in a strict liability case. The defense must establish that plaintiff voluntarily and unreasonably exposed himself to a known danger. If the defense is found to exist, then plaintiff's conduct must be compared with that of defendant. The same Montana law which governs comparison of contributory negligence controls comparison of assumption of risk. Zahrte v. Sturm, Ruger, & Co., Inc., 203 M 90, 661 P2d 17, 40 St. Rep. 316 (1983), followed in Krueger v. Gen. Motors Corp., 240 M 266, 783 P2d 1340, 46 St. Rep. 2114 (1989), and in Greytak v. RegO Co., 257 M 147, 848 P2d 483, 50 St. Rep. 204 (1993).

Assumption of Risk Standards Not to Be Included in Negligence Instructions: A jury instruction in a negligence action provided that one aspect of contributory negligence was whether or not plaintiff had assumed the risk. Another instruction provided the traditional "reasonable and prudent person" standard for negligence. Because assumption of risk is governed by a subjective standard and traditional negligence is governed by an objective standard, the two instructions were contradictory. The doctrine of assumption of risk is no longer applicable in Montana. Jury instructions may not contain any of the subjective standards of assumption of risk. Abernathy v. Eline Oil Field Services, Inc., 200 M 405, 650 P2d 772, 39 St. Rep. 1688 (1982), followed in Mead v. M.S.B., Inc., 264 M 465, 872 P2d 782, 51 St. Rep. 348 (1994).

Application of Comparative Negligence Law to Assumption of Risk: The U.S. District Court found that Montana law is unclear as to absorption of the former affirmative defense of assumption of risk into the comparative negligence law but that latest Montana cases indicate assumption of risk has been abolished as an absolute defense and that it was therefore error to instruct jury on assumption of risk question. However, since defendants contended assumption of risk was absolute defense and requested the erroneous instruction, they invited the error; hence, motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and motion to amend judgment must be denied. Ingram v. Dick-Char, Inc., 39 St. Rep. 96 (D.C. Mont. 1982) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Assumption of Risk — Instruction Not Warranted by Evidence: In action for damages sustained when defendant sued the wrong person, plaintiff, and pursued the suit to default judgment against plaintiff, who had notified defendant that it had sued the wrong person but refused to defend the action, it was not an abuse of discretion to refuse to instruct the jury on assumption of risk where there was no evidence that plaintiff fully appreciated the risk of not obtaining legal counsel. Shahrokhfar v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 194 M 76, 634 P2d 653, 38 St. Rep. 1669 (1981).

Assumption of Risk — Scope of Application: The assumption of risk defense is rooted in the employer/employee relationship, and its application to tortious conduct outside that relationship should be narrowly confined. Shahrokhfar v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 194 M 76, 634 P2d 653, 38 St. Rep. 1669 (1981).

Assumption of Risk — Subjective Standard: The essence of the assumption of risk defense is a contention that plaintiff voluntarily exposed himself to a danger which he fully appreciated. Plaintiff's conduct is measured by a subjective standard rather than the objective standard applicable to contributory negligence. Shahrokhfar v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 194 M 76, 634 P2d 653, 38 St. Rep. 1669 (1981).

Assumption of Risk — Comparative Negligence Apportionment Applicable: Assumption of risk is to be treated like any other form of contributory negligence and apportioned under the Montana comparative negligence statute. Johnson v. U.S., 496 F. Supp. 597, 37 St. Rep. 1581 (D.C. Mont. 1980).

Contractual and Noncontractual Assumptions of Risk: The District Court did not err in refusing to give instructions on plaintiff's alleged contractual and noncontractual assumptions of risk because the elements of such doctrine are not present in this case. However, the Supreme Court indicated that if such elements were present, it would follow the modern trend and treat assumption of the risk like any other form of contributory negligence and apportion it under the comparative negligence statute. Kopischke v. First Cont. Corp., 187 M 471, 610 P2d 668 (1980).

GENERAL

Contributory Negligence Defense Allowed in FELA Claim — Federal Law Applied: A railroad employee sued a railroad for injuries he received on the job while walking on a narrow, snowy, and slushy walkway instead of an alternative path, and the issue of contributory negligence was submitted to the jury. The Supreme Court determined that contributory negligence remains a valid defense in a Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) action and that some evidence existed indicating the employee's injury was attributable in part to his own actions. An employee is entitled to recover damages under FELA as long as the employer's negligence played any role in producing the employee's injury, but damages are reduced to the extent the employee was contributorily negligent. Cheff v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2010 MT 235, 358 Mont. 144, 243 P.3d 1115, following Taylor v. Burlington N. R.R. Co., 787 F2d 1309 (9th Cir. 1986).

No Material Issue of Comparative Negligence — Partial Summary Judgment Proper: During a lacrosse game in gym class between 14-year-old high school freshman boys, Powers struck Larchick in the eye with a lacrosse stick. The District Court granted Larchick partial summary judgment on the issue of comparative negligence, and the school appealed, asserting that comparative negligence raised a genuine issue of material fact because evidence showed that Powers was first hit in the leg by Larchick. However, there was no evidence that the initial contact by Larchick was anything other than incidental contact occurring during a gym class or that the initial contact was negligent. Additionally, the school principal testified that the school did not blame Larchick or Powers. Absent any material issue regarding comparative negligence, partial summary judgment for Larchick on the issue was not error, and the District Court was affirmed. Larchick v. Diocese of Gt. Falls-Billings, 2009 MT 175, 350 M 538, 208 P3d 836 (2009).

Prejudicial Exclusion of Rebuttal Testimony Warranting Retrial: Plaintiffs sued the seller of a subdivision lot for failure to disclose that the lot contained uncontrolled fill material to a depth of about 31 feet below grade, which resulted in shifting of the foundation of plaintiffs' home, causing damages. Plaintiffs were prohibited at trial from introducing evidence of similar problems with other homes in the subdivision on grounds that the evidence was irrelevant and prejudicial and because defense counsel indicated that defendant would not try to introduce evidence that the damage to plaintiffs' home was a unique anomalous occurrence. However, at trial defendant repeatedly referred to numerous other homes in the area that had not experienced foundation problems, which insinuated that plaintiffs' home was unique and that the damage was likely the result of plaintiffs' own negligence. The trial court adhered to its ruling precluding plaintiffs' evidence of similar damage to other homes and did not allow plaintiffs to rebut defendant's evidence. The jury apportioned negligence of 10% to defendant, 45% to the city, and 45% to plaintiffs, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court held that excluding plaintiffs' rebuttal testimony affected the result, because any change in the apportionment of negligence would alter plaintiffs' recovery; therefore, plaintiffs were entitled to reversal and retrial with the opportunity to present evidence of similar problems with other homes in the area. Rohrer v. Knudson, 2009 MT 35, 349 M 197, 203 P3d 759 (2009). See also Rieger v. Coldwell, 254 M 507, 839 P2d 1257 (1992).

Nondelegable Duty to Provide Safe Workplace — Availability of Contributory Negligence Defense: The District Court held that defendant employer owed plaintiff employee a nondelegable duty of care to maintain a safe workplace and that employer's breach of that duty caused plaintiffs' injuries as a matter of law. The District Court then allowed defendant to argue contributory negligence, which plaintiff asserted was an improper delegation of defendant's safe workplace duty. While recognizing the nondelegable duty under 50-71-201, the Supreme Court also noted that 27-1-702 imposes on a plaintiff the duty to conform to a standard of conduct for plaintiff's own protection so that plaintiff's conduct does not constitute a legally contributing cause that operates along with defendant's negligence in bringing about plaintiffs' harm. Citing Edie v. Gray, 2005 MT 224, 328 M 354, 121 P3d 516 (2005), and Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007), the court harmonized the two concepts by holding that establishing the existence of negligence per se settles only the questions of duty and breach, but a plaintiff must still prove causation before recovering damages, and a jury may weigh or compare evidence of negligence from a statutory violation that constitutes a proximate cause of the injury along with other evidence of negligence on the part of both parties. As provided in Shannon v. Howard S. Wright Constr. Co., 181 M 269, 593 P2d 438 (1979), and Stepanek v. Kober Constr., 191 M 430, 625 P2d 51, 38 St. Rep. 385 (1981), contributory negligence remains available as a defense to a defendant who has breached its nondelegable duty to provide a safe workplace if evidence demonstrates that: (1) the employee has some reasonable means or opportunity to avoid the hazard without endangering employment; or (2) the harm in question was not a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the employer's breach of the safety duty. In this case, the evidence created a genuine issue of material fact as to whether plaintiff had been contributorily negligent, so it was proper for the trial court to submit the issue to the jury and for the jury to apportion negligence between the parties in reaching a verdict. Olson v. Shumaker Trucking & Excavating Contractors, Inc., 2008 MT 378, 347 M 1, 196 P3d 1265 (2008).

Relationship Between Negligence Per Se and Apportionment of Negligence Under Comparative Negligence: Montana's comparative negligence scheme requires the factfinder to consider the negligence of the claimant, injured person, defendants, and third-party defendants, even if a party proceeds under a claim of negligence per se or if the factfinder determines that one or more persons were negligent per se. In the absence of an express statutory provision to the contrary, a claim of negligence per se or a determination that a person was negligent per se, including traffic violations, does not preclude the defense of contributory negligence or bar the apportionment of negligence based on a comparative negligence scheme. Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007), following Reed v. Little, 209 M 199, 680 P2d 937 (1984), and Edie v. Gray, 2005 MT 224, 328 M 354, 121 P3d 516 (2005), and distinguishing Woods v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry., 2004 MT 332, 324 M 151, 104 P3d 1037 (2004).

Sufficient Evidence of Violation of Turn Signal Law to Justify Plaintiff's Comparative Negligence: Hoffman was rear-ended by a logging truck while attempting a turn off of a two-lane highway, and the jury found that Hoffman was 50% negligent in the collision. Hoffman appealed on grounds that insubstantial evidence supported the jury's verdict. Although the evidence was conflicting regarding Hoffman's use of turn signals prior to the accident, Hoffman himself testified that he began signaling as much as 225 feet before stopping. However, 61-8-336 requires use of a turn signal not less than 300 feet before making a turn in a nonurban area. A jury is not free to disregard uncontradicted, credible, nonopinion testimony, and Hoffman's admission that he failed to signal for the full 300 feet was substantial credible evidence to support the jury's finding that Hoffman contributed to the crash and to his own injuries. The Supreme Court declined to disturb the verdict, and denial of Hoffman's motion for a new trial was affirmed. Hoffman v. Austin, 2006 MT 289, 334 M 357, 147 P3d 177 (2006), following Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48 (1997).

Evidence of Driver's Conduct Allowed to Establish Passenger's Comparative Negligence: Elisha was killed while riding on Jason's motorcycle after Jason failed to negotiate a turn. Elisha's parents sued the state for negligence in constructing and maintaining the road. Although he was a nonparty, the state sought to introduce evidence of Jason's alleged intoxication, excessive speed, and misaimed headlight in an attempt to establish Elisha's alleged comparative negligence. The District Court disallowed the evidence, but on appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Under Buck v. St., 222 M 423, 723 P2d 210 (1986), a driver's negligence cannot be imputed to a passenger for purposes of comparative negligence. However, if sufficient evidence exists to show that in the exercise of ordinary care the passenger should have chosen not to ride with an intoxicated driver, the jury should be instructed on the separate issue of negligence involving the passenger and should decide the issue of the passenger's comparative negligence. Additionally, a finding that the passenger was subjectively aware of the driver's alleged negligence or intoxication is not required before the passenger may be found comparatively negligent. Faulconbridge v. St., 2006 MT 198, 333 M 186, 142 P3d 777 (2006).

Jury Instruction on Comparative Negligence Improper Absent Evidence of One Party's Negligence: A landlord who failed to maintain rental property in a safe condition was negligent per se. Pursuant to Reed v. Little, 209 M 199, 680 P2d 937 (1984), even in negligence per se cases, the factfinder must apportion negligence between the parties in reaching a verdict. Therefore, the trial court in this case gave the jury an instruction on comparative negligence. However, there was no evidence to show that plaintiff was negligent in any way, and all liability for plaintiff's injury on defendant's rental property lay with defendant. Thus, giving the instruction on comparative negligence was an abuse of the trial court's discretion. Edie v. Gray, 2005 MT 224, 328 M 354, 121 P3d 516 (2005).

No Error in Failure to Apportion Percentage of Contributory Negligence to Defendants When Plaintiff Found Fifty-One Percent Negligent: Eight of 12 jurors agreed that defendants were negligent in contributing to the death of Payne's son, and of the eight, six agreed that the son was more than 51% negligent. Given the son's negligence, the jury asked whether it needed to apportion negligence percentages for the defendants and was instructed that no further determination of negligence was required. Payne appealed on grounds that failure to apportion less than 50% of the negligence to defendants violated 27-1-703. The Supreme Court disagreed. Under this section, a plaintiff cannot recover if plaintiff's negligence exceeds the combined negligence of the defendants, so the trial court was within its discretion in instructing the jury not to proceed with apportioning negligence to the defendants. Payne v. Knutson, 2004 MT 271, 323 M 165, 99 P3d 200 (2004).

Sufficient Evidence That Plaintiff More Negligent Than Defendants — Verdict Affirmed: Payne's son was killed while transporting an antique tractor purchased from defendants. The jury found that more than 51% of the negligence was attributable to Payne's son, and Payne appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that the evidence showed that the son left the right brake on while driving the tractor, leading to deterioration of the brakes and to the son's inability to stop the tractor, which in turn led to his death. Payne v. Knutson, 2004 MT 271, 323 M 165, 99 P3d 200 (2004).

Degrees of Comparative Negligence in Automobile Accident — Summary Judgment on Comparative Negligence Improper: Issues of comparative negligence are particularly difficult to resolve as a matter of law. Normally, the issue of contributory negligence and the degree of comparative negligence, if any, is an issue for the trier of fact to resolve even if the opposing party is negligent as a matter of law. In this case, a question of material fact remained regarding the specific facts of an automobile accident, and the District Court erred in granting summary judgment to plaintiff after finding that defendant's negligence exceeded any negligence that could be found on plaintiff's part. The question of degrees of negligence was properly left to the jury. Contreras v. Fitzgerald, 2002 MT 208, 311 M 257, 54 P3d 983 (2002), distinguishing Brohman v. St., 230 M 198, 749 P2d 67 (1988).

Workers' Compensation Claimant's Comparative Negligence Not Applicable in Determining Eligibility — Subrogation Appropriate Only After Claimant Made Whole: McMillan was injured in January 1987 while his employer was performing logging work for the U.S. government. McMillan filed a worker's compensation claim in Montana for which the state did not dispute liability, and he then filed an action under the Federal Tort Claims Act. The federal District Court determined that McMillan was entitled to recover $4,762,686 in damages from the United States, diminished by 45% for McMillan's comparative negligence to $2,619,477. The State Compensation Insurance Fund (State Fund) then sought a determination from the Workers' Compensation Court that the State Fund could assert a subrogation claim against McMillan's recovery from the United States and cease paying benefits. The Workers' Compensation Court held that the full measure of McMillan's loss was $4,762,686, the total amount of damages determined by the federal District Court, and that pursuant to the equitable "made whole" doctrine articulated in In re Zacher v. Am. Ins. Co., 243 M 226, 794 P2d 335 (1990), McMillan must recover that amount, plus the costs of recovery, before the State Fund was entitled to subrogation. The State Fund appealed, contending that the amount necessary to make McMillan whole was actually $2,619,477 after taking into account McMillan's comparative negligence, plus attorney fees and costs of recovery. The Supreme Court affirmed. The Zacher formula does not contemplate a deduction from a claimant's entire loss for comparative negligence, in accordance with state law, which does not consider a claimant's fault in determining eligibility. Reducing the calculation of McMillan's entire loss, and thus his eligibility for benefits, for comparative negligence would introduce a claimant's fault into the workers' compensation system in violation of Montana law. Thus, the State Fund's subrogation interest could be properly asserted only after McMillan recovered the full amount of the total amount of damages determined by the federal District Court. St. Comp. Ins. Fund v. McMillan, 2001 MT 168, 306 M 155, 31 P3d 347 (2001).

Defense of Comparative Negligence Inapplicable to Medical Malpractice Case When Patient's Pretreatment Behavior Furnishes Need for Care That Later Becomes Subject of Malpractice Claim: Plaintiff's daughter had asthma, was allergic to horses, and had a long history of breathing difficulties, but nevertheless went horseback riding. She stopped breathing and collapsed, ultimately suffering irreversible brain damage and death. The mother sued the physicians at the hospitals where the daughter was taken for treatment, alleging that the physicians were negligent in failing to intubate the daughter immediately and that the physicians' negligence caused the daughter's injury and death. The physicians argued that the daughter had already suffered a severe brain injury because of oxygen deprivation brought on by her asthma and that it was her own negligence, not that of the physicians, that caused her death. The District Court allowed the physicians to present arguments and jury instructions on comparative negligence. In assisting a jury to decide a case involving a patient's fault as a defense in a medical malpractice case, it is necessary to first clarify the sequence of events in relation to the interwoven doctrines of contributory or comparative negligence, proximate cause, and avoidable consequences (see Bryant v. Calontone, 669 A2d 286 (N.J. Sup. Ct. App. Div. 1996)). The temporal headings under which the patient's conduct is to be examined are: (1) the pretreatment period; (2) the treatment period during which the alleged malpractice occurred; and (3) the postmalpractice period. A patient's conduct before seeking medical treatment is merely a factor that a physician should consider in treating the patient. When the patient's negligent act merely precedes that of the physician and provides the occasion for medical treatment, contributory negligence is not a permissible defense and the physician's negligent act is considered an intervening act that does not bar a patient from recovering (see Durphy v. Kaiser, 698 A2d 459 (D.C. 1977)). In the present case, the patient's actions were clearly pretreatment conduct and not to be considered as evidence of fault that could offset any negligent conduct by the physicians. Thus, the Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion in giving instructions on comparative negligence because in a medical malpractice action, jury instructions on a patient's comparative negligence are appropriate only when the patient's negligent conduct occurs contemporaneous with or subsequent to treatment. Further, allowing evidence of the daughter's prior acts denied the mother a fair and impartial trial, and the District Court also abused its discretion in failing to grant the mother's motion for a mistrial, constituting reversible error. Harding v. Deiss, 2000 MT 169, 300 M 312, 3 P3d 1286, 57 St. Rep. 696 (2000), followed, with regard to treatment at an accident scene by law enforcement personnel responding to allegedly negligent conduct of DUI that occurred prior to the accident, in Cutler v. Jim Gilman Excavating, Inc., 2003 MT 314, 318 M 255, 80 P3d 1203 (2003).

Admissibility of Evidence to Rebut Affirmative Defense — "Plain Visibility" of Oncoming Train: Mickelson was injured when the fire truck that he was driving was struck by a Montana Rail Link (MRL) train and sought damages. In basing its defense on Mickelson's comparative negligence in failing to see the train, MRL was allowed to allege and represent to the jury that the train was plainly visible, in part because of its yellow blinking light, thereby triggering Mickelson's alleged duty to stop for the train. Mickelson sought to refute that contention by offering testimony that the train's lighting configuration did not make the train visible to approaching motorists, but the evidence was held inadmissible on grounds that MRL met federal requirements regarding lighting and thus could not be held liable for its particular lighting configuration. However, Mickelson's evidence was not offered to impose liability upon MRL for failing to change its lighting configuration, but rather to demonstrate that, contrary to MRL's experts, the lighting configuration did not make the train so plainly visible that Mickelson was comparatively negligent for failing to see it. Under Pitasi v. Stratton Corp., 968 F2d 1558 (2nd Cir. 1992), evidence that is not admissible to prove culpability may nevertheless be introduced to rebut an affirmative defense. By denying Mickelson the right to rebut MRL's evidence in support of its contention that Mickelson was comparatively negligent, the trial court essentially directed a verdict in favor of MRL on the comparative negligence issue, which was an abuse of the court's discretion, constituting reversible error. Mickelson v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 111, 299 M 348, 999 P2d 985, 57 St. Rep. 446 (2000), distinguishing Marshall v. Burlington N., Inc., 720 F2d 1149 (9th Cir. 1983), and Herold v. Burlington N., Inc., 761 F2d 1241 (8th Cir. 1985).

Loss of Consortium Claim Independent as to Damages, but Derivative as to Liability: Mickelson was injured when the fire truck that he was driving was struck by a Montana Rail Link (MRL) train. His spouse and children sought damages for loss of consortium. The District Court held that the loss of consortium claims should be reduced by the percentage of negligence attributed to Mickelson. When a plaintiff's contributory negligence is determined to be not greater than the tortfeasor's negligence, then damages for loss of consortium, being independent and not contingent upon the rights or liabilities of a parent or spouse, may not be reduced by the other spouse's negligence. However, because the language in this section provides that any damages allowed must be diminished in the proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to the person recovering, a loss of consortium claim is considered independent as to damages and derivative as to liability. In other words, a defendant must be more liable for a plaintiff's injuries than the plaintiff before there can be any recovery, whether it is on the plaintiff's personal injury claim or on a loss of consortium claim stemming from those injuries. For example, if plaintiff is determined to be 50% or less contributorily negligent for plaintiff's injuries, then a spouse or child could recover 100% of a loss of consortium claim; however, if plaintiff is determined to be 51% or more contributorily negligent for plaintiff's injuries, then a spouse or child would recover nothing on a loss of consortium claim. Therefore, the Supreme Court directed that, on retrial, any contributory negligence attributable to Mickelson could not be imputed to the spouse and children to reduce a loss of consortium award, but if Mickelson was found more liable than MRL, there could be no recovery for loss of consortium. Mickelson v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 111, 299 M 348, 999 P2d 985, 57 St. Rep. 446 (2000), following Herold v. Burlington N., Inc., 761 F2d 1241 (8th Cir. 1985).

Clarification of General Requirement of Substantially Similar Circumstances as Precedent to Admission of Evidence of Prior Accident: Evidence of prior accidents, although inadmissible to prove negligence, may be admitted for other purposes, such as to show: (1) the existence of a particular physical condition or defect; (2) the dangerousness of the condition or defect; (3) the possibility that the condition or defect might cause an accident or injury of the type alleged; (4) cause in fact; and (5) knowledge of the condition or defect. (See Modern Evidence: Doctrine and Practice, Mueller & Kirkpatrick, § 4.8 at 281, 282 (1995), and McCormick on Evidence § 200 at 844-847, 4th Ed. (1992).) Regarding the degree of identity of circumstances required when offering prior accident evidence for the sole purpose of notice or knowledge, the general requirement of substantially similar circumstances is relaxed or less strict when the evidence is proffered to show notice rather than dangerousness or causation, and a lack of exact similarity of conditions will not preclude admission under these circumstances if the accident was of a kind that should have served to warn defendant. In proving notice, there may be dissimilarities between the accidents; however, the differences affect the weight of the evidence, but not necessarily the admissibility. Here, Kisko slipped and fell in defendant's parking lot. The District Court excluded proffered evidence of a fall by another person in the same parking lot days earlier because it occurred at a different time of day under different physical circumstances. The Supreme Court disagreed and reversed, holding that the minor spatial and temporal differences existing between the two slip-and-fall accidents went to the weight rather than admissibility of the evidence in supporting an inference that defendant had notice or knowledge of the icy conditions. The circumstances surrounding the prior accident were not so remote or dissimilar from Kisko's accident that the probative value was substantially outweighed by unfair prejudice to defendant. Kisko v. Butte Convalescent Center, 1999 MT 322, 297 M 307, 992 P2d 1271, 56 St. Rep. 1288 (1999). See also Runkle v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982, 37 St. Rep. 995 (1980), *Bailey v. S. Settlement by One Tortfeasor as Precluding Claims for Contribution and Indemnity Against Settling Tortfeasor Regardless of Underlying Tort Claim: In accordance with common-law principles and the public policy favoring settlements, a settlement by one tortfeasor precludes claims for both contribution and indemnity against the settling tortfeasor, regardless of the nature of the underlying tort claim. This is so even though 27-1-703 states that the trier of fact is to determine the degree of negligence among each of the joint tortfeasors. Actual recovery is allowed only against those tortfeasors who have not settled with the claimant. Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1999 MT 186, 295 M 318, 983 P2d 943, 56 St. Rep. 721 (1999), following State ex rel. Deere & Co. v. District Court, 224 M 384, 730 P2d 396, 43 St. Rep. 2270 (1986).

Contributory Negligence Not to Be Used to Reduce Damages Caused by Insurance Fraud: By statute, contributory negligence can be used to reduce damages due from a defendant because of the defendant's "negligence". In an action by the insureds against an insurance agent and his company, the insureds' contributory negligence could not be used to reduce damages caused by defendants' "fraud". Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Contributory Negligence — Duty to Anticipate Negligence of Others: Rosauers Supermarket undertook remodeling for which ALSC was the architect. As a change order to the remodeling, Rosauers asked that a walk-in freezer be removed and that the access door to a walkway over the freezer be closed off. Unknown to Rosauers and its employee, Pierce, the door was never closed off even though the freezer was removed. Pierce was injured when he fell through a false ceiling after stepping off the walkway, assuming that the freezer was still in place and that it would support him. ALSC defended by claiming that Pierce was contributorily negligent in that he did not use a flashlight to enter the unlit walkway. Citing Green v. Hagele, 182 M 155, 595 P2d 1159 (1979), Pierce claimed that he was under no duty to anticipate that once directed to wall off the access door, ALSC would have been negligent in failing to do so. The Supreme Court held that ALSC was negligent as a matter of law for failing to follow the Uniform Building Code. Citing Okland v. Wolf, 258 M 35, 850 P2d 302 (1993), the Supreme Court noted that when a defendant is negligent as a matter of law, the issue of contributory negligence is normally for the trier of fact to determine. Reviewing the evidence in a light most favorable to defendant ALSC, the Supreme Court held that there was sufficient evidence of contributory negligence to submit the issue of contributory negligence to the jury. Pierce v. ALSC Architects, P.S., 270 M 97, 890 P2d 1254, 52 St. Rep. 93 (1995).

Court Error in Arriving at Conclusion of Law Before Finding Facts: The plaintiff, Marry, was injured in an automobile accident involving a Deputy Sheriff. The lower court found the parties equally at fault and ordered that neither receive damages. Marry appealed on the basis that even if she were 50% negligent, she suffered more damages and should receive some money from the defendant. On reconsidering the case, the lower court stated that it was its intention that the plaintiff not receive any money and amended one of its findings to hold that Marry's negligence was greater than the defendant's and she was not entitled to recovery. The Supreme Court reversed on the basis that the lower court did not reexamine the evidence in amending its order. It formulated its conclusion of law first and then changed the findings of fact to conform to the conclusion already arrived at. Marry v. Missoula County Sheriff's Dept., 263 M 152, 866 P2d 1129, 50 St. Rep. 1751 (1993).

Seatbelt Rendered Inoperable — Negligence Per Se: Pursuant to 61-9-409, there is a duty to maintain a motor vehicle in a way that seatbelts are available for the driver's and passenger's use in the event they choose to use them. Breach of that duty constitutes negligence per se. Nothing in 61-9-409, in 61-13-106, or in Kopischke v. First Cont. Corp., 187 M 471, 610 P2d 668 (1980), precludes evidence that seatbelts were unavailable and thus not in use at the time of an accident. Nor does the fact that the unavailability of a seatbelt was not the cause of the original accident relieve the duty under 61-9-409 to provide seatbelts. Califato v. Gerke, 258 M 68, 852 P2d 121, 50 St. Rep. 428 (1993).

Comparative Negligence Involved in Location of Power Lines in Construction Yard: The jury properly held a power company 65% responsible for an injury involving accidental contact by an I-beam with an overhead power line in a construction yard when evidence showed that: (1) the company knew construction activity took place at the yard; (2) company employees had been at the yard approximately 100 times over the years preceding the accident; (3) a similar accident had occurred a few months prior and had involved the same power line; and (4) the company had been at the yard and buried cables several months before the accident. These facts rose to the level of substantial evidence needed to support the apportionment of damages. Sizemore v. Mont. Power Co., 246 M 37, 803 P2d 629, 47 St. Rep. 2252 (1990).

Failure to Keep Lookout at Light-Controlled Intersection — Liability as Matter of Law: With a green light, Vender pulled into an intersection to make a left-hand turn but had to wait for oncoming traffic before turning. While in the intersection, he was struck by Stone, who testified that he did not see a light and could not avoid colliding with the Vender car. The jury found 50% negligence with each driver. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that as a matter of law, Stone was solely liable for the collision by failing to exercise reasonable care. A motorist's failure when approaching a controlled intersection to keep a lookout to see what is plainly visible or obviously apparent makes him chargeable for failure to see what he should have seen with the exercise of reasonable care. Vender v. Stone, 245 M 428, 802 P2d 606, 47 St. Rep. 2121 (1990).

Question of Contributory Negligence in Automobile Accident — Directed Verdict Inappropriate: Relying on the holding in Reed v. Little, 209 M 199, 680 P2d 937 (1984), that the defense of contributory negligence on the plaintiff's part is available to a defendant who has violated a traffic statute, the Supreme Court reversed the grant of a directed verdict in favor of plaintiff because reasonable persons could differ as to conclusions drawn from the evidence relating to the accident. The question should have been submitted to the jury and was inappropriate for a directed verdict. Hart-Anderson v. Hauck, 239 M 444, 781 P2d 1116, 46 St. Rep. 1817 (1989), followed in Ryan v. Bozeman, 279 M 507, 928 P2d 228, 53 St. Rep. 1258 (1996). See also Tonner v. Cirian, 2012 MT 314, 367 Mont. 487, 291 P.3d 1182.

Forged Check — Plaintiffs' Contribution to Damages — Bank Not Liable: When there was substantial credible evidence that plaintiffs' actions contributed to their damages, the jury verdict in favor of defendant bank would not be overturned. When the complaint alleged negligence and bad faith on the part of the bank but not breach of a fiduciary duty, the Supreme Court refused to consider whether it was error to submit the issue of comparative negligence to the jury. Ahmann v. Am. Fed. S&L Ass'n, 235 M 184, 766 P2d 853, 45 St. Rep. 2305 (1988).

Real Estate Transaction — Liability for Latent and Obvious Defects: Defendant bought a house without knowledge of latent defects and sold it to plaintiff, who purchased under the same circumstances. Defendant asserted plaintiff's unreasonable failure to investigate constituted contributory negligence. The District Court allowed plaintiff recovery for latent defects but denied recovery for obvious defects, which distinction properly addressed plaintiff's contributory negligence. By carefully apportioning the burden of the defects between the parties, the court properly balanced the responsibilities of buyer and seller in the transaction. Wagner v. Cutler, 232 M 332, 757 P2d 779, 45 St. Rep. 1092 (1988), followed in Strom v. Logan, 2001 MT 30, 304 M 176, 18 P3d 1024 (2001).

Comparative Negligence — General Rule: The Montana Supreme Court adopted the interpretation set out by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in Bielski v. Schulze, 114 NW 2d 105 (1962), in holding that all forms of conduct amounting to negligence in any form, including but not limited to ordinary negligence, gross negligence, willful negligence, wanton misconduct, reckless conduct, and heedless conduct, are to be compared with any conduct that falls short of conduct intended to cause injury or damage. Martel v. Mont. Power Co., 231 M 96, 752 P2d 140, 45 St. Rep. 460 (1988), followed in Cooper v. Rosston, 232 M 186, 756 P2d 1125, 45 St. Rep. 978 (1988), overruling Derenberger v. Lutey, 207 M 1, 674 P2d 485, 40 St. Rep. 902 (1983), and clarified in Stephens v. Safeco Ins. Co. of America, 258 M 142, 852 P2d 565, 50 St. Rep. 467 (1993), in which it was held that conduct rising to the level of a tort may be compared to other conduct rising to the level of a tort, however when the other conduct does not involve a tort, but only a breach of contract as in this case, the conduct cannot be offset comparatively.

Jury Not Informed of Effect of Comparative Negligence on Verdict: It was error for the trial court to refuse to tell the jury the effect of comparative negligence on the verdict. Juries should be informed of the effect of their answers. Martel v. Mont. Power Co., 231 M 96, 752 P2d 140, 45 St. Rep. 460 (1988).

Defendant's Negligence Not Proximate Cause of Accident — Failure to Instruct on Comparative Negligence Improper: The District Court ruled and admonished counsel that the court wanted no argument to the jury relating to the effect of varying percentages of fault that the jury might find as between the parties. Defendant objected, but no instructions on comparative negligence were offered or given. The Supreme Court noted that special verdict forms indicated the jury should consider elements of contributory negligence. Further, the jury was confused by the concept of proximate cause, as evidenced by the fact that although the defendant was found negligent, the negligence was not found to be a proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries. On retrial, instructions on comparative negligence were ordered to help the jury understand the effect of related questions in the special verdict forms. Smith v. Rorvik, 231 M 85, 751 P2d 1053, 45 St. Rep. 451 (1988).

Negligence of Driver Compared to State's Duty to Sign Highways — Proximate Cause Not Shown: A driver breached a duty by exceeding limitations on overtaking on the left, thus causing an accident. The driver failed to produce evidence from which it could be inferred that the state's negligent conduct in failing to sign a no-passing zone (in addition to the existing striped markings on the road) was the proximate cause of the driver's injuries. Summary judgment on negligence as a matter of law was proper. Brohman v. St., 230 M 198, 749 P2d 67, 45 St. Rep. 139 (1988), distinguished in Dillard v. Doe, 251 M 379, 824 P2d 1016, 49 St. Rep. 85 (1992), in which there was substantial active negligence by both parties upon which reasonable minds could differ as to the degree of comparative negligence. See also Okland v. Wolf, 258 M 35, 850 P2d 302, 50 St. Rep. 412 (1993).

Negligence Compared With Violation of Consumer Protection Act: The jury found the defendant violated the Consumer Protection Act and was negligent. The trial court applied the comparative negligence statute to reduce the plaintiffs' recovery under the Act. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the reduction of damages, stating that the law as stated in the jury instructions does not allow the separation of the defendant's actions in violation of the Consumer Protection Act from its actions that were negligent. Evans v. Teakettle Realty, 226 M 363, 736 P2d 472, 44 St. Rep. 723 (1987).

Combined Negligence Rule — Percentage of Plaintiff's Negligence to Be Compared to Total Negligence of Joint Defendants: A jury found plaintiff 45% negligent, one defendant 40% negligent, and a second defendant 15% negligent. Defendants contended that since plaintiff's negligence exceeded that of each defendant, recovery of damages was barred. The District Court held, and the Supreme Court agreed, that where recovery is sought against multiple defendants, the percentage of negligence of the plaintiff is to be compared to the combined percentages of causal negligence of concurrent tortfeasors and damages then reduced by the percentage attributable to plaintiff. North v. Bunday, 226 M 247, 735 P2d 270, 44 St. Rep. 627 (1987).

Nuisance Action — Contributory Negligence as Defense: The Supreme Court cited 58 Am. Jur. 2d Nuisances 221 in holding that contributory negligence can be a defense in a nuisance action. Wilhelm v. Great Falls, 225 M 251, 732 P2d 1315, 44 St. Rep. 211 (1987), clarified, with regard to the distinction between an absolute nuisance and a qualified nuisance, in Barnes v. Thompson Falls, 1999 MT 77, 294 M 76, 979 P2d 1275, 56 St. Rep. 321 (1999).

Comparative Negligence Consideration Properly Precluded Where One Party Not Negligent: District Court awarded damages to a commercial trout company upon a finding that failure of the trout farm was proximately caused by a breach of contract and misrepresentation by the bank and its agent. Upon appeal, bank claimed trial court erred in failing to compare conduct of agent with trout company's principal shareholders. The Supreme Court found no legal error in trial court's decision to preclude consideration of comparative negligence by trout company shareholders where there was insufficient evidence to indicate any negligent action by those shareholders. Crystal Springs Trout Co. v. First State Bank of Froid, 225 M 122, 732 P2d 819, 44 St. Rep. 90 (1987).

Strict Liability for Railroad Safety Under Federal Act — Contributory Negligence No Factor — Summary Judgment Proper: A motion for summary judgment was properly granted to claimant when the railroad admitted violation of portions of the federal Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C. 1, et seq., since under the Act violation by a carrier of a specific safety requirement is held to constitute negligence as a matter of law regardless of a showing of negligence on an employee's part. Plouffe v. Burlington N., Inc., 224 M 467, 730 P2d 1148, 43 St. Rep. 2341 (1986). See also Weber v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2011 MT 223, 362 Mont. 53, 261 P.3d 984, which held that the District Court erred in granting the railroad's motion for judgment as a matter of law on the injured railroad employee's Locomotive Inspection Act claim when the evidence presented at trial indicated the locomotive was not performing properly and the locomotive's failure created an unnecessary danger of carbon monoxide exposure to the employee.

Bar Selling to Intoxicated Minor — Liability to Minor: A bar or tavern operator who serves an intoxicated minor may be liable in damages for injuries subsequently sustained by the minor. The imbibor's acts of drinking alcoholic beverages served by the bar or tavern operator and then becoming involved in an injury-producing accident may be reasonably foreseeable events that may no longer protect a defendant from liability for negligence. Under the state's system of comparative negligence, it is for the jury to determine the degree of negligence attributable to the plaintiff and defendant. Neither the plaintiff's nor the defendant's acts have to be the sole proximate cause of the injuries. Bissett v. DMI, Inc., 220 M 153, 717 P2d 545, 43 St. Rep. 252 (1986).

Comparison Where Willful or Wanton Misconduct by Both Parties: While Derenberger v. Lutey, 207 M 1, 674 P2d 485, 40 St. Rep. 902 (1983), held that there may not be a comparison between negligence and willful or wanton misconduct because they represent different kinds of conduct, it is not inconsistent to allow comparison of like conduct of parties, regardless of its label, for the purpose of ascertaining damages. Although such comparison between negligence and willful or wanton misconduct by both parties may not be directly compared under the comparative negligence statute at 27-1-702, such a rule would be consistent with both 27-1-702 and 27-1-701. Simonson v. White, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986). See also Flanigan v. Prudential Fed. S&L Ass'n, 221 M 419, 720 P2d 257, 43 St. Rep. 941 (1986).

Reduction of Damages by Percentage of Plaintiff's Negligence: A plaintiff's tort damage award must be reduced by the percent he is found to have been negligent. Cain v. Stevenson, 218 M 101, 706 P2d 128, 42 St. Rep. 1428 (1985).

Intoxicated Operator's Negligence — Sole Proximate Cause of Accident: In a civil action by the guardian of a person incapacitated in a motorcycle accident, the Supreme Court held that substantial credible evidence supported a finding that the operator, who was intoxicated at the time of the accident, was negligent; his negligence was the sole proximate cause of his accident. Although the state's design, construction, signing, and maintenance of the intersection at which the accident occurred were deficient, the plaintiffs' own acts of negligence, including driving under the influence of alcohol, caused the accident. Any negligence by the state was not in any degree a proximate cause of the accident. Bartel v. St., 217 M 380, 704 P2d 1067, 42 St. Rep. 1266 (1985).

Negligence Instruction Commenting on Evidence — Theory of Instruction Covered by Other Instructions: Defendant's instruction based on the theory that codefendant was 100% negligent was denied because the court believed it commented on the evidence. Other instructions adequately covered the theory that codefendant was 100% negligent, and the jury found the codefendant 100% negligent. The instruction was thus properly denied. Ewing v. Esterholt, 210 M 367, 684 P2d 1053, 41 St. Rep. 1095 (1984).

Comparative Negligence — Application to Cases of Negligence Per Se: In an action for negligence involving a rear-end collision between the plaintiffs and defendant's automobiles in which the evidence showed that both parties could have been guilty of negligence per se by the violation of motor vehicle traffic laws, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in holding that the doctrine of comparative negligence did not apply. Comparative negligence has been mandated by the Legislature to apply in every case in which negligence is an issue, even in those cases in which statutory violations provide the necessary evidence of negligence, and it is for the finder of fact to determine the degree of negligence on the part of each party. Reed v. Little, 209 M 199, 680 P2d 937, 41 St. Rep. 644 (1984), followed in Okland v. Wolf, 258 M 35, 850 P2d 302, 50 St. Rep. 412 (1993), and distinguished in Aemisegger v. Herman, 215 M 347, 697 P2d 925, 42 St. Rep. 420 (1985).

Collision of Left-Turning and Approaching Vehicles — Failure to Maintain Lookout: Where the plaintiff brought an action against the defendant for damages sustained in a collision after the defendant stopped on a two-lane highway to turn left in front of a stopped truck and did not see the plaintiffs' car approaching at approximately 50 mph toward her from behind the truck, the District Court did not err in denying the plaintiffs' motion to set aside the jury's verdict finding the plaintiff 50% negligent for the resulting accident. There was substantial evidence of the plaintiffs' failure to keep a lookout while she passed the truck to support the jury's verdict. Lackey v. Wilson, 205 M 476, 668 P2d 1051, 40 St. Rep. 1439 (1983).

Parked and Disabled Vehicle Not Proximate Cause of Accident — Verdict Supported by Substantial Evidence: Where the defendant parked his stalled pickup truck at the side of a frontage road and turned on the floodlights of the hay grinder he was pulling before leaving the truck to seek help, but the truck was nevertheless struck by the plaintiffs' vehicle, the Supreme Court found that the jury verdict for the defendant was supported by substantial evidence. The record showed that the plaintiff had seen the defendant's lights from one-half mile away but failed to avoid the accident. The jury found defendant 0% negligent and plaintiff 100% negligent; it was entitled to conclude, as it did, that no negligence on the part of the defendant was the proximate cause of the accident. Griffel v. Faust, 205 M 372, 668 P2d 247, 40 St. Rep. 1370 (1983).

No Comparison Between Negligence and Willful or Wanton Misconduct: Defendant and plaintiff, who was 16, were drinking and driving at a high rate of speed in Anaconda. Defendant was driving plaintiff's car when he lost control and hit a house. Plaintiff was severely injured. The District Court instructed the jury that plaintiffs' recovery could not be reduced by his contributory negligence if defendant was guilty of willful or wanton misconduct. The Supreme Court upheld the giving of the instruction, saying that willful and wanton misconduct differs in quality rather than degree from ordinary lack of care. The term "negligence" in the comparative negligence statutes does not encompass willful or wanton misconduct, and in an action based on such conduct the comparative negligence statute is inapplicable and the plaintiff's own contributory negligence should not reduce his recovery. Derenberger v. Lutey, 207 M 1, 674 P2d 485, 40 St. Rep. 902 (1983), overruled in Martel v. Mont. Power Co., 231 M 96, 752 P2d 140, 45 St. Rep. 460 (1988).

Contributory Negligence — Application of Doctrine — Children Under Seven: A child under 7 years of age cannot be contributorily negligent. Johnson v. YMCA, 201 M 36, 651 P2d 1245, 39 St. Rep. 1937 (1982).

New Trial — Use of Juror Affidavit: Plaintiff broke her ankle by falling into a trench on defendant's construction project. The jury found plaintiff 85% negligent. The District Court granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial based on irregularity in the jury proceedings, and defendant appealed. Plaintiff's motion was supported by an affidavit of the jury foreman stating the jury did not understand the instructions on contributory negligence, comparative negligence, and mitigation of damages. Cases on use of juror affidavits in granting a new trial involve either external or internal influence on the jury. This case falls into the internal influence category. The District Court abused its discretion in granting a new trial on the basis of a juror affidavit purporting to impeach the verdict by delving into the thought processes of the jurors. Harry v. Elderkin, 196 M 1, 637 P2d 809, 38 St. Rep. 2076 (1981), followed in McGillen v. Plum Creek Timber Co., 1998 MT 193, 290 M 264, 964 P2d 18, 55 St. Rep. 808 (1998).

"Sudden Emergency" Instruction Not to Be Given in Ordinary Auto Accident Cases: The trial court allowed a "sudden emergency" instruction, which was relied upon by defendant, and no negligence was found on the part of defendant. The Supreme Court said that the giving of the "sudden emergency" instruction was reversible error. In view of Montana's adoption of comparative negligence, the court admonished trial courts not to give the instruction in ordinary automobile accident cases. This does not create a different standard or diminish the existing standard to be applied in an emergency. The conduct required is still that of a reasonable man under the circumstances as they would appear to one using proper care. The emergency is only one of the circumstances to be considered. Eslinger v. Ringsby Truck Lines, Inc., 195 M 292, 636 P2d 254, 38 St. Rep. 1863 (1981), followed in Ewing v. Esterholt, 210 M 367, 684 P2d 1053, 41 St. Rep. 1095 (1984).

Compensatory Damages Reduced by Contributory Negligence Even Though Not Proximate Cause: Compensatory damages award was reduced on appeal by the 16% that plaintiff was found to be contributorily negligent, even though his negligence was found not to be a proximate cause of his injury. Shahrokhfar v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 194 M 76, 634 P2d 653, 38 St. Rep. 1669 (1981).

Punitive Damages Not Reduced by Contributory Negligence: The purpose of punitive damages is to punish defendant, not to compensate plaintiff. Punitive damages awarded to the plaintiff cannot be reduced by the percentage of plaintiff's contributory negligence. Shahrokhfar v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 194 M 76, 634 P2d 653, 38 St. Rep. 1669 (1981).

Driving Under the Influence — Contributory Negligence of Passenger: An instruction that a motor vehicle passenger may be guilty of contributory negligence if the driver is under the influence and the driver's state contributes to some degree as a cause of an accident totally failed to state the essential proximate cause element of contributory negligence in that the intoxication of the driver must be a proximate cause of the accident. The instruction misled the jury to the prejudice of plaintiff and was reversible error in a wrongful death action. McAlpine v. Midland Elec. Co., 194 M 154, 634 P2d 1166, 38 St. Rep. 1577 (1981).

Existence of Contract — Payment of Tort Judgment as Precluding Determination: Plaintiffs sued defendant for damages claimed to have occurred to their farmlands when a seismographic hole drilled and shot by defendant brought a continuous water flow to the surface, damaging farmland. Defendants left the area and later tried unsuccessfully to plug the hole. The jury found for plaintiffs and awarded actual and punitive damages. Defendant paid the award for actual damages and appealed the award of punitive damages. Defendant claimed the case involved a contract and that punitive damages were not properly allowable. By satisfying the judgment for actual damages, defendant acceded to the correctness of the judgment and accepted its benefits. When a judgment is paid, it passes beyond the review of a superior court. The question of whether a contract existed was submitted to the jury. Their judgment was based on a tort theory, comparative negligence. Because this judgment was satisfied, the Supreme Court could not rule on whether a contract was involved. Dahl v. Petroleum Geophysical Co., 194 M 294, 632 P2d 1136, 38 St. Rep. 1474 (1981).

Horseback Riding Injury — Jury Instructions on Effect of Contributory Negligence Properly Given: Where, as a result of an injury occurring prior to the effective date of the comparative negligence statute, the plaintiff sued the defendant for injuries received when the plaintiff was thrown from his horse, there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could find that the plaintiff was contributorily negligent and the District Court did not commit error in giving verbatim the Montana Jury Instruction Guide instruction No. 4 on the effect of contributory negligence. Waatti v. Dollan, 193 M 329, 631 P2d 1279, 38 St. Rep. 1060 (1981).

Comparative Negligence — Reduction in Damages Award: To the extent that plaintiff was negligent in a personal injury action, his recovery will be reduced by that amount. Johnson v. U.S., 510 F. Supp. 1039, 38 St. Rep. 599 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Grounds for Denial of Proposed Jury Instruction — Primary Duty of Avoiding Collision: The appellant claimed error in the trial court's denial of his proposed jury instruction stating that the primary duty of avoiding an accident is on a vehicle approaching from the rear when the vehicle in front has signaled for 100 feet. This was an inaccurate statement of the law, and as given, the jury instructions adequately explained the duties of the passing motorist and the left-turning motorist. Even if it had been a correct statement of the law, the proposed statement would have added nothing to the jury's understanding of the applicable law. Burns v. U & R Express, 191 M 343, 624 P2d 487, 38 St. Rep. 302 (1981). See also Wheeler v. Bozeman, 232 M 433, 757 P2d 345, 45 St. Rep. 1173 (1988).

Comparative Fault in Strict Products Liability Actions: The U.S. District Court discussed at some length the changing trends in cases in which the plaintiffs injuries arguably occurred not from the crash of an airplane or automobile but from a product defect that allowed the plaintiff to become injured after the crash. Montana has not adopted the doctrine of comparative fault in products liability actions, but after noting some cases which approach that new trend, the U.S. District Court concluded that the Montana Supreme Court will apply comparative fault to strict products liability actions when presented with the issue. It is anticipated that the assumption of risk defense may be treated like any other form of contributory negligence and be apportioned under the comparative negligence statute. In this case, the federal court concluded that all of the plaintiffs conduct, regardless of labels attached to that conduct, was to be compared to the defendant's liability. Trust Corp. of Mont. v. Piper Aircraft Corp., 506 F. Supp. 1093, 38 St. Rep. 249 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Availability of Affirmative Defenses to Railroad — Absolute Liability: Plaintiff was employed by a subsidiary of Burlington Northern and was injured in an accident involving Burlington's railroad cars. The Supreme Court applied the federal Safety Appliance Act despite the fact the railroad cars involved in the accident were on a siding where loading operations were handled by the subsidiary. Noting that the U.S. Supreme Court has declared that the question of whether a railroad can assert contributory negligence or assumption of risk as defenses in a case involving a nonrailroad employee depends entirely on state law, the Supreme Court cited its 1966 holding that, where the theory of absolute liability applies, liability is established when it is proved that a statute has been violated and there is a proximate cause connection between the violation and the resulting injuries. Proximate cause in a case under the Safety Appliance Act is decided using the definition that prevails under state law. Comparing the 1966 case under the Scaffolding Act with this case, the Supreme Court denied the defendant the two defenses. The Supreme Court also noted that railroad employees are entitled to a more liberal standard imposing liability than nonrailroad employees. Reynolds v. Burlington N., Inc., 190 M 383, 621 P2d 1028, 37 St. Rep. 1883 (1980).

Comparative Negligence Inapplicable in Strict Liability Action: Montana's comparative negligence statute has never been applied in a strict liability action. The statute, by its terms, applies only to recovery of "damages for negligence". Strict liability actions are not grounded in negligence. Thus, statutory comparative negligence should have no place in a strict liability action. Zahrte v. Sturm, Ruger & Co., 498 F. Supp. 389, 37 St. Rep. 1628 (D.C. Mont. 1980). (See also Thibault v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 395 A. 2d 843 (N.H. 1978).)

No Retroactivity: The Montana comparative negligence law, 27-1-702, is not retroactive and therefore does not apply to a cause of action arising prior to July 1, 1975. Stenberg v. Neel, 188 M 333, 613 P2d 1007 (1980).

Evidence of Prior Accidents: Evidence of prior accidents, while inadmissible for the purpose of proving negligence, is nevertheless admissible for the purpose of showing the existence of a danger or defect and notice thereof. Such evidence of prior accidents, however, must show situations substantially similar to or not too remote from the accident in question, although absolute identity of circumstances is not necessary. Here, where there was no offer of proof as to what the prior accidents would have shown, the Supreme Court could not determine admissibility, and therefore no reversible error was committed. Runkle v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982 (1980). See also Kissock v. Butte Convalescent Center, 1999 MT 322, 297 M 307, 992 P2d 1271, 56 St. Rep. 1288 (1999).

Postaccident Installation of Signals: In a negligence action concerning a train-truck collision, the trial court excluded evidence of the railroad later placing electric signal devices at the crossing where the accident occurred. In this case, experts testified for the railroad that the crossing was not extrahazardous. The fact that automatic signals were installed on the crossing after the accident would have been relevant for the purpose of impeachment as well as to show feasibility. It was prejudicial error to exclude this evidence. Runkle v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982 (1980).

Motion to Conform to Evidence — Affirmative Defense: This case was decided under contributory negligence. Plaintiff at the close of his case moved that the pleadings be amended to conform to the evidence and offered an instruction that contributory negligence was not a bar to recovery for injuries caused by the reckless or wanton misconduct of Sanders County. The offered instruction incorrectly defined reckless and wanton misconduct and was properly denied. Implicit in appellant's contention regarding this instruction is the argument that the District Court should have granted the motion to amend the pleadings to conform to the evidence. This in effect raised the new issue of affirmative defense. Plaintiff would be entitled to the amendment and to instructions thereunder unless there was no evidence to support the motion to conform. In this case while evidence of negligence was presented, the evidence was lacking to show the elements necessary to constitute willful, wanton, or reckless negligence. In that situation, there was no abuse of discretion in refusing to change or add a legal theory or defense after the introduction of all the evidence. Wollaston v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 192, 612 P2d 1277 (1980).

No Seatbelt Defense: In light of the history and the numerous legislative problems that must be considered to effectively extend the seatbelt rule of law, the well-reasoned position of the Washington court in Amend v. Bell, 89 Wash. 2d 124, 570 P2d 138 (1977), produces the best rule. To adopt a seatbelt defense when the Legislature has failed to do so would be ill-advised. The trial court properly refused to allow defendant to introduce evidence that plaintiff's failure to use a seatbelt contributed to her injuries. Kopischke v. First Cont. Corp., 187 M 471, 610 P2d 668 (1980), distinguished in Califato v. Gerke, 258 M 68, 852 P2d 121, 50 St. Rep. 428 (1993), in cases in which a person breaches the duty to make seatbelts available by rendering the seatbelt inoperable.

Jury Instruction — Negligent Entrustment: Plaintiff argued that the District Court failed to charge the jury properly on the elements of negligent entrustment. He failed, however, to object to the instruction at trial. The contention that an instruction does not state the law cannot be considered on appeal absent a proper objection at trial. Penn v. Burlington N., Inc., 185 M 223, 605 P2d 600 (1980).

Negligent Entrustment: Negligent entrustment, a theory which provides that an actor is negligent if he allows a third party to use an object under the actor's control when the actor knows or has reason to know of an unreasonable risk of harm to others, is a type of contributory negligence imputed to the entrustor, not the trustee. Penn v. Burlington N., Inc., 185 M 223, 605 P2d 600 (1980). See also McGinnis v. Hand, 1999 MT 9, 293 M 73, 973 P2d 1126, 56 St. Rep. 39 (1999).

Duty of Landlord — Unsafe Condition: The adoption by Montana of comparative negligence does not change the nature of the duty owed by a landlord to a tenant to make the premises safe or to warn of danger. Hayes v. U.S., 475 F. Supp. 681 (D.C. Mont. 1979).

No Third-Party Right to Indemnity or Contribution: A third party, sued by an injured employee, has no right to indemnity or contribution from a negligent employer if the employer and the employee are covered by the Workers' Compensation Act unless such a right were to arise out of some other legal transaction between the employer and third party. Cordier v. Stetson-Ross, Inc., 184 M 502, 604 P2d 86 (1979).

Comparative Negligence — Contribution Among Joint Tortfeasors: By a complaint filed before the effective date of the comparative negligence law, plaintiff sued the defendant airline company for injuries sustained on a city's airport runway, and the defendant airline company's complaint against the city for indemnity was dismissed. Because it was held in Dunham v. Southside Nat'l Bank of Missoula, 169 M 466, 548 P2d 1383 (1976), that the comparative negligence statute is not retroactive and because Consol. Freightways Corp. of Delaware v. Osier, 185 M 439, 605 P2d 1076 (1979), held contribution not applicable except in comparative negligence cases, there was no right of contribution between the airline and city. Rogers v. W. Airlines, 184 M 170, 602 P2d 171 (1979).

Last Clear Chance: The court was correct in refusing an instruction on the doctrine of last clear chance where the plaintiff did not lay a sufficient foundation at trial. This holding neither approves nor disapproves the doctrine of last clear chance under Montana's comparative negligence statute. Payne v. Sorenson, 183 M 323, 599 P2d 362 (1979).

No Evidence of Contributory Negligence: Before the adoption of 27-1-702, contributory negligence on the part of a plaintiff barred his recovery. Plaintiff was not contributorily negligent as a matter of law, as there was no evidence to support a finding by the jury that plaintiff was contributorily negligent. Green v. Hagele, 182 M 155, 595 P2d 1159 (1979). However, see Pierce v. ALSC Architects, P.S., 270 M 97, 890 P2d 1254, 52 St. Rep. 93 (1995).

Duty of Landlord — Unsafe Condition: The adoption by Montana of comparative negligence does not change the nature of the duty owed by a landlord to a tenant to make the premises safe or to warn of danger. Hayes v. U.S., 475 F. Supp. 681 (D.C. Mont. 1979).

Through Road Intersections: Montana law does not contemplate that if a road is designated as "through", it becomes the duty of persons approaching intersections with such through roads to stop in the absence of stop signs. When two vehicles in this case collided in such an intersection, having entered at about the same time, the court assessed the negligence of each driver at 50%. Andrews v. U.S., 447 F. Supp. 434, 35 St. Rep. 350 (D.C. Mont. 1978).

Comparative Negligence Statute Not to Be Applied Retroactively: Summary judgment properly granted defendant where plaintiff was contributorily negligent in a slip and fall case as the comparative negligence statute is not a procedural law but a substantive law in nature with a presumption against retroactive effect and therefore does not apply to claims which might arise prior to its effective date. Dunham v. Southside Nat'l Bank of Missoula, 169 M 466, 548 P2d 1383 (1976), overruled, as to the distinction between liability based upon natural versus altered accumulations of ice or snow that are open and obvious, in Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748, 54 St. Rep. 1422 (1997).

Genuine Issues of Facts to Possible Contributory Negligence Resulting in Potential Diminution of Damages: Where plaintiff sought damages against railroad under Federal Employers' Liability Act, it was error for District Court to deny railroad's introduction of evidence to establish plaintiff's possible contributory negligence in diminution of damages where court granted partial summary judgment as to railroad's liability so that the only triable issue was damages. (Dissent by Justices Daly and John C. Harrison asserting summary judgment is not appealable.) McGee v. Burlington N., Inc., 167 M 485, 540 P2d 298 (1975).

2023 Amendment: See 2023 Session Law for amendment made by sec. 1, Ch. 436, L. 2023. Amendment effective May 4, 2023.

Applicability: Section 5, Ch. 436, L. 2023, provided: "[This act] applies to claims that accrue on or after [the effective date of this act]." Effective May 4, 2023.

Severability: Section 3, Ch. 436, L. 2023, was a severability clause.

1997 Amendments: Chapter 293 in (1), near beginning, substituted "party to an action" for "party in any action"; in (2), in first sentence before "attributable", substituted "percentage of negligence" for "amount of negligence" and in second sentence, before "attributable", substituted "percentage" for "amount" and at end, after "claimant", inserted "and to any person with whom the claimant has settled or who the plaintiff has released from liability"; in third sentence of (4) substituted "liability of persons released from liability by the claimant and persons with whom the claimant has settled" for "liability of nonparties, including persons released from liability by the claimant and persons immune from liability to the claimant" and deleted former fifth sentence that read: "Contribution must be proportional to the liability of the parties against whom recovery is allowed"; at end of (6)(a), after "caused", substituted "in full or in part by a person with whom the claimant has settled or who the claimant has released from liability" for "in full or in part by a nonparty, which may be referred to as a nonparty defense"; in first sentence in (6)(b), after "negligence", substituted "of persons released from liability by the claimant or with whom the claimant has settled" for "of nonparties, including persons released from liability by the claimant and persons immune from liability to the claimant, if a nonparty defense is properly asserted in accordance with this subsection (6)" and in second sentence, after "negligence", substituted "of a person with whom the claimant has settled or who has been released from liability by the claimant" for "of a nonparty" and in two places substituted "person" for "nonparty"; inserted (6)(c) providing comparison of fault exceptions for specific persons other than persons who have settled with or have been released by the claimant; inserted (6)(d) providing that a release of settlement by a claimant constitutes an assumption of liability and reducing claim by the percentage of the release or equitable share of settlement; in (6)(e) substituted language concerning burden of proof for defendant alleging release or settlement for former language that read: "The burden of proof as to a nonparty's liability is on the defendant or defendants who affirmatively plead the nonparty defense, but this subsection (6) does not relieve the claimant of the burden of proving that negligence on the part of the defendant or defendants contributed as a proximate cause to the injury of the claimant or alter other proof requirements"; in (6)(f) substituted "A defendant alleging that a settled or released person is at fault in the matter shall affirmatively plead the settlement or release as a defense in the answer" for "A nonparty defense must be affirmatively pleaded as a part of the answer" and in last sentence, after "knowledge", substituted "of a settled or released person" for "of a nonparty defense" and after "defense" inserted "of settlement or release"; at end of (6)(f)(i) substituted "existence of a settled or released person" for "existence of a nonparty defense"; inserted (6)(f)(ii) authorizing defendant to plead defense of settlement or release with opportunity for settled or released person to intervene in the action; deleted former (6)(d)(iii) that read: "(iii) giving the claimant a reasonable opportunity, if appropriate, to add the nonparty as an additional defendant to the action before the expiration of the period of limitation applicable to the claim. However, this subsection (iii) does not extend the period of limitation or revive the action if the period of limitation has expired"; in first sentence of (6)(g), after "defendant", substituted "alleges that a settled or released person is at fault in the matter" for "asserts a nonparty defense" and after "notify" substituted "each person" for "each nonparty" and in second sentence, after "each", substituted "settled or released person at the person's last-known address" for "nonparty at the nonparty's last-known address"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 18, 1997.

Chapter 429 at beginning deleted exception clause that read: "Except as provided in subsections (2) and (3), whenever the negligence of a party in any action is an issue"; deleted (2) through (6) that read: "(2) A party whose negligence is determined to be 50% or less of the combined negligence of all persons described in subsection (4) is severally liable only and is responsible only for the amount of negligence attributable to that party, except as provided in subsection (3). The remaining parties are jointly and severally liable for the total less the amount attributable to the claimant.

(3) A party may be jointly liable for all damages caused by the negligence of another if both acted in concert in contributing to the claimant's damages or if one party acted as an agent of the other.

(4) On motion of any party against whom a claim is asserted for negligence resulting in death or injury to person or property, any other person whose negligence may have contributed as a proximate cause to the injury complained of may be joined as an additional party to the action. For purposes of determining the percentage of liability attributable to each party whose action contributed to the injury complained of, the trier of fact shall consider the negligence of the claimant, injured person, defendants, and third-party defendants. The liability of nonparties, including persons released from liability by the claimant and persons immune from liability to the claimant, must also be considered by the trier of fact, as provided in subsection (6). The trier of fact shall apportion the percentage of negligence of all persons listed in this subsection.

Contribution must be proportional to the liability of the parties against whom recovery is allowed. Nothing contained in this section makes any party indispensable pursuant to Rule 19, Montana Rules of Civil Procedure.

(5) If for any reason all or part of the contribution from a party liable for contribution cannot be obtained, each of the other parties shall contribute a proportional part of the unpaid portion of the noncontributing party's share and may obtain judgment in a pending or subsequent action for contribution from the noncontributing party. A party found to be 50% or less negligent for the injury complained of is liable for contribution under this section only up to the percentage of negligence attributed to that party.

(6) (a) In an action based on negligence, a defendant may assert as a defense that the damages of the claimant were caused in full or in part by a nonparty, which may be referred to as a nonparty defense.

(b) In determining the percentage of liability attributable to persons who are parties to the action, the trier of fact shall consider the negligence of nonparties, including persons released from liability by the claimant and persons immune from liability to the claimant, if a nonparty defense is properly asserted in accordance with this subsection (6). A finding of negligence of a nonparty is not a presumptive or conclusive finding as to that nonparty for purposes of a prior or subsequent action involving that nonparty.

(c) The burden of proof as to a nonparty's liability is on the defendant or defendants who affirmatively plead the nonparty defense, but this subsection (6) does not relieve the claimant of the burden of proving that negligence on the part of the defendant or defendants contributed as a proximate cause to the injury of the claimant or alter other proof requirements.

(d) A nonparty defense must be affirmatively pleaded as a part of the answer. A defendant who gains actual knowledge of a nonparty defense after the filing of that defendant's answer may plead the defense with reasonable promptness, as determined by the trial court, in a manner that is consistent with:

(i) giving the defendant a reasonable opportunity to discover the existence of a nonparty defense;

(ii) giving the claimant a reasonable opportunity to defend against a nonparty defense; and

(iii) giving the claimant a reasonable opportunity, if appropriate, to add the nonparty as an additional defendant to the action before the expiration of the period of limitation applicable to the claim. However, this subsection (iii) does not extend the period of limitation or revive the action if the period of limitation has expired.

(e) If a defendant asserts a nonparty defense, the defendant shall notify each nonparty who the defendant alleges caused the claimant's injuries, in whole or in part. Notification must be made by mailing the defendant's answer to each nonparty at the nonparty's last-known address by certified mail, return receipt requested; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective on occurrence of contingency.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 293, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, the Montana Supreme Court, in Plumb v. District Court, 927 P.2d 1011, 53 St. Rep. 1187 (1996), recently declared unconstitutional portions of Montana's comparative negligence statute because it failed to provide an opportunity for a nonparty to defend oneself, and it required the plaintiff to act in a dual capacity by requiring that the plaintiff represent nonparties; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Supreme Court also recognized in Plumb that parties who settle represent the single exception for fair apportionment of liability under third-party practice rules; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Supreme Court has recognized that the Legislature may alter tort causes of action to promote legitimate state interests; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature believes that the policy of the state is that claimants, defendants, and other potentially liable persons should be held responsible to the extent of individual fault; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature has retained joint and several liability, but modified it because of that policy; and

WHEREAS, the current system of modified joint and several liability must permit a consideration of the fault attributable to parties who settle or are released for the modified system to be operative; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature believes that a claimant who enters into a settlement or covenant not to sue does so because the claimant has made a considered judgment that the agreement is in the claimant's best interests; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature intends that the liability of persons who settle or are released and who may share in the responsibility for a tort cause of action be considered by the trier of fact and apportioned a percentage of damages according to their negligence; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature believes that the percent credit rule, rather than the dollar credit rule, more accurately reflects the basis for comparative negligence, which apportions liability according to the percentage of individual negligence.

THEREFORE, the Legislature finds it appropriate to pass legislation addressing the concerns raised by the Montana Supreme Court and to accomplish the Legislature's objectives of allocating liability on the basis of individual negligence, encouraging fair settlements that accurately reflect potential liability, and permitting the allocation of a percentage of liability to persons who settle or are released and are found to be partially or wholly responsible."

The preamble attached to Ch. 429, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, efforts of the Legislature to amend the comparative negligence statute, which is premised on a modified joint and several liability scheme, have repeatedly been struck down by the Montana Supreme Court; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Supreme Court rulings prohibiting the consideration of fault attributable to nonparties impair the effectiveness of the current modified joint and several liability system in Montana; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature intends that the policy of the state should be a system of comparative fault in which persons are held responsible only to the extent to which they cause or contribute to the harm; and

WHEREAS, the current system of joint and several liability, which apportions all liability only among parties to the action, fails to apportion liability among all tortfeasors according to their equitable share of fault; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature recognizes that public policy favors fair settlements that accurately reflect the liability of settled or released parties; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature is concerned with the present inequitable results of solvent defendants having to pay for the liability of insolvent, immune, or settled parties; and

WHEREAS, the present system of joint and several liability for all tort actions does not reflect the state's policy of liability in proportion to fault; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature recognizes that joint and several liability should be retained for certain situations; and

WHEREAS, at least ten other states have abrogated the doctrine of joint and several liability, except for specific situations; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature has the power to alter tort causes of action to promote legitimate state interests.

THEREFORE, the Legislature declares that the doctrine of joint and several liability is abolished, except for specific causes of action, and is replaced with a comparative fault system utilizing the principles of several liability."

Applicability: Section 4, Ch. 293, L. 1997, provided "[This act] [27-1-702, 27-1-703, and 27-1-704] applies to causes of action that arise on or after [the effective date of this act]." Effective April 18, 1997.

Nonseverability: Section 5, Ch. 293, L. 1997, was a nonseverability clause.

Severability: Section 9, Ch. 429, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 330 in (4), in second sentence after "third-party defendants", deleted "persons released from liability by the claimant, persons immune from liability to the claimant, and any other persons who have a defense against the claimant", inserted third sentence requiring consideration of liability of nonparties, and deleted former fourth sentence that read: "However, in attributing negligence among persons, the trier of fact may not consider or determine any amount of negligence on the part of any injured person's employer or coemployee to the extent that such employer or coemployee has tort immunity under the Workers' Compensation Act or the Occupational Disease Act of this state, of any other state, or of the federal government"; inserted (6) establishing nonparty defense; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 5, 1995.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 330, L. 1995, provided: "WHEREAS, on August 29, 1994, the Montana Supreme Court, in Newville v. State of Montana Department of Family Services, [267 Mont. 237,] 883 P.2d 793, 51 St. Rptr. 758 (1994), struck down as unconstitutional part of section 27-1-703, MCA, limiting the common-law doctrine of joint and several liability; and

WHEREAS, the basis of the holding was that the statute lacked certain procedural safeguards; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature wishes to provide for procedural safeguards considered necessary by the Montana Supreme Court; and

WHEREAS, on January 18, 1995, the Montana Supreme Court, in Wetch v. Unique Concrete Co., [269 Mont. 315,] [888] P.2d [425], 52 St. Rptr. 5 (1995), interpreted section 27-1-703, MCA, to preclude the trier of fact from hearing about or considering the negligence of the plaintiff's employer in a case in which that negligence should have absolved or substantially limited the liability of a contractor doing work on the employer's office building; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature wishes to provide that negligence on the part of the claimant's employer or coemployee may be considered and determined as part of a nonparty defense, as provided in this bill."

Severability: Section 2, Ch. 330, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

Applicability: Section 3, Ch. 330, L. 1995, provided: "[This act] applies to all claims for relief not reduced to final judgment on [the effective date of this act]." Effective April 5, 1995.

1987 Amendment: Substituted entire section (see 1987 Session Law for text) for former (1) through (3) that read: "(1) Whenever the negligence of any party in any action is an issue, each party against whom recovery may be allowed is jointly and severally liable for the amount that may be awarded to the claimant but has the right of contribution from any other person whose negligence may have contributed as a proximate cause to the injury complained of.

(2) On motion of any party against whom a claim is asserted for negligence resulting in death or injury to person or property, any other person whose negligence may have contributed as a proximate cause to the injury complained of may be joined as an additional party to the action. Whenever more than one person is found to have contributed as a proximate cause to the injury complained of, the trier of fact shall apportion the degree of fault among such persons. Contribution shall be proportional to the negligence of the parties against whom recovery is allowed. Nothing contained in this section shall make any party indispensable pursuant to Rule 19, M.R.Civ.P.

(3) If for any reason all or part of the contribution from a party liable for contribution cannot be obtained, each of the other parties against whom recovery is allowed is liable to contribute a proportional part of the unpaid portion of the noncontributing party's share and may obtain judgment in a pending or subsequent action for contribution from the noncontributing party."

Severability: Section 3, Ch. 505, L. 1987, was a severability section.

1981 Amendment: In (1), substituted "Whenever the negligence of any party in any action is an issue, each party against whom recovery may be allowed is jointly and severally liable for the amount that may be awarded to the claimant but has the right of contribution from any other person whose negligence may have contributed as a proximate cause to the injury complained of" for "Whenever the comparative negligence of the parties in any action is an issue and recovery is allowed against more than one party, each such party is jointly and severally liable for the amount awarded to the claimant but has the right of contribution from any other party against whom recovery is allowed. Contribution shall be proportional to the negligence of the parties against whom recovery is allowed"; and inserted "(2) On motion of any party against whom a claim is asserted for negligence resulting in death or injury to person or property, any other person whose negligence may have contributed as a proximate cause to the injury complained of may be joined as an additional party to the action. Whenever more than one person is found to have contributed as a proximate cause to the injury complained of, the trier of fact shall apportion the degree of fault among such persons. Contribution shall be proportional to the negligence of the parties against whom recovery is allowed. Nothing contained in this section shall make any party indispensable pursuant to Rule 19, M.R.Civ.P."

Case Notes

Broad Arbitration Clause Applicable to Apportionment of Liability Among Parties — Joinder of Third-Party Defendant Precluded — Substantive Right to Contribution Not Impaired: An arbitration clause in an agreement between two parties does not impair one party's substantive right to apportionment of liability or contribution required under 27-1-703. Instead, the arbitration clause preserved each party's substantive right to seek contribution from the other party but limited the determination of liability procedurally to a separate arbitration proceeding rather than joinder of the other party as a third-party defendant. Stowe v. Big Sky Vacation Rentals, Inc., 2019 MT 288, 398 Mont. 91, 454 P.3d 655.

No Action for Contribution Against Joint Tortfeasor if No Underlying Litigation or if Joint Tortfeasor Not Party in Underlying Settlement — Common-Law Claim of Indemnity Disallowed if Negligence of Party Seeking Indemnification Was Passive: An insurer sought indemnity and contribution from the Federal Aviation Administration air traffic controllers for a fatal plane crash. A victim's estate settled with the insurer without litigation. The insurer argued that an "action" under this section should not be limited to cases in which litigation had begun; rather, it should include the filing of an insurance claim. The Supreme Court declined to apply this interpretation when there was no underlying litigation, finding that an "action" under this section does not include the filing of an insurance claim and that the insurer had not been a "party" to any action. Another victim's estate settled before trial, and the insurer argued that although the United States had not been joined because of the settlement, this section allows a separate and subsequent contribution action. The Supreme Court found that the statute does not contemplate such stand-alone actions. Last, the court found that the common-law remedy of indemnity was inappropriate when one tortfeasor argued that its negligence, if any, was remote, passive, or secondary whereas the negligence of the other tortfeasor was active. Metro Aviation, Inc. v. U.S., 2013 MT 193, 371 Mont. 64, 305 P.3d 832, distinguished in Stowe v. Big Sky Vacation Rentals, Inc., 2019 MT 288, 398 Mont. 91, 454 P.3d 655.

Reliance on Settled-Party Defense Appropriate — New Trial Not Warranted: In a negligence action regarding alleged water-contaminated diesel fuel, the District Court correctly determined that the plaintiff was not entitled to a new trial as a result of the defendant's reliance on the settled third-party defense authorized by 27-1-703, since the jury found the named party defendant not negligent and the special verdict form gave no indication whether the jury might have considered the settled parties negligent. Horn v. Bull River Country Store Properties, LLC, 2012 MT 245, 366 Mont. 491, 288 P.3d 218. However, see BNSF Ry. Co. v. Asbestos Claims Court, 2020 MT 59, 399 Mont. 180, 459 P.3d 857, holding that because the issue of settlement of another party is not ripe, the other party is not a settled party and BSNF may not use evidence of its conduct as a defense.

Knowledge of Defendant Critical in Assessing Foreseeability of Plaintiff: The plaintiff's daughter committed suicide at a boarding school. Contrary to the school's policy, the daughter was admitted even though she had a history of suicide attempts, and this information was not conveyed to those working with her. The plaintiff sued the school and a number of interrelated entities. At trial, the District Court limited the evidence to what the daughter knew, what was within her general knowledge, or what was directly related to her death. The District Court did not permit the plaintiff to introduce evidence of the defendants' knowledge or of their prior bad acts, ruling that the evidence would be too prejudicial. A jury concluded that the defendants were not liable for the daughter's suicide. On appeal, the plaintiff argued that the District Court abused its discretion in not allowing evidence of the defendants' prior acts and their knowledge. She argued that the evidence was relevant in determining whether the daughter was a "foreseeable plaintiff" for purposes of negligence. The Supreme Court agreed with the plaintiff, holding that the determination of whether a plaintiff is foreseeable depends on the knowledge of the defendants, citing Fisher v. Swift Transp. Co., 2008 MT 105, 342 Mont. 335, 181 P.3d 601. The Supreme Court remanded the case to District Court for a new trial. Newman v. Lichfield, 2012 MT 47, 364 Mont. 243, 272 P.3d 625.

Right to Amend Answer Properly Denied — New Defense Not Allowed: In a failure to warn case, the defendant sought to amend its answer shortly before trial to apportion liability between it and the physician for damages suffered by the plaintiff. The defendant did not seek to amend the answer until 2 months after the prescribing physician settled with the plaintiff. The District Court acted within its discretion when it denied the defendant's motion. The defendant could have sought to amend the answer earlier but failed to do so even though plaintiff's counsel clearly sought to ascertain whether the defendant planned to add apportionment as a defense. Stevens v. Novartis Pharmaceuticals Corp., 2010 MT 282, 358 Mont. 474, 247 P.3d 244.

Causation — Traditional Evidentiary Consideration Given to Rebuttal Evidence Establishing Preexisting Injuries: When a defendant seeks to submit evidence of other injuries to negate causation, traditional evidentiary considerations are applied as opposed to evidence establishing a reasonable medical probability that the injury is divisible. Cheff v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2010 MT 235, 358 Mont. 144, 243 P.3d 1115.

Offset Required for Prior Payments — Federal Law Applied in FELA Claim: The District Court correctly concluded that the defendant railroad company was entitled to offset a damages award under the Federal Employers' Liability Act by deducting settlement proceeds that it paid pursuant to a release that was later invalidated. When a release is executed and later invalidated, the sum paid pursuant to the release must be deducted from any award determined to be due to the injured employee. Cheff v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2010 MT 235, 358 Mont. 144, 243 P.3d 1115, following Hogue v. S. Ry. Co., 390 US 516, 88 S Ct 1150 (1968).

Comparative Negligence Offset Improper When Some Amount of Award Based Upon Strict Liability — Pro Tanto Award Ordered — Amount of Award Uncertain for Purpose of Interest Pending Determination of Offset by Court: After plaintiffs settled with Anderson's, the installer of a heater that injured plaintiffs, plaintiffs received a jury verdict against Lennox, the manufacturer of the heater, based on both strict liability and negligence. Pursuant to 27-1-703(6)(d), the District Court offset its judgment by the amount of the settlement with Anderson's under the doctrine of comparative negligence and awarded interest pursuant to 27-1-211. The Supreme Court reversed the offset, holding that because the jury form showed that some amount of the damages was awarded on the basis of strict liability, a 30% offset under 27-1-703(6)(d), based upon comparative negligence, was improper but a pro tanto reduction under several previous decisions of the court was proper. The Supreme Court also held that postjudgment interest should have been awarded pursuant to 25-9-204, because the amount of the award could not be made certain until the jury rendered its verdict. The proper offset was calculated by the court and thus was uncertain under 27-1-211. Hulstine v. Lennox, 2010 MT 180, 357 Mont. 228, 237 P.3d 1277.

Uninsured Employer Prohibited From Contribution or Indemnity Claim Against Third Party After Settling With Injured Employee: In response to a certified question from the federal District Court, the Supreme Court held that it is not equitable to require a stranger to the employer-employee relationship to indemnify an employer for liability that was wholly avoidable if the employer had simply obeyed the Workers' Compensation Act and provided coverage for its employees. Therefore, an uninsured employer is prohibited from bringing either a contribution claim or an indemnity claim against a third party after settling with an injured employee. St. Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v. Bush Hog, LLC, 2009 MT 349, 353 M 173, 219 P3d 1249 (2009).

No Error in Jury Instruction That Employer Assumed Contractual Duty to Provide Safe Workplace: The District Court did not abuse its discretion by instructing the jury that an employer had assumed the contractual duty to provide a subcontractor's workers with a safe workplace, including transportation from a parking lot to the jobsite. Because the nature of the contractual obligation constituted a material fact as to which no genuine issue existed, partial summary judgment on the issue was proper. Olson v. Shumaker Trucking & Excavating Contractors, Inc., 2008 MT 378, 347 M 1, 196 P3d 1265 (2008).

Relationship Between Negligence Per Se and Apportionment of Negligence Under Comparative Negligence: Montana's comparative negligence scheme requires the factfinder to consider the negligence of the claimant, injured person, defendants, and third-party defendants, even if a party proceeds under a claim of negligence per se or if the factfinder determines that one or more persons were negligent per se. In the absence of an express statutory provision to the contrary, a claim of negligence per se or a determination that a person was negligent per se, including traffic violations, does not preclude the defense of contributory negligence or bar the apportionment of negligence based on a comparative negligence scheme. Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007), following Reed v. Little, 209 M 199, 680 P2d 937 (1984), and Edie v. Gray, 2005 MT 224, 328 M 354, 121 P3d 516 (2005), and distinguishing Woods v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry., 2004 MT 332, 324 M 151, 104 P3d 1037 (2004). See also Tonner v. Cirian, 2012 MT 314, 367 Mont. 487, 291 P.3d 1182.

No Error in Failure to Apportion Percentage of Contributory Negligence to Defendants When Plaintiff Found Fifty-One Percent Negligent: Eight of 12 jurors agreed that defendants were negligent in contributing to the death of Payne's son, and of the eight, six agreed that the son was more than 51% negligent. Given the son's negligence, the jury asked whether it needed to apportion negligence percentages for the defendants and was instructed that no further determination of negligence was required. Payne appealed on grounds that failure to apportion less than 50% of the negligence to defendants violated this section. The Supreme Court disagreed. Under 27-1-702, a plaintiff cannot recover if plaintiff's negligence exceeds the combined negligence of the defendants, so the trial court was within its discretion in instructing the jury not to proceed with apportioning negligence to the defendants. Payne v. Knutson, 2004 MT 271, 323 M 165, 99 P3d 200 (2004).

Rule of Law Regarding Admissibility of Evidence of Subsequent Accident With Nonparty — Defendant's Burden to Show That Damages Divisible and Apportionment Proper: Following Truman's injury in an automobile accident, she was involved in a second automobile accident and in an accident involving an ultralight aircraft. The District Court held that evidence of Truman's injuries in the second automobile accident and the aircraft accident would be admissible in a trial related to the first automobile accident to disprove causation. After accepting supervisory control, the Supreme Court relied on an analogous situation in Azure v. Billings, 182 M 234, 596 P2d 460 (1979), holding that once a plaintiff presents a prima facie case that the defendant's conduct contributed as a cause of injury, the burden shifts to the defendant to prove that the injury is divisible. A defendant is permitted to submit relevant evidence of subsequent accidents to negate allegations that the defendant is the cause or sole cause of the injury, but the defendant may not attempt to apportion fault to the conduct of a nonparty because assignment of liability to a nonparty without affording that party the opportunity to defend against liability risks an unreliable and disproportionate assignment of liability and places the burden of defending the nonparty on the plaintiff. In this case, plaintiff must prove that defendant's conduct contributed as a substantial factor to the damages, but need not prove the extent to which defendant is responsible. If defendant proves by a reasonable medical probability that the injury is divisible and that defendant is responsible for only a portion of the damages, the jury may reduce defendant's obligation by the portion of damages for which it is proved that defendant is not responsible. However, if the injury is indivisible and evidence does not permit an apportionment, then defendant is liable for the entire damage. Truman v. District Court, 2003 MT 91, 315 M 165, 68 P3d 654 (2003), followed in Olson v. Shumaker Trucking & Excavating Contractors, Inc., 2008 MT 378, 347 M 1, 196 P3d 1265 (2008), and distinguished in Cheff v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2010 MT 235, 358 Mont. 144, 243 P.3d 1115.

Supervisory Control Proper to Determine Whether Admission of Evidence of Subsequent Accidents With Nonparties Admissible to Disprove Liability for Damages: Following Truman's injury in an automobile accident, she was involved in a second automobile accident and in an accident involving an ultralight aircraft. The District Court held that evidence of Truman's injuries in the second automobile accident and the aircraft accident would be admissible in a trial related to the first automobile accident to disprove causation. Truman requested that the Supreme Court exercise supervisory control because the District Court made a mistake of law that would place Truman at a significant disadvantage in litigating the case. If the District Court's conclusion, that evidence of subsequent accidents with nonparties was admissible, proved incorrect, that conclusion would impact all aspects of the trial, render the trial results unreliable, and substantially increase the cost to Truman in both time and finances. Therefore, the Supreme Court acceded to the request and exercised supervisory control to determine whether the District Court was proceeding based upon a mistake of law. Truman v. District Court, 2003 MT 91, 315 M 165, 68 P3d 654 (2003), following Plumb v. District Court, 279 M 363, 927 P2d 1011 (1996).

Separate and Distinct Claims Against Multiple Defendants — Settlement Proceeds of One Defendant Not Offset Against Settlement Against Another Defendant: Plaintiffs entered a settlement and release agreement with one defendant, apportioning the settlement proceeds to plaintiffs' claim for emotional distress, and releasing that defendant. Damages were awarded on plaintiffs' claim against another defendant, Schonrock, for violating the Montana Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act of 1973. Schonrock claimed to be entitled to an offset of the emotional distress settlement against the verdict based on violation of the Act. The District Court denied the offset, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Under Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002 (2000), a dollar-for-dollar pro tanto offset reduction applies only if two or more concurrent or joint tortfeasors cause a single invisible harm. Here, the award of damages by the jury and the settlement proceeds were the result of separate and distinct injuries, so an offset of the settlement against the damages was not appropriate. Plath v. Schonrock, 2003 MT 21, 314 M 101, 64 P3d 984 (2003). See also Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248 (1994).

Failure to Provide Discovery Not Grounds for Offsetting Settlement Against Judgment: It would not be appropriate to refuse to offset against a judgment the amount of a settlement against joint tortfeasors on the basis of equity grounded in a default judgment against defendant for its willful failure to provide information sought to be discovered. The District Court properly refused the offset. Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 1499 (2000).

No Constitutional Right to Attorney Fees or to Reduction of Collateral Source or Settlement Offset by Plaintiff's Attorney Fees: The right to full legal redress contained in Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const., is limited to the recovery of those damages provided by the general tort law, and pursuant to the American Rule on attorney fees, attorney fees are not damages recoverable pursuant to the general tort law because it pertains to survival and wrongful death actions. Montana Supreme Court cases that include the costs of recovery in the concept of full compensation and that relate to equitable principles unique to the law of legal subrogation are inapplicable to the constitutional issue of whether full legal redress under the constitution requires payment of attorney fees. Montana's common law has followed the American Rule that attorney fees are not an element of damages unless expressly provided by statute or contract. Attorney fees are the subject of a contract between a party and the party's attorney. They are what the party chooses to do with part of the recovered damages, based on a prior agreement. Therefore, the right to full legal redress does not create a right to attorney fees, and the defendant's right to have collateral source and settlement payments offset against the judgment was not subject to a right of the plaintiff to have the offset amount reduced by the plaintiff's attorney fees. Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 1499 (2000).

Offsetting Judgment by Amount of Settlement or Collateral Source Payment Not Denial of Full Compensation for Loss: An offset against a judgment of an amount received through settlement or from a collateral source does not deny full compensation for a loss. It simply ensures a single recovery for a single injury. Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 1499 (2000).

No Apportionment Mechanism Regarding Negligence of Nonparties Under 1995 Statute: The 1995 amendments to this section did not cure the due process problem created by the absence of a statutory mechanism by which the negligence of nonparties, including third-party defendants released from liability, can be fairly apportioned by a jury. Here, the District Court properly refused to permit the jury to apportion negligence to third-party defendants who were released from liability by plaintiff and who were impecunious and judgment-proof. Cusenbary v. Mortensen, 1999 MT 221, 296 M 25, 987 P2d 351, 56 St. Rep. 864 (1999), following Plumb v. District Court, 279 M 363, 927 P2d 1011, 53 St. Rep. 1187 (1996), and distinguishing Whiting v. St., 248 M 207, 810 P2d 1177, 48 St. Rep. 396 (1991). (See 1997 amendment.)

Settlement by One Tortfeasor as Precluding Claims for Contribution and Indemnity Against Settling Tortfeasor Regardless of Underlying Tort Claim: In accordance with common-law principles and the public policy favoring settlements, a settlement by one tortfeasor precludes claims for both contribution and indemnity against the settling tortfeasor, regardless of the nature of the underlying tort claim. This is so even though this section states that the trier of fact is to determine the degree of negligence among each of the joint tortfeasors. Actual recovery is allowed only against those tortfeasors who have not settled with the claimant. Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1999 MT 186, 295 M 318, 983 P2d 943, 56 St. Rep. 721 (1999), following State ex rel. Deere & Co. v. District Court, 224 M 384, 730 P2d 396, 43 St. Rep. 2270 (1986).

Constitutionality of Statute Regarding Multiple Defendants Proper Issue for Supervisory Control: Although all three circumstances for the exercise of supervisory control in State ex rel. Racicot v. District Court, 244 M 521, 798 P2d 1004 (1990), were not present, the Supreme Court nevertheless concluded that the constitutionality of subsection (6) of this section was an appropriate issue to decide by supervisory control after finding that any remedy available to plaintiffs by appeal was inadequate and that denial of a speedy remedy by supervisory control would be a denial of justice. (See 1997 amendment.) Plumb v. District Court, 279 M 363, 927 P2d 1011, 53 St. Rep. 1187 (1996), following State ex rel. Deere & Co. v. District Court, 224 M 384, 730 P2d 396 (1986), and followed in Preston v. District Court, 282 M 200, 936 P2d 814, 54 St. Rep. 312 (1997).

Nonparty Defense Not Rationally Related to Liability Apportionment — Due Process Violated: Substantive due process analysis requires deciding whether the legislation in question is related to a legitimate government concern and requires that the means chosen by the Legislature to accomplish its objective are reasonably related to the result sought to be attained. Although the state has a legitimate interest in enacting a scheme of liability that apportions liability for damages based on the degree of a party's fault for another person's injuries, the nonparty defense provided for by the 1995 amendments to this section, which allows apportionment of liability to parties who are not named in the lawsuit and who do not have an opportunity to appear and defend themselves, is not rationally related to that legitimate government objective and is violative of the constitutional right to due process. Remaining portions of the statute are severable and remain in effect. (See 1997 amendment.) Plumb v. District Court, 279 M 363, 927 P2d 1011, 53 St. Rep. 1187 (1996), followed in Reynolds v. U.S.A., 280 M 191, 929 P2d 844, 53 St. Rep. 1360 (1996), State ex rel. Maffei v. Second Judicial Court, 282 M 65, 935 P2d 266, 54 St. Rep. 244 (1997), Anderson v. Werner Enterprises, Inc., 1998 MT 333, 292 M 284, 972 P2d 806, 55 St. Rep. 1350 (1998), and Cusenbary v. Mortensen, 1999 MT 221, 296 M 25, 987 P2d 351, 56 St. Rep. 864 (1999).

Plaintiff Cannot Object to Admission of Evidence for Which Plaintiff Opened Door: Hando suffered physical damages while involved in painting activities at work. She subsequently settled with her employer and sued PPG, the manufacturer of the paint. Hando alleged that the District Court erred in allowing PPG to introduce evidence indicating that any damages that she suffered were the result of her employer's negligence when the statute states that the negligence of an employer may not be considered when the employer has tort immunity under the Workers' Compensation Act. The Supreme Court held that Hando had opened the door to the evidence by testifying on direct examination about the procedures used by her employer and therefore had participated and acquiesced in the introduction of evidence concerning negligence on the part of her employer. Hando v. PPG Indus., Inc., 272 M 146, 900 P2d 281, 52 St. Rep. 670 (1995), following Pedersen v. Nordahl, 261 M 284, 862 P2d 411 (1993).

Evidence of Employer's Negligence Properly Excluded: Wetch injured herself walking out the back door of her place of employment and falling into a hole excavated by Unique while repairing the steps. Wetch's employer was covered by workers' compensation, and she received benefits under that coverage. Wetch subsequently sued Unique for her injuries. The trial court granted Wetch's motion to exclude any evidence of her employer's assumption of the duty to keep the back door locked. Unique would have used the evidence to argue that the employer's failure to keep the door locked was an intervening cause negating any liability on the company's part. The Supreme Court held that although it had struck down other portions of this section as unconstitutional, no challenge to the remaining portion of the law was before it and the remaining law was clear on its face that no evidence of the employer's liability could be considered. (See 1995 amendment.) Wetch v. Unique Concrete Co., 269 M 315, 888 P2d 425, 52 St. Rep. 5 (1995), rejecting the holding in Weaselboy v. Ingersoll-Rand, 10 Mont. Fed. 41 (1991).

Mandated Allocation of Negligence to Nonparties — Substantive Due Process Violation: Guardians of a foster child injured by a foster father pending adoption appealed a jury verdict that attributed negligence under the state's comparative negligence statute to the Department of Family Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services), to the foster mother, and to a professional counselor, although the mother and counselor were nonparties as the result of a settlement prior to trial. The Supreme Court ruled that mandating the jury to allocate a percentage of negligence to nonparties arbitrarily and unreasonably affected the guardians' claim without providing procedural safeguards. (See 1995 amendment.) Newville v. St., 267 M 237, 883 P2d 793, 51 St. Rep. 758 (1994), applied retroactively in Brockie v. Omo Constr., Inc., 268 M 519, 887 P2d 167, 51 St. Rep. 1322 (1994). The 1995 amendments to this section did not cure the due process problem created by the absence of a statutory mechanism by which the negligence of nonparties, including third-party defendants released from liability, can be fairly apportioned by a jury. Here, the District Court properly refused to permit the jury to apportion negligence to third-party defendants who were released from liability by plaintiff and who were impecunious and judgment-proof. Cusenbary v. Mortensen, 1999 MT 221, 296 M 25, 987 P2d 351, 56 St. Rep. 864 (1999), distinguishing Whiting v. St., 248 M 207, 810 P2d 1177, 48 St. Rep. 396 (1991). (See 1997 amendment.)

Intentional and Negligent Injuries by Joint Tortfeasor — Comparative Negligence Unaddressed When Plaintiff Fully Compensated: Boyken sued Steele for intentional injuries and Lee's Northside Bar for negligent injuries that Boyken received in a bar fight. Boyken settled with the bar for $5,000 before trial, and the jury determined Boyken's injuries in the amount of $2,500 but that Boyken was 75% responsible for those injuries. The District Court granted judgment, notwithstanding the verdict, based upon Boyken's argument that comparative negligence should not be applied when injuries also resulted from an intentional tort and awarded Boyken $2,500. The Supreme Court refused to address the issue of whether comparative negligence should be applied to an intentional tort and held that Boyken was fully compensated for his injuries and that when a joint tortfeasor settles with a claimant, the remaining joint tortfeasor is entitled to offset to the extent of the settlement. Boyken v. Steele, 256 M 419, 847 P2d 282, 50 St. Rep. 131 (1993), followed in Hulstine v. Lennox, 2010 MT 180, 357 Mont. 228, 237 P.3d 1277.

Subject Matter Jurisdiction of District Court to Determine Liability of Coemployee: This section provides that to the extent a coemployee has immunity from liability under the Workers' Compensation Act, a trier of fact cannot consider or determine negligence by the coemployee. The existence of immunity must be determined by the District Court. No statute or rule requires pleading the inapplicability of the Workers' Compensation Act because the jurisdiction of the District Court over common-law personal injury claims is indisputable. Brown v. Ehlert, 255 M 140, 841 P2d 510, 49 St. Rep. 940 (1992), distinguishing Mitchell v. Banking Corp. of Mont., 83 M 581, 273 P 1055 (1929), and Massey v. Selensky, 212 M 68, 685 P2d 938 (1984).

Inclusion of Nonparties in Jury Form — Reversible Error: The inclusion of a settling party or other third party in a verdict form serves no relevant purpose in determining whether a defendant was negligent and whether that negligence was a contributing cause of plaintiff's damages. Therefore, the inclusion of nonparties in the verdict form constitutes reversible error. Rieger v. Coldwell, 254 M 507, 839 P2d 1257, 49 St. Rep. 768 (1992).

Statute of Limitations on Action for Contribution or Indemnity: A cause of action for contribution or indemnity is distinct from the underlying cause of action, and the time from which the statute of limitations for such a cause of action begins to run is when the underlying claim, judgment, or settlement is paid or discharged. Linder v. Missoula County, 251 M 292, 824 P2d 1004, 49 St. Rep. 26 (1992), citing Schiess v. Bates, 693 P2d 440 (Idaho 1984). See also St. Paul Fire & Marine Co. v. Thompson, 152 M 396, 451 P2d 98 (1969).

Allowing Jury to Know Effect of Its Percentage Findings: The plaintiff objected to the defendant's jury instruction and closing argument allowing the defendant to inform the jury that if it found one defendant only 1% liable and that another defendant had no ability to pay, then the defendant who was only 1% liable would be responsible for paying the entire amount due the plaintiff. The Supreme Court ruled that it was proper for the jury to be aware of the effect that its percentage findings would have if any of the defendants could not pay their portion of the judgment. DeCelles v. St., 243 M 422, 795 P2d 419, 47 St. Rep. 1281 (1990).

Jury's Requirement That One Joint Tortfeasor Pay All Damages Not Error Per Se: The lower court ruled by summary judgment that the state and several landowners were jointly liable for the damages caused when a dam under their control gave way. In apportioning damages, the jury ordered the state to pay 100% of the damages. The Supreme Court held that the failure of the jury to make any of the other tortfeasors contribute was not an error per se but was difficult to envision when the lower court had ruled that all the parties had a duty to maintain the dam. The court stated that the instructions given to the jury were inconsistent and may have confused them, and therefore the court remanded the case. Burk Ranches, Inc. v. St., 242 M 300, 790 P2d 443, 47 St. Rep. 520 (1990).

Liability of Tortfeasors Acting in Concert: Two defendants who were passengers in a car that was involved in a chase of and subsequent accident with another vehicle claimed that because they were not in control of the vehicle and did not make any encouraging statements to the driver, they could not be held liable for a tort or for injuries resulting from the accident. However, undisputed facts showed that they voluntarily joined in the pursuit for the purpose of eventually assaulting the occupants of the other vehicle and that they helped to free their own vehicle when it became stuck on a fence, thereby substantially assisting in the chase and encouraging the driver's actions. These facts showed that they acted in concert as tortfeasors, as defined in part in Restatement (Second) of Torts 876 (1979), and were subject to liability; therefore, a partial summary judgment for plaintiff on the issue of liability was proper. Sloan v. Fauque, 239 M 383, 784 P2d 895, 46 St. Rep. 1767 (1989). But see Newman v. Lichfield, 2012 MT 47, 364 Mont. 243, 272 P.3d 625, in which the District Court properly denied partial summary judgment when the plaintiff did not definitively show that the defendants knew that the tortfeasor had breached a duty to the plaintiff's daughter and nonetheless provided substantial assistance or encouragement to the tortfeasor.

Accepted Work Rule Doctrine — Contractor Nonliability: The District Court properly granted summary judgment in favor of a contractor on the issue of negligence based on the accepted work rule doctrine. The doctrine, first recognized in Ulmen v. Schwieger, 92 M 331, 12 P2d 856 (1932), is based on the rule that an independent contractor is not liable to third parties for injuries that occur after the work has been completed and turned over to and accepted by the employer. Instead, the person employing the contractor is substituted as the responsible party. The Supreme Court affirmed the doctrine by refusing to extend contractor liability to foreseeable injury caused by negligent construction. Harrington v. LaBelle's of Colo., Inc., 235 M 80, 765 P2d 732, 45 St. Rep. 2176 (1988), overruled by Pierce v. ALSC Architects, P.S., 270 M 97, 890 P2d 1254, 52 St. Rep. 93 (1995).

Preexisting Condition — Apportionment of Damages: In a preexisting condition case, plaintiff does not have the burden of proving what portion of his disability is attributable to the defendant. Priest v. Taylor, 227 M 370, 740 P2d 648, 44 St. Rep. 1157 (1987).

Prejudgment Settlement by Joint Tortfeasor — Not Subject to Contribution or Indemnity: A joint tortfeasor who settles with a claimant before judgment on the claim is entered in District Court is not subject to claims for contribution or indemnity from nonsettling joint tortfeasors against whom judgment may be rendered. State ex rel. Deere & Co. v. District Court, 224 M 384, 730 P2d 396, 43 St. Rep. 2270 (1986), followed in Kuhnke v. Fisher, 227 M 62, 740 P2d 625, 44 St. Rep. 895 (1987), Sevalstad v. Glaus, 227 M 117, 737 P2d 1147, 44 St. Rep. 930 (1987), Whiting v. St., 248 M 207, 810 P2d 1177, 48 St. Rep. 396 (1991), and Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1999 MT 186, 295 M 318, 983 P2d 943, 56 St. Rep. 721 (1999), and distinguished in Linder v. Missoula County, 251 M 292, 824 P2d 1004, 49 St. Rep. 26 (1992). (See 1987 amendment to 27-1-703.) In applying the Deere standard, the term "joint tortfeasor" was held to include the term "concurrent tortfeasor". Sprinkle v. Burlington N. RR Co., 236 M 383, 769 P2d 1261, 46 St. Rep. 445 (1989), followed in Holmberg v. Strong, 272 M 101, 899 P2d 1097, 52 St. Rep. 710 (1995).

Reduction by Dollar Amount, Not Percentage, of Claim Against Remaining Tortfeasor: A plaintiff's recovery against tortfeasors remaining after prejudgment settlement by another joint tortfeasor is to be reduced by a dollar credit in the amount of consideration paid by the settling tortfeasor and not by a percentage amount proportioned to the degree of fault of the settling tortfeasor. State ex rel. Deere & Co. v. District Court, 224 M 384, 730 P2d 396, 43 St. Rep. 2270 (1986), followed in Whiting v. St., 248 M 207, 810 P2d 1177, 48 St. Rep. 396 (1991), and Holmberg v. Strong, 272 M 101, 899 P2d 1097, 52 St. Rep. 710 (1995). (See 1987 amendments to 27-1-703.)

Interspousal Tort Immunity No Bar to Cross-Claims of Husband's Codefendants for Indemnity and Contribution: In original proceeding for declaratory judgment on two certified questions from U.S. District Court, the Supreme Court held that since it abrogated doctrine of interspousal tort immunity, husband's codefendants and joint tortfeasors may cross-claim against him for indemnity and/or contribution under 27-1-703. The court, however, refrained from commenting as to the applicability of indemnity theories in auto accident cases. Noone v. Fink, 222 M 273, 721 P2d 1275, 43 St. Rep. 1258 (1986).

Workers' Compensation — Employer Not Liable for Contribution or Indemnity: The provisions of 39-71-411, providing for nonliability of an insured employer in workers' compensation cases, can be asserted as a complete defense to a third-party action for indemnity or contribution. Raisler v. Burlington N. RR Co., 219 M 254, 717 P2d 535, 42 St. Rep. 1997 (1985).

Splitting of Profits, Advertising, and Merging of Resources and Talents as Indicia of Partnership — Lack of Intent Not Controlling: Father and son shared equipment as needed, stored seed potatoes together in son's warehouse, advertised under the name of "Wilbur Kimm and Son", and split profits in a joint account. Son's insurer sued father's insurer for contribution for claims paid that were filed by buyers against son for crop damages caused by seeds treated by son. District Court found no partnership existed, primarily based on father's and son's testimony that they did not intend for a partnership to exist. The Supreme Court reversed and ordered judgment granting plaintiff insurer's motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court held that splitting of profits, coupled with advertising under a joint name and the merging of resources and talents for the growing of the potatoes, preponderates against the District Court's finding of no partnership. Truck Ins. Exch. v. Indus. Indem. Co., 212 M 297, 688 P2d 1243, 41 St. Rep. 1835 (1984).

Contribution and Indemnity From Tortfeasor Not Joined: Osier was a passenger in Collins' car when it collided with a Consolidated Freightways tractor-trailer. Osier sued Consolidated in federal court. The federal court certified to the Montana Supreme Court the following question: "As a matter of substantive Montana law does a tort-feasor have a cause of action for contribution or indemnity against any joint tort-feasor not joined by the plaintiff as a party defendant?" The court stated that prior to 1977 there was no right of contribution among tortfeasors. The adoption in 1977 of 27-1-703 did not change the Montana rule with respect to the right of contribution among joint tortfeasors where comparative negligence is not an issue. Even in comparative negligence cases, the right of contribution granted by 27-1-703 applies only to defendants against whom judgments have been recovered by the plaintiff. The court declined to abolish this rule by judicial fiat. The Montana law with respect to indemnity is that when each tortfeasor is affirmatively negligent, neither is entitled to indemnity. Consol. Freightways Corp. of Delaware v. Osier, 185 M 439, 605 P2d 1076 (1979). (See 1981 amendment to 27-1-703.)

No Conflict Between Statutes — Subrogation: If an employer is not liable by way of indemnity or contribution to a third party, he may, even though himself negligent, recover from the third person through the injured employee under the subrogation rights created by law. There is no conflict between 27-1-703 and 39-71-414. Cordier v. Stetson-Ross, Inc., 184 M 502, 604 P2d 86 (1979).

No Third-Party Right to Indemnity or Contribution: A third party, sued by an injured employee, has no right to indemnity or contribution from a negligent employer if the employer and the employee are covered by the Workers' Compensation Act unless such a right were to arise out of some other legal transaction between the employer and third party. Cordier v. Stetson-Ross, Inc., 184 M 502, 604 P2d 86 (1979).

Comparative Negligence — Contribution Among Joint Tortfeasors: By a complaint filed before the effective date of the comparative negligence law, plaintiff sued the defendant airline company for injuries sustained on a city's airport runway, and the defendant airline company's complaint against the city for indemnity was dismissed. Because it was held in Dunham v. Southside Nat'l Bank of Missoula, 169 M 466, 548 P2d 1383 (1976), that the comparative negligence statute is not retroactive and because Consol. Freightways Corp. of Delaware v. Osier, 185 M 439, 605 P2d 1076 (1979), held contribution not applicable except in comparative negligence cases, there was no right of contribution between the airline and city. Rogers v. W. Airlines, 184 M 170, 602 P2d 171 (1979).

Jury Instruction to Distinguish Between Joint and Several Liability and Apportionment of Damages: If liability is joint and several, the plaintiff is entitled to only one recovery. In that event deduction of an amount already paid by a joint tortfeasor is proper. But if apportionment of damages applies, each defendant must pay his contribution to the whole and therefore a deduction is not allowed for what another tortfeasor has paid. The jury instruction in this case failed to distinguish between these situations. Azure v. Billings, 182 M 234, 596 P2d 460 (1979), followed in Whiting v. St., 248 M 207, 810 P2d 1177, 48 St. Rep. 396 (1991), Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248, 51 St. Rep. 623 (1994), and *Hulstine v. 1999 Amendment: Chapter 51 in (2) after "27-1-703" deleted "(6)". Amendment effective March 15, 1999.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 293, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, the Montana Supreme Court, in Plumb v. District Court, 927 P.2d 1011, 53 St. Rep. 1187 (1996), recently declared unconstitutional portions of Montana's comparative negligence statute because it failed to provide an opportunity for a nonparty to defend oneself, and it required the plaintiff to act in a dual capacity by requiring that the plaintiff represent nonparties; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Supreme Court also recognized in Plumb that parties who settle represent the single exception for fair apportionment of liability under third-party practice rules; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Supreme Court has recognized that the Legislature may alter tort causes of action to promote legitimate state interests; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature believes that the policy of the state is that claimants, defendants, and other potentially liable persons should be held responsible to the extent of individual fault; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature has retained joint and several liability, but modified it because of that policy; and

WHEREAS, the current system of modified joint and several liability must permit a consideration of the fault attributable to parties who settle or are released for the modified system to be operative; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature believes that a claimant who enters into a settlement or covenant not to sue does so because the claimant has made a considered judgment that the agreement is in the claimant's best interests; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature intends that the liability of persons who settle or are released and who may share in the responsibility for a tort cause of action be considered by the trier of fact and apportioned a percentage of damages according to their negligence; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature believes that the percent credit rule, rather than the dollar credit rule, more accurately reflects the basis for comparative negligence, which apportions liability according to the percentage of individual negligence.

THEREFORE, the Legislature finds it appropriate to pass legislation addressing the concerns raised by the Montana Supreme Court and to accomplish the Legislature's objectives of allocating liability on the basis of individual negligence, encouraging fair settlements that accurately reflect potential liability, and permitting the allocation of a percentage of liability to persons who settle or are released and are found to be partially or wholly responsible."

Applicability: Section 4, Ch. 293, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] [27-1-702, 27-1-703, and 27-1-704] applies to causes of action that arise on or after [the effective date of this act]." Effective April 18, 1997.

Nonseverability: Section 5, Ch. 293, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Case Notes

Failure to Provide Discovery Not Grounds for Offsetting Settlement Against Judgment: It would not be appropriate to refuse to offset against a judgment the amount of a settlement against joint tortfeasors on the basis of equity grounded in a default judgment against defendant for its willful failure to provide information sought to be discovered. The District Court properly refused the offset. Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 1499 (2000).

No Constitutional Right to Attorney Fees or to Reduction of Collateral Source or Settlement Offset by Plaintiff's Attorney Fees: The right to full legal redress contained in Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const., is limited to the recovery of those damages provided by the general tort law, and pursuant to the American Rule on attorney fees, attorney fees are not damages recoverable pursuant to the general tort law because it pertains to survival and wrongful death actions. Montana Supreme Court cases that include the costs of recovery in the concept of full compensation and that relate to equitable principles unique to the law of legal subrogation are inapplicable to the constitutional issue of whether full legal redress under the constitution requires payment of attorney fees. Montana's common law has followed the American Rule that attorney fees are not an element of damages unless expressly provided by statute or contract. Attorney fees are the subject of a contract between a party and the party's attorney. They are what the party chooses to do with part of the recovered damages, based on a prior agreement. Therefore, the right to full legal redress does not create a right to attorney fees, and the defendant's right to have collateral source and settlement payments offset against the judgment was not subject to a right of the plaintiff to have the offset amount reduced by the plaintiff's attorney fees. Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 1499 (2000).

Offsetting Judgment by Amount of Settlement or Collateral Source Payment Not Denial of Full Compensation for Loss: An offset against a judgment of an amount received through settlement or from a collateral source does not deny full compensation for a loss. It simply ensures a single recovery for a single injury. Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 1499 (2000).

Joint and Several Liability for Restitution Properly Imposed: Following conviction for three counts of burglary, the District Court found Workman jointly and severally liable for the full amount of restitution to the burglary victims and ordered Workman to pay restitution in the amount of $26,840.33. Workman was accompanied in the burglaries by four accomplices, and Workman argued that he should be held responsible only for his proportionate share as divided among all the defendants. That argument was rejected, and Workman appealed on grounds that restitution was improperly imposed. Workman relied on the 2001 version of 46-18-242, contending that the required documentation of his financial resources was inaccurate, and on the 2001 version of 46-18-244, arguing that the sentencing court failed to establish a payment schedule or set the amount of installment payments. The Supreme Court noted that both the required documentation and payment schedule provisions were deleted by the 2003 Legislature and are no longer required. Workman's argument that restitution should be apportioned among his accomplices also failed because the fate of the accomplices was immaterial to the court's authority to impose restitution. Under the 2003 versions of the restitution laws and given that Workman stipulated that he owed the full amount, the District Court properly held Workman jointly and severally liable for the pecuniary loss suffered by his victims. St. v. Workman, 2005 MT 22, 326 M 1, 107 P3d 462 (2005).

Degrees of Comparative Negligence in Automobile Accident — Summary Judgment on Comparative Negligence Improper: Issues of comparative negligence are particularly difficult to resolve as a matter of law. Normally, the issue of contributory negligence and the degree of comparative negligence, if any, is an issue for the trier of fact to resolve even if the opposing party is negligent as a matter of law. In this case, a question of material fact remained regarding the specific facts of an automobile accident, and the District Court erred in granting summary judgment to plaintiff after finding that defendant's negligence exceeded any negligence that could be found on plaintiff's part. The question of degrees of negligence was properly left to the jury. Contreras v. Fitzgerald, 2002 MT 208, 311 M 257, 54 P3d 983 (2002), distinguishing *Brohman v. Case Notes Premises Liability Negligence Claim Independent From Dram Shop Act 2-Year Statute of Limitation: After being involved in a bar fight, the patron filed both a dram shop negligence claim and a separate premises liability negligence claim. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the establishment, concluding that the premises liability negligence claim was time-barred by the 2-year period of limitations specified in 27-1-710(6). On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that the limited scope of the ruling on the 2-year Dram Shop Act statute of limitations had no bearing on the facial or underlying evidentiary sufficiency of the premises liability negligence claim. Babcock v. Casey's Management, LLC, 2021 MT 215, 405 Mont. 237, 494 P.3d 322.

No Evidence Bar Served Patron — Summary Judgment Dismissing Dram Shop Claim Upheld: After being involved in a bar fight, the plaintiff filed a dram shop claim against the bar. The District Court granted summary judgment to the bar because there was no evidence that the bar served alcohol to the other party involved in the fight. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, agreeing that there was no evidence the bar had served alcohol to the other party on the night of the fight. Harrington v. The Crystal Bar, Inc., 2013 MT 209, 371 Mont. 165, 306 P.3d 342.

Constitutionality of Notice Requirement of Dram Shop Law — Not Violative of Equal Protection — Not Considered Unlawful Special Legislation: A little over 1 year after being injured in an accident involving an intoxicated bar patron, plaintiffs brought an action against the bar to recover damages incurred as a result of the accident. The bar moved to dismiss the action under 27-1-710, which requires that a person who wishes to commence a dram shop action must notify the person who furnished alcohol by certified mail within 180 days from the date of sale or service. Plaintiffs admitted that they did not meet the notice requirement but argued that the notice provision was unenforceable because it was unconstitutional special legislation and violated plaintiffs' right to equal protection. The District Court dismissed the action as untimely and plaintiffs appealed the constitutional issues, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The notice requirement is rationally related to a legitimate government purpose, and while those who make a claim under the dram shop law must take an additional step before bringing suit, they are still in a situation similar to that of others who allege injury by the wrongful act or omission of another, so the notice requirement does not create an unreasonable classification in violation of equal protection. Additionally, the notice requirement does not constitute special legislation because it operates in the same manner upon all persons in like circumstances without conferring particular privileges or disabilities upon a class of persons arbitrarily selected from a larger group of persons, all of whom stand in the same relation to the privileges or disabilities. Rohlf v. Klemenhausen, LLC, 2009 MT 440, 354 M 133, 227 P3d 42 (2009). See also State ex rel. Fisher v. School District, 97 M 358, 34 P2d 522 (1934), Lowery v. Garfield County, 122 M 571, 208 P2d 478 (1949), and Linder v. Smith, 193 M 20, 629 P2d 1187, 38 St. Rep. 912 (1981).

Liability Under 1999 Dram Shop Law Not Considered Cause of Action Created by Statute — Three-Year Statute of Limitations Applicable: Filip was injured in 2000 as a passenger in an auto driven by a person who was allegedly served alcohol at a Billings restaurant, even though the restaurant allegedly knew that the driver was a minor and was intoxicated. Filip brought a dram shop action under 27-1-710 about 2 years and 11 months after the accident. The District Court concluded that because Filip's claim under 27-1-710 constituted a liability created by statute, the 2-year statute of limitations in 27-2-211 applied, so Filip's claim was untimely and the defendants' motion for dismissal was granted. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The liability created in 27-1-710 was not created by statute because prior to the statute's enactment in 1986, a common law cause of action existed for negligently serving alcohol to an intoxicated person, so 27-1-710 did not create a new private right unknown to the common law, and the restaurant was potentially liable even prior to the enactment of 27-1-710. Because Filip's cause of action was not created by statute, the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-204 applied. Thus, Filip's action was timely filed and the case was remanded for further proceedings. [Note that the 2003 Legislature established a 2-year statute of limitations on actions brought pursuant to 27-1-710.] Filip v. Jordan, 2008 MT 234, 344 M 402, 188 P3d 1039 (2008). See also Royal Ins. Co. v. Roadarmel, 2000 MT 259, 301 M 508, 11 P3d 105 (2000).

Liquor Liability Insurance Coverage Broader Than Statutory Language: A liquor liability policy that did not incorporate statutory liability language was construed to provide broader coverage for all liability, whether based on the statute or not. Troutt v. Colo. W. Ins. Co., 246 F3d 1150 (9th Cir. 2001).

Denial of General Liability Coverage Based on Liquor Liability Exclusion — Failure to Raise Alternative Negligence Theory — Summary Judgment Proper: Cusenbary was injured when a bar patron drove a car through the wall of Mortensen's tavern. Mortensen was covered by USF&G Co. under a general liability policy, but the insurance included a liquor liability exclusion. When Mortensen tendered the claim to USF&G Co. for defense, the company denied coverage and refused to defend based on the exclusion, so Cusenbary's claim was tried to a jury and Mortensen was found guilty of negligence (see Cusenbary v. Mortensen, 1999 MT 221, 296 M 25, 987 P2d 351 (1999)). Mortensen then assigned all rights to coverage under the general liability policy to Cusenbary. Cusenbary then sued USF&G Co., contending that the company had a duty to indemnify Mortensen for negligent behavior in management of the bar, separate from the negligent conduct of serving alcohol to an intoxicated patron, because the separate conduct was not excluded by the liquor liability exclusion. The District Court granted summary judgment for USF&G Co., holding that the separate conduct related directly to the improper service or sale of alcohol and that Mortensen failed to set forth evidence supporting an alternative negligence theory, so as a matter of law, Mortensen's judgment was excluded by the express language of the policy. The Supreme Court affirmed, citing Sheffield Ins. Co. v. Lighthouse Properties, Inc., 234 M 395, 763 P2d 669 (1988). All claims and arguments at trial were related to Mortensen's negligence in serving alcohol, and no assertion was ever made that the proposed evidence was relevant to any other theory of negligence or to any other theory. All of the claims arose from serving alcohol and were thus excluded from coverage. Cusenbary v. USF&G Co., 2001 MT 261, 307 M 238, 37 P3d 67 (2001).

Liability of Tavern Owner for Foreseeable Injury-Producing Conduct by Visibly Intoxicated Patron: Wells was served alcohol at the Town Tavern immediately prior to driving a car through the wall of the tavern, injuring another patron. The patron sued the tavern owner, Mortensen, under the dram shop law in this section, which provides tavern owner liability for accidents arising from an event involving a visibly intoxicated patron. In defense, Mortensen contended that the injuries to the patron resulted from an intervening, superseding, new, and independent cause that was not reasonably foreseeable, thereby severing the chain of causation from Mortensen's negligent act. Wells was in a wheelchair and appeared to be unable to operate the wheelchair himself. Causation requires a determination, ordinarily by the factfinder, that a defendant's conduct helped produce the injury and that the injury would not have occurred without it. In cases involving alleged intervening causes, foreseeability is properly considered with respect to causation. An intervening cause is one in which a force came into motion at the time of the defendant's negligent act and combined with the negligent act to cause the injury to the plaintiff and is also determined by foreseeability. The consequences, including criminal conduct, of serving alcohol to a visibly intoxicated person are reasonably foreseeable precisely because of the causal relationship between serving alcohol and drunken conduct. When a person consumes alcohol, subsequent driving resulting in an injury-producing accident is an intervening act, but it is an act that is reasonably foreseeable as a matter of law. Thus, the affirmative defense of an intervening, superseding cause did not apply. Cusenbary v. Mortensen, 1999 MT 221, 296 M 25, 987 P2d 351, 56 St. Rep. 864 (1999), following Nehring v. LaCounte, 219 M 462, 712 P2d 1329, 43 St. Rep. 93 (1986), and Jevning v. Skyline Bar, 223 M 422, 726 P2d 326, 43 St. Rep. 1845 (1986), and distinguishing USF&G v. Camp, 253 M 64, 831 P2d 586, 49 St. Rep. 372 (1992), King v. St., 259 M 393, 856 P2d 954, 50 St. Rep. 848 (1993), and Estate of Strever v. Cline, 278 M 165, 924 P2d 666, 53 St. Rep. 576 (1996). See also Palsgraf v. Long Island RR, 162 NE 99 (1928), and Deeds v. U.S., 306 F. Supp. 348 (D.C. Mont. 1969).

Responsibility to Assess Visible Intoxication Regardless of Condition of Patron: This section prohibits a tavern owner from furnishing alcohol to a visibly intoxicated person. This does not mean that the tavern owner must assess the medical condition of a patron in conjunction with the patron's level of intoxication. Rather, the tavern owner is simply responsible for assessing visible intoxication, regardless of the physical ability and condition of the patron. Cusenbary v. Mortensen, 1999 MT 221, 296 M 25, 987 P2d 351, 56 St. Rep. 864 (1999).

Liquor Liability Provision Unambiguous — No Separate Theory of Negligence: The plaintiff, injured by an automobile driver served liquor by the defendant tavern owner, sued the owner on negligence theory. The plaintiff argued that the tavern owner's liability based on negligence is distinguished from liability based on the sale or service of liquor. The court disagreed, holding that summary judgment was proper because the insurance policy provision excluding liquor liability coverage was clear and unambiguous and all claims against the tavern owner relate to the sale or service of liquor. Sheffield Ins. Co. v. Lighthouse Properties, Inc., 234 M 395, 763 P2d 669, 45 St. Rep. 1999 (1988). An amended complaint was later filed that attempted to set forth an additional theory of liability not based on the sale of alcohol. The theory was that an ordinary duty of due care was owed the bar patron based on his status as business invitee and that the bartender breached that duty by allowing patron to leave the bar in the company of an obviously intoxicated person. However, the amended complaint was still based on actions related to the sale of alcohol and was therefore barred by res judicata. The District Court did not err when it held that the insurance policy also excluded liability for acts alleged in the amended complaint. Sheffield Ins. Co. v. Lighthouse Properties, Inc., 252 M 321, 828 P2d 1369, 49 St. Rep. 274 (1992), followed in Cusenbary v. USF&G Co., 2001 MT 261, 307 M 238, 37 P3d 67 (2001).

Case Notes

Tort Claims Not Precluded by Parties Contracting on Same Matter: The parties entered into an agreement for the defendant to purchase the plaintiff's home. After the defendant reneged on the agreement, the plaintiff filed an action for fraud, deceit, and negligence. The District Court dismissed the claims based on its conclusion that the plaintiff's injuries resulted from the defendant's breach of contract and therefore she was precluded from bringing any tort claims against him. The plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court explained that tort claims are not prohibited simply because the parties have entered into a contract on the same matter. However, given that the plaintiff had offered only speculative statements regarding the fraud and deceit claims, the Supreme Court agreed with the District Court's grant of summary judgment on behalf of the defendant on those claims, but it remanded the matter to the District Court to allow the negligence claim to proceed. Dewey v. Stringer, 2014 MT 136, 375 Mont. 176, 325 P.3d 1236.

Deceit — Breach of Contract — Compensatory Damages Proper: Defendants appealed the jury's award of compensatory damages to the plaintiff for deceit. The Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that substantial evidence of damages existed because the defendants claimed that the plaintiff breached the contract after making statements to the plaintiff for a period of 3 years that implied that the plaintiff had complied with his contractual obligations. Boyne USA, Inc. v. Spanish Peaks Dev., LLC, 2013 MT 1, 368 Mont. 143, 292 P.3d 432.

Misrepresentation of Substituted Seed — Remand for Determination of Damages Beyond Subsequent Crop Loss and for Consideration of Actual Fraud: Plaintiff delivered a load of wheat seed to defendant's facility for cleaning and treating. Defendant inadvertently dumped the load into a waste bin, replaced the seed with a similar but different variety, and charged plaintiff for cleaning and treatment without informing plaintiff of the error. When the crop came up, plaintiff noticed that the seed was a different variety, sued defendant for negligent misrepresentation, and sought compensatory and punitive damages. The District Court held that defendant did not commit actual fraud, but misconstrued the differing definitions of actual fraud in Title 27 and Title 28 in determining that no punitive damages were allowed. The Supreme Court remanded for reconsideration of the punitive damage claim based on actual fraud as defined in 27-1-221. Additionally, the District Court failed to address plaintiff's claim for damages beyond the actual crop loss suffered because of the substituted seed, and that issue was also remanded for further consideration. However, the District Court did not err in refusing to award damages for plaintiff's lost crop insurance payments, in its findings regarding the per acre loss and value per bushel of lost production, by qualifying plaintiff's expert witness, or by awarding prejudgment interest. Hallenberg v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 2006 MT 191, 333 M 143, 141 P3d 1216 (2006).

No Actual Malice Shown in Replacement of Seed With Different Variety: Plaintiff delivered a load of wheat seed to defendant's facility for cleaning and treating. Defendant inadvertently dumped the load into a waste bin, replaced the seed with a similar but different variety, and charged plaintiff for cleaning and treatment without informing plaintiff of the error. When the crop came up, plaintiff noticed that the seed was a different variety, sued defendant for negligent misrepresentation, and sought compensatory and punitive damages. The District Court found no actual malice on defendant's part and declined to award punitive damages. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Substantial credible evidence showed that defendant's personnel assumed that plaintiff was planting a variety that was commonly used in the area and substituted that common variety, assuming that no injury would result in the misrepresentation that the seed plaintiff was going to plant was the same seed plaintiff delivered. Defendant neither had knowledge of facts nor intentionally disregarded facts that created a high probability of injury to plaintiff, so the definition of actual malice was not met and the District Court correctly declined to award punitive damages without a finding of actual malice. Hallenberg v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 2006 MT 191, 333 M 143, 141 P3d 1216 (2006).

Constructive Fraud for Failure to Disclose Risk of Erosion to Field Planted in Old River Channel: The sellers of farm land and an irrigation system failed to disclose to the buyers that the field at pivot three was an old river bed that had been filled but not riprapped and that the field was subject to increased risk of erosion. The buyers spent $99,575 to fix the impairment and sued for damages. The District Court found that the sellers were liable for constructive fraud for failure to disclose, and the sellers contested the District Court findings. The Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court was capable of finding that a risk of increased erosion existed without the benefit of expert testimony. Further, the court's conclusion, that filling the old river bed and creating a greatly increased risk of erosion was a serious impairment, was not clearly erroneous. Moreover, the court did not err in holding that the buyers had no way of knowing of the increased risk, even though a conversation with the the sellers' employee who performed the backfill work would have revealed the problem. The buyers were not required to speak with the sellers' employees before purchasing, particularly given the fact that when the field at pivot three was cleared and leveled, it looked like any other field. The sellers also contended that the buyers had merely to ask their own consultant, who would have informed them of the origin and obvious condition of the field. However, the buyers' consultant did not inspect the fields until after closing of the sale and thus could not have provided the buyers with any knowledge. H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000).

Agreed Coverage Minus Agreed Premiums as Damages for Insurance Fraud: An insurance agent fraudulently misrepresented that a $150,000 whole life policy converted from term life would only require 3 years of premium payments by the insured and after that would be self-sustained by the payment of premiums out of dividends and other earnings. When the insured discovered the facts, he failed to make the third payment, the policy was canceled, and at the time of the verdict in his favor he was uninsurable. The insured's damages were properly calculated at the agreed coverage minus the 3 years of premiums that he agreed to pay. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Amount by Which Fraudulent Loans Against Policy to Pay Premiums Decreased Its Coverage as Proper Damages: An insurance agent fraudulently misrepresented that after the insured paid premiums for 4 or 5 years, the policy would be self-sustained by the payment of premiums out of dividends and other earnings. Without the insured's knowledge, after the 4 or 5 years passed, the agent fraudulently had the premiums paid by loans against the policy. The insured's damages were properly calculated to be the amount by which the loans against the policy decreased the coverage amount. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Contributory Negligence Not to Be Used to Reduce Damages Caused by Insurance Fraud: By statute, contributory negligence can be used to reduce damages due from a defendant because of the defendant's "negligence". In an action by the insureds against an insurance agent and his company, the insureds' contributory negligence could not be used to reduce damages caused by defendants' "fraud". Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Cost of Paying for Same Coverage as Damages for Insurance Canceled After Insured Discovered Insurance Agent Fraud and Failed to Pay Further Premiums: An insurance agent fraudulently misrepresented that after the insured paid premiums for 3 years, the policy would be self-sustained by the payment of premiums out of dividends and other earnings. Without the insured's knowledge, after the 3 years passed, the agent fraudulently had the premiums paid by loans against the policy. When the insured discovered the fraud and refused to make further payments, the policy was canceled. The insured's damages were properly calculated to be the amount that it would cost her to purchase the same amount of coverage and pay the premiums until the policy was self-sustaining. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Cost of Similar Policy as Damages for Fraudulently Inducing Purchase of Policy Canceled When Fraud Was Discovered and Insured Failed to Make Further Payments: An insurance agent fraudulently misrepresented that after the insured paid premiums for 4 or 5 years, the policy would be self-sustained by the payment of premiums out of dividends. Without the insured's knowledge, after the time period passed, the agent fraudulently had the premiums paid by loans against the policy. The policy was canceled when the insured discovered the fraud and refused to make further premium payments. The insured's damages were properly calculated as the cost of paying for a similar policy. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Fraudulent Statement That Policy Would Be Self-Sustaining After Three Years — Damages as Cost of Future Premiums and of Repaying Loans Fraudulently Made Against Policy to Pay Past Premiums: An insurance agent fraudulently misrepresented that after the insured paid premiums for 3 years, the policy would be self-sustained by the payment of premiums out of dividends and other earnings. Without the insured's knowledge, after the 3 years passed, the agent fraudulently had the premiums paid by loans against the policy. The insured's damages were properly calculated as the cost of paying back the loans and of making future premium payments. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Instruction on Duty to Examine Available Fraudulent Form — Fraudulent Material Inserted After Availability Ceases: In an action by the insureds against an insurance agent and his company for the agent's fraud, the lower court properly refused defendants' instruction that one who fails to take the opportunity to examine a written form before executing it cannot claim that the form was fraudulent. The instruction was taken out of context. In addition, the agent's insertion of fraudulent material on insurance applications after plaintiffs saw them made the obligation in the instruction inapplicable to plaintiffs. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Insurance Agent's Ongoing Misrepresentation That Policies Would Be Self-Sustaining After Three to Five Years: Whole life insurance policies stating that premiums would be due for 20 years, 30 years, or a lifetime (depending on the policy) did not put the insureds on notice that the insurance agent's sales statements were fraudulent. The agent told the insureds that after only

3 to 5 years of premium payments (depending on the policy), the policy would be self-sustaining because premiums would be paid by dividends and other earnings. In fact, the policies stated that dividends could be used to help pay premiums. When the insurer sent the insureds premium payment notices after the 3 to 5 years ended, the insureds contacted the agent, who fraudulently stated that there was a mistake and that he would take care of it. When the insurer later sent the insureds notices stating that the insurer had advanced loans against the policies to pay the premiums, the agent again fraudulently told the insureds that there was a mistake and that he would take care of it. Eventually, each policy was either terminated or lost considerable value. For statute of limitations purposes, the insureds could not be held to have been put on notice (by the policy language) that they should have discovered, and did not discover, the fraud. In addition, the agent's statements at both points in time that there was a mistake that he would take care of tolled the statute of limitations. The insureds first actually learned of the fraud upon speaking directly to insurance company personnel, who told them that the agent had been fired, that there was no such thing as a policy that was self-sustaining after 3 to 5 years, that they should pay no premiums until their questions were resolved, and that there were problems other than the mistakes that the agent had claimed. The suit filed in 1991 was within the 2-year limitation period of 27-2-203. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Failure to Keep Promise to Pay Medical Bills if Injured Person Travels to Exam — No Fraud: The District Court properly granted the church summary judgment on issues of fraud and misrepresentation in an action arising after plaintiff fell and was injured on church property. Plaintiff claimed that the church agreed in writing to pay medical bills if plaintiff would travel to Salt Lake City for a medical exam. Plaintiff did so, and the church failed to pay. The promise to pay money in the future was not a representation, the first element of a prima facie case for fraud or misrepresentation. Davis v. Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, 258 M 286, 852 P2d 640, 50 St. Rep. 535 (1993).

Blank Security Agreement Signed by Borrower and Filled Out by Bank: Borrower signed a blank security agreement that bank then filled out and mailed to her. The record shows that she had the agreement in her possession in December 1985; thus, she had the means to discover the fraud that she alleged bank committed in setting the agreement's terms. Because she did not file a claim until December 1988, her claim was barred by the 2-year statute of limitations. Richland Nat'l Bank & Trust v. Swenson, 249 M 410, 816 P2d 1045, 48 St. Rep. 730 (1991).

No Fraud in Issuance of Paid-in-Full Receipts: Employer claimed fraud and deceit through the issuance by an independent contractor of "paid-in-full" receipts for work done while the employer and contractor were associated. Evidence by the independent contractor showed that he had done the work pro bono for persons who could not pay or had accepted insurance payments in satisfaction for services rendered. Therefore, giving of the paid-in-full receipts did not fulfill the elements of fraud. Antonick v. Jones, 236 M 279, 769 P2d 1240, 46 St. Rep. 359 (1989).

First-Party Insurance Bad Faith Claim — When Not Supported: Where plaintiff in making a first-party insurance bad faith claim failed to specify any violation of duty by defendant insurer and made no claimant contact with defendant, no request for defense, and no request for indemnity, the directed verdict for defendant was proper. Davis v. Sheriff, 234 M 126, 762 P2d 221, 45 St. Rep. 1783 (1988).

Release Applicable to Claims for Attorney Fees and Bad Faith in Settlement: Where the plaintiff retained counsel to force the defendant insurance company to settle an automobile liability claim and later signed a release of the company when it settled the claim, the District Court did not err in granting summary judgment to the insurance company on the issue of the company's liability for the plaintiff's attorney fees and bad faith in settlement of the claim. The plaintiff's obligation to pay the attorney fees arose prior to the signing of the release, and recovery is therefore precluded by the release. Moreover, while the plaintiff claims it was not his intent to release the company from his claim for bad faith, the release applies to all claims arising out of the occurrence and the plaintiff's intent, unknown to the defendant, therefore is not controlling. Richardson v. Safeco Ins. Co., 206 M 73, 669 P2d 1073, 40 St. Rep. 1515 (1983).

No Fraud Found in Sale of Real Property — Theory of Negligent Misrepresentation Abandoned — Findings and Conclusions Not Clearly Erroneous: Where the plaintiffs agreed to purchase a bar and restaurant from the defendant seller and later brought an action for damages against the county and the county sanitarian, claiming that the sanitarian misrepresented the capacity of the sewer system and conditions of a county license, the findings and conclusions of the District Court were supported by substantial evidence and were not clearly erroneous. The District Court found that the plaintiffs failed to prove their claim of fraud and that the theory of negligent misrepresentation had been abandoned by the plaintiffs. The record contained conflicting evidence but showed that there could have been a misunderstanding between the parties, and a misunderstanding will not support a claim for fraud in the inducement. The statements made by the defendant may have been negligent, but the District Court properly concluded that by failing to argue the theory of negligent misrepresentation, the plaintiffs evidenced an intention to abandon that theory. Lacey v. Herndon, 205 M 379, 668 P2d 251, 40 St. Rep. 1375 (1983).

Constructive and Actual Fraud in Execution of Contract for Deed — Failure to Disclose Violation of Law: Where the plaintiffs sued for damages caused by the defendants' fraud in the execution of a contract for deed for the sale of a shale and concrete block plant, alleging misrepresentations by the defendant company and its agents as to the plant's status of compliance with air and water pollution laws, the court did not err in finding the defendants guilty of constructive fraud. The record shows that the defendants were put on notice of the pollution problems by both the notice of violation of county and state regulations and by complaints and threat of a lawsuit from a neighboring landowner. Because the record is void of any evidence that these impairments of the plaintiffs' property were ever disclosed to the plaintiffs, there is substantial evidence to support the finding of constructive fraud. Actual fraud is always a question of fact, and there was ample evidence upon which the court could find that the factual requisites for actual fraud had been satisfied. Although the court did not make a specific finding that the plaintiff relied upon the false representations by the defendants, the Supreme Court will engage the doctrine of "implied findings" so long as those findings are not inconsistent with express findings and assume that the court found reliance upon the defendants' misrepresentations. Poulsen v. Treasure St. Indus., Inc., 192 M 69, 626 P2d 822, 38 St. Rep. 218 (1981), followed in H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000). See also Dewey v. Stringer, 2014 MT 136, 375 Mont. 176, 325 P.3d 1236.

Sale of Dwelling: In action against building contractor for fraud in sale of newly constructed dwelling, it was held, under facts presented, that plaintiffs had right to rely on representations made by vendor as they did and verdict in their favor was affirmed. Walker v. Hustad, 116 M 495, 154 P2d 483 (1944).

Burden of Proof: In action for deceit in which court instructed on deceit substantially in words of this section and advised jury that if any one of the therein enumerated conditions was established, its verdict should be for plaintiff and followed that instruction with one that plaintiff had burden to prove each of the material allegations of his complaint, the latter instruction was held not erroneous as indicating that the verdict must be in favor of defendant unless plaintiff had proven each and all of the alleged false statements, whereas proof of any one of them was sufficient and error was not committed in not pointing out what were the material facts at issue, since the jury, in view of the whole charge, could hardly have been misled by the general language in the latter instruction. Russell v. Sunburst Ref. Co., 83 M 452, 272 P 998 (1928).

Property Acquired by Deceit: Under this section acquisition of another's property by deceit is illegal, and all acts done in furtherance of a purpose to so acquire it become tainted with the illegality, although if performed without the unlawful purpose in view, they might of themselves be innocent. Biering v. Ringling, 74 M 176, 240 P 829 (1925).

Suppression of Facts: Deceit or fraud may be negative as well as affirmative; it may consist of suppression of that which it is one's duty to declare as well as in the declaration of that which is false. Bump v. Geddes, 70 M 425, 226 P 512 (1924).

Employment Contract: Oral agreement to employ owner of sheep business as manager after his sale thereof was superseded by written memorandum of sale making no mention of such employment, and thus owner could not maintain action for deceit. Kelly v. Ellis, 39 M 597, 104 P 873 (1909).

Summary Judgment for Bank That Disbursed Funds to Constituencies Absent Showing of Conversion, Despite Presence of Attorney's Lien on Funds: Plaintiff law firm represented a woman in divorce proceedings and filed a lien against the woman for attorney fees that she allegedly owed the firm. A divorce decree was issued that awarded the woman $400,000 from a bank trust account, but no fees were awarded to the firm, which subsequently filed a collection action against the woman, the account trustees, and the bank, asserting a breach of duty, conversion, malice, and actual fraud and seeking punitive damages. However, at no time did the firm obtain a judgment on the lien or a prejudgment attachment of the trust account. The District Court granted summary judgment for the account trustees and the bank, and the firm appealed regarding the conversion claim. The Supreme Court affirmed because the firm failed to establish conversion of its lien. Without a judgment fixing the debt or a writ executing a judgment upon the trust fund account, the firm could not establish its ownership of the funds or a right to possession of them, and the mere assertion of a lien did not suffice to defeat the bank's or the trustee's fiduciary duties, so summary judgment was proper. St. Peter & Warren, P.C. v. Purdom, 2006 MT 172, 333 M 9, 140 P3d 478 (2006), following King v. Zimmerman, 266 M 54, 878 P2d 895 (1994).

Conversion — Finding of Absolute Ownership Not Required: Under the law of conversion, it is not necessary that plaintiff have an absolute ownership of or title to the property in question, but rather the plaintiff must have an interest in the property entitling plaintiff to possession at the time of the alleged conversion. King v. Zimmerman, 266 M 54, 878 P2d 895, 51 St. Rep. 659 (1994).

Conversion — Leased Premises: Lessor sued for failure of lessee to vacate, and lessee counterclaimed that lessor converted the premises to his own use and interrupted her peaceful possession. Lessee could not get punitive damages under the conversion theory because conversion is a tort applicable to personal chattels and a leasehold interest is not a personal chattel. Nor could punitive damages be granted for interruption of peaceful possession, as it was not proven. In the absence of a showing of tortious conduct, it was error to grant lessee punitive damages in a simple contract action. Lemley v. Allen, 203 M 37, 659 P2d 262, 40 St. Rep. 279 (1983).

Operation and Effect:

Restitution should be granted when to do otherwise would give offense to equity and good conscience so, where plaintiffs attorneys had knowledge that there was some question as to whether the named defendant was the proper party defendant prior to entry of default judgment, which was later set aside, defendant was entitled to restitution of money seized under the default judgment. Waggoner v. Glacier Colony of Hutterites, 131 M 525, 312 P2d 117 (1957). See also Crail Creek Associates, LLC v. Olson, 2008 MT 209, 344 M 321, 187 P3d 667 (2008).

Where a contract has been made to sell real estate and personal property and possession has been given to the former and delivery made of the latter but the purchaser repudiates the contract and the vendor rescinds, the purchaser is bound, without demand, to restore to the vendor the personalty received and to compensate him for the use and occupation of the land. Hicks v. Rupp, 49 M 40, 140 P 97 (1914). See Hopkins v. Walker, 244 US 486, 61 L Ed 1270, 37 S Ct 711 (1917).

Applicability of Statute Affirmed: The Supreme Court affirmed a finding that the Good Samaritan law applied after finding that: (1) a physician offered care gratuitously and for no compensation; (2) an emergency existed; (3) no gross negligence or willful or wanton acts were committed; and (4) plaintiff conceded that the physician was in a protected and immune class. McCain v. Batson, 233 M 288, 760 P2d 725, 45 St. Rep. 1495 (1988).

Purpose — Standard of Review: The central reason for Good Samaritan legislation in Montana is the need to encourage physicians to render emergency medical care when they otherwise might not. Therefore, the standard of review is one of gross negligence and willful or wanton acts or omissions, rather than ordinary negligence/medical malpractice. McCain v. Batson, 233 M 288, 760 P2d 725, 45 St. Rep. 1495 (1988).

Contributory Negligence Not Defense for Dog Owners: Stroop approached Days' property and leaned over the fence to talk to Day, at which time Days' dog ran towards Stroop in a threatening manner. Day alleged that he warned Stroop about placing his hands over the fence. A little later, Stroop leaned over the fence again and was bitten by the dog. Days argued that Stroop's actions constituted contributory negligence. The Supreme Court held that so long as a plaintiff can show that the dog was not provoked and that the plaintiff was legally on the property, then this section creates strict liability on the part of the owner and contributory negligence on the plaintiff's part is not a defense. Stroop v. Day, 271 M 314, 896 P2d 439, 52 St. Rep. 461 (1995).

Provocation to Be Determined on Case-by-Case Basis: Stroop approached Days' property and leaned over the fence to talk to Day, at which time Days' dog ran towards Stroop in a threatening manner. A little later, Stroop leaned over the fence again and was bitten by the dog. The Supreme Court held that provocation of a dog had to be examined on a case-by-case basis and that in the present case, Stroop's actions did not constitute provocation since there was no testimony that his actions were threatening to the dog. Stroop v. Day, 271 M 314, 896 P2d 439, 52 St. Rep. 461 (1995).

Status as Invitee Not Changed by Warning: Stroop approached Days' property and leaned over the fence to talk to Day, at which time Days' dog ran towards Stroop in a threatening manner. Day alleged that he warned Stroop about placing his hands over the fence. A little later, Stroop leaned over the fence again and was bitten by the dog. The Supreme Court held that Day's admonishing Stroop to remove his hands did not revoke Stroop's status as an invitee. Stroop v. Day, 271 M 314, 896 P2d 439, 52 St. Rep. 461 (1995).

Saving Clause: Section 232, Ch. 410, L. 1991, was a saving clause.

1985 Amendment: In (1) substituted "A person who issues a check, draft, or an order for the payment of money is liable for damages in a civil action as provided in subsection (2) to the person to whom the check, draft, or order is issued if the check, draft, or order is:

(a) dishonored for lack of funds or credit or because the issuer has no account with the drawee; or

(b) issued in partial or complete fulfillment of a valid and legally binding obligation and the issuer stops payment with the intent to fraudulently defeat a possessory lien or otherwise defraud the payee of the check." for "A person who issues a check, draft, or an order for the payment of money which is dishonored for lack of funds or credit or because he has no account with the drawee is liable to the person to whom the check, draft, or order is issued for damages in a civil action as provided in subsection (2)".

Case Notes

Fair Debt Collection Practices Act — Claimant Not Required to Dispute Debt Within 30 Days — Debt Not Misrepresented: The plaintiff sued the defendants alleging violations of the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (FDCPA). The lawsuit concerned the defendants' attempt to collect a dental bill, which the plaintiff did not dispute with the defendants within 30 days. The District Court granted summary judgment for the defendants, holding that the plaintiff did not dispute her debt within 30 days and this barred her FDCPA claims. The Supreme Court disagreed with the District Court's reasoning that the FDCPA requires a claimant to dispute the debt within 30 days. However, the Supreme Court found that the District Court's grant of summary judgment was appropriate because the defendants did not misrepresent the debt and were entitled to charge fees in the collection of the debt. Serrania v. LPH, Inc., 2015 MT 113, 379 Mont. 17, 347 P.3d 1237.

Collection Agency — Collection of Bad Check Penalty Prohibited: The 2007 version of 31-1-704 exempted from the Montana Deferred Deposit Loan Act a collection agency that had entered into an agreement with a payday lender for the collection of claims owed or due. Because bad check penalties could never be owed or due to a payday lender pursuant to 31-1-722 (2007), the collection agency lost its exempt status when it pursued bad check penalties. Therefore, the District Court erred in allowing the collection agency to assess bad check penalties against the defendant's payday loan checks. The case was reversed and remanded to the District Court to determine whether the collection agency intentionally violated the Act under 31-1-722 (2007). Credit Serv. Co., Inc. v. Crasco, 2011 MT 211, 361 Mont. 487, 264 P.3d 1061.

Acceptance of Partial Payment After Demanding Full Payment — Waiver of Right to Statutory Damages — Summary Judgment Warranted for Violation of Fair Debt Collection Practices Act: Plaintiff collection agency sought to collect $148.96 for eight of defendant's bad checks, plus a $30 service charge for each check, for a total of $388.96. Defendant sent a partial payment, which plaintiff accepted, but missed two promised payments, so plaintiff filed suit for the balance due, plus statutory damages of $100 for each of the eight checks. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court conclusion that the right of a payee on a dishonored check to pursue statutory damages is a right created solely for the payee's benefit and is subject to waiver under 1-3-204 and that by accepting a partial payment after demanding full payment, plaintiff waived the right to statutory damages under this section. In order to reinstate the right to statutory damages, plaintiff was required to make further demand for full payment and wait the requisite 10 days before filing suit. The District Court also held that by seeking statutory damages without giving the requisite demand, plaintiff had attempted to collect an amount that was not permitted by law, in violation of 15 U.S.C. 1692f(1) of the federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act. Plaintiff contended that any mistake was a bona fide error, relieving plaintiff of liability under 15 U.S.C. 1692k(c). The Supreme Court again affirmed, accepting the majority view of Circuit Courts that the bona fide error defense is available only for clerical and factual errors and that plaintiff's mistake of law did not make its action any less intentional and was insufficient to rise to the level of a bona fide error. Summary judgment for defendant was proper. Collection Bureau Serv., Inc. v. Morrow, 2004 MT 84, 320 M 478, 87 P3d 1024 (2004). See also Baker v. G.C. Serv. Corp., 677 F2d 775 (9th Cir. 1982).

1997 Amendment: Chapter 429 at beginning of (5) substituted "Contributory fault is a defense" for "Except as provided in this subsection, contributory negligence is not a defense"; at end of (6) substituted "fault" for "negligence" and inserted "and 27-1-705"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective on occurrence of contingency.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 429, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, efforts of the Legislature to amend the comparative negligence statute, which is premised on a modified joint and several liability scheme, have repeatedly been struck down by the Montana Supreme Court; and

WHEREAS, the Montana Supreme Court rulings prohibiting the consideration of fault attributable to nonparties impair the effectiveness of the current modified joint and several liability system in Montana; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature intends that the policy of the state should be a system of comparative fault in which persons are held responsible only to the extent to which they cause or contribute to the harm; and

WHEREAS, the current system of joint and several liability, which apportions all liability only among parties to the action, fails to apportion liability among all tortfeasors according to their equitable share of fault; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature recognizes that public policy favors fair settlements that accurately reflect the liability of settled or released parties; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature is concerned with the present inequitable results of solvent defendants having to pay for the liability of insolvent, immune, or settled parties; and

WHEREAS, the present system of joint and several liability for all tort actions does not reflect the state's policy of liability in proportion to fault; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature recognizes that joint and several liability should be retained for certain situations; and

WHEREAS, at least ten other states have abrogated the doctrine of joint and several liability, except for specific situations; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature has the power to alter tort causes of action to promote legitimate state interests.

THEREFORE, the Legislature declares that the doctrine of joint and several liability is abolished, except for specific causes of action, and is replaced with a comparative fault system utilizing the principles of several liability."

Severability: Section 9, Ch. 429, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Instruction on Affirmative Defense of Assumption of Risk — Blasting Rock Abnormally Dangerous Activity — Strict Liability: A contractor excavating a road hired a subcontractor to blast a portion of the roadway through rock. A set of explosions exposed a rock overhang. The next day, the contractor's employee, who was aware of the overhang and its potential to collapse, excavated under it for 3 hours. Shortly after an employee for the subcontractor told the excavating employee to stop working underneath the overhang, it collapsed and destroyed the contractor's excavating equipment. The contractor sued the subcontractor for the cost to replace the equipment. At trial, the District Court concluded that blasting is inherently an abnormally dangerous activity and is subject to strict liability. Because the destruction of the equipment occurred the day after the overhang was exposed, and after the excavator's employee had worked underneath the overhang for 3 hours, the District Court concluded that a jury could possibly find that the excavator was contributorily negligent. On that basis, the District Court instructed the jury on the affirmative defense of assumption of risk. The jury found the subcontractor was 51% liable and the contractor was 49% liable and awarded the contractor $50,000 in damages. The contractor appealed, claiming that the District Court erred in instructing the jury on assumption of risk. The Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that because the contractor and the subcontractor had entered into a joint enterprise regarding the blasting, the contractor and its employees had assumed the risk of harm under Restatement (Second) of Torts 523. Patterson Enterprises, Inc. v. Johnson, 2012 MT 43, 364 Mont. 197, 272 P.3d 93.

Admissibility of Design Defects in Similar Products in Strict Product Liability Case to Show State of Mind of Manufacturer: Plaintiffs sued the manufacturer of a child car seat for strict product liability after their 4-month-old child suffered fatal brain injuries in a vehicle rollover. Plaintiffs contended that the seat contained a design defect that caused the child's death. At trial, the District Court allowed evidence of test failures and a recall conducted on a similar previously manufactured seat. Defendant asserted that admitting the evidence essentially put a different seat on trial to defendant's prejudice. The Supreme Court disagreed. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the seats were substantially similar with respect to the design defect and that defendant's conduct surrounding the testing and recall of the earlier model constituted relevant evidence regarding defendant's state of mind with respect to sale of the later model, which represented a key element in determining whether defendant acted with actual fraud or malice. Malcolm v. Evenflo Co., Inc., 2009 MT 285, 352 M 325, 217 P3d 514 (2009). See also Preston v. District Court, 282 M 200, 936 P2d 814 (1997), and Sunburst School District No. 2 v. Texaco, Inc., 2007 MT 183, 338 M 259, 165 P3d 1079 (2007).

Rejection of Injecting Negligence Principles Into Strict Liability Case — Evidence Related to Negligence Properly Excluded: Plaintiffs sued the manufacturer of a child car seat for strict product liability after their 4-month-old child suffered fatal brain injuries in a vehicle rollover. Plaintiff contended that the seat contained a design defect that caused the child's death. At trial, the District Court excluded any evidence that the seat complied with federal testing standards and had passed 341 tests performed under those standards. The Supreme Court affirmed. The focus in design defect cases shines on the condition of the product rather than on the conduct or knowledge of the manufacturer, so it was proper to reject defendant's efforts to inject negligence principles into the strict liability setting, and the District Court correctly relied on Montana precedent emphasizing the fundamental difference between strict liability and negligence law. The evidentiary rulings properly focused the jury's compensatory damages analysis on the condition of the car seat rather than on defendant's conduct in testing the seat. Malcolm v. Evenflo Co., Inc., 2009 MT 285, 352 M 325, 217 P3d 514 (2009), following Sternhagen v. Dow Co., 282 M 168, 935 P2d 1139 (1997).

Failure of Trial Court to Examine All Materials in Record in Product Liability Case — Summary Judgment Improper: Hopkins was injured when a heavy piece of metal was accidentally released from the chuck of an industrial lathe and fell on Hopkins' arm. Hopkins sued the chuck manufacturer on a claim of strict product liability. The District Court granted summary judgment to defendant and dismissed the case. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the District Court's specific finding that Hopkins' experts had no opinion on whether the chuck was dangerous or whether defendant failed to give adequate warnings was erroneous. In fact, the experts' report and excerpts from depositions of both experts were sufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the chuck was dangerous. The District Court failed to consider all materials in the record prior to granting summary judgment. Because a genuine issue of material fact existed, summary judgment was improper, and the case was reversed and remanded for further proceedings. Hopkins v. Superior Metal Workings Systems, LLC, 2009 MT 48, 349 M 292, 203 P3d 803 (2009).

Negligence and Strict Liability Action for Damages by Pesticide Not Preempted by FIFRA — McAlpine Overruled: Plaintiffs brought an action for damages allegedly suffered when a pesticide was applied at the building where they worked. The District Court granted summary judgment for the pesticide manufacturer on the basis that the claims were preempted by the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (FIFRA) and McAlpine v. Rhone-Poulenc Ag Co., 285 M 224, 947 P2d 474 (1997), because all of the theories of liability were based on inclusions in or omissions from the pesticide labels. In particular, 7 U.S.C. 136v(b) provides that a state may not impose or continue in effect any requirement for labeling or packaging in addition to or different from those required under the federal law. On appeal, the Supreme Court overruled McAlpine and instead applied Medtronic, Inc. v. Lohr, 518 US 470 (1996), concluding that Congress, through FIFRA, intended only to preempt states from imposing positive law requirements in the form of regulations and laws and did not intend to extinguish damage remedies under state common law. The word "requirements" in section 136v(b) means enactments of positive law by legislative or administrative bodies, not state law damage actions. The case was reversed and remanded for further proceedings. Sleath v. West Mont Home Health Serv., Inc., 2000 MT 381, 304 M 1, 16 P3d 1042, 57 St. Rep. 1629 (2000).

Forum State — Contacts Considered in Determining State With More Specific Relationship in Personal Injury or Wrongful Death Product Liability Action: Montana residents were killed in Kansas in a car made in Michigan and sold in North Carolina. Sections 146 and 175 of Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws (1971) that deal with personal injury and wrongful death actions provide that the rights and liabilities of the parties are to be determined in accordance with the law of the state where the injury occurred unless, with respect to a particular issue, another state has a more specific relationship. In order to determine whether a state other than the place of injury has a more significant relationship, the following contacts are taken into account, pursuant to Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws 145(2) (1971), applying the principles of Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws 6 (1971): (1) needs of the interstate and international system;

(2) policies of the interested states, including place of injury, place of conduct, and residence of the parties; (3) justified expectations; (4) basic policies underlying the particular field of law; and (5) the certainty, predictability, and uniformity of result as well as the ease in the determination and application of the law to be applied. However, the principles need not be given equal weight. In this case, the relevant policies of the interested states were of primary importance. The focus of Montana law is not only on the regulation of products sold in Montana, but also on providing the maximum protection and compensation to Montana residents, considering mainly the condition of the product and not the conduct of the manufacturer. Kansas, where the injury occurred, did not maintain a similar interest in the application of its product liability laws because the injured were Montana citizens. (See Sternhagen v. Dow Co., 282 M 168, 935 P2d 1139, 54 St. Rep. 299 (1997).) Michigan also lacked such an interest because Michigan's only contact with the dispute was the location of the manufacturer. (See Farrell v. Ford Motor Co., 501 NW 2d 567 (Mich. App. 1993). Under North Carolina's vested rights approach to conflict of laws, that state would apply the law of the jurisdiction where the injury occurred, whatever that law might be. After holding that the relevant residence of the plaintiff was the residence at the time of injury, the Supreme Court found that Montana, as the place of domicile, had a significant relationship to the issues and that because the purpose behind Montana product liability law was implicated by the facts, Montana law should apply. Phillips v. Gen. Motors Corp., 2000 MT 55, 298 M 438, 995 P2d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 259 (2000). See also Tillett v. Lippert, 275 M 1, 909 P2d 1158, 53 St. Rep. 1 (1996).

Lex Loci Delicti Commissi Abandoned — "Most Significant Relationship" Approach Adopted as Choice of Law to Determine Applicable Substantive Law in Issues of Tort: In a personal injury/product liability/wrongful death action in which there is a potential conflict of laws, the traditional choice of law rule, known as lex loci delicti commissi (law of the place where the wrong was committed), which provides that the infliction of injury is actionable under the law of the state in which it was received, was abandoned in favor of the approach in Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws 145(1) (1971), which seeks to apply the law of the state with the most significant relationship to the occurrence and the parties. This choice of law was adopted previously in contract disputes in Casarotto v. Lombardi, 268 M 369, 886 P2d 931, 51 St. Rep. 1350 (1994), and the Supreme Court found no reason not to apply it to tort issues in favor of the traditional rule in the present case. Phillips v. Gen. Motors Corp., 2000 MT 55, 298 M 438, 995 P2d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 259 (2000). See also Buckles v. BH Flowtest, Inc., 2020 MT 291, 402 Mont. 145, 476 P.3d 422.

Purpose of Choice of Law Rule — Public Policy Subsumed: Addressing the question of whether, in a personal injury and wrongful death action, Montana recognized a public policy exception that would require application of Montana law even when Montana's choice of law rules dictate application of the laws of another state, the Supreme Court noted that for choice of law purposes, the public policy of a state is simply the rules, as expressed in its legislative enactments and judicial decisions, that it uses to decide controversies. The purpose of choice of law rules is to resolve conflicts between competing policies. In this case, considerations of public policy were accounted for, being expressly subsumed within the "most significant relationship" approach in Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws 6(2)(b) and (2)(c) (1971), which mandate consideration of the relevant policies of all the interested states, so a public policy exception to the most significant relationship test would have been redundant. Phillips v. Gen. Motors Corp., 2000 MT 55, 298 M 438, 995 P2d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 259 (2000). See also Casarotto v. Lombardi, 268 M 369, 886 P2d 931, 51 St. Rep. 1350 (1994), and Rothwell v. Allstate Ins. Co., 1999 MT 50, 293 M 393, 976 P2d 512, 56 St. Rep. 203 (1999).

Settlement by One Tortfeasor as Precluding Claims for Contribution and Indemnity Against Settling Tortfeasor Regardless of Underlying Tort Claim: In accordance with common-law principles and the public policy favoring settlements, a settlement by one tortfeasor precludes claims for both contribution and indemnity against the settling tortfeasor, regardless of the nature of the underlying tort claim. This is so even though 27-1-703 states that the trier of fact is to determine the degree of negligence among each of the joint tortfeasors. Actual recovery is allowed only against those tortfeasors who have not settled with the claimant. Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1999 MT 186, 295 M 318, 983 P2d 943, 56 St. Rep. 721 (1999), following State ex rel. Deere & Co. v. District Court, 224 M 384, 730 P2d 396, 43 St. Rep. 2270 (1986).

Sufficient Evidence of No Manufacturing Defect in Tractor Kingpin: Having been properly instructed in product liability law, the jury found that a kingpin, which is the device by which a trailer is attached to a tractor, did not have a manufacturing or design defect at the time of sale that rendered it a defectively designed product, for the manufacture of which liability would ascribe. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, finding the following substantial evidence in support of the jury's decision: (1) two experts testified that any component subject to cyclic loading will develop fatigue cracking in service; (2) an expert testified that the kingpin was adequately radiused with a stress relief groove that allowed the kingpin to properly bottom on the attachment plate, opining that if the kingpin were designed with a larger radius, the stress relief groove would be eliminated and the kingpin would not properly bottom on the attachment plate; and (3) gouges in the kingpin indicated that it may have been abused or misused during its lifetime. The jury's findings were not inherently impossible to believe, so judgment was affirmed. Baldauf v. Arrow Tank & Eng'r Co., Inc., 1999 MT 81, 294 M 107, 979 P2d 166, 56 St. Rep. 337 (1999).

Products Liability Case Elements — Failure to Comply With Case Management Order — Reliance Upon Material Safety Data Sheets Unjustified — Summary Judgment Held Proper:

In this companion case to Schelske, id., involving identical case management orders and similar affidavits and reports from the same doctors, the District Court reviewed the Schelske affidavits and concluded that the affidavits in this case did not go further than the deficient affidavits in Schelske; therefore, the court struck one of the doctors' affidavits in its entirety, which in turn became the basis for summary judgment as to all products and all manufacturers. On appeal, the Supreme Court distinguished Schelske and recognized that, based on the information provided, some of the products in question could properly be considered for dismissal. However, it was error to strike the entire affidavit because plaintiff provided sufficient information in pretrial proceedings to allow the case to move forward and to enable the cosmetic manufacturers to proceed with discovery by further deposition of the experts who submitted affidavits, which could have served to eliminate those products for which insufficient information was provided. Although plaintiff may not have completely complied with the case management order as to every product listed, the four requirements of the case management order were satisfied by the information as to many of the products, so summary judgment was improper. Meyer v. Creative Nail Design, Inc., 1999 MT 74, 292 M 46, 975 P2d 1264, 56 St. Rep. 306 (1999).

Mischelle, a plaintiff in a products liability lawsuit, was required by the terms of a case management order (CMO) entered by the District Court to provide a list of products that she had come in contact with, the circumstances of the alleged exposures, an identification of each specific chemical that caused harm, and a physician's opinion of the causal connection between the exposures and the injuries. In response to the CMO, her attorney filed affidavits by several physicians and material safety data sheets (MSDS). The Supreme Court held that the issuance of the CMO was totally within the discretion of the District Court. The District Court dismissed the action on the motions of defendants based upon the plaintiff's affidavits. The case was properly dismissed because the affidavits failed to establish the elements of a products liability case, as required by the CMO. The Supreme Court noted that in violation of the CMO, the affidavits listed only generic products and not toxic substances within those products, failed to note the specific times Mischelle came in contact with the products, and failed to provide a medical opinion that specific chemicals actually caused Mischelle's illnesses. The medical affidavits stated only that the chemicals listed on the MSDS were "associated with" certain diseases. The Supreme Court also held that Mischelle was not entitled to rely solely upon the MSDS to prove the elements of her case. The MSDS did not demonstrate that the products were defective and did not demonstrate a medical basis for the chemicals having caused Mischelle's diseases. Additionally, the Supreme Court held that although a plaintiff does not have to apportion damage among several defendants, Mischelle must still show that the defendants caused her diseases, which she failed to prove. Schelske v. Creative Nail Design, Inc., 280 M 476, 933 P2d 799, 54 St. Rep. 21 (1997).

Failure of Stucco Product — No Agency Relationship Between Contractor-Applicator and Manufacturer — No Negligence or Strict Liability Found — Leave to Amend Complaint Denied: Sunset Point Partnership (Sunset), a condominium developer, sued Wolstein, d/b/a Stuc-O-Flex Systems; Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc.; and Melton and Fischer, d/b/a Melton Fischer Construction (Melton/Fischer). Sunset's complaint alleged breach of contract, breach of warranty, indemnity, negligence, and strict liability in tort because a stucco-like product that Wolstein, as a subcontractor with Melton/Fischer, applied to the exterior of condominium buildings developed problems. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc., on each of the five counts in Sunset's complaint, holding that there was no evidence of negligence or breach of contract or warranty by Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc., and no evidence of agency between Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc., and Melton/Fischer. Sunset appealed. Citing previous decisions by it to the effect that in order for there to be ostensible agency the principal and not the agent must have taken steps to lead a third party to the belief that an agency relationship existed, the Supreme Court held that there was no evidence of actual or ostensible agency between Melton/Fischer and Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc., As to Sunset's claim of negligence, the Supreme Court answered Sunset's argument that Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc., was negligent in failing to provide adequate training, supervision, and instruction to Wolstein by pointing out that Sunset's complaint only alleged negligence against the defendants in the "manner in which they applied" Stuc-O-Flex and that there was no record evidence indicating a duty on the part of Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc., to train and supervise Wolstein. Concerning Sunset's claim for strict liability, the Supreme Court noted that Sunset had only alleged defective application of Stuc-O-Flex and had not alleged a defective product. Moreover, the Supreme Court pointed out that Sunset's own expert testified that: (1) there was nothing inherently defective about Stuc-O-Flex; (2) Stuc-O-Flex International, Inc., did not sell a "system" consisting of the material on which the product was applied and the product, but only sold the product itself; and (3) therefore only that product was guaranteed. In its review of the District Court's denial of Sunset's motion to amend its complaint to add the seller of the product as a defendant, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's decision, pointing out that the litigation was 2 years old by the time that Sunset made its untimely motion to amend. Sunset Point Partnership v. Stuc-O-Flex Int'l, Inc., 1998 MT 42, 287 M 388, 954 P2d 1156, 55 St. Rep. 141 (1998).

Testimony Regarding Presence of Defect Even Though Failed Part Missing — Request to Dismiss Properly Denied: In their brief in support of summary judgment, defendants requested dismissal because the failed section of an allegedly defective product was missing as a result of plaintiffs' failure to preserve the evidence, rendering defendants unable to examine and evaluate the failed section and prejudicing their ability to present a defense. However, both sides offered testimony through experts' affidavits on the presence of a defect and when it occurred, even though the failed part was missing. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to dismiss because of the missing evidence. Wood v. Old Trapper Taxi, 286 M 18, 952 P2d 1375, 54 St. Rep. 1263 (1997), following Brandenburger v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc., 162 M 506, 513 P2d 268 (1973).

Weak Possibility of Manufacturing Defect and Product Liability — Summary Judgment Improper: The District Court granted defendants' request for summary judgment on a manufacturing defect claim when the key piece of evidence was unavailable and the expert testimony was conflicting on whether or when a defect existed, concluding that plaintiffs' evidence suggested only a weak possibility that a manufacturing defect was present when the product was shipped from the manufacturer 30 years earlier. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court, considering the evidence in a light most favorable to plaintiffs, concluded that a jury could reasonably find that a defect existed before the product left the manufacturer and that as long as a material issue of fact was in dispute, summary judgment was improper. Wood v. Old Trapper Taxi, 286 M 18, 952 P2d 1375, 54 St. Rep. 1263 (1997).

Damage to Crops by Herbicide — Extent of Preemption by FIFRA — Claims for Breach of Express and Implied Warranty Not Preempted — Negligence and Strict Liability Preempted — Remedy for Prevention of Discovery by Summary Judgment: McAlpine applied Weedone LV6, a herbicide manufactured by Rhone-Poulenc and distributed by Ben Taylor, to crops of barley and spring wheat. After several weeks of cool morning temperatures, McAlpine noticed damage to his crops, which experts from Montana State University (now Montana State University-Bozeman) and the Montana Department of Agriculture said was caused by cool temperatures after application of the herbicide. The McAlpines brought a civil action against Rhone-Poulenc, claiming damages from negligence, breach of express and implied warranty, and strict liability. The District Court granted summary judgment for the defendants on the basis that the plaintiffs' claims were based on deficiencies in the label on Weedone LV6 and that those claims were preempted by the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act (FIFRA). Citing Wis. Pub. Intervenor v. Mortier, 501 US 597 (1991), and Cipollone v. Liggett Group, Inc., 505 US 504 (1992), the Supreme Court interpreted the FIFRA preemption statement, 7 U.S.C. 136v(b), to preempt only claims based upon negligence in labeling and not to preempt the appellants' claims based upon either express or implied warranty or strict liability. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that the appellants must be given the opportunity to prove that Rhone-Poulenc and Ben Taylor breached their warranty by designing, manufacturing, and marketing a product that was inherently defective and that the same defendants are strictly liable for designing, manufacturing, and marketing an unreasonably dangerous product. In response to Rhone-Poulenc's argument that the McAlpines failed to offer any evidence to defeat summary judgment, the Supreme Court pointed out that because the District Court granted summary judgment, the McAlpines were prevented from conducting complete discovery and that until discovery was completed, it was premature for the Supreme Court to conclude that the McAlpines' evidence was insufficient.

McAlpine v. Rhone-Poulenc Ag Co., 285 M 224, 947 P2d 474, 54 St. Rep. 1123 (1997), overruled in Sleath v. West Mont Home Health Serv., Inc., 2000 MT 381, 304 M 1, 16 P3d 1042, 57 St. Rep. 1629 (2000), holding that state common-law negligence and strict liability claims based on or implicating pesticide labels are not preempted by FIFRA.

Following the 1997 remand, the McAlpines settled with Ben Taylor, Inc., and proceeded to trial against Rhone-Poulenc on a theory of strict products liability, claiming that Weedone LV6 was a defective product because its propensity to damage or destroy crops in conjunction with cold weather was a danger outside the expectations of the ordinary consumer. Rhone-Poulenc acknowledged that the crop damage was caused by the phenoxy herbicide, but argued that the damage was not unreasonably dangerous and that liability exists only when a product is sufficiently dangerous. The trial court instructed the jury that it must find that the herbicide was in a “defective condition unreasonably dangerous”, rather than merely in a defective condition, and the jury returned a verdict for Rhone-Poulenc. The McAlpines appealed. The Supreme Court previously held in McJunkin v. Kaufman, 229 M 432, 748 P2d 910 (1987), that a product is defective if it is unreasonably dangerous, but a plaintiff is not required to show that a product is defective and also that it is unreasonably dangerous, because establishing that a product is unreasonably dangerous is merely a means of proving that it is defective. Thus, the “defective condition unreasonably dangerous” language creates a vague and imprecise dual test and should not have been submitted to the jury because it was not plain, clear, and concise. The jury should have been required to find merely that the product was in a defective condition, so the case was again remanded. Further, the decision in Sleath, id., also applied on remand, so evidence of the product label was admissible in further proceedings. McAlpine v. Rhone-Poulenc Ag Co., 2000 MT 383, 304 M 31, 16 P3d 1054, 57 St. Rep. 1644 (2000).

Absence of Evidence of Defective Vehicle Window Design — Failure to Warn Not Defect — Jury Verdict Affirmed: As Wise drove a Ford Escort through a car wash, one of the side windows imploded when water was sprayed on it, injuring Wise, who sued Ford Motor Company for damages. The District Court properly applied the standards of product tort liability, including Ford’s liability for failure to warn of a danger in its product as a separate theory of product liability. Alternate causes of the breakage were not necessarily eliminated, and the jury could have found that Wise did not meet his burden of proof by way of circumstantial evidence. The jury found in favor of Ford. Evidence supported the verdict that the vehicle was not defectively designed or defective for Ford’s failure to warn that the side windows could break. Because the jury had substantial evidence upon which to base its decision that the vehicle did not have an unreasonably dangerous defective condition, judgment was affirmed. Wise v. Ford Motor Co., 284 M 336, 943 P2d 1310, 54 St. Rep. 909 (1997).

Limitation of Discovery Regarding Similar Product Models and Prior Injuries Improper: Preston alleged defective design of an N12 model pneumatic roofing nailer. The District Court limited discovery to information about the N12 nailer only and to information on the N12 from the time of manufacture to the date of Preston’s injury. The Supreme Court held that the discovery limitations were arbitrary and improper. Evidence of prior injuries by similar, although not identical, products is relevant. Although evidence subsequent to the date of injury is not relevant to the alternative design issue, it is relevant to the unreasonably dangerous design issue. The fact that the same design continues to cause injuries is relevant to establishing the dangerousness of the product. Allowing the discovery restrictions to stand would have not only unfairly disadvantaged Preston but would have also defeated the purpose of the rules of procedure by requiring Preston to endure the time and expense of trial and an appeal before obtaining discoverable evidence essential to the case. That portion of the District Court’s order restricting discovery was vacated, and the case was remanded. Preston v. District Court, 282 M 200, 936 P2d 814, 54 St. Rep. 312 (1997), followed in Malcolm v. Evenflo Co., Inc., 2009 MT 285, 352 M 325, 217 P3d 514 (2009), regarding admissibility of evidence of similar incidents in product liability cases involving similar products.

Adoption of Imputation of Knowledge Doctrine — Rejection of State-of-the-Art Defense: The Supreme Court has consistently adhered to the core public policy principles underlying strict products liability. The principles were clarified and adopted in the present case as the imputation of knowledge doctrine. Under that doctrine, knowledge of a product’s undiscovered or undiscoverable dangers is imputed to the manufacturer, basing the focus of strict liability on the product rather than on the manufacturer’s conduct. The court specifically rejected admissibility of the state-of-the-art defense, which is based on whether the manufacturer knew or, through the exercise of reasonable human foresight, should have known the dangers inherent in the product. The defense raises the issues of reasonableness and foreseeability to determine a manufacturer's liability. To recognize the state-of-the-art defense would interject negligence principles into strict products liability law, severing that law from the well-established core principle of maximum protection for consumers, with the focus on the condition of the product. Rejection of the state-of-the-art defense does not change the requirements of plaintiff's prima facie case. Sternhagen v. Dow Co., 282 M 168, 935 P2d 1139, 54 St. Rep. 299 (1997), following Brandenburger v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc., 162 M 506, 513 P2d 268 (1973), and Brown v. N. Am. Mfg. Co., 176 M 98, 576 P2d 711 (1978). See also Malcolm v. Evenflo Co., Inc., 2009 MT 285, 352 M 325, 217 P3d 514 (2009).

Assumption of Risk — Error to Submit Defense to Jury: When use of a crane by sideloading is reasonably foreseeable to a manufacturer, it cannot be considered an unreasonable use. Decedent who was electrocuted when a crane cable touched a power line did not unreasonably use the crane unless he knew in advance that the cable would contact the power line. Because decedent did not know that, he could not have assumed the risk for his own death. Therefore, it was error for the District Court to submit the affirmative defense of assumption of risk to the jury. Lutz v. Nat'l Crane Corp., 267 M 368, 884 P2d 455, 51 St. Rep. 810 (1994). See also Patch v. Hillerich & Bradsby Co., 2011 MT 175, 361 Mont. 241, 257 P.3d 383 (holding that the District Court properly granted the plaintiffs' motion in limine to preclude the defendant from arguing the assumption of risk defense when the defendant had failed to show that the plaintiff was aware of the enhanced risks of the product and proceeded to use the product).

Reasonably Foreseeable Misuse Not Defense — Error to Submit Defense to Jury: Plaintiff's husband was killed in a crane electrocution accident when the crane's cable touched electrical power lines while he was loading pipes onto a flatbed trailer. Plaintiff sued the crane manufacturer, among others. The jury award in favor of plaintiff was reduced by 20%, the percentage of responsibility allocated to plaintiff's husband. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that reasonably foreseeable misuse is reasonable misuse and is therefore not a recognizable defense under this statute. When the party asserting the unreasonable misuse defense acknowledges the foreseeability of the misuse, then, as a matter of law, it is improper for the District Court to submit that issue for determination to the trier of fact. Lutz v. Nat'l Crane Corp., 267 M 368, 884 P2d 455, 51 St. Rep. 810 (1994).

Strict Liability Claim — Negligence Not Defense: Negligence of a decedent, his fellow employees, or others is not a defense to a strict liability claim. Therefore, contributory negligence is not a defense in a strict liability action, and the District Court correctly instructed the jury. Lutz v. Nat'l Crane Corp., 267 M 368, 884 P2d 455, 51 St. Rep. 810 (1994). However, see Patterson Enterprises, Inc. v. Johnson, 2012 MT 43, 364 Mont. 197, 272 P.3d 93.

Strict Liability — Not Error to Exclude Government Regulations: In a strict liability claim against a crane manufacturer, it was not error to exclude government regulations. The fact that government regulations address permissive use of insulated links on cranes is not relevant to dispositive issues in design defect cases. Analysis must focus on the feasibility and practicality of the design, as well as on the marketability. Even if the regulations had some tenuous relevance in a products liability case, it was not reversible error for the District Court to exclude them. Lutz v. Nat'l Crane Corp., 267 M 368, 884 P2d 455, 51 St. Rep. 810 (1994).

Misuse of Product Excludes Reasonably Foreseeable Use: Hart-Albin sued Leviton under a strict liability theory for manufacture of an extension cord connector that caused a fire in the Hart-Albin store. Leviton defended, alleging that the connector was misused because it was improperly assembled by a store employee, but acknowledged that it was "possible" for the connector to be misused or misassembled. The Supreme Court held that the defense of misuse of a product was not available to a party if the misuse was foreseeable and that Leviton had admitted that misassembly was foreseeable. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court had erred in instructing the jury on the misuse defense and that because the jury had answered a special interrogatory concerning the extension cord in the negative, there was no purpose in retrying the issue of whether there was another cause of the fire. Hart-Albin Co. v. McLees, Inc., 264 M 1, 870 P2d 51, 51 St. Rep. 112 (1994).

Builders Not Liable for Negligence After Relinquishment of Control: The liability of builders is terminated once work is finished and control and ownership is transferred to the subsequent owners. Papp v. Rocky Mtn. Oil & Minerals, Inc., 236 M 330, 769 P2d 1249, 46 St. Rep. 400 (1989). However, see Wiesner v. BBD Partnership, 256 M 158, 845 P2d 120, 50 St. Rep. 17 (1993).

Oil Separator Facility Not "Product" Within Meaning of Liability Statute: Plaintiff sought compensation under a strict product liability theory for the death of her husband who was overcome by hydrogen sulfide gas while working in an oil separator facility. She claimed the facility and its components were defective and unreasonably dangerous. The District Court summarily dismissed the claim on the grounds that the facility was not a "product" within the meaning of Restatement (Second) of Torts 402A. The Supreme Court affirmed after finding that: (1) defendants were not in the business of selling separator facilities as required by section 402A; (2) the alleged product did not reach the stream of commerce nor was the decedent a "consumer" as defined by the policy considerations in Brandenburger v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc., 162 M 506, 513 P2d 268 (1973); and (3) the separator facility, a building, was not a product. Papp v. Rocky Mtn. Oil & Minerals, Inc., 236 M 330, 769 P2d 1249, 46 St. Rep. 400 (1989).

Speed Bump Not "Product" for Purposes of Strict Liability: A speed bump is not a "product" for purposes of determining strict product liability under Restatement (Second) of Torts 402A. Harrington v. LaBelle's of Colo., Inc., 235 M 80, 765 P2d 732, 45 St. Rep. 2176 (1988), overruled in part by Pierce v. ALSC Architects, P.S., 270 M 97, 890 P2d 1254, 52 St. Rep. 93 (1995). See also Brandenburger v. Toyota Motor Sales, 162 M 506, 513 P2d 268 (1973).

Indemnification Action — Defense of Contributory Negligence Unavailable: Contributory negligence is not available in Montana as a defense in an action for indemnification. Jones v. Aero-Chem Corp., 680 F. Supp. 338, 45 St. Rep. 360 (D.C. Mont. 1987).

Products Liability — "Upstream" Indemnification From Manufacturer of Defective Component: The federal District Court, noting the Montana Supreme Court decision in Brandenburger v. Toyota Motor Sales, 162 M 506, 513 P2d 268 (1973), adopted as a general proposition the rule that allows the manufacturer/assembler of a finished product to seek indemnification from the manufacturer of a component part that was defective at the time it left the component manufacturer's hand and that was integrated as part of the finished product. Jones v. Aero-Chem Corp., 680 F. Supp. 338, 45 St. Rep. 360 (D.C. Mont. 1987).

Legal Effect of Warnings — Admissibility of Subsequent Remedial Measures: On November 19, 1977, Gauthier injured his hand when he placed it inside the discharge chute of a running snow thrower to unclog snow. He brought a strict liability action against the manufacturer alleging defective design. The federal District Court entered judgment in Gauthier's favor, and defendant appealed. The court of appeals held that: (1) under Montana law, the manufacturer was entitled to an instruction regarding the legal effect of adequate warnings; and (2) evidence regarding subsequent design changes in the snow thrower industry was inadmissible. The case was reversed and remanded. Gauthier v. AMF, Inc., 788 F2d 634 (9th Cir. 1986). On petition for rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc, the court of appeals held that evidence regarding subsequent remedial measures by nonparties was inadmissible as irrelevant and denied the petition. Gauthier v. AMF, Inc., 805 F2d 337 (9th Cir. 1986).

Products Liability — Applicable to Commercial Case — Duty of Care: Plaintiffs sued manufacturer of chemical potato sprout suppressant when use of the product caused erratic growing results in potato crop. District Court jury found defendant liable for damages based on theories of strict liability, negligence, and breach of warranty. Supreme Court affirmed. Supreme Court held that jury was properly charged that a manufacturer has a duty to use reasonable care to give warning of dangerous condition of a product to those he expects to use the product or those endangered by its foreseeable use. Use of accepted form of instructions for personal injury cases that was modified to fit a property damage case was not error. Streich v. Hilton-Davis, 214 M 44, 692 P2d 440, 41 St. Rep. 2310 (1984), followed in Krueger v. Gen. Motors Corp., 240 M 266, 783 P2d 1340, 46 St. Rep. 2114 (1989), and Wood v. Old Trapper Taxi, 286 M 18, 952 P2d 1375, 54 St. Rep. 1263 (1997).

Dual Capacity Doctrine — Products Liability Suit by Employee Against Employer — Employer Not a Manufacturer or Seller of the Product: A workman injured on an oil rig sued his employer, the owner of the rig, for products liability, claiming the rig was defective. The dual capacity doctrine is invoked in workers' compensation cases when the employer may be said to owe some duty to an injured employee distinct from his duties as an employer, commonly, when an employee is injured by a piece of equipment manufactured by the employer. Whether this doctrine exists in Montana is not clear; but the question need not be answered because, even assuming that the doctrine applies in Montana, the facts do not support products liability as to the employer. The employer did not manufacture oil rigs to sell to the public and did not place in the stream of commerce the rig involved or any other rig. Montana law requires one held liable for products liability to have been a seller of the defective product. Mitchell v. Shell Oil Co., 579 F. Supp. 1326, 41 St. Rep. 278 (D.C. Mont. 1984).

Products Liability — Circumstantial Evidence — Types: Circumstantial evidence may be used to show a product defective and may consist of proof of the circumstances of the accident, similar occurrences under similar circumstances, and elimination of alternative causes. Brothers v. Gen. Motors Corp., 202 M 477, 658 P2d 1108, 40 St. Rep. 226 (1983).

Products Liability — Auto Steering Loss — No Prima Facie Case: Testimony of driver of auto and her daughter that as they were driving around a bend there was a tremor in the steering wheel and two short bumps, after which driver could not turn wheel and the auto went into a ditch, and evidence that the auto was in good condition did not raise an inference that the steering mechanism was defective in design or manufacture and did not make a prima facie strict products liability case. Brothers v. Gen. Motors Corp., 202 M 477, 658 P2d 1108, 40 St. Rep. 226 (1983).

Products Liability — Elements: In a products liability action, the plaintiff must show three things: (1) the plaintiff was injured by the product; (2) the injury occurred because the product was defective and unreasonably dangerous; and (3) the defect existed when it left the hands of the particular defendant. Brothers v. Gen. Motors Corp., 202 M 477, 658 P2d 1108, 40 St. Rep. 226 (1983), followed in Schelske v. Creative Nail Design, Inc., 280 M 476, 933 P2d 799, 54 St. Rep. 21 (1997).

Res Ipsa Loquitur — Products Liability — Auto Accident — Not Applicable to Manufacturer and Seller: Res ipsa loquitur is generally applied to human conduct, not to defective products. The control that manufacturer and seller of used auto exercised over it with respect to the time it was involved in accident was so remote that any causal connection between their duty toward purchaser, who was driving it when it went out of control and crashed, and purchaser's injuries was broken. In addition, other reasonable causes of the accident were not eliminated and the allegations of purchaser and her passenger were purely speculative. Therefore, no reasonable inference that manufacturer and seller were negligent could be made and res ipsa loquitur did not apply. Brothers v. Gen. Motors Corp., 202 M 477, 658 P2d 1108, 40 St. Rep. 226 (1983).

Products Liability — Plaintiff's Evidence — Best Types: The nature and quality of evidence used in products liability cases to show the defect and the nexus between the defect and the accident naturally vary. The most convincing evidence is an expert's pinpointing the defect and giving his opinion on the precise cause of the accident after a thorough inspection. If an accident sufficiently destroys the product or the crucial parts thereof, an expert's opinion on the probabilities that a defect caused the accident would be helpful. If no such opinion is possible, as in the present case, the user's testimony on what happened is another method of proving that the product was defective. If the user is unable to testify, as where the accident killed or incapacitated him, no other witness was present at the time of the accident, and the product was destroyed, the fact of the accident and the probabilities are all that remain for the party seeking recovery. At this point the plaintiff can attempt to negate the user as the cause and further negate other causes not attributable to the defendant. These kinds of proof introduced alone or cumulatively are evidence which help establish the presence of a defect as the cause of the damage. Brothers v. Gen. Motors Corp., 202 M 477, 658 P2d 1108, 40 St. Rep. 226 (1983).

Products Liability — When Only Damage Done Is to Defective Product Itself: Six years after she had purchased a mobile home, appellant filed an action against the seller for damages for breach of warranty and for property damages based on strict liability in tort, alleging that the mobile home had been defective and unfit for use from the time of sale. The trial judge dismissed the strict liability claim, and the jury found for the defendants on all other counts. The Supreme Court reversed the dismissal and remanded to the trial court, holding that a claim of strict liability in tort can be maintained when the only injury suffered is to the defective product itself. Thompson v. Nebr. Mobile Homes Corp., 198 M 461, 647 P2d 334, 39 St. Rep. 1094 (1982).

Products Liability — Statute of Limitations — Discovery Rule Not Applicable: Plaintiff was injured in May 1975, when his holstered Ruger revolver discharged into his leg as he crawled under some brush. He filed this products liability action in September 1979. Ruger moved for summary judgment based upon the running of the Statute of Limitations. Plaintiff urges adoption of a discovery rule respecting accrual of the cause of action. Discovery rules have been limited to latent injuries resulting primarily from either drug products or medical malpractice. Montana statutes permit a discovery rule in actions for fraud or mistake and in actions for malpractice. The Statute of Limitations for tort actions, however, does not authorize application of a discovery rule. Adoption of such a rule would destroy the very policies which justify the Statute of Limitations. To allow a plaintiff who fails to inquire into the cause of injury to avoid the time bar under the guise of "discovery" would hopelessly demolish the protection afforded defendants by the Statute. Much v. Sturm, Ruger & Co., Inc., 502 F. Supp. 743, 37 St. Rep. 2116 (D.C. Mont. 1980).

Effect of "As Is" Clause in Used Car Sales Agreement: When defendant failed to inspect a car for defects before sale to plaintiff and the defect that was the proximate cause of plaintiff's accident and subsequent injuries would have been discovered in a reasonable safety inspection, defendant should not be allowed to hide behind the cloak of a simple “as is” disclaimer. Public policy requires a used car dealer to inspect the cars he sells and to make sure they are in safe, working condition. Kopischke v. First Cont. Corp., 187 M 471, 610 P2d 668 (1980).

Products Liability — Indemnity — Third-Party Actions: Plaintiff was injured when a pickup truck in which he was riding rolled over. Plaintiff sued General Motors and also the manufacturer of the pants he was wearing. Plaintiff alleged the pants were defective and increased the severity of his injuries by melting onto his skin. The pants manufacturer filed a third-party complaint against Burlington Industries who had manufactured the pants material and supplied it to Corbin, Ltd., the maker of the pants. Burlington moved for dismissal of the third-party complaint, saying that indemnity for tort liability cannot be sought in a third-party action when the primary complaint sounds in strict products liability, indemnity being antithetical to and inapplicable in strict liability actions. Corbin argued that such indemnity is permissible through a process of weighing the comparative fault of two potentially liable parties, despite the fact the action was in strict liability, not in negligence. The U.S. District Court agreed with the Burlington arguments, observing that Corbin offered little supporting authority while Burlington cited ample authority. The court also noted that Montana has adopted section 402A of the Restatement of Torts, including the conclusion that the doctrine of strict liability was evolved to place liability on the party primarily responsible for the injury occurring, that is, the manufacturer of the defective product, a position based on public policy arguments. The question in Montana is the condition of the product in the hands of the injured party, not the ultimate fault of any given defendant arising from such defendant's conduct. Kelly v. Gen. Motors Corp., 487 F. Supp. 1041 (D.C. Mont. 1980), distinguished in Jones v. Aero-Chem Corp., 680 F. Supp. 338, 45 St. Rep. 360 (D.C. Mont. 1987).

Case Notes

No Liability of Equine Activity Sponsor for Unavoidable Risks or Inherent Risks of Which Participant Is or Should Be Aware: Equine activity sponsors have no duty to protect participants from unavoidable risks or from the inherent risks of equine activities of which the participant is or should be aware. As long as the participant expects a risk inherent in equine activities, the equine activity sponsor is not liable for injury suffered as a result of that risk. McDermott v. Carie, LLC, 2005 MT 293, 329 M 295, 124 P3d 168 (2005). See also Fishman v. GRBR, Inc., 2017 MT 245, 389 Mont. 41, 403 P.3d 660.

Use of Redacted Pretort Release to Establish Statutory Liability Shield Allowed: A pretort form indicating a prospective release from liability for negligence is illegal. However, it was not improper for a trial court to allow introduction of a redacted version of an illegal exculpatory agreement to show that an equine activity sponsor was statutorily protected from liability from unavoidable risks or from the inherent risks of equine activities of which the participant was or should have been aware. In the present case, plaintiff failed to cite authority or establish error by the trial court in admitting the redacted agreement, and the Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's denial of plaintiff's motion for a new trial on grounds that the redacted agreement was improperly admitted in evidence. McDermott v. Carie, LLC, 2005 MT 293, 329 M 295, 124 P3d 168 (2005).

Part 8 Libel and Slander

27-1-801. Defamation — how effected.

Case Notes

Publication “Essentially Truthful” — Dismissal of Libel Claims Proper: The plaintiffs sued the defendants for libel related to an incident at a rest area where it was alleged that some of the plaintiffs had engaged in vandalism. One of the defendants, a newspaper, had published three articles about the incident. The District Court granted summary judgment to the defendants, and the plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that the statements made in the articles were “essentially truthful” and not false within the meaning of the precedent regarding libel. Lee v. Traxler, 2016 MT 292, 385 Mont. 354, 384 P.3d 82.

Subsequent Deposition Testimony Defeated Prior Inconsistent Affidavit — Joke Not Defamatory — Summary Judgment Proper: The District Court did not err in granting summary judgment against the plaintiff in a defamation case in which a witness attested to the defamation in an affidavit but then changed his testimony in a deposition in which he admitted that he signed the affidavit without thoroughly reviewing it while also stating that he thought the alleged defamatory statement was a joke. A joke is not defamatory and, therefore, is not actionable. Ray v. Connell, 2016 MT 95, 383 Mont. 221, 371 P.3d 391.

Defamation Test: As outlined in Wainman v. Bowler, 176 M 91, 576 P2d 268 (1978) (citing Gang v. Hughes, 111 F. Supp. 27 (D.C. Calif. 1953)), defamatory words, to be actionable, as exposing a person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy or which have a tendency to injure him in his occupation, must be of such a nature that the court can presume as a matter of law that they will tend to disgrace and degrade the plaintiff or cause him to be shunned and avoided. It is not sufficient, standing alone, that the language is unpleasant and annoys or irks him and subjects him to jests or banter so as to affect his feelings. An expression of opinion is generally not actionable. Frigon v. Morrison-Maierle, Inc., 233 M 113, 760 P2d 57, 45 St. Rep. 1344 (1988), followed in St. v. Kandarian, 268 M 408, 886 P2d 954, 51 St. Rep. 1381 (1994).

Defamatory Letter as Libel: There was substantial evidence to support the findings that statements in an allegedly defamatory letter sent to the Sheriff constituted libel when plaintiff’s reputation was jeopardized by false accusations of felonious activity and the letter was obviously mailed with malice and ill will. Shors v. Branch, 221 M 390, 720 P2d 239, 43 St. Rep. 919 (1986).

What Constitutes “Public Figure” for Purpose of Libel Defense — Summary Judgment Properly Granted: The plaintiff, a commodities broker who had some public notoriety within the state as a result of his membership in and speeches to political organizations and as a result of articles about him appearing in national publications, brought a libel action against the defendant. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in granting summary judgment for the defendant, holding the plaintiff to be a public figure as a matter of law (and therefore requiring actual malice to be proven by the plaintiff), as there was no absolute prohibition in the Montana Constitution against granting summary judgment in a libel case and because the plaintiff had a general fame or notoriety in the state and exhibited pervasive involvement in the affairs of society. Williams v. Pasma, 202 M 66, 656 P2d 212, 39 St. Rep. 2332 (1982).

Privilege for Criticism of Public Figure Available to Nonmedia Defendant: Where the plaintiff brought a libel action against the defendant, a member of a state political committee, for statements made regarding the plaintiff's alleged violation of federal securities regulations, the Supreme Court, relying on Gertz v. Robert Welch, Inc., 418 US 323 (1974), as applied by Wheeler v. Green, 286 Ore 99, 593 P2d 777 (1979), affirmed the District Court ruling that the privilege established in New York Times v. Sullivan, 376 US 254 (1964), for criticism of a public figure's conduct applied to persons like the defendant who were not connected with the news media. In Gertz, the U.S. Supreme Court expanded the privilege of fair comment, established in New York Times, to apply to all public figures and did not limit the application of the privilege only to media defendants. Williams v. Pasma, 202 M 66, 656 P2d 212, 39 St. Rep. 2332 (1982).

Lack of Actual Malice Toward Public Figure — Summary Judgment Upheld: Where the defendant issued a press release claiming that the plaintiff had been "indicted" for violations of federal securities laws when in fact he had only been "charged" with such violations and the District Court held the plaintiff to be a public figure as a matter of law, the District Court was correct in awarding summary judgment for the defendant, holding that there was no actual malice by the defendant. The difference between the legal words "indicted" and "charged" is relatively minor in the minds of the average Montana citizen, and the defendant stated that he did not know the difference. There was simply no evidence that the defendant's statement was made with actual malice. Williams v. Pasma, 202 M 66, 656 P2d 212, 39 St. Rep. 2332 (1982).

Requisite Proof in Defamation Suit: In order to recover actual damages, a private person suing for defamation must prove that: (1) the published material was false; (2) the defendant is chargeable with fault; and (3) actual injury ensued. Further, such plaintiff may recover punitive damages if he proves malice. When the plaintiff is a public official or a public figure, he may recover only if he proves malice. Madison v. Yunker, 180 M 54, 589 P2d 126 (1978).

Public Officials and Public Figures: For purposes of determining the appropriate standard of care and damages in a defamation suit, whether the plaintiff is a public official, public figure, or private person, is a question for the jury to determine. Madison v. Yunker, 180 M 54, 589 P2d 126 (1978).

GENERAL

Defamation and Tortious Interference Claims Rooted in Tort Despite Employment Relationship — Statute of Limitations Governing State Contracts Did Not Apply: A university soccer coach was dismissed after an investigation involving his university-issued cell phone revealed text and telephone communications that were allegedly with agents of an escort service. The dismissal was covered by local and national news outlets, and some articles included information from the coach's personnel file and cell phone. The coach sued the university, alleging violation of his right of privacy, defamation, and breach of contract in his initial complaint and substituting claims for tortious interference, negligence, and invasion of privacy in an amended complaint. The District Court found that the 1-year statute of limitations in 18-1-402 applied because the coach's claims all sounded in contract, and so the complaint was untimely filed. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the coach's right of privacy, invasion of privacy, and negligence claims all arose out of his contract-based employment relationship with the university and thus were contractual claims subject to the 1-year statute of limitations. However, it found that his claims for defamation and tortious interference were tort-based. It found that the university's duty to not commit the acts alleged by the coach arose independently from its employment relationship with the coach and would have existed even in the absence of such a contractual relationship. Because those claims sounded in tort, the longer statute of limitation in 27-2-204 applied and those claims were not barred. Plakorus v. Univ. of Mont., 2020 MT 312, 402 Mont. 263, 477 P.3d 311.

Privileged Communication Precluding Defamation Claim — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff contended that a Department of Transportation real estate appraiser defamed plaintiff by filing two written complaints with the Department of Labor and Industry alleging that plaintiff failed to comply with uniform standards when preparing appraisals on two condemned properties. The District Court summarily dismissed plaintiff's claim on grounds that the complaints were privileged communications. Plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The appraiser's complaints were made in an official proceeding authorized by law and were made to the proper authorities responsible for the interest being expressed and were thus, as a matter of law, privileged communications that were not subject to a claim of libel or slander. No genuine issue of material fact existed, so summary judgment for defendant was proper. McLeod v. St., 2009 MT 130, 350 M 285, 206 P3d 956 (2009), following Skinner v. Pistoria, 194 M 257, 633 P2d 672 (1981).

Statements Aimed at Corporate Entity Not Considered Defamatory Against Corporate Employee — Elements of Defamation: McConkey, the general manager of an electric cooperative, asserted that press statements made by a member of a corporate board of trustees concerning corporate mismanagement constituted defamation against McConkey. The District Court concluded that allegedly libelous statements must be aimed specifically at the person claiming injury for a defamation claim to stand, and the Supreme Court agreed. Claims of defamatory libel may not be based on innuendo or inference, nor do sarcastic and hyperbolic statements meet the test for defamation, and an expression of opinion generally does not carry a defamatory meaning. Further, as set out in Hale v. Billings Police Dept., 1999 MT 213, 295 M 495, 986 P2d 413 (1999), if the stated opinion does not disclose the facts upon which it is based and as a result creates a reasonable inference that it is based on defamatory facts, there is no protection for the statement. However, in this case, McConkey failed to suggest any undisclosed inferred facts or to produce any publications bearing a defamatory meaning against McConkey personally, so the defamation claim failed. McConkey v. Flathead Elec. Co-op, 2005 MT 334, 330 M 48, 125 P3d 1121 (2005).

Unincorporated Association Considered Person Subject to Suit: MacPheat filed a libel complaint against Schauf and the insurance company association to which Schauf belonged, claiming that Schauf wrote a libelous letter on the association letterhead to the judge who was presiding over one of MacPheat's criminal proceedings. The association moved to be removed from the action, asserting that it was simply a federally registered service mark and not a person or legal entity subject to service of process. The District Court agreed and dismissed the association from the suit. MacPheat appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. The association made the same service mark argument in Oliver v. Farmers Ins. Group of Cos., 941 P2d 985 (Okla. 1997). In that case, the Oklahoma Supreme Court acknowledged that under traditional common law, a voluntary, unincorporated association could not be sued under its name because it did not have a legal status apart from that of its individual members, but that because of the unjustness of the rule in present day society, the rule has been modified in many jurisdictions. The Oklahoma court dismissed the service mark argument, because whatever else the association did, it clearly had a name under which a number of companies insured against risks for profit. The Montana Supreme Court found that reasoning persuasive. An unincorporated association was defined in Assoc. Press v. Mont. Senate Republican Caucus, 286 M 172, 951 P2d 65 (1997), as a voluntary group of persons, without a charter, formed by mutual consent for the purpose of promoting a common enterprise or prosecuting a common objective. The association in this case was thus considered a person within the definition in former Rule 4A, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and to conclude otherwise and sanction the association's intangible classification would unnecessarily restrict those who can be sued in Montana courts and fly in the face of Montana's constitutional open courts provision. The association name was one under which its affiliates transacted business, so MacPheat could properly serve and bring suit against the association under 25-5-104 without naming and serving process on the members individually. However, once the association was brought before the court, MacPheat still had the burden of establishing the liability of the association's members, if any, under the applicable substantive law. MacPheat v. Schauf, 2002 MT 23, 308 M 215, 41 P3d 895 (2002).

Public Airing of County's Most-Wanted Fugitive List — Material Facts as to Falsity of Statements Precluding Summary Judgment: Hale brought defamation and negligence claims against the Billings Police Department for publishing Hale's photograph and personal information and broadcasting the information on a cable television most-wanted fugitive program and for failing to pull the information from the program after Hale's arrest. The District Court summarily dismissed Hale's claims on grounds that the information was truthful or, if not truthful, then constitutionally protected and therefore not defamatory. Hale was depicted on the program as a potentially armed and dangerous fugitive. However, Hale's warrant for domestic abuse was chosen randomly from 3,000 to 5,000 outstanding warrants on file, and his whereabouts was known at all times by the police, suggesting that under the plain meaning of the terms, Hale was not accused of using a weapon and thus could not be considered "armed and dangerous", and was not a "most-wanted" suspect or a "fugitive" from justice. Clarifying Roots v. Mont. Human Rights Network, 275 M 408, 913 P2d 638, 53 St. Rep. 205 (1996), the Supreme Court held that it was improper for the District Court to create an artificial dichotomy by distinguishing statements of opinion from statements of fact, thereby granting unqualified immunity to the former. Citing Restatement (Second) of Torts 617 (1965), the court held that if an opinion is not based on disclosed facts and, as a result, creates the reasonable inference that the opinion is based on undisclosed defamatory facts, that opinion is not afforded constitutional protection. Without that protection, genuine issues of fact regarding the falsity of the statements made during the broadcast remained, making summary judgment improper. Further, the issue remained as to what constituted timely notification of Hale's arrest to the media by the police to avoid breach of their duty not to infringe on Hale's rights. Summary judgment was reversed, and the case was remanded. Hale v. Billings Police Dept., 1999 MT 213, 295 M 495, 986 P2d 413, 56 St. Rep. 830 (1999), following Milkovich v. Lorain Journal Co., 497 US 1, 111 L Ed 2d 1, 100 S Ct 2695 (1990).

Plaintiff as Limited Public Figure — Summary Judgment Held Improper: The Montana Human Rights Network (MHRN) published a booklet in which it identified Roots as a "Ku Klux Klan organizer". When Roots sued for libel, the MHRN moved for summary judgment on the basis of Roots' status as a public figure. The District Court granted the motion. The Supreme Court held that the motion for summary judgment was incorrectly granted because the MHRN had the burden of proving that there was no question of material fact as to Roots' status as a Ku Klux Klan organizer. The evidence introduced by the MHRN and affidavits introduced by Roots showed only that Roots may have had some sympathy for the Klan, but left genuine issues of fact as to whether he'd been a Klan organizer and as to whether Roots was a public figure for limited purposes. Roots v. Mont. Human Rights Network, 275 M 408, 913 P2d 638, 53 St. Rep. 205 (1996).

Defamation Test: As outlined in Wainman v. Bowler, 176 M 91, 576 P2d 268 (1978) (citing Gang v. Hughes, 111 F. Supp. 27 (D.C. Calif. 1953)), defamatory words, to be actionable, as exposing a person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy or which have a tendency to injure him in his occupation, must be of such a nature that the court can presume as a matter of law that they will tend to disgrace and degrade the plaintiff or cause him to be shunned and avoided. It is not sufficient, standing alone, that the language is unpleasant and annoys or irks him and subjects him to jests or banter so as to affect his feelings. An expression of opinion is generally not actionable. Frigon v. Morrison-Maierle, Inc., 233 M 113, 760 P2d 57, 45 St. Rep. 1344 (1988), followed in St. v. Kandarian, 268 M 408, 886 P2d 954, 51 St. Rep. 1381 (1994).

Communications Made in Proper Discharge of Official Duties: In libel action, when all statements made by defendants were communications made in the proper discharge of their official duties, plaintiffs did not sustain their burden of proof that genuine issues of material fact existed to be tried. Defendants were entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law. Denny Driscoll Boys Home v. St., 227 M 177, 737 P2d 1150, 44 St. Rep. 991 (1987), followed in Wolf v. Williamson, 269 M 397, 889 P2d 1177, 52 St. Rep. 51 (1995).

Defamatory Letter as Libel: There was substantial evidence to support the findings that statements in an allegedly defamatory letter sent to the Sheriff constituted libel when plaintiff's reputation was jeopardized by false accusations of felonious activity and the letter was obviously mailed with malice and ill will. Shors v. Branch, 221 M 390, 720 P2d 239, 43 St. Rep. 919 (1986).

What Constitutes "Public Figure" for Purpose of Libel Defense — Summary Judgment Properly Granted: The plaintiff, a commodities broker who had some public notoriety within the state as a result of his membership in and speeches to political organizations and as a result of articles about him appearing in national publications, brought a libel action against the defendant. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in granting summary judgment for the defendant, holding the plaintiff to be a public figure as a matter of law (and therefore requiring actual malice to be proven by the plaintiff), as there was no absolute prohibition in the Montana Constitution against granting summary judgment in a libel case and because the plaintiff had a general fame or notoriety in the state and exhibited pervasive involvement in the affairs of society. Williams v. Pasma, 202 M 66, 656 P2d 212, 39 St. Rep. 2332 (1982).

Privilege for Criticism of Public Figure Available to Nonmedia Defendant: Where the plaintiff brought a libel action against the defendant, a member of a state political committee, for statements made regarding the plaintiff's alleged violation of federal securities regulations, the Supreme Court, relying on Gertz v. Robert Welch, Inc., 418 US 323 (1974), as applied by Wheeler v. Green, 286 Ore 99, 593 P2d 777 (1979), affirmed the District Court ruling that the privilege established in New York Times v. Sullivan, 376 US 254 (1964), for criticism of a public figure's conduct applied to persons like the defendant who were not connected with the news media. In Gertz, the U.S. Supreme Court expanded the privilege of fair comment, established in New York Times, to apply to all public figures and did not limit the application of the privilege only to media defendants. Williams v. Pasma, 202 M 66, 656 P2d 212, 39 St. Rep. 2332 (1982).

Lack of Actual Malice Toward Public Figure — Summary Judgment Upheld: Where the defendant issued a press release claiming that the plaintiff had been "indicted" for violations of federal securities laws when in fact he had only been "charged" with such violations and the District Court held the plaintiff to be a public figure as a matter of law, the District Court was correct in awarding summary judgment for the defendant, holding that there was no actual malice by the defendant. The difference between the legal words "indicted" and "charged" is relatively minor in the minds of the average Montana citizen, and the defendant stated that he did not know the difference. There was simply no evidence that the defendant's statement was made with actual malice. Williams v. Pasma, 202 M 66, 656 P2d 212, 39 St. Rep. 2332 (1982).

Letter Removing Chairman of English Department Privileged Publication: Small brought suit alleging that he had been libeled when he was removed as chairman of the English Department at Eastern Montana College (now Montana State University-Billings). The basis of the libel charge was the letter informing him that he was being removed and detailing the reasons for the removal. The court found that McRae had the authority to remove Small and that the letter was a privileged publication because it was made in the proper discharge of an official duty. Since the letter was within the proper discharge of an official duty, it enjoyed an absolute privilege and could therefore not be the subject of libel action. Small v. McRae, 200 M 497, 651 P2d 982, 39 St. Rep. 1896 (1982).

Libeled by Complaint — Action Accrued at Filing: Because of a civil complaint filed against them, defendants, by counterclaim and third-party complaint, sued original plaintiffs in libel. The Supreme Court determined that upon filing of the original complaint, alleged to have been libelous, the libel action accrued for purposes of determining the start of the running of the Statute of Limitations because such libel is direct and immediate and is not of a continuing nature. Engine Rebuilders, Inc. v. Seven Seas Import-Export & Merc., Inc., 189 M 236, 615 P2d 871, 37 St. Rep. 1406 (1980).

Abuse of Liberty: Since the statutory definition of libel was on the books at the time of the adoption of the Montana Constitution and since libel is referred to in other constitutional provisions, "abuse of that liberty" within the meaning of Art. II, sec. 7, Mont. Const., includes a publication that fits the statutory definition of libel. Madison v. Yunker, 180 M 54, 589 P2d 126 (1978).

Failure to State Cause of Action: The District Court properly granted judgment on the pleadings to defendant when the pleadings failed to state a cause of action for libel, either libel per se or libel per quod by special damages. Wainman v. Bowler, 176 M 91, 576 P2d 268 (1978).

Group Libel Rule: The District Court did not err in granting defendants' motions for summary judgment in a libel action because the allegedly defamatory statements could not reasonably be interpreted as applying specifically to plaintiffs. The common-law group libel rule precluded their recovering in a defamation action. Granger v. Time, Inc., 174 M 42, 568 P2d 535 (1977).

Multipublication Rule: Montana follows the multipublication rule rather than the single publication rule in determining the situs and time of the tort in libel cases; under the multipublication rule the cause of action arose upon the arrival and sale of the allegedly libelous magazines in Montana rather than upon the first publication or printing in another state. Lewis v. Reader's Digest Ass'n, Inc., 162 M 401, 512 P2d 702 (1973).

Business Advertising: Private corporation may maintain action for libel respecting its business. Professional & Business Men's Life Ins. Co. v. Bankers Life Co., 163 F. Supp. 274 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Publication of Libel: Complaint by private corporation for libel was sufficient where it charged that the publication was made of and concerning it. Professional & Business Men's Life Ins. Co. v. Bankers Life Co., 163 F. Supp. 274 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Words Construed According to Usual Meaning: Alleged libelous words must be construed according to their usual, popular, and natural meaning and common acceptance, in the sense in which persons of ordinary intelligence would understand them, the presumption being that those who saw them, so understood them. Porak v. Sweitzer's, Inc., 87 M 331, 287 P 633 (1930).

"Inducement" and "Colloquium": "Inducement" in a declaration for libel under common-law pleading is the narration of the extrinsic circumstances which, coupled with the published language, affects its construction and renders it actionable, when, standing alone, the language would appear either not to affect plaintiff or not to affect him injuriously; "colloquium" is the allegation that the published language was concerning plaintiff or him and his affairs or him and the facts alleged as inducement. Nolan v. Standard Publishing Co., 67 M 212, 216 P 571 (1923).

Malice: Under the definition of libel, no mention is made of malice, and the presence or absence of malice becomes material only as a circumstance affording a basis for increasing or diminishing the amount of recovery and in cases involving the question of privileged communication. Cooper v. Romney, 49 M 119, 141 P 289 (1914); Paxton v. Woodward, 31 M 195, 78 P 215 (1904). See also Manley v. Harer, 82 M 30, 264 P 937 (1928).

Libel of Unlawful Business Not Possible: Where an alleged libel is in respect to an unlawful business carried on by a person, such as that pursued by a professional wrestler, he cannot maintain an action for injury to his business. Brown v. Independent Publishing Co., 48 M 374, 138 P 258 (1914).

TRUTH OR FALSITY

Subsequent Deposition Testimony Defeated Prior Inconsistent Affidavit — Joke Not Defamatory — Summary Judgment Proper: The District Court did not err in granting summary judgment against the plaintiff in a defamation case in which a witness attested to the defamation in an affidavit but then changed his testimony in a deposition in which he admitted that he signed the affidavit without thoroughly reviewing it while also stating that he thought the alleged defamatory statement was a joke. A joke is not defamatory and, therefore, is not actionable. Ray v. Connell, 2016 MT 95, 383 Mont. 221, 371 P.3d 391.

Investigative Responsibility of Newspaper Before Publishing: A newspaper has a duty to investigate before publishing when it has facts that indicate material is highly suspect. The Supreme Court remanded this case upon finding that a jury instruction defining "reckless disregard of the truth" as being equivalent to having serious doubts about the truth tended to shield a newspaper from its investigative responsibility. Sible v. Lee Enterprises, Inc., 224 M 163, 729 P2d 1271, 43 St. Rep. 2101 (1986).

Defenses of Belief in the Truth and Fair Comment Correctly Pleaded — Common-Law Defenses Merged in U.S. Supreme Court Ruling: Where the plaintiff brought an action against the defendant for libelously alleging violation of securities regulations by the plaintiff and the defendant based his defense on a belief in the truth and fair comment upon acts of a public figure, the District Court did not err in ruling that the defenses were correctly pleaded, although not specifically pleaded. The defenses of belief in the truth and fair comment were common-law privileges incorporated into the decision of the U.S. Supreme Court in New York Times v. Sullivan, 376 US 254 (1964), regarding acts by public figures. As the defendant maintained throughout the action that the plaintiff was a public figure, this was all the defense the defendant was required to plead. Williams v. Pasma, 202 M 66, 656 P2d 212, 39 St. Rep. 2332 (1982).

Adequacy of Pleadings in Libel Suit — Damages: The Supreme Court reversed the District Court dismissal of a libel action and rejected defendant's argument that in Montana specific damages must be pleaded and proven to support a claim for libel per quod and that actual malice must be specifically pleaded to satisfy the requirements of the first amendment of the United States Constitution. The plaintiff's pleadings were found to satisfy the standards set forth in New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 US 254 (1964), adopted by Montana in Madison v. Yunker, 180 M 54, 589 P2d 126 (1978), as well as the requirements of former Rule 9(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Gallagher v. Johnson, 188 M 117, 611 P2d 613 (1980).

Statements Neither False Nor Defamatory: The following statements, under the facts and circumstances presented, were held neither false nor defamatory: that the published article will be a "scoop"; "Gather round you boy scouts and girl scouts and learn a few wrinkles in civil affairs"; that plaintiff's offer to compromise his claim against the city was "a hot one tossed on the table" and that the claim was of "dubious legality"; "few men can serve and sue the city at the same time. Just how the city can legally pay a claim for which it is not obligated is quite difficult of solution. Even with the aid of the higher branches of the law . . ." Griffin v. Opinion Publishing Co., 114 M 502, 138 P2d 580 (1943).

The Truth — Complete Defense: Truth of alleged defamatory statement of fact is complete defense to action for libel. To constitute publication of newspaper article libelous under this section, it must be false, unprivileged, and defamatory; hence where the evidence established it to have been true, privileged, and not defamatory, there was no libel. Griffin v. Opinion Publishing Co., 114 M 502, 138 P2d 580 (1943), followed in Citizens First Nat'l Bank of Wolf Point v. Moe Motor Co., 248 M 495, 813 P2d 400, 48 St. Rep. 528 (1991).

Falsity of Publication: In action for libel, plaintiff must be nonsuited unless he introduces affirmative evidence of falsity of publication. So far as presumptions are concerned, the evidence is at equipoise at the very outset of the case. Cooper v. Romney, 49 M 119, 141 P 289 (1914).

Belief That Statement True — Not Justification: Fact that reporter believed statements which were libelous per se were fair and true or that defendant publisher, accepting them as true, published the story as a fair and true one did not constitute any excuse or justification in an action for libel. Kelly v. Independent Publishing Co., 45 M 127, 122 P 735 (1912).

LIBEL PER SE

Letter to Third Party Libelous Per Se: The defendant claimed to have a personal service contract with the plaintiff. When the plaintiff refused to honor the alleged service contract, the defendant sent a letter to the lessee of a gravel pit owned by the defendant and ordered the lessee to refuse to honor a contract the lessee had with the plaintiff to sell gravel to the plaintiff. In the letter, the defendant stated that the plaintiff had conducted dishonest business activities and had defaulted on contracts. The court held that in light of the letter as a whole and the business context in which it was addressed, the letter constituted libel per se. Tindall v. Konitz Contracting, Inc., 240 M 345, 783 P2d 1376, 46 St. Rep. 2182 (1989).

Newspaper Ad — Libel Per Se: Newspaper ad to buyers of life insurance warning them about representations by certain agents and requesting that they report proposals offered to Insurance Commissioner for his opinion was libelous per se. Professional & Business Men's Life Ins. Co. v. Bankers Life Co., 163 F. Supp. 274 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Special Damages Not Pledged — Must Be Libel Per Se: In libel action against newspaper in which no special damages were pleaded, plaintiff, to be entitled to damages, was required to plead and prove that the published language complained of, unaided by any innuendo, was actionable per se; having failed to do so, objection to the introduction of testimony and defendant's motion for a directed verdict in its favor should have been sustained. Griffin v. Opinion Publishing Co., 114 M 502, 138 P2d 580 (1943).

Opprobrious Statements: It is immaterial whether publication complained of contains opprobrious statements; if language damages person about whose affairs published, it is libelous per se. (Holding in Lemmer v. The "Tribune", 50 M 559, 148 P 338 (1915), to the contrary overruled.) Miller Ins. Agency v. Home Fire & Marine Ins. Co. of Calif., 100 M 551, 51 P2d 628 (1935).

Not Libelous Without Further Statements: While assertion of suspicion, belief, or opinion is as effectively a libel as a positive charge, statement in printed article that an effort had been made to secure mailing list of newspaper "in an unethical and underhand manner" and that the surrounding circumstances seemed to warrant the conclusion that the "advertising man" (meaning plaintiff) of another paper was behind the effort was held not libelous per se, in absence of further statements, as to conduct of persons who made the attempt or extent of plaintiff's responsibility for the effort. Woolston v. Mont. Free Press, 90 M 299, 2 P2d 1020 (1931).

Words Susceptible of But One Meaning:

Words used in newspaper article must be susceptible of but one meaning to constitute libel per se; the libelous matter may not be segregated from other parts and construed alone, but the entire statement must be viewed by court as a stranger might look at it, without aid of special knowledge possessed by parties concerned. Woolston v. Mont. Free Press, 90 M 299, 2 P2d 1020 (1931).

To be characterized as libelous per se, the words used must be susceptible of but one meaning. Manley v. Harer, 73 M 253, 235 P 757 (1928). See also Burr v. Winnett Times Publishing Co., 80 M 70, 258 P 242 (1927).

In determining whether language complained of is libelous per se, it must be considered in its relation to the entire article in which it appears; and to warrant the conclusion that it is of such character, the words must be susceptible of but one meaning, namely, that from its publication pecuniary loss to plaintiff necessarily must or presumable did follow as its proximate consequence. Brown v. Independent Publishing Co., 48 M 374, 138 P 258 (1914).

Malicious Publication Not Libel Per Se: Complaint by one employed in clerical capacity against member of merchants' association which periodically published reports of delinquent debtors merely alleging that plaintiff's name was therein published as owing defendant a stated amount and that the publication was malicious and made for purpose of injuring her reputation, etc., did not state a cause of action, the publication not having been libelous per se. Porak v. Sweitzer's, Inc., 87 M 331, 287 P 633 (1930).

Charge of Dishonesty or Corruption: Words which in themselves injuriously affect one in his profession, business, or employment, which impute dishonesty or corruption to an individual or which charge him with unfaithfulness to his employer, are actionable per se. Manley v. Harer, 73 M 253, 235 P 757 (1928).

Innuendo Not Libel Per Se: Language that is not libelous per se cannot be made so by innuendo. Manley v. Harer, 73 M 253, 235 P 757 (1928).

Words of Doubtful Significance — Not Libel Per Se: Words that upon their face and without the aid of intrinsic proof are injurious to the person concerning whom they are uttered are defamatory per se; but if the words are of doubtful significance or derive their libelous character from extraneous facts, they are not defamatory per se, and the pleader must allege the meaning intended or set forth such facts by proper averment. Manley v. Harer, 73 M 253, 235 P 757 (1928).

False Charge of Public Official — Libel Per Se: Newspaper article falsely charging County Commissioner with conducting county business behind closed doors and secretly passing large bond issue at highest legal rate of interest, in violation of statutory provisions, was libelous per se, whether thus charging a misdemeanor or not, since such charges were sufficient to deprive an official of public confidence. Burr v. Winnett Times Publishing Co., 80 M 70, 258 P 242 (1927).

"White-Livered Shyster" — Libel: A newspaper article headed "The White-Livered Shyster" which in its body imputed grossly criminal conduct to an attorney, charging him with "creating sham issues", "preaching violation of the law and defiance of the Constitution he has sworn to defend", "inciting anarchy", etc., was libelous per se. Nolan v. Standard Publishing Co., 67 M 212, 216 P 571 (1923).

Libelous Per Se if False: Publication charging that County Commissioners in letting a public printing contract did so without advertising for bids and out of favoritism, with the evident desire "to deflect all possible graft" a certain way, and containing a suggestion that the named amount of money was to be "cut up" among the Commissioners, if false and unprivileged, was libelous per se. Cooper v. Romney, 49 M 119, 141 P 289 (1914).

What Constitutes Libel Per Se: To state a cause of action for general damages, the language complained of must be libelous per se, and to be libelous per se, the language must be such as, without the aid of innuendo, imputes to the aggrieved party the commission of a crime or necessarily exposes him to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy. Cooper v. Romney, 49 M 119, 141 P 289 (1914); Brown v. Independent Publishing Co., 48 M 374, 138 P 258 (1914).

Language Construed in Context: In determining whether publication is libelous per se, language complained of must be construed in its relation to entire article in which it appears, for its ordinary meaning may be limited or changed by the circumstances, or by qualifications expressly annexed to its use. Cooper v. Romney, 49 M 119, 141 P 289 (1914); Paxton v. Woodward, 31 M 195, 78 P 215 (1904).

LIBEL PER QUOD

Adequacy of Pleadings in Libel Suit — Damages: The Supreme Court reversed the District Court dismissal of a libel action and rejected defendant's argument that in Montana specific damages must be pleaded and proven to support a claim for libel per quod and that actual malice must be specifically pleaded to satisfy the requirements of the first amendment of the United States Constitution. The plaintiff's pleadings were found to satisfy the standards set forth in New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 US 254 (1964), adopted by Montana in Madison v. Yunker, 180 M 54, 589 P2d 126 (1978), as well as the requirements of former Rule 9(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Gallagher v. Johnson, 188 M 117, 611 P2d 613 (1980).

Must Allege Special Damages: To give rise to action for libel the words published must have been actionable per se or actionable per quod, and in absence of allegation or proof of special damages, libel per quod is eliminated from the case; to be actionable per se, their injurious character must have been a fact of such common notoriety as to be established by the general consent of men so that courts take judicial notice of it; where language is clear and unambiguous, it is duty of trial court to determine whether it is actionable per se or per quod. Griffin v. Opinion Publishing Co., 114 M 502, 138 P2d 580 (1943).

Libelous Per Quod if at All: Newspaper article concerning County Commissioner and referring to "the interesting way he has of prying open the lid of the county strong box" was libelous per quod, if libelous at all, and reference likening him to "Kaiser Bill" was simply sarcasm and not libelous. Burr v. Winnett Times Publishing Co., 80 M 70, 258 P 242 (1927).

DAMAGES

Damages Caused by Defamatory Letter: Testimony as to mental anguish, worry, and the loss of worktime caused by an allegedly defamatory letter supported an award of actual damages in a libel case. Shors v. Branch, 221 M 390, 720 P2d 239, 43 St. Rep. 919 (1986).

No Special Damages Alleged — Libel Per Se:

Where complaint alleges no special damages, the action is brought on the theory of libel per se and not per quod. Steffes v. Crawford, 143 M 43, 386 P2d 842 (1963).

Unless publication was libelous per se, complaint must allege special damages. Porak v. Sweitzer's, Inc., 87 M 331, 287 P 633 (1930).

Complaint that does not plead special damages does not state a cause of action for libel against newspaper unless article published was libelous per se. Nolan v. Standard Publishing Co., 67 M 212, 216 P 571 (1923).

General Damages Recoverable — Libel Per Se:

Words are defamatory per se if upon their face and without the aid of extrinsic proof they are injurious to the person concerning whom they are published, and in such a case general damages are recoverable. Magelo v. Roundup Coal Min. Co., 109 M 293, 96 P2d 932 (1939).

Words defamatory per se carry the presumption of falsity and damage, and therefore where publication is libelous per se plaintiff may recover general damages without allegation or proof of special damages; where words are not actionable per se, there can be no recovery of general damages without pleading of special damages. Manley v. Harer, 73 M 253, 235 P 757 (1928).

General and Special Damages Distinguished: General damages in the law of libel are those which the law presumes actually, proximately, and necessarily result from the publication of the defamatory matter, while special damages are the natural but not the necessary result thereof and do not follow by implication of law upon proof of the defamatory words. Manley v. Harer, 73 M 253, 235 P 757 (1928).

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Case Notes

Defamation and Tortious Interference Claims Rooted in Tort Despite Employment Relationship — Statute of Limitations Governing State Contracts Did Not Apply: A university soccer coach was dismissed after an investigation involving his university-issued cell phone revealed text and telephone communications that were allegedly with agents of an escort service. The dismissal was covered by local and national news outlets, and some articles included information from the coach's personnel file and cell phone. The coach sued the university, alleging violation of his right of privacy, defamation, and breach of contract in his initial complaint and substituting claims for tortious interference, negligence, and invasion of privacy in an amended complaint. The District Court found that the 1-year statute of limitations in 18-1-402 applied because the coach's claims all sounded in contract, and so the complaint was untimely filed. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the coach's right of privacy, invasion of privacy, and negligence claims all arose out of his contract-based employment relationship with the university and thus were contractual claims subject to the 1-year statute of limitations. However, it found that his claims for defamation and tortious interference were tort-based. It found that the university's duty to not commit the acts alleged by the coach arose independently from its employment relationship with the coach and would have existed even in the absence of such a contractual relationship. Because those claims sounded in tort, the longer statute of limitation in 27-2-204 applied and those claims were not barred. Plakorus v. Univ. of Mont., 2020 MT 312, 402 Mont. 263, 477 P.3d 311.

Slander and Emotional Distress Claims — Dismissal Based on Preemption of Civil Service Reform Act Premature: The plaintiff sued a woman with whom he had consensual sex and two union members for slander and emotional distress when the two union members recommended the woman accuse the plaintiff of sexual assault in order to keep her job. The defendants argued that the plaintiff's claims were preempted by the federal Civil Service Reform Act of 1978. The District Court agreed and granted the defendants' motion to dismiss. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the claims were not necessarily barred but that further development of the record was warranted. The court therefore reversed and remanded the case to develop the record to properly consider whether the claims were preempted by the federal act. Dickson v. Marino, 2020 MT 196, 400 Mont. 526, 469 P.3d 159.

Subsequent Deposition Testimony Defeated Prior Inconsistent Affidavit — Joke Not Defamatory — Summary Judgment Proper: The District Court did not err in granting summary judgment against the plaintiff in a defamation case in which a witness attested to the defamation in an affidavit but then changed his testimony in a deposition in which he admitted that he signed the affidavit without thoroughly reviewing it while also stating that he thought the alleged defamatory statement was a joke. A joke is not defamatory and, therefore, is not actionable. Ray v. Connell, 2016 MT 95, 383 Mont. 221, 371 P.3d 391.

Failure to Meet Statutory Categories of Actionable Slander: After a newspaper article indicated that the plaintiff had no toilet and slept with goggles and a mask as protection against cockroaches, the plaintiff alleged that city firefighters had made the comments and that the statements slandered him to the public. The District Court dismissed the claim on the grounds that there was a general lack of evidence and the statements were made in the proper discharge of an official duty. The Supreme Court determined that the statements met none of the definitions of slander in 27-1-803 and affirmed the District Court's dismissal. Albert v. Billings, 2012 MT 159, 365 Mont. 454, 282 P.3d 704, quoting Wainman v. Bowler, 176 Mont. 91, 576 P.2d 268 (1978).

Privileged Communication Precluding Defamation Claim — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff contended that a Department of Transportation real estate appraiser defamed plaintiff by filing two written complaints with the Department of Labor and Industry alleging that plaintiff failed to comply with uniform standards when preparing appraisals on two condemned properties. The District Court summarily dismissed plaintiff's claim on grounds that the complaints were privileged communications. Plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The appraiser's complaints were made in an official proceeding authorized by law and were made to the proper authorities responsible for the interest being expressed and were thus, as a matter of law, privileged communications that were not subject to a claim of libel or slander. No genuine issue of material fact existed, so summary judgment for defendant was proper. McLeod v. St., 2009 MT 130, 350 M 285, 206 P3d 956 (2009), following Skinner v. Pistoria, 194 M 257, 633 P2d 672 (1981).

"Gang Banger" Not Considered Slanderous Term: Anderson alleged that the Troy Police Chief made false and defamatory statements on four occasions by referring to Anderson as a "gang banger". The District Court summarily dismissed the claim, and Anderson appealed. To determine whether false defamatory words about a person are slanderous, the challenged statement is to be construed by attributing the usual, popular, and commonly accepted meaning to the words and by discerning how an uninvolved person of ordinary intelligence and without special knowledge would understand the statement. The language must be susceptible to one meaning, and that meaning must be opprobrious. Further, for defamatory words to be actionable for a tendency to injure a person in a person's occupation, the words must expose the person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy and be of a nature that the court may presume as a matter of law that the words will tend to disgrace and degrade or cause the person to be shunned and avoided. It is not sufficient, standing alone, that the language is unpleasant, annoying, or irksome and subjects the person to jests or banter. The term "gang banger" appears to denote either a bona fide member of a street gang or a wannabe, which adds up to nothing more than innuendo, and the idiom has taken on a modern signification that fails to qualify as slander. Thus, the District Court was affirmed as a matter of law. Anderson v. Troy, 2003 MT 128, 316 M 39, 68 P3d 805 (2003).

Immunity of Statements Made in Complaint: Defendant's argument pertaining to the bad faith filing of fictitious and slanderous claims printed in plaintiff's complaint was without merit. Statements made in a judicial proceeding are absolutely immune, and a cause of action for defamation cannot be predicated on the statements. Mont. Bank of Circle v. Ralph Meyers & Son, Inc., 236 M 236, 769 P2d 1208, 46 St. Rep. 324 (1989).

Defamation Test: As outlined in Wainman v. Bowler, 176 M 91, 576 P2d 268 (1978) (citing Gang v. Hughes, 111 F. Supp. 27 (D.C. Calif. 1953)), defamatory words, to be actionable, as exposing a person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy or which have a tendency to injure him in his occupation, must be of such a nature that the court can presume as a matter of law that they will tend to disgrace and degrade the plaintiff or cause him to be shunned and avoided. It is not sufficient, standing alone, that the language is unpleasant and annoys or irks him and subjects him to jests or banter so as to affect his feelings. An expression of opinion is generally not actionable. Frigon v. Morrison-Maierle, Inc., 233 M 113, 760 P2d 57, 45 St. Rep. 1344 (1988).

Falsity of Statements: Prior action against corporate director which had been terminated by accord and satisfaction was not proof of the falsity of allegedly slanderous statements made in letters charging the director with breach of fiduciary duty. Simkins v. Jaffe, 165 M 266, 527 P2d 1195 (1974).

Slander Per Se:

Home owners' statements that builder cheated them, stole from them, and charged them for labor and material not furnished directly charged him with larceny without aid of innuendo and, as such, were slanderous per se; the words carried a presumption of falsity, and damages were recoverable without allegation or proof of special damages. McCusker v. Roberts, 152 M 513, 452 P2d 408 (1969).

Mercantile employee's statement to legal stenographer, in hearing of others, that "Your credit is no good; you don't pay your bills; you owe too many bills in town" was held not slanderous per se, such words in no manner reflecting upon subject's skill or ability as a stenographer since credit was not vital in her occupation as in the business of a merchant or trader. Liebel v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 103 M 370, 62 P2d 667 (1936).

To constitute slander per se, the objectionable statement of or concerning plaintiff must be susceptible of but one meaning; hence, a publication which requires innuendo to demonstrate wherein it is slanderous cannot be slanderous per se. Liebel v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 103 M 370, 62 P2d 667 (1936); Tucker v. Wallace, 90 M 359, 3 P2d 404 (1931).

Words Charging Commission of Crime:

For falsely charging a person with crime to constitute slander per se, it is not necessary that charge be made with the technical accuracy of an information or indictment; statement is slanderous per se if it can have only one meaning to the bystander, namely, that person spoken about was charged with commission of a crime. Keller v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 111 M 28, 108 P2d 605 (1940).

Statement by retail store employee, in presence of plaintiff's mother, that "She [plaintiff] cashed a check . . . and ordered a sack of flour sent to an address where there was no house and received change for the check. The check was no good and if you [the mother] don't have her [plaintiff] come down and see me, we will have the sheriff after her." was held not slanderous per se in Keller v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 15 F. Supp. 716 (D.C. Mont. 1936). The same statement was later held to be slanderous per se by the state Supreme Court in Keller v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 111 M 28, 108 P2d 605 (1940).

Complaint — Sufficiency:

In suit for slander, complaint that did not allege words slanderous per se or any special damage was held subject to general demurrer. Keller v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 15 F. Supp. 716 (D.C. Mont. 1936).

In lessee's action for slander against lessor, complaint charging that lessor's agent, through whom negotiations had been carried on, had stated to another that he doubted that plaintiff could go through with the lease and that, if he was going to fall down, it would be better for plaintiff to give it up in the spring rather than wait until fall, thus causing less loss for both, was held insufficient to allege slander per se for failure to aver that hearer was in a position to injure plaintiff's business and failure to set forth place where statement was made. Tucker v. Wallace, 90 M 359, 3 P2d 404 (1931).

In absence of allegation of special damages, complaint in action for slander is properly demurrable unless the publication is slanderous per se. Tucker v. Wallace, 90 M 359, 3 P2d 404 (1931).

While at least one person who heard a defamatory statement must have known that plaintiff was meant, for damages to be recoverable, plaintiff is not required to so allege in the complaint but may prove such fact under the general allegation authorized by section 93-3812, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed). Kosonen v. Waara, 87 M 24, 285 P 668 (1930).

Complaint charging that defendant, in the presence of other women, said of plaintiff, a married woman: "You are a wide whore" was held sufficient, such words being actionable per se; complaint was not rendered insufficient by failure to allege that plaintiff was present, no other reasonable inference being possible than that she was present. Kosonen v. Waara, 87 M 24, 285 P 668 (1930).

Where words in complaint in action for slander did not of themselves import a want of chastity and no allegation was contained therein disclosing that they were used in a defamatory sense, a plea of justification in the answer, which also denied use of words, would not remedy the defect. Daniel v. Moncure, 58 M 193, 190 P 983 (1920).

Special Damages: Attempt to show special damages in form of discharge from employment and inability to obtain new employment because of slander failed where it was not shown that defendants intended that words spoken should be repeated and the persons present were plaintiff's sister-in-law and an intimate friend, presumably disinclined to do anything to injure plaintiff. Liebel v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 103 M 370, 62 P2d 667 (1936).

Injury to Business: In a case of slander alleged to have injured plaintiff in his business, it is important to show where the statement was made and that the person to whom it was made was in a position to injure plaintiff's business. Tucker v. Wallace, 90 M 359, 3 P2d 404 (1931).

Publication:

As distinguished from libel, which may be published to all the world, the spoken word in slander reaches only those to whom it is directed; hence, liability for slander attaches only to the initial publication, and the offender is not liable for its repetition unless he requests or intends that it be repeated. Tucker v. Wallace, 90 M 359, 3 P2d 404 (1931).

Unless at least one person who heard defamatory statement knew that plaintiff was meant, there was no publication and hence no slander. Kosonen v. Waara, 87 M 24, 285 P 668 (1930).

27-1-804. What communications are privileged.

Case Notes

Derogatory Statements by Employer Privileged: The Department of Corrections made a complaint to the Montana Public Safety Officer Standards and Training Council (POST) regarding a fired probation officer. The fired probation officer alleged that the derogatory statements were not privileged because they were not made in a regulatory proceeding and that the probation officer was not subject to the jurisdiction of POST at the time. The fired probation officer provided no analysis or argument that the complaint by the Department of Corrections was anything other than a complaint made to the governing authority authorized by law to investigate complaints against probation officers that the communication was privileged. Speer v. Dept. of Corrections, 2020 MT 45, 399 Mont. 67, 458 P.3d 1016.

Statements Made During City Council Meetings Not Actionable — Absolute Privilege Extends to All Speakers: The plaintiff claimed that the defendant defamed him during two City Council meetings by maliciously accusing the plaintiff of not telling the truth at the meetings. The District Court properly granted the defendant summary judgment because the comments were made during an official proceeding authorized by law and consequently were absolutely privileged under this section. The Supreme Court concluded that the absolute privilege draws no distinction based on the speaker's status as a public or private figure and that the defendant's status was therefore irrelevant. Ray v. Connell, 2016 MT 95, 383 Mont. 221, 371 P.3d 391.

Privileged Communication Precluding Defamation Claim — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff contended that a Department of Transportation real estate appraiser defamed plaintiff by filing two written complaints with the Department of Labor and Industry alleging that plaintiff failed to comply with uniform standards when preparing appraisals on two condemned properties. The District Court summarily dismissed plaintiff's claim on grounds that the complaints were privileged communications. Plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The appraiser's complaints were made in an official proceeding authorized by law and were made to the proper authorities responsible for the interest being expressed and were thus, as a matter of law, privileged communications that were not subject to a claim of libel or slander. No genuine issue of material fact existed, so summary judgment for defendant was proper. McLeod v. St., 2009 MT 130, 350 M 285, 206 P3d 956 (2009), following Skinner v. Pistoria, 194 M 257, 633 P2d 672 (1981).

Conduct of City Council Meeting Hearing Criticism of City Employee — Not Restricted by Free Speech and Privileged Communication Cases and Statute — Not Legislative Act Shielded by Legislative Immunity: Denke filed complaints with the Human Rights Commission alleging that Thompson Falls and Shoemaker, a City Council member, retaliated against her for previously filing sexual harassment charges with the Commission by holding a City Council meeting at which Shoemaker was allowed, with virtually no limitation, to severely criticize her conduct as city clerk and finance officer. The Commission hearing examiner, the Commission, and the District Court held that Shoemaker's criticism of Denke's actions as city bookkeeper aired during the City Council meeting was a "legislative act" within the meaning of 2-9-111 and the city was therefore immune from a charge of retaliation. The Supreme Court held that 27-1-804(2) and free speech cases such as New York Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 US 254 (1964), and Skinner v. Pistoria, 194 M 257, 633 P2d 672 (1981), did not limit the City Council's ability to regulate the time, place, and manner of Shoemaker's criticism. The Supreme Court also held that Denke's claim did not involve the calling of the City Council meeting (for which the city would be immune under 2-9-114) so much as the manner in which the meeting was conducted and that the conduct of the meeting did not fall within the definition of a "legislative act", and remanded the case for further proceedings. Denke v. Shoemaker, 2008 MT 418, 347 M 322, 198 P3d 284 (2008).

District Court Order Denying Petition for Judicial Review of Human Rights Commission Order Held Overbroad — District Court Ruling Held Premature and Held to Be Sua Sponte Reversal of Ruling Previously Forfeited: Denke filed complaints with the Human Rights Commission alleging that Thompson Falls and Shoemaker, a City Council member, retaliated against her for previously filing sexual harassment charges with the Commission by writing letters to the newspaper and holding a City Council meeting at which Shoemaker was allowed, with virtually no limitation, to severely criticize her conduct as city clerk and finance officer. In denying a petition for judicial review of the decision of the Commission hearing officer, the District Court held that Thompson Falls was not liable for Councilman Shoemaker's letters to the editor or for comments made by those attending the City Council meeting because of 27-1-804, protecting privileged communication, and the Montana Supreme Court case of Skinner v. Pistoria, 194 M 257, 633 P2d 672 (1981). The Supreme Court held that this statement in the District Court's order denying Denke's petition for judicial review was overbroad and had to be vacated because: (1) Denke did not seek to hold anyone at the City Council meeting liable for their statements except Shoemaker; (2) proceedings in the District Court against Shoemaker were stayed by his bankruptcy proceeding and the statement was therefore premature; and (3) the hearing examiner determined that 27-1-804 didn't apply to Shoemaker's letters to the editor and Shoemaker had previously forfeited his appeal on this issue in Shoemaker v. Denke, 2004 MT 11, 319 M 238, 84 P3d 4 (2004). The Supreme Court held that the District Court therefore wasn't in a position to rule that Shoemaker's letters were privileged. Denke v. Shoemaker, 2008 MT 418, 347 M 322, 198 P3d 284 (2008).

Respondeat Superior Applicable to City Council Member Who Severely Criticized City Employee — Criticism Within Scope of Employment for Respondeat Superior but Not for Application of Legislative Immunity: Shoemaker, a member of the Thompson Falls City Council, severely criticized Denke, the city clerk and finance officer, in two letters to the editor and in a City Council meeting for her job performance that Shoemaker alleged caused the city to hire a CPA. Denke charged that Shoemaker's criticism was unlawful retaliatory conduct for her previous filing of a sexual harassment complaint against the Mayor. Following Kenyon v. Stillwater County, 254 M 142, 835 P2d 742 (1992), the Supreme Court held that Shoemaker was a city employee. The Supreme Court held that Shoemaker was acting as a member of the City Council when he signed the letters and that the city had admitted in an administrative hearing that Shoemaker was within the scope of his employment. The court held that: (1) Shoemaker didn't have to be Denke's supervisor for purposes of applying respondeat superior; (2) Shoemaker's unlawful retaliatory conduct was not within the official discharge of Shoemaker's duties for the purposes of legislative immunity under 27-1-804, but the conduct was within the scope of Shoemaker's employment for purposes of respondeat superior; and (3) the statement of the city in the Human Rights Commission administrative hearing that Shoemaker was acting as a member of the City Council constituted a judicial admission, was an "acknowledgment" under 2-9-305, and was binding upon the city for the purposes of its liability for retaliation. Denke v. Shoemaker, 2008 MT 418, 347 M 322, 198 P3d 284 (2008).

Determination of Whether Publication of "Most-Wanted" List Considered Privileged — Abuse of Conditional Privilege as Jury Question: Hale brought defamation and negligence claims against the Billings Police Department for publishing Hale's photograph and personal information and broadcasting the information on a cable television most-wanted fugitive program. The District Court summarily dismissed Hale's claims on grounds that the communication between the police and the media was privileged, either as a proper discharge of an official duty or as part of a judicial proceeding pursuant to this section. However, the court neglected to determine as a matter of law whether the privilege was an absolute or conditional privilege. Absent a mandate by law that the police provide information regarding arrest warrants to crime prevention programs, the privilege was, at best, conditional. Thus, it was a matter for the jury to determine whether the discharge of the official duty exercised by the police in providing criminal information was proper to the extent that the police did not abuse the privilege. Further, under Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411, 52 St. Rep. 407 (1995), statements made by the police as to the facts of the case or the evidence expected to be given are not yet part of the judicial proceeding and are not privileged. Summary judgment was improper. Hale v. Billings Police Dept., 1999 MT 213, 295 M 495, 986 P2d 413, 56 St. Rep. 830 (1999), distinguishing Cox v. Lee Enterprises, Inc., 222 M 527, 723 P2d 238, 43 St. Rep. 1476 (1986).

Immunity of Statements Made in Complaint: Defendant's argument pertaining to the bad faith filing of fictitious and slanderous claims printed in plaintiff's complaint was without merit. Statements made in a judicial proceeding are absolutely immune, and a cause of action for defamation cannot be predicated on the statements. Mont. Bank of Circle v. Ralph Meyers & Son, Inc., 236 M 236, 769 P2d 1208, 46 St. Rep. 324 (1989).

Qualified Privilege of Statements of Church Leaders Incident to Disfellowship — Free Exercise of Religion: Disfellowshipped former church members brought an action against church leaders alleging defamation under state law and contending that the Supreme Court need not delve into the religious affairs of the church. The court disagreed, noting that the statements in question were made within the congregation and were based on ecclesiastical doctrine. The statements were found to be privileged under this section, and incidental communication to nonchurch members attending the service did not eliminate the privilege. Having established a qualified privilege on the part of the church leaders, the burden was on the former members to show the privilege was abused by excessive publication, by use of the occasion for an improper purpose, or by lack of belief or grounds for belief in the truth of what was said. Finding no evidence of malice, the court would be violating the church leaders' right to free exercise of religion if it were to find the leaders' statements actionable under state defamation law. Rasmussen v. Bennett, 228 M 106, 741 P2d 755, 44 St. Rep. 1378 (1987).

Communications Made in Proper Discharge of Official Duties: In libel action, when all statements made by defendants were communications made in the proper discharge of their official duties, plaintiffs did not sustain their burden of proof that genuine issues of material fact existed to be tried. Defendants were entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law. Denny Driscoll Boys Home v. St., 227 M 177, 737 P2d 1150, 44 St. Rep. 991 (1987), followed in Wolf v. Williamson, 269 M 397, 889 P2d 1177, 52 St. Rep. 51 (1995).

Preliminary Pleadings — Privileged as Part of Judicial Proceedings: An alleged defamation arose from a newspaper account of a complaint filed in U.S. District Court. On a question certified to state court, the Montana Supreme Court decided that the phrase "judicial proceeding", as used in subsection (4) of this section, included the filing of a complaint. A qualified privilege was extended to reports taken from preliminary pleadings filed in court but not judicially acted upon. Cox v. Lee Enterprises, Inc., 222 M 527, 723 P2d 238, 43 St. Rep. 1476 (1986), followed, with respect to Commission on Practice investigation, in Lence v. Hagadone Inv., 258 M 433, 853 P2d 1230, 50 St. Rep. 601 (1993).

Unsolicited Complaint by Private Citizen — Not Official Duty: This section does not extend to an unsolicited complaint by a private citizen who reports the destruction of his personal property, since the duty to communicate knowledge of crimes to law enforcement officials is a civic rather than official duty. Shors v. Branch, 221 M 390, 720 P2d 239, 43 St. Rep. 919 (1986), followed in Niles v. Big Sky Eyewear, 236 M 455, 771 P2d 114, 46 St. Rep. 504 (1989), and Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411, 52 St. Rep. 407 (1995).

Psychiatric Report on Criminal Defendant as Privileged Communication: Report of doctor appointed by the lower court (on motion of defendant's counsel) to conduct an examination of defendant pursuant to 46-14-202 was a privileged communication under this section, and lower court properly dismissed action alleging that the report was false, fraudulent, defamatory, and caused mental anguish. Burgess v. Silverglat, 217 M 186, 703 P2d 854, 42 St. Rep. 1123 (1985).

Letter Removing Chairman of English Department Privileged Publication: Small brought suit alleging that he had been libeled when he was removed as chairman of the English Department at Eastern Montana College (now Montana State University-Billings). The basis of the libel charge was the letter informing him that he was being removed and detailing the reasons for the removal. The court found that McRae had the authority to remove Small and that the letter was a privileged publication because it was made in the proper discharge of an official duty. Since the letter was within the proper discharge of an official duty, it enjoyed an absolute privilege and could therefore not be the subject of libel action. Small v. McRae, 200 M 497, 651 P2d 982, 39 St. Rep. 1896 (1982).

Intradepartmental Communications Privileged: Statements made in discharging department employee, both in recommendations of supervisors and in notice of discharge, are afforded the absolute privilege of subsection (1) of this section and provide no cause of action for slander. Nye v. Dept. of Livestock, 196 M 222, 639 P2d 498, 39 St. Rep. 49 (1982).

When Defamatory Statement Privileged — Public Officials: The defendant read a letter to the Great Falls City Commission indicating he had received a telephone call alleging misuse of funds by three police officers, naming them. He suggested an investigation be undertaken. The Supreme Court held that the publication was privileged because the defamatory statements were made under circumstances meeting the requirements for such a privilege in 27-1-804(2). Section 27-1-804(2) was held, specifically, to confer an absolute privilege. However, to be privileged under that subsection, the statement must be made to the proper authorities responsible for the interest being expressed (here, City Commission, City Manager, or Police Chief). Skinner v. Pistoria, 194 M 257, 633 P2d 672, 38 St. Rep. 1501 (1981). See also Denke v. Shoemaker, 2008 MT 418, 347 M 322, 198 P3d 284 (2008).

Publication of Lis Pendens—Absolutely Privileged: Where plaintiff sought specific performance against a corporation to perform a written option to lease land and filed a lis pendens, it was error for the court not to grant plaintiff summary judgment on defendant's cross-complaint requesting damages for slander of title because the filing of a lis pendens is absolutely privileged, without reference to the merits of the underlying action. Hauptman v. Edwards, Inc., 170 M 310, 553 P2d 975 (1976). See also Austin v. Cash, 274 M 54, 906 P2d 669, 52 St. Rep. 1119 (1995).

Discharge of Official Duty: A communication from a mental health center director to the center's program director seeking resignation of drug abuse consultant on grounds of personal unfitness, though possibly defamatory, was made by a public official in the discharge of his official duties and was, therefore, subject to an absolute privilege under this section. Storch v. Bd. of Directors, 169 M 176, 545 P2d 644 (1976).

Absence of Malice: Intradepartment communication of state agency recommending the discharge of probationary state employee is an absolute privilege, with the only requirement being that the communication be one rendered while engaged in an "official duty", and it is not necessary to show the absence of malice. Storch v. Bd. of Directors, 169 M 176, 545 P2d 644 (1976).

Public Official Proceeding — Privileged: Publication of public official proceeding or of anything said therein is privileged if it is a fair and true report made without malice. Griffin v. Opinion Publishing Co., 114 M 502, 138 P2d 580 (1943).

When a Court or Jury Question: Whether an alleged libelous publication was privileged, either absolutely or conditionally, by reason of its character or the occasion upon which it was made, is a question of law for the trial court's decision whenever the evidence is undisputed, it being only when the evidence is conflicting that the question is to be submitted to jury. Griffin v. Opinion Publishing Co., 114 M 502, 138 P2d 580 (1943).

Employer's Statement to Industrial Accident Board — Malice: Letter sent to Industrial Accident Board (now the Division of Workers' Compensation) by manager of coal mining company with alleged intent to prejudice an employee's claim and to impliedly charge him with malingering and having made other fraudulent claims against the employer, not relevant or material to the issue then before the Board, was not privileged and if false and malicious was actionable. Magelo v. Roundup Coal Min. Co., 109 M 293, 96 P2d 932 (1939).

Striking Opinion of Justice From Records: On motion of counsel for appellant filed in their own behalf and that of their client to strike from files of court a special opinion of a Justice concurring in affirmance of judgment appealed from, on ground that statements therein were scandalous, scurrilous, and defamatory, the court ordered that such opinion be expunged from court records and not published in reports of its decisions. Nadeau v. Texas Co., 104 M 558, 69 P2d 586 (1937).

Charge of Public Officer — Privileged: Publication of taxpayers' petition charging public officer or employee with violation of his obligations to financial detriment of county and asking for his removal is privileged unless made with malice, even though the statements contained therein are false. Manley v. Harer, 82 M 30, 264 P 937 (1928).

Malice — Not Privileged: Communication addressed by taxpayers to Board of County Commissioners asking for removal of road supervisor and containing a libelous statement was not privileged under (3) of this section, where made with malice. Manley v. Harer, 73 M 253, 235 P 757 (1925).

Statement Made in Presence of Stranger: By making slanderous statement in presence of a stranger, defendant removed the bar of privilege otherwise attending communications made by him to his agents, which might have protected him, in absence of actual malice. Fowlie v. Cruse, 52 M 222, 157 P 958 (1916).

Effect of Malice:

In order to found liability for libel upon a communication prima facie privileged, actual and not implied malice must be shown. Such was the rule at common law, and such must necessarily be the rule under the statute. Cooper v. Romney, 49 M 119, 141 P 289 (1914).

Complaint alleging that libelous publication was false and malicious alleges in substance that it was false and unprivileged, since, in case of malice, privilege conferred by (3) and (4) of this section does not exist. Cooper v. Romney, 49 M 119, 141 P 289 (1914).

When Both Falsity and Malice Must Be Shown: Where the communication appears to have been privileged, the plaintiff must show not only actual malice but falsity in the publication. Cooper v. Romney, 49 M 119, 141 P 289 (1914).

Newspaper Story Based on Gossip — Not Privileged: Publication of story of mother's inhuman treatment of children gathered by reporter from gossip heard in Sheriff's office, prior to institution of any proceeding in court, was not privileged. Kelly v. Independent Publishing Co., 45 M 127, 122 P 735 (1912).

Former State Hospital Patient Being Threat in General — No Duty to Warn — No Liability for State: A former patient of the state hospital killed his former girlfriend 5 months after being discharged. Her parents sued the state for failing to warn their daughter of the risk of violent behavior by her former boyfriend pursuant to this section. The District Court granted the state summary judgment, ruling that although the patient acknowledged his aggressive behavior toward his girlfriend when he drank, he had not made any specific expression or gesture against her during his treatment. The District Court concluded that absent a specific threat, the state did not have a duty to warn her. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the decision and noted that "being" a threat in general does not satisfy the statutory criteria to trigger a duty to warn. Woods v. St., 2015 MT 8, 378 Mont. 38, 340 P.3d 1254.

State Entitled to Immunity From Suit Absent Proof That Mental Patient Made Actual Threat of Physical Violence — Liability to Attach to State Only When Private Person Similarly Liable: After being treated and medically stabilized at the state hospital for schizoaffective disorder, a man was conditionally released from involuntary commitment and subsequently killed his brother less than 1 week later, even though the man had shown no signs of aggression or violence and had made no threats of physical violence while hospitalized. The mother of the men sued the state for negligence. The District Court determined that the state was entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law on the mother's claims, and the mother appealed. The Supreme Court noted that under 2-9-101, state liability for tort claims attaches only when a private person would be similarly liable. Under 27-1-1102, a mental health professional has no duty to warn of violent behavior unless a patient has communicated to the professional an actual threat of physical violence by specific means against a clearly identified or reasonably identifiable victim, and unless that duty exists, the professional is immune from liability under 27-1-1103. In this case, absent an actual threat of physical violence, the state was also entitled to immunity from suit pursuant to 27-1-1102 and 27-1-1103, and the District Court was affirmed. Gudmundsen v. St. ex rel. Mont. St. Hosp. Warm Springs, 2009 MT 56, 349 M 297, 203 P3d 813 (2009).

CHAPTER 2 STATUTES OF LIMITATIONS

Chapter Case Notes

Statute of Limitations Applicable to FELA Actions — Statute Tolloed by Employer Misrepresentations: A 3-year statute of limitations applies to actions brought under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA), 45 U.S.C. 51 through 60. However, plaintiff is entitled to have the cause tried on the merits, even if the suit was not filed within the statutory limit, if misrepresentations made by the employer justifiably misled plaintiff into not filing a timely action. A FELA defendant may be estopped from raising the statute of limitations for equitable reasons even if the misrepresentations upon which the employee relied were unintentional. In this case, Bevacqua was examined by independent physicians, acting as agents for the railroad, who misrepresented Bevacqua's injuries. Because those misrepresentations misled Bevacqua into not filing suit within 3 years, he was entitled to have his cause tried on the merits. Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273, 55 St. Rep. 469 (1998), citing numerous federal cases giving a liberal construction to FELA in favor of injured railroad workers.

Tolling of Statute of Limitations by Second Action Filed Before Dismissal of First Action — Refiled First Action Allowed if Second Action Still Pending: If a first action tolls a statute of limitations and a second (allowable) action is filed before a different forum before the first action is dismissed, the second action continues to toll the statute of limitations. If the first action is then refiled while the second action is pending, it is filed while the statute is tolled and is not barred by the statute of limitations. Webb v. T.D., 275 M 243, 912 P2d 202, 53 St. Rep. 117 (1996).

Tolling of Statute of Repose by Chiropractic Legal Panel Proceeding Filed Before Dismissal of Court Action — Filing of Second Court Action After Panel Decision Not Barred: A medical malpractice complaint filed in District Court on April 16, 1992, tolled the statute of repose pursuant to 27-2-205. On August 2, 1993, an application was timely filed with the Montana Chiropractic Legal Panel. Voluntary dismissal of the District Court complaint without prejudice on August 3, 1993, did not nullify the complaint's tolling of the statute of limitations because under 27-12-701, the filing of the Panel application also tolled the statute. The Montana Chiropractic Legal Panel Act continued to toll the statute while the application under it was pending, and because the second District Court complaint was timely filed under the Act within 30 days after the Panel's decision, the second complaint was not barred by the statute of repose. Webb v. T.D., 275 M 243, 912 P2d 202, 53 St. Rep. 117 (1996).

When Statute of Limitations or of Repose Tolled: A statute of limitations or a statute of repose is tolled by the commencement of an action, and an action is commenced when a complaint is filed. Webb v. T.D., 275 M 243, 912 P2d 202, 53 St. Rep. 117 (1996).

Architectural Malpractice — Applicability of Continuing Relationship Doctrine: An architect was hired to design and oversee the building of a hospital. Shortly after completion in 1975, problems developed with the heating, air conditioning, and ventilating systems. The hospital contacted the architect about remedies for the problems, seeking and continuing to rely on his advice until 1979, when the parties' relationship ended. The hospital filed suit in 1981, which the architect contended was beyond the statute of limitations that normally would begin running upon substantial completion of the facility in 1975. Distinguishing Schneider v. Leaphart, 228 M 483, 743 P2d 613 (1987), the Supreme Court applied the continuing relationship doctrine because no specific statute of limitations governed the tort of architectural malpractice and because "accrual" was not statutorily defined at the time of the acts giving rise to the action. The continuing relationship doctrine may be used when, during the course of an ongoing, developing, and dependent relationship between a professional and a client, the professional commits a tortious act that injures the client. The doctrine suspends the accrual of the cause of action in order to give the professional an opportunity to remedy, avoid, or establish that there was no error or attempt to mitigate damages. The cause of action does not accrue until either the professional relationship ends or, if a general professional relationship continues between the parties, the professional ceases to treat or advise the client for the particular act causing the injury. Therefore, the statute of limitations in this case was suspended until the professional relationship ended in 1979 and the hospital's complaint in 1981 was filed well within the general 3-year tort statute of limitations. N. Mont. Hosp. v. Knight, 248 M 310, 811 P2d 1276, 48 St. Rep. 444 (1991).

Requirements of "Equitable Tolling" — Doctrine Not Recognized: Plaintiff relied on out-of-state decisions to present the proposition that, in instances when an injured person has several legal remedies and reasonably and in good faith pursues one, the statute of limitations will not be available as a defense where equitable principles justify tolling of the statute. Requirements of the doctrine, known as "equitable tolling", were outlined in Collier v. Pasadena, 191 Cal. Rep. 681 (Cal. App. 1983): (1) timely notice to the defendant (within the applicable statute of limitations) in filing the first claim; (2) lack of prejudice to defendant in gathering evidence to defend against the second claim; and (3) good faith and reasonable conduct by plaintiff in filing the second claim. The Supreme Court determined that in the present case the notice requirement was not met; therefore, the court did not address arguments with regard to the remaining two elements or recognize the doctrine of equitable tolling in Montana. Erickson v. Croft, 233 M 146, 760 P2d 706, 45 St. Rep. 1379 (1988), but see Harrison v. Chance, 244 M 215, 797 P2d 200, 47 St. Rep. 1539 (1990), in which the Supreme Court expressed an apparent willingness to apply the doctrine when the requirements set out in Erickson appeared to be met. See also Sorenson v. Massey-Ferguson, Inc., 279 M 527, 927 P2d 1030, 53 St. Rep. 1269 (1996), in which the Supreme Court applied the criteria and determined that plaintiff's self-help pursuit of his rights under a warranted purchase of a combine was not a legal remedy available for purposes of equitable tolling because plaintiff was required to pursue the warranty rights within the context of time limitations imposed for filing legal claims. See also Lozeau v. GEICO Indem. Co., 2009 MT 136, 350 M 320, 207 P3d 316 (2009), in which the Supreme Court found that plaintiff satisfied the threshold inquiry for application of the doctrine of equitable tolling by filing an original action in Tribal Court that was reasonably pursued and done in good faith, so the equities favored application of the doctrine.

No Judicial Discretion to Alter Statute of Limitations: Plaintiffs' complaint was dismissed because it was not timely filed, missing the statute of limitations by 1 day. Plaintiffs moved for relief under former Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), because of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. The statute of limitations does not discriminate between a just and unjust claim. The statute represents legislative and public policy controlling the rights of potential litigants. A trial court does not have judicial discretion to alter, change, or lessen statutory limits for commencement of actions. Schaffer v. Champion Home Builders Co., 229 M 533, 747 P2d 872, 44 St. Rep. 2196 (1987).

Applicable Statute of Limitations Governed by Basis of Claim: Former Rule 54(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), provides that a party must be granted any relief to which he is entitled even though he may not have demanded the relief in his pleadings. Thus, under former Rule 8, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), it is not necessary to set out the legal theory under which the claim is based. However, the Statute of Limitations applicable must necessarily be in conformity with the basis of the action. Castillo v. Franks, 213 M 232, 690 P2d 425, 41 St. Rep. 2071 (1984).

Laches: The Supreme Court held in Castillo v. Kunnemann, 197 M 190, 642 P2d 1019 (1982), that Kunnemann, the original owner of a 160-acre parcel of land, had reserved certain water and ditch rights when he conveyed the land to Franks, and that Franks, therefore, had not conveyed any of these water rights to the Castillos and the Cotants when they each purchased subdivided portions of the original parcel from Franks. Following the Supreme Court's decision, the Cotants and Castillos sued Franks for breach of contract, fraud, and in the case of the Cotants, for breach of warranty. Franks asserted that these actions were barred by laches. On appeal of this second case, the Supreme Court rejected Franks' argument for the following reasons: (1) plaintiffs had acted reasonably promptly in suing Kunnemann for the rights that Franks contended had been conveyed to them; (2) plaintiffs filed this action 3½ months after the Supreme Court rejected their claim against Kunnemann; and (3) plaintiffs' demands are not stale. They have not been lax in enforcing their rights, and they have not acquiesced in the loss of denial of their rights. Castillo v. Franks, 213 M 232, 690 P2d 425, 41 St. Rep. 2071 (1984).

Raising for First Time on Appeal Disallowed: Statute of Limitations defense was an affirmative defense and could not be raised in Supreme Court when it was not raised in District Court. Taylor v. Dept. of Fish, Wildlife, & Parks, 205 M 85, 666 P2d 1228, 40 St. Rep. 1112 (1983).

Products Liability — Statute of Limitations — Fraudulent Concealment Test Adopted: Plaintiff was injured in May 1975, when his holstered Ruger revolver discharged into his leg as he crawled under some brush. He filed this products liability action in September 1979. Ruger moved for summary judgment based upon the Statute of Limitations. The statutory period for tort action in Montana is 3 years. The Statute begins to run from the time the right of action accrues and not from the time when the plaintiff who was ignorant before comes to knowledge of his rights. Plaintiff contended the Statute tolled due to Ruger's fraudulent concealment of the defective nature of the revolver. The Supreme Court has never considered fraudulent concealment in a products liability case but has considered it in malpractice actions, which could apply here. To toll the Statute, the fraud must be of such a character as to prevent inquiry, elude investigation, or to mislead the party who claims the cause of action. There first must be injury and then concealment. It is the cause of action which must be fraudulently concealed by failing to disclose the fact of injury. Application of this test to this case establishes no fraudulent concealment. There must be some affirmative act of the defendant calculated to obscure the existence of the cause action. Much v. Sturm, Ruger & Co., Inc., 502 F. Supp. 743, 37 St. Rep. 2116 (D.C. Mont. 1980).

Object of Statute of Limitations: A true Statute of Limitations establishes a time period within which suit must be brought. Its object is to suppress stale and fraudulent claims after the facts concerning them have become obscure from lapse of time, defective memory, or death or removal of witnesses. Nelson v. Twin Bridges High School, 181 M 318, 593 P2d 722 (1979).

General Provisions

Part Case Notes

Legally Inconsistent Jury Finding Properly Corrected by District Court: The District Court did not abuse its discretion by amending a verdict and denying the plaintiff's request for a new trial based on an inconsistent or illegal jury verdict. In its Rule 59, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), motion, the plaintiff correctly argued that the jury's simultaneous finding that the plaintiff had breached two contracts with the defendant, while also being unjustly enriched by the defendant's labor, was legally inconsistent. However, the District Court was able to reconcile the jury's findings with established law by reassigning the jury's finding of damages from unjust enrichment to breach of contract while still maintaining the integrity of the jury's verdict. The verdict was therefore reconcilable with the evidence presented at trial and was properly corrected without compromising its integrity. Ryffel Family Partnership v. Alpine Country Constr., Inc., 2016 MT 350, 386 Mont. 165, 386 P.3d 971.

No Separate Period of Limitations Following Each Payment for Petroleum Cleanup Costs: The Montana Petroleum Tank Release Compensation Board asserted that a separate period of limitations occurs after each payment made by the Board to the owner of a petroleum facility to pay cleanup costs. The Supreme Court disagreed. The statute of limitations in these cases is not based on payment, request for payment, or denial of payment, but rather on when the claim accrues. Thus, the statute of limitations begins to run upon discovery of a leak and the occurrence of the subsequent obligation on the part of the owner to clean up the spilled petroleum, which triggers the owner's right to maintain an action under the applicable insurance policy. Mont. Petroleum Tank Release Comp. Bd. v. Federated Serv. Ins. Co., 2008 MT 194, 344 M 45, 185 P3d 998 (2008), distinguishing *St. Paul Fire & Marine Co. v. 27-2-101. Definition of action.

Case Notes

Action Not Commenced by Petition for Mediation: An action includes a special proceeding of a civil nature. However, mediation under the Workers' Compensation Act is a nonbinding and informal meeting that is not considered a special proceeding, so a petition for mediation does not commence an action as defined in this section. Preston v. Transp. Ins. Co., 2004 MT 339, 324 M 225, 102 P3d 527 (2004).

Tolling of Statute of Limitations During Statutorily Required Workers' Compensation Mediation: After waiting more than 9 months after a mediator issued a report, Preston petitioned the Workers' Compensation Court for a hearing regarding the reopening of a formerly settled claim. At the hearing, the court determined that a mutual mistake of fact existed concerning the severity of Preston's mental illness that arose as the result of an industrial accident. However, the court also concluded that reopening the claim based on the mutual mistake of fact was time-barred under the 2-year statute of limitations in 27-2-203. On appeal, the Supreme Court disagreed. The statute of limitations did not begin to run until Preston became aware of the mistake of fact, which occurred during the 62-day statutorily mandated mediation. Given that mediation was mandatory and that Preston had to wait until satisfying the dispute resolution requirements to petition the Workers' Compensation Court, the statute of limitations tolled during mediation and Preston had an additional 62 days to file the petition. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Preston v. Transp. Ins. Co., 2004 MT 339, 324 M 225, 102 P3d 527 (2004).

Child Support Enforcement Remedies Held Separate Remedies to Be Exercised Within Ten-Year Statute of Limitations — Due Process Requirements Applicable to Separate Remedies — Connell Distinguished: Emery was divorced from Keep in 1987, and Emery was ordered to pay child support. In exchange for Keep's receipt of payments under the Aid to Families With Dependent Children program, Keep assigned the Child Support Enforcement Division (CSED) of the Department of Public Health and Human Services her right to receive child support and her right to enforcement of support. In 1991, CSED served Emery with a Notice of Intent (NOI) to collect the child support payments by referral of his debt to the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) for collection by interception of any federal tax refund owed to Emery. In response to the NOI, Emery timely requested an administrative hearing before CSED, which was granted, but the hearing was indefinitely continued, and no interception was made by the IRS. In 1992, CSED sent a second NOI to Emery, but Emery made no response. In 1992, no interception was made by the IRS. Also in 1992, Emery and Keep executed a stipulated change of their children's custody. In that stipulation, Keep waived her ability to collect child support arrearages, and the District Court approved the stipulation in an order. In 1995, CSED sent a third NOI to Emery notifying him of CSED's intent to collect child support payments by interception of Emery's federal tax refund. In response to the 1995 NOI, Emery requested a hearing before the CSED. Within 8 months from service of the 1995 NOI upon Emery, the Administrative Law Judge (ALJ) held that CSED's assigned right to child support was not affected by the waiver because CSED was not a party to the stipulation. The District Court approved the decision of the ALJ. On a motion for alteration or amendment of the District Court's order, the District Court, relying upon In re Connell v. St., 280 M 491, 930 P2d 88 (1997), held that the delay between Emery's 1991 request for administrative review and the 1996 hearing before the ALJ violated Emery's right to due process of law and his right to the administration of justice without delay. The Supreme Court reviewed its decision in Connell and pointed out that in that case, 44 months elapsed before the ALJ made a decision in response to Connell's request for administrative review of a CSED NOI and that the 44-month lapse denied Connell his constitutional rights to due process and administration of justice without delay. In contrast, the Supreme Court held that the NOI served upon Emery in 1995 in the case before it was a separate proceeding from the NOI served upon him in 1991 and was not, as interpreted by the District Court, a continuation of the 1991 proceeding because the 1991 proceeding was discontinued once the IRS failed to make an interception of the federal tax refund owed to Emery. Further, the Supreme Court pointed out that the various administrative remedies, such as state debt offsets, license suspension, warrants for distraint, and state income withholding, are all separate remedies for the CSED to pursue, and election of one remedy does not preclude pursuit of another remedy after, or at the same time as, the remedy chosen by the CSED until the debt assigned to the CSED is fully paid. Any of the remedies, the Supreme Court held, were subject to the 10-year statute of limitations provided in 27-2-201. The Supreme Court therefore held that because the lapse of time in the case before it was between different proceedings and not within one proceeding and the lapse of time within the 1995 proceeding was reasonable, Emery's right of due process and right to administration of justice without delay were not violated. The Supreme Court also held that because Emery had no right under Montana law to a hearing when no action was being taken by the CSED against him, the failure of the CSED to grant a hearing did not implicate Emery's rights of due process and administration of justice. In response to Emery's argument that the CSED did not act soon enough in initiating its collection action, the Supreme Court held that Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const., imposes no requirement that the CSED act "speedily and without delay" within the 10-year statute of limitations provided in 27-2-201, noting that imposition of such a requirement would effectively eliminate that 10-year limitation period. For these reasons, the Supreme Court reversed the decision made by the District Court that Emery's constitutional rights were violated by the decision of the CSED. Emery v. St., 286 M 376, 950 P2d 764, 54 St. Rep. 1454 (1997).

Writ of Review: A proceeding in District Court for Writ of Review to set aside a judgment of a Justice's Court is an "action" and the Statute of Limitations expressed by 27-2-215 (renumbered 27-2-231) applies thereto. Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937), overruled in Jones v. District Court, 2001 MT 276, 307 M 305, 37 P3d 682 (2001), to the extent that Shaffroth holds that the general 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231 applies to all writs of review authorized in 27-2-102 because pursuant to former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), a petition for a writ of certiorari to review contempt proceedings must be filed with the Clerk of the District Court within 30 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding, unless the state is a party, in which case the petition must be filed within 60 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding.

Mandate: An application for a Writ of Mandate to compel the reinstatement of a discharged policeman is a special proceeding of a civil nature. State ex rel. Bennetts v. Duncan, 47 M 447, 133 P 109 (1932).

Surety's Right to Contribution: The right of a surety who has paid a judgment against his principal, himself, and other sureties to enforce contribution from a cosurety exists so long as the judgment is alive; and such a proceeding is not an ordinary action within the meaning of this section. NW. Nat'l Bank v. Great Falls Opera House Co., 23 M 1, 57 P 440 (1899).

Case Notes

Limitations Period Not Tolloed — Agent Discovered Elements of Claim — Late Claim Properly Dismissed: A purchaser of real estate and an interest in a partnership sued the seller, alleging failure to disclose the existence of a reserve oil pit before the sale. The purchaser's claims were time-barred because knowledge of the reserve pit was imputed to the purchaser based on knowledge of the purchaser's agent. The commencement of the period of limitation was when the agent discovered the elements of the claim or cause of action. Summary judgment was proper on the seller's counterclaim for enforcement of the purchase agreement because no issues of material fact existed regarding whether it was a valid contract. Payne v. Hall, 2020 MT 46, 399 Mont. 91, 458 P.3d 1001.

Agency Letter Seeking Repayment of Alleged Medicaid Overpayments — No Action Commenced: Following an audit, the Department of Public Health and Human Services determined that the petitioner, a Medicaid medical supplier, had been overpaid and sent a letter to the petitioner requesting repayment. After a fair hearing in which the hearings officer upheld the Department's overpayment determination and concluded that an 8-year statute of limitations applied to the overpayment claim, the petitioner sought judicial review. The District Court concluded that the 2-year statute of limitations found in 27-2-211 applied and that the action was commenced when the Department sent the overpayment letter to the petitioner. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, noting that the statute of limitations issue was relevant only if an action had been commenced. Because the Department had merely sent a letter and had never filed a complaint, it had not commenced an action within the meaning of 27-2-102 and Rule 3, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). Independence Medical Supply, Inc. v. Dept. of Pub. Health and Human Serv., 2018 MT 57, 391 Mont. 1, 414 P.3d 781.

Statute of Limitations — Did Not Run Until Lawsuit — Contract Reformation Based on Mutual Mistake: The District Court did not err by concluding that the parties' mutual mistake claims involving agreements related to the sale of land and usage rights were not barred by the statute of limitations. While the grounds and reasoning cited by the District Court may not have been individually sufficient to satisfy the obligation of ordinary diligence, when the circumstances were considered as a whole, the Supreme Court concluded that the claims could not have been discovered and thus accrual could not have occurred until the lawsuit, rendering the mutual mistake claim timely filed. Because the District Court proceeded to consider contract reformation on the ground of mutual mistake, the Supreme Court did not consider whether the District Court erred in also concluding that the statute of limitations did not bar the fraud claims. In re Platt, 2018 MT 43, 390 Mont. 338, 413 P.3d 818.

Vexatious Litigant — Dismissal of Complaint Proper Because of Res Judicata and Statute of Limitations: The defendant was originally convicted of aggravated kidnapping and sexual intercourse without consent. This case involved the admission of a taped conversation between the defendant and the victim. His conviction was affirmed in St. v. Belanus, 2010 MT 204, 357 Mont. 463, 240 P.3d 1021. The defendant subsequently sued various people involved in the case, including but not limited to the victim, attorneys, judge, and law enforcement officers. He appealed the majority of these cases, without success, to the Montana Supreme Court, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, and the United States Supreme Court. More than 4 years after his trial, the defendant then sued in District Court. His allegations stemmed from the underlying criminal case and use of the audio recording. The District Court granted summary judgment for several defendants because the complaint was barred by the statute of limitations and res judicata applied. Additionally, the District Court declared the defendant a vexatious litigant. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, finding that the complaint was time barred by the statute of limitations, that res judicata applied to some of the defendants because the claim was similar to his previous lawsuits, and that the District Court had properly found him a vexatious litigant. Belanus v. Potter, 2017 MT 95, 387 Mont. 298, 394 P.3d 906.

No Duty to Recover Funds Under Contract — No Breach of Contract or Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing — Statute of Limitations for Equitable Relief Expired: The plaintiff contracted with Bancard Services, Inc. (Bancard), one of the defendants, for Bancard to provide processing services to the plaintiff's ATMs located throughout Montana. Bancard subcontracted with a third-party payment processor to assist in processing transactions, and an agent of the third party made a data entry error that transferred $285,000 of the plaintiff's funds to an out-of-state individual, Leland Ruzicka, and B&B Lounge (collectively Ruzicka), also defendants in the case. Bancard was able to recover all but $35,000 of the plaintiff's funds. Eventually, the plaintiff sued both Bancard and Ruzicka for the outstanding $35,000. The plaintiff also filed several contractual related claims against Bancard. The District Court granted summary judgment to the defendants because Bancard did not have an obligation to recover the funds under the parties' contract and because the statute of limitations had expired on the unjust enrichment claims against Ruzicka. Grizzly Sec. Armored Express, Inc. v. Bancard Serv., LLC, 2016 MT 287, 385 Mont. 307, 384 P.3d 68.

Application of Continuing Tort Doctrine — Reasonable Abatement of Nuisance or Trespass Determinative, Not Migration — Prospect of Abatement — Issue of Fact: The plaintiffs were property owners in Opportunity, located close to a former copper smelter. They sued the successor in interest to the original smelter operator for damages for the cost of restoring their properties to their original state and made claims of nuisance and trespass, among others. The District Court granted the defendant summary judgment based, in part, on the fact that the plaintiffs could not offer evidence of continued migration of the contaminants. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the feasibility of reasonable abatement of the property determines whether a nuisance or trespass is temporary or permanent, not the continuing migration of contaminants. The Supreme Court also concluded that whether abatement is reasonable is an issue of fact. Because there were material issues of genuine fact as to whether abatement was reasonable, the Supreme Court reversed the grant of summary judgment and remanded the case. Christian v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2015 MT 255, 380 Mont. 495, 358 P.3d 131.

Application of Continuing Tort Doctrine to Strict Liability and Negligence Claims — Not Unjust Enrichment: The plaintiffs were property owners in Opportunity, located close to a former copper smelter. They sued the successor in interest to the original smelter operator for damages for the cost of restoring their properties to their original state and filed claims of nuisance and trespass, as well as strict liability, negligence, and unjust enrichment. The plaintiffs argued that the continuing tort doctrine should be applied to all of their claims. After the District Court granted summary judgment on other grounds in favor of the defendant, the plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court ruled that the doctrine could be applied to the claims of strict liability and negligence, but not to the unjust enrichment claim. Christian v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2015 MT 255, 380 Mont. 495, 358 P.3d 131.

No Fraudulent Representation — Discovery Rule Exception Inapplicable: The plaintiffs were property owners in Opportunity, located close to a former copper smelter. They sued the successor in interest to the original smelter operator for damages for the cost of restoring their properties to their original state and filed several claims. The District Court granted the defendant summary judgment based, in part, on the expiration of the statute of limitations on the claims. On appeal, the plaintiffs argued, as they had to the District Court, that the defendant prevented them from learning of the extent of the damage to their property and therefore the discovery rule exception applied to their claims. The record, however, demonstrated only that the parties disagreed on whether the EPA-approved residential standards were appropriate, and this difference of opinion did not render the defendant's actions fraudulent. Christian v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2015 MT 255, 380 Mont. 495, 358 P.3d 131.

Claims Under Montana Consumer Protection Act — Barred by Statute of Limitations: The defendant constructed a home for the plaintiff in 2001. Each winter after the home's construction, the plaintiff noticed water damage. Each time, the defendant would inspect the damage and report that he had repaired the problem. In 2012, the plaintiff hired a roofing contractor to inspect the roof and learned that the water damage was caused by improper ventilation of the roof, an issue never identified by the defendant. The plaintiff sued the defendant, alleging violations of the Montana Consumer Protection Act (MCPA), and argued that the statute of limitation should be tolled because the defendant's inspections had prevented him from discovering the cause of injury. The District Court dismissed the claim. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the District Court had erred in dismissing claims involving the MCPA that were alleged to have occurred within the 2 years prior to the lawsuit's filing date and remanded to the District Court for further proceedings on the remaining claims. Hein v. Sott, 2015 MT 196, 380 Mont. 85, 353 P.3d 494.

Erroneous Application of Statute of Limitations — Insurance Dispute: In an insurance dispute in which plaintiffs sued the defendant insurer to contest the denial of untimely filed claims, the District Court erred in applying the statute of limitations from the date the plaintiffs submitted their claim to the insurer rather than from the date the lawsuit was filed. The accrual of a claim does not depend on when a claim is submitted to an insurer; rather, a claim accrues when all elements of that claim have occurred. Estate of Gleason v. Cent. United Life Ins. Co., 2015 MT 140, 379 Mont. 219, 350 P.3d 349.

Malpractice Claims Against Attorney — Part of Bankruptcy Estate — Accrual Prior to Bankruptcy Filing: The plaintiff had a $4 million defamation award against him. The plaintiff stated that the defendant attorney advised him he could discharge the judgment in bankruptcy and maintain his appeal of the defamation award. During the plaintiff's bankruptcy proceeding, he sued the defendants for legal malpractice. The malpractice suit and potential proceeds were listed as part of the bankruptcy estate, which the defendants purchased. At issue was whether the facts concerning the malpractice suit accrued prior to the bankruptcy petition. The District Court granted summary judgment to the defendants. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, finding that the plaintiff's claims against the defendants accrued at or before the filing of the bankruptcy petition and that the malpractice suit was therefore an asset of the estate in the bankruptcy, the trustee was authorized to sell it, and the plaintiff did not own the suit. Stokes v. Duncan, 2015 MT 92, 378 Mont. 433, 346 P.3d 353.

Facts Constituting Claim Discoverable in Exercise of Due Diligence and Lack of Knowledge of Existence of Claim — No Delay in Running of Statute of Limitations: Two ranching organizations and an individual farmer filed multiple claims against the investor related to tenant-in-common security investments. The District Court granted summary judgment to the investor based on statute of limitations grounds. Pursuant to 27-2-102, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in granting summary judgment in favor of the investor because the facts constituting the ranchers' and farmer's claims against the investor were discoverable by exercising due diligence and that a lack of knowledge of the existence of the claims does not delay the running of the statute of limitations. Thieltges v. Royal Alliance Assocs., 2014 MT 247, 376 Mont. 319, 334 P.3d 382.

Discovery Rule Applicable to Failed Structuring of Property Exchange by Accountant: Plaintiffs brought tort claims against the defendant accountant after the defendant structured a tax-deferred property exchange that failed. The District Court granted summary judgment to the defendant, concluding that the statute of limitations began to run on the date that the properties for the exchange had been bought and sold and that plaintiffs' claims were filed outside of the statute of limitations. The Supreme Court reversed, concluding that the discovery rule applied because the injury to the plaintiffs was concealing in nature due to the complexity of the property exchange and the defendant initially withheld information from the plaintiffs about the failed property exchange. Therefore, the statute of limitations did not begin to run until the defendant advised the plaintiffs that they were subject to significant tax liability because he had given them incorrect advice about the property exchange. Draggin' Y Cattle Co., Inc. v. Addink, 2013 MT 319, 372 Mont. 334, 312 P.3d 451.

Existence of Factual Issues Regarding Whether Plaintiffs Had Notice of Serious Structural Problems: Centennial Log Homes constructed a custom log home for the plaintiffs in 2001. The plaintiffs discovered several flooring, mold, and aesthetic problems, including a building code violation, in 2004 and 2005 that they considered to be routine maintenance issues. They discovered more serious structural problems in 2008 and eventually had the home deconstructed in 2010, revealing further problems. The plaintiffs argued that their claims should not have been barred by the 2004 and 2005 discoveries; rather, the statute of limitations should be tolled under the discovery rule. The District Court granted summary judgment for Centennial, finding that the repairs in 2004 and 2005 should have put the plaintiffs on notice that a further inspection was needed and would have revealed the structural defects. The Supreme Court reversed, finding that genuine factual issues existed regarding whether the plaintiffs were put on notice of the more serious structural problems by 2005, including whether they reasonably should have become aware of the severity of the problems prior to the home's deconstruction. Further, the court found that there were issues of fact regarding whether the problems experienced in 2004 and 2005 were related to the more serious problems discovered later. Johnston v. Centennial Log Homes & Furnishings, Inc., 2013 MT 179, 370 Mont. 529, 305 P.3d 781.

Summary Judgment Inappropriate When Genuine Issues of Material Fact Exist Regarding Claim Accrual Date: A federal bank law enforcement officer alleged in a negligence action that he sustained injuries from the defendant during an altercation at work, but a dispute arose over when the claim accrued. In reversing the District Court's award of summary judgment to the defendant, the Supreme Court held that summary judgment is inappropriate when there is conflicting evidence over when the statute of limitations began to run. Siebken v. Voderberg, 2012 MT 291, 367 Mont. 344, 291 P.3d 572, following Nelson v. Nelson, 2002 MT 151, 310 Mont. 329, 50 P.3d 139.

Statute of Limitations Commenced on Date Plaintiffs Learned They Could Not Obtain Conventional Financing — Damage Not Self-Concealing — Dismissal Proper: In May 2007, the plaintiffs and the defendant bank entered into a 6-month construction loan agreement and the bank conditionally agreed to a 30-year mortgage. After the home was completed in September 2007, the bank refused to close on the mortgage because the credit of one of the plaintiffs had significantly deteriorated. Consequently, the plaintiffs used a variety of short-term financing options in March 2008, which they attempted to refinance in August 2009. At that time, they learned that the bank had not released the deed of trust and there was further deterioration of one plaintiff's credit score. In March 2011, the plaintiffs filed numerous claims against the bank, including one for punitive damages. The District Court granted the bank's motion to dismiss based on the expiration of the 3-year statute of limitations. On appeal, the plaintiffs argued that their claim did not accrue, and that the statute of limitations did not begin to run, until the parties signed loan documents in March 2008. The bank argued that the statute of limitations began to run in September 2007 when the plaintiffs learned that they could not obtain conventional financing from the bank. The Supreme Court agreed with the bank and affirmed the District Court's dismissal, noting that the damage to the plaintiffs was not self-concealing and therefore tolling was not warranted. Pederson v. Rocky Mtn. Bank, 2012 MT 48, 364 Mont. 258, 272 P.3d 663.

Certified Question — Statute of Limitations Tolled When Pollution Continues to Migrate and Is Reasonably Abatable: On a certified question from federal District Court, the Supreme Court was asked to consider whether, with respect to the continuing tort doctrine, the statute of limitations is tolled for property damage claims for nuisance and trespass resulting from contamination that has stabilized, continues to migrate, and is not readily or easily abatable. The Supreme Court concluded that contamination that has stabilized but continues to migrate will toll the statute of limitations until the harm can no longer be reasonably abated. An injury is permanent once it can no longer be reasonably abated. Burley v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2012 MT 28, 364 Mont. 77, 273 P.3d 825. See also Christian v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2015 MT 255, 380 Mont. 495, 358 P.3d 131.

Statute of Limitations — Causal Connection Between Smoking and Lung Disease Prior to Diagnosis of Disease: Relying on the 3-year statute of limitations, a plaintiff filed a complaint on August 2, 2004, alleging state aftercare workers supplied cigarettes to her from 1973 to 1975, which contributed to a diagnosis of chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD) on August 2, 2001. Although the parties stipulated that COPD is by its nature self-concealing, the plaintiff was advised repeatedly throughout the 1990s about the causal connection between smoking and lung disease. The District Court did not err when it concluded that the plaintiff had discovered or should have discovered that smoking caused lung disease prior to the diagnosis of COPD. Chriske v. State ex rel. Dept. of Corrections, 2010 MT 149, 357 Mont. 28, 235 P.3d 588.

Specific Statute of Limitations Related to Fraudulent Sale of Securities Controlling Over General Statute of Limitations on Filing Claim: The District Court dismissed plaintiffs' Ponzi scheme claim concerning sale of unregistered securities in violation of 30-10-202, based on the statute of limitations in 30-10-307. The Supreme Court affirmed. The specific provisions of 30-10-307, requiring that a securities fraud claim be brought within 2 years after the violation occurs, control over the general statute of limitations in 27-2-102, requiring that a fraud action be brought within 2 years after discovery of the fraud or not more than 5 years after the transaction on which the claim is based. Plaintiffs' claim was not brought within 2 years after the unregistered security was offered or sold, so the statute of limitations in 30-10-307 was not met and the claim was properly dismissed. Mosley v. Am. Express Fin. Advisors, Inc., 2010 MT 78, 356 Mont. 27, 230 P.3d 479.

Failure to Bring Fraud Action Within Time Claim Accrues — Statute of Limitations Precluding Fraud Action: Plaintiff discovered or reasonably should have discovered within 6 months of purchasing a trailer park in May 2003 that a fraud may have been perpetrated regarding the profitability of the park and the condition of the park water system, but plaintiff did not bring a fraud or misrepresentation claim until 2007. The actual and constructive fraud claims were therefore precluded by the statute of limitations in 27-2-203, which requires an action for fraud to be commenced within 2 years. Plaintiffs' claims were properly dismissed as untimely. Deschamps v. Treasure St. Trailer Ct., Ltd., 2010 MT 74, 356 Mont. 1, 230 P.3d 800.

Sufficient Evidence of Potential Fraudulent Concealment — Jury Consideration of Statute of Limitations Proper: Fraudulent concealment is the type of question appropriate for resolution by a trier of fact. Therefore, when the record revealed sufficient evidence of potential fraudulent concealment, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's decision to send the question of the applicability of the statute of limitations to the jury. Textana, Inc. v. Klabzuba Oil & Gas, 2009 MT 401, 353 M 442, 222 P3d 580 (2009). See also Kitchen Krafters, Inc. v. Eastside Bank of Mont., 242 M 155, 789 P2d 567 (1990).

Two-Year Statute of Limitations Applicable to Filing Suit for Volunteer Fire Department Partial Pension: Marx served as a volunteer firefighter from 1979 to 1995, when he was terminated for failure to complete training requirements. About 6 months after termination, Marx requested the firefighters relief association board to grant him a partial pension. In 2004 Marx was notified by the board that his request was denied pursuant to 19-18-602(5) because there was no other factor beyond Marx's control that would qualify him for a partial or reduced pension. Marx then filed suit against the association for damages and declaratory relief. The association moved for summary judgment on grounds that Marx had failed to file suit within 2 years of termination as required in 27-2-211. The District Court granted summary judgment for the association and Marx appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Despite Marx's assertion that under 27-2-301 the time for running the statute of limitations did not begin until his request was formally denied, the District Court did not incorrectly determine the accrual date of Marx's cause of action. Marx cited no authority for the proposition that a demand was necessary to entitle him to maintain an action for a partial pension, and the Supreme Court declined to insert into 27-2-301 a requirement for formal repudiation or denial of a claim. Rather, the statute of limitation began to run from the time Marx knew the facts that would have justified a demand for the pension. The right to a service pension is a liability created by statute as contemplated in 27-2-211, and the association met its initial burden of establishing both the absence of genuine issues of material fact and its entitlement to judgment as a matter of law, while Marx failed to establish the existence of a genuine issue of material fact. Marx v. Belgrade Volunteer Firefighters Relief Ass'n, 2008 MT 410, 347 M 256, 198 P3d 247 (2008), distinguishing Kosty v. Lewis, 319 F2d 744 (D.C. Cir. 1963), Martin v. Constr. Laborer's Pension Trust, 947 F2d 1381 (9th Cir. 1991), and Wetzel v. Lou Ehlers Cadillac Group, 222 F3d 643 (9th Cir. 2000).

Subrogation Claim for Environmental Remediation Costs Barred by Statute of Limitations: The Montana Petroleum Tank Release Compensation Board submitted a claim to a gas station owner's insurer for reimbursement of environmental remediation expenses. The claim was denied, and the Board filed an action against the owner's insurer and the insurer of a subsequent lessee. In its denial letter, one insurer asserted that because 12 years elapsed before the Board brought its claim, the statute of limitations had run on the claim. The District Court granted summary judgment to both insurers, and the Board appealed. The Supreme Court noted that even if the Board had a claim against the lessee's insurer through subrogation of the owner's insurer's rights, the statute of limitations began to run from the time that all the elements accrued for the owner's insurer to file a claim with the lessee's insurer. The longest possible statute of limitations that could apply was 8 years, so the lessee's insurer was correct that any claim that the Board may have had against it was barred by the statute of limitations. Mont. Petroleum Tank Release Comp. Bd. v. Capitol Indem. Co., 2006 MT 133, 332 M 352, 137 P3d 522 (2006).

Statute of Limitations on Claim for Disability Insurance Cost of Living Adjustments: Rodgers purchased a disability policy from defendant in 1983. On the application, Rodgers checked a box requesting cost of living adjustments (COLA), but the request was turned down by defendant because a policy with COLA benefits required a higher premium. Defendant received a document purportedly signed by Rodgers, requesting that the COLA rider be deleted. Defendant then issued a policy without the benefits, and Rodgers began paying premiums on the policy without COLA benefits. Rodgers raised no issue or complaint regarding the lack of COLA payments until 2002, when he sued defendant for COLA payments. The District Court summarily dismissed the claim, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Rodgers had been receiving monthly disability payments, without COLA benefits, since 1989, and because the payments did not increase, it should have been clear to Rodgers that he was not receiving COLA increases. By the time that Rodgers' claim was filed in 2002, the statute of limitations for the claim had expired, and summary judgment for defendant was proper. Rodgers v. MONY Life Ins. Co., 2005 MT 290, 329 M 289, 124 P3d 137 (2005).

Applicable Immunity Is Immunity When Injury Is Manifested and Not Immunity When Injury Occurred — Sovereign Immunity Held Bar to Liability and Not Lack of Duty: Plaintiffs suffered injury from inhaling dust-borne vermiculite, a known carcinogen, while working in a vermiculite mine in Libby, Montana, beginning in the late 1950s or early 1960s, but their injuries were not manifested until 1998 when plaintiffs were diagnosed as suffering from various forms of cancer induced by the dust present in the mine. The Supreme Court, noting that the question of what version of sovereign immunity applies was an issue of first impression, examined case law from other jurisdictions and determined that it must construe the "suit for injury" language of Art. II, sec. 18, Mont. Const. That language, the Supreme Court held, incorporates the concept of accrual of any injury. The court further held that in determining when an injury accrues, Montana follows the "discovery rule", meaning that a legally recognized injury does not accrue until the injury is discovered. Because under this section no cause of action accrues until the injury is discovered, the court reasoned that the version of sovereign immunity that should be applied is the version in effect at the time that the miners' injuries accrued in 1998. By 1998, the defense of sovereign immunity had long been abolished by the constitutional language effective July 1, 1973. The Supreme Court also stated, in response to the dissenting opinion and citing Jacques v. Mont. Nat'l Guard, 199 M 493, 649 P2d 1319 (1982), and Brown v. Ehler, 255 M 140, 841 P2d 510 (1992), that sovereign immunity, a type of affirmative defense, is a matter of avoidance of a legal duty, not the absence of the duty itself. Orr v. St., 2004 MT 354, 324 M 391, 106 P3d 100 (2004), followed in Denke v. Shoemaker, 2008 MT 418, 347 M 322, 198 P3d 284 (2008).

Tolling of Statute of Limitations During Statutorily Required Workers' Compensation Mediation: After waiting more than 9 months after a mediator issued a report, Preston petitioned the Workers' Compensation Court for a hearing regarding the reopening of a formerly settled claim. At the hearing, the court determined that a mutual mistake of fact existed concerning the severity of Preston's mental illness that arose as the result of an industrial accident. However, the court also concluded that reopening the claim based on the mutual mistake of fact was time-barred under the 2-year statute of limitations in 27-2-203. On appeal, the Supreme Court disagreed. The statute of limitations did not begin to run until Preston became aware of the mistake of fact, which occurred during the 62-day statutorily mandated mediation. Given that mediation was mandatory and that Preston had to wait until satisfying the dispute resolution requirements to petition the Workers' Compensation Court, the statute of limitations tolled during mediation and Preston had an additional 62 days to file the petition. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Preston v. Transp. Ins. Co., 2004 MT 339, 324 M 225, 102 P3d 527 (2004).

Statute of Limitations Calculated as Ending One Day Prior to Start Day in Next Calendar Year: Plaintiff was injured on December 24, 1999, and plaintiff filed a complaint on December 26, 2002, contending that because December 25, 2002, was a holiday, the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-204 extended to December 26, 2002, so the complaint was timely filed. The District Court held that the complaint was time-barred and granted defendant summary judgment on the pleadings. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Generally, a statute of limitations begins to run when a claim or cause of action accrues. Plaintiff's cause of action accrued on December 24, 1999, the date of injury. Under former Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the day of the event is not included in computing any period of time, so the statute of limitations was counted from December 25, 1999. A year is defined as a calendar year, which is a 365-day period starting on a given day and ending on the date 1 day prior to the start day in the next calendar year. Thus, plaintiff's cause of action began on December 25, 1999, and ended on December 24, 2002, which was neither a weekend day nor a legal holiday. The statute of limitations was properly calculated, and summary judgment was proper because plaintiff's complaint was not timely filed. Bosch v. Town Pump, Inc., 2004 MT 330, 324 M 138, 102 P3d 32 (2004).

Legal Malpractice Claim Timely Filed — Summary Judgment Inappropriate When Date of Discovery and Accrual Disputed: The Watkins estate filed a legal malpractice claim against an attorney who set up the trust. The District Court found that the 3-year statute of limitations had run on filing the suit and granted summary judgment for the attorney. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. After concluding that the statute of limitations does not begin to run until both the discovery rule and the accrual rule have been satisfied, the court examined the applicability of both rules. The claim was filed in 1997, but the estate did not discover the attorney's negligence until 1995, which was excusable because: (1) the trustee relied on the fiduciary relationship and trusted that the attorney's assertion that the trust was revocable was correct, even though it was irrevocable; (2) of the complexity of the estate plan, which was difficult even for experts to understand and was beyond the understanding of a layperson; and (3) the attorney may have fraudulently concealed the malpractice. Further, because the trustee continued to treat the trust as revocable in reliance on the attorney's advice, the estate did not sustain any actual damages until the irrevocable nature of the trust was discovered and trust beneficiaries brought suit to remove the trustee in 1996, well within the statute of limitations. The attorney's contention that res judicata and estoppel barred the present suit because the beneficiaries also maintained a separate suit for damages also failed because neither the parties nor the issues were the same. Summary judgment was thus improper, and the case was remanded. Estate of Watkins v. Hedman, Hileman & Lacosta, 2004 MT 143, 321 M 419, 91 P3d 1264 (2004), following Uhler v. Doak, 268 M 191, 885 P2d 1297 (1994). See also Watkins Trust v. Lacosta, 2004 MT 144, 321 M 432, 92 P3d 620 (2004).

Legal Malpractice — Nexus Between Fraudulent Concealment and Discovery Rule: In the context of legal malpractice, a nexus exists between a defendant's fraudulent concealment and the question of whether a plaintiff should have discovered the defendant's negligent act. Estate of Watkins v. Hedman, Hileman & Lacosta, 2004 MT 143, 321 M 419, 91 P3d 1264 (2004). See also Watkins Trust v. Lacosta, 2004 MT 144, 321 M 432, 92 P3d 620 (2004).

Statute of Limitations in Legal Malpractice Action to Run Upon Satisfaction of Both Discovery Rule and Accrual Rule: The law in Montana for legal malpractice actions is that the statute of limitations does not begin to run until both the discovery rule and the accrual rule have been satisfied—in other words, until the negligent act was or should have been discovered, and all elements of the legal malpractice claim, including damages, have occurred. Estate of Watkins v. Hedman, Hileman & Lacosta, 2004 MT 143, 321 M 419, 91 P3d 1264 (2004). See also Watkins Trust v. Lacosta, 2004 MT 144, 321 M 432, 92 P3d 620 (2004).

No Error in Denial of Amended Complaint When Underlying Claim Moot: Plaintiff sought to file an amended complaint based on allegations of defendants' fraud in treating plaintiff's pet dog at defendants' animal clinic. The District Court denied the amended complaint, and plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The 2-year statute of limitations on the fraud claim had run, rendering the fraud claim futile, so denial of the amended complaint was not an abuse of discretion. Hawkins v. Harney, 2003 MT 58, 314 M 384, 66 P3d 305 (2003).

Legal Malpractice Action Not Brought Within Statutory Time Limit — Summary Dismissal Proper — Damage Rule Inapplicable: Plaintiff filed a legal malpractice action against defendant on December 17, 1999, 3 years and 8 days after the date that plaintiff's damages occurred. The District Court dismissed the claim as untimely under 27-2-206. On appeal, plaintiff contended that under the damage rule set out in Schneider v. Leaphart, 228 M 483, 743 P2d 613 (1987), and Uhler v. Doak, 268 M 191, 885 P2d 1297 (1994), the statute of limitations should have been tolled until notice of damages was actually received on December 23, 1996, which would have allowed filing until December 23, 1999. The Supreme Court disagreed. The damage rule is not the accepted standard in Montana. Under the statute of limitations for legal malpractice actions in 27-2-206, the time for filing is not tolled by a plaintiff's failure to discover damages, but runs from the date that plaintiff discovered or should through reasonable diligence have discovered the act or omission causing the damages. The claim or cause of action accrued on December 9, 1996, and the complaint filed on December 17, 1999, was beyond the statute of limitations, so summary dismissal for defendant was proper. Spolar v. Datsopoulos, 2003 MT 54, 314 M 364, 66 P3d 284 (2003).

Statute of Limitations Tolled Until Discovery of Self-Concealing Injury — Exposure to Farm Chemicals and Injection: While assisting her former husband with farm duties in 1989, Elizabeth Nelson was exposed to farm chemicals and pesticides and was accidentally injected with bovine ecthyma vaccine. She lost consciousness briefly following the injection but recovered and continued assisting with sheep inoculations the rest of the day. From 1989 through 1998, Elizabeth received extensive medical evaluations and treatments for numerous physical ailments that either surfaced or worsened subsequent to the exposure to chemicals and the vaccine, but doctors were unable to pinpoint the cause and effect relationship between the ailments and the exposure until 1996. Elizabeth filed a complaint in 1998, but her former husband moved for summary judgment because Elizabeth allegedly knew of her injuries for more than 3 years before the action was filed. The District Court agreed that the claim was barred by the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-204. Elizabeth appealed. In Hando v. PPG Indus., Inc., 236 M 493, 771 P2d 956 (1989), the Supreme Court held that the onset of the statute of limitations is determined by applying the discovery rule and establishing when the injured person knew, or in the exercise of due diligence should have known, of the facts constituting the cause of action. However, the District Court distinguished Hando because Elizabeth's injuries following the injection were obvious and immediate, unlike the self-concealing injuries in Hando that developed over time. The Supreme Court disagreed. Although Elizabeth suspected the cause of the injuries and diligently sought medical treatment and diagnosis, there was no genuine issue of material fact that the actual causal connection was not discovered until 1996, well within the 3-year period prior to the filing of the claim. Thus, the complaint was timely filed as a matter of law, and summary judgment was improper, so the case was reversed for trial on the merits. Nelson v. Nelson, 2002 MT 151, 310 M 329, 50 P3d 139 (2002), distinguished in Chriske v. State ex rel. Dept. of Corrections, 2010 MT 149, 357 Mont. 28, 235 P.3d 588.

Statute of Limitations Does Not Begin to Run Until Concealed Facts Are or Should Be Discovered: The Logans argued that the Stroms' suit against them should have been dismissed on the basis that the 3-year statute of limitations had run. The Stroms had purchased the Logans' house and, upon having the roof fixed, discovered that the fire damage to the house had not been substantially repaired as the Logans' had indicated. The Supreme Court agreed with the lower court that the Stroms were not obligated to cut holes in the walls and ceilings to find any structural damage and therefore the statute of limitations did not begin to run until the Stroms discovered the damage upon having the roof repaired. Strom v. Logan, 2001 MT 30, 304 M 176, 18 P3d 1024 (2001).

No Extension of Statute of Repose Under Equity Principles: The omission that gave rise to Joyce's claim for legal malpractice was attorney Garnaas's failure to serve a summons within the 3-year time limit. Joyce claimed a second cause of action in Garnaas's failure to notify Joyce about the status of the case even after the underlying action was lost, arguing that the concealment of a claim is a separate tort that resets the start date for the statutes of limitations and repose. However, there was no separate claim in this case, in addition to the alleged malpractice, because that claim was subsumed within the initial malpractice. Joyce argued on appeal that the statute of repose should be extended in this case because: (1) an attorney who intentionally misleads a client regarding the true status of a case is not entitled to claim the benefit of the statute of repose because the attorney would be allowed to take advantage of his wrong, in violation of 1-3-208; or (2) equitable estoppel should bar Garnaas from taking advantage of his wrong while asserting a strict legal right, in violation of this section. In this case, however, principles of equity did not extend the otherwise absolute statute of repose. This section does not apply to legal malpractice actions. Further, Joyce's allegations of continuing fraudulent concealment failed because claims for damages against Garnaas for not informing Joyce of the legal malpractice related back to the date that the summons was not served. Thus, Joyce could not claim any actual damages separate from Garnaas's original omission, which was barred by the statute of repose. Joyce v. Garnaas, 1999 MT 170, 295 M 198, 983 P2d 369, 56 St. Rep. 661 (1999). See also Folsom v. Mont. Pub. Employees Ass'n, 2017 MT 204, 388 Mont. 307, 400 P.3d 706.

Negligence Claims Against Accountant Self-Concealing — Summary Judgment Improper: This section may toll the statute of limitations in a negligence case when the facts constituting the negligence claim are self-concealing, thereby preventing their discovery by plaintiff. Although Brevig's injury accrued on the date of his father's death, Brevig could not have known that he should have received the entire ranch upon his father's death until he learned that his accountant had withheld accurate information regarding the existence of an invalid trust agreement. Had the accountant disclosed the questionable validity of the trust prior to Brevig's father's death, Brevig would have had the opportunity to remedy the faulty trust. Nondisclosure of information is by its nature self-concealing. Because the facts constituting Brevig's negligence claims were self-concealing, the point at which Brevig discovered or should have discovered the negligence was a question for the jury. The statute of limitations would be tolled if Brevig could establish that the accountant withheld information or failed to disclose material facts. Summary judgment for the accountant was improperly granted, and the case was reversed for further proceedings. McCormick v. Brevig, 1999 MT 86, 294 M 144, 980 P2d 603, 56 St. Rep. 355 (1999), following Blackburn v. Blue Mtn. Women's Clinic, 286 M 60, 951 P2d 1 (1997). See also Draggin' Y Cattle Co., Inc. v. Addink, 2013 MT 319, 372 Mont. 334, 312 P.3d 451.

Latent Disease Case Comprising Exposure to Harmful Substance Over Extended Period — Continuing Tort Theory Contrary to Public Policy: Gomez contended that the exposure to chemical fumes that allegedly injured him occurred each day that he worked and was thus in the nature of a continuing tort. Because the date of last exposure to the fumes occurred on Gomez's last day of employment, he contended that the 3-year statute of limitations did not begin to run until that date. Citing Hando v. PPG Indus., Inc., 236 M 493, 771 P2d 956, 46 St. Rep. 532 (1989), the Supreme Court noted that, in latent disease or injury cases, the point at which the statute of limitations begins to run is ascertained by applying the discovery rule and determining when the injured person knew, or in the exercise of due diligence should have known, of the facts constituting the cause of action. The court declined to apply the continuing tort theory to delay the statute of limitations until the last injurious exposure because doing so could delay running of the limitations period indefinitely and is contrary to the general policy underlying statutes of limitations. Gomez was aware of his injuries, of the cause of those injuries, and of the fact that he had a cause of action by 1992 or earlier, but he did not take action on the claims until 1996, essentially sleeping on his rights. Thus, the District Court did not err in concluding that Gomez's complaint was not timely filed or in granting summary judgment to the state on grounds that Gomez's causes of action were barred by the statute of limitations. Gomez v. St., 1999 MT 67, 293 M 531, 975 P2d 1258, 56 St. Rep. 272 (1999), distinguishing Shors v. Branch, 221 M 390, 720 P2d 239, 43 St. Rep. 919 (1986), and Graveley Ranch v. Scherping, 240 M 20, 782 P2d 371 (1989).

Consulting Physician Diagnosis and Notice to Counsel Binding on Plaintiff — Late Claim Properly Dismissed: In 1992, after consulting with several medical doctors, Kaeding hired Baiz as his attorney to pursue a claim for damages from asbestosis against his employer, W.R. Grace & Co. (Grace). Baiz employed Whitehouse as a consulting physician, and Whitehouse, after reviewing several x-rays, sent Baiz a letter stating that the appearance of the x-rays was consistent with asbestosis. In 1996, Kaeding filed suit against Grace, alleging Grace caused his medical condition. After dismissal of the suit by the District Court for failure to commence the action within the statute of limitations, the Supreme Court, distinguishing Hando v. PPG Indus., Inc., 236 M 493, 771 P2d 956 (1989), in which a diagnosis confirming the plaintiff's suspicions as to her medical condition was not received for some time, held that Kaeding had at least a preliminary diagnosis of asbestosis as early as 1983, when Grace sent Kaeding the results of a breathing test. Although Kaeding argued that he was unaware of the contents of the letter sent to Baiz by Dr. Whitehouse, the Supreme Court concluded that because the employment of an attorney creates an agency relationship between the attorney and the attorney's client, Kaeding knew or should have known no later than the time of Dr. Whitehouse's letter to Baiz that he, Kaeding, had contracted asbestosis. Because suit was not brought within the time required by the statute of limitations after the letter from Dr. Whitehouse, the District Court had properly dismissed the claim. Kaeding v. W.R. Grace & Co., 1998 MT 160, 289 M 343, 961 P2d 1256, 55

St. Rep. 640 (1998), followed in Chriske v. State ex rel. Dept. of Corrections, 2010 MT 149, 357 Mont. 28, 235 P.3d 588.

Ability to Demonstrate Later Accrual of Action as Precluding Motion to Dismiss Based on Failure to State Claim — Human Rights Violation Claim: Powell was dismissed from his job with the Salvation Army on February 18, 1994, for the stated reason that he had been drinking on the job that day. Powell asserted that he learned months later that the dismissal was actually based on his past history of alcoholism, and he subsequently filed a grievance charge with the Human Rights Commission, alleging unlawful discrimination. The District Court granted a motion by the Salvation Army to dismiss for failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted for lack of jurisdiction based on Powell's failure to file a timely claim with the Commission. Under this section, the period of limitation applicable to any given cause of action begins to run when the claim or cause of action accrues, unless otherwise provided by statute. Pursuant to 49-2-501, a cause of action accrues under Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, when the alleged unlawful discriminatory practice occurred or was discovered. Applying the principles in Hash v. U.S. W. Communication Serv., 268 M 326, 886 P2d 442 (1994), the Supreme Court found that Powell may well be able to demonstrate that his cause of action did not accrue until sometime after his termination and that he had thus complied with the applicable 300-day limitation period. The allegations in Powell's complaint were sufficient to withstand the Salvation Army's motion to dismiss, and the District Court erred in concluding otherwise. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Powell v. Salvation Army, 287 M 99, 951 P2d 1352, 54 St. Rep. 1518 (1997), following Willson v. Taylor, 194 M 123, 634 P2d 1180 (1981).

No Affirmative Act by Health Provider Required to Toll Statute of Limitations: After becoming pregnant in 1989, Blackburn learned that the father was HIV positive. Blackburn tested negative for HIV but claims that she was informed by a nurse at the Butte-Silver Bow County Health Department (BSBHD) that, despite her HIV negative status, she would likely die within a few years and that her baby had a 50% chance of being born HIV positive. Based on this information, Blackburn made an appointment at the Blue Mountain Clinic in Missoula. Blackburn stated that she provided the clinic with written proof of her HIV negative status and informed the clinic counselor that she was seeking an abortion only because she feared that her baby would be born HIV positive. After obtaining the abortion, Blackburn consulted with an attorney in 1995 and learned, allegedly for the first time, that it was impossible for an HIV negative mother to give birth to an HIV positive baby. Blackburn filed an action, claiming that despite providing proof of her HIV negative status and her statement concerning her reason for seeking the abortion, neither the counselor, nurse, nor doctor at the clinic explained to her that an HIV negative mother could not deliver an HIV positive baby. Both the BSBHD and the Blue Mountain Clinic filed a motion to dismiss, claiming that Blackburn's claims were barred by the 5-year statute of limitations. When the District Court dismissed the action, Blackburn appealed. On appeal, the Supreme Court upheld the dismissal of the action against BSBHD and its doctor, but held that the District Court had erred in dismissing Blackburn's negligence claims against the Blue Mountain Clinic and its counselor. In its decision, the court overruled any suggestion in Major, Monroe, and Wisher that an affirmative act by the health care provider is required to trigger the tolling provisions of 27-2-205 or that 27-2-205 could be applied to toll the statute of limitations in a medical malpractice case. Blackburn v. Blue Mtn. Women's Clinic, 286 M 60, 951 P2d 1, 54 St. Rep. 1303 (1997).

Taxpayer Action Precluded by Statute of Limitations — Running of Statute Not Topped by Fiduciary Relationship With Department of Revenue — Knowledge of Accrual of Cause of Action Immaterial: Taxpayers brought a civil action against the Department of Revenue and others, seeking a declaratory judgment relief and refund of property taxes assessed in 1989 through 1992, based upon their rights as adjudicated in Dept. of Revenue v. Sheehy, 262 M 104, 862 P2d 1181 (1993). In that case, the Supreme Court found the stratified sales assessment ratio valuation adjustment in 15-7-111 to be unconstitutional. As a consequence of payment of the taxes and the Supreme Court's opinion in Sheehy, the taxpayers alleged that they were entitled to a court-ordered reduction in certain real property appraisals as well as a partial refund of their 1989 through 1992 real property taxes. The Department moved to dismiss the suit on the grounds that each claim was barred by the statute of limitations and that the taxpayers failed to state a claim for which relief could be granted. The District Court dismissed the suit. The Supreme Court noted that the applicable statute of limitations in 15-1-406 requires that suit be commenced within 90 days of imposition of the tax and that it did not matter whether the 1991 version of the statute or the 1995 version of the statute applied to the taxpayers' case because they both contained a similar statute of limitations. The Supreme Court responded to the taxpayers' argument, that the running of the statute of limitations was tolled because the Department acted as a fiduciary in holding the taxpayers' claimed reimbursement, by distinguishing the cases from other jurisdictions cited by the taxpayers upon which the taxpayers based their argument. The Supreme Court also noted that under some statutes, such as 15-8-115, the Department is actually a taxpayer's adversary. The Supreme Court also pointed out that contrary to the taxpayers' assertions, whether the taxpayers had knowledge of the accrual of their cause of action is immaterial because under this section, the statute of limitations begins to run when a cause of action accrues and lack of knowledge of the time of accrual of the cause of action does not postpone the running of the period of limitation. Samson v. St., 285 M 310, 948 P2d 232, 54 St. Rep. 1165 (1997).

General Rule for Beginning and Tolling of Limitation Period: The statute of limitations for an action based on fraud begins to run when the fraud occurs, unless the facts that form the basis for the alleged fraud are, by their nature, concealed. After the facts forming the basis for the alleged fraud are discovered, the limitation period is tolled if the defendant takes affirmative action to prevent the plaintiff from discovering the injury. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Insurance Agent's Ongoing Misrepresentation That Policies Would Be Self-Sustaining After Three to Five Years: Whole life insurance policies stating that premiums would be due for 20 years, 30 years, or a lifetime (depending on the policy) did not put the insureds on notice that the insurance agent's sales statements were fraudulent. The agent told the insureds that after only 3 to 5 years of premium payments (depending on the policy), the policy would be self-sustaining because premiums would be paid by dividends and other earnings. In fact, the policies stated that dividends could be used to help pay premiums. When the insurer sent the insureds premium payment notices after the 3 to 5 years ended, the insureds contacted the agent, who fraudulently stated that there was a mistake and that he would take care of it. When the insurer later sent the insureds notices stating that the insurer had advanced loans against the policies to pay the premiums, the agent again fraudulently told the insureds that there was a mistake and that he would take care of it. Eventually, each policy was either terminated or lost considerable value. For statute of limitations purposes, the insureds could not be held to have been put on notice (by the policy language) that they should have discovered, and did not discover, the fraud. In addition, the agent's statements at both points in time that there was a mistake that he would take care of tolled the statute of limitations. The insureds first actually learned of the fraud upon speaking directly to insurance company personnel, who told them that the agent had been fired, that there was no such thing as a policy that was self-sustaining after 3 to 5 years, that they should pay no premiums until their questions were resolved, and that there were problems other than the mistakes that the agent had claimed. The suit filed in 1991 was within the 2-year limitation period of 27-2-203. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

When Statute of Limitations or of Repose Tolled: A statute of limitations or a statute of repose is tolled by the commencement of an action, and an action is commenced when a complaint is filed. Webb v. T.D., 275 M 243, 912 P2d 202, 53 St. Rep. 117 (1996).

Statute of Limitations — Cannot Begin to Run at Start of Attorney-Client Relationship: Uhler retained Doak to advise and represent him in a dispute with his business associates. On May 16, 1989, Doak advised Uhler to not sue to enforce a stock buy out provision and bonus provision in his agreement with his associates. Uhler was unwilling to accept this advice and continued to meet with Doak to discuss the situation and to provide Doak with more information concerning the situation. On June 16, 1989, Uhler signed a resignation letter and on June 22, 1989, Uhler executed an agreement that waived the stock buy out and bonus provisions. On June 1, 1992, Uhler filed suit against Doak for malpractice. The lower court granted Doak summary judgment on the basis that Doak had advised Uhler to waive his stock buy out and bonus rights on May 16, 1989, and never changed that advice; therefore, the statute of limitations commenced to run at that time. The Supreme Court held that the statute of limitations does not commence to run until the cause of action accrues and that in the present case, Uhler suffered no damages until he signed the resignation letter on June 16, 1989. Uhler v. Doak, 268 M 191, 885 P2d 1297, 51 St. Rep. 1315 (1994), partially reversing Boles v. Simonton, 242 M 394, 791 P2d 755 (1990).

Plan, Prior to Wrongful Discharge Act's Effective Date, to Terminate Employee — Not Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Exempting Employee From Act: An employee could not successfully argue that because, prior to the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act's effective date, the employer had a plan to terminate him, the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing existing prior to the Act's effective date applied and the Act's remedies limitation did not apply to him. The covenant is not breached until termination of employment, which in this case occurred after the Act's effective date. Sullivan v. Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont., 268 M 71, 885 P2d 488, 51 St. Rep. 1193 (1994).

Statute of Limitations in Invasion of Privacy Action — Summary Judgment Proper: In 1988, Hentchel told Rucinsky that he had tape recorded her telephone conversations. She asked to hear them, and he agreed to play them, but neither party pursued the issue further. In 1992, Hentchel's wife found the tapes and notified Rucinsky, who brought a claim for invasion of privacy. The District Court granted Hentchel's summary judgment motion on grounds that the 3-year statute of limitations for an action on a liability not founded on an instrument in writing, as set out in 27-2-204, had run. Under this section, a cause of action accrues when all of its elements exist or have occurred, the right to maintain an action is complete, and a court is authorized to accept jurisdiction. Rucinsky claimed that because a reasonable person would not have taken Hentchel seriously when he originally confessed that the taping had occurred, the statute of limitations was tolled until the tapes were discovered. The Supreme Court affirmed summary judgment. That Rucinsky chose not to believe the confession did not negate the existence of the elements of her cause of action in 1988. She had the right to the cause of action when she was put on notice that the tapes existed, and the cause of action began regardless of whether she was convinced of the success of the action. Rucinsky v. Hentchel, 266 M 502, 881 P2d 616, 51 St. Rep. 887 (1994).

Statutory Limitation for Fraudulent Concealment: In 1988, Hentchel told Rucinsky that he had tape recorded her telephone conversations. Rucinsky claimed that the recordings were the only reliable evidence for her invasion of privacy claim and that because of Hentchel's fraudulent concealment of the tapes prior to their discovery in 1992, there was insufficient evidence to support a right to maintain an action and the statute of limitations was therefore tolled until the tapes were discovered in Hentchel's locked drawer. However, when Hentchel initially confessed to the phone tapping, Rucinsky declared that she would like to hear them sometime and Hentchel responded that he would play them for her. Rucinsky's argument that Hentchel fraudulently concealed the tapes failed because he told her that he had them and agreed to her request to hear them. Hentchel did not conceal the tapes; he maintained their control. Rucinsky v. Hentchel, 266 M 502, 881 P2d 616, 51 St. Rep. 887 (1994).

When Action Accrues — Knowledge of Facts: Action brought by landowner against chemical company for CERCLA costs and compensatory damages for injury to property was barred by the statute of limitations. Action accrued when the landowner had knowledge of the facts essential to the cause of action well before seizure of the land by the EPA. Mont. Pole & Treating Plant v. Laucks & Co., 993 F2d 676 (1993).

Failure of Personal Representative to Fully Disclose Specifics of Estate — Fraud Claim Timely Filed: As personal representative of his mother's estate, Kimm refused to communicate any monetary information to his sisters, who were also heirs, stating only that the assets of the estate would be shared equally among them all. In September 1988, Kimm filed an inventory and appraisal, indicating that most of the assets were held by him in joint tenancy and stating that he was entitled to the bulk of the estate. In April 1990, the sisters filed a claim of actual fraud and undue influence, which Kimm contended was untimely because the facts constituting the claim were discovered or through due diligence should have been discovered prior to April 1988. The District Court held the claim to be timely filed, accepting the sisters' assertion that they did not discover the facts until the inventory and appraisal was filed and that Kimm did not comply with the duty of full disclosure, instead taking affirmative steps to conceal the information necessary to bring the suit. Flikkema v. Kimm, 255 M 34, 839 P2d 1293, 49 St. Rep. 880 (1992).

Statute of Limitations on Action for Contribution or Indemnity: A cause of action for contribution or indemnity is distinct from the underlying cause of action, and the time from which the statute of limitations for such a cause of action begins to run is when the underlying claim, judgment, or settlement is paid or discharged. Linder v. Missoula County, 251 M 292, 824 P2d 1004, 49 St. Rep. 26 (1992), citing Schiess v. Bates, 693 P2d 440 (Idaho 1984). See also St. Paul Fire & Marine Co. v. Thompson, 152 M 396, 451 P2d 98 (1969).

When Wrongful Death Action Accrues: No claim exists until all elements of a cause of action occur pursuant to this section, and death is an element of a wrongful death claim under 27-1-513. Therefore, a wrongful death action in Montana accrues at the time of decedent's death. Carroll v. W.R. Grace & Co., 252 M 485, 830 P2d 1253, 49 St. Rep. 24 (1992).

When Actionable Cause for Termination Arises: On June 16, 1987, Martin was told her position was to be terminated as of July 17, 1987. After receiving notice, Martin discovered the position had not been eliminated but was to be filled by the company's new president's personal secretary from his former job. Martin filed suit alleging wrongful discharge, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and negligence. On July 1, 1987, the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act became effective. The District Court held that the Act precluded Martin's claims for breach of the implied covenant and negligence because the claim had not fully accrued until the date of termination. On appeal, Martin conceded that the claim for negligence was properly dismissed in light of Heltborg v. Modern Mach., 244 M 24, 795 P2d 954 (1990), but disputed dismissal of the breach of covenant claim, contending that a cause of action begins at the time of breach, which in this case occurred upon receipt of the notice of termination, and that all decisions made leading to the discharge occurred prior to notification. The Supreme Court, citing Del. St. College v. Ricks, 449 US 250, 66 L Ed 2d 431, 101 S Ct 498 (1980), and Chardon v. Fernandez, 454 US 6, 70 L Ed 2d 6, 102 S Ct 28 (1981), agreed with Martin that the cause of action accrued upon notice of termination and held that it was the decision to terminate and the act thereupon that caused the end result. It was at that point that legal redress could first be sought. Martin v. Special Resource Management, Inc., 246 M 181, 803 P2d 1086, 47 St. Rep. 2319 (1990), followed in Walch v. Univ. of Mont., 260 M 496, 861 P2d 179, 50 St. Rep. 1186 (1993), distinguishing Allison v. Jumping Horse Ranch, Inc., 255 M 410, 843 P2d 753 (1992).

Statute of Limitations Not Tolloed by Lack of Knowledge of Legal Rights: The defendant, Freed, and a party named Egeland were limited partners in a real estate development project. The limited partners had received SID bonds from the city of Cut Bank. Egeland used the bonds to secure his personal trading account with D.A. Davidson. In December 1983, Freed informed D.A. Davidson that Egeland had no authority to make personal use of the bonds. D.A. Davidson responded that it held an interest in the bonds superior to Freed's interest. On January 16, 1985, Freed filed suit against Egeland, and judgment was entered on July 9, 1987, giving all of the limited partnership's interest in the bonds to Freed. On January 22, 1985, Egeland filed a mandamus petition to force the city of Cut Bank to pay interest on the SID bonds. The city answered and petitioned to interplead Freed and D.A. Davidson as parties claiming an interest in the bonds. On March 3, 1987, the District Court issued an order interpleading Freed and D.A. Davidson. On March 16, 1987, Freed filed his responsive pleading, alleged an interest in the bonds superior to any other person, and accused D.A. Davidson of bad faith. The District Court, using December 21, 1983, as the triggering date, applied a 3-year statute of limitations to Freed's bad faith claim and granted D.A. Davidson's motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court agreed that the statute of limitations had run and pointed out that Freed could have filed a claim when D.A. Davidson refused to surrender the bonds to him. State ex rel. Egeland v. City Council of Cut Bank, 245 M 484, 803 P2d 609, 47 St. Rep. 2212 (1990).

Breach of Contract — Legal Wrong Independent of Actual Damage: The plaintiff alleged that the defendant bank breached the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The Supreme Court held that the action was barred by the running of the statute of limitations because the statute commences to run on a breach of contract claim at the time the breach occurs and not at the time, if any, when the plaintiff suffers an injury. Kitchen Krafters, Inc. v. Eastside Bank of Mont., 242 M 155, 789 P2d 567, 47 St. Rep. 602 (1990).

Cause of Action — Accruing Upon Injury, Not Breach of Duty: The plaintiff alleged that the defendant bank had breached its fiduciary duty to disclose when it failed to inform the plaintiff of the way certain escrow payments had been applied. The bank argued that the date the statute of limitations had commenced running was the date of the alleged breach of the duty to disclose. The Supreme Court held that the statute did not commence to run when the bank breached its fiduciary duty, but when the bank failed to release the trust indenture and the plaintiff suffered an injury. Kitchen Krafters, Inc. v. Eastside Bank of Mont., 242 M 155, 789 P2d 567, 47 St. Rep. 602 (1990).

Effect of Administrative Actions: In a case relating to wage claims assigned to the Department of Labor and Industry, the Supreme Court held that the District Court's finding that the Statute of Limitations was not tolled by the administrative actions of the Department was incorrect. Intermountain Deaconess Home v. St., 191 M 309, 623 P2d 1384, 38 St. Rep. 272 (1981), following Pope v. Keefer, 180 M 454, 591 P2d 206, 36 St. Rep. 366 (1979).

Proof of Date of Complaint: Where from the filing mark on the original complaint in an action brought under the Federal Employers' Liability Act it appeared that the action was commenced within the 2-year period prescribed, it was sufficient as against the objection that the amended pleading did not affirmatively allege that it was commenced within that time. Gillespie v. Great N. Ry., 63 M 598, 208 P 1059 (1922).

Amendment of Complaint:

Where an amended complaint in an action brought under the federal liability act did not state a new cause of action, the contention that the action was barred by the 2-year limitation prescribed therein is without merit, the amendment relating back to the date of the commencement of the action, unaffected by the intervening lapse of time. Gillespie v. Great N. Ry., 63 M 598, 208 P 1059 (1922).

An amendment, properly allowed, relates back to the date of the original pleading or process. Clark v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 38 M 177, 99 P 298 (1909). See McAuley v. Cas. Co. of Am., 39 M 185, 102 P 586 (1909).

Demurrable Complaint: An action is “commenced”, within the meaning of this section, and the operation of the Statute of Limitations is thereby arrested by filing a complaint to which a general demurrer (demurrer abolished, former Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and 25-31-503 (now repealed)) is afterward sustained, provided the pleading is sufficiently substantial to allow of its being properly amended so as to fully state the same cause of action attempted to be stated in the first instance. Am. Sur. Co. v. Kartowitz, 54 M 92, 166 P 685 (1917); Clark v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 38 M 177, 99 P 298 (1909). See McAuley v. Cas. Co. of Am., 39 M 185, 102 P 586 (1909).

Tax Collections: This section limits the time for commencing a personal action to collect a tax to 2 years and is not in conflict with Art. V, sec. 39, 1889 Mont. Const. Bd. of County Comm’rs v. Story, 26 M 517, 69 P 56 (1902).

Compiler’s Comments

1991 Amendment: Near middle of first sentence, after “an action”, substituted “is governed by part 5 of this chapter” for remainder of sentence and former (1) and (2) that read: “cannot be brought thereon in a court of the state against him or his personal representative after the expiration of the time limited by the laws of his residence for bringing a like action except by a resident of the state and in one of the following cases:

- (1) where the cause of action originally accrued in favor of a resident of the state;
- (2) where, before the expiration of the time so limited, the person in whose favor it originally accrued was or became a resident of the state or the cause of action was assigned to and thereafter continuously owned by a resident of the state”; and made minor changes in style.

Severability: Section 9, Ch. 293, L. 1991, was a severability clause.

Case Notes

Resident Defendant: In an action on an open account by a resident of another state against defendant then and for some years prior thereto a resident of Montana, plaintiff’s contention that the bar of the statute applicable was that prescribed by this section and that thereunder the question whether the action was barred depended upon the statute of the foreign state solely was wrong, this section meaning no more than that a debtor, situated as defendant was, shall have in addition to all other Statutes of Limitation of Montana the further one provided for herein if available and he desires to assert it. Bahn v. Estate of Fritz, 92 M 84, 10 P2d 1061 (1932).

Statute of Limitations — Lawsuit Against County — County’s Failure to Respond to Claim Letter: The decedent died as a passenger while involved in a high-speed police chase on December 16, 2011. His estate submitted a claim letter to the county on September 11, 2014, seeking $750,000 from the county for wrongful death. The county never responded, and the estate filed a complaint against the county on March 3, 2015. The District Court granted the county’s motion to dismiss, concluding that the estate’s claims were time-barred. On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that the statute of limitations was tolled and did not begin to run until the claimant received notice of the county’s denial of claim. In re Estate of Woody v. Big Horn County, 2016 MT 180, 384 Mont. 185, 376 P.3d 127.

Part 2

Time Limits on Specific Kinds of Actions

Part Case Notes

Application of Continuing Tort Doctrine to Strict Liability and Negligence Claims — Not Unjust Enrichment: The plaintiffs were property owners in Opportunity, located close to a former copper smelter. They sued the successor in interest to the original smelter operator for damages for the cost of restoring their properties to their original state and filed claims of nuisance and trespass, as well as strict liability, negligence, and unjust enrichment. The plaintiffs argued that the continuing tort doctrine should be applied to all of their claims. After the District Court granted summary judgment on other grounds in favor of the defendant, the plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court ruled that the doctrine could be applied to the claims of strict liability and negligence, but not to the unjust enrichment claim. Christian v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2015 MT 255, 380 Mont. 495, 358 P.3d 131.

Architectural Malpractice — Applicability of Continuing Relationship Doctrine: An architect was hired to design and oversee the building of a hospital. Shortly after completion in 1975, problems developed with the heating, air conditioning, and ventilating systems. The hospital contacted the architect about remedies for the problems, seeking and continuing to rely on his advice until 1979, when the parties' relationship ended. The hospital filed suit in 1981, which the architect contended was beyond the statute of limitations that normally would begin running upon substantial completion of the facility in 1975. Distinguishing Schneider v. Leaphart, 228 M 483, 743 P2d 613 (1987), the Supreme Court applied the continuing relationship doctrine because no specific statute of limitations governed the tort of architectural malpractice and because "accrual" was not statutorily defined at the time of the acts giving rise to the action. The continuing relationship doctrine may be used when, during the course of an ongoing, developing, and dependent relationship between a professional and a client, the professional commits a tortious act that injures the client. The doctrine suspends the accrual of the cause of action in order to give the professional an opportunity to remedy, avoid, or establish that there was no error or attempt to mitigate damages. The cause of action does not accrue until either the professional relationship ends or, if a general professional relationship continues between the parties, the professional ceases to treat or advise the client for the particular act causing the injury. Therefore, the statute of limitations in this case was suspended until the professional relationship ended in 1979 and the hospital's complaint in 1981 was filed well within the general 3-year tort statute of limitations. N. Mont. Hosp. v. Knight, 248 M 310, 811 P2d 1276, 48 St. Rep. 444 (1991).

Requirements of "Equitable Tolling" — Doctrine Not Recognized: Plaintiff relied on out-of-state decisions to present the proposition that, in instances when an injured person has several legal remedies and reasonably and in good faith pursues one, the statute of limitations will not be available as a defense where equitable principles justify tolling of the statute. Requirements of the doctrine, known as "equitable tolling", were outlined in Collier v. Pasadena, 191 Cal. Rep. 681 (Cal. App. 1983): (1) timely notice to the defendant (within the applicable statute of limitations) in filing the first claim; (2) lack of prejudice to defendant in gathering evidence to defend against the second claim; and (3) good faith and reasonable conduct by plaintiff in filing the second claim. The Supreme Court determined that in the present case the notice requirement was not met; therefore, the court did not address arguments with regard to the remaining two elements or recognize the doctrine of equitable tolling in Montana. Erickson v. Croft, 233 M 146, 760 P2d 706, 45 St. Rep. 1379 (1988), but see Harrison v. Chance, 244 M 215, 797 P2d 200, 47 St. Rep. 1539 (1990), in which the Supreme Court expressed an apparent willingness to apply the doctrine when the requirements set out in Erickson appeared to be met. See also Lozeau v. GEICO Indem. Co., 2009 MT 136, 350 M 320, 207 P3d 316 (2009), in which the Supreme Court found that plaintiff satisfied the threshold inquiry for application of the doctrine of equitable tolling by filing an original action in Tribal Court that was reasonably pursued and done in good faith, so the equities favored application of the doctrine.

Relation Back of Amendment to Substitute True Name: When a complaint sets forth a cause of action against a defendant designated by a fictitious name under 25-5-103 and his true name is thereafter discovered and substituted by amendment, the fictitiously named defendant is considered a party to the action from its commencement, so that the Statute of Limitations stops running as to the fictitiously named defendant on the date the original complaint is filed. Sooy v. Petrolane Steel Gas, Inc., 218 M 418, 708 P2d 1014, 42 St. Rep. 1702 (1985).

Applicable Statute of Limitations Governed by Basis of Claim: Former Rule 54(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), provides that a party must be granted any relief to which he is entitled even though he may not have demanded the relief in his pleadings. Thus, under former Rule 8, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), it is not necessary to set out the legal theory under which the claim is based. However, the Statute of Limitations applicable must necessarily be in conformity with the basis of the action. Castillo v. Franks, 213 M 232, 690 P2d 425, 41 St. Rep. 2071 (1984).

27-2-201. Actions upon judgments.Compiler's Comments

2001 Amendment: Chapter 515 in (2) at end of first sentence substituted "10 years" for "6 years". Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 101 in (2) increased period from 5 years to 6 years. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

1995 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 60 in (3), at end, inserted "or within 10 years from entry of a lump-sum judgment or order for support arrears, whichever is later".

Chapter 125 in (1), in exception clause, inserted reference to subsection (5); and inserted (5) establishing statute of limitation for action to enforce order of restitution.

Chapter 264 in (1) inserted reference to subsection (4); inserted (4) concerning period for commencement of action to collect past-due child support that accrued in another state or country or by tribal court order; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 28, 1995.

In the exception clause at the beginning of (1), the codifier changed "and" to "through" because Ch. 125 and Ch. 264 each added a subsection reference to the existing reference.

Severability: Section 18, Ch. 60, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

Section 42, Ch. 125, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 631 at beginning of (1) inserted exception clause; inserted (3) prescribing a 10-year period after termination of the support obligation for commencement of an action for collection of past-due support; and made minor changes in style.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 631, L. 1993, provided: "WHEREAS, it is necessary to draft a composite bill containing unrelated sections in order to present the proposed program improvements in a single, comprehensive bill that promotes the needs of legislative energy, efficiency, and economy by limiting the number of possible bills and by reducing the need for hearings and readings on those bills.

THEREFORE, the Legislature finds it appropriate to enact the following legislation."

Severability: Section 29, Ch. 631, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

Case Notes

Application of Montana Statute of Limitations to Foreign Judgments: When a couple divorced in Arizona, the ex-wife received a judgment for her share of the couple's property in Montana. She registered her judgment in Montana state court after the Arizona statute of limitations expired but before the Montana statute of limitations expired. The District Court ruled that under the full faith and credit clause, the Arizona statute controlled. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, explaining that the Uniform Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act (Title 25, ch. 9, part 5) calls for application of the Montana statute of limitations, and that the conflict of laws statute does not apply because it governs claims based on other states' laws and judgments are not claims. Boudette v. Boudette, 2019 MT 268, 397 Mont. 519, 453 P.3d 893.

Order to Account for Class Action Funds Several Years After Last Status Report Proper: The District Court ordered the plaintiff, who was the designated class representative, to distribute funds related to a class action settlement. The plaintiff later sought to keep a portion of the undistributed funds; however, the District Court ordered the plaintiff to turn the funds over to the defendant, the city of Bozeman. The order to turn over the funds was not sent to the parties until nearly 12 years later when the city filed a notice of issue. The District Court then held a hearing ordering the plaintiff to show cause why the funds should not be immediately turned over to the city. The District Court also ordered the plaintiff to provide an accounting of the funds, which the plaintiff appealed to the Supreme Court, claiming that an accounting of an expired judgment is prohibited under 27-2-201. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed, holding that matters of administration, including the distribution and accounting of settlement funds, are left to the broad discretion of the District Court. SW. Mont. Bldg. Indus. Ass'n v. Bozeman, 2018 MT 62, 391 Mont. 55, 414 P.3d 761.

Monthly Maintenance Payments Treated as Separate Installments — All Elements of Maintenance Claim Not in Existence on Date of Judgment — Statute of Limitations Inapplicable: A dissolution decree on October 23, 1987, granted the wife monthly spousal maintenance payments of $3,500 a month for 10 years. The ex-husband made the first several payments, but paid no maintenance after August 1, 1988. In 2001, the ex-wife filed an action to renew the judgment. The ex-husband contended that the judgment was barred by the 10-year statute of limitations in this section. The District Court reasoned that because all elements of the ex-wife's maintenance claim existed on October 23, 1987, the statute of limitations applied, and summary judgment was granted to the ex-husband. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that when a judgment award requires monthly payments rather than a lump sum, each payment is to be treated as a separate installment for purposes of applying the statute of limitations. The court likened delinquent monthly maintenance payments to monthly child support arrearages that are due within the statute of limitations. Thus, the claim did not accrue until all elements of the claim or cause existed or occurred, so any claim for the ex-husband's nonpayment of maintenance could not have accrued until each individual payment was due. The ex-wife's claim for delinquent monthly maintenance payments was not time-barred. Fulton v. Fulton, 2004 MT 240, 322 M 516, 97 P3d 573 (2004), distinguishing Cummings v. Lockwood, 327 P2d 1012 (Ariz. 1958). See also In re Marriage of Hooper & Crittendon, 247 M 322, 806 P2d 541 (1991), and Momsen v. Momsen, 2006 MT 233, 333 M 463, 143 P3d 450 (2006).

Statute of Limitations to Run From Time Payment Due: After 11 years passed from the time that a dissolution decree was entered, the wife moved to obtain her share of the husband's retirement benefits as ordered in the decree. Although the wife moved to enforce the decree about 1 year after the husband retired, the husband contended that the enforcement motion was untimely because under this section, an action to enforce a judgment or decree must be brought within 10 years. The Supreme Court cited In re Marriage of Brown, 263 M 184, 867 P2d 381 (1994), for the holding that the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the payment is due, which in this case was the date that the husband retired. In re Marriage of Weber, 2004 MT 206, 322 M 324, 95 P3d 694 (2004).

Limitation of Action — Workers' Compensation Third Party and Bad Faith Claims: A third-party claimant may not bring an action pursuant to Title 33, ch. 18, commonly known as the Unfair Trade Practices Act, until the underlying claim has been settled or a judgment entered in favor of the claimant on the underlying claim. The statute of limitations on such a claim is 1 year from the date of settlement or entry of judgment on the underlying claim, even though the Act does not define what constitutes an underlying claim. A common-law bad faith claim accrues when: (1) all of the elements of the claim or cause exist or have occurred; (2) the right to maintain an action on the claim or cause is complete; or (3) a court or other agency is authorized to accept jurisdiction of the action. The statute of limitations for a common-law bad faith claim is 3 years and begins to run when the claim or action accrues. The accrual date of a bad faith claim arising out of a separate and independent disputed issue is established by determining whether that particular issue has been ultimately resolved, regardless of the existence or absence of a resolution of other issues within the workers' compensation case. Therefore, for statute of limitations purposes, statutory and common-law bad faith claims against an insurer that are predicated on actions taken in adjusting a workers' compensation claim accrue when the Workers' Compensation Court enters a judgment ordering the insurer to pay for a previously denied benefit but leaves unresolved the ultimate determinations of the extent and duration of the worker's disability. O'Connor v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co., 2004 MT 65, 320 M 301, 87 P3d 454 (2004), following Grenz v. Orion Group, Inc., 243 M 486, 795 P2d 444 (1990), Poteat v. St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co., 277 M 117, 918 P2d 677 (1996), and Brewington v. Employers Fire Ins. Co., 1999 MT 312, 297 M 243, 992 P2d 237 (1999), and distinguishing Fode v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 221 M 282, 719 P2d 414 (1986).

Error in Denial of Motion to Set Aside Past-Due Child Support Judgment for Fraud — Payments Improperly Applied to Barred Debt: In 1998, a mother sought $33,350 in past-due child support owed over a 20-year period. The District Court found that the statute of limitations in this section limited recovery to arrearages incurred only in the 10 years prior to filing the complaint. At trial, the father provided documentation that some support had been paid, but the mother denied ever receiving any payments. After trial, the father attempted to introduce evidence of additional payments, but the evidence was disallowed. The District Court then calculated the amount of child support owed since 1988, but applied payments made since 1988 to the obligations incurred prior to 1988, irrespective of the statute of limitations. The father then moved to set aside the judgment because the mother committed fraud by denying the receipt of certain payments, but that motion was denied without reaching the issue of fraud. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in denying the motion. Although a District Court should apply any payment of child support to the earliest arrearage, an award may be applied only to arrearages due within 10 years of a suit for enforcement. It is incongruous for a court to bar a plaintiff from bringing an action to enforce a certain debt, but then apply payments toward that barred debt. Thus, the District Court erred in applying payments made since 1988 to the obligations incurred prior to 1988, and in turn erred in failing to address the merits of the father's motion alleging fraud. The case was remanded for further consideration. Roberts v. Nickey, 2002 MT 37, 308 M 335, 43 P3d 263 (2002). See also In re Adoption of C.J.H., W.L.H., & T.A.H., 246 M 52, 803 P2d 214 (1990), and In re Marriage of Hooper & Crittendon, 247 M 322, 806 P2d 541 (1991).

License Suspension for Nonpayment of Child Support Available Remedy Despite Child's Emancipation: A father was years in arrears in paying child support at the time that a license suspension hearing was held but nevertheless maintained that when the child was emancipated, the child support debt transformed into an ordinary civil debt that was not enforceable by a license suspension action. In general, child support that is due under a dissolution decree but that remains unpaid becomes a judgment debt similar to any other money judgment. As such, the collection of back child support is subject to the 10-year statute of limitations in this section, but other than that limit, a custodial parent to whom back child support is owed has recourse to any collection remedies provided by law, including the license suspension remedies, regardless of whether the child for whom support is owed has achieved emancipation. Although losing his licenses was a drastic remedy, the father's persistent failure to honor his child support obligations left the District Court with no alternative, and the Supreme Court affirmed the suspension of the father's driver's, hunting and fishing, and electrician's licenses on appeal. In re Marriage of Hopper, 1999 MT 310, 297 M 225, 991 P2d 960, 56 St. Rep. 1247 (1999), following Willoughby v. Loomis, 264 M 44, 869 P2d 271, 51 St. Rep. 138 (1994), and distinguishing In re Marriage of Mikesell, 276 M 403, 916 P2d 740, 53 St. Rep. 418 (1996).

Judgment Lien Extinguished by Operation of Law: In a case filed in order to have a series of conveyances declared fraudulent, the District Court erred by failing to determine that the judgment lien was extinguished by operation of law, terminating any rights of the plaintiff to the subject property. A judgment may be enforced for a period of 10 years from docketing; a writ of execution may be issued to enforce a judgment for a period of 6 years, which may be extended by the court for up to an additional 4 years; a judgment lien continues for 6 years following docketing of the judgment and then expires by operation of law; a judgment may be extended past its 10-year duration only by filing a separate action to obtain a new judgment on the existing judgment. Jones v. Arnold, 272 M 317, 900 P2d 917, 52 St. Rep. 779 (1995).

Agency Applied Wrong Ten-Year Statute of Limitations: The state support enforcement officials argued that they could pursue Day for past-due child support based upon subsection (3) of this section. The Supreme Court held that the part of the statute relied on by the state applied only to delinquent support accruing after October 1, 1993, and that the state should have relied on the 10-year statute of limitations provided for in subsection (1) of this section. In re Support Obligation of Day v. St., 272 M 170, 900 P2d 296, 52 St. Rep. 680 (1995).

Stipulation Acknowledging Child Support Arrearages — Tolling of Statute of Limitations: Jody and Stephen were divorced in 1979, and Stephen was ordered to pay child support. Jody brought a URESA action in 1982 to collect arrearages, and the parties stipulated to the amount of those arrearages. The District Court entered an order providing that the stipulation was enforceable by contempt. In 1992, Jody moved to enforce the 1982 stipulation and order. Stephen claimed that collection of certain arrearages was barred by the statute of limitations. Citing Marriage of Hooper & Crittendon, 247 M 322, 806 P2d 541 (1991), the Supreme Court held that the 10-year statute of limitations in this section applied to each required payment as if it were a separate judgment, and therefore any payment accruing prior to 10 years before the 1992 motion for enforcement was barred. However, citing Dodd v. Simon, 113 M 536, 129 P2d 224 (1942), the Supreme Court also held that the statute of limitations was tolled by the 1982 stipulation acknowledging the unsatisfied judgments existing prior to the stipulation. Therefore, none of the arrearages were barred. In re Marriage of Brown, 263 M 184, 867 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 7 (1994).

Writs of Execution Quashed When Based on Judgment Extended by Ex Parte Motion Past Ten-Year Statute of Limitations: In 1982, Welch obtained a judgment against Huber for $6,612.34. In 1988, Lorn moved the court for an order extending the judgment. The judgment was extended until 1994. Over 10 years later, Lorn attempted to collect the judgment by obtaining writs of execution. Welch moved to quash the writs and for an order finding the order extending the judgments void for want of service upon Welch, which the District Court granted. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that the order extending the judgment presumed to make the original judgment valid for 12 years, contrary to this section. The judgment could be extended beyond the 10-year statute of limitations only by the filing of an action, with notice to Welch. The Supreme Court said that the motions allowed by 25-13-102 (now repealed) are permissible as long as the extension granted does not exceed the 10-year statute of limitations. Welch v. Huber, 262 M 114, 862 P2d 1180, 50 St. Rep. 1469 (1993), followed in Jones v. Arnold, 272 M 317, 900 P2d 917, 52 St. Rep. 779 (1995), and Jones v. Arnold, 1998 MT 214, 290 M 444, 963 P2d 1269, 55 St. Rep. 901 (1998).

Statute of Limitations to Run From Date Each Support Payment Due: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court adopted the rule that each monthly support obligation constitutes a judgment and that the 10-year statute of limitations for judgments begins to run the month the payment becomes due. In re Marriage of Crittendon, 247 M 322, 806 P2d 541, 48 St. Rep. 218 (1991), followed in In re Marriage of Petranek, 255 M 458, 843 P2d 784, 49 St. Rep. 1107 (1992), Willoughby v. Loomis, 264 M 44, 869 P2d 271, 51 St. Rep. 138 (1994), Emery v. St., 286 M 376, 950 P2d 764, 54 St. Rep. 1454 (1997), and Momsen v. Momsen, 2006 MT 233, 333 M 463, 143 P3d 450 (2006).

Partial Bar by Statute: Fact that plaintiff had been awarded full judgment for services rendered without regard to limitation period under this section did not require that entire verdict be set aside but only that the judgment be reduced by value of services rendered prior to 5-year period, since the claim was divisible. Cartwright v. Joyce, 155 M 478, 473 P2d 515 (1970).

Probate Claims: Statutes of Limitations have no application to creditors' claims in probate that have been approved by the personal representative and allowed by the court. Montgomery v. First Nat'l Bank, 114 M 395, 136 P2d 760 (1943).

Appeal Pending on Judgment:

Under our statute there is no exception that extends the time for bringing an action on a judgment so as to permit exclusion of the time when appeals are pending or when a supersedeas bond is in effect. If the Legislature so intended, it would have so provided in 27-2-406. St. v. Hart Refineries, 109 M 140, 92 P2d 766, 123 ALR 555 (1939).

An action to renew a money judgment entered in plaintiff's favor more than 10 years prior to commencement was barred by the Statute of Limitations, notwithstanding appeals to the state and United States Supreme Courts and the filing of a supersedeas bond on both appeals; the fact that an appeal is pending in the principal proceeding does not delay an action to renew the judgment obtained therein because they are different causes not involving the same facts; a supersedeas bond merely prohibits issuance of execution on the judgment pending appeal. St. v. Hart Refineries, 109 M 140, 92 P2d 766, 123 ALR 555 (1939).

Execution of Cumulative Remedy:

The right to bring suit on the judgment is not dependent upon the right to levy execution. In fact, execution must be issued within 6 years after the entry of the judgment under 25-13-101, except by leave of court under 25-13-102 (now repealed), whereas action for revival or renewal may be brought as a matter of right within 10 years. St. v. Hart Refineries, 109 M 140, 92 P2d 766, 123 ALR 555 (1939).

A judgment is a cause of action on which suit may be brought within 10 years of its rendition, the remedy by execution being cumulative merely and not impairing the common-law right of action upon the judgment as a debt of record. Lindsay Great Falls Co. v. McKinney Motor Co., 79 M 136, 255 P 25 (1927).

Quiet Title Actions: This section has no application to a water right suit in which plaintiff's right as established in a former decree was sought to be protected, injunctive relief asked in such a suit being in the nature of an action to quiet title to realty, in which the running of time strengthens rather than destroys a title determined by decree. Missoula Light & Water Co. v. Hughes, 106 M 355, 77 P2d 1041 (1938).

Lien of Judgment: This section gives a right of action on a judgment within 10 years, whereas the lien of a judgment is expressly limited to 6 years by 25-13-101. Swift & Co. v. Weston, 88 M 40, 289 P 1035 (1930).

Montana Judgments: A similar statute applied to judgments rendered by the courts of this state. Lindsay Great Falls Co. v. McKinney Motor Co., 79 M 136, 255 P 25 (1927); Haupt v. Burton, 21 M 572, 55 P 110 (1898).

2023 Correction: A conference committee amended Senate Bill No. 247 (now Ch. 665, L. 2023). The conference committee report was adopted by both chambers. However, the version of the bill that was transmitted to the Governor and signed by the Governor on May 19, 2023, did not include the conference committee amendments. The corrected version of the bill that included the conference committee amendments was delivered to the Governor on April 23, 2024, and was returned to the Secretary of State on May 3, 2024. The Governor did not sign or veto the corrected version. The amendments to 27-2-202 made by sec. 2, Ch. 665, L. 2023, were the same in both versions of the bill.

2023 Amendment: See 2023 Session Law for amendment made by sec. 2, Ch. 665, L. 2023. (Chapter 665 revised through correction May 3, 2024; see 2023 Correction compiler's comment.)

Case Notes

Settlement Agreement Properly Approved — Sibling Trustee Present and Represented by Counsel — Mediation's Key Terms Understood Despite COVID-19 Illness — Undue Influence Inapplicable — Doctrine of Laches Elements Established. Lindemulder v. Lindemulder, 2022 MT 119, 409 Mont. 69, 512 P.3d. 260.

Partial Performance of Stipulation — Statute of Limitations Not Expired: The parties were adjoining landowners who had entered into a stipulation whereby they would trade small portions of property and survey and draw a new boundary line. Although the survey was never conducted, they abided by other terms in the stipulation for several years. The defendants then cut down two trees that they argued were on their property even though the stipulation provided that portion to be transferred to the plaintiff. The plaintiff filed an action seeking specific performance to have the property transferred to her. The defendants contended that the statute of limitations started to run shortly after the stipulation had been made several years before, and therefore had expired. The District Court, however, concluded that the plaintiff was not on notice until the defendant had cut down the trees. After the District Court ordered the parties to comply with all terms in the original stipulation within 90 days, the defendants appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the statute of limitations had not expired and started to run when the defendant cut down the two trees. Miller v. Kleppen, 2019 MT 83, 395 Mont. 286, 438 P.3d 806.

Allegation of Breach Regarding Capital Credits — Statute of Limitations Expired: The plaintiffs were former customers of the defendant, a rural electrical cooperative. The plaintiffs sued the defendant for not refunding capital credits to customers as required under 35-18-316. The District Court granted the defendant summary judgment, holding that the statute of limitations on the plaintiffs' claims had expired. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that none of the claims had been revived by acknowledgment and that the defendant had not fraudulently concealed facts that would have tolled the statute of limitations. Wolfe v. Flathead Elec. Co-op, Inc., 2018 MT 276, 393 Mont. 312, 431 P.3d 327.

Application of Laches — Statute Not Yet Tolloed: The defendants argued that laches barred an action for damages brought 5 years after a breach of a contract concerning the sale of their business interests to the plaintiff, but they failed to submit evidence showing extraordinary circumstances or prejudice sufficient to justify the application of laches when the statute of limitations had not yet tolled. Although the business at issue was worth substantially less at the time of the action's filing than it was at the time of the breach of contract, the evidence did not show that the delay in filing changed the nature of the damages, other than the potential amount of interest due. Bottrell Family Investments Ltd. Partnership v. Diversified Financial, Inc., 2015 MT 185, 379 Mont. 504, 352 P.3d 620.

Erroneous Application of Statute of Limitations — Insurance Dispute: In an insurance dispute in which plaintiffs sued the defendant insurer to contest the denial of untimely filed claims, the District Court erred in applying the statute of limitations from the date the plaintiffs submitted their claim to the insurer rather than from the date the lawsuit was filed. The accrual of a claim does not depend on when a claim is submitted to an insurer; rather, a claim accrues when all elements of that claim have occurred. Estate of Gleason v. Cent. United Life Ins. Co., 2015 MT 140, 379 Mont. 219, 350 P.3d 349.

Holdover Tenants Time-Barred From Exercising Option to Purchase: The claim of holdover tenants trying to exercise an option to purchase a piece of commercial real estate more than 8 years after the lease contract expired was properly dismissed as time-barred. Situ v. Smole, 2013 MT 33, 369 Mont. 1, 303 P.3d 747.

Gravamen of Action Either in Tort or in Contract — Election of Theory by Injured Party: Defendant signed a contract in 1997 to perform repair work on the Tin Cup dam. In 1998, plaintiff learned that some of the contracted work was not completed, but plaintiff did not file suit until 2005. The District Court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on grounds that the 3-year statute of limitations for torts in 27-2-204 had expired. On appeal, plaintiff argued that the 8-year statute of limitations for contracts in 27-2-202 should apply, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Claims of breach of a professional service contract can sound either in contract or in tort. The Supreme Court looks to the gravamen of the action rather than relying on the label given to the complaint when determining which statute of limitations applies. If the gravamen of the action rests either in tort or in contract, the injured party may elect the theory to be pursued, and the statute of limitations governing the elected theory will apply. In this case, plaintiff argued that defendant was professionally negligent rather than asserting that defendant breached a specific contract provision, so plaintiff's action sounded in tort rather than in contract, and the District Court properly applied the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-204. Tin Cup County

Contractually Agreed Interest Rate Not Considered Usurious: A construction contract set out that 1.5% a month interest would be owed on everything unpaid after 30 days. Defendant did not challenge the interest rate and signed the contract. However, during construction lien proceedings, defendant cited 31-1-107 and asserted that the interest rate was usurious. The District Court awarded prejudgment interest at the contract rate, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The usury rate in 31-1-107 refers to loans of money, not construction liens. Defendant agreed to the rate and the District Court did not err in applying it. Johnston v. Palmer, 2007 MT 99, 337 M 101, 158 P3d 998 (2007).

Subrogation Claim for Environmental Remediation Costs Barred by Statute of Limitations: The Montana Petroleum Tank Release Compensation Board submitted a claim to a gas station owner's insurer for reimbursement of environmental remediation expenses. The claim was denied, and the Board filed an action against the owner's insurer and the insurer of a subsequent lessee. In its denial letter, one insurer asserted that because 12 years elapsed before the Board brought its claim, the statute of limitations had run on the claim. The District Court granted summary judgment to both insurers, and the Board appealed. The Supreme Court noted that even if the Board had a claim against the lessee's insurer through subrogation of the owner's insurer's rights, the statute of limitations began to run from the time that all the elements accrued for the owner's insurer to file a claim with the lessee's insurer. The longest possible statute of limitations that could apply was 8 years, so the lessee's insurer was correct that any claim that the Board may have had against it was barred by the statute of limitations. Mont. Petroleum Tank Release Comp. Bd. v. Capitol Indem. Co., 2006 MT 133, 332 M 352, 137 P3d 522 (2006).

Three-Year Statute of Limitations Applicable to Breach of Bailment Obligation: Pursuant to a breach of a bailment agreement related to the transfer of 10 horses and tack, plaintiff filed a claim for the value of the property, asserting that under subsection (2) of this section, 5 years were allowed to bring the claim as a breach of contract. The District Court concluded that the voluntary bailment agreement was not a contract, but rather an obligation, which was governed by the 3-year statute of limitations in subsection (3) of this section, and because the claim was not brought within 3 years, summary judgment for defendants was appropriate. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Regardless of the fact that plaintiff characterized the claim as a breach of contract, there was no evidence of an expressed agreement for sale of the property, so defendants were obligated but not contractually required to account for the property. Plaintiff's election to sue on a contract theory did not operate to grant 2 additional years for plaintiff to assert her rights. The District Court's conclusion that plaintiff's action was not timely was correct. Demarest v. Broadhurst, 2004 MT 147, 321 M 470, 92 P3d 1168 (2004).

Statute of Limitations Applicable to Workers' Compensation Subrogation Right Created by Statute — Subrogation Agreement Not Created by Correspondence Between Attorneys for Claimant and Insurer: Roadarmel suffered an industrial injury and filed a workers' compensation claim against his employer, and the claim was defended by Royal Insurance Company (Royal). Roadarmel received a judgment and then filed a third-party action against two companies that had supplied the chemicals that injured him. Roadarmel's attorney, White, properly notified Royal that the third-party action was being commenced. Pursuant to 39-71-414, Roadarmel requested that Royal pay a portion of the costs, and Royal agreed to participate in the costs rather than waive its subrogation rights, tendering a check for $5,000 toward the costs. Roadarmel was successful in the third-party action, and White advised Royal that the third parties would appeal. The appeal was upheld, and White notified Royal of that fact, attaching copies of the settlement check and jury verdict forms, a breakdown of the actual costs of the third-party action, and a request that Royal determine its subrogation interest in a portion of the third-party proceeds. Royal independently computed the amount that it contended that it was owed and advised Roadarmel in letters that an action would be filed to determine Royal's subrogation interests. White did not respond to the letters, and 3½ years passed before Royal filed a petition to determine its subrogation rights. Royal later learned through discovery that White had disbursed the third-party proceeds on the same day that Royal had been requested to determine its subrogation interest, allegedly instructing Roadarmel to hold the funds pending a subrogation determination. Royal then also filed a separate count against White for an alleged breach of the duty of trust owed Royal as a third-party beneficiary of the trust imposed on the third-party proceeds. The Workers' Compensation Court determined that a subrogation agreement had been formed in the exchange of letters between White and Royal's counsel, that the statute of limitations on the contract had not expired, and that Roadarmel and White were jointly and severally liable for $63,864.79 for breaching the subrogation contract and failing to honor Royal's first lien of the third-party judgment. Roadarmel and White appealed, contending that Royal's subrogation action was based on a statutory liability that was time-barred by the 2-year statute of limitations in 27-2-211 and that the 3-year statute of limitations in 72-34-511 (now repealed), which governs actions based on an alleged breach of trust, also barred Royal's action against White. Royal argued that the correspondence between the parties formed an enforceable contract that was subject to the longer statute of limitations in this section. The Supreme Court agreed with Roadarmel and White. The correspondence only confirmed in writing that which was required by and took place entirely in the context of the mandatory statutory procedures and did not create an enforceable contract. Although the court recognized the rights of equitable subrogation at common law, those rights were conceptually distinguished from an insurer's first lien against third-party proceeds recovered by an injured employee, which constitutes a statutory liability amounting to an unqualified right of reimbursement not found at common law. As set out in St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Glassing, 269 M 76, 887 P2d 218 (1994), the concept of subrogation merely gives the insurer the right to prosecute the cause of action that the insurer possessed, so the insurer's claim by subrogation, being purely derivative, is subject to the same statute of limitations as though the cause of action were sued upon by the insured. The statutory right to reimbursement or recoupment is distinguishable from the insurer's right of subrogation proper. Thus, Royal's claim against Roadarmel, being based on a liability created by statute, was time-barred under 27-2-211(1)(c). Further, Royal's breach of trust claim against White was time-barred by 72-34-511 (now repealed). Because Royal's statutory lien was extinguished as a matter of law 2 years after Royal received notice that the third-party action was settled, by the time that the statute of limitations on White's actions began to run, even if that time was determined to be the date on which he disbursed the third-party funds, he could no longer be characterized as a trustee, constructive or otherwise, of the third-party proceeds. The case was reversed and remanded for summary judgment in favor of Roadarmel and White. Royal Ins. Co. v. Roadarmel, 2000 MT 259, 301 M 508, 11 P3d 105, 57 St. Rep. 1080 (2000).

Action Based in Tort or Contract — Choice of Injured Party as to Theory Under Which to Proceed: Andersen's home was destroyed in an arson fire. It could not be determined who started the fire, so The Travelers Indemnity Co. (Travelers) paid Andersen's claim. Four years later, Andersen was charged with conspiracy to commit arson, and Travelers filed to recover the claim money. Andersen moved for summary dismissal on grounds that the complaint alleged fraud, the statute of limitations for which had already run under 27-2-203. Although the complaint alleged fraud, it also alleged a breach of contract. When an action may be based in either tort or contract, the injured party may elect the theory under which to proceed, and the statute of limitations governing that theory will control. The general rule applied to situations falling within the twilight zone of contract and tort law is that doubt must be resolved in favor of an action based on contract. Travelers' complaint sufficiently alleged a cause of action based on breach of written contract to allow application of the 8-year statute of limitations in this section and thus was timely filed. Travelers Indem. Co. v. Andersen, 1999 MT 201, 295 M 438, 983 P2d 999, 56 St. Rep. 782 (1999), following Weible v. Ronan St. Bank, 238 M 235, 776 P2d 837, 46 St. Rep. 1231 (1989).

Statute of Frauds and Statute of Limitations Not Applicable to Constructive Trust: The husband argued that the statute of frauds and the statute of limitations for agreements not in writing barred his wife's claim to marital property. However, in this case, a constructive trust should have been created for the property. Constructive trusts arise by operation of law, so 70-20-101 did not bar the wife's claim because under 70-20-102, 70-20-101 may not be construed to prevent creation of a trust. Further, because the wife was not attempting to directly enforce a verbal agreement, the requirement in this section that an action based on a contract, account, or promise not founded on an instrument in writing be brought within 5 years also did not apply. In re Marriage of Moss, 1999 MT 62, 293 M 500, 977 P2d 322, 56 St. Rep. 257 (1999).

Right to Assert Counterclaims Arising Out of Same Transaction as Foreclosure Action: Ranch Recovery Limited Liability Company (Ranch Recovery) was the assignee of the vendor's interest in real property that was subjected to a mortgage foreclosure brought by First Security Bank of Missoula (First Security). Upon the vendee's default, the District Court awarded summary judgment to First Security. Ranch Recovery moved for reconsideration and for permission to amend its counterclaim based on newly discovered evidence. The District Court denied Ranch Recovery's motion for leave to amend its answer. First Security alleged that leave to amend was properly denied because the counterclaims were barred by the applicable statute of limitations. The Supreme Court held that because Ranch Recovery's claims were counterclaims arising out of the same written contract from which First Security asserted its right to foreclose and to priority, Ranch Recovery was entitled to assert those claims notwithstanding any applicable limitation periods. First Sec. Bank of Missoula v. Ranch Recovery Ltd. Liab. Co., 1999 MT 43, 293 M 363, 976 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 188 (1999).

Applicability of Statute of Limitations to Breach of Restrictive Covenants: A home owners' association brought suit against McMillan to enforce compliance with the restrictive covenant limiting home construction to a 1-year period following commencement of construction. McMillan pleaded the affirmative defense of statute of limitations. Under this section, an action on any obligation founded on an instrument in writing must be commenced within 8 years. The District Court applied Graveley Ranch v. Scherping, 240 M 20, 782 P2d 371 (1989), in holding that the defense was inapplicable because each day of noncompliance constituted a new violation of the covenant, starting the statute of limitations running anew. The Supreme Court distinguished Graveley Ranch because it applied to a continuing nuisance rather than a restrictive covenant. Also, because a restrictive covenant provides a definite and readily determinable timeframe for performance, the holding in Scherpenseel v. Bitney, 263 M 68, 865 P2d 1145 (1993), that the statute of limitations does not run until an actual demand for performance is made did not apply. The statute of limitations began to run after the 1-year period following commencement of construction. Because the action was not brought until 10 years after that date, the claim was time-barred under this section. Country Estates Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. McMillan, 276 M 100, 915 P2d 806, 53 St. Rep. 297 (1996).

Guarantor's Obligation Not Barred by Statute of Limitations as to Obligation of Principal: A creditor's claim against a guarantor is not exonerated by the running of the statute of limitations as against the principal. Mercury Marine v. Monty's Enterprises, Inc., 270 M 413, 892 P2d 568, 52 St. Rep. 255 (1995). See also Dupree v. Jordan, 252 P 67 (Okla. 1927), Bloom v. Bender, 313 P2d 568 (Calif. 1957), and Restatement of Security 130 (1941), Comment a on subsection (1) and illustration 2.

Statute of Limitations Applicable to Claims Involving Employment Relationship With No Written Contract: Because the employment relationship is contractual in nature, the applicable statute of limitations for claims involving employment relationships with no written contract is 5 years. Thus, for purposes of receiving unpaid wages, an employee may bring a claim any time within 5 years of the date the claim accrues. Craver v. Waste Management Partners of Bozeman, 265 M 37, 874 P2d 1, 51 St. Rep. 268 (1994), applied, as to claims for payment of wages that are due on the last day of employment, but not wages that become due after the last day of employment, in Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999).

Conflicting Statutes of Limitations Resolved in Favor of Longest Statute: Kearney, a news manager working for a television station under an oral contract, sued KXLF for overtime compensation. The District Court applied a 5-year statute of limitations pursuant to subsection (2) of this section. KXLF argued that the applicable statute of limitations was the 2-year limit contained in 27-2-211. Citing Ritland v. Rowe, 260 M 453, 861 P2d 175 (1993), and Thiel v. Taurus Drilling Ltd. 1980-II, 218 M 201, 710 P2d 33 (1985), the Supreme Court held that conflict between the statutes applicable in this case should be resolved in favor of the statute containing the longer limitation. Kearney v. KXLF Communications, Inc., 263 M 407, 869 P2d 772, 51 St. Rep. 119 (1994). See also Travelers Indem. Co. v. Andersen, 1999 MT 201, 295 M 438, 983 P2d 999, 56 St. Rep. 782 (1999), and Blanton v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2011 MT 110, 360 Mont. 396, 255 P.3d 1229.

Laches Inapplicable to Bar Suit to Enforce Divorce Settlement Payments Fifteen Months in Arrears: A divorce settlement agreement that wife sought to enforce was a contract. It was subject to an 8-year statute of limitations. Wife filed the suit 15 months after husband stopped making payments under the agreement. Husband failed to show the extraordinary circumstances requiring application of laches that is required to dismiss a suit filed within the limitations period. In re Marriage of Hahn, 263 M 315, 868 P2d 599, 51 St. Rep. 73 (1994).

Statute of Limitations Not to Begin to Run on Covenant Running With the Land Until Demand for Performance Made: The landowners did not request that the developer build a covenanted road until 16 years after they purchased the property. The Supreme Court determined that a covenant to dedicate is an affirmative, written covenant running with the land. It is meant to benefit a purchaser's property. The Supreme Court held that public policy demands that real estate developers be strictly held to their covenants and that the statute of limitations does not begin to run on an affirmative covenant until a demand for performance has been made. Scherpenseel v. Bitney, 263 M 68, 865 P2d 1145, 50 St. Rep. 1709 (1993), distinguished in Country Estates Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. McMillan, 276 M 100, 915 P2d 806, 53 St. Rep. 297 (1996).

Credit Card Account Not Written Contract Subject to Eight-Year Statute of Limitations: Colorado National Bank sued the Storys for an unpaid Visa card account. At the trial, the bank introduced the Storys' signed application form and the monthly invoices as evidence that a signed contract existed between the parties. The Storys argued that their debt was only an account stated and was therefore subject to a 5-year statute of limitations, which had run. The Supreme Court held that the application form did not contain any contract terms and that the monthly statements were only statements of account and therefore there was no written contract and the applicable statute of limitations was 5 years. Colo. Nat'l Bank v. Story, 261 M 375, 862 P2d 1120, 50 St. Rep. 1366 (1993).

Statute of Limitations Applicable to Contract for Sale of Wheat: The appropriate statute of limitations applicable to a proceeding concerning an alleged contract for the sale of wheat is the 4-year period provided for in 30-2-725 that specifically applies to contracts for the sale of goods, rather than the general statute of limitations contained in this section covering actions on contracts. Mogan v. Cargill, Inc., 259 M 400, 856 P2d 973, 50 St. Rep. 851 (1993).

Limitations of Actions: The parties entered into an agreement for the sale of a motel. The agreement provided that the sellers would assign their Burlington Northern railroad lease to the buyers at closing. The parties were mutually mistaken about the area covered by the lease. The Supreme Court determined that the dispute was a breach of contract action governed by the 8-year statute of limitations of this section rather than the 2-year limitations period for fraud and mistake under 27-2-203. Maloney v. Heer, 257 M 500, 850 P2d 957, 50 St. Rep. 382 (1993).

Action Sounding in Tort and Contract: The defendant accounting firm argued that its duty to the plaintiff arose from law in that it was required to use due care in carrying out its duties and that a breach of duty constituted a tort claim barred by the statute of limitations. The Supreme Court held that the defendant's obligations were defined by the parties' contract and also that there was a legal duty to meet those obligations in a professional manner. The court stated that the plaintiff's claim was based both in tort and contract and therefore the longer statute of limitations for contracts was available to the plaintiff. Billings Clinic v. Peat Marwick Main & Co., 244 M 324, 797 P2d 899, 47 St. Rep. 1464 (1990), followed in Draggin' Y Cattle Co., Inc. v. Addink, 2013 MT 319, 372 Mont. 334, 312 P.3d 451.

Injuries Claimed Constituting Tort Theories — Tort Statute of Limitation Applies: Following the bank's seizure of collateral when plaintiff failed to repay a bank loan, plaintiff brought the present action against the bank for trespass and wrongful removal of farm machinery. The injuries claimed by plaintiff as a result of the breach of the loan contract constitute tort theories of action, and therefore the gravamen of the action lies in tort and the tort statute of limitations applies to bar the action. Weible v. Ronan St. Bank, 238 M 235, 776 P2d 837, 46 St. Rep. 1231 (1989), followed in Action Enterprises, Inc. v. McCalla, 259 M 167, 855 P2d 111, 50 St. Rep. 743 (1993).

Avoidance of Statute of Limitations by Pursuit of One Claim Over Another — Gravamen of Claim to Control Limitations Period: Plaintiff contended that he could elect between a contract theory or negligence theory when his claim had a basis in either theory. The District Court found that the gravamen of the causes of action alleged under the contract theory "sound in common law fraud and negligence" and that, despite the contract label, the theory simply rehashed the fraud and negligence claims and was barred by the statute of limitations. Affirming, the Supreme Court held that the election to pursue one cause of action over another must be more than a mere relabeling of a claim to avoid a statute of limitations. The gravamen of the claim, not the label attached, controls the limitations period to be applied to that claim. Erickson v. Croft, 233 M 146, 760 P2d 706, 45 St. Rep. 1379 (1988), distinguishing Unruh v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 553, 633 P2d 617, 38 St. Rep. 1156 (1981). See also Selensky-Foust v. Mercer, 2022 MT 97, 408 Mont. 488, 510 P.3d 78.

Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing as Separate Tort — Three-Year Statute of Limitations: A cause of action for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing is a separate tort action, independent of the underlying contract. Therefore, the applicable Statute of Limitations is that for a tort action, 3 years. Tynes v. Bankers Life Co., 224 M 350, 730 P2d 1115, 43 St. Rep. 2243 (1986).

Subdivision Access as Sounding in Contract: A declaration of restrictions governing subdivision tracts provided for access to a river by purchasers of the lots. In 1976, one of the subdividers constructed a gate across the access road in derogation of the declaration and in interference with easement rights of the purchasers. He later claimed the Statute of Limitations expired 2 years after the gate was constructed; however, suit was not brought until 1982. The Supreme Court held that since the failure to construct a proper access road sounded in contract, the 8-year Statute of Limitations applied. Shors v. Branch, 221 M 390, 720 P2d 239, 43 St. Rep. 919 (1986).

Lack of Contract — Breach of Warranty Sounded in Tort Rather Than Contract: Plaintiff was injured in 1979 while spraying weeds. He brought suit in 1984 against the producers, distributors, and sellers of the herbicide and spraying equipment, claiming counts in strict liability in tort, tortious misrepresentation, negligence, and contract for breach of sellers' warranty. Plaintiff had no direct written contract with any of the defendants. The District Court found that there was no contract from which to imply the warranties which plaintiff claimed were breached. The court reasoned that without a contract the breach of warranty claims sounded in tort rather than contract; therefore, the warranty claims were barred by the 3-year tort Statute of Limitations. On appeal, plaintiff contended that one of the longer contract Statutes of Limitations in 27-2-202 or 30-2-725 should apply. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that the implied covenants of good faith and fair dealing, fitness for a particular purpose, merchantability, and workmanlike performance are imposed by law regardless of contract and that, absent a contract, breach of the implied covenants sounds in tort, not contract. The District Court judgment was affirmed. Bennett v. Dow Chem. Co., 220 M 117, 713 P2d 992, 43 St. Rep. 221 (1986).

Use of Plats to Induce Purchasers — Implied Covenant — Statute of Limitations: In order to sell lots, a subdivider prepared and recorded subdivision plat maps that designated common areas and roadways. The sales contracts did not state who would construct roads or common areas. As the issue here concerns an implied covenant arising from the use of the written documents to induce purchasers, the appropriate Statute of Limitations is 8 years, the limitation for actions based on a written contract. Majers v. Shining Mtns., 219 M 366, 711 P2d 1375, 43 St. Rep. 16 (1986), reaffirmed in Majers v. The Shining Mtns., 230 M 373, 750 P2d 449, 45 St. Rep. 283 (1988), and followed in Country Estates Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. McMillan, 276 M 100, 915 P2d 806, 53 St. Rep. 297 (1996).

Eight-Year Statute of Limitations for Civil Action Under Securities Act of Montana: The U.S. District Court for the District of Montana certified a question to the Supreme Court on the applicable Statute of Limitations for a civil action brought pursuant to 30-10-307. In deciding that the 8-year limitation period rather than the 2-year period applied, the court traced the legislative history of the civil enforcement limitation period under the Securities Act of Montana. In 1967, the Legislature eliminated the relevant 2-year limitation and left a void. The court reviewed the legislative intent, underlying purposes of the Act, and characterization of the essence of the claim. Finding that each count of plaintiff's complaint could be interpreted as sounding in tort, contract, or statutory violation, the court resolved the case in favor of the longest limitation period. Thiel v. Taurus Drilling Ltd. 1980-II, 218 M 201, 710 P2d 33, 42 St. Rep. 1520 (1985), followed in Ritland v. Rowe, 260 M 453, 861 P2d 175, 50 St. Rep. 1183 (1993), and in Kearney v. KXLF Communications, Inc., 263 M 407, 869 P2d 772, 51 St. Rep. 119 (1994). See also State ex rel. Vranish v. District Court, 228 M 59, 741 P2d 412, 44 St. Rep. 1341 (1987), and *Travelers Indem. Cases Falling Between Contract and Tort Law:

The Supreme Court held in Castillo v. Kunnemann, 197 M 190, 642 P2d 1019 (1982), that Kunnemann, the original owner of a 160-acre parcel of land, had reserved certain water and ditch rights when he conveyed the land to Franks, and that Franks, therefore, had not conveyed any of these water rights to the Castillos and the Cotants when they each purchased subdivided portions of the original parcel from Franks. Following the Supreme Court's decision, the Cotants and Castillos sued Franks for breach of contract, fraud, and in the case of the Cotants, for breach of warranty. Whether the claims are viewed as in tort or in contract, they are within the applicable Statute of Limitations. The facts constituting the fraud were not considered discovered until the date of the Supreme Court's decision, and the cases were filed within 2 years of that date. The cases were filed within the 8-year contract Statute of Limitations. Castillo v. Franks, 213 M 232, 690 P2d 425, 41 St. Rep. 2071 (1984).

Plaintiffs leased office space from defendant in a commercial office building. A fire gutted the building, destroying the plaintiffs' offices. Four years later, plaintiffs brought this action for property and business loss. Defendant argues the plaintiffs' claim, which seeks recovery for injury to property, is covered by the 2-year statute on tort action. The Supreme Court said that there are circumstances in which liability in tort may coexist with a liability in contract, giving the injured party the right to elect which form of action he will pursue. The plaintiffs framed the action as a claim for breach of a covenant of quiet enjoyment, implied from the terms of the lease agreement, which results in the conclusion that the 8-year Statute of Limitations is applicable to contracts. Unruh v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 553, 633 P2d 617, 38 St. Rep. 1156 (1981).

Assessment of Penalty for Usurious Promissory Note up to Time of Trial Held Proper: Appellants loaned $7,000 to respondents in exchange for a demand promissory note at 11½% interest. In a suit for payment on the note, the District Court found that the note was usurious and calculated the forfeiture penalty based on the note's interest from the date of its making up to the time of trial. On appeal, appellants conceded that the note was usurious but claimed that the District Court had calculated the statutory penalty incorrectly. Appellants contended that since demand was made prior to the filing of the action on the note, the note matured at that time and appellants cannot be penalized for usurious interest after that date. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that since appellants did not cancel their rights under the note after demand, the obligation on the note continued after demand and through the trial. Therefore, assessment of the usury penalty up to the date of the trial was proper under 31-1-108. E.C.A. Envtl. Management Serv., Inc. v. Toenyes, 208 M 336, 679 P2d 213, 41 St. Rep. 388 (1984).

Eight-Year Statute of Limitations for Grantor Support Agreement: Montana law provides for the enforcement of a grantor support agreement, and the Statute of Limitations applicable to such an agreement is 8 years. Sands v. Nestegard, 198 M 421, 646 P2d 1189, 39 St. Rep. 1101 (1982).

Negligence in Performing Contractual Duty: A prime contractor contracted separately with a steel supplier to supply steel and with a subcontractor to erect the steel. Because the supplier was delayed in delivering the steel, the subcontractor suffered financial losses. The subcontractor's action against the supplier for negligence in the performance of its duties arising out of the steel supply contract with the prime contractor is governed by the 3-year Statute of Limitations applicable to negligence cases. The Statute of Limitations could not begin running before the contract delivery date. Hawthorne v. Kober Constr. Co., 196 M 519, 640 P2d 467, 39 St. Rep. 294 (1982).

Pension Dispute Controlled by Two-Year Statute of Limitation: Appellant's action to adjust his retirement benefits based on a claim of two constitutional violations and promissory estoppel is barred by the Statute of Limitations, 27-2-207, relating to property rights and is not controlled, as appellant contends, by 27-7-202, applying to written contracts, or 27-2-203, applying to obligations other than a contract. "Only in the broadest sense could 27-2-203 or 27-2-202 be considered controlling, and since there is a more specific statute involving injury to personal property rights, of which retirement benefits are one, the Supreme Court is constrained to follow the more specific statute." Rierson v. St., 191 M 66, 622 P2d 195, 38 St. Rep. 3 (1981).

No Error Where Claim of When Action Accrued Not Before Court: In an action for compensatory and exemplary damages for wrongful conversion of plaintiff's merchandise stored in defendant's warehouse, the District Court properly granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on the basis that the action was barred by the Statute of Limitations. Plaintiff's claims for recovery accrued 4 years previously when the defendant warehouse sold plaintiff's merchandise, not, as plaintiff claimed, when plaintiff discovered upon demand that defendant sold the merchandise. In this instance the allegation of knowledge, demand, and then refusal to return the goods was not raised in the complaint, the answer, the interrogatories, or in any affidavit properly before the District Court at the time summary judgment was granted, and thus plaintiff's allegations as to when the action accrued will not be considered on appeal. Seven Seas Import-Export & Mercantile, Inc. v. Handee Foods, 190 M 508, 621 P2d 1097, 38 St. Rep. 60 (1981).

Minimum Wage Dispute: In a case relating to wage claims assigned to the Department of Labor and Industry, the Supreme Court held that the District Court was correct in holding a 5-year Statute of Limitations governs a minimum wage dispute. Intermountain Deaconess Home v. St., 191 M 309, 623 P2d 1384, 38 St. Rep. 272 (1981), following Pope v. Keefer, 180 M 454, 591 P2d 206, 36 St. Rep. 366 (1979).

Bar to Recovering Unpaid Wages: When the appellant's original complaint was filed on June 13, 1972, 27-2-202 barred him from recovering any unpaid wages due prior to June 13, 1964, because the Statute of Limitations on such an employment contract commenced at the end of each payday for services performed during the pay period. Weston v. St. Highway Comm'n, 186 M 46, 606 P2d 150 (1980).

Involuntary Payment Not Acknowledgment of Debt — Suspending Statute of Limitations: In 1965, loans made by Worden Trading Company to defendant Trenka were consolidated into two promissory notes. In addition, two other loans were made by means of promissory notes. No payments were made on the notes. In 1970, Trenka attempted to remove some items from his safe deposit box in Farmers State Bank but was prevented from doing so by Richard Hansen, president of the bank and of the Worden Trading Company. Hansen would not release the contents of the box until payment was made on the notes. Trenka's girlfriend wrote two checks to Worden Trading Company in order to obtain the contents of the box. Hansen claimed that he was substituting one form of collateral for another and that the payments were an acknowledgment of the debts. To be a valid acknowledgment of a debt and suspend the running of the Statute of Limitations, payments must be voluntary. The payments here were involuntary because neither Hansen nor Worden Trading Company had a valid security interest in the safe deposit box and the Statute of Limitations ran. Worden Trading Co. v. Trenka, 184 M 256, 602 P2d 601 (1979).

Action to Enforce Implied Covenant in Oil and Gas Lease: In a suit by lessor's grantees to collect damages from defendants/lessees for failure to comply with the common-law offset drilling rule and drill a well to protect the plaintiffs' interests, the suit was not governed by the Statute of Limitations applying to suits to prevent waste to real property. Because the suit was brought to enforce implied provisions of an agreement, it was governed by the Statute of Limitations applicable to contracts. U. V. Indus., Inc. v. Danielson, 184 M 203, 602 P2d 571 (1979).

Deed as Contract in Writing: In Montana deeds are construed as contracts in writing to which the 8-year Statute of Limitations applies. Neils v. Deist, 180 M 542, 591 P2d 652 (1979), followed in Larson v. Udem, 246 M 336, 805 P2d 1318, 47 St. Rep. 2088 (1990).

Implied Contract for Services — Statute of Limitations — Month-by-Month Accrual: The Statute of Limitations on an implied contract for services is 5 years, under 27-2-202. The Statute begins to run when an enforceable claim accrues. Section 39-2-602(2) creates the presumption that an employee is hired on a month-by-month basis. The Statute therefore begins to run on each month's wages as that month's wages become due. Pope v. Keefer, 180 M 454, 591 P2d 206 (1979).

Fraudulent Concealment: Doctrine of fraudulent concealment was not applicable to medical malpractice case in which plaintiff alleged that doctor had failed to make a full disclosure of the experimental nature of the operation to be performed, but admitted that he was informed in detail of the type of operation to be performed and that he consented to the operation and where, although doctor assured the plaintiff that he would be able to return to work within 6 months of the operation, plaintiff admitted to being totally disabled for 6 years after the operation and permanently partially disabled thereafter. Monroe v. Harper, 164 M 23, 518 P2d 788 (1974).

Decedents' Estates:

Five-year limitation period under this section did not include time between decedent's death and issuance of letters of administration to defendant. Cartwright v. Joyce, 155 M 478, 473 P2d 515 (1970).

Statutes of Limitations have no application to creditors' claims in probate that have been approved by the personal representative and allowed by the District Court. Montgomery v. First Nat'l Bank, 114 M 395, 136 P2d 760 (1943).

An action by an executor to recover from a beneficiary under a will a succession tax required by the laws of another country that plaintiff had paid was upon an obligation not founded on an instrument in writing and therefore barred by 27-2-202(3) because not commenced within 3 years from the time the tax was paid. Tietjen v. Heberlein, 54 M 486, 171 P 928 (1918).

Damage to Building From Broken Water Pipes: This section did not apply to action by owners of apartment building against realtors for water damages to building from bursting of water pipes due to alleged negligence of realtors in caring for the building. The claim was barred by Statute of Limitations relating to injury to or waste or trespass on property, 27-2-207. Quitmeyer v. Theroux, 144 M 302, 395 P2d 965 (1964). (Dissenting opinion, 144 M 302, 395 P2d 965 (1964).)

Nonparticipating Oil Royalty: Where wife agreed to property settlement granting her a percentage of royalties should oil ever be found on land, such right did not vest until oil production began and her action for royalties was not barred by the fact that it had been more than 8 years since execution of the settlement. Close v. Ruegsegger's Estate, 143 M 32, 386 P2d 739 (1963).

Defenses Not Barred: Limitation statutes apply only to actions and not to defenses; and evidence of payment by services rendered was admissible, although such services were done more than 5 years prior to filing of action. Hagerty v. Hall, 135 M 276, 340 P2d 147 (1959).

Corporate Suspension: The suspension in its domicile of a foreign corporation for nonpayment of taxes does not suspend the running of the Statute of Limitations on claims against the corporation, since, under section 93-3007, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), the corporation could have been served with process; hence, a mortgage executed by the corporation would be barred after 8 years. Mont. Valley Land Co. v. Bestul, 126 M 426, 253 P2d 325 (1953).

Partial Payments Tolling Statute:

Where the plaintiff in an action on a note executed in 1931 and payable within 90 days pleaded part payment in 1934 and 1938 to bar the Statute of Limitations, he has the burden of proof that the payments were made and it is not sufficient to show the endorsement on the back of the note. An endorsement of a payment on a note by the holder does not create a presumption that the payment was made at the time that the endorsement indicates. Wight v. Stevenson, 126 M 377, 252 P2d 241 (1953).

A payment of principal or interest extends time for commencement of action on note from date of last payment. Mercer v. Mercer, 120 M 132, 180 P2d 248 (1947), followed in Hughes v. Hughes, 2013 MT 176, 370 Mont. 499, 305 P.3d 772.

Where plaintiff rented building from defendant with understanding that rent was to be applied on several notes made by defendant which plaintiff held, in absence of specific directions by defendant as to application of rent to the various notes, plaintiff could apply rent as he saw fit to interrupt running of Statute of Limitations as to all of the notes. Mercer v. Mercer, 120 M 132, 180 P2d 248 (1947), followed in Hughes v. Hughes, 2013 MT 176, 370 Mont. 499, 305 P.3d 772.

The rendering of service, transfer of property or goods, or assumption of obligations taken as part payment of principal or interest is sufficient to toll Statute of Limitations on note. Mercer v. Mercer, 120 M 132, 180 P2d 248 (1947).

In order for payment of principal or interest due on note to toll Statute of Limitations, it must be voluntary and the indebtedness clearly identified so as to warrant inference that debtor had acknowledged existence of liability in his obligation to pay remainder of debt. Mercer v. Mercer, 120 M 132, 180 P2d 248 (1947).

Part payment on a promissory note by one of two joint makers does not suspend the running of the Statute of Limitations as against the other. Nathan v. Jenkins, 113 M 46, 123 P2d 975 (1942).

Where plaintiff relies on a payment to toll the running of the Statute of Limitations in an action on a promissory note, the mere endorsement of a payment on the instrument by the holder or his agent does not raise a presumption that such payment was made by the makers or either of them; plaintiff to make out a prima facie case must show actual payment made by or for the makers with their knowledge and consent. Such endorsement promotes the interest of the payee and in that sense is self-serving. Nathan v. Jenkins, 113 M 46, 123 P2d 975 (1942).

In an action to recover balance due on contract for the purchase of water stock and to foreclose mortgages on land securing contracts, where company constructed its water distribution system under contract with the Carey Land Act Board (now abolished), payment of an installment of the purchase price made 8 years before suit and credited first to interest on the entire unpaid balance prevented the 8-year Statute of Limitations from running against any of the installments remaining unpaid. Valier-Mont. Land & Water Co. v. Ries, 109 M 508, 97 P2d 584 (1940).

Partial payment of a past-due note by one joint obligor does not extend the time within which an action on it may be brought, as against the co-obligor who neither authorized nor ratified such payment. Turner v. Powell, 85 M 241, 278 P 512 (1929).

If an endorser makes payment of interest on an overdue note, the holder's right to maintain suit on the instrument is not barred under this section if commenced within 8 years after such payment. Morgan v. Huffman, 76 M 396, 247 P 326 (1926).

Trust Charges: In an action for an accounting, assuming that there was a trust relationship, when the plaintiff beneficiary in 1925 made complaint to the defendant as to how the expenses were charged and defendant denied that its conduct was wrong and continued to make similar charges, the Statute of Limitations began to run at that time, since at that time the plaintiff knew that the trust was being violated. Potlatch Oil & Ref. Co. v. Ohio Oil Co., 199 F2d 766 (9th Cir. 1952).

Trust Obligations:

Statute of Limitations does not commence to run in favor of the trustee of a resulting trust until the trustee disavows the trust or asserts some right inconsistent with it. Campanello v. Mercer, 124 M 528, 227 P2d 312 (1951).

Where the relationship of plaintiff and defendant in the acquisition of securities was that of trustee and cestui que trust, under an express parol agreement to share in the profits, and the former repudiated the relationship in 1912 before the sale of the securities, with the knowledge of the latter, defendant's claim for an interest in the proceeds of the transaction asserted in 1921 was barred under 27-2-202(2). Cook v. MacGinniss, 72 M 280, 233 P 129 (1925).

An action to recover money received by defendant from her husband with knowledge that it belonged to plaintiff and that it had been taken from him by the husband by threats and intimidation, thus constituting her a trustee, ex maleficio, would seem to fall within the provision of 27-2-202(3). Kerrigan v. O'Meara, 71 M 1, 227 P 819 (1924).

Bond for Deed: Action to enforce "bond for deed" for certain mining rights in land was barred by this section. Clinton v. Miller, 124 M 463, 226 P2d 487 (1951).

Consideration for New Promise: Even though original debt is barred by Statute of Limitations, it is sufficient consideration for a subsequent note and new promise to pay, and such new note revives the obligation. Betor v. Chevalier, 121 M 337, 193 P2d 374 (1948).

Offset of Barred Claims: Where debt was barred by 5-year Statute of Limitations, it could not be set up as an offset in a suit on a note and mortgage not arising out of the same transaction. Francisco v. Francisco, 120 M 468, 191 P2d 317, 1 ALR 2d 625 (1947), distinguished in Hagerty v. Hall, 135 M 276, 340 P2d 147 (1959).

Account for Services: This section was applicable to an account for hotel services furnished by plaintiff to defendant during period 1930 to 1939, inclusive, since the account was not one of reciprocal demand, and the limitation operated from the date of the opening of the account. Couse v. Dietz, 117 M 539, 159 P2d 886 (1945).

Mortgages: Where a mortgagor never paid any of the principal or interest on the mortgage or any taxes on the land and the mortgagee paid the taxes to prevent delinquency but allowed the Statute of Limitations to run against his lien by not availing himself of the provisions of 71-1-210, the court will not free the lands from the cloud occasioned by the outlawed mortgage in a suit to quiet title brought by the mortgagor without his first reimbursing the mortgagee for the taxes, on the theory that the mortgagee became subrogated to the county's tax lien provided by 15-16-401. Swingley v. Riechoff, 112 M 59, 112 P2d 1075 (1941), explained in Mont. Valley Land Co. v. Bestul, 126 M 426, 253 P2d 325 (1953).

Bond Coupons: Generally, the Statute of Limitations applicable to the principal of public bonds is applicable also to the coupons, except that on the latter it begins to run from their date of maturity and not from that of the bond, whether attached or detached, but mandamus to compel payment does not lie until demand made and refused or until the trust created between the irrigation district officers and County Treasurer on the one hand and the bondholders on the other is repudiated, which did not occur in the instant case, so neither the 2-, 5-, nor 8-year Statutes were applicable as barring the coupons. State ex rel. Central Auxiliary Corp. v. Rorabeck, 111 M 320, 108 P2d 601 (1940).

Equitable Obligations:

An action for money had and received, where payment was made by mistake, resting upon the legal fiction of a promise implied by law to return that which in equity and good conscience should be returned to him from whom it was received, falls within the limitation of 3 years provided by 27-2-202(3) and not within the 2-year limitation prescribed by 27-2-203 as "for relief on the ground of fraud or mistake", the mistake alleged being a mere incident to the cause of action and 27-2-203 having to do only with mistake of fact. McFarland v. Stillwater County, 109 M 544, 98 P2d 321 (1940).

An action against a party for money that he, in equity and good conscience, ought to refund is one upon an "obligation" and is barred unless commenced within 3 years from the time the cause of action accrues. Schaeffer v. Miller, 41 M 417, 109 P 970 (1910), distinguished in Clack v. Staunton, 100 M 26, 44 P2d 1069 (1935), and Keith v. Kottas, 119 M 98, 172 P2d 306 (1946).

Pleadings:

Where new matter in the answer consists of plea of Statute of Limitations, plaintiff need not reply thereto if matter in avoidance of the plea be found in any of plaintiff's pleadings; hence when complaint on mortgage foreclosure shows on face that the action is barred but in addition alleges payment of interest within the 8-year period, no reply is necessary to the limitation plea, nothing new having been brought in by the answer. Matteson v. Ackerson, 104 M 239, 66 P2d 797, 115 ALR 750 (1937).

By failing to plead the Statute of Limitations in a foreclosure proceeding, the defense is waived. Humbird v. Arnet, 99 M 499, 44 P2d 756 (1935); Turner v. Powell, 85 M 241, 278 P 512 (1929).

Promises Tolling Statute: As against defendant's contention in a mortgage foreclosure suit that the notes were "outlawed" under this section, the evidence was held to show that a check and letters to plaintiff promising payment, written within the 8-year period, had tolled the statute. Rock Island Plow Co. v. Cut Bank Implement Co., 101 M 117, 53 P2d 116 (1935).

Conversion of Property: One whose property has been converted may waive the tort and sue on an implied promise to pay the value of the property converted, and the Statute of Limitations applicable is 27-2-202(3). Stagg v. Stagg, 90 M 180, 300 P 539 (1931).

Partial Bar by Statute: Where plaintiff lessor brought action to recover rental, payable yearly under an oral lease of land for 2 years for the full term, but the demand as to the first year's rental was barred by 27-2-202(2), a plea of the statute directed to the whole cause of action was bad. Besse v. McHenry, 89 M 520, 300 P 199 (1931).

Tax Sale Receipts: An action for money had and entered against a county by a school district to recover money collected by the former for interest and penalties on redemption of property from tax sale proportionate to the tax due it was one upon "a contract, account, promise, not founded upon an instrument in writing", within the meaning of 27-2-202(2), fixing the period within which such an action must be brought at 5 years. School District v. Pondera County, 89 M 342, 297 P 498 (1931).

Statutory Stockholders' Liability: While the double liability of stockholders in state banks is contractual in nature, this section does not apply in an action on such liability, but, the liability being one created by law, the provision of 27-2-211(3), that an action of that nature must be brought within 3 years after it was created, applies. Brown v. Roberts, 78 M 301, 254 P 419 (1927).

Bonds of Public Officers:
The liability of a surety on the official bond of a County Treasurer is not founded on an "instrument in writing" in the sense in which that term is used in this section. Gallatin County v. USF&G Co., 50 M 55, 144 P 1085 (1914), distinguished in School District v. Pondera County, 89 M 342, 297 P 498 (1931).

This section is not applicable to an action against a City Treasurer who fails to turn over interest on public money received by him. Butte v. Goodwin, 47 M 155, 134 P 670 (1913).

Waiver of Statute:
A party may waive the benefit of the Statute of Limitations before or after the expiration of the prescribed limit, not only by either of the acts mentioned in 27-2-104 but also by express agreement based upon a consideration, though made contemporaneously with and as a part of the principal agreement or obligation out of which the action has arisen. Parchen v. Chessman, 49 M 326, 142 P 631 (1914), distinguished in Thielbar Realities, Inc. v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co., 91 M 525, 9 P2d 469 (1932).

A stipulation embodied in a promissory note to the effect that the maker expressly waives all rights and benefits conferred by the Statute of Limitations is not void as against public policy, and by it he binds himself not to plead the Statute, if not for all time, for at least a reasonable time, namely, until the expiration of an additional period of 8 years after the period prescribed by this section. Parchen v. Chessman, 49 M 326, 142 P 631 (1914), distinguished in Thielbar Realities, Inc. v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co., 91 M 525, 9 P2d 469 (1932).

Public Officer's Obligations: A City Treasurer who failed to turn over interest received on public funds was guilty of a breach of his implied promise, as trustee of such funds, to do so, and not a breach of a contract in writing as embodied in his official bond; hence an action to recover such interest, brought more than 4 years after the conclusion of the Treasurer's term of office, was barred by 27-2-202. Butte v. Goodwin, 47 M 155, 134 P 670 (1913).

Instrument in Writing:
Where the transfer of personal property was evidenced by a bill of sale, to which the purchaser, upon reselling the goods, added an endorsement guaranteeing delivery but not expressly warranting title, the language of 30-11-211 may not be read into the endorsement and thereby a written contract created so as to make the statutory limitation of 8 years applicable to a suit for a breach of warranty of title to the property sold. Pincus v. Muntzer, 34 M 498, 87 P 612 (1906).

The instrument in writing mentioned in this section is one which, in itself, contains a contract to do the particular thing for the nonperformance of which the action is brought and not one which by implication may be said to be in writing. Pincus v. Muntzer, 34 M 498, 87 P 612 (1906).

Declaration of Trust: An action to enforce a liability evidenced by a declaration of trust in which a complaint was filed within 8 years after a certain payment under the declaration became due was commenced in time. Goodell v. Sanford, 31 M 163, 77 P 522 (1904).

27-2-203. Actions for relief on ground of fraud or mistake.

Case Notes

Discovery of Fraud or Mistake — When Limitation Period Begins to Run	1029
Failure to Discover Fraud or Mistake — Statute Not Tolded	1031

GENERAL

Failure to Establish Existence of Written Contract Concerning Obligation to Convey Mobile Homes — Declaratory Relief Inappropriate: Plaintiff sought declaratory relief related to the purchase of a trailer park, asserting that the seller breached the contract by failing to convey the seller's personal mobile units following the sale. The District Court denied the breach of contract claim, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Plaintiff failed to establish the existence of a written contract under which the seller was obligated to convey the personal mobile units, so the breach of contract claim was futile. Deschamps v. Treasure St. Trailer Ct., Ltd., 2010 MT 74, 356 Mont. 1, 230 P.3d 800.

Statute of Limitations Under Repealed Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act Displaced by Explicit Statute of Limitations in Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act: Plaintiff insurers argued that a creditor may not assert a claim under the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act (UFTA) until after the underlying judgment is entered, citing Murphy v. Atkinson, 262 M 164, 864 P2d 273 (1993). Plaintiffs were correct to the extent that prior to the adoption of UFTA in 1991, the statute of limitations for fraudulent transfers under the now repealed Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act was supplied by the general rule for fraud under this section. However, after adoption of UFTA, Murphy, in conjunction with this section, was no longer the rule of law, but rather the statute of limitations in 31-2-341 applied and provided that a judgment in hand is no longer a prerequisite for establishing standing to bring a UFTA claim. Gulf Ins. Co. v. Clark, 2001 MT 45, 304 M 264, 20 P3d 780 (2001).

Limitations of Actions: The parties entered into an agreement for the sale of a motel. The agreement provided that the sellers would assign their Burlington Northern railroad lease to the buyers at closing. The parties were mutually mistaken about the area covered by the lease. The Supreme Court determined that the dispute was a breach of contract action governed by the 8-year statute of limitations of 27-2-202 rather than the 2-year limitations period for fraud and mistake under this section. Maloney v. Heer, 257 M 500, 850 P2d 957, 50 St. Rep. 382 (1993).

Applicable Statutes of Limitations Not Affected by Statute of Repose Applicable to Real Property Improvements: The plaintiffs, a condominium owners' association and its individual members, sued Big Sky of Montana Realty, Inc., the successor in interest of Big Sky of Montana, Inc., for breach of warranty, strict liability, negligence, fraud, and deceptive practices in connection with a fire in the Deer Lodge Condominiums at Big Sky. The defendants claimed that the actions were barred by the statute of limitations applicable to each individual cause of action. Plaintiffs claimed that the applicable statute of limitations in 27-2-208 allows a 10-year period following completion of real property improvements in which to bring an action. The Supreme Court held that 27-2-208 was a statute of repose and should be interpreted not to extend the statute of limitations otherwise applicable to a cause of action. The statute only provides that if the time for bringing an action was otherwise extended by law under 27-2-401 or 27-2-409, the extension could be for no longer than 10 years after completion of the improvement. The District Court therefore properly held that the action was barred by the statutes of limitations. Ass'n of Unit Owners of Deer Lodge Condominium v. Big Sky of Mont., Inc., 245 M 64, 798 P2d 1018, 47 St. Rep. 1814 (1990), followed in Carl v. Chilcote, 255 M 526, 844 P2d 79, 49 St. Rep. 1109 (1992).

Avoidance of Statute of Limitations by Pursuit of One Claim Over Another — Gravamen of Claim to Control Limitations Period: Plaintiff contended that he could elect between a contract theory or negligence theory when his claim had a basis in either theory. The District Court found that the gravamen of the causes of action alleged under the contract theory "sound in common law fraud and negligence" and that, despite the contract label, the theory simply rehearsed the fraud and negligence claims and was barred by the statute of limitations. Affirming, the Supreme Court held that the election to pursue one cause of action over another must be more than a mere relabeling of a claim to avoid a statute of limitations. The gravamen of the claim, not the label attached, controls the limitations period to be applied to that claim. Erickson v. Croft, 233 M 146, 760 P2d 706, 45 St. Rep. 1379 (1988), distinguishing Unruh v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 553, 633 P2d 617, 38 St. Rep. 1156 (1981). See also Selensky-Foust v. Mercer, 2022 MT 97, 408 Mont. 488, 510 P.3d 78.

Tolling of Statute — Time Spent in Armed Services: The 2-year period of limitations is tolled by the time plaintiff spent in the Marine Corps, under the federal Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act of 1940, 50 U.S.C. 525. In re Estate & Guardianship of Schultz, 218 M 148, 706 P2d 135, 42 St. Rep. 1471 (1985).

Real Estate Fraud — Joinder of Parties Relating Back to Original Complaint: In an action against the defendant real estate company for fraud and negligence in the sale of real property to the plaintiffs, the complaint was properly filed in August 1979 and the owners of the company were dismissed by stipulation from the action in June 1980. When the plaintiffs made a motion in 1982 to rejoin the owners as defendants, the defendant company argued that the joinder was barred by the 2-year Statute of Limitations. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the amendment satisfied the conditions of former Rule 15(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), related back to the date of the filing of the action, and was therefore not barred. The owners were corporate officers, and both knew of the lawsuit and knew or should have known of their potential liability. The joinder is therefore not precluded by the Statute of Limitations. White v. Lobdell, 208 M 295, 678 P2d 637, 41 St. Rep. 346 (1984).

Motion by Trustee in Bankruptcy to Set Aside Conveyance Not Barred by State Statute of Limitations: Where the trustee in bankruptcy brought an action in a bankruptcy proceeding to set aside a fraudulent conveyance made by the debtor's wife, the bankruptcy judge held that the action filed by the trustee was not barred by the state Statute of Limitations, as federal statute (11 U.S.C. 546(a)) gives the trustee 2 years after his appointment to file such an action. Here, the action was brought within the applicable limit. In re McIntosh, 40 St. Rep. 1488 (1983) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Pension Dispute Controlled by Two-Year Statute of Limitation: Appellant's action to adjust his retirement benefits based on a claim of two constitutional violations and promissory estoppel is barred by the Statute of Limitations, 27-2-207, relating to property rights and is not controlled, as appellant contends, by 27-7-202, applying to written contracts, or 27-2-203, applying to obligations other than a contract. "Only in the broadest sense could 27-2-203 or 27-2-202 be considered controlling, and since there is a more specific statute involving injury to personal property rights, of which retirement benefits are one, the Supreme Court is constrained to follow the more specific statute." Rierson v. St., 191 M 66, 622 P2d 195, 38 St. Rep. 3 (1981).

Products Liability — Statute of Limitations — Discovery Rule Not Applicable: Plaintiff was injured in May 1975, when his holstered Ruger revolver discharged into his leg as he crawled under some brush. He filed this products liability action in September 1979. Ruger moved for summary judgment based upon the running of the Statute of Limitations. Plaintiff urges adoption of a discovery rule respecting accrual of the cause of action. Discovery rules have been limited to latent injuries resulting primarily from either drug products or medical malpractice. Montana statutes permit a discovery rule in actions for fraud or mistake and in actions for malpractice. The Statute of Limitations for tort actions, however, does not authorize application of a discovery rule. Adoption of such a rule would destroy the very policies which justify the Statute of Limitations. To allow a plaintiff who fails to inquire into the cause of injury to avoid the time bar under the guise of "discovery" would hopelessly demolish the protection afforded defendants by the Statute. Much v. Sturm, Ruger & Co., Inc., 502 F. Supp. 743, 37 St. Rep. 2116 (D.C. Mont. 1980).

Misrepresentation Action in Real Estate Sale: The District Court properly awarded summary judgment to defendants in a misrepresentation action under the Montana real estate license law when the record indicated that no fraudulent representations were made by defendants and the Statute of Limitations had expired, notwithstanding the "discovery" exception. Anderson v. Applebury, 173 M 411, 567 P2d 951 (1977).

Rental — Effect of Payments Upon Limitation: Whether or not rent was paid, the lease contained no default clause and no evidence was presented as to termination of lease. Therefore, lease was voidable, not void, and the statute did not begin to run until there was a demand and refusal. Grinde v. Tindall, 172 M 199, 562 P2d 818 (1977).

Action Not Based on Fraud: Where daughter conveyed real property to her mother with the understanding that it was to be held in trust for her and mother then deeded property to another daughter with the understanding that it was to be held in trust for the first daughter, an action brought by the first daughter to recover the property was not based on fraud but upon a failure to comply with the promise to reconvey the property and was therefore not barred by this section. Opp v. Boggs, 121 M 131, 193 P2d 379 (1948), distinguished in Barrett v. Zenisek, 132 M 229, 315 P2d 1001 (1957).

Fraud and Mistake Explained:

This section applies only to fraud or mistake within the common acceptance of the term. Opp v. Boggs, 121 M 131, 193 P2d 379 (1948).

Section 27-2-203 applies only to actions for fraud or mistake within the common acceptance of those terms and not to an action in claim and delivery, where defendant honestly and in good faith bought an estray from one wrongfully claiming to be the owner of the animal. Bennett v. Meeker, 61 M 307, 202 P 203 (1921).

Reformation Incident to Enforcement of Contract:

In a suit on a public warehouseman's bond in which an amended complaint sought reformation of the bond to express the true intent of the parties to protect owners of beans rather than owners of grain, the reformation asked was merely auxiliary to the enforcement of the contract originally pleaded and the applicable limitation was that applying to actions on contracts rather than that applying to actions for relief on the ground of fraud or mistake. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. v. St., 92 F2d 693 (9th Cir. 1937), affirming 16 F. Supp. 489 (D.C. Mont. 1936).

Where plaintiff's primary purpose in bringing action against defendant fire insurance company was the enforcement of the contract of insurance but, as ancillary thereto, sought the aid of the equity arm of the court for the reformation of the policy in one particular on the ground of mutual mistake, the applicable Statute of Limitations is that having to do with an action on the contract and not this section. Thielbar Realities, Inc. v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co., 91 M 525, 9 P2d 469 (1932).

Fraud of Judgment: Under 27-2-203, where an action to set aside a sale of property as in fraud of a judgment against the seller was commenced in the year after the rendition of the judgment, it was not barred by limitations, since the right of action did not accrue until plaintiff's judgment was obtained. Finch v. Kent, 24 M 268, 61 P 653 (1900), followed in Murphy v. Atkinson, 262 M 164, 864 P2d 273, 50 St. Rep. 1495 (1993).

FRAUD

Claim Accrued on Date of Dissolution Hearing — Fraud Action Barred by Statute of Limitations: The plaintiff alleged that his former spouse fraudulently conveyed real property to herself prior to the dissolution of their marriage and that he did not discover the fraud until he obtained a copy of the deed to the property, but the plaintiff's claim was barred by the statute of limitations because the disputed property was addressed during a previous dissolution proceeding in which the plaintiff was alerted to the fact that he was no longer the co-owner of the property. Kananen v. South, 2013 MT 232, 371 Mont. 289, 307 P.3d 309.

Failure to Bring Fraud Action Within Time Claim Accrues — Statute of Limitations Precluding Fraud Action: Plaintiff discovered or reasonably should have discovered within 6 months of purchasing a trailer park in May 2003 that a fraud may have been perpetrated regarding the profitability of the park and the condition of the park water system, but plaintiff did not bring a fraud or misrepresentation claim until 2007. The actual and constructive fraud claims were therefore precluded by the statute of limitations in 27-2-203, which requires an action for fraud to be commenced within 2 years. Plaintiff's claims were properly dismissed as untimely. Deschamps v. Treasure St. Trailer Ct., Ltd., 2010 MT 74, 356 Mont. 1, 230 P.3d 800.

Sufficient Evidence of Negligent Misrepresentation — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiffs sued for negligent misrepresentation because defendants allegedly misled plaintiffs regarding the output of a well on a subdivision lot purchased by plaintiffs. The District Court granted summary judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appealed. The Supreme Court applied the elements in Cechovic v. Hardin & Associates, Inc., 273 M 104, 902 P2d 520 (1995), to determine whether the record affirmatively established that defendants made a false representation as to a past or existing material fact without any reasonable ground for believing it to be true, with the intent to induce plaintiffs' reliance, and that plaintiffs, unaware of the falsity of the representation, justifiably relied on the representation and suffered damage as a result of the reliance. Plaintiffs established that they had inquired about the well output on numerous occasions and that defendants indicated at closing that the well produced 3,600 gallons of water a day, even though they knew that the well produced only 700 gallons a day. Plaintiffs also established that they relied on defendants' representation and that they suffered damages by having to install a cistern and to haul water to the property instead of using the well. Evidence of negligent misrepresentation was thus proved and summary judgment for plaintiffs was affirmed. Walters v. Luloff, 2008 MT 17, 341 M 158, 176 P3d 1034 (2008).

No Error in Denial of Amended Complaint When Underlying Claim Moot: Plaintiff sought to file an amended complaint based on allegations of defendants' fraud in treating plaintiff's pet dog at defendants' animal clinic. The District Court denied the amended complaint, and plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The 2-year statute of limitations on the fraud claim had run, rendering the fraud claim futile, so denial of the amended complaint was not an abuse of discretion. Hawkins v. Harney, 2003 MT 58, 314 M 384, 66 P3d 305 (2003).

Action Based in Tort or Contract — Choice of Injured Party as to Theory Under Which to Proceed: Andersen's home was destroyed in an arson fire. It could not be determined who started the fire, so The Travelers Indemnity Co. (Travelers) paid Andersen's claim. Four years later, Andersen was charged with conspiracy to commit arson, and Travelers filed to recover the claim money. Andersen moved for summary dismissal on grounds that the complaint alleged fraud, the statute of limitations for which had already run under this section. Although the complaint alleged fraud, it also alleged a breach of contract. When an action may be based in either tort or contract, the injured party may elect the theory under which to proceed, and the statute of limitations governing that theory will control. The general rule applied to situations falling within the twilight zone of contract and tort law is that doubt must be resolved in favor of an action based on contract. Travelers' complaint sufficiently alleged a cause of action based on breach of written contract to allow application of the 8-year statute of limitations in 27-2-202 and thus was timely filed. Travelers Indem. Co. v. Andersen, 1999 MT 201, 295 M 438, 983 P2d 999, 56 St. Rep. 782 (1999), following Weible v. Ronan St. Bank, 238 M 235, 776 P2d 837, 46 St. Rep. 1231 (1989).

Negligent Misrepresentation Governed by Three-Year Negligence Statute of Limitations — Tolls Until Plaintiff Suffers Damages: A real estate broker appealed a verdict finding that he was liable because of his employee's negligent misrepresentation of a boundary on land purchased by the plaintiffs. The basis for the appeal was that the applicable statute of limitations was the 2-year time limit governing actions for fraud and that the suit had not been timely filed. The Supreme Court held that negligent misrepresentation involves breach of a reasonable standard of care and therefore is couched in terms of negligence and as such is subject to the 3-year negligence statute of limitations. The Supreme Court further held that the statute did not begin to run until damages were suffered and that did not occur in the present case until the plaintiffs learned that their house had been built on another's property. Cechovic v. Hardin & Associates, Inc., 273 M 104, 902 P2d 520, 52 St. Rep. 854 (1995), partially overruling Bushnell v. Cook, 221 M 296, 718 P2d 665 (1986).

Blank Security Agreement Signed by Borrower and Filled Out by Bank: Borrower signed a blank security agreement that bank then filled out and mailed to her. The record shows that she had the agreement in her possession in December 1985; thus, she had the means to discover the fraud that she alleged bank committed in setting the agreement's terms. Because she did not file a claim until December 1988, her claim was barred by the 2-year statute of limitations. Richland Nat'l Bank & Trust v. Swenson, 249 M 410, 816 P2d 1045, 48 St. Rep. 730 (1991).

Estoppel: Plaintiff purchaser, who forfeited all payments under a real estate contract for deed and was required to return possession to the sellers, alleged that the sellers engaged in a continuing fraudulent concealment of facts that prevented him from ascertaining the extent of their fraud regarding representations concerning the ranch property he purchased. In response to plaintiff's contention that the sellers are estopped from raising the statute of frauds as a defense because of their acts of fraudulent concealment, the Supreme Court held that plaintiff did not exercise the ordinary diligence necessary to discover the facts constituting the alleged fraud, and therefore the necessary elements of estoppel are not present in this case. Plaintiff's claim is barred by the statute of limitations. Holman v. Hansen, 237 M 198, 773 P2d 1200, 46 St. Rep. 734 (1989).

Plaintiffs' claim of fraud against a shareholder was not barred by the 2-year Statute of Limitations, defendant being estopped from arguing the affirmative defense in order to promote justice, honesty, and fair dealing, when the six elements of estoppel have been established. Keneco v. Cantrell, 174 M 130, 568 P2d 1225 (1977), distinguished in Holman v. Hansen, 237 M 198, 773 P2d 1200, 46 St. Rep. 734 (1989).

Fraud Claims Barred — No Showing That Statute Did Not Begin to Run: Plaintiff brought action for fraud, both actual and constructive, as well as undue influence, arising out of a promise by his mother to compensate plaintiff, upon sale of the family corporation's assets, for a portion of value attributable to plaintiff's stock and partnership interest conveyed to corporation for cancellation of promissory note executed by plaintiff for a loan from the corporation. The respondent mother was granted summary judgment. The Supreme Court held that plaintiff failed to establish a fraud claim because of admissions that his mother did not intend to deceive him and that he never relied on his mother's promise to compensate. His claims were also barred by the Statute of Limitations. Fleming v. Fleming Farms, Inc., 221 M 237, 717 P2d 1103, 43 St. Rep. 776 (1986).

Action Accruing at Time of Supreme Court Decision on Which Claim Is Based: The Supreme Court held in Castillo v. Kunnemann, 197 M 190, 642 P2d 1019 (1982), that Kunnemann, the original owner of a 160-acre parcel of land, had reserved certain water and ditch rights when he conveyed the land to Franks, and that Franks, therefore, had not conveyed any of these water rights to the Castillos and the Cotants when they each purchased subdivided portions of the original parcel from Franks. Following the Supreme Court's decision, the Cotants and Castillos sued Franks for breach of contract, fraud, and in the case of the Cotants, for breach of warranty. Whether the claims are viewed as in tort or in contract, they are within the applicable Statute of Limitations. The facts constituting the fraud were not considered discovered until the date of the Supreme Court's decision, and the cases were filed within 2 years of that date. The cases were filed within the 8-year contract Statute of Limitations. Castillo v. Franks, 213 M 232, 690 P2d 425, 41 St. Rep. 2071 (1984).

Knowledge of Conflict of Interest: Harmer sued Antimony for attorney fees, and Antimony counterclaimed, sounding in fraud. The court concluded that Antimony knew of Harmer's relationship with Resources (a corporation contracting with Antimony), and therefore the counterclaim is barred by the 2-year Statute of Limitations, 27-2-203. Harmer's contacts with Montana were such as to subject him to the reach of former Rule 4B, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and therefore the Statute of Limitations is not tolled by 27-2-402. Harmer v. Lawrence, 37 St. Rep. 1333 (D.C. Mont. 1980) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Cause of Action Determines Which Limitation Applies: Trial court properly granted defendant's motion for summary judgment in action for fraudulent representation or in alternative breach of contract in sale of tractor since plaintiff's having failed to state claim in complaint for breach of contract made tort statute applicable and tort action was barred by this section. Israelson v. Mtn. Tractors Co., 155 M 69, 467 P2d 149 (1970).

Quiet Title: Quiet title action based on husband's fraud of wife's community property and instituted within 2 years of discovery of facts constituting fraud was timely even though brought as counterclaim. Rozan v. Rosen, 150 M 121, 431 P2d 870 (1967).

Contract for Sale of Real Estate: Action to rescind contract for sale of real estate was barred when not brought within 2 years after discovery of fraud by all parties concerned. Rock v. Birdwell, 149 M 449, 429 P2d 634 (1967).

Negligent Misrepresentation: Action for negligent misrepresentation is action for fraud within meaning of statute and is subject to 2-year Statute of Limitations that begins to run when plaintiff acquires knowledge of facts constituting negligent misrepresentation. Falls Sand & Gravel Co. v. W. Concrete, Inc., 270 F. Supp. 495 (D.C. Mont. 1967), followed in Williams v. DeVinney, 259 M 354, 856 P2d 546, 50 St. Rep. 831 (1993).

Action Not Based on Fraud: Where daughter conveyed real property to her mother with the understanding that it was to be held in trust for her and mother then deeded property to another daughter with the understanding that it was to be held in trust for the first daughter, an action brought by the first daughter to recover the property was not based on fraud but upon a failure to comply with the promise to reconvey the property and was therefore not barred by this section. Opp v. Boggs, 121 M 131, 193 P2d 379 (1948), distinguished in Barrett v. Zenisek, 132 M 229, 315 P2d 1001 (1957).

MISTAKE

Statute of Limitations — Did Not Run Until Lawsuit — Contract Reformation Based on Mutual Mistake: The District Court did not err by concluding that the parties' mutual mistake claims involving agreements related to the sale of land and usage rights were not barred by the statute of limitations. While the grounds and reasoning cited by the District Court may not have been individually sufficient to satisfy the obligation of ordinary diligence, when the circumstances were considered as a whole, the Supreme Court concluded that the claims could not have been discovered and thus accrual could not have occurred until the lawsuit, rendering the mutual mistake claim timely filed. Because the District Court proceeded to consider contract reformation on the ground of mutual mistake, the Supreme Court did not consider whether the District Court erred in also concluding that the statute of limitations did not bar the fraud claims. In re Platt, 2018 MT 43, 390 Mont. 338, 413 P.3d 818.

Third-Party Scrivener's Error — Statute of Limitations — Not Counterclaim or Affirmative Defense: The plaintiffs paid off one of two loans with deeds of trust, but due to a scrivener's error the wrong lien payoff was recorded. Subsequently recorded instruments corrected the mistake, but the plaintiffs argued that the statute of limitations precluded the bank from foreclosure proceedings. However, a third-party scrivener's error did not create a mutual mistake between the parties, and the scrivener's error was not a counterclaim or affirmative defense subject to the statute of limitations. Reeves v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n, 2017 MT 70, 387 Mont. 138, 391 P.3d 742.

Proper Conversion of Counterclaim of Mutual Mistake to Affirmative Defense — Mutual Mistake Counterclaim Subject to Statute of Limitations: Johnson's loan agreement listed the loan interest rate as 13%, but the promissory note and accompanying payment coupons mistakenly listed the interest rate as 0.13%. Following Johnson's final payment, defendant recalculated the amount due and determined that Johnson still owed $16,612.09. Johnson filed a complaint requesting release of the lien, and defendant filed a counterclaim alleging mutual mistake. The District Court held that justice required that the counterclaim be treated as an affirmative defense in order to avoid the 2-year statute of limitations in 27-2-203, because applying the statute of limitations would constitute an undeserved windfall to Johnson in light of the fact that Johnson knew or should have known that the 13% interest rate in the loan agreement applied. Defendant then filed a counterclaim to reform the note to reflect a 13% interest rate, and the court then granted affirmative relief to defendant based on the mutual mistake counterclaim. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed that the interests of justice required conversion of the counterclaim to an affirmative defense, but the counterclaim could not be converted to an affirmative defense seeking affirmative relief without bumping against the statute of limitations. Defendant's affirmative defense of mutual mistake went well beyond a defensive claim, and the subsequent mutual mistake counterclaim presented a cause of action seeking affirmative relief that was subject to the 2-year statute of limitations for initiation of an action for relief on grounds of fraud or mistake. Defendant's counterclaim was not timely, therefore defendant was not entitled to recover anything beyond Johnson's last payment or to an award of attorney fees and costs. Additionally, in light of defendant's inability to collect any additional payments under the loan, Johnson was granted reconveyance of the property she had conveyed by deed of trust. Johnson v. Dist. VII, Human Resources Dev. Council, 2009 MT 86, 349 M 529, 204 P3d 714 (2009), following State ex rel. Egeland v. City Council of Cut Bank, 245 M 484, 803 P2d 609 (1990). However, see Reeves v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n, 2017 MT 70, 387 Mont. 138, 391 P.3d 742, holding that a third-party scrivener's error was not a counterclaim or affirmative defense subject to the statute of limitations.

Reopening Workers' Compensation Settlement for Mutual Mistake — Statute of Limitations: Workers' compensation claimant was held to have discovered in October 1986 that back surgery was a possibility when at that time his doctor discussed with claimant the possibility of surgery and advised claimant to consider it. Furthermore, in that month, claimant's attorney for a social security disability claim notified the administrative law judge of the doctor's conclusion, and the judge's decision in claimant's favor was based in part on a possibility of surgery. Therefore, the 2-year statute of limitations for a claim based on mutual mistake (assuming that there was one) expired in October 1988 because a full and final compromise settlement approved by the Workers' Compensation Court was made without knowledge that surgery might well be necessary. The claim was barred because claimant's petition to reopen the compromise settlement was filed in July 1990. Rath v. St. Labre Indian School, 249 M 433, 816 P2d 1061, 48 St. Rep. 758 (1991).

Statute of Limitations Applicable to Alleged Mutual Mistake in Contract Action — Time to Begin Running When Party Would Have Discovered Mistake Through Ordinary Diligence: Plaintiffs claimed the District Court applied the incorrect statute of limitations on their complaint alleging mutual mistake in a contract action. However, because mutual mistake was the essence of the action rather than enforcement of the contract, this section applied. Further, the limitations period for actions based on mutual mistake begins to run when the facts are such that the party bringing the action would have discovered the mistake through the exercise of ordinary diligence, rather than at the time of actual discovery of the mistake. D'Agostino v. Swanson, 240 M 435, 784 P2d 919, 47 St. Rep. 10 (1990), distinguishing Thielbar Realty, Inc. v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co., 91 M 525, 9 P2d 469 (1932).

No Mutual Mistake in Workers' Compensation Settlement: Claimant sought to have his workers' compensation settlement reopened on grounds of mutual mistake. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's denial of the request after finding: (1) claimant was capable of understanding the terms of the settlement agreement; (2) although claimant may have experienced an increased level of pain, there was no evidence to indicate the parties were mutually mistaken about the condition of claimant's back at the time of settlement; (3) there was no evidence to link claimant's personality disorder to his back injury; and (4) the claim was barred by the statute of limitations. Whitcher v. Pac. Employers Ins. Co., 236 M 289, 769 P2d 1215, 46 St. Rep. 367 (1989).

Mutual Mistake — Discovery: An action to reform and enforce contract of sale of corporate assets on the ground of mutual mistake, commenced in April of 1955, was promptly brought where facts constituting the mistake were discovered in December of 1954. Favero v. Wynacht, 140 M 358, 371 P2d 858 (1962).

DISCOVERY OF FRAUD OR MISTAKE WHEN LIMITATION PERIOD BEGINS TO RUN

Limitations Period Not Tolled — Agent Discovered Elements of Claim — Late Claim Properly Dismissed: A purchaser of real estate and an interest in a partnership sued the seller, alleging failure to disclose the existence of a reserve oil pit before the sale. The purchaser's claims were time-barred because knowledge of the reserve pit was imputed to the purchaser based on knowledge of the purchaser's agent. The commencement of the period of limitation was when the agent discovered the elements of the claim or cause of action. Summary judgment was proper on the seller's counterclaim for enforcement of the purchase agreement because no issues of material fact existed regarding whether it was a valid contract. Payne v. Hall, 2020 MT 46, 399 Mont. 91, 458 P.3d 1001.

Tort, Fraud, Negligence, and Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act Claims Related to Faulty Water System — Statute of Limitations Runs From Notice of Problems, Not Upon Attempted Sale of Home — Claims Time-Barred: The plaintiffs were homeowners who had numerous water-related issues with their home, including having no water, intermittent flooding, and insufficient water pressure. When they went to sell the home, they learned it did not qualify for conventional financing because of water violations issued by the Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ). The plaintiffs then filed tort and unfair trade practices claims against the county, the DEQ, and an engineering firm. The District Court granted the defendants summary judgment, concluding that the plaintiffs had been on notice of the problems since the home was built and that the statute of limitations had run on their claims. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed that the statute of limitations began to run when the plaintiffs first learned their home had issues with its water system and not when they learned that the house did not qualify for conventional financing. Norbeck v. Flathead County, 2019 MT 84, 395 Mont. 294, 438 P.3d 811.

Failure to File for Hearing Within Required Time — Claim Properly Denied: Boyd was injured on the job in January 2005 and filed a first report of injury in March 2005. Boyd's claim for benefits was denied in October 2006. Boyd continued seeking treatment, and his claim was again denied in December 2006. Following further medical consultations, Boyd's claim was again denied in March 2009. Boyd filed a petition for a hearing in May 2009, and in August 2009 the employer was granted summary judgment on grounds that Boyd failed to file the petition within 2 years of initial denial of benefits. Boyd appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The court applied the specific statute of limitations in 39-71-2905 rather than the more general statute of limitations in 27-2-203, but under either statute of limitations, Boyd's petition for hearing was not timely. The October 2006 letter firmly established denial of benefits and the existence of a dispute over liability, thus triggering the 2-year statute of limitations. The limitations period began to run on October 27, 2006, was tolled for 79 days for mediation, and expired on January 14, 2009. Boyd did not file for a hearing until May 2009, and the filing was therefore untimely. Summary judgment for the employer was affirmed. Boyd v. Zurich Am. Ins. Co., 2010 MT 52, 355 Mont. 336, 227 P.3d 1026, overruled in part in Ford v. Sentry Cas. Co., 2012 MT 156, 365 Mont. 405, 282 P.3d 687.

Tolling of Statute of Limitations During Statutorily Required Workers' Compensation Mediation: After waiting more than 9 months after a mediator issued a report, Preston petitioned the Workers' Compensation Court for a hearing regarding the reopening of a formerly settled claim. At the hearing, the court determined that a mutual mistake of fact existed concerning the severity of Preston's mental illness that arose as the result of an industrial accident. However, the court also concluded that reopening the claim based on the mutual mistake of fact was time-barred under the 2-year statute of limitations in this section. On appeal, the Supreme Court disagreed. The statute of limitations did not begin to run until Preston became aware of the mistake of fact, which occurred during the 62-day statutorily mandated mediation. Given that mediation was mandatory and that Preston had to wait until satisfying the dispute resolution requirements to petition the Workers' Compensation Court, the statute of limitations tolled during mediation and Preston had an additional 62 days to file the petition. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Preston v. Transp. Ins. Co., 2004 MT 339, 324 M 225, 102 P.3d 527 (2004).

General Rule for Beginning and Tolling of Limitation Period: The statute of limitations for an action based on fraud begins to run when the fraud occurs, unless the facts that form the basis for the alleged fraud are, by their nature, concealed. After the facts forming the basis for the alleged fraud are discovered, the limitation period is tolled if the defendant takes affirmative action to prevent the plaintiff from discovering the injury. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P.2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Insurance Agent's Ongoing Misrepresentation That Policies Would Be Self-Sustaining After Three to Five Years: Whole life insurance policies stating that premiums would be due for 20 years, 30 years, or a lifetime (depending on the policy) did not put the insureds on notice that the insurance agent's sales statements were fraudulent. The agent told the insureds that after only 3 to 5 years of premium payments (depending on the policy), the policy would be self-sustaining because premiums would be paid by dividends and other earnings. In fact, the policies stated that dividends could be used to help pay premiums. When the insurer sent the insureds premium payment notices after the 3 to 5 years ended, the insureds contacted the agent, who fraudulently stated that there was a mistake and that he would take care of it. When the insurer later sent the insureds notices stating that the insurer had advanced loans against the policies to pay the premiums, the agent again fraudulently told the insureds that there was a mistake and that he would take care of it. Eventually, each policy was either terminated or lost considerable value. For statute of limitations purposes, the insureds could not be held to have been put on notice (by the policy language) that they should have discovered, and did not discover, the fraud. In addition, the agent's statements at both points in time that there was a mistake that he would take care of tolled the statute of limitations. The insureds first actually learned of the fraud upon speaking directly to insurance company personnel, who told them that the agent had been fired, that there was no such thing as a policy that was self-sustaining after 3 to 5 years, that they should pay no premiums until their questions were resolved, and that there were problems other than the mistakes that the agent had claimed. The suit filed in 1991 was within the 2-year limitation period of this section. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

No Affirmative Act of Concealment by Defendant That Would Toll Statute of Limitations: HKM had been hired to design a pipeline project and was subsequently sued for negligence by the general contractor for damages because of delays caused by pipe installed pursuant to HKM's specifications. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the general contractor. HKM then filed suit against the pipe manufacturer for indemnification for the amount for which HKM had been found liable. HKM alleged that the manufacturer had fraudulently misrepresented the characteristics of the pipe that HKM had purchased. The Supreme Court held that as early as April 18, 1986, HKM had been aware that the manufacturer had taken an inconsistent position as to the characteristics of the pipe and therefore there had been no affirmative act of concealment on the manufacturer's part that would toll the running of the statute of limitations. Therefore, HKM's cause of action was barred by the 2-year statute of limitations. HKM Associates v. NW. Pipe Fittings, Inc., 272 M 187, 900 P2d 302, 52 St. Rep. 692 (1995).

Statute of Limitations in Land Fraud Case to Begin Running at Earliest Time of Discovery of Fraud Facts: Defendant fraudulently induced plaintiffs to purchase property by misrepresenting the quality of the road that she intended to build as access to the property. There was substantial evidence to support the trial court's determination that the statute of limitations did not begin to run for any of the plaintiffs until the earliest time that plaintiffs could have discovered all of the facts constituting the fraud. Dew v. Dower, 258 M 114, 852 P2d 549, 50 St. Rep. 454 (1993).

Failure of Personal Representative to Fully Disclose Specifics of Estate — Fraud Claim Timely Filed: As personal representative of his mother's estate, Kimm refused to communicate any monetary information to his sisters, who were also heirs, stating only that the assets of the estate would be shared equally among them all. In September 1988, Kimm filed an inventory and appraisal, indicating that most of the assets were held by him in joint tenancy and stating that he was entitled to the bulk of the estate. In April 1990, the sisters filed a claim of actual fraud and undue influence, which Kimm contended was untimely because the facts constituting the claim were discovered or through due diligence should have been discovered prior to April 1988. The District Court held the claim to be timely filed, accepting the sisters' assertion that they did not discover the facts until the inventory and appraisal was filed and that Kimm did not comply with the duty of full disclosure, instead taking affirmative steps to conceal the information necessary to bring the suit. Flikkema v. Kimm, 255 M 34, 839 P2d 1293, 49 St. Rep. 880 (1992).

Statute of Limitations Applicable to Alleged Mutual Mistake in Contract Action — Time to Begin Running When Party Would Have Discovered Mistake Through Ordinary Diligence: Plaintiffs claimed the District Court applied the incorrect statute of limitations on their complaint alleging mutual mistake in a contract action. However, because mutual mistake was the essence of the action rather than enforcement of the contract, this section applied. Further, the limitations period for actions based on mutual mistake begins to run when the facts are such that the party bringing the action would have discovered the mistake through the exercise of ordinary diligence, rather than at the time of actual discovery of the mistake. D'Agostino v. Swanson, 240 M 435, 784 P2d 919, 47 St. Rep. 10 (1990), followed in Naftco Leasing Ltd. Partnership 301 v. Finalco, Inc., 254 M 89, 835 P2d 729, 49 St. Rep. 644 (1992), and distinguishing Thielbar Realities, Inc. v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co., 91 M 525, 9 P2d 469 (1932).

No Confidential Relationship Tolling Statute: Plaintiffs argued the existence of a confidential relationship between them and their lender excused their failure to discover alleged fraud by their lender and therefore tolled the statute of limitations. The court held there was no failure to discover the facts alleged to constitute fraud because the loan instruments were signed each year by plaintiffs, who should have known the terms contained therein. Therefore, any confidential relationship exception does not apply. Shiplet v. First Sec. Bank of Livingston, Inc., 234 M 166, 762 P2d 242, 45 St. Rep. 1816 (1988).

Statute of Limitations — Confidential Relationship Tolls: Plaintiff's husband and defendant were brothers and partners in a ranching operation, although each owned the land individually. Plaintiff's husband died and defendant was named executor. A corporation was formed to operate the ranch on May 1, 1973. Both parties transferred all assets to the corporation. Defendant's family got 364 more shares than plaintiff, and defendant was named president of the corporation. Restrictions were placed on the valuation and transfer of stock. On May 29, 1975, plaintiff consulted her own attorney and for the first time fully realized her position. All corporate votes became deadlocked. On April 29, 1977, plaintiff filed suit to dissolve the corporation, alleging fraud and oppressive conduct by defendant and mistake at the formation. Defendant contended the suit was barred by the Statute of Limitations, claiming that any fraud or mistake occurred in 1973. The court found that defendant occupied a position of trust and confidence in relation to plaintiff. He was executor of her husband's estate and partner to her husband at the date of death; that status imposed on defendant the duties of a trustee. The confidential relationship did not cease until May 29, 1975, when plaintiff first discovered her inferior position. This action was filed within the 2-year period from that date. Skierka v. Skierka Bros., Inc., 192 M 505, 629 P2d 214, 38 St. Rep. 754 (1981).

Noncompliance With Annexation Procedure — Property Not Subject to Municipal Tax: The city of Forsyth failed to substantially comply with the statutory annexation procedure, which supplanted common-law methods. Therefore, the disputed property taxed by the municipality was outside its jurisdiction and the plaintiffs' action for refund of taxes was remanded for consideration in conformity with such holding and the holding that under 27-2-203, the Statute of Limitations did not begin to run until plaintiff discovered that the city map was in error. Gregory v. Forsyth, 187 M 132, 609 P2d 248 (1980).

Plaintiff Not Charged With Knowledge — Publicity: Where plaintiff developed cataracts following use of defendant's drug, evidence that wide publicity had been given to causal relationship between drug and cataracts did not establish that plaintiff was charged with knowledge of such relationship so as to constitute discovery under 27-2-203. Hornung v. Richardson-Merrill, Inc., 317 F. Supp. 183 (D.C. Mont. 1970).

Transfers by Deceased During Last Illness: An action by administrator of estate of deceased against surviving partners to recover assets that had been transferred by deceased during his last illness was timely filed on July 25, 1960, where fraud was not discovered until December 1, 1958. Marshall v. Minschmidt, 148 M 263, 419 P2d 486 (1966).

FAILURE TO DISCOVER FRAUD OR MISTAKE STATUTE NOT TOLLED

Action Accruing Upon Discovery — Showing Required of Plaintiff:

Plaintiff purchaser, who forfeited all payments under a real estate contract for deed and was required to return possession to the sellers, alleged that the sellers engaged in a continuing fraudulent concealment of facts that prevented him from ascertaining the extent of their fraud regarding representations concerning the ranch property he purchased. The Supreme Court held that in the context of nonmalpractice negligence actions, invoking fraudulent concealment requires a showing of affirmative conduct by the defendant seller to obscure the existence of the cause of action. It is a question of law whether there has been a discovery of facts sufficient to start the running of the statute of limitations. Plaintiff did not exercise the ordinary diligence necessary to discover the facts constituting the alleged fraud, and therefore his claim is barred by the statute of limitations. Holman v. Hansen, 237 M 198, 773 P2d 1200, 46 St. Rep. 734 (1989).

Under 27-2-203, the limitation begins to run from the time the right of action accrues but the cause of action does not accrue until discovery of the alleged fraud, and where plaintiff relies upon the exception, he must prove the facts entitling him to its benefit. Frisbee v. Coburn, 101 M 58, 52 P2d 882 (1935); Ray v. Divers, 81 M 552, 264 P 673 (1928),

Where at the time an action for fraud is commenced the 2-year limitation prescribed by this section has expired but plaintiff proceeds under the proviso that the cause of action does not accrue until the discovery by him of the facts constituting the fraud, he must show that he used due diligence to detect it, when discovery was made, what it was, how it was made, and why it was not made sooner; he will be presumed to have known whatever with reasonable diligence he might have ascertained. Lasby v. Burgess, 88 M 49, 289 P 1028 (1930).

In order to make applicable the provision of 27-2-203, that in an action for fraud the cause of action does not accrue until discovery by plaintiff of the facts constituting the fraud, plaintiff must show, in the absence of a relation of trust or confidence between the parties which imposed upon defendant the duty of making a full disclosure of the facts, some active affirmative concealment of the fraud by defendant, something said or done to continue the deception or to prevent inquiry or discovery, else the running of the statute, which limits the time within which the action may be brought to 2 years, is not postponed. Kerrigan v. O'Meara, 71 M 1, 227 P 819 (1924), followed in Jacobson v. W. Mont. Prod. Credit Ass'n, 643 F. Supp. 391, 43 St. Rep. 1598 (D.C. Mont. 1986).

One who relies on the exception to the provision of this section, to the effect that while an action for fraud must be commenced within 2 years, the cause of action does not accrue until discovery of the facts constituting the fraud, must show the time and the circumstances of the discovery to enable the District Court to determine whether by ordinary diligence it might not have been made before, his simple statement that it was not made until the limitation had run being insufficient. Kerrigan v. O'Meara, 71 M 1, 227 P 819 (1924), followed in Jacobson v. W. Mont. Prod. Credit Ass'n, 643 F. Supp. 391, 43 St. Rep. 1598 (D.C. Mont. 1986).

Estoppel:

Plaintiff purchaser, who forfeited all payments under a real estate contract for deed and was required to return possession to the sellers, alleged that the sellers engaged in a continuing fraudulent concealment of facts that prevented him from ascertaining the extent of their fraud regarding representations concerning the ranch property he purchased. In response to plaintiff's contention that the sellers are estopped from raising the statute of frauds as a defense because of their acts of fraudulent concealment, the Supreme Court held that plaintiff did not exercise the ordinary diligence necessary to discover the facts constituting the alleged fraud, and therefore the necessary elements of estoppel are not present in this case. Plaintiff's claim is barred by the statute of limitations. Holman v. Hansen, 237 M 198, 773 P2d 1200, 46 St. Rep. 734 (1989).

Plaintiffs' claim of fraud against a shareholder was not barred by the 2-year Statute of Limitations, defendant being estopped from arguing the affirmative defense in order to promote justice, honesty, and fair dealing, when the six elements of estoppel have been established. Keneco v. Cantrell, 174 M 130, 568 P2d 1225 (1977), distinguished in Holman v. Hansen, 237 M 198, 773 P2d 1200, 46 St. Rep. 734 (1989).

Action Accruing on Discovery — Buyer on Inquiry Notice Considered to Have "Discovered" Fraud: In 1975, defendant owners (Halls) entered into a listing agreement with defendant realtors (Eastern) for the sale of Halls' 4,000-acre cattle ranch. The ranch included several parcels of cropland. Halls gave Eastern acreage figures for each parcel of cropland, which Eastern then used in preparing a brochure on the ranch. The figures were not correct, either in the total farming acreage or in the amount stated for each parcel. Mobley bought the property. He had received a copy of the brochure prior to the sale. Halls had told Mobley that the crop acreage figures were approximate. Mobley requested official maps of the property. He did not receive complete maps because no such maps existed. However, Halls did leave maps at the ranch which showed that the estimate for alfalfa acreage was not correct. In March 1976, the parties entered into a contract for deed for the ranch. Mobley began planting grain in April of 1976. His drill acreage measurements did not correspond with the acreage shown on the brochure, but Halls assured him that the acreage specified was correct. In the fall of 1976, Mobley summer fallowed with a borrowed drill whose acreage measurement also differed from the brochure figures. In June of 1977, Mobley asked the Agricultural Soil Conservation Service (now Natural Resource Conservation Service) to take acreage measurements. Their initial survey, indicating that there was less cropland than Mobley had been told, was completed in late June. An aerial survey confirming the findings was completed in November 1977. In October 1979, Mobley sued Halls and Eastern for actual damages and for punitive damages based on fraud. Defendants claimed that the action was barred by the 2-year Statute of Limitations and moved to dismiss the action. Mobley claimed that the fraud had not been discovered until the aerial survey had been completed. The District Court dismissed the case, and the Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that adequate information had come to Mobley's attention to put him on inquiry notice and that therefore the situation had been discovered within the meaning of this section more than 2 years prior to suit. Mobley v. Hall, 202 M 227, 657 P2d 604, 40 St. Rep. 49 (1983).

Showing Required of Party for Operation of Exception: The plaintiff, son of a deceased rancher, received 24 ½% of the surface rights to his father's ranch in accordance with the terms of an estate plan established for the benefit of the plaintiff and his brothers, the defendants. Upon leaving the ranch, plaintiff executed one quitclaim deed to his mineral interest in 1977 and one quitclaim deed to his surface interest in 1968 in exchange for a promise that the defendants would hold him harmless on a promissory note. The District Court did not err (in a subsequent challenge by the plaintiff to the validity of the quitclaim deeds) in declaring both deeds to be valid and denying the plaintiff any interest in the ranch. The plaintiff's claim for relief from the 1968 quitclaim deed is barred by the operation of this section. As stated in Israelson v. Mtn. Tractors Co., 155 M 69, 467 P2d 149 (1970), the claim arises upon the occurrence of the fraud and not upon its discovery, with the one exception being where the fraud is committed under such circumstances that the plaintiff would be presumed not to have knowledge of them. In such a case, however, he must show some affirmative act or representation designed to prevent his discovery of the facts. He must also show diligence. In this case, the District Court found no such facts, and the Supreme Court will not substitute its factual judgments for those of the trial court. Turley v. Turley, 199 M 265, 649 P2d 434, 39 St. Rep. 1336 (1982).

Rescission of Land Contract Barred: Under the evidence in an action for the rescission of a land contract, brought about 4 ½ years after the contract was made, based on alleged false representations by the vendor as to acreage, the number of acres which were tillable, and that no part of the land was covered by the waters of a river which formed the boundary of a portion of the land, plaintiffs were estopped by their laches and the cause of action was barred by 27-2-203. Lasby v. Burgess, 88 M 49, 289 P 1028 (1930).

2019 Amendment: Chapter 367 in (1) after "27-2-216" deleted "and 27-2-217". Amendment effective May 7, 2019.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 367, L. 2019, provided: "WHEREAS, childhood sexual abuse is an epidemic in Montana, and there are many instances in recent years of victims of childhood sexual abuse being unable to seek criminal or civil justice as the result of short statute of limitations windows in Montana law; and

WHEREAS, the sexual abuse of children is despicable conduct that must be reported, investigated, and prosecuted to create specific deterrence; and

WHEREAS, the State of Montana must ensure appropriate action when mandatory reporters and others report childhood sexual abuse; and

WHEREAS, regardless of the location of the crime, to protect Montana's children, the Department of Public Health and Human Services and the Department of Justice, working closely with local law enforcement and prosecutors, must respond to allegations of sexual abuse with effective investigations and, when viable, effective prosecutions; and

WHEREAS, childhood sexual abuse causes lifelong trauma to survivors of the same; and

WHEREAS, the average reporting age of victims of childhood sexual abuse is 52 years old, requiring the Legislature to take a meaningful look into the time periods presently allowed in Montana law to pursue criminal and civil court action; and

WHEREAS, upon review, the Legislature has determined that the current truncated time periods to bring criminal prosecutions and civil litigation related to allegations of sexual abuse are not in line with mental health science as to reporting of childhood sexual abuse, are too narrow, and should be extended."

Saving Clause: Section 15, Ch. 367, L. 2019, was a saving clause.

Severability: Section 16, Ch. 367, L. 2019, was a severability clause.

2007 Amendment: Chapter 266 in (2) at end inserted exception clause. Amendment effective April 26, 2007.

Severability: Section 5, Ch. 266, L. 2007, was a severability clause.

Applicability: Section 7(1), Ch. 266, L. 2007, provided: "[Section 1] [27-2-204] applies to a death occurring after October 1, 2007."

1993 Amendment: Chapter 560 near beginning of (1) inserted reference to 27-2-217.

1993 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 560, L. 1993, provided: "It is the intent of the legislature that the phrase "ceremony, rite, or ritual" be interpreted in a manner that does not include a ceremony, rite, or ritual performed in a formal, commonly recognized religious ceremony."

Severability: Section 6, Ch. 560, L. 1993, was a severability clause.
Retroactive Applicability: Section 7, Ch. 560, L. 1993, provided: "[Sections 3 and 4] [27-2-217 and 27-2-204] apply to all causes of action commenced on or after October 1, 1993, regardless of when the cause of action arose. To this extent, [sections 3 and 4] [27-2-217 and 27-2-204] apply retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109."

1989 Amendment: In (1), at beginning, inserted exception clause.
Severability: Section 4, Ch. 158, L. 1989, was a severability clause.
Retroactive Applicability: Section 5, Ch. 158, L. 1989, provided: "[This act] applies to all causes of action commenced on or after October 1, 1989, regardless of when the cause of action arose. To this extent, [this act] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109."

GENERAL

Defamation and Tortious Interference Claims Rooted in Tort Despite Employment Relationship — Statute of Limitations Governing State Contracts Did Not Apply: A university soccer coach was dismissed after an investigation involving his university-issued cell phone revealed text and telephone communications that were allegedly with agents of an escort service. The dismissal was covered by local and national news outlets, and some articles included information from the coach's personnel file and cell phone. The coach sued the university, alleging violation of his right of privacy, defamation, and breach of contract in his initial complaint and substituting claims for tortious interference, negligence, and invasion of privacy in an amended complaint. The District Court found that the 1-year statute of limitations in 18-1-402 applied because the coach's claims all sounded in contract, and so the complaint was untimely filed. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the coach's right of privacy, invasion of privacy, and negligence claims all arose out of his contract-based employment relationship with the university and thus were contractual claims subject to the 1-year statute of limitations. However, it found that his claims for defamation and tortious interference were tort-based. It found that the university's duty to not commit the acts alleged by the coach arose independently from its employment relationship with the coach and would have existed even in the absence of such a contractual relationship. Because those claims sounded in tort, the longer statute of limitation in 27-2-204 applied and those claims were not barred. Plakorus v. Univ. of Mont., 2020 MT 312, 402 Mont. 263, 477 P.3d 311.

Savings Statute Inapplicable to State Action Brought More Than Three Years After Acts Occurred: Following Hawkes' prison term in Montana, he was transferred to Nebraska to serve an additional prison term. Prior to transfer, Hawkes requested that some of his personal belongings be sent to his mother. Hawkes was notified in June 2003 that the items had been destroyed rather than sent to his mother. Hawkes filed a state claim for loss of the property in 2004. In 2006 Hawkes filed an action in federal court based on the same facts alleged in the state court action. The federal court dismissed the action with prejudice for failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted because Hawkes had not alleged the absence of an adequate postdeprivation remedy under state law. Hawkes then filed another state action in 2007 alleging the same facts and claims that were asserted in the first state claim and the federal claim. The District Court dismissed the second state action because more than 3 years had elapsed since the alleged acts occurred, and Hawkes appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The statute of limitations for general and personal injury tort actions is 3 years. An action to recover damages for injury to personal property must be filed within 2 years. Hawkes argued that the District Court erred in dismissing the second state claim because the federal action tolled the statute of limitations by virtue of 27-2-407. However, 27-2-407 denies any extension of time for actions that are voluntarily dismissed or upon which a court renders a final judgment on the merits. The federal court dismissed the entire complaint with prejudice, which constituted a final judgment on the merits, and any claims not presented to the federal court would not be subject to the time extension in 27-2-407. Therefore, neither the first state action nor the federal action qualified for application of 27-2-407, and the District Court properly dismissed the second state action as untimely. Hawkes v. Dept. of Corrections, 2008 MT 446, 348 M 7, 199 P3d 260 (2008).

Gravamen of Action Either in Tort or in Contract — Election of Theory by Injured Party: Defendant signed a contract in 1997 to perform repair work on the Tin Cup dam. In 1998, plaintiff learned that some of the contracted work was not completed, but plaintiff did not file suit until 2005. The District Court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on grounds that the 3-year statute of limitations for torts in 27-2-204 had expired. On appeal, plaintiff argued that the 8-year statute of limitations for contracts in 27-2-202 should apply, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Claims of breach of a professional service contract can sound either in contract or in tort. The Supreme Court looks to the gravamen of the action rather than relying on the label given to the complaint when determining which statute of limitations applies. If the gravamen of the action rests either in tort or in contract, the injured party may elect the theory to be pursued, and the statute of limitations governing the elected theory will apply. In this case, plaintiff argued that defendant was professionally negligent rather than asserting that defendant breached a specific contract provision, so plaintiff's action sounded in tort rather than in contract, and the District Court properly applied the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-204. Tin Cup County Water/Sewer District v. Garden City Plumbing & Heating, Inc., 2008 MT 434, 347 M 468, 200 P3d 60 (2008). See also N. Mont. Hosp. v. Knight, 248 M 310, 811 P2d 1276, 48 St. Rep. 444 (1991), *Guest v. Claim Barred by Statute of Limitations — Statute Not Unconstitutionally Vague: Wing, who was involved in a vehicular accident, filed a claim by mail on April 23 against the state, alleging that the accident occurred because the state's contractor failed to adequately sign a road construction site. Upon receiving Wing's claim on April 26, the state denied the allegations and argued that Wing's claim was barred by the statute of limitations. The District Court granting summary judgment for the state, ruling that Wing's complaint was subject to this section, the statute prescribing a 3-year statute of limitations, and to 2-9-301, the statute that tolls the statute of limitations for 120 days when a claimant provides notice. On appeal, Wing argued that 2-9-301 is unconstitutionally vague because it directs a claimant to present a claim, then tolls the statute of limitations upon receipt of the claim. Wing contended that the court erred in calculating the 120-day tolling period, alleging that the 120-day tolling period should have started the day on which she mailed the claim rather than the day on which the state received the claim. In affirming the District Court decision, the Montana Supreme Court held that 2-9-301 is not unconstitutionally vague because receipt of the claim means the day on which the state actually receives the claim. The plain language of the statute sets a clear time for when the tolling of the statute of limitations begins. Wing v. St., 2007 MT 72, 336 M 423, 155 P3d 1224 (2007).

Jury Finding That Accident Did Not Result in Injury Supported by Substantial Evidence: Ele alleged that he was injured in a low-impact motor vehicle accident for which Ehnes admitted liability. The jury, however, found that Ele was not injured as a result of the accident, and Ele appealed, requesting that the zero damage award be set aside, in part based on a medical bill from the emergency room where Ele went after the accident and on the fact that Ehnes failed to refute the attending physician's testimony that Ele was injured and sustained damages. The Supreme Court declined to disturb the jury decision. The emergency room bill was not direct evidence that the visit was caused by the accident, but merely showed that Ele went to the emergency room. Also, notwithstanding that the physician found evidence of injury, the doctor's testimony showed that he was not aware of Ele's preexisting medical condition. Further, testimony at trial from several of Ele's coworkers showed that Ele had engaged in numerous activities following the accident that Ele later testified he was unable to do because of pain. It is the trier of fact that weighs the credibility of witnesses, and there was sufficient credible evidence for the jury to conclude that Ele had prior back problems and could do more than he claimed, that the doctor's opinion relied on an inaccurate medical history supplied by Ele, and that the accident was so minor that Ele suffered no injury necessitating an emergency room visit. Ele v. Ehnes, 2003 MT 131, 316 M 69, 68 P3d 835 (2003), following Magart v. Schank, 2000 MT 279, 302 M 151, 13 P3d 390 (2000), distinguishing *Thompson v. Consulting Physician Diagnosis and Notice to Counsel Binding on Plaintiff — Late Claim Properly Dismissed: In 1992, after consulting with several medical doctors, Kaeding hired Baiz as his attorney to pursue a claim for damages from asbestosis against his employer, W.R. Grace & Co. (Grace). Baiz employed Whitehouse as a consulting physician, and Whitehouse, after reviewing several x-rays, sent Baiz a letter stating that the appearance of the x-rays was consistent with asbestosis. In 1996, Kaeding filed suit against Grace, alleging Grace caused his medical condition. After dismissal of the suit by the District Court for failure to commence the action within the statute of limitations, the Supreme Court, distinguishing Hando v. PPG Indus., Inc., 236 M 493, 771 P2d 956 (1989), in which a diagnosis confirming the plaintiff's suspicions as to her medical condition was not received for some time, held that Kaeding had at least a preliminary diagnosis of asbestosis as early as 1983, when Grace sent Kaeding the results of a breathing test. Although Kaeding argued that he was unaware of the contents of the letter sent to Baiz by Dr. Whitehouse, the Supreme Court concluded that because the employment of an attorney creates an agency relationship between the attorney and the attorney's client, Kaeding knew or should have known no later than the time of Dr. Whitehouse's letter to Baiz that he, Kaeding, had contracted asbestosis. Because suit was not brought within the time required by the statute of limitations after the letter from Dr. Whitehouse, the District Court had properly dismissed the claim. Kaeding v. W.R. Grace & Co., 1998 MT 160, 289 M 343, 961 P2d 1256, 55 St. Rep. 640 (1998), followed in Chriske v. State ex rel. Dept. of Corrections, 2010 MT 149, 357 Mont. 28, 235 P.3d 588.

Tort Claim Against Political Subdivision — No Requirement for Filing of Administrative Claim — Statute Clear and Unambiguous: Lincoln County Deputy Sheriff Stratemeyer filed a tort action against Lincoln County for failing to properly train, debrief, and counsel him to cure his posttraumatic stress disorder incurred from observing a suicide victim. The Supreme Court held that there is no requirement under 2-9-301(3) similar to the requirement under 2-9-301(1) that a tort claim against a political subdivision first be presented for administrative settlement. To the extent that such a requirement was implied in Rouse v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 250 M 1, 817 P2d 690 (1991), the Supreme Court expressly overruled that case. The Supreme Court also held that 2-9-301(3) is clear and unambiguous in its lack of requirement of an administrative claim and that Stratemeyer therefore filed his tort action within the 3-year statute of limitations contained in this section. Stratemeyer v. Lincoln County, 276 M 67, 915 P2d 175, 53 St. Rep. 245 (1996).

Tolling Provision Inclusive of Negligence Claims Against Nonperpetrator — "Based On" Defined: Defendant argued that the plain language of 27-2-216 refers only to intentional conduct and that the statute does not toll the general 3-year statute of limitations for negligence actions. Defendant further argued that 27-2-216 includes only claims against perpetrators of intentional sexual abuse and that because defendant was not the perpetrator, a negligence claim could not be maintained. The meaning of the term "based on" is determinative of whether 27-2-216 includes negligence claims. The plain statutory meaning is that an action is based on intentional conduct if intentional sexual abuse is the starting point or foundation of the claim. Harmonizing 27-2-216 with this section, the Supreme Court held that 27-2-216 is not limited to intentional tort actions against perpetrators of childhood sexual abuse. The District Court properly concluded that 27-2-216 includes negligence claims based on intentional conduct by a nonperpetrator. Further, the court distinguished Deeds v. U.S., 306 F. Supp. 348 (D.C. Mont. 1969), and Azure v. U.S. Health & Human Serv., 758 F. Supp. 1382 (D.C. Mont. 1991), in holding that the proposition that when harm is intentionally caused by a third person and is not within the scope of risk created by the defendant's conduct, the third person's intentional act precludes imposition of liability against the defendant applies only to cases on intervening, superseding causes. Werre v. David, 275 M 376, 913 P2d 625, 53 St. Rep. 187 (1996), following State ex rel. Snidow v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 93 M 19, 17 P2d 68 (1933).

Negligent Misrepresentation Governed by Three-Year Negligence Statute of Limitations — Tolls Until Plaintiff Suffers Damages: A real estate broker appealed a verdict finding that he was liable because of his employee's negligent misrepresentation of a boundary on land purchased by the plaintiffs. The basis for the appeal was that the applicable statute of limitations was the 2-year time limit governing actions for fraud and that the suit had not been timely filed. The Supreme Court held that negligent misrepresentation involves breach of a reasonable standard of care and therefore is couched in terms of negligence and as such is subject to the 3-year negligence statute of limitations. The Supreme Court further held that the statute did not begin to run until damages were suffered and that did not occur in the present case until the plaintiffs learned that their house had been built on another's property. Cechovic v. Hardin & Associates, Inc., 273 M 104, 902 P2d 520, 52 St. Rep. 854 (1995), partially overruling Bushnell v. Cook, 221 M 296, 718 P2d 665 (1986).

Complaint Filed Prior to Amendment — Statutes of Limitations Met: Prior to amendment of 49-2-509 (now repealed) in 1987, the decision in Drinkwalter v. Shipton Supply Co., Inc., 225 M 380, 732 P2d 1335 (1987), allowed an individual alleging sexual harassment to file directly in District Court without first filing a complaint with the Human Rights Commission, in effect granting a victim of an alleged tort two legal remedies. The amendment effectively overruled Drinkwalter by mandating that Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Human Rights Act, was the sole and exclusive remedy for a sexual harassment cause of action. In this case, because the final alleged tort occurred on March 17, 1987, prior to the amendment, Harrison reasonably and in good faith pursued one of the two potential remedies, believing that the amended version of 49-2-509 (now repealed) either was inapplicable to her claims or, if applicable, would not apply because the alleged torts occurred prior to the effective date of the 1987 amendment. Harrison filed the complaint in District Court on September 28, 1987, well within the 3-year tort statute of limitations in this section and also within the 180-day statute of limitations applicable to human rights cases that was triggered on the effective date of the amendment—April 16, 1987. Absent any evidence of prejudice by the delayed filing, equitable tolling, as discussed in Erickson v. Croft, 233 M 146, 760 P2d 706 (1988), was properly invoked and Harrison was entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Chance v. Harrison, 272 M 52, 899 P2d 537, 52 St. Rep. 603 (1995), distinguishing Hash v. U.S. W., 268 M 326, 886 P2d 442 (1994).

Statute of Limitations Applicable to Subrogee in Insurance Claim: St. Paul Fire & Marine Insurance Company (St. Paul), as subrogee, sought to recover from Glassing a payment made to its insured Lynn for underinsured motorist coverage, interest, and costs. Montana has no statutory authority extending the statute of limitations for subrogation claims in such cases. Because an insurer's claim is derived from that of the insured, St. Paul's claim was subject to the same defenses, including the statute of limitations, as though the action were sued upon by the insured and St. Paul had no claim for its damages independent of Lynn's claim. An insurer's right to subrogation attaches upon paying an insured's loss; thus, the 3-year statute of limitations in this section applied to St. Paul's claim in the same manner that the original action brought by Lynn and, when raised after the 3-year limit, was time-barred. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Glassing, 269 M 76, 887 P2d 218, 51 St. Rep. 1437 (1994), followed in Nimmick v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 270 M 315, 891 P2d 1154, 52 St. Rep. 208 (1995). See also Skauge v. Mtn. St. Tel. & Tel., 172 M 521, 565 P2d 628 (1977), and Beedie v. Shelly, 187 M 556, 610 P2d 713 (1980).

Applicability of Tort Statute of Limitations to Independent Cause of Action for Failure to Maintain Workers' Compensation Insurance: Under 39-71-601, a statutory time limit is established for filing a claim with the Department; however, no limit is established within which a claim must be filed in District Court. As established in Boehm v. Alanon Club, 222 M 373, 722 P2d 1160 (1986), an independent cause of action authorized by 39-71-508 is ordinarily considered a negligence action, but strict liability may apply in certain situations. Therefore, the applicable statute of limitations for such actions is the tort statute of limitations of 3 years provided in this section. Barthule v. Karman, 268 M 477, 886 P2d 971, 51 St. Rep. 1423 (1994).

Negligent Damage to Property — Two Statutes of Limitations Applicable, One of Which Has Run Out: L&R Spraying sprayed Semenza's land and Fitzgerald's land, which Semenza custom farmed. Semenza sued L&R for negligent spraying that allegedly damaged crops on both owners' farms. After the 2-year statute of limitations for injury to property ran out, Fitzgerald sought to be added as a party. The 3-year negligent tort statute of limitations also applied, and when two statutes of limitations apply, the court should use the longer one. Therefore, Fitzgerald's claim was not barred because it was made within 3 years. Semenza v. Bowman, 268 M 118, 885 P2d 451, 51 St. Rep. 1209 (1994).

Statute of Limitations in Invasion of Privacy Action — Summary Judgment Proper: In 1988, Hentchel told Rucinsky that he had tape recorded her telephone conversations. She asked to hear them, and he agreed to play them, but neither party pursued the issue further. In 1992, Hentchel's wife found the tapes and notified Rucinsky, who brought a claim for invasion of privacy. The District Court granted Hentchel's summary judgment motion on grounds that the 3-year statute of limitations for an action on a liability not founded on an instrument in writing, as set out in this section, had run. Under 27-2-102, a cause of action accrues when all of its elements exist or have occurred, the right to maintain an action is complete, and a court is authorized to accept jurisdiction. Rucinsky claimed that because a reasonable person would not have taken Hentchel seriously when he originally confessed that the taping had occurred, the statute of limitations was tolled until the tapes were discovered. The Supreme Court affirmed summary judgment.

That Rucinsky chose not to believe the confession did not negate the existence of the elements of her cause of action in 1988. She had the right to the cause of action when she was put on notice that the tapes existed, and the cause of action began regardless of whether she was convinced of the success of the action. Rucinsky v. Hentchel, 266 M 502, 881 P2d 616, 51 St. Rep. 887 (1994).

Statute of Limitations Applicable to Negligent Damage to Cattle and Ranching Operations: Plaintiffs alleged that as a result of commingling of their cattle with those of defendants, plaintiff's cattle became infected through defendant's negligence, resulting in damage to plaintiff's cattle and ranching operation. Defendants affirmatively asserted, and the trial court agreed, that plaintiffs' claim was barred by the 2-year statute of limitations in 27-2-207 for complaints based on damage to property. Plaintiffs claimed applicability of the 3-year statute of limitations in this section for complaints based on negligence. Following the holding in Thiel v. Taurus Drilling Ltd., 218 M 201, 710 P2d 33 (1985), the Supreme Court applied the general rule that when there is a substantial question regarding which of two statutes of limitations should apply, any doubt should be resolved in favor of the statute containing the longer limitation in order to afford a plaintiff party-litigant maximum free access to the court system. Ritland v. Rowe, 260 M 453, 861 P2d 175, 50 St. Rep. 1183 (1993), distinguishing Heckaman v. N. Pac. RR Co., 93 M 363, 20 P2d 258 (1933), Quitmeyer v. Theroux, 144 M 302, 395 P2d 965 (1964), Lahman v. Rocky Mtn. Phosphate Co., 161 M 28, 504 P2d 271 (1972), Engine Rebuilders, Inc. v. Seven Seas Import-Export Merc., Inc., 189 M 236, 615 P2d 871 (1980), Rierson v. St., 191 M 66, 622 P2d 195 (1981), Weston v. Cole, 233 M 61, 758 P2d 289 (1988), Carbon County School District v. Spivey, 247 M 33, 805 P2d 61 (1991), and Knight v. Missoula, 252 M 232, 827 P2d 1270 (1992).

Statute of Limitations on Tort Claim Against Decedent's Estate: Campbell brought a claim against Allen's estate in connection with injuries allegedly sustained while a prisoner in the state prison, alleging that the injuries occurred as a result of negligent supervision by Allen, who was a prison guard at the time of injury. The ordinary statute of limitations on Campbell's tort claim would be 3 years under this section; however, because no action was commenced during that time, the claim would be barred. Section 27-2-401 would normally extend the limit to 5 years because Campbell was imprisoned. However, 72-3-801 requires that a claim against a decedent's estate must be filed within 4 months from the date of the first publication of notice to creditors, which constitutes a special statute of limitations as to decedents, and there is no extension provided by law even for persons who are incarcerated or are otherwise under a statutory disability. Therefore, the District Court properly held that Campbell's claim was time-barred under 72-3-801 even if the general tort claim statute of limitations under Title 27, ch. 2, part 2, had not run. In re Estate of Allen, 255 M 469, 843 P2d 781, 49 St. Rep. 1071 (1992).

Case Decided Without Determining Whether Action for Malicious Prosecution Governed by Two- or Three-Year Statute of Limitations: The plaintiff filed suit against county employees for malicious prosecution. The lower court ruled that the claim was barred by a 2-year statute of limitations. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the action did not accrue until the defendant had been acquitted in a separate criminal trial. The Supreme Court declined to rule on whether an action for malicious prosecution is governed by a 2- or 3-year statute of limitations because the plaintiff's suit was timely under either period. Rouse v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 250 M 1, 817 P2d 690, 48 St. Rep. 834 (1991).

Applicable Statutes of Limitations Not Affected by Statute of Repose Applicable to Real Property Improvements: The plaintiffs, a condominium owners' association and its individual members, sued Big Sky of Montana Realty, Inc., the successor in interest of Big Sky of Montana, Inc., for breach of warranty, strict liability, negligence, fraud, and deceptive practices in connection with a fire in the Deer Lodge Condominiums at Big Sky. The defendants claimed that the actions were barred by the statute of limitations applicable to each individual cause of action. Plaintiffs claimed that the applicable statute of limitations in 27-2-208 allows a 10-year period following completion of real property improvements in which to bring an action. The Supreme Court held that 27-2-208 was a statute of repose and should be interpreted not to extend the statute of limitations otherwise applicable to a cause of action. The statute only provides that if the time for bringing an action was otherwise extended by law under 27-2-401 or 27-2-409, the extension could be for no longer than 10 years after completion of the improvement. The District Court therefore properly held that the action was barred by the statutes of limitations. Ass'n of Unit Owners of Deer Lodge Condominium v. Big Sky of Mont., Inc., 245 M 64, 798 P2d 1018, 47 St. Rep. 1814 (1990), followed in Carl v. Chilcote, 255 M 526, 844 P2d 79, 49 St. Rep. 1109 (1992).

Avoidance of Statute of Limitations by Pursuit of One Claim Over Another — Gravamen of Claim to Control Limitations Period: Plaintiff contended that he could elect between a contract theory or negligence theory when his claim had a basis in either theory. The District Court found that the gravamen of the causes of action alleged under the contract theory "sound in common law fraud and negligence" and that, despite the contract label, the theory simply rehashed the fraud and negligence claims and was barred by the statute of limitations. Affirming, the Supreme Court held that the election to pursue one cause of action over another must be more than a mere relabeling of a claim to avoid a statute of limitations. The gravamen of the claim, not the label attached, controls the limitations period to be applied to that claim. Erickson v. Croft, 233 M 146, 760 P2d 706, 45 St. Rep. 1379 (1988), distinguishing Unruh v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 553, 633 P2d 617, 38 St. Rep. 1156 (1981). See also Selensky-Foust v. Mercer, 2022 MT 97, 408 Mont. 488, 510 P.3d 78.

Fraudulent Concealment of Wrongful Nature of Sexual Abuse — Discovery Doctrine Not Applicable: Plaintiff who was sexually abused as a child contended the discovery doctrine applied because her abuser fraudulently concealed the wrongful nature of the relationship. Plaintiff was not incompetent, did not psychologically repress the attacks, and was aware that child molestation was a wrongful act. Reliance upon a fraudulent representation must be reasonable, and the state of facts was sufficient to cause a reasonable person to inquire. E. & D.W. v. D.C.H., 231 M 481, 754 P2d 817, 45 St. Rep. 778 (1988). (See 1989 enactment of 27-2-216.)

No Extension of Discovery Doctrine to Instances of Sexual Molestation: A child was sexually molested for several years and suffered psychological problems since late adolescence; however, she never associated the psychological problems with the molestation until she underwent counseling 19 years later. She filed suit 22 years after the last incident of abuse, but the claim was barred by the statute of limitations. The Supreme Court refused to extend the discovery doctrine to these instances of sexual abuse because plaintiff was clearly aware of the wrongful conduct and the injury had manifested itself. Failure to understand the causal relationship between the wrongful act and the injury was not sufficient to resuscitate the claim. E. & D.W. v. D.C.H., 231 M 481, 754 P2d 817, 45 St. Rep. 778 (1988). Principle also applied to a claim of medical malpractice in Major v. N. Valley Hosp., 233 M 25, 759 P2d 153, 45 St. Rep. 1263 (1988). (See 1989 enactment of 27-2-216.)

Complaint Mailed Early But Filed Late Barred: Plaintiffs mailed their complaint from Anaconda to Deer Lodge on February 23. The statute of limitations expired on February 28, but the complaint was not filed with the Clerk of Court until March 1. Plaintiffs contended that timely mailing substantially met the statutory deadline. Under former Rule 5(e), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), filing is not complete until a complaint is placed in the custody of the Clerk of Court. The burden of vigilance was on plaintiffs to monitor timely delivery and filing, and the complaint was properly dismissed. Schaffer v. Champion Home Builders Co., 229 M 533, 747 P2d 872, 44 St. Rep. 2196 (1987).

Period of Repose When Multiple Disabilities: Appellant was a minor and was seriously mentally ill at time of alleged tortious conduct against her. She continues to be seriously mentally ill. The District Court construed 27-2-401(1) as providing for a maximum repose of the statute of limitations (27-2-204) of 5 years, and it found 27-2-401(4), which purports to provide repose until all disabilities are removed, to be inconsistent and ineffective. The Supreme Court held that the 5-year period of repose applies only to plaintiffs with a single disability under subsection (1) and that subsection (4) is effective and provides a different period for plaintiffs suffering from multiple disabilities. Murphy v. St., 229 M 342, 748 P2d 907, 44 St. Rep. 2030 (1987). On remand, the state was granted partial summary judgment on the grounds that sovereign immunity barred recovery for any state actions before July 1, 1973. Murphy v. St., 248 M 82, 809 P2d 16, 48 St. Rep. 335 (1991).

Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing as Separate Tort — Three-Year Statute of Limitations: A cause of action for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing is a separate tort action, independent of the underlying contract. Therefore, the applicable Statute of Limitations is that for a tort action, 3 years. Tynes v. Bankers Life Co., 224 M 350, 730 P2d 1115, 43 St. Rep. 2243 (1986).

Violation of Unfair Claims Settlement Practices — Three-Year Statute of Limitations: A claim for violation of the unfair claims settlement practices statute arises out of a statutory scheme but consists of a separate cause of action in tort. Therefore, the 3-year Statute of Limitations applies. Tynes v. Bankers Life Co., 224 M 350, 730 P2d 1115, 43 St. Rep. 2243 (1986).

Blacklisting as Tort: Blacklisting prohibited under 39-2-803 is to be classified as a tort, and therefore the general tort Statute of Limitations under this section governs. Malquist v. Foley, 220 M 176, 714 P2d 995, 43 St. Rep. 270 (1986).

Statute of Limitations Defense — Raised Only by Answer: A codefendant, Rancher's Agra Services, Inc. (Rancher's), requested the Supreme Court to order the District Court to enter summary judgment by reason of the running of the Statute of Limitations in Rancher's favor. Former Rule 8(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), provides that a defense of the running of the Statute of Limitations is an affirmative defense and can only be raised by answer. Rancher's never filed an answer or provided the Supreme Court with any reason for failing to do so. The request was denied. Bennett v. Dow Chem. Co., 220 M 117, 713 P2d 992, 43 St. Rep. 221 (1986).

Statute of Limitations — Applicability to Subrogation: A subrogation claim by insurance company is derived from the claim of the insured and is subject to the same defenses, including the Statute of Limitations, as though the action were sued upon by the insured. Beedie v. Shelley, 187 M 556, 610 P2d 713 (1980).

Action Filed in Another State — Saving Statute Inapplicable: An action was filed in Utah but dismissed because it was barred by the Statute of Limitations. The action was then filed in Montana. If the original action had been filed in Montana, it would have been within Montana's Statute of Limitations but it was barred at the time it was filed in Montana. Montana's saving statute does not apply to an action which was originally filed in another state. Allen v. Greyhound Lines, Inc., 476 F. Supp. 244 (D.C. Mont. 1979).

Medical Malpractice:

Section 27-2-204 applies to a medical malpractice action when the malpractice occurred before the enactment of 27-2-205. Penrod v. Hoskinson, 170 M 277, 552 P2d 325 (1976).

Where sponge had been left in patient's body in operation performed 10 years previously, patient's cause of action for malpractice did not accrue until patient learned that such foreign object was in his body. Johnson v. St. Patrick's Hosp., 148 M 125, 417 P2d 469 (1966), distinguished in Monroe v. Harper, 164 M 23, 518 P2d 788 (1974).

Computation of Time: Under the rule prescribed by 1-1-306, relative to the computation of time, an action for libel published on February 21, 1907, which was commenced on February 23, 1909, was not barred by this section, where February 21 fell on Sunday and February 22 was also a holiday. Kelly v. Independent Publishing Co., 45 M 127, 122 P 735 (1912).

PERSONAL INJURY

Cumulative Work-Related Injury — FELA — Discovery of Injury Question of Fact: The plaintiff filed claims against the defendant railroad, his longtime employer, under the Federal Employers' Liability Act for cumulative trauma injury. The plaintiff filed a motion for the District Court to hold that, as a matter of law, his claims were not barred by the statute of limitations. The District Court, however, concluded that at what point in time the plaintiff discovered his injury, and therefore when the statute of limitations began to run, was a question of fact for the jury. After a jury ruled in favor of the defendant, the plaintiff appealed to the Supreme Court, arguing that the District Court had erred in allowing the jury to decide whether or not his claims were barred by the statute of limitations. After a lengthy discussion of the continuing tort theory in cumulative injury cases, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's decision to submit the question of discovery of the injury to the jury. Anderson v. BNSF Ry., 2015 MT 240, 380 Mont. 319, 354 P.3d 1248.

Liability Under 1999 Dram Shop Law Not Considered Cause of Action Created by Statute — Three-Year Statute of Limitations Applicable: Filip was injured in 2000 as a passenger in an auto driven by a person who was allegedly served alcohol at a Billings restaurant, even though the restaurant allegedly knew that the driver was a minor and was intoxicated. Filip brought a dram shop action under 27-1-710 about 2 years and 11 months after the accident. The District Court concluded that because Filip's claim under 27-1-710 constituted a liability created by statute, the 2-year statute of limitations in 27-2-211 applied, so Filip's claim was untimely and the defendants' motion for dismissal was granted. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The liability created in 27-1-710 was not created by statute because prior to the statute's enactment in 1986, a common law cause of action existed for negligently serving alcohol to an intoxicated person, so 27-1-710 did not create a new private right unknown to the common law, and the restaurant was potentially liable even prior to the enactment of 27-1-710. Because Filip's cause of action was not created by statute, the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-204 applied. Thus, Filip's action was timely filed and the case was remanded for further proceedings. [Note that the 2003 Legislature established a 2-year statute of limitations on actions brought pursuant to 27-1-710.] Filip v. Jordan, 2008 MT 234, 344 M 402, 188 P3d 1039 (2008). See also Royal Ins. Co. v. Roadarmel, 2000 MT 259, 301 M 508, 11 P3d 105 (2000).

Limitation of Action — Workers' Compensation Third Party and Bad Faith Claims: A third-party claimant may not bring an action pursuant to Title 33, ch. 18, commonly known as the Unfair Trade Practices Act, until the underlying claim has been settled or a judgment entered in favor of the claimant on the underlying claim. The statute of limitations on such a claim is 1 year from the date of settlement or entry of judgment on the underlying claim, even though the Act does not define what constitutes an underlying claim. A common-law bad faith claim accrues when: (1) all of the elements of the claim or cause exist or have occurred; (2) the right to maintain an action on the claim or cause is complete; or (3) a court or other agency is authorized to accept jurisdiction of the action. The statute of limitations for a common-law bad faith claim is 3 years and begins to run when the claim or action accrues. The accrual date of a bad faith claim arising out of a separate and independent disputed issue is established by determining whether that particular issue has been ultimately resolved, regardless of the existence or absence of a resolution of other issues within the workers' compensation case. Therefore, for statute of limitations purposes, statutory and common-law bad faith claims against an insurer that are predicated on actions taken in adjusting a workers' compensation claim accrue when the Workers' Compensation Court enters a judgment ordering the insurer to pay for a previously denied benefit but leaves unresolved the ultimate determinations of the extent and duration of the worker's disability. O'Connor v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co., 2004 MT 65, 320 M 301, 87 P3d 454 (2004), following Grenz v. Orion Group, Inc., 243 M 486, 795 P2d 444 (1990), Poteat v. St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co., 277 M 117, 918 P2d 677 (1996), and Brewington v. Employers Fire Ins. Co., 1999 MT 312, 297 M 243, 992 P2d 237 (1999), and distinguishing Fode v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 221 M 282, 719 P2d 414 (1986).

Statute of Limitations Applicable to FELA Actions — Statute Tolled by Employer Misrepresentations: A 3-year statute of limitations applies to actions brought under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA), 45 U.S.C. 51 through 60. However, plaintiff is entitled to have the cause tried on the merits, even if the suit was not filed within the statutory limit, if misrepresentations made by the employer justifiably misled plaintiff into not filing a timely action. A FELA defendant may be estopped from raising the statute of limitations for equitable reasons even if the misrepresentations upon which the employee relied were unintentional. In this case, Bevacqua was examined by independent physicians, acting as agents for the railroad, who misrepresented Bevacqua's injuries. Because those misrepresentations misled Bevacqua into not filing suit within 3 years, he was entitled to have his cause tried on the merits. Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273, 55 St. Rep. 469 (1998), citing numerous federal cases giving a liberal construction to FELA in favor of injured railroad workers.

Loss of Consortium — Statute of Limitations: A loss of consortium claim is subject to the 3-year statute of limitations for tort actions provided in 27-2-204. Priest v. Taylor, 227 M 370, 740 P2d 648, 44 St. Rep. 1157 (1987).

Lack of Contract — Breach of Warranty Sounded in Tort Rather Than Contract: Plaintiff was injured in 1979 while spraying weeds. He brought suit in 1984 against the producers, distributors, and sellers of the herbicide and spraying equipment, claiming counts in strict liability in tort, tortious misrepresentation, negligence, and contract for breach of sellers' warranty. Plaintiff had no direct written contract with any of the defendants. The District Court found that there was no contract from which to imply the warranties which plaintiff claimed were breached. The court reasoned that without a contract the breach of warranty claims sounded in tort rather than contract; therefore, the warranty claims were barred by the 3-year tort Statute of Limitations. On appeal, plaintiff contended that one of the longer contract Statutes of Limitations in 27-2-202 or 30-2-725 should apply. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that the implied covenants of good faith and fair dealing, fitness for a particular purpose, merchantability, and workmanlike performance are imposed by law regardless of contract and that, absent a contract, breach of the implied covenants sounds in tort, not contract. The District Court judgment was affirmed. Bennett v. Dow Chem. Co., 220 M 117, 713 P2d 992, 43 St. Rep. 221 (1986), followed in Jacobson v. W. Mont. Prod. Credit Ass'n, 643 F. Supp. 391, 43 St. Rep. 1598 (D.C. Mont. 1986), in a civil RICO action.

WRONGFUL DEATH

Wrongful Death: This section, rather than 27-2-207, applies to an action for wrongful death. Bryant v. Hall, 157 M 28, 482 P2d 147 (1971), overruling Smith v. Wiprud, 154 M 325, 463 P2d 317 (1969).

LIBEL, SLANDER, ASSAULT, BATTERY, FALSE IMPRISONMENT, AND SEDUCTION

Defamation and Tortious Interference Claims Rooted in Tort Despite Employment Relationship — Statute of Limitations Governing State Contracts Did Not Apply: A university soccer coach was dismissed after an investigation involving his university-issued cell phone revealed text and telephone communications that were allegedly with agents of an escort service. The dismissal was covered by local and national news outlets, and some articles included information from the coach's personnel file and cell phone. The coach sued the university, alleging violation of his right of privacy, defamation, and breach of contract in his initial complaint and substituting claims for tortious interference, negligence, and invasion of privacy in an amended complaint. The District Court found that the 1-year statute of limitations in 18-1-402 applied because the coach's claims all sounded in contract, and so the complaint was untimely filed. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the coach's right of privacy, invasion of privacy, and negligence claims all arose out of his contract-based employment relationship with the university and thus were contractual claims subject to the 1-year statute of limitations. However, it found that his claims for defamation and tortious interference were tort-based. It found that the university's duty to not commit the acts alleged by the coach arose independently from its employment relationship with the coach and would have existed even in the absence of such a contractual relationship. Because those claims sounded in tort, the longer statute of limitation in 27-2-204 applied and those claims were not barred. Plakorus v. Univ. of Mont., 2020 MT 312, 402 Mont. 263, 477 P.3d 311.

Action Against Police Officer for Assault Governed by Two-Year Statute of Limitations: The plaintiff argued that he had 3 years to bring suit for assault against a police officer. The Supreme Court held that 27-2-209, relied upon by the plaintiff, refers to Sheriffs and constables. The statute does not refer to peace officers; therefore, the applicable limitation period was the 2-year period for intentional torts provided under this section. Rouse v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 250 M 1, 817 P2d 696, 48 St. Rep. 834 (1991).

Two-Year Statute of Limitations Applicable to Claim of Assault and Battery: Although a strict reading of this section may present some conflict between subsections (1) and (3), the legislative intent was to establish a general 3-year statute of limitations for tort actions with a shorter 2-year period for certain particular tort actions, such as assault and battery. The District Court properly applied the 2-year statute of limitations in subsection (3) of this section when the complaint alleged "assault and battery". Weston v. Cole, 233 M 61, 758 P2d 289, 45 St. Rep. 1292 (1988).

No Renewal of Action: An untimely cause of action for intentional assault instituted in federal court was not "renewed" by 27-2-407 in order to prevent the running of the Statute of Limitations against a subsequent action in state court for negligent conduct based on the same fact situation. Cassidy v. Finley, 173 M 475, 568 P2d 142 (1977).

Seduction: In action for seduction induced by promise of marriage, the cause of action arose and the Statute of Limitations began to run upon completion of the first act of intercourse, contrary to plaintiff's contention that since the illicit relationship continued, with repeated promises of marriage, the Statute did not commence to run until the last act of intercourse some 3 years later. Taylor v. Rann, 106 M 588, 80 P2d 376 (1938).

ACCRUAL OF CAUSE OF ACTION

Vexatious Litigant — Dismissal of Complaint Proper Because of Res Judicata and Statute of Limitations: The defendant was originally convicted of aggravated kidnapping and sexual intercourse without consent. This case involved the admission of a taped conversation between the defendant and the victim. His conviction was affirmed in St. v. Belanus, 2010 MT 204, 357 Mont. 463, 240 P.3d 1021. The defendant subsequently sued various people involved in the case, including but not limited to the victim, attorneys, judge, and law enforcement officers. He appealed the majority of these cases, without success, to the Montana Supreme Court, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, and the United States Supreme Court. More than 4 years after his trial, the defendant then sued in District Court. His allegations stemmed from the underlying criminal case and use of the audio recording. The District Court granted summary judgment for several defendants because the complaint was barred by the statute of limitations and res judicata applied. Additionally, the District Court declared the defendant a vexatious litigant. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, finding that the complaint was time barred by the statute of limitations, that res judicata applied to some of the defendants because the claim was similar to his previous lawsuits, and that the District Court had properly found him a vexatious litigant. Belanus v. Potter, 2017 MT 95, 387 Mont. 298, 394 P.3d 906.

Release of Federal Claims Precluding State Claim for Damages — Fraud and Punitive Damage Claims Preempted by Federal Law Properly Dismissed: Sinclair sued the defendant railroad for injuries received during employment. As part of the settlement, Sinclair signed a release of claims for injuries, illnesses, or damages that were unknown at the time of settlement. Sinclair learned later that the defendant had similar safety complaints and injury reports dating back several years that had not been disclosed to Sinclair during discovery. Sinclair then filed another complaint alleging fraud and seeking punitive damages, including an alternative claim under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA), so that if the state claims were dismissed, Sinclair could rescind the prior settlement on grounds of fraud and relitigate the FELA case. Defendant's motion to dismiss the state claims was granted on grounds that the state claims were preempted by FELA, so Sinclair could not simultaneously affirm the validity of the release and independently pursue state law fraud claims. Sinclair appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Sinclair executed a FELA release that was inextricably linked to Sinclair's claims, and under FELA Sinclair could challenge the validity of the release and have the release set aside if there was fraud in the inducement. However, federal law did not permit Sinclair to affirm the release and then separately sue for state law damages. Therefore, the District Court did not err in dismissing the state law fraud and punitive damages claims on grounds that they were preempted by FELA. Sinclair v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2008 MT 424, 347 M 395, 200 P3d 46 (2008), distinguishing Reidelbach v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2002 MT 289, 312 M 498, 60 P3d 418 (2002). See also Counts v. Burlington N. RR Co., 896 F2d 424 (9th Cir. 1990).

State Law Tort Claims Not Protected or Prohibited by FELA — Dismissal for Failure to State Claim Improper: Reidelbach worked for the railroad for about 20 years but was forced to stop working because of job-related disabling cumulative spinal injuries. Reidelbach reached an agreement with the railroad's claim representatives under which he would forego pursuing a claim under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) and the railroad would propose a fair settlement for the injuries. After 2 years, no settlement was offered, and ultimately the parties exchanged counteroffers, but no agreement on an amount was reached. Reidelbach then filed a timely FELA claim and also brought several state claims, alleging that the railroad had engaged in unfair, dilatory, and fraudulent claims practices. The District Court concluded that all the postinjury state claims were preempted by FELA and dismissed them pursuant to former Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), so Reidelbach appealed. Following an extensive analysis of federal law related to preemption in its various forms, the Supreme Court held that Reidelbach's state claims were neither expressly nor impliedly preempted by FELA and did not conflict with or stand as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of FELA. Therefore, the District Court erred in dismissing Reidelbach's state claims on grounds of FELA preemption, and the case was reversed and remanded for trial in state court. Reidelbach v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2002 MT 289, 312 M 498, 60 P3d 418 (2002). See also Dannels v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2021 MT 71, 403 Mont. 437, 483 P.3d 495.

Claim for Common-Law Tort of Bad Faith by Third Party Not Preempted by Statute — General Statute of Limitations Applicable: The District Court dismissed Brewington's complaint against two insurance companies based on the conclusion that the complaint failed to state a claim for which relief could be granted because the claim was barred by the statute of limitations in 33-18-242 regarding third-party claimants. Brewington contended that the claim was based on the common-law tort of bad faith, not on 33-18-242. The Supreme Court construed the plain language of the statute in determining that by its terms, 33-18-242 does not prohibit a third-party claimant from bringing an action for bad faith. Both Vigue v. Evans Prod. Co., 187 M 1, 608 P2d 488 (1980), and Hayes v. Aetna Fire Underwriters, 187 M 148, 609 P2d 257 (1980), establish a common-law cause of action for bad faith that was not affected by the passage of 33-18-242. When the common law is not in conflict with a statute, the common law applies. Thus, the District Court's conclusion that 33-18-242 prohibited Brewington from pleading the common-law tort of bad faith was reversible error. Further, because the claim was brought for bad faith and not pursuant to 33-18-242, the 3-year statute of limitations in this section, not the 1-year statute of limitations in 33-18-242, applied. Brewington v. Employers Fire Ins. Co., 1999 MT 312, 297 M 243, 992 P2d 237, 56 St. Rep. 1257 (1999), distinguishing Grenz v. Orion Group, Inc., 243 M 486, 795 P2d 444, 47 St. Rep. 1346 (1990).

Statute of Limitations Barring Professional Negligence Claim Against Accountant Who Entered Business With Client: Brevig's company executed a cattle share agreement with Brevig's accountant wherein the accountant purchased cattle and bulls, paid taxes on the livestock, and agreed to supply labor for the operation of the herd. In turn, the company agreed to manage the herd, cover certain expenses, market the stock, and maintain herd records. The partnership split calves born to the herd, 60% to the company and 40% to the accountant. The arrangement was profitable for both parties and produced appropriate returns on the accountant's investment. Brevig later argued that it was unethical for the accountant to go into business with the partnership because the partnership was one of the accountant's clients. The 3-year statute of limitations in this section barred Brevig's negligence claim with respect to the cattle share agreement because the claim of professional negligence was not filed within 3 years from the time that the agreement was executed. McCormick v. Brevig, 1999 MT 86, 294 M 144, 980 P2d 603, 56 St. Rep. 355 (1999).

Statute of Limitations in Invasion of Privacy Action — Summary Judgment Proper: In 1988, Hentchel told Rucinsky that he had tape recorded her telephone conversations. She asked to hear them, and he agreed to play them, but neither party pursued the issue further. In 1992, Hentchel's wife found the tapes and notified Rucinsky, who brought a claim for invasion of privacy. The District Court granted Hentchel's summary judgment motion on grounds that the 3-year statute of limitations for an action on a liability not founded on an instrument in writing, as set out in this section, had run. Under 27-2-102, a cause of action accrues when all of its elements exist or have occurred, the right to maintain an action is complete, and a court is authorized to accept jurisdiction. Rucinsky claimed that because a reasonable person would not have taken Hentchel seriously when he originally confessed that the taping had occurred, the statute of limitations was tolled until the tapes were discovered. The Supreme Court affirmed summary judgment. That Rucinsky chose not to believe the confession did not negate the existence of the elements of her cause of action in 1988. She had the right to the cause of action when she was put on notice that the tapes existed, and the cause of action began regardless of whether she was convinced of the success of the action. Rucinsky v. Hentchel, 266 M 502, 881 P2d 616, 51 St. Rep. 887 (1994).

Cause of Action — Accruing Upon Injury, Not Breach of Duty: The plaintiff alleged that the defendant bank had breached its fiduciary duty to disclose when it failed to inform the plaintiff of the way certain escrow payments had been applied. The bank argued that the date the statute of limitations had commenced running was the date of the alleged breach of the duty to disclose. The Supreme Court held that the statute did not commence to run when the bank breached its fiduciary duty, but when the bank failed to release the trust indenture and the plaintiff suffered an injury. Kitchen Krafters, Inc. v. Eastside Bank of Mont., 242 M 155, 789 P2d 567, 47 St. Rep. 602 (1990).

Amendment to Add Corporation as Plaintiff Against Lender Denied After Corporate Transfer of Interest to Lender: Shareholders' complaint, filed January 6, 1986, included counts of breach of loan agreements, fraud and negligent misrepresentation, negligence, tortious interference with business, and alleged vicarious liability against their lender, Norwest, Inc. (Norwest). On August 11, 1987, shareholders moved to amend their complaint to add their corporation, Nordak Industries, USA, Inc. (Nordak), of which they were sole shareholders and directors, as party plaintiff. The District Court denied amendment after finding that Nordak's claims against Norwest were barred because Nordak expressly and voluntarily transferred and assigned to Norwest all its assets, including legal claims, on August 25, 1983. The District Court also correctly found that any claim Nordak had against Norwest was barred by the statute of limitations because the cause of action against Norwest accrued at the time of the transfer, more than 3 years before the proposed amendment. The denial of leave to amend was clearly an appropriate exception to former Rule 15(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Walstad v. Norwest Bank of Great Falls, 240 M 322, 783 P2d 1325, 46 St. Rep. 2160 (1989), distinguishing Tynes v. Bankers Life Co., 224 M 350, 730 P2d 1115 (1986).

DISCOVERY — WHEN LIMITATION PERIOD BEGINS TO RUN

Limitations Period Not Tolled — Agent Discovered Elements of Claim — Late Claim Properly Dismissed: A purchaser of real estate and an interest in a partnership sued the seller, alleging failure to disclose the existence of a reserve oil pit before the sale. The purchaser's claims were time-barred because knowledge of the reserve pit was imputed to the purchaser based on knowledge of the purchaser's agent. The commencement of the period of limitation was when the agent discovered the elements of the claim or cause of action. Summary judgment was proper on the seller's counterclaim for enforcement of the purchase agreement because no issues of material fact existed regarding whether it was a valid contract. Payne v. Hall, 2020 MT 46, 399 Mont. 91, 458 P.3d 1001.

Tort, Fraud, Negligence, and Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act Claims Related to Faulty Water System — Statute of Limitations Runs From Notice of Problems, Not Upon Attempted Sale of Home — Claims Time-Barred: The plaintiffs were homeowners who had numerous water-related issues with their home, including having no water, intermittent flooding, and insufficient water pressure. When they went to sell the home, they learned it did not qualify for conventional financing because of water violations issued by the Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ). The plaintiffs then filed tort and unfair trade practices claims against the county, the DEQ, and an engineering firm. The District Court granted the defendants summary judgment, concluding that the plaintiffs had been on notice of the problems since the home was built and that the statute of limitations had run on their claims. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed that the statute of limitations began to run when the plaintiffs first learned their home had issues with its water system and not when they learned that the house did not qualify for conventional financing. Norbeck v. Flathead County, 2019 MT 84, 395 Mont. 294, 438 P.3d 811.

No Fraudulent Representation — Discovery Rule Exception Inapplicable: The plaintiffs were property owners in Opportunity, located close to a former copper smelter. They sued the successor in interest to the original smelter operator for damages for the cost of restoring their properties to their original state and filed several claims. The District Court granted the defendant summary judgment based, in part, on the expiration of the statute of limitations on the claims. On appeal, the plaintiffs argued, as they had to the District Court, that the defendant prevented them from learning of the extent of the damage to their property and therefore the discovery rule exception applied to their claims. The record, however, demonstrated only that the parties disagreed on whether the EPA-approved residential standards were appropriate, and this difference of opinion did not render the defendant's actions fraudulent. Christian v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2015 MT 255, 380 Mont. 495, 358 P.3d 131.

Negligence Claims for Construction of Home — Barred by Statutes of Limitations and Repose: The defendant constructed a home for the plaintiff in 2001. Each winter after the home's construction, the plaintiff noticed water damage that the defendant would then inspect and declare repaired. In 2012, the plaintiff hired a roofing contractor to inspect the roof and learned that the water damage was caused by improper ventilation of the roof, an issue never identified by the defendant. The plaintiff sued the defendant, alleging negligence; however, the District Court dismissed the claim as it related to the work done when the house was built because the statutes of limitation and repose had both expired. The plaintiff appealed, claiming the defendant had prevented him from discovering the negligence by saying he had repaired the roof. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed the dismissal, holding that the statute of repose had expired before the claim was filed. Hein v. Sott, 2015 MT 196, 380 Mont. 85, 353 P.3d 494.

Discovery Rule Applicable to Failed Structuring of Property Exchange by Accountant: Plaintiffs brought tort claims against the defendant accountant after the defendant structured a tax-deferred property exchange that failed. The District Court granted summary judgment to the defendant, concluding that the statute of limitations began to run on the date that the properties for the exchange had been bought and sold and that plaintiffs' claims were filed outside of the statute of limitations. The Supreme Court reversed, concluding that the discovery rule applied because the injury to the plaintiffs was concealing in nature due to the complexity of the property exchange and the defendant initially withheld information from the plaintiffs about the failed property exchange. Therefore, the statute of limitations did not begin to run until the defendant advised the plaintiffs that they were subject to significant tax liability because he had given them incorrect advice about the property exchange. Draggin' Y Cattle Co., Inc. v. Addink, 2013 MT 319, 372 Mont. 334, 312 P.3d 451.

Existence of Factual Issues Regarding Whether Plaintiffs Had Notice of Serious Structural Problems: Centennial Log Homes constructed a custom log home for the plaintiffs in 2001. The plaintiffs discovered several flooring, mold, and aesthetic problems, including a building code violation, in 2004 and 2005 that they considered to be routine maintenance issues. They discovered more serious structural problems in 2008 and eventually had the home deconstructed in 2010, revealing further problems. The plaintiffs argued that their claims should not have been barred by the 2004 and 2005 discoveries; rather, the statute of limitations should be tolled under the discovery rule. The District Court granted summary judgment for Centennial, finding that the repairs in 2004 and 2005 should have put the plaintiffs on notice that a further inspection was needed and would have revealed the structural defects. The Supreme Court reversed, finding that genuine factual issues existed regarding whether the plaintiffs were put on notice of the more serious structural problems by 2005, including whether they reasonably should have become aware of the severity of the problems prior to the home's deconstruction. Further, the court found that there were issues of fact regarding whether the problems experienced in 2004 and 2005 were related to the more serious problems discovered later. Johnston v. Centennial Log Homes & Furnishings, Inc., 2013 MT 179, 370 Mont. 529, 305 P.3d 781.

Statute of Limitations — Causal Connection Between Smoking and Lung Disease Prior to Diagnosis of Disease: Relying on the 3-year statute of limitations, a plaintiff filed a complaint on August 2, 2004, alleging state aftercare workers supplied cigarettes to her from 1973 to 1975, which contributed to a diagnosis of chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD) on August 2, 2001. Although the parties stipulated that COPD is by its nature self-concealing, the plaintiff was advised repeatedly throughout the 1990s about the causal connection between smoking and lung disease. The District Court did not err when it concluded that the plaintiff had discovered or should have discovered that smoking caused lung disease prior to the diagnosis of COPD. Chriske v. State ex rel. Dept. of Corrections, 2010 MT 149, 357 Mont. 28, 235 P.3d 588.

Statute of Limitations Tolted Until Discovery of Self-Concealing Injury — Exposure to Farm Chemicals and Injection: While assisting her former husband with farm duties in 1989, Elizabeth Nelson was exposed to farm chemicals and pesticides and was accidentally injected with bovine ecthyma vaccine. She lost consciousness briefly following the injection but recovered and continued assisting with sheep inoculations the rest of the day. From 1989 through 1998, Elizabeth received extensive medical evaluations and treatments for numerous physical ailments that either surfaced or worsened subsequent to the exposure to chemicals and the vaccine, but doctors were unable to pinpoint the cause and effect relationship between the ailments and the exposure until 1996. Elizabeth filed a complaint in 1998, but her former husband moved for summary judgment because Elizabeth allegedly knew of her injuries for more than 3 years before the action was filed. The District Court agreed that the claim was barred by the 3-year statute of limitations in this section. Elizabeth appealed. In Hando v. PPG Indus., Inc., 236 M 493, 771 P2d 956 (1989), the Supreme Court held that the onset of the statute of limitations is determined by applying the discovery rule and establishing when the injured person knew, or in the exercise of due diligence should have known, of the facts constituting the cause of action. However, the District Court distinguished Hando because Elizabeth's injuries following the injection were obvious and immediate, unlike the self-concealing injuries in Hando that developed over time. The Supreme Court disagreed. Although Elizabeth suspected the cause of the injuries and diligently sought medical treatment and diagnosis, there was no genuine issue of material fact that the actual causal connection was not discovered until 1996, well within the 3-year period prior to the filing of the claim. Thus, the complaint was timely filed as a matter of law, and summary judgment was improper, so the case was reversed for trial on the merits. Nelson v. Nelson, 2002 MT 151, 310 M 329, 50 P3d 139 (2002).

Consulting Physician Diagnosis and Notice to Counsel Binding on Plaintiff — Late Claim Properly Dismissed: In 1992, after consulting with several medical doctors, Kaeding hired Baiz as his attorney to pursue a claim for damages from asbestosis against his employer, W.R. Grace & Co. (Grace). Baiz employed Whitehouse as a consulting physician, and Whitehouse, after reviewing several x-rays, sent Baiz a letter stating that the appearance of the x-rays was consistent with asbestosis. In 1996, Kaeding filed suit against Grace, alleging Grace caused his medical condition. After dismissal of the suit by the District Court for failure to commence the action within the statute of limitations, the Supreme Court, distinguishing Hando v. PPG Indus., Inc., 236 M 493, 771 P2d 956 (1989), in which a diagnosis confirming the plaintiff's suspicions as to her medical condition was not received for some time, held that Kaeding had at least a preliminary diagnosis of asbestosis as early as 1983, when Grace sent Kaeding the results of a breathing test. Although Kaeding argued that he was unaware of the contents of the letter sent to Baiz by Dr. Whitehouse, the Supreme Court concluded that because the employment of an attorney creates an agency relationship between the attorney and the attorney's client, Kaeding knew or should have known no later than the time of Dr. Whitehouse's letter to Baiz that he, Kaeding, had contracted asbestosis. Because suit was not brought within the time required by the statute of limitations after the letter from Dr. Whitehouse, the District Court had properly dismissed the claim. Kaeding v. W.R. Grace & Co., 1998 MT 160, 289 M 343, 961 P2d 1256, 55 St. Rep. 640 (1998), followed in Chriske v. State ex rel. Dept. of Corrections, 2010 MT 149, 357 Mont. 28, 235 P.3d 588.

Diligence in Attempt to Discover Injury — Limitation Tolted: The statute of limitations was tolled where claimant's failure to learn the cause of ongoing physical, emotional, and mental ailments until more than 3 years after exposure to paint vapors was not due to a lack of diligence on her part. Because she suspected the cause of injury and continuously sought medical confirmation of her suspicion, the statute of limitations did not begin to run until a medical opinion was actually rendered. Hando v. PPG Indus., Inc., 236 M 493, 771 P2d 956, 46 St. Rep. 532 (1989), distinguishing E. & D.W. v. D.C.H., 231 M 481, 754 P2d 817, 45 St. Rep. 778 (1988). Hando was distinguished in Kaeding v. W.R. Grace & Co., 1998 MT 160, 289 M 343, 961 P2d 1256, 55 St. Rep. 640 (1998), and Chriske v. State ex rel. Dept. of Corrections, 2010 MT 149, 357 Mont. 28, 235 P.3d 588. See also Gomez v. St., 1999 MT 67, 293 M 531, 975 P2d 1258, 56 St. Rep. 272 (1999), in which the Supreme Court declined to apply the continuing tort theory to delay the statute of limitations until the last injurious exposure because doing so could delay running of the limitations period indefinitely and is contrary to the general policy underlying statutes of limitations.

Fraudulent Concealment of Circumstances of Employee's Discharge — Tolling of Statute of Limitations: Nearly 8 years after the plaintiff was discharged from his employment, his guardian ad litem filed a complaint against his former employer alleging wrongful discharge. In response to the employers' motion for summary judgment based on the contention the claim was barred by the statute of limitations, the plaintiff claimed, in part, that the 3-year statute of limitations was tolled because the plaintiff did not learn until discovery several years after the discharge that the employer fraudulently concealed the facts surrounding the plaintiff's discharge. The Supreme Court held that the plaintiff's fraudulent concealment claim does not toll the statute of limitations because the discovery doctrine does not apply. Bestwina v. Village Bank, 235 M 329, 767 P2d 338, 46 St. Rep. 27 (1989).

Nonmalpractice Negligence Action — No Evidence of Fraudulent Concealment — Cause of Action Barred: When a defendant's fraudulent concealment prevents a plaintiff from discovering a cause of action, the statute of limitations is generally tolled. In a nonmalpractice negligence action, there must be an affirmative act committed by the defendant, and the affirmative act must be calculated to obscure the existence of a cause of action. Absent evidence that defendant fraudulently concealed the fact of injury, plaintiff's cause of action was barred. Yellowstone Conference of the United Methodist Church v. D.A. Davidson, Inc., 228 M 288, 741 P2d 794, 44 St. Rep. 1528 (1987).

Statute of Limitations — Discovery of Injury — Discovery of Legal Rights: Plaintiff was injured in July 1979 while spraying weeds for the Powell County weed board. His attorney advised him in March 1984 that he might have a third-party claim against the persons and companies involved in production, distribution, and sale of the herbicides and spraying equipment. This advisement came 3½ years after the attorney was retained. The applicable Statute of Limitations period for actions in negligence and products liability in tort is 3 years. Plaintiff contended that the Statute of Limitations did not begin running until March 1984 when he "discovered" his legal rights. The Supreme Court expressly declined to extend the discovery doctrine to toll the Statute of Limitations until discovery of legal rights rather than discovery of injury, affirming the District Court judgment that plaintiff's tort claims were barred by the 3-year tort Statute of Limitations which began running in July 1979. Bennett v. Dow Chem. Co., 220 M 117, 713 P2d 992, 43 St. Rep. 221 (1986), followed in E. & D.W. v. D.C.H., 231 M 481, 754 P2d 817, 45 St. Rep. 778 (1988), Sternhagen v. Dow Co., 711 F. Supp. 1027, 46 St. Rep. 946 (D.C. Mont. 1989), and in Carl v. Chilcote, 255 M 526, 844 P2d 79, 49 St. Rep. 1109 (1992). See also Major v. N. Valley Hosp., 233 M 25, 759 P2d 153, 45 St. Rep. 1263 (1988). For application to civil RICO claim, see Jacobson v. W. Mont. Prod. Credit Ass'n, 643 F. Supp. 391, 43 St. Rep. 1598 (D.C. Date of Discovery — Required Finding: During construction of an interstate highway in 1972, a right-of-way monument was placed on plaintiffs' property although no right-of-way was purchased from them. In 1973, while attempting to sell their property, plaintiffs became aware of the infringement and hired a surveyor. That survey concluded that plaintiffs were encroaching on the right-of-way. Plaintiffs discussed the problem with the Highway Department (now Department of Transportation), and they removed the monument. The Department resurveyed the area in the spring of 1975 and found no encroachment by either party. Plaintiffs filed a negligence action against the Department in October 1977. The District Court awarded damages. On appeal, the Supreme Court remanded the case for a determination regarding the date plaintiffs discovered they had a cause of action and to determine whether the 3-year Statute of Limitations had expired at the time the cause of action was filed. Masse v. St., 204 M 146, 664 P2d 890, 40 St. Rep. 730 (1983).

Products Liability:

The period of limitations applicable in a products liability case is 3 years from the date of discovery. However, that period may be tolled by acts creating an estoppel. Thompson v. Nebr. Mobile Homes Corp., 198 M 461, 647 P2d 334, 39 St. Rep. 1094 (1982).

Where plaintiff developed cataracts following use of defendant's drug, there was question of fact as to whether publicity connecting the drug and cataracts was sufficient to put plaintiff on notice as to cause of his cataracts, thus to start the Statute running, and motion for summary judgment for defendant, based on Statute of Limitations, was denied. Hornung v. Richardson-Merrill, Inc., 317 F. Supp. 183 (D.C. Mont. 1970).

No Error Where Claim of When Action Accrued Not Before Court: In an action for compensatory and exemplary damages for wrongful conversion of plaintiff's merchandise stored in defendant's warehouse, the District Court properly granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on the basis that the action was barred by the Statute of Limitations. Plaintiff's claims for recovery accrued 4 years previously when the defendant warehouse sold plaintiff's merchandise, not, as plaintiff claimed, when plaintiff discovered upon demand that defendant sold the merchandise. In this instance the allegation of knowledge, demand, and then refusal to return the goods was not raised in the complaint, the answer, the interrogatories, or in any affidavit properly before the District Court at the time summary judgment was granted, and thus plaintiff's allegations as to when the action accrued will not be considered on appeal. Seven Seas Import-Export & Mercantile, Inc. v. Handee Foods, 190 M 508, 621 P2d 1097, 38 St. Rep. 60 (1981).

Products Liability — Statute of Limitations — Discovery Rule Not Applicable: Plaintiff was injured in May 1975, when his holstered Ruger revolver discharged into his leg as he crawled under some brush. He filed this products liability action in September 1979. Ruger moved for summary judgment based upon the running of the Statute of Limitations. Plaintiff urges adoption of a discovery rule respecting accrual of the cause of action. Discovery rules have been limited to latent injuries resulting primarily from either drug products or medical malpractice. Montana statutes permit a discovery rule in actions for fraud or mistake and in actions for malpractice. The Statute of Limitations for tort actions, however, does not authorize application of a discovery rule. Adoption of such a rule would destroy the very policies which justify the Statute of Limitations. To allow a plaintiff who fails to inquire into the cause of injury to avoid the time bar under the guise of "discovery" would hopelessly demolish the protection afforded defendants by the Statute. Much v. Sturm, Ruger & Co., Inc., 502 F. Supp. 743, 37 St. Rep. 2116 (D.C. Mont. 1980). See also E. & D.W. v. D.C.H., 231 M 481, 754 P2d 817, 45 St. Rep. 778 (1988).

Medical Malpractice:

Section 27-2-204 applies to a medical malpractice action when the malpractice occurred before the enactment of 27-2-205. Penrod v. Hoskinson, 170 M 277, 552 P2d 325 (1976).

Where sponge had been left in patient's body in operation performed 10 years previously, patient's cause of action for malpractice did not accrue until patient learned that such foreign object was in his body. Johnson v. St. Patrick's Hosp., 148 M 125, 417 P2d 469 (1966), distinguished in Monroe v. Harper, 164 M 23, 518 P2d 788 (1974).

TOLLING OF STATUTE

Medical Professional Negligence Claim — General Negligence Claim — Gravamen of Claim Medical in Nature — Claim Not Tolled Based on Discovery During Litigation — Plaintiff Knew of Material Facts Giving Rise to Claim Before Litigation. Selensky-Foust v. Mercer, 2022 MT 97, 408 Mont. 488, 510 P.3d 78.

Cross-Jurisdictional Tolling Rule Adopted — No Error in Denial of Motion for Summary Judgment: A jury awarded Stevens $3.2 million in compensatory damages for injuries caused by the drug Zometa, which is manufactured by Novartis Pharmaceuticals Corporation. Novartis argued the District Court erred in denying Novartis' motion for summary judgment. Novartis argued Stevens' claim was time-barred because even though Stevens knew Novartis manufactured Zometa, she did not name Novartis as a defendant until 3 years and 10 months after the statute of limitations began to run. Stevens argued that Novartis was properly served because fictitious defendants were named or, in the alternative, because the statute of limitations was tolled by a class action suit filed in federal court in Tennessee, even though class certification was ultimately denied. The Supreme Court affirmed. The basis of the claim in Montana and of the class action suit in Tennessee was Novartis' alleged failure to warn of the effects of the Zometa. Novartis received sufficient notice of the nature of the claim in Montana, and although the claims were not identical, the filing of the class action suit in Tennessee tolled the statute of limitations for the filing of the amended complaint in Montana. Stevens v. Novartis Pharmaceuticals Corp., 2010 MT 282, 358 Mont. 474, 247 P.3d 244.

Statute of Limitations Calculated as Ending One Day Prior to Start Day in Next Calendar Year: Plaintiff was injured on December 24, 1999, and plaintiff filed a complaint on December 26, 2002, contending that because December 25, 2002, was a holiday, the 3-year statute of limitations in this section extended to December 26, 2002, so the complaint was timely filed. The District Court held that the complaint was time-barred and granted defendant summary judgment on the pleadings. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Generally, a statute of limitations begins to run when a claim or cause of action accrues. Plaintiff's cause of action accrued on December 24, 1999, the date of injury. Under former Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the day of the event is not included in computing any period of time, so the statute of limitations was counted from December 25, 1999. A year is defined as a calendar year, which is a 365-day period starting on a given day and ending on the date 1 day prior to the start day in the next calendar year. Thus, plaintiff's cause of action began on December 25, 1999, and ended on December 24, 2002, which was neither a weekend day nor a legal holiday. The statute of limitations was properly calculated, and summary judgment was proper because plaintiff's complaint was not timely filed. Bosch v. Town Pump, Inc., 2004 MT 330, 324 M 138, 102 P3d 32 (2004).

Limitation of Action — Workers' Compensation Third Party and Bad Faith Claims: A third-party claimant may not bring an action pursuant to Title 33, ch. 18, commonly known as the Unfair Trade Practices Act, until the underlying claim has been settled or a judgment entered in favor of the claimant on the underlying claim. The statute of limitations on such a claim is 1 year from the date of settlement or entry of judgment on the underlying claim, even though the Act does not define what constitutes an underlying claim. A common-law bad faith claim accrues when: (1) all of the elements of the claim or cause exist or have occurred; (2) the right to maintain an action on the claim or cause is complete; or (3) a court or other agency is authorized to accept jurisdiction of the action. The statute of limitations for a common-law bad faith claim is 3 years and begins to run when the claim or action accrues. The accrual date of a bad faith claim arising out of a separate and independent disputed issue is established by determining whether that particular issue has been ultimately resolved, regardless of the existence or absence of a resolution of other issues within the workers' compensation case. Therefore, for statute of limitations purposes, statutory and common-law bad faith claims against an insurer that are predicated on actions taken in adjusting a workers' compensation claim accrue when the Workers' Compensation Court enters a judgment ordering the insurer to pay for a previously denied benefit but leaves unresolved the ultimate determinations of the extent and duration of the worker's disability. O'Connor v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co., 2004 MT 65, 320 M 301, 87 P3d 454 (2004), following Grenz v. Orion Group, Inc., 243 M 486, 795 P2d 444 (1990), Poteat v. St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co., 277 M 117, 918 P2d 677 (1996), and Brewington v. Employers Fire Ins. Co., 1999 MT 312, 297 M 243, 992 P2d 237 (1999), and distinguishing Fode v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 221 M 282, 719 P2d 414 (1986).

Statute of Limitations Applicable to FELA Actions — Statute Tolled by Employer Misrepresentations: A 3-year statute of limitations applies to actions brought under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA), 45 U.S.C. 51 through 60. However, plaintiff is entitled to have the cause tried on the merits, even if the suit was not filed within the statutory limit, if misrepresentations made by the employer justifiably misled plaintiff into not filing a timely action. A FELA defendant may be estopped from raising the statute of limitations for equitable reasons even if the misrepresentations upon which the employee relied were unintentional. In this case, Bevacqua was examined by independent physicians, acting as agents for the railroad, who misrepresented Bevacqua's injuries. Because those misrepresentations misled Bevacqua into not filing suit within 3 years, he was entitled to have his cause tried on the merits. Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273, 55 St. Rep. 469 (1998), citing numerous federal cases giving a liberal construction to FELA in favor of injured railroad workers.

Statute of Limitations Tolled by Renewal Statute for One Year After Appeal: Hollister was dismissed from her job with the Rosebud County Attorney's Office in 1991 and filed a complaint in federal court the same year, alleging federal and state claims. In 1992, the United States District Court dismissed the complaint and Hollister appealed to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. In 1994, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed, and in the same year, Hollister filed a complaint in Rosebud County District Court. The Rosebud County District Court dismissed, holding that the claims were barred by the 1-year statute of limitations under 39-2-911 and by the 3-year statute of limitations under this section. Citing Glass v. Basin & Bay St. Min. Co., 34 M 88, 85 P 746 (1906), the Supreme Court held that the word "terminated" in 27-2-407 includes ultimate termination after final appellate action. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that Hollister's complaint was timely filed. Hollister v. Forsythe, 270 M 91, 889 P2d 1205, 52 St. Rep. 90 (1995).

Architectural Malpractice — Applicability of Continuing Relationship Doctrine: An architect was hired to design and oversee the building of a hospital. Shortly after completion in 1975, problems developed with the heating, air conditioning, and ventilating systems. The hospital contacted the architect about remedies for the problems, seeking and continuing to rely on his advice until 1979, when the parties' relationship ended. The hospital filed suit in 1981, which the architect contended was beyond the statute of limitations that normally would begin running upon substantial completion of the facility in 1975. Distinguishing Schneider v. Leaphart, 228 M 483, 743 P2d 613 (1987), the Supreme Court applied the continuing relationship doctrine because no specific statute of limitations governed the tort of architectural malpractice and because "accrual" was not statutorily defined at the time of the acts giving rise to the action. The continuing relationship doctrine may be used when, during the course of an ongoing, developing, and dependent relationship between a professional and a client, the professional commits a tortious act that injures the client. The doctrine suspends the accrual of the cause of action in order to give the professional an opportunity to remedy, avoid, or establish that there was no error or attempt to mitigate damages. The cause of action does not accrue until either the professional relationship ends or, if a general professional relationship continues between the parties, the professional ceases to treat or advise the client for the particular act causing the injury. Therefore, the statute of limitations in this case was suspended until the professional relationship ended in 1979 and the hospital's complaint in 1981 was filed well within the general 3-year tort statute of limitations. N. Mont. Hosp. v. Knight, 248 M 310, 811 P2d 1276, 48 St. Rep. 444 (1991).

Issue of Material Facts as to Plaintiff's Mental Illness — Tolling of Statute of Limitations: Nearly 8 years after the plaintiff was discharged from his employment, his guardian ad litem filed a complaint against his former employer alleging wrongful discharge and claiming that the 3-year statute of limitation was tolled due to the plaintiff's mental illness. Upon the employer's motion for summary judgment, the trial court dismissed the complaint as untimely filed. In response to the employer's contention that the plaintiff's pursuit of other benefit claims demonstrates an absence of mental illness, the Supreme Court held that that is an issue to be decided at trial, not on a motion for summary judgment, because it is not an issue that is susceptible to resolution based on written affidavits without the benefit of cross-examination in court. Therefore, the matter was remanded because there is a material issue of fact concerning the plaintiff's mental condition that precludes summary judgment. Bestwina v. Village Bank, 235 M 329, 767 P2d 338, 46 St. Rep. 27 (1989).

Bankruptcy Petitioner — Limitation Not Tolled: The Statute of Limitations does not toll for the bankrupt during a bankruptcy action. Under 11 U.S.C. 361, nothing prevents or stays the bankrupt from filing claims against other parties. Thus, the District Court did not err in dismissing a libel action brought after bankruptcy for an event occurring prior to bankruptcy but which was filed after the Statute of Limitations had run. A Statute of Limitations is tolled, under 11 U.S.C. 108, until 2 years after adjudication of bankruptcy for a trustee in bankruptcy, but there is no tolling provision for the debtor. Engine Rebuilders, Inc. v. Seven Seas Import-Export & Merc., Inc., 189 M 236, 615 P2d 871, 37 St. Rep. 1406 (1980).

Known Out-of-State Address — No Tolling: When persons involved in a tort, who were residents of the state at its occurrence, subsequently moved to another state and plaintiff insurance company was aware of their address, the Statute of Limitations provided by this section didn't toll due to absence from the state under 27-2-402 because Montana District Courts had jurisdiction under former Rule 4B(1), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and process could be served under the long-arm statute, former Rule 4D(3), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Beedie v. Shelley, 187 M 556, 610 P2d 713 (1980).

Absence From State: Absence of alleged tortfeasor from state did not toll Statute of Limitations where it was possible to obtain service during the entire 3-year period, under former Rule 4D(2)(a) (now superseded), initially and under former Rule 4D(3) (now superseded), after he left the state. State ex rel. McGhee v. District Court, 162 M 31, 508 P2d 130 (1973).

Death of Defendant Tolling Statute: Where accident, in which defendant was driving, occurred November 26, 1941, and defendant died within 3 years thereof and letters of administration for his estate issued December 13, 1944, and an action for tort against the estate was instituted December 11, 1945, within 1 year after the issuing of letters testamentary, the action was timely under 27-2-404, which provides that if a person against whom an action may be brought dies before the expiration of the time limited for the commencement thereof and the cause of action survives, an action may be commenced against his representatives after the expiration of that time and within 1 year after the issuing of letters testamentary or of administration. Kujich v. Lillie, 127 M 125, 260 P2d 383 (1953).

AMENDMENT OF COMPLAINT

Applicability of Fictitious Name Statute and Misnomer Rule to Similarly Named Defendants — Relation Back of Amended Complaint: Molina was injured on a construction site, and filed a complaint against Panco, Inc., a Washington corporation that he believed to be the general contractor, for failing to supervise the job site and to provide a safe place to work. Molina also named fictitious defendants John Does I-III in the complaint. After the complaint was served but before Panco, Inc., filed a responsive pleading, Molina learned that there were two different corporations in Washington with similar names, so he filed an amended complaint naming the true contractor, Panco Construction, Inc., and retaining the additional fictitious defendants. Panco Construction, Inc., then filed its answer and moved for summary judgment, listing as an affirmative defense that the action was barred by the statute of limitations because the amended complaint was filed 3 months and 3 days after the limitation for negligence claims in this section. Molina asserted that the statute of limitations did not apply because under 25-5-103, a fictitiously named defendant is party to the action from its commencement so the statute of limitations stops running as to the fictitious party on the date that the original complaint is filed. Molina also contended that under former Rule 15(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), an amended complaint relates back to the date of the original complaint when the amended complaint revolves around the same operative facts as the original complaint. Molina then moved to amend the complaint, asking that the District Court rule that the amended complaint sufficed to substitute Panco Construction, Inc., for John Doe I or, alternatively, that Molina be allowed to file a second amended complaint substituting Panco Construction, Inc., for John Doe I. Molina then moved to dismiss Panco, Inc., as a defendant. The District Court subsequently granted the motion of Panco Construction, Inc., for summary judgment without ruling on Molina's motion to amend the complaint. Molina appealed, contending that Panco Construction, Inc., was not a new party to the action, but rather a presently identified, formerly fictitiously named defendant that should be considered a party from the filing of the original complaint. Panco Construction, Inc., argued that: (1) Molina had attempted to entirely replace a mistakenly named defendant with a correctly named defendant without meeting the notice requirements of former Rule 15(c); (2) it was not a fictitiously named defendant under 25-5-103 because due diligence on Molina's part would have revealed the true identity of the defendant; and (3) Molina was precluded from arguing the applicability of former Rule 4E(2), M.R.Civ.P., (now superseded), on appeal because the issue was never raised in District Court. The Supreme Court reversed based on the District Court's incorrect assumption that it orally granted Molina's motion to file an amended complaint and on its failure to rule on the motion to amend the complaint. The case was remanded for consideration of the motion to amend the complaint in conjunction with former Rule 4E(2), and of the effect that that rule may or may not have on 25-5-103, the fictitious name statute, and former Rule 15(c), the misnomer rule. Molina v. Panco Constr. Inc., 2002 MT 136, 310 M 185, 49 P3d 570 (2002). On remand, the District Court concluded that Molina was not ignorant of defendant's name because, even though Molina was misinformed by the Washington Secretary of State, he nevertheless knew defendant's true corporate name, so summary judgment was granted to defendant. On appeal, the Supreme Court disagreed and remanded again. Under a liberal interpretation of 25-5-103, Molina was allowed to substitute defendant's real name for one of the John Doe defendants in the original complaint because he had no reason to believe that the wrong name had been supplied by the Washington Secretary of State, and even though he knew that the identity of the defendant whom he sought to name from the outset was the general contractor of the job on which he was injured, he relied on the incorrect information and thus was ignorant of the contractor's true legal name at the time that the complaint was filed. Molina v. Panco Constr., Inc., 2004 MT 198, 322 M 268, 95 P3d 687 (2004).

Wrong Defendant Sued — No Substitution: Section 25-5-103 does not allow substitution of the proper defendant after discovery that the wrong defendant was named and the Statute of Limitations has run. Keller v. Stenbridge Gun Rentals, 221 M 352, 719 P2d 764, 43 St. Rep. 886 (1986), citing LaForest v. Texaco, Inc., 179 M 42, 585 P2d 1318 (1978).

Relation Back of Amendment to Substitute True Name: When a complaint sets forth a cause of action against a defendant designated by a fictitious name under 25-5-103 and his true name is thereafter discovered and substituted by amendment, the fictitiously named defendant is considered a party to the action from its commencement, so that the Statute of Limitations stops running as to the fictitiously named defendant on the date the original complaint is filed. Sooy v. Petrolane Steel Gas, Inc., 218 M 418, 708 P2d 1014, 42 St. Rep. 1702 (1985).

Notice Required to Toll Statute Under Fictitiously Named Defendant: A plaintiff may utilize the fictitious name statute and may amend a complaint to substitute the true name of the defendant when discovered. If the amendment occurs after the Statute of Limitations has run, however, the real or intended defendant must have either been served or otherwise received notice of the institution of the action under the conditions for relation back provided in former Rule 15(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). It is fundamental that the purpose of the Statute of Limitations is to provide a cutoff point for state claims. Former Rule 15(c) carries out this policy by requiring notice of the action within the time limitations of the Statute of Limitations before an amendment adding new parties will relate back to the date of the original pleading. Vincent v. Edwards, 184 M 92, 601 P2d 1184 (1979), overruled in Sooy v. Petrolane Steel Gas, Inc., 218 M 418, 708 P2d 1014, 42 St. Rep. 1702 (1985).

Amendment of Complaint: Three-year limitation for tort actions did not preclude amendment of complaint to correct misnomer by which defendant was referred to erroneously as Illinois corporation rather than as Delaware corporation; federal rule was applied in allowing the amendment. Wentz v. Alberto Culver Co., 294 F. Supp. 1327 (D.C. Mont. 1969).

Compiler's Comments

2021 Purported Amendment: Although sec. 2, Ch. 318, L. 2021, purported to amend this section, only the section's termination date was removed.

Termination Provision Removed: Sections 3 and 4, Ch. 318, L. 2021, amended sec. 28, Ch. 368, L. 2015, and sec. 38, Ch. 415, L. 2019, to remove the termination of this section. Effective April 30, 2021.

Severability: Section 5, Ch. 318, L. 2021, was a severability clause.

Extension of Termination Date: Section 38, Ch. 415, L. 2019, amended sec. 28, Ch. 368, L. 2015, by extending the termination date imposed by Ch. 368 to June 30, 2025. Effective May 9, 2019.

2015 Amendment: Chapter 368 in (1) near beginning of first sentence substituted "surgeon, physician assistant, dentist, dental hygienist, registered nurse, advanced practice registered nurse" for "surgeon, dentist, registered nurse" and near end of first sentence in two places substituted "2 years" for "3 years". Amendment effective April 29, 2015, and terminates June 30, 2019.

Saving Clause — Code Commissioner Correction: Section 25, Ch. 368, L. 2015, provided: "[Sections 19 and 20] do not affect rights and duties that matured, penalties that were incurred, or proceedings that were begun before [the effective date of this act]."

Because these section references were not changed when new sections 20 and 22 were added to the bill by amendment, the code commissioner has determined that "[Sections 19 and 20]" should be replaced with "[Sections 19 and 21]" [25-3-106 and 27-2-205].

Nonseverability — Code Commissioner Correction: Section 26, Ch. 368, L. 2015, provided: "Except as provided in subsection (2), it is the intent of the legislature that each part of [this act] is essentially dependent upon every other part, and if one part is held unconstitutional or invalid, all other parts are invalid."

(2) If [section 19 or 20] is held unconstitutional, all other parts are valid."

Because these section references were not changed when new sections 20 and 22 were added to the bill by amendment, the code commissioner has determined that "[section 19 or 20]" should be replaced with "[section 19 or 21]" [25-3-106 or 27-2-205].

Effective Date — Code Commissioner Correction: Section 27(2), Ch. 368, L. 2015, provided: "[Sections 11, 19, 20, and 21] and this section are effective on passage and approval." Because these section references were not changed when new sections 20 and 22 were added to the bill by amendment, the code commissioner has determined that the reference to "[Sections 11, 19, 20, and 21]" should have been to "[Sections 11, 19, 21, and 23]" [53-6-1316, 25-3-106, 27-2-205, and section 23, a noncodified transition section].

1995 Amendment: Chapter 16 in last sentence of (1), in two places, substituted reference to defendant for reference to plaintiff; and made minor changes in style.

1989 Amendment: Near end of (1) substituted "the plaintiff" for "him".

1987 Amendment: In (1), in first sentence near beginning, inserted "in tort or contract", included hospital administrator and licensed medical professional corporation in list of affected health care providers, near middle, after "licensed medical professional corporation", deleted "as the employer of any such person", before "error" inserted "an act", after "omission" deleted "in such person's practice", inserted "except as provided in subsection (2)", and in second sentence, near beginning, substituted "during which there has been a failure" for "during which such person has failed"; inserted (2) relating to period of limitations when person injured is under age of 4; and made minor changes in phraseology.

Applicability — Effective Date: Section 2, Ch. 499, L. 1987, provided: "Applicability. (1) An action referred to in 27-2-205(2) for injury or death occurring prior to October 1, 1987, must be commenced within 2 years after the effective date of this act or within the time limits in 27-2-205(2), whichever expires last.

(2) This act applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to causes of action that arose prior to October 1, 1987." Pursuant to 1-2-201, this act was effective October 1, 1987.

Case Notes

Medical Professional Negligence Claim — General Negligence Claim — Gravamen of Claim Medical in Nature — Claim Not Tolled Based on Discovery During Litigation — Plaintiff Knew of Material Facts Giving Rise to Claim Before Litigation. Selensky-Foust v. Mercer, 2022 MT 97, 408 Mont. 488, 510 P.3d 78.

Questions of Material Fact Regarding When Plaintiff Knew or Should Have Known That Injury Could Have Been Caused by Medical Negligence: Summary judgment granted by the District Court was reversed because material issues of fact existed regarding when the plaintiff became aware of sufficient facts to believe she was injured by her doctor's actions during surgery. While the plaintiff knew she had additional pain immediately following surgery, that pain could have been attributed to postsurgical pain. When the pain continued through and beyond the normal recovery time, the surgeon diagnosed her with reflex sympathetic disorder (RSD) and told her it would resolve. When the RSD did not resolve, she sought additional treatment and testified that she did not learn that her original surgeon was negligent until almost 4 years after the date of surgery. The Supreme Court reversed the grant of summary judgment because the plaintiff was entitled to have a jury decide when she discovered or through reasonable diligence should have discovered her injury. Wilson v. Brandt, 2017 MT 290, 389 Mont. 387, 406 P.3d 452. See also Selensky-Foust v. Mercer, 2022 MT 97, 408 Mont. 488, 510 P.3d 78.

Failure to Have Anesthesiologist Immediately Available Not Considered Breach of Standard of Care — Summary Dismissal of Medical Malpractice Claim Against Anesthesiologist Affirmed: Parents sued an anesthesiologist partnership for failing to have an anesthesiologist immediately available at all relevant times during the birth of twins. The District Court granted summary judgment for defendants, and the parents appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The parents failed to produce expert testimony establishing defendants' breach of any applicable standard of medical care, and the undisputed facts showed that there was no breach of any standard of care for failure to have an anesthesiologist immediately available at all relevant times. B.J. & J.J. v. Schultz, 2009 MT 245, 351 M 436, 214 P3d 772 (2009).

Defendant Out of State But Subject to Montana Jurisdiction — Statute of Limitations Applicable: Plaintiff filed a malpractice action. Summary judgment was granted to defendant physician because the action was barred by the 3-year statute of limitations. Plaintiff appealed on grounds that the statute of limitations should have been tolled because the physician was absent from Montana and thus prevented from being served with a summons and complaint. The Supreme Court held that the power to toll the statute of limitations in 27-2-402 arises only when a defendant remains out of state and cannot be served with process. In this case the alleged malpractice occurred in Montana, and although the physician was out of state, the physician remained at all times subject to the jurisdiction of Montana courts and was therefore amenable to service of process. Thus, the statute of limitations was not tolled and the action was properly dismissed for failure to file the action within 3 years of the alleged malpractice. Cobb v. Saltiel, 2009 MT 171, 350 M 501, 210 P3d 138 (2009).

Failure to Disclose Provision Inapplicable to 3-Year Statute of Limitations: The failure-to-disclose provision of subsection (1) of this section applies exclusively to the 5-year statute of repose and does not apply to the 3-year statute of limitations for bringing a medical malpractice claim. Runstrom v. Allen, 2008 MT 281, 345 M 314, 191 P3d 410 (2008), following Blackburn v. Blue Mtn. Women's Clinic, 286 M 60, 951 P2d 1 (1997).

Minority Tolling Inapplicable to Survival Claim: A minor was injured in an ATV accident and died the next day. The father sued the doctor for wrongful death and survival medical malpractice. The District Court held that minority tolling did not apply to the action and the father appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. A survival action belongs to a decedent's estate, and only the estate's personal representative may bring the survival action. In the case of a minor, only the adult personal representative of the estate may bring a survival medical malpractice claim regarding injuries the deceased allegedly sustained as a minor, regardless of whether the action involves injury to a minor younger or older than 4 years of age. Minority tolling does not apply to the time after a child's death when, as here, the father and not the child was the person entitled to bring the survival action. In this case, the minor died the day after the doctor first became involved in the minor's care, so minority tolling extended the limitations period by no more than 1 day. Thus, the District Court properly held that minority tolling did not apply to the survival action or to the wrongful death action against the doctor. Runstrom v. Allen, 2008 MT 281, 345 M 314, 191 P3d 410 (2008), following In re Estate of Lambert, 2006 MT 229, 333 M 444, 143 P3d 426 (2006), and distinguishing Payne v. District Court, 2002 MT 313, 313 M 118, 60 P3d 469 (2002).

Statute of Limitations Not Delayed by Statutory Discovery Provision: A minor was injured in an ATV accident and died the next day. Although the father testified that he immediately suspected something had gone wrong with the surgical procedure and that the attending physician was responsible, the father failed to bring a malpractice action until some 4 years after the incident. The father contended that the 3-year statute of limitations in this section did not apply because he did not discover the injury until several years later while reading about other malpractice cases that had been brought against the doctor, one of which involved an injury similar to that suffered by his son. The District Court held that the discovery provision in this section did not delay the running of the limitations period, and the Supreme Court agreed. The record reflected the father's suspicion of malpractice shortly after the child died and that the father could or should have discovered the injury through reasonable diligence. Thus, the statute of limitations was not delayed by the father's failure to discover the injury and file suit within 3 years. The claim was time-barred. Runstrom v. Allen, 2008 MT 281, 345 M 314, 191 P3d 410 (2008), following Major v. N. Valley Hosp., 233 M 25, 759 P2d 153 (1988), and distinguishing Wisher v. Higgs, 257 M 132, 849 P2d 152 (1993).

Defense of Comparative Negligence Inapplicable to Medical Malpractice Case When Patient's Pretreatment Behavior Furnishes Need for Care That Later Becomes Subject of Malpractice Claim: Plaintiff's daughter had asthma, was allergic to horses, and had a long history of breathing difficulties, but nevertheless went horseback riding. She stopped breathing and collapsed, ultimately suffering irreversible brain damage and death. The mother sued the physicians at the hospitals where the daughter was taken for treatment, alleging that the physicians were negligent in failing to intubate the daughter immediately and that the physicians' negligence caused the daughter's injury and death. The physicians argued that the daughter had already suffered a severe brain injury because of oxygen deprivation brought on by her asthma and that it was her own negligence, not that of the physicians, that caused her death. The District Court allowed the physicians to present arguments and jury instructions on comparative negligence. In assisting a jury to decide a case involving a patient's fault as a defense in a medical malpractice case, it is necessary to first clarify the sequence of events in relation to the interwoven doctrines of contributory or comparative negligence, proximate cause, and avoidable consequences (see Bryant v. Calontone, 669 A2d 286 (N.J. Sup. Ct. App. Div. 1996)). The temporal headings under which the patient's conduct is to be examined are: (1) the pretreatment period; (2) the treatment period during which the alleged malpractice occurred; and (3) the postmalpractice period. A patient's conduct before seeking medical treatment is merely a factor that a physician should consider in treating the patient. When the patient's negligent act merely precedes that of the physician and provides the occasion for medical treatment, contributory negligence is not a permissible defense and the physician's negligent act is considered an intervening act that does not bar a patient from recovering (see Durphy v. Kaiser, 698 A2d 459 (D.C. 1977)). In the present case, the patient's actions were clearly pretreatment conduct and not to be considered as evidence of fault that could offset any negligent conduct by the physicians. Thus, the Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion in giving instructions on comparative negligence because in a medical malpractice action, jury instructions on a patient's comparative negligence are appropriate only when the patient's negligent conduct occurs contemporaneous with or subsequent to treatment. Further, allowing evidence of the daughter's prior acts denied the mother a fair and impartial trial, and the District Court also abused its discretion in failing to grant the mother's motion for a mistrial, constituting reversible error. Harding v. Deiss, 2000 MT 169, 300 M 312, 3 P3d 1286, 57 St. Rep. 696 (2000), followed, with regard to treatment at an accident scene by law enforcement personnel responding to allegedly negligent conduct of DUI that occurred prior to the accident, in Cutler v. Jim Gilman Excavating, Inc., 2003 MT 314, 318 M 255, 80 P3d 1203 (2003).

Statute Establishing Time Bar to Medical Malpractice Actions Not Violative of Constitutional Right to Equal Protection or Access to Court: In 1974, shortly after the premature birth of Richard Best, a doctor placed an umbilical vein catheter in the baby, who subsequently developed liver problems. In 1995, Best filed a complaint against the doctor's estate, claiming that the doctor's actions were negligent, constituting medical malpractice resulting in injuries for which Best sought a variety of damages. The estate moved for summary judgment on grounds that the complaint was time-barred by the statute of limitations in subsection (2) of this section. The District Court denied the motion, agreeing with Best that the statute of limitations violated Best's constitutional rights to equal protection of the law and access to courts. Following acceptance of the estate's writ for supervisory control, the Supreme Court reversed. The rational basis test applicable to review of the statute of limitations required only that the classification created by subsection (2) of this section bear a rational relationship to a legitimate legislative purpose. In this case, the statute passed the test because ensuring the availability and affordability of health care services and reducing the costs of medical malpractice insurance are legitimate legislative objectives, and the classification, narrowly defined to minors injured between birth and 4 years of age, was rationally related to the legitimate legislative objectives. Further, Best presented no persuasive argument or authority supporting the contention that the statute was not rationally related to legitimate legislative objectives and therefore failed to meet the burden of establishing that the statute was unconstitutional beyond a reasonable doubt. Best was required to bring the action before October 1, 1989, and failing to do so, the estate was entitled to summary judgment because the statute of limitations applied. Estate of Dennis McCarthy, M.D. v. District Court, 1999 MT 309, 297 M 212, 994 P2d 1090, 56 St. Rep. 1241 (1999), distinguishing Carson v. Maurer, 424 A2d 825 (N.H. 1980), *Schwan v. No Affirmative Act by Health Provider Required to Toll Statute of Limitations: After becoming pregnant in 1989, Blackburn learned that the father was HIV positive. Blackburn tested negative for HIV but claims that she was informed by a nurse at the Butte-Silver Bow County Health Department (BSBHD) that, despite her HIV negative status, she would likely die within a few years and that her baby had a 50% chance of being born HIV positive. Based on this information, Blackburn made an appointment at the Blue Mountain Clinic in Missoula. Blackburn stated that she provided the clinic with written proof of her HIV negative status and informed the clinic counselor that she was seeking an abortion only because she feared that her baby would be born HIV positive. After obtaining the abortion, Blackburn consulted with an attorney in 1995 and learned, allegedly for the first time, that it was impossible for an HIV negative mother to give birth to an HIV positive baby. Blackburn filed an action, claiming that despite providing proof of her HIV negative status and her statement concerning her reason for seeking the abortion, neither the counselor, nurse, nor doctor at the clinic explained to her that an HIV negative mother could not deliver an HIV positive baby. Both the BSBHD and the Blue Mountain Clinic filed a motion to dismiss, claiming that Blackburn's claims were barred by the 5-year statute of limitations. When the District Court dismissed the action, Blackburn appealed. On appeal, the Supreme Court upheld the dismissal of the action against BSBHD and its doctor, but held that the District Court had erred in dismissing Blackburn's negligence claims against the Blue Mountain Clinic and its counselor. In its decision, the court overruled any suggestion in Major, Monroe, and Wisher that an affirmative act by the health care provider is required to trigger the tolling provisions of this section or that this section could be applied to toll the statute of limitations in a medical malpractice case. Blackburn v. Blue Mtn. Women's Clinic, 286 M 60, 951 P2d 1, 54 St. Rep. 1303 (1997).

Tolling of Statute of Repose by Chiropractic Legal Panel Proceeding Filed Before Dismissal of Court Action — Filing of Second Court Action After Panel Decision Not Barred: A medical malpractice complaint filed in District Court on April 16, 1992, tolled the statute of repose pursuant to this section. On August 2, 1993, an application was timely filed with the Montana Chiropractic Legal Panel. Voluntary dismissal of the District Court complaint without prejudice on August 3, 1993, did not nullify the complaint's tolling of the statute of limitations because under 27-12-701, the filing of the Panel application also tolled the statute. The Montana Chiropractic Legal Panel Act continued to toll the statute while the application under it was pending, and because the second District Court complaint was timely filed under the Act within 30 days after the Panel's decision, the second complaint was not barred by the statute of repose. Webb v. T.D., 275 M 243, 912 P2d 202, 53 St. Rep. 117 (1996).

When Statute of Limitations or of Repose Tolled: A statute of limitations or a statute of repose is tolled by the commencement of an action, and an action is commenced when a complaint is filed. Webb v. T.D., 275 M 243, 912 P2d 202, 53 St. Rep. 117 (1996).

Cognizance of Fact of Injury Constituting Discovery of Cause of Action: Appellant contended the statute of limitations was tolled by the acts or omissions of the defendants, who concealed the cause of her daughter's death. She claimed she was stymied in her attempts to gain access to medical records, first by the doctor's failure to finalize the records and then by the hospital's refusal to allow her access to the records. However, appellant was cognizant of the fact of the injury complained of on the day her daughter died and therefore discovered her cause of action on the date of death, thus beginning the clock on the statute of limitations. Major v. N. Valley Hosp., 231 M 481, 759 P2d 153, 45 St. Rep. 1263 (1988), distinguished in Wisher v. Higgs, 257 M 132, 849 P2d 152, 50 St. Rep. 191 (1993). Major was overruled insofar as it suggests that an affirmative act by a health care provider is required to trigger the tolling provisions of this section and Major and Wisher were overruled to the extent that they suggest that this section applies to toll the statute of limitations in medical malpractice cases in Blackburn v. Blue Mtn. Women's Clinic, 286 M 60, 951 P2d 1, 54 St. Rep. 1303 (1997).

Discovery Rule: Plaintiff urges adoption of a discovery rule respecting the accrual of a products liability cause of action. Discovery rules have been limited to latent injuries resulting primarily from either drug products or medical malpractice. Montana statutes permit a discovery rule in actions for fraud or mistake and in actions for malpractice. The Statute of Limitations for tort actions, however, does not authorize application of a discovery rule. Much v. Sturm, Ruger & Co., Inc., 502 F. Supp. 743, 37 St. Rep. 2116 (D.C. Mont. 1980).

Applicability: This statute has prospective application only; it could not be applied where the alleged negligence giving rise to the action occurred prior to its effective date, even though the action was brought after that date. Penrod v. Hoskinson, 170 M 277, 552 P2d 325 (1976).

Fraudulent Concealment: Doctrine of fraudulent concealment was not applicable to medical malpractice case in which plaintiff alleged that doctor had failed to make a full disclosure of the experimental nature of the operation to be performed, but admitted that he was informed in detail of the type of operation to be performed and that he consented to the operation and where, although doctor assured plaintiff that he would be able to return to work within 6 months of the operation, plaintiff admitted to being totally disabled for 6 years after the operation and partially disabled thereafter. Monroe v. Harper, 164 M 23, 518 P2d 788 (1974), followed in Wisher v. Higgs, 257 M 132, 849 P2d 152, 50 St. Rep. 191 (1993). Monroe was overruled insofar as it suggests that an affirmative act by a health care provider is required to trigger the tolling provisions of this section and Monroe and Wisher were overruled to the extent that they suggest that this section applies to toll the statute of limitations in medical malpractice cases in Blackburn v. Blue Mtn. Women's Clinic, 286 M 60, 951 P2d 1, 54 St. Rep. 1303 (1997).

Case Notes

Failure of District Court to Instruct Jury on Law of Case — New Trial Warranted — Plaintiffs Satisfied Burden of Proof on Value of Lost Opportunity to Settle in Legal Malpractice Claim: The District Court erred in instructing the jury to decide whether the plaintiffs would have settled a medical malpractice claim underlying their legal malpractice suit. The plaintiffs satisfied their burden of proving the likely value of the lost opportunity to settle through expert testimony, and the jury could have weighed conflicting expert testimony to determine a value for the lost opportunity. Because the District Court's instruction did not fairly instruct the jury on the law of the case that the Supreme Court established in Labair v. Carey, 2012 MT 312, 367 Mont. 453, 291 P.3d 1160, the instruction was an abuse of discretion that demanded a new trial. Labair v. Carey, 2016 MT 272, 385 Mont. 233, 383 P.3d 226.

Legal Malpractice Claim Time Barred — Statute of Limitations Inapplicable to Discovery of Legal Theories: A defendant convicted of sexual assault and sexual intercourse without consent filed a claim against his trial attorney for legal malpractice because service to an out-of-state witness for the defendant was never accomplished and the witness failed to appear at the trial. Because the defendant was present at his trial and was aware that the witness did not testify and because at his sentencing hearing he had notice of his impending incarceration, the statute of limitations began to run at the time of the defendant's sentencing, when all the facts relevant to the malpractice claim were known. Although the defendant argued that he was unaware that he could subpoena an out-of-state witness, the statute of limitations began to run when the facts relevant to the claim were known, and the rule did not apply to the discovery of legal theories. Passmore v. Watson, 2014 MT 287, 376 Mont. 529, 337 P.3d 84.

Causation in Legal Malpractice Claim — Summary Judgment Not Proper — Plaintiffs Not Required to Show Claim Would Have Been Successful: An attorney missed a statute of limitations deadline in a medical malpractice case by failing to file an application with the Montana Medical Legal Panel before filing a complaint in District Court, as required under 27-6-301 and 27-6-701. After the medical malpractice claim was dismissed, the plaintiffs filed a legal malpractice case against the attorney, but the District Court dismissed the legal malpractice case during summary judgment on the grounds that the plaintiffs did not carry the burden of showing that the underlying medical malpractice claim would have been successful. On appeal, the Supreme Court revisited Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 Mont. 342, 916 P.2d 122 (1996), Babcock Place Ltd. Partnership v. Berg, Lilly, Andriolo, & Tollefsen, P.C., 2003 MT 111, 315 Mont. 364, 69 P.3d 1145, and Fisher v. Swift Transp. Co., Inc., 2008 MT 105, 342 Mont. 335, 181 P.3d 601, and determined that it was error for the District Court to require the plaintiffs to prove that the medical malpractice case would have been successful given that there was no independent intervening cause after the plaintiffs' injury. All that was required was a showing that the plaintiffs' injury (not being able to pursue the case) would not have occurred but for the attorney's negligent conduct. Labair v. Carey, 2012 MT 312, 367 Mont. 453, 291 P.3d 1160. On remand in Labair v. Carey, 2016 MT 272, 385 Mont. 233, 383 P.3d 226, the Supreme Court determined that the plaintiffs more probably than not would have recovered a settlement. Thus, the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment as a matter of law on this first element of settlement damages.

Expert Opinions in Legal Malpractice Claim During Summary Judgment — Plaintiffs Not Required to Prove That Underlying Case Was Winner: An attorney missed a statute of limitations deadline in a medical malpractice case by failing to file an application with the Montana Medical Legal Panel before filing a complaint in District Court, as required under 27-6-301 and 27-6-701. After the medical malpractice claim was dismissed, the plaintiffs filed a legal malpractice case against the attorney, but the District Court dismissed the legal malpractice case during summary judgment by relying completely on the affidavit of the attorney's expert while disregarding the opinions of three of the plaintiffs' witnesses. On appeal, the Supreme Court determined that the plaintiffs' opinions from two doctors and one legal expert were sufficient to overcome summary judgment. The Supreme Court held further that at the summary judgment stage, the plaintiffs had to establish only that, but for the attorney's negligence, the plaintiffs would have been able to present sufficient evidence to withstand summary judgment for the underlying medical claim and reach the jury with the case. Labair v. Carey, 2012 MT 312, 367 Mont. 453, 291 P.3d 1160.

Relation Back Doctrine — Error in Timely Filed Complaint — Equitable Factors to Consider — Reversed and Remanded for Further Analysis: The attorney for the plaintiff limited liability corporation (LLC) did not perform a final review of an agreement before his client signed it. Unknown to the plaintiff and its attorney, the other contracting party had made several substantive changes to the agreement. The LLC later sued its attorney for malpractice. The complaint was signed by a shareholder of the plaintiff LLC and filed in Lake County in 2007. Eleven days later, the plaintiff filed a complaint against the contracting party. This complaint, however, was filed in Flathead County and signed by an attorney. After settling with the other contracting party, the plaintiff filed a successful motion to transfer the malpractice action to Flathead County. The plaintiff then filed an amended malpractice complaint, in 2010, that was signed by counsel. The defendants filed a motion for the District Court to declare the 2007 Lake County complaint null and void because it had not been signed by an attorney. The defendants also filed a motion for summary judgment based on the expiration of the statute of limitations on the amended complaint. The District Court granted both motions and the plaintiff appealed. The plaintiff argued that even though a corporation cannot file a complaint pro se, the defect was curable and the 2010 amended complaint related back to the timely filed 2007 pro se complaint. In a matter of first impression, the Supreme Court concluded that when a corporation files a complaint pro se, a court will consider certain equitable factors to determine whether the complaint relates back to a timely filed pleading, such as when the corporation had knowledge that it could not file a pleading pro se, how much time elapsed before the corporation corrected the error, and whether the other party was prejudiced by the mistake. The Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court to consider those factors. H & H Dev., LLC v. Ramlow, 2012 MT 51, 364 Mont. 283, 272 P.3d 657.

Legal Malpractice Claim Brought Within 3-Year Statute of Limitations — Knowledge of Negligence and Accrual of Claim: In January 2002, Ehrman sought advice from Ramlow, an attorney with the firm Kaufman, Vidal, Hileman & Ramlow, about rights to a boat dock that were reserved in a contract for deed. Ehrman sought to acquire the rights from Baillie. The contract for deed reserved the rights to the dock to Baillie and his heirs, but Ramlow advised Ehrman he could acquire the rights through assignment. A subsequent purchaser of the property informed Ehrman he would not consent to the assignment of the rights. Ramlow assured Ehrman they would be successful in litigation, but a court ruled against Ehrman in August 2007. Ehrman filed a malpractice suit against Ramlow in April 2008. The District Court concluded the suit was barred by the 3-year statute of limitations for legal malpractice claims because Ehrman was aware of the facts no later than July 2004. However, Ehrman did not know and should not have known that his attorney's actions were potentially negligent until the court entered summary judgment against him in 2007. It was reasonable for Ehrman to rely on his attorney's advice. In addition, the claim did not accrue until the court ruled against Ehrman in August 2007 because Ehrman had use of the rights to the dock through a lease agreement until that point. Ehrman v. Kaufman, 2010 MT 284, 358 Mont. 519, 246 P.3d 1048.

Legal Malpractice Claim — No Duty of Care to Revise Trust Beneficiary Status: Failure of a couple that established a family trust to provide necessary information to the defendant attorney in order to amend provisions of the family trust did not result in the defendant attorney owing a duty to third-party trust beneficiaries. Harrison v. Lovas, 2010 MT 128, 356 Mont. 380, 234 P.3d 76.

Legal Malpractice Claim Not Filed Within Statutory Limit Properly Dismissed: McLaverty was appointed by the court to represent Guest on felony criminal charges in April 2001. McLaverty appeared in District Court, and Guest pleaded guilty and was released on his own recognizance. McLaverty did nothing more for Guest, and Guest retained new counsel in September 2001. Guest subsequently filed a legal malpractice claim against McLaverty in September 2004. The District Court dismissed the claim, and Guest appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Pursuant to this section, a legal malpractice claim based on a lawyer's error or omission must be commenced within 3 years. Because Guest's claim was not brought within 3 years of the time within which Guest discovered or through the use of reasonable diligence should have discovered the error, acts, or omissions constituting the alleged malpractice, the claim was barred by the statute of limitations. Guest v. McLaverty, 2006 MT 150, 332 M 421, 138 P3d 812 (2006).

No Showing of Damages or That Client Would Have Prevailed on Lost Appeal of Marital Dissolution Case — Failure of Legal Malpractice Claim: Richards brought a malpractice claim against an attorney who negligently failed to appeal Richards' marriage dissolution proceeding prior to the deadline for appeal. The District Court dismissed the claim, ruling that the court, rather than a jury, should decide the consequences of the attorney's failure to file the appeal and that the lost appeal would not have succeeded. Richards appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Even though the attorney admitted malpractice by allowing the claim to expire, the attorney contended that no damages occurred. When a malpractice claim changes to the question of whether an attorney perfected an appeal, the analysis shifts from one of fact to one of law, which is properly considered by the court rather than a jury. The question of the probable outcome of a lost appeal also presents a question of law for the trial court to decide based on the special expertise required to analyze the relevant law and rules of appellate procedure, and the review is limited to the transcript and record of the underlying action and arguments presented by counsel. Here, there was substantial credible evidence regarding primary parenting time, valuation of the marital estate, and child support payments showing that Richards' lost appeal would not have resulted in a successful or favorable outcome. Further, one element of a legal malpractice claim requires a showing that the attorney's conduct proximately caused damages suffered by the claimant. Because Richards failed to show that the lost appeal would have been successful, he also failed to show that the attorney's breach caused any damages, so the malpractice claim failed. Richards v. Knuchel, 2005 MT 133, 327 M 249, 115 P3d 189 (2005).

Legal Malpractice Statute of Limitations Claim Related to Discovery — Tests: Attorney Younkin represented the town of Clyde Park in defending a claim objecting to the town's water rights claims filed in 1982. Based on the attorney's recommendation, the town settled the claim in 1996, but the claimant continued to complain that water was not being received. The file was provided to the town's attorney in June 1998. In 2004, the town filed a malpractice claim against Younkin, asserting that by agreeing to settle, the town had unknowingly waived its right to a larger water rights claim and that if Younkin had properly advised the town of its rights, priorities, and abandonment claims, the town would have prevailed in any litigation. The District Court granted summary judgment to Younkin, holding that the town had actual or constructive knowledge of the facts underlying the malpractice action when the town attorney received the file in June 1998 and that the statute of limitations on the malpractice claim expired 3 years later. The town appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. When a statute of limitations issue involving a legal malpractice claim relates to actual discovery, the test is actual knowledge of the facts essential to the claim rather than discovery of legal theories. When the issue involves the time at which plaintiff, through use of reasonable diligence should have discovered the facts, the test is whether plaintiff had information of circumstances sufficient to put a reasonable person on inquiry or had the opportunity to obtain knowledge from sources open to investigation. In this case, the town attorney's claim that he did not have the legal expertise to know what to look for did not toll the statute of limitations because the issue did not turn on the attorney's expertise in various legal matters. For purposes of the statute of limitations, it only mattered that the town had all the necessary information in 1998 when the town attorney received the file that put the town on notice of a possible malpractice claim. Clyde Park v. Younkin, 2004 MT 274, 323 M 197, 99 P3d 196 (2004). See also Johnson v. Barrett, 1999 MT 176, 295 M 254, 983 P2d 925 (1999).

Attorney's Duty of Care Owed to Estate Beneficiary — Standing of Estate to Bring Legal Malpractice Action: A personal representative brought a legal malpractice damage suit on behalf of the estate against an attorney who drafted a trust document and will. Before granting summary judgment to the attorney, the District Court raised the issue of whether the estate and personal representative had standing to bring the suit, based on a questionable fiduciary relationship between the plaintiffs and the attorney. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that as a representative of the decedent, the estate stood in the shoes of the decedent and was thus considered to be in privity with the attorney, so the estate had standing to bring a malpractice claim. Further, the question of whether the trust and the personal representative had standing was a question of fact to be determined at trial, so summary judgment was precluded and the case remanded for further proceedings. Watkins Trust v. Lacosta, 2004 MT 144, 321 M 432, 92 P3d 620 (2004).

Legal Malpractice Claim by Estate Not Barred by Res Judicata, Equitable Estoppel, or Judicial Estoppel: A personal representative brought a legal malpractice damage suit on behalf of the estate against an attorney who drafted a trust document and will. The trust beneficiaries brought a separate suit against the trustee. The District Court granted summary judgment for the attorney on grounds of res judicata, equitable estoppel, and judicial estoppel. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Res judicata and collateral estoppel did not apply because the subject matter and parties in the beneficiaries' suit were different. Equitable estoppel did not apply because the defendants did not present any evidence to establish that they relied on an act by the personal representative or changed their position for the worse because of that act. Judicial estoppel did not apply because the judicial admission in this case referred only to plaintiffs' legal theory and not to an unequivocal statement of fact and because of the absence of any evidence that defendants were misled by a judicial admission. Thus, summary judgment was inappropriate. Watkins Trust v. Lacosta, 2004 MT 144, 321 M 432, 92 P3d 620 (2004).

Legal Malpractice Claim Timely Filed — Summary Judgment Inappropriate When Date of Discovery and Accrual Disputed: The Watkins estate filed a legal malpractice claim against an attorney who set up the trust. The District Court found that the 3-year statute of limitations had run on filing the suit and granted summary judgment for the attorney. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. After concluding that the statute of limitations does not begin to run until both the discovery rule and the accrual rule have been satisfied, the court examined the applicability of both rules. The claim was filed in 1997, but the estate did not discover the attorney's negligence until 1995, which was excusable because: (1) the trustee relied on the fiduciary relationship and trusted that the attorney's assertion that the trust was revocable was correct, even though it was irrevocable; (2) of the complexity of the estate plan, which was difficult even for experts to understand and was beyond the understanding of a layperson; and (3) the attorney may have fraudulently concealed the malpractice. Further, because the trustee continued to treat the trust as revocable in reliance on the attorney's advice, the estate did not sustain any actual damages until the irrevocable nature of the trust was discovered and trust beneficiaries brought suit to remove the trustee in 1996, well within the statute of limitations. The attorney's contention that res judicata and estoppel barred the present suit because the beneficiaries also maintained a separate suit for damages also failed because neither the parties nor the issues were the same. Summary judgment was thus improper, and the case was remanded. Estate of Watkins v. Hedman, Hileman & Lacosta, 2004 MT 143, 321 M 419, 91 P3d 1264 (2004), following Uhlér v. Doak, 268 M 191, 885 P2d 1297 (1994). See also Watkins Trust v. Lacosta, 2004 MT 144, 321 M 432, 92 P3d 620 (2004).

Legal Malpractice — Nexus Between Fraudulent Concealment and Discovery Rule: In the context of legal malpractice, a nexus exists between a defendant's fraudulent concealment and the question of whether a plaintiff should have discovered the defendant's negligent act. Estate of Statute of Limitations in Legal Malpractice Action to Run Upon Satisfaction of Both Discovery Rule and Accrual Rule: The law in Montana for legal malpractice actions is that the statute of limitations does not begin to run until both the discovery rule and the accrual rule have been satisfied—in other words, until the negligent act was or should have been discovered, and all elements of the legal malpractice claim, including damages, have occurred. Estate of Watkins v. Hedman, Hileman & Lacosta, 2004 MT 143, 321 M 419, 91 P3d 1264 (2004). See also Watkins Trust v. Lacosta, 2004 MT 144, 321 M 432, 92 P3d 620 (2004).

When Statute of Limitations Begins to Run on Legal Malpractice Claim Stemming From Criminal Representation: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court considered whether the statute of limitations for a legal malpractice claim should be tolled while a criminal defendant pursues a claim for postconviction relief or whether the defendant should pursue a legal malpractice claim simultaneously with the claim for postconviction relief. After considering both approaches, the court adopted the two-track approach in Gebhardt v. O'Rourke, 510 NW 2d 900 (Mich. 1994), because it incorporates a strict reading of the statute of limitations and at the same time addresses problems posed by multiple litigations. Thus, pursuant to Gebhardt, a criminal defendant must file a malpractice claim within 3 years of discovering the act, error, or omission. With the claim preserved, the defendant can then seek a stay in the civil suit until the criminal case is resolved, and the trial court handling the civil suit would have discretion regarding the duration of the stay, keeping in mind the nature of the claim asserted for postconviction relief. After adopting this new rule, the Supreme Court declined to retroactively apply the rule in the present case on equitable grounds, but did put parties convicted in criminal proceedings on notice of the new rule henceforth. Erath v. Cascade County, 2003 MT 328, 318 M 355, 81 P3d 463 (2003).

Legal Malpractice Action Not Brought Within Statutory Time Limit — Summary Dismissal Proper — Damage Rule Inapplicable: Plaintiff filed a legal malpractice action against defendant on December 17, 1999, 3 years and 8 days after the date that plaintiff's damages occurred. The District Court dismissed the claim as untimely under this section. On appeal, plaintiff contended that under the damage rule set out in Schneider v. Leaphart, 228 M 483, 743 P2d 613 (1987), and Uhler v. Doak, 268 M 191, 885 P2d 1297 (1994), the statute of limitations should have been tolled until notice of damages was actually received on December 23, 1996, which would have allowed filing until December 23, 1999. The Supreme Court disagreed. The damage rule is not the accepted standard in Montana. Under the statute of limitations for legal malpractice actions in this section, the time for filing is not tolled by a plaintiff's failure to discover damages, but runs from the date that plaintiff discovered or should through reasonable diligence have discovered the act or omission causing the damages. The claim or cause of action accrued on December 9, 1996, and the complaint filed on December 17, 1999, was beyond the statute of limitations, so summary dismissal for defendant was proper. Spolar v. Datsopoulos, 2003 MT 54, 314 M 364, 66 P3d 284 (2003).

Legal Malpractice Claim Barred by Statute of Limitations — Continuing Tort Theory Inapplicable: The plain language of this section requires that a legal malpractice action be commenced within 3 years after plaintiff discovers or should have discovered the allegedly negligent act, error, or omission at issue, but does not permit an overlay of a continuing damage or injury theory that would toll the statute of limitations. Here, the legal malpractice claim accrued no later than December 9, 1993, but the action was filed on December 19, 1996, and thus was barred by the 3-year statute of limitations. Plaintiff's claim of fraudulent concealment under Monroe v. Harper, 164 M 23, 518 P2d 788 (1974), was not addressed on appeal because the theory had not been raised in District Court. Johnson v. Barrett, 1999 MT 176, 295 M 254, 983 P2d 925, 56 St. Rep. 689 (1999).

No Extension of Statute of Repose Under Equity Principles: The omission that gave rise to Joyce's claim for legal malpractice was attorney Garnaas's failure to serve a summons within the 3-year time limit. Joyce claimed a second cause of action in Garnaas's failure to notify Joyce about the status of the case even after the underlying action was lost, arguing that the concealment of a claim is a separate tort that resets the start date for the statutes of limitations and repose. However, there was no separate claim in this case, in addition to the alleged malpractice, because that claim was subsumed within the initial malpractice. Joyce argued on appeal that the statute of repose should be extended in this case because: (1) an attorney who intentionally misleads a client regarding the true status of a case is not entitled to claim the benefit of the statute of repose because the attorney would be allowed to take advantage of his wrong, in violation of 1-3-208; or (2) equitable estoppel should bar Garnaas from taking advantage of his wrong while asserting a strict legal right, in violation of 27-2-102. In this case, however, principles of equity did not extend the otherwise absolute statute of repose. Section 27-2-102 does not apply to legal malpractice actions. Further, Joyce's allegations of continuing fraudulent concealment failed because claims for damages against Garnaas for not informing Joyce of the legal malpractice related back to the date that the summons was not served. Thus, Joyce could not claim any actual damages separate from Garnaas's original omission, which was barred by the statute of repose. Joyce v. Garnaas, 1999 MT 170, 295 M 198, 983 P2d 369, 56 St. Rep. 661 (1999), followed in Snyder v. Love, 2006 MT 317, 335 M 49, 153 P3d 571 (2006). See also Folsom v. Mont. Pub. Employees Ass'n, 2017 MT 204, 388 Mont. 307, 400 P.3d 706.

Statute of Repose Absolute — No Tolling by Fraudulent Concealment: The 3-year statute of limitations, within which an action for professional negligence against an attorney must be brought, contains a built-in tolling mechanism for a defendant's fraudulent concealment of a plaintiff's injury and does not begin to run until the plaintiff discovers, or with reasonable diligence should have discovered, the error, act, or omission. Not to provide some tolling in those circumstances would inequitably allow the defendant to use the statute, intended as a device for fairness, to perpetrate a fraud. On the other hand, the 10-year statute of repose in this section is the absolute time limit beyond which liability no longer exists. Not even fraudulent concealment can toll the statute of repose. Joyce v. Garnaas, 1999 MT 170, 295 M 198, 983 P2d 369, 56 St. Rep. 661 (1999), following Blackburn v. Blue Mtn. Women's Clinic, 286 M 60, 951 P2d 1 (1997), and followed in Snyder v. Love, 2006 MT 317, 335 M 49, 153 P3d 571 (2006). See also First United Methodist Church of Hyattsville v. U.S. Gypsum Co., 882 F2d 862 (4th Cir. 1989).

Attorney's Failure to Protect Money of Client Who Warned Him of Possible Theft by Escrow Agent: Mills, the seller under a contract for deed, hired an attorney to find out why the escrow agent for the parties to the contract was missing payments to Mills and making other payments late. The attorney also represented Mills in the buyer's resale of the house. Mills told the attorney that she thought the escrow agent was a thief and to make sure that no money went through the agent on the resale. There were indications that the attorney did not take Mills seriously. After the resale, Mills received no money and the escrow agent was convicted of crimes arising from the handling of various escrow accounts. It was improper to grant the attorney summary judgment in Mills' malpractice action because there were fact issues on the elements of the attorney's duty and breach, among which was Mills' assertion that it was foreseeable by the attorney that the escrow agent would embezzle Mills' money and that she would not have lost her money if the attorney had not failed to act to protect her interests. Mills v. Mather, 270 M 188, 890 P2d 1277, 52 St. Rep. 139 (1995). See also Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081, 56 St. Rep. 771 (1999).

Elements of Malpractice Action: To establish a cause of action for attorney malpractice, there must be a showing that the attorney owed the client a duty of care, that the attorney breached that duty by failure to use reasonable care and skill, and that the breach was the proximate cause of injury to the client, resulting in damages. Mills v. Mather, 270 M 188, 890 P2d 1277, 52 St. Rep. 139 (1995). See also Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081, 56 St. Rep. 771 (1999).

Statute of Limitations — Cannot Begin to Run at Start of Attorney-Client Relationship: Uhler retained Doak to advise and represent him in a dispute with his business associates. On May 16, 1989, Doak advised Uhler to not sue to enforce a stock buy out provision and bonus provision in his agreement with his associates. Uhler was unwilling to accept this advice and continued to meet with Doak to discuss the situation and to provide Doak with more information concerning the situation. On June 16, 1989, Uhler signed a resignation letter and on June 22, 1989, Uhler executed an agreement that waived the stock buy out and bonus provisions. On June 1, 1992, Uhler filed suit against Doak for malpractice. The lower court granted Doak summary judgment on the basis that Doak had advised Uhler to waive his stock buy out and bonus rights on May 16, 1989, and never changed that advice; therefore, the statute of limitations commenced to run at that time. The Supreme Court held that the statute of limitations does not commence to run until the cause of action accrues and that in the present case, Uhler suffered no damages until he signed the resignation letter on June 16, 1989. Uhler v. Doak, 268 M 191, 885 P2d 1297, 51 St. Rep. 1315 (1994), partially reversing Boles v. Simonton, 242 M 394, 791 P2d 755 (1990).

Disqualification in Malpractice Action of Judge Who Represented Plaintiff in Underlying Matter: A judge who had represented plaintiff on the underlying guardianship accounting matter prior to the time that the attorney being sued for malpractice began to represent plaintiff as to the accounting should have disqualified himself from presiding over the malpractice action. A judge may preside over a matter involving a former client if the action over which the judge presides involves a matter different from the one as to which the judge represented the client. In this case, the malpractice action is technically a separate action from the underlying accounting proceeding; however, the malpractice action arose from the legal representation in the accounting proceeding. Default judgment for plaintiff for failure of attorney to plead or in any manner appear was reversed and remanded for a ruling, before another judge, on attorney's motion for relief from judgment for excusable neglect. Shultz v. Hooks, 263 M 234, 867 P2d 1110, 51 St. Rep. 34 (1994), overruled in In re Marriage of Markegard, 2006 MT 111, 332 M 187, 136 P3d 532 (2006), to the extent that Shultz states that 3-1-803(3) precludes a judge from sitting on a case in which the judge has rendered services for a person before an action is filed or has acted as a party's attorney in a separate related case.

Suit Filed by Unauthorized Foreign Corporation Tolls Statute of Limitations: A foreign corporation with an expired certificate of authority to do business in Montana filed suit for legal malpractice. The suit was dismissed due to the lapsed certificate. When the corporation refiled the lawsuit, defendants argued that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. Section 35-1-1004 merely suspends rather than bars further legal proceedings until a certificate is obtained. The Supreme Court held that the corporation could file a lawsuit even though its certificate was expired and the filing had tolled the statute of limitations. Watson & Associates, Inc. v. Green, MacDonald, & Kirscher, 253 M 291, 833 P2d 199, 49 St. Rep. 550 (1992).

Contract Not Containing Saving Clause: The buyers and seller of a gas station jointly retained the defendant to draft the real estate purchase agreement for them. The contract provided that upon a default in the payments, the seller could declare the total balance due. The buyers failed to make several payments, and the seller accelerated the contract and ultimately took back the property. The buyers sued the attorney for negligence in failing to include a saving clause in the contract that would have allowed them to bring the contract current by making up the missed payments. The Supreme Court held that the action was barred by the statute of limitations because the time commenced to run when the buyers read the contract. The court ruled that the buyers were held to understand the terms of the document that they read and signed. Boles v. Simonton, 242 M 394, 791 P2d 755, 47 St. Rep. 793 (1990), partially reversed in Uhler v. Doak, 268 M 191, 885 P2d 1297, 51 St. Rep. 1315 (1994).

No "Continuous Representation" Doctrine in Legal Malpractice Cases: Although adopted statutorily in some states, the doctrine of "continuous representation" in legal malpractice actions, whereby the 3-year statute of limitations must be tolled until such time as an attorney ceases to represent the plaintiff, is absent from this section and is not recognized in Montana as a matter of law. Schneider v. Leaphart, 228 M 483, 743 P2d 613, 44 St. Rep. 1699 (1987).

No "Damage Rule" in Legal Malpractice Statute of Limitations Cases: The rule that the statute of limitations in a legal malpractice action does not run until plaintiff discovers his actual and determinable damages, otherwise known as the "damage rule", is neither recognized in Montana nor required by this section. Schneider v. Leaphart, 228 M 483, 743 P2d 613, 44 St. Rep. 1699 (1987), followed in Young v. Datsopoulos, 249 M 466, 817 P2d 225, 48 St. Rep. 786 (1991), and in Rouane v. Lynaugh, 259 M 171, 855 P2d 114, 50 St. Rep. 745 (1993).

Tolling of Statute — Test to Be Discovery of Facts: Plaintiff brought a legal malpractice action against defendant arising out of defendant's handling of a dissolution of marriage in 1978. The malpractice claim was filed in January 1982. The District Court granted summary judgment to defendant based on the Statute of Limitations. The Supreme Court, relying on California precedent, stated that it is the knowledge of facts rather than the discovery of legal theory that is the test for tolling the Statute of Limitations. It was incumbent on plaintiff to commence his malpractice action within 3 years after he discovered or should have discovered defendant's alleged negligent acts, errors, or omissions. Because the claim was based on three separate acts, it was necessary to determine the date of discovery for each act. The court noted that 27-2-206 does not suspend accrual until the "attorney-client" relationship has terminated. The case was remanded to determine the dates of discovery. Burgett v. Flaherty, 204 M 169, 663 P2d 332, 40 St. Rep. 748 (1983), followed in Estate of Halko v. Dawson, 231 M 283, 751 P2d 1064, 45 St. Rep. 611 (1988), McMillan v. Landoe, Brown, Planalp, Kommers & Johnstone, P.C., 233 M 483, 760 P2d 758, 45 St. Rep. 1662 (1988), in Rouane v. Lynaugh, 259 M 171, 855 P2d 114, 50 St. Rep. 745 (1993), and *Loney v. 27-2-207. Injuries involving property.Case Notes

Disputed Evidence of Ownership Not Considered by Court in Conversion Claim — Statute of Limitations Tolled — Summary Judgment Reversed. Drescher v. Malee, 2022 MT 200, 410 Mont. 305, 519 P.3d 17.

Property Conversion Claim Barred by Statute of Limitations: The plaintiff filed suit against an evidence technician for not returning a watch to him that was taken by the police when he was arrested in 2008. The defendant sent a letter to the plaintiff in December 2013 informing him that he could make arrangements to have his watch released; however, the defendant never received his watch. In 2015, the plaintiff filed suit against the defendant, and the defendant moved for summary judgment, arguing that the statute of limitations had expired. After the District Court granted summary judgment in the defendant's favor, the plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that the three elements of conversion had accrued by 2012 and the statute of limitations had expired in 2014, a year before the plaintiff's lawsuit was filed. Kingman v. Weightman, 2017 MT 224, 388 Mont. 481, 402 P.3d 1196.

Application of Continuing Tort Doctrine — Reasonable Abatement of Nuisance or Trespass Determinative, Not Migration — Prospect of Abatement — Issue of Fact: The plaintiffs were property owners in Opportunity, located close to a former copper smelter. They sued the successor in interest to the original smelter operator for damages for the cost of restoring their properties to their original state and made claims of nuisance and trespass, among others. The District Court granted the defendant summary judgment based, in part, on the fact that the plaintiffs could not offer evidence of continued migration of the contaminants. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the feasibility of reasonable abatement of the property determines whether a nuisance or trespass is temporary or permanent, not the continuing migration of contaminants. The Supreme Court also concluded that whether abatement is reasonable is an issue of fact. Because there were material issues of genuine fact as to whether abatement was reasonable, the Supreme Court reversed the grant of summary judgment and remanded the case. Christian v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2015 MT 255, 380 Mont. 495, 358 P.3d 131.

Certified Question — Statute of Limitations Tolled When Pollution Continues to Migrate and Is Reasonably Abatable: On a certified question from federal District Court, the Supreme Court was asked to consider whether, with respect to the continuing tort doctrine, the statute of limitations is tolled for property damage claims for nuisance and trespass resulting from contamination that has stabilized, continues to migrate, and is not readily or easily abatable. The Supreme Court concluded that contamination that has stabilized but continues to migrate will toll the statute of limitations until the harm can no longer be reasonably abated. An injury is permanent once it can no longer be reasonably abated. Burley v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2012 MT 28, 364 Mont. 77, 273 P.3d 825. See also Christian v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2015 MT 255, 380 Mont. 495, 358 P.3d 131.

Savings Statute Inapplicable to State Action Brought More Than Three Years After Acts Occurred: Following Hawkes' prison term in Montana, he was transferred to Nebraska to serve an additional prison term. Prior to transfer, Hawkes requested that some of his personal belongings be sent to his mother. Hawkes was notified in June 2003 that the items had been destroyed rather than sent to his mother. Hawkes filed a state claim for loss of the property in 2004. In 2006 Hawkes filed an action in federal court based on the same facts alleged in the state court action. The federal court dismissed the action with prejudice for failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted because Hawkes had not alleged the absence of an adequate postdeprivation remedy under state law. Hawkes then filed another state action in 2007 alleging the same facts and claims that were asserted in the first state claim and the federal claim. The District Court dismissed the second state action because more than 3 years had elapsed since the alleged acts occurred, and Hawkes appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The statute of limitations for general and personal injury tort actions is 3 years. An action to recover damages for injury to personal property must be filed within 2 years. Hawkes argued that the District Court erred in dismissing the second state claim because the federal action tolled the statute of limitations by virtue of 27-2-407. However, 27-2-407 denies any extension of time for actions that are voluntarily dismissed or upon which a court renders a final judgment on the merits. The federal court dismissed the entire complaint with prejudice, which constituted a final judgment on the merits, and any claims not presented to the federal court would not be subject to the time extension in 27-2-407. Therefore, neither the first state action nor the federal action qualified for application of 27-2-407, and the District Court properly dismissed the second state action as untimely. Hawkes v. Dept. of Corrections, 2008 MT 446, 348 M 7, 199 P3d 260 (2008).

Amended Complaint After Running of Statute of Limitations for Amended Complaint's Claim: L&R Spraying sprayed Semenza's land and Fitzgerald's land, which Semenza custom farmed. Semenza sued L&R for negligent spraying that allegedly damaged crops on both owners' farms. After the 2-year statute of limitations for injury to property ran out, Fitzgerald sought to be added as a party. Since Fitzgerald's claim arose out of conduct set forth in Semenza's original pleading, the amended complaint adding Fitzgerald as a party with the same cause of action related back to the date of Semenza's original pleading and thus was not barred by the statute of limitations. In addition, the 3-year negligent tort statute of limitations also applied, and when two statutes of limitations apply, the court should use the longer one. Semenza v. Bowman, 268 M 118, 885 P2d 451, 51 St. Rep. 1209 (1994).

Negligent Damage to Property — Two Statutes of Limitations Applicable, One of Which Has Run Out: L&R Spraying sprayed Semenza's land and Fitzgerald's land, which Semenza custom farmed. Semenza sued L&R for negligent spraying that allegedly damaged crops on both owners' farms. After the 2-year statute of limitations for injury to property ran out, Fitzgerald sought to be added as a party. The 3-year negligent tort statute of limitations also applied, and when two statutes of limitations apply, the court should use the longer one. Therefore, Fitzgerald's claim was not barred because it was made within 3 years. Semenza v. Bowman, 268 M 118, 885 P2d 451, 51 St. Rep. 1209 (1994).

Statute of Limitations Applicable to Negligent Damage to Cattle and Ranching Operations: Plaintiffs alleged that as a result of commingling of their cattle with those of defendants, plaintiff's cattle became infected through defendant's negligence, resulting in damage to plaintiff's cattle and ranching operation. Defendants affirmatively asserted, and the trial court agreed, that plaintiffs' claim was barred by the 2-year statute of limitations in this section for complaints based on damage to property. Plaintiffs claimed applicability of the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-204 for complaints based on negligence. Following the holding in Thiel v. Taurus Drilling Ltd., 218 M 201, 710 P2d 33 (1985), the Supreme Court applied the general rule that when there is a substantial question regarding which of two statutes of limitations should apply, any doubt should be resolved in favor of the statute containing the longer limitation in order to afford a plaintiff party-litigant maximum free access to the court system. Ritland v. Rowe, 260 M 453, 861 P2d 175, 50 St. Rep. 1183 (1993), distinguishing Heckaman v. N. Pac. RR Co., 93 M 363, 20 P2d 258 (1933), Quitmeyer v. Theroux, 144 M 302, 395 P2d 965 (1964), Lahman v. Rocky Mtn. Phosphate Co., 161 M 28, 504 P2d 271 (1972), Engine Rebuilders, Inc. v. Seven Seas Import-Export Merc., Inc., 189 M 236, 615 P2d 871 (1980), Rierson v. St., 191 M 66, 622 P2d 195 (1981), Weston v. Cole, 233 M 61, 758 P2d 289 (1988), Carbon County School District v. Spivey, 247 M 33, 805 P2d 61 (1991), and Knight v. Missoula, 252 M 232, 827 P2d 1270 (1992).

When Action Accrues — Knowledge of Facts: Action brought by landowner against chemical company for CERCLA costs and compensatory damages for injury to property was barred by the statute of limitations. Action accrued when the landowner had knowledge of the facts essential to the cause of action well before seizure of the land by the EPA. Mont. Pole & Treating Plant v. Laucks & Co., 993 F2d 676 (1993).

Claim of Illegal Creation of Road Barred by Statute of Limitations: A dirt road was cut through a park at the end of Knight's road in 1957. In 1958, the city of Missoula annexed a portion of land through which the road passed. When construction was completed and thereafter, Knight and other area residents were aware of and continued to complain about the creation of the road and the problems arising from it until 1984, when they filed a complaint that the road was illegally created by a land developer without approval of any authority. Knight alleged that the continued use of the road and failure of the city to close the road were actions committed under color of state law that violated constitutional rights to enjoy property and guarantees of substantive due process, actionable under 42 U.S.C. 1983. The Supreme Court held that the cause of action against the roadbuilder accrued when the road was created and that any claim against the governmental entity arose when the city annexed the property. All claims were therefore barred by the statute of limitations under this section. Absent a showing that the actions of the city were egregious, arbitrary, capricious, or shocking to the conscience, relief under federal law was unavailable because state tort law remedies satisfied due process requirements. Knight v. Missoula, 252 M 232, 827 P2d 1270, 49 St. Rep. 230 (1992).

Applicable Statutes of Limitations Not Affected by Statute of Repose Applicable to Real Property Improvements: The plaintiffs, a condominium owners' association and its individual members, sued Big Sky of Montana Realty, Inc., the successor in interest of Big Sky of Montana, Inc., for breach of warranty, strict liability, negligence, fraud, and deceptive practices in connection with a fire in the Deer Lodge Condominiums at Big Sky. The defendants claimed that the actions were barred by the statute of limitations applicable to each individual cause of action. Plaintiffs claimed that the applicable statute of limitations in 27-2-208 allows a 10-year period following completion of real property improvements in which to bring an action. The Supreme Court held that 27-2-208 was a statute of repose and should be interpreted not to extend the statute of limitations otherwise applicable to a cause of action. The statute only provides that if the time for bringing an action was otherwise extended by law under 27-2-401 or 27-2-409, the extension could be for no longer than 10 years after completion of the improvement. The District Court therefore properly held that the action was barred by the statutes of limitations. Ass'n of Unit Owners of Deer Lodge Condominium v. Big Sky of Mont., Inc., 245 M 64, 798 P2d 1018, 47 St. Rep. 1814 (1990), followed in Carl v. Chilcote, 255 M 526, 844 P2d 79, 49 St. Rep. 1109 (1992).

Action Sounding in Tort and Contract: The defendant accounting firm argued that its duty to the plaintiff arose from law in that it was required to use due care in carrying out its duties and that a breach of duty constituted a tort claim barred by the statute of limitations. The Supreme Court held that the defendant's obligations were defined by the parties' contract and also that there was a legal duty to meet those obligations in a professional manner. The court stated that the plaintiff's claim was based both in tort and contract and therefore the longer statute of limitations for contracts was available to the plaintiff. Billings Clinic v. Peat Marwick Main & Co., 244 M 324, 797 P2d 899, 47 St. Rep. 1464 (1990), followed in Draggin' Y Cattle Co., Inc. v. Addink, 2013 MT 319, 372 Mont. 334, 312 P.3d 451.

Injuries Claimed Constituting Tort Theories — Tort Statute of Limitation Applies: Following the bank's seizure of collateral when plaintiff failed to repay a bank loan, plaintiff brought the present action against the bank for trespass and wrongful removal of farm machinery. The injuries claimed by plaintiff as a result of the breach of the loan contract constitute tort theories of action, and therefore the gravamen of the action lies in tort and the tort statute of limitations applies to bar the action. Weible v. Ronan St. Bank, 238 M 235, 776 P2d 837, 46 St. Rep. 1231 (1989), followed in Action Enterprises, Inc. v. McCalla, 259 M 167, 855 P2d 111, 50 St. Rep. 743 (1993).

Conversion: Conversion is a tort bearing a 2-year statute of limitations. Claim for unauthorized personal expenditures incurred prior to that time is barred. Northwest Plating Co. v. Hoffman, 234 M 360, 763 P2d 44, 45 St. Rep. 1971 (1988), followed in Action Enterprises, Inc. v. McCalla, 259 M 167, 855 P2d 111, 50 St. Rep. 743 (1993).

Raising for First Time on Appeal Disallowed: Statute of Limitations defense was an affirmative defense and could not be raised in Supreme Court when it was not raised in District Court. Taylor v. Dept. of Fish, Wildlife, & Parks, 205 M 85, 666 P2d 1228, 40 St. Rep. 1112 (1983). For application to cases of personal injury, see Bennett v. Dow Chem. Co., 220 M 117, 713 P2d 992, 43 St. Rep. 221 (1986).

Nuisance:

If a nuisance is abatable, it cannot be considered a permanent nuisance. Therefore the nuisance is of a temporary and continuous character and gives rise to a separate cause of action each time it causes damage. The applicable Statute of Limitations is 2 years. Haugen v. Warner, 204 M 508, 665 P2d 1132, 40 St. Rep. 1036 (1983), followed in Shors v. Branch, 221 M 390, 720 P2d 239, 43 St. Rep. 919 (1986), and distinguished in Graveley Ranch v. Scherping, 240 M 20, 782 P2d 371, 46 St. Rep. 1908 (1989). But see a later decision in Graveley Ranch v. Scherping, 247 M 310, 806 P2d 29, 48 St. Rep. 211 (1991), in which it was held that the building of a fence around the poison site constituted abatement of the nuisance sufficient to trigger the statute of limitations. Graveley Ranch was distinguished in Country Estates Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. McMillan, 276 M 100, 915 P2d 806, 53 St. Rep. 297 (1996). In Burley v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2012 MT 28, 364 Mont. 77, 273 P.3d 825, the Supreme Court, relying upon Restatement (Second) of Torts 839, adopted a reasonably abatable standard for continuing torts. See also Christian v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2015 MT 255, 380 Mont. 495, 358 P.3d 131.

When plaintiff's damages are caused by a continuous nuisance but are merely temporary and consequential, the cause of action accrues only at the time of the consequential injury and the Statute of Limitations begins to run from that time. Plaintiff is entitled to recover for the yearly injury to his crops caused by the continuing nuisance until the injury is permanent. Walton v. Bozeman, 179 M 351, 588 P2d 518 (1978), followed in Graveley Ranch v. Scherping, 240 M 20, 782 P2d 371, 46 St. Rep. 1908 (1989). But see a later decision in Graveley Ranch v. Scherping, 247 M 310, 806 P2d 29, 48 St. Rep. 211 (1991), in which it was held that the building of a fence around the poison site constituted abatement of the nuisance sufficient to trigger the statute of limitations. Graveley Ranch was distinguished in Country Estates Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. McMillan, 276 M 100, 915 P2d 806, 53 St. Rep. 297 (1996).

Two-year Statute of Limitations was applicable to continuous and unremitting nuisance; recovery for damage occurring as a result of continuous and unremitting nuisance more than 2 years prior to the commencement of an action was barred by this section. Lahman v. Rocky Mtn. Phosphate Co., 161 M 28, 504 P2d 271 (1972).

In action for alleged well pollution, trial court erred in not limiting recovery to 2 years before filing date of complaint since, under circumstances, pollution of groundwater by dumping of glue waste was continuing temporary nuisance and this section applied. Nelson v. C & C Plywood Corp., 154 M 414, 465 P2d 314, 39 ALR 3d 893 (1970), followed in Graveley Ranch v. Scherping, 240 M 20, 782 P2d 371, 46 St. Rep. 1908 (1989). But see a later decision in Graveley Ranch v. Scherping, 247 M 310, 806 P2d 29, 48 St. Rep. 211 (1991), in which it was held that the building of a fence around the poison site constituted abatement of the nuisance sufficient to trigger the statute of limitations. Graveley Ranch was distinguished in Country Estates Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. McMillan, 276 M 100, 915 P2d 806, 53 St. Rep. 297 (1996).

Exclusive Ownership of Joint Savings Account: A son was added as a joint tenant on his mother's savings accounts. Three years later the mother made a written demand on her son for the return of the passbooks and 1 month following the demand filed a lawsuit to establish exclusive ownership of the funds in the accounts. The lawsuit was not barred by the 2-year Statute of Limitations as the Statute did not begin to run until the written demand was made. Anderson v. Baker, 196 M 494, 641 P2d 1035, 39 St. Rep. 273 (1982).

Cases Falling Between Contract and Tort Law: Plaintiffs leased office space from defendant in a commercial office building. A fire gutted the building, destroying the plaintiffs' offices. Four years later, plaintiffs brought this action for property and business loss. Defendant argues the plaintiffs' claim, which seeks recovery for injury to property, is covered by the 2-year statute on tort action. The Supreme Court said that there are circumstances in which liability in tort may coexist with a liability in contract, giving the injured party the right to elect which form of action he will pursue. The plaintiffs framed the action as a claim for breach of a covenant of quiet enjoyment, implied from the terms of the lease agreement, which results in the conclusion that the 8-year Statute of Limitations is applicable to contracts. Unruh v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 553, 633 P2d 617, 38 St. Rep. 1156 (1981).

No Tacking on of Administrative Appeal Period to Limitations Period: Where appellant attempted to tack on the administrative appeal period to a 2-year period which elapsed and which was taken up by administrative hearings for the purpose of qualifying his action within a 2-year Statute of Limitations, the Supreme Court held that appellant's action was barred by the Statute of Limitations period. The record shows substantial evidence of inexcusable neglect, and the Supreme Court will not condone manipulation of the law so that a case may be further pursued. Rierson v. St., 191 M 66, 622 P2d 195, 38 St. Rep. 3 (1981).

No Error Where Claim of When Action Accrued Not Before Court: In an action for compensatory and exemplary damages for wrongful conversion of plaintiffs merchandise stored in defendant's warehouse, the District Court properly granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on the basis that the action was barred by the Statute of Limitations. Plaintiffs claims for recovery accrued 4 years previously when the defendant warehouse sold plaintiffs merchandise, not, as plaintiff claimed, when plaintiff discovered upon demand that defendant sold the merchandise. In this instance the allegation of knowledge, demand, and then refusal to return the goods was not raised in the complaint, the answer, the interrogatories, or in any affidavit properly before the District Court at the time summary judgment was granted, and thus plaintiffs allegations as to when the action accrued will not be considered on appeal. Seven Seas Import-Export & Mercantile, Inc. v. Handee Foods, 190 M 508, 621 P2d 1097, 38 St. Rep. 60 (1981).

Action to Enforce Implied Covenant in Oil and Gas Lease: In a suit by lessor's grantees to collect damages from defendants/lessees for failure to comply with the common-law offset drilling rule and drill a well to protect the plaintiffs' interests, the suit was not governed by the Statute of Limitations applying to suits to prevent waste to real property. Because the suit was brought to enforce implied provisions of an agreement, it was governed by the Statute of Limitations applicable to contracts. U. V. Indus., Inc. v. Danielson, 184 M 203, 602 P2d 571 (1979).

Rental — Effect of Payments Upon Limitation: Whether or not rent was paid, the lease contained no default clause and no evidence was presented as to termination of lease. Therefore, lease was voidable, not void, and the statute did not begin to run until there was a demand and refusal. Grinde v. Tindall, 172 M 199, 562 P2d 818 (1977).

Waiver: Although plaintiff filed complaint alleging injury to real property more than 2 years after injury occurred, defendants waived defense of Statute of Limitations when they failed to plead it affirmatively. Butte Country Club v. Metropolitan Sanitary & Storm Sewer District, 164 M 74, 519 P2d 408 (1974).

Wrongful Death: Section 27-2-204, rather than this section, applies to an action for wrongful death. Bryant v. Hall, 157 M 28, 482 P2d 147 (1971), overruling Smith v. Wiprud, 154 M 325, 463 P2d 317 (1969).

Injury to Personal Property: An action by an adoptive father and natural grandfather under 27-1-512 is an action for an injury to a pecuniary interest of the parent, therefore one for an injury to a property right which must be commenced within 2 years from the date the claim arose under (2) of this section. LaTray v. Mannix Elec. Co., 148 M 303, 419 P2d 744 (1966); but see Bryant v. Hall, 157 M 28, 482 P2d 147 (1971).

Claim and Delivery:

In an action for claim and delivery, where possession by the defendant is rightful, the Statute of Limitations begins to run when the defendant refuses upon demand to return the property. Interstate Mfg. Co. v. Interstate Prod. Co., 146 M 449, 408 P2d 478 (1965).

Where plaintiff, in a claim and delivery action against his former wife to whom at the time of their separation he had loaned his household furniture, did not know of her claim of ownership until some 2½ years thereafter, when he made demand for it, his right of action did not accrue until refusal of his demand and the limitation of 2 years (this section) did not commence to run until then. Gates v. Powell, 77 M 554, 252 P 377 (1926); Viers v. Webb, 76 M 38, 245 P 257 (1926).

In an action in claim and delivery to recover possession of a cow picked up by defendant and later in good faith purchased from one claiming to be but who was not the owner, defendant not having done anything to prevent the true owner from ascertaining the whereabouts of the animal and learning of his right of action, the fact that plaintiff was ignorant of the circumstances which would have enabled him to bring timely suit did not entitle him to sue after the limitation of 2 years fixed by 27-2-207(2) had run. Bennett v. Meeker, 61 M 307, 202 P 203 (1921).

Damage by Fire: Two-year Statute of Limitations under this section barred suit brought by the United States under 50-63-103 for damage to property caused by alleged negligence of defendants in setting forest fire. U.S. v. Eytcheson, 237 F. Supp. 371 (D.C. Mont. 1965).

Damage to Building From Broken Water Pipes: Claim of owners of an apartment building against realtors for water damage to building from bursting of water pipes due to alleged negligence of realtors in caring for the building was barred by this section. Statute of Limitations concerning implied contracts, 27-2-202, was inapplicable. Quitmeyer v. Theroux, 144 M 302, 395 P2d 965 (1964). (Dissenting opinion, 144 M 302, 395 P2d 965 (1964).)

Waste: The landlord's cause of action because the tenants removed a balcony in the building accrued at the time of the removal, and the Statute of Limitations commenced to run at that time against an action for waste. Pappas v. Braithwaite, 117 M 569, 162 P2d 212 (1945).

Roof Collapse — Statute of Repose Applied — No Tolling: The plaintiff, a school district, sued a construction company that had built and designed a roof for a high school gym after a portion of it collapsed following a heavy snowstorm. The District Court granted the defendants summary judgment, holding that the statute of repose barred the plaintiff's claims because the roof had been completed more than 10 years before its collapse. The plaintiff, however, contended that a statute of repose should be tolled because the defendant had never issued a certificate of completion and had made several repairs to the roof after it was constructed. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that the roof was complete enough for it to be used for its intended purpose and therefore the statute of repose barred the plaintiff's claims. Hill County High School District No. A. v. Dick Anderson Constr., Inc., 2017 MT 20, 386 Mont. 223, 390 P.3d 602.

Negligence Claims for Construction of Home — Barred by Statutes of Limitations and Repose: The defendant constructed a home for the plaintiff in 2001. Each winter after the home's construction, the plaintiff noticed water damage that the defendant would then inspect and declare repaired. In 2012, the plaintiff hired a roofing contractor to inspect the roof and learned that the water damage was caused by improper ventilation of the roof, an issue never identified by the defendant. The plaintiff sued the defendant, alleging negligence; however, the District Court dismissed the claim as it related to the work done when the house was built because the statutes of limitation and repose had both expired. The plaintiff appealed, claiming the defendant had prevented him from discovering the negligence by saying he had repaired the roof. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed the dismissal, holding that the statute of repose had expired before the claim was filed. Hein v. Sott, 2015 MT 196, 380 Mont. 85, 353 P.3d 494.

Applicable Statutes of Limitations Not Affected by Statute of Repose Applicable to Real Property Improvements: The plaintiffs, a condominium owners' association and its individual members, sued Big Sky of Montana Realty, Inc., the successor in interest of Big Sky of Montana, Inc., for breach of warranty, strict liability, negligence, fraud, and deceptive practices in connection with a fire in the Deer Lodge Condominiums at Big Sky. The defendants claimed that the actions were barred by the statute of limitations applicable to each individual cause of action. Plaintiffs claimed that the applicable statute of limitations in this section allows a 10-year period following completion of real property improvements in which to bring an action. The Supreme Court held that this section was a statute of repose and should be interpreted not to extend the statute of limitations otherwise applicable to a cause of action. The statute only provides that if the time for bringing an action was otherwise extended by law under 27-2-401 or 27-2-409, the extension could be for no longer than 10 years after completion of the improvement. The District Court therefore properly held that the action was barred by the statutes of limitations. Ass'n of Unit Owners of Deer Lodge Condominium v. Big Sky of Mont., Inc., 245 M 64, 798 P2d 1018, 47 St. Rep. 1814 (1990), followed in Carl v. Chilcote, 255 M 526, 844 P2d 79, 49 St. Rep. 1109 (1992).

Constitutionality: The Legislature has the power to eliminate a common-law right when there is no interference with a vested right, and this section was not unconstitutional under the provisions of Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const. A challenge to the constitutionality of a legislative enactment for embracing more than one subject and not clearly expressing that subject in the title of the act will not be permitted under Art. V, sec. 11, Mont. Const., when the challenge is raised more than 3 years following the effective date of the act because of the limitation of challenges to a period within 2 years after the effective date. This section does not violate equal protection under law by granting immunity from suit to one class of defendants and denying immunity to others or due process of law by depriving a person of a common-law right without providing a reasonable substitute. Reeves v. Ille Elec. Co., 170 M 104, 551 P2d 647 (1976), distinguished in Carl v. Chilcote, 255 M 526, 844 P2d 79, 49 St. Rep. 1109 (1992).

Materialmen: Materialmen are excluded from the protection of this section. Where a whirlpool machine allegedly caused an electrocution death, the manufacturer was a materialman not subject to the provisions of this section because, although it manufactured and shipped the machine, it was not a member of the construction team. Reeves v. Ille Elec. Co., 170 M 104, 551 P2d 647 (1976).

Injuries From Unsafe Structure: A contractor following plans and specifications given to him, although not ordinarily liable for injuries resulting from a fault in the design of the structure, may be liable if a contractor of average skill and ordinary prudence would not have followed those specifications. Bush v. Albert D. Wardell Contractor, Inc., 165 M 312, 528 P2d 215 (1974), followed in Stewart v. Fisher, 235 M 432, 767 P2d 1321, 46 St. Rep. 116 (1989).

Refusal of Deannexation by City Council — Claims Preclusion Proper: The plaintiffs successfully petitioned the defendant, a city, to have their property annexed to the city. Five years later, the plaintiffs sought to have the same property deannexed, which the defendant denied. The plaintiffs filed a lawsuit against the defendant, which the District Court dismissed because the complaint had not been timely served and the statute of limitations for the plaintiffs' claims barred them from being refiled. One month after the District Court's ruling, the plaintiffs filed another suit against the defendant, and the District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendant, holding that claims preclusion barred the plaintiffs' second suit. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the four-part test for claims preclusion had been satisfied. Schweitzer v. Whitefish, 2016 MT 254, 385 Mont. 142, 383 P.3d 735.

Statute of Limitations — Lawsuit Against County — County's Failure to Respond to Claim Letter: The decedent died as a passenger while involved in a high-speed police chase on December 16, 2011. His estate submitted a claim letter to the county on September 11, 2014, seeking $750,000 from the county for wrongful death. The county never responded, and the estate filed a complaint against the county on March 3, 2015. The District Court granted the county's motion to dismiss, concluding that the estate's claims were time-barred. On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that the statute of limitations was tolled and did not begin to run until the claimant received notice of the county's denial of claim. In re Estate of Woody v. Big Horn County, 2016 MT 180, 384 Mont. 185, 376 P.3d 127.

Action Against Police Officer for Assault Governed by Two-Year Statute of Limitations: The plaintiff argued that he had 3 years to bring suit for assault against a police officer. The Supreme Court held that this section, relied upon by the plaintiff, refers to Sheriffs and constables. The statute does not refer to peace officers; therefore, the applicable limitation period was the 2-year period for intentional torts provided under 27-2-204. Rouse v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 250 M 1, 817 P2d 690, 48 St. Rep. 834 (1991).

Local Government to Deny Claim Before Six-Month Limitation for Filing in District Court Commences: Rouse sued the county to recover damages for alleged police brutality. The lower court dismissed the claim on the basis that the statute of limitations had run. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the county had never denied the claim and that the 6-month limitation for filing an action in District Court did not commence until the county denied the claim. Rouse v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 250 M 1, 817 P2d 690, 48 St. Rep. 834 (1991).

Hospital — Real Party in Interest: The Sisters of Charity, who operate Columbus Hospital, provided medical services to Austin, an indigent resident of Glacier County. Austin applied to Glacier County for medical assistance but her application was rejected. Columbus Hospital then submitted a claim to Glacier County for the services provided to Austin. The Supreme Court rejected Glacier County's defense that the claim was barred by 27-2-209. The court said that Columbus Hospital is a real party in interest and therefore the statute begins to run when the hospital's claim was rejected and not when Austin's welfare application was rejected. Sisters of Charity v. Glacier County, 177 M 259, 581 P2d 830 (1978).

Liability Created by Statute: Action against county by motorist who alleged he suffered personal injuries in a single vehicle accident due to negligent failure of county to properly maintain and mark a "T" intersection of county roads was subject to 3-year Statute of Limitations under this section, rather than the 2-year Statute of Limitations under 27-2-211 as an action "upon a liability created by statute", since 33-23-102, waiving sovereign immunity to extent of county's liability insurance, simply removes a defense previously available rather than creating a new cause of action. State ex rel. Fallon County v. District Court, 161 M 79, 505 P2d 120 (1972).

Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies: Cause of action on statutory bond did not accrue until required administrative proceedings were complete and Board had made final determination of amount due. Mont. Milk Control Bd. v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., 153 M 299, 456 P2d 302 (1969).

When Statute Begins to Run: In an action for Writ of Mandate against a City Treasurer to compel payment of special improvement bonds containing the statutory provisions with relation to manner of payment, leaving the date uncertain and making payment dependent on call of the Treasurer when there is money in the fund therefor, the Statute of Limitations does not begin to run until the bonds are called or until the holder has an immediate cause of action. State ex rel. Clark v. Bailey, 99 M 484, 44 P2d 740 (1935), distinguished as to creation of a trust and tolling of the statute of limitations in Samson v. St., 285 M 310, 948 P2d 232, 54 St. Rep. 1165 (1997).

Sheriff's Official Actions: An action for conversion against a Sheriff and the surety on his official bond, being on a liability incurred "by the doing of an act in his official capacity and by virtue of his office", must be brought within 3 years under 27-2-209(1). Wingate v. Davis, 77 M 572, 252 P 307 (1926).

County Claims:

The subject matter of an action against a county by which it was sought to obtain compensation for land taken for road purposes under an agreement, the consideration for which failed, was not a "claim" against the county within the meaning of this section. Flynn v. Beaverhead County, 54 M 309, 170 P 13 (1917).

The refusal of a Board of County Commissioners to allow a claim is not conclusive even though the claimant does not appeal. Albers v. Barnett, 53 M 71, 161 P 518 (1916); Greeley v. Cascade County, 22 M 580, 57 P 274 (1899).

Payment of Proportionate Share of Administrative Costs by Nonassumed Counties — Action to Recover Disputed Claims: Under 53-2-322 (now repealed), a nonassumed county is required to pay its proportionate share of administrative costs for protective services, including rent, adequate equipment, and supplies. The responsibility to pay a proportionate share, other than salaries, travel expenses, and indirect employee costs, is not capped at the amount paid in fiscal year 1987. An action to recover a disputed claim filed more than 6 months after denial of the claim is barred by the statute of limitations in this section. 45 A.G. Op. 23 (1994).

1985 Amendment — Subsection Enactment: Section 3, Ch. 458, inserted (3)(a) that read: "An action against a county to recover a royalty interest in land acquired by the county by tax deed must be brought within 3 years after the commencement of commercial production of oil, gas, or other minerals from the land." (Applies to actions filed after September 30, 1985; sec. 5, Ch. 458, L. 1985.)

Section 1, Ch. 458, L. 1985, enacted a separate purpose section. It is codified as (3)(b) of this section for convenience. Section 1, Ch. 458, contained a reference to "this act", which literally included 70-19-421 and amendments to 15-17-312, as well as the amendments to this section inserting (3)(a). Given the content of (3)(b) and that (3)(a) was the primary substance of the "act", the Code Commissioner has substituted reference to "subsection (3)(a)" for "this act" in (3)(b).

Case Notes

Failure to Assert Royalty Interest in Tax Deed Land — Laches:

A tax deed issued to the county in 1930 without affidavits setting forth the statutorily requisite statements as to notice to the owner and as to occupancy was void. The county sold the land to A.O., reserving a 6¼% royalty interest. Plaintiff children of the original owner who had lost the land for failure to pay taxes quitclaimed all their interest in the land to A.O.'s successors, reserving their claim to and interest in the 6¼% royalty claimed by the county, and in turn A.O.'s successors conveyed to plaintiffs all of the successors' interest in that royalty. Plaintiffs' conveyance cleared the title of any insufficiency in the tax deed proceedings but did not convey or give up plaintiffs' claim to the 6¼% royalty interest. Plaintiffs' redemption argument failed because they had never attempted a redemption. After analyzing nine factors relating to laches, the court ruled that laches barred plaintiffs' claim to the county's royalty interest. Richardson v. Richland County, 219 M 48, 711 P2d 777, 42 St. Rep. 1834 (1985), followed in Filler v. Richland County, 247 M 285, 806 P2d 537, 48 St. Rep. 200 (1991). (The court also stated that King v. Rosebud County, 193 M 268, 631 P2d 711, 38 St. Rep. 1145 (1981), in which the court concluded that laches was inapplicable because laches did not commence until oil was produced and royalties earned, was incomplete in its laches analysis because the court overlooked the inchoate ownership of the royalty interest.)

County's tax deed was void for insufficient notice of the tax sale and failure to give notice of application for a tax deed to the owners of the property. The county had deeded the land to Swigart, reserving a 6¼% royalty interest. Swigart, using a statutory proceeding, applied for and received a deed confirming the tax deed. The confirmation deed did not mention the county's 6¼% royalty interest. The confirmation deed was void for failure to give sufficient notice to the owners who had lost the land to the county or to their successors in interest. The two original owners had each had an undivided one-half interest in the land. Plaintiff heirs of one of the original owners sued to quiet title to the county's 6¼% royalty interest and then quitclaimed to Swigart's heirs all plaintiffs' interest in the land, reserving a 6¼% royalty interest. In return, Swigart's heirs quitclaimed the 6¼% royalty interest to plaintiffs. Plaintiffs' quitclaim to Swigart's heirs did not convey or give up any claim plaintiffs had to or any interest they had in the 6¼% royalty interest. The court analyzed 10 factors relating to laches and ruled that laches barred plaintiffs' claim and that the 6¼% royalty interest was vested in the county. Anderson v. Richland County, 219 M 60, 711 P2d 784, 42 St. Rep. 1843 (1985).

Agency Letter Seeking Repayment of Alleged Medicaid Overpayments — No Action Commenced: Following an audit, the Department of Public Health and Human Services determined that the petitioner, a Medicaid medical supplier, had been overpaid and sent a letter to the petitioner requesting repayment. After a fair hearing in which the hearings officer upheld the Department's overpayment determination and concluded that an 8-year statute of limitations applied to the overpayment claim, the petitioner sought judicial review. The District Court concluded that the 2-year statute of limitations found in 27-2-211 applied and that the action was commenced when the Department sent the overpayment letter to the petitioner. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, noting that the statute of limitations issue was relevant only if an action had been commenced. Because the Department had merely sent a letter and had never filed a complaint, it had not commenced an action within the meaning of 27-2-102 and Rule 3, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). Independence Medical Supply, Inc. v. Dept. of Pub. Health and Human Serv., 2018 MT 57, 391 Mont. 1, 414 P.3d 781.

Wrongful Occupation Claim — Application of Continuing Tort Doctrine Permissible: The plaintiffs were property owners in Opportunity, located close to a former copper smelter. They sued the successor in interest to the original smelter operator for damages for the cost of restoring their properties to their original state and filed several claims, including a claim of wrongful occupation. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants, finding that the 2-year statute of limitations had expired on that claim. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court had erred, finding that the accrual of a claim of wrongful occupation is not on the first date of occupation and that a wrongful occupation claim may be considered continuing. The Supreme Court remanded the matter to allow the District Court to consider whether the occupation was continuing. Christian v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2015 MT 255, 380 Mont. 495, 358 P.3d 131.

Claims Under Montana Consumer Protection Act — Barred by Statute of Limitations: The defendant constructed a home for the plaintiff in 2001. Each winter after the home's construction, the plaintiff noticed water damage. Each time, the defendant would inspect the damage and report that he had repaired the problem. In 2012, the plaintiff hired a roofing contractor to inspect the roof and learned that the water damage was caused by improper ventilation of the roof, an issue never identified by the defendant. The plaintiff sued the defendant, alleging violations of the Montana Consumer Protection Act (MCPA), and argued that the statute of limitation should be tolled because the defendant's inspections had prevented him from discovering the cause of injury. The District Court dismissed the claim. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the District Court had erred in dismissing claims involving the MCPA that were alleged to have occurred within the 2 years prior to the lawsuit's filing date and remanded to the District Court for further proceedings on the remaining claims. Hein v. Sott, 2015 MT 196, 380 Mont. 85, 353 P.3d 494.

Class Action Alleging Insurance Subrogation Prior to Insured Being Made Whole — Definition of Class Including Those Not Timely Filing Claims Upheld: The plaintiffs claimed that a health insurer violated its members' statutory made-whole rights by exercising its subrogation rights without first reviewing whether the member had been made whole. The District Court certified the class and defined the class to include those who had not filed claims with the insurer if the insurer had avoided making payment to the member without first conducting a made-whole analysis. The insurer appealed and argued that the ruling ran counter to the ruling in Diaz v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Mont., 2011 MT 322, 363 Mont. 151, 267 P.3d 756, in which the class had been defined more narrowly. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed the District Court's definition of the class. Rolan v. New W. Health Serv., 2013 MT 220, 371 Mont. 228, 307 P.3d 291. However, see Diaz v. St., 2013 MT 219, 371 Mont. 214, 308 P.3d 38, upholding the definition of class that excluded those who did not timely file claims.

Class Action Alleging Insurance Subrogation Prior to Insured Being Made Whole — Definition of Class Excluding Those Not Timely Filing Claims Upheld: The plaintiffs claimed that the state health plan violated its members' statutory made-whole rights by exercising its subrogation rights without first reviewing whether the member had been made whole. The plaintiffs appealed the District Court's class certification order that limited the class to only those who had timely filed claims with the state health insurance plan. They argued that the definition excluded those who had not filed claims and that the District Court had abused its discretion by limiting the class. The Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that the definition of the class, which could be modified by the District Court as discovery progressed, did not frustrate the intended purpose of the class complaint, was equitable, and did not constitute an abuse of discretion. Diaz v. St., 2013 MT 219, 371 Mont. 214, 308 P.3d 38. However, see Rolan v. New W. Health Serv., 2013 MT 220, 371 Mont. 228, 307 P.3d 291, upholding the definition of class that included those who did not timely file claims.

Existence of Factual Issues Regarding Whether Plaintiffs Had Notice of Serious Structural Problems: Centennial Log Homes constructed a custom log home for the plaintiffs in 2001. The plaintiffs discovered several flooring, mold, and aesthetic problems, including a building code violation, in 2004 and 2005 that they considered to be routine maintenance issues. They discovered more serious structural problems in 2008 and eventually had the home deconstructed in 2010, revealing further problems. The plaintiffs argued that their claims should not have been barred by the 2004 and 2005 discoveries; rather, the statute of limitations should be tolled under the discovery rule. The District Court granted summary judgment for Centennial, finding that the repairs in 2004 and 2005 should have put the plaintiffs on notice that a further inspection was needed and would have revealed the structural defects. The Supreme Court reversed, finding that genuine factual issues existed regarding whether the plaintiffs were put on notice of the more serious structural problems by 2005, including whether they reasonably should have become aware of the severity of the problems prior to the home's deconstruction. Further, the court found that there were issues of fact regarding whether the problems experienced in 2004 and 2005 were related to the more serious problems discovered later. Johnston v. Centennial Log Homes & Furnishings, Inc., 2013 MT 179, 370 Mont. 529, 305 P.3d 781.

Two-Year Statute of Limitations Applicable to Filing Suit for Volunteer Fire Department Partial Pension: Marx served as a volunteer firefighter from 1979 to 1995, when he was terminated for failure to complete training requirements. About 6 months after termination, Marx requested the firefighters relief association board to grant him a partial pension. In 2004 Marx was notified by the board that his request was denied pursuant to 19-18-602(5) because there was no other factor beyond Marx's control that would qualify him for a partial or reduced pension. Marx then filed suit against the association for damages and declaratory relief. The association moved for summary judgment on grounds that Marx had failed to file suit within 2 years of termination as required in 27-2-211. The District Court granted summary judgment for the association and Marx appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Despite Marx's assertion that under 27-2-301 the time for running the statute of limitations did not begin until his request was formally denied, the District Court did not incorrectly determine the accrual date of Marx's cause of action. Marx cited no authority for the proposition that a demand was necessary to entitle him to maintain an action for a partial pension, and the Supreme Court declined to insert into 27-2-301 a requirement for formal repudiation or denial of a claim. Rather, the statute of limitation began to run from the time Marx knew the facts that would have justified a demand for the pension. The right to a service pension is a liability created by statute as contemplated in 27-2-211, and the association met its initial burden of establishing both the absence of genuine issues of material fact and its entitlement to judgment as a matter of law, while Marx failed to establish the existence of a genuine issue of material fact. Marx v. Belgrade Volunteer Firefighters Relief Ass'n, 2008 MT 410, 347 M 256, 198 P3d 247 (2008), distinguishing Kosty v. Lewis, 319 F2d 744 (D.C. Cir. 1963), Martin v. Constr. Laborer's Pension Trust, 947 F2d 1381 (9th Cir. 1991), and Wetzel v. Lou Ehlers Cadillac Group, 222 F3d 643 (9th Cir. 2000).

Liability Under 1999 Dram Shop Law Not Considered Cause of Action Created by Statute — Three-Year Statute of Limitations Applicable: Filip was injured in 2000 as a passenger in an auto driven by a person who was allegedly served alcohol at a Billings restaurant, even though the restaurant allegedly knew that the driver was a minor and was intoxicated. Filip brought a dram shop action under 27-1-710 about 2 years and 11 months after the accident. The District Court concluded that because Filip's claim under 27-1-710 constituted a liability created by statute, the 2-year statute of limitations in 27-2-211 applied, so Filip's claim was untimely and the defendants' motion for dismissal was granted. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The liability created in 27-1-710 was not created by statute because prior to the statute's enactment in 1986, a common law cause of action existed for negligently serving alcohol to an intoxicated person, so 27-1-710 did not create a new private right unknown to the common law, and the restaurant was potentially liable even prior to the enactment of 27-1-710. Because Filip's cause of action was not created by statute, the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-204 applied. Thus, Filip's action was timely filed and the case was remanded for further proceedings. [Note that the 2003 Legislature established a 2-year statute of limitations on actions brought pursuant to 27-1-710.] Filip v. Jordan, 2008 MT 234, 344 M 402, 188 P3d 1039 (2008). See also Royal Ins. Co. v. Roadarmel, 2000 MT 259, 301 M 508, 11 P3d 105 (2000).

Statutory Cause of Action for Railroad Mismanagement — Complaint Dismissed for Failure to Meet Statute of Limitations for Filing Statutory Claim: Haux's employment with defendant was terminated December 27, 1999, and Haux filed a complaint on October 10, 2002, asserting that the termination was negligent and malicious and part of defendant's general business practice of firing employees without cause, constituting mismanagement. The District Court found that 39-2-703 (now repealed) does not create a cause of action for mismanagement and granted defendant's motion for summary dismissal, and Haux appealed. The Supreme Court held that a plain reading of 39-2-703 does in fact create a cause of action for mismanagement, so the District Court erred in dismissing the action on those grounds. However, dismissal was still proper because Haux's action for mismanagement was barred when Haux failed to meet the 2-year statute of limitations for filing the statutory claim. Thus, dismissal was affirmed because the right result was reached for the wrong reason. Haux v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2004 MT 233, 322 M 456, 97 P3d 540 (2004), following Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 292, 302 M 289, 16 P3d 992 (2000), and distinguishing Dillon v. Great N. Ry., 38 M 485, 100 P 960 (1909), Johnson v. Butte & Superior Copper Co., 41 M 158, 108 P 1057 (1910), Beeler v. Butte & London Copper Dev. Co., 41 M 465, 110 P 528 (1910), and Melzner v. Raven Copper Co., 47 M 351, 132 P 552 (1913).

Claims Under Unfair Trade Practices Act Subject to Statute of Limitations on Actions for Constructive Fraud: As a liability created by statute that is neither a penalty nor a statutory debt, claims brought under the Montana Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act of 1973 are subject to the 2-year statute of limitations in this section. Osterman v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 2003 MT 327, 318 M 342, 80 P3d 435 (2003), following Royal Ins. Co. v. Roadarmel, 2000 MT 259, 301 M 508, 11 P3d 105 (2000).

Exercise of Ordinary Diligence Required in Discovery of Unfair Trade Practices Constituting Fraud for Tolling Statute of Limitations: For purposes of tolling the statute of limitations in an action for fraud or unfair trade practices, ordinary diligence must be exercised by the aggrieved party in discovery of the facts constituting the fraud or deceptive practice. Pursuant to Johnson v. Barrett, 1999 MT 176, 295 M 254, 983 P2d 925 (1999), the test is whether the plaintiff has information of circumstances sufficient to put a reasonable person on inquiry or has the opportunity to obtain knowledge from sources open to the plaintiff's investigation. Mere ignorance of the facts will not suffice to toll the statute of limitations. In this case, plaintiff filed an unfair trade practices complaint about 2 years and 9 months after entering an agreement with defendant siding installer, believing at the time that the contract was with the defendant company that manufactured the siding. However, plaintiff showed no affirmative conduct by either defendant that was calculated to obscure the existence of a cause of action, nor were the facts giving rise to the alleged fraud concealed. Thus, plaintiff discovered or should have discovered the facts constituting the alleged fraud when the contract was entered more than 2 years prior to filing suit, so the claim was barred by the 2-year statute of limitations in this section. Osterman v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 2003 MT 327, 318 M 342, 80 P3d 435 (2003).

Statute of Limitations Applicable to Workers' Compensation Subrogation Right Created by Statute — Subrogation Agreement Not Created by Correspondence Between Attorneys for Claimant and Insurer: Roadarmel suffered an industrial injury and filed a workers' compensation claim against his employer, and the claim was defended by Royal Insurance Company (Royal). Roadarmel received a judgment and then filed a third-party action against two companies that had supplied the chemicals that injured him. Roadarmel's attorney, White, properly notified Royal that the third-party action was being commenced. Pursuant to 39-71-414, Roadarmel requested that Royal pay a portion of the costs, and Royal agreed to participate in the costs rather than waive its subrogation rights, tendering a check for $5,000 toward the costs. Roadarmel was successful in the third-party action, and White advised Royal that the third parties would appeal. The appeal was upheld, and White notified Royal of that fact, attaching copies of the settlement check and jury verdict forms, a breakdown of the actual costs of the third-party action, and a request that Royal determine its subrogation interest in a portion of the third-party proceeds. Royal independently computed the amount that it contended that it was owed and advised Roadarmel in letters that an action would be filed to determine Royal's subrogation interests. White did not respond to the letters, and 3 ½ years passed before Royal filed a petition to determine its subrogation rights. Royal later learned through discovery that White had disbursed the third-party proceeds on the same day that Royal had been requested to determine its subrogation interest, allegedly instructing Roadarmel to hold the funds pending a subrogation determination. Royal then also filed a separate count against White for an alleged breach of the duty of trust owed Royal as a third-party beneficiary of the trust imposed on the third-party proceeds. The Workers' Compensation Court determined that a subrogation agreement had been formed in the exchange of letters between White and Royal's counsel, that the statute of limitations on the contract had not expired, and that Roadarmel and White were jointly and severally liable for $63,864.79 for breaching the subrogation contract and failing to honor Royal's first lien of the third-party judgment. Roadarmel and White appealed, contending that Royal's subrogation action was based on a statutory liability that was time-barred by the 2-year statute of limitations in this section and that the 3-year statute of limitations in 72-34-511 (now repealed), which governs actions based on an alleged breach of trust, also barred Royal's action against White. Royal argued that the correspondence between the parties formed an enforceable contract that was subject to the longer statute of limitations in 27-2-202. The Supreme Court agreed with Roadarmel and White. The correspondence only confirmed in writing that which was required by and took place entirely in the context of the mandatory statutory procedures and did not create an enforceable contract. Although the court recognized the rights of equitable subrogation at common law, those rights were conceptually distinguished from an insurer's first lien against third-party proceeds recovered by an injured employee, which constitutes a statutory liability amounting to an unqualified right of reimbursement not found at common law. As set out in St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Glassing, 269 M 76, 887 P2d 218 (1994), the concept of subrogation merely gives the insurer the right to prosecute the cause of action that the insurer possessed, so the insurer's claim by subrogation, being purely derivative, is subject to the same statute of limitations as though the cause of action were sued upon by the insured. The statutory right to reimbursement or recoupment is distinguishable from the insurer's right of subrogation proper. Thus, Royal's claim against Roadarmel, being based on a liability created by statute, was time-barred under subsection (1)(c) of this section. Further, Royal's breach of trust claim against White was time-barred by 72-34-511 (now repealed). Because Royal's statutory lien was extinguished as a matter of law 2 years after Royal received notice that the third-party action was settled, by the time that the statute of limitations on White's actions began to run, even if that time was determined to be the date on which he disbursed the third-party funds, he could no longer be characterized as a trustee, constructive or otherwise, of the third-party proceeds. The case was reversed and remanded for summary judgment in favor of Roadarmel and White. Royal Ins. Co. v. Roadarmel, 2000 MT 259, 301 M 508, 11 P3d 105, 57 St. Rep. 1080 (2000).

Action by Minority Stockholder Against Majority Stockholder — Three-Year Statute of Limitations Applicable: A complaint by a minority stockholder against a majority stockholder is subject to the 3-year statute of limitations in subsection (3) of this section. Hansen v. 75 Ranch Co., 1998 MT 77, 288 M 310, 957 P2d 32, 55 St. Rep. 322 (1998).

Section Not Appropriate Limitations Period for Civil Suit Under Federal Individuals With Disabilities Education Act: In a suit under the federal Individuals With Disabilities Education Act, because the Act does not specify a limitations period, the courts will use the most analogous state statute of limitations unless that statute would undermine the federal policies underlying the Act. Montana's statute of limitations applicable to judicial reviews of administrative appeals,

2-4-702, was applicable to the school district's civil action challenging the administrative hearings officer's decision after the due process hearing. Livingston School District Nos. 4 and 1 v. Keenan, 82 F3d 912 (9th Cir. 1996).

Claim for Utility Relocation Project Reimbursement Not Time-Barred: Although the bulk of primary work in a utility relocation project was accomplished by April 1988, various items of related work were done as late as March 1989. Because the claim for reimbursement was filed in July 1990, less than 2 years later, payment of the claim was not barred by the applicable statute of limitations in this section. N. Lights, Inc. v. St., 265 M 47, 874 P2d 6, 51 St. Rep. 394 (1994).

Conflicting Statutes of Limitations Resolved in Favor of Longest Statute: Kearney, a news manager working for a television station under an oral contract, sued KXLF for overtime compensation. The District Court applied a 5-year statute of limitations pursuant to 27-2-202(2). KXLF argued that the applicable statute of limitations was the 2-year limit contained in this section. Citing Ritland v. Rowe, 260 M 453, 861 P2d 175 (1993), and Thiel v. Taurus Drilling Ltd. 1980-II, 218 M 201, 710 P2d 33 (1985), the Supreme Court held that conflict between the statutes applicable in this case should be resolved in favor of the statute containing the longer limitation. Kearney v. KXLF Communications, Inc., 263 M 407, 869 P2d 772, 51 St. Rep. 119 (1994). See also Travelers Indem. Co. v. Andersen, 1999 MT 201, 295 M 438, 983 P2d 999, 56 St. Rep. 782 (1999), and Blanton v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2011 MT 110, 360 Mont. 396, 255 P.3d 1229.

Statute of Limitations Applicable to Penalty for Deceit: Because 37-61-406, which provides a penalty for deceit or collusion by an attorney, is clearly a penalty statute, the 2-year statute of limitations in this section applies rather than the 3-year general tort statute of limitations. Barrett v. Holland & Hart, 256 M 101, 845 P2d 714, 49 St. Rep. 1156 (1992), and 50 St. Rep. 63 (1993).

Applicability of Ten-Year Statute of Limitations to Pre-1983 Mines Net Proceeds Tax: Prior to 1983, the limitations period for assessment revisions of property taxes, including the mines net proceeds tax, was 10 years as set in 15-8-601. Because this specific statute of limitations was governing, the general 2-year limitations period prescribed in this section did not apply to these particular taxes. W.R. Grace & Co. v. Dept. of Revenue, 238 M 439, 779 P2d 470, 46 St. Rep. 1399 (1989), distinguishing Caterpillar Tractor Co. v. Dept. of Revenue, 194 M 537, 633 P2d 618, 38 St. Rep. 1245 (1981).

Statute of Limitations Begins at Time of Injury: Plaintiff alleged defendant violated 37-51-323 (now repealed) by misrepresenting himself as being a real estate broker licensed by another state. Plaintiff's complaint was filed over 2 years after the alleged tort. Plaintiff contends that defendant's alleged misrepresentation constitutes concealment of a material fact, and therefore the statute of limitations should be tolled. The court held that defendant's misrepresentation was not an affirmative act calculated to obscure plaintiff's cause of action. In nonmalpractice tort actions, the statute of limitations begins to run on the date of plaintiff's injury. This action is barred because plaintiff did not file within the 2-year period. Payne v. Stratman, 229 M 377, 747 P2d 210, 44 St. Rep. 2059 (1987).

Statute of Limitations as Applied to Civil RICO Actions: Section 27-2-211, rather than 27-2-215 (renumbered 27-2-231), provides the Statute of Limitations for claims most analogous to civil RICO claims in Montana since the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) itself contains no limitations. Jacobson v. W. Mont. Prod. Credit Ass'n, 643 F. Supp. 391, 43 St. Rep. 1598 (D.C. Mont. 1986).

Eight-Year Statute of Limitations for Civil Action Under Securities Act of Montana: The U.S. District Court for the District of Montana certified a question to the Supreme Court on the applicable Statute of Limitations for a civil action brought pursuant to 30-10-307. In deciding that the 8-year limitation period rather than the 2-year period applied, the court traced the legislative history of the civil enforcement limitation period under the Securities Act of Montana. In 1967, the Legislature eliminated the relevant 2-year limitation and left a void. The court reviewed the legislative intent, underlying purposes of the Act, and characterization of the essence of the claim. Finding that each count of plaintiff's complaint could be interpreted as sounding in tort, contract, or statutory violation, the court resolved the case in favor of the longest limitation period. Thiel v. Taurus Drilling Ltd. 1980-II, 218 M 201, 710 P2d 33, 42 St. Rep. 1520 (1985), followed in Ritland v. Rowe, 260 M 453, 861 P2d 175, 50 St. Rep. 1183 (1993), and in Kearney v. KXLF Communications, Inc., 263 M 407, 869 P2d 772, 51 St. Rep. 119 (1994).

Federal Civil Rights Action — Accrual of Action: Although federal courts apply the state Statute of Limitations in a civil rights action brought under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, the date on which the action accrues is determined by federal standards. The time of accrual under federal law is when the plaintiff knows or has reason to know of the injury that is the basis for the action. Where the only incident that could give rise to a cause of action occurred 4 years prior to the federal court filing, the parties were properly dismissed, there being a 2-year Statute of Limitations in effect. Harvey v. Pomroy, 535 F. Supp. 78, 39 St. Rep. 657 (D.C. Mont. 1982).

Corporate License Tax — Limitations on Assessment Where No Return — No Revival of Impliedly Repealed Section by Internal Reference: The 2-year Statute of Limitations in 27-2-211 applied to the assessment of corporate license tax for corporations that failed to file a return for the reason that the Supreme Court in St. v. King Colony Ranch, 137 M 145, 350 P2d 841 (1960), had held that sec. 1, Ch. 209, L. 1945 (amending 15-31-526), had superseded sec. 9, Ch. 166, L. 1933 (enacting 15-31-542, repealed in 1983), as to the time limitation and the Legislature, in sec. 2, Ch. 186, L. 1963 (enacting 15-31-509), though referencing 15-31-542 on an exception, had not used language to revive it; therefore 15-31-542 remained superseded or repealed. (But see 15-31-544.) Caterpillar Tractor Co., Inc. v. Dept. of Revenue, 194 M 537, 633 P2d 618, 38 St. Rep. 1245 (1981).

Misrepresentation Action in Real Estate Sale: The court properly awarded summary judgment to defendants in a misrepresentation action under the Montana real estate license law when the record indicated that no fraudulent representations were made by defendants and the Statute of Limitations had expired, notwithstanding the "discovery" exception. Anderson v. Applebury, 173 M 411, 567 P2d 951 (1977).

Rental — Effect of Payments Upon Limitation: Whether or not rent was paid, the lease contained no default clause and no evidence was presented as to termination of lease. Therefore, lease was voidable, not void, and the statute did not begin to run until there was a demand and refusal. Grinde v. Tindall, 172 M 199, 562 P2d 818 (1977).

"Liability Created by Statute": Action against county by motorist who alleged he suffered personal injuries in a single vehicle accident due to negligent failure of county to properly maintain and mark a "T" intersection of county roads was subject to 3-year Statute of Limitations under 27-2-209, rather than 2-year Statute of Limitations under 27-2-211 as an action "upon a liability created by statute", since 33-23-102, waiving sovereign immunity to extent of county's liability insurance, simply removes a defense previously existing rather than creating a new cause of action. State ex rel. Fallon County v. District Court, 161 M 79, 505 P2d 120 (1972).

Action Under Federal Civil Rights Statute: Cause of action under federal civil rights statute for improper search accrued at the time of the search, not at the time the search was adjudicated invalid or when criminal prosecution was terminated, so that action brought more than 2 years after the search was barred by this section. Strung v. Anderson, 452 F2d 632 (9th Cir. 1971).

Railroad's Statutory Duty: The cause of action based on a railroad's statutory duty to maintain a cement drop, siphon, and wooden flume on its right-of-way did not accrue on the taking of the right-of-way or on the abandonment of the right-of-way and notice to water rights owners that it would no longer maintain the works but rather would accrue only after injury occurred from the railroad's failure to maintain the works. Harrer v. N. Pac. Ry., 147 M 130, 410 P2d 713 (1966).

Antitrust Civil Actions:

Federal District Court properly dismissed counterclaims charging deliberate course of conduct on the part of a utility aimed at destroying business of one of the defendants and failure of utility to operate its pipelines as a common carrier as required by the Federal Leasing Act and the Natural Gas Act and seeking damages for violations of antitrust laws, which were barred by this section. Wight v. Montana-Dakota Util. Co., 299 F2d 470 (9th Cir. 1962).

Action by packing company to recover treble damages from competitors for alleged violation of antitrust laws, filed more than 2 years after competitors had been engaged in a local price war in Montana, was barred by 2-year limitation under this section, though within that period short weighting and varying prices occasioned by keen competition occurred, in absence of evidence of concerted effort by competitors or systematic price cutting. Action for treble damages is not for a "penalty" or "forfeiture" under this section; liability is not mere codification of common law but is "liability created by statute". Hansen Packing Co. v. Swift & Co., 27 F. Supp. 364 (D.C. Mont. 1939).

Public Officers' Obligations:

Action against former Commissioner of Public Works, appointed by former Mayor of city, to recover money received as additional salary for managing housing projects was not barred by this section where city had no knowledge of the payments taken by Commissioner. Roundup v. Liebetrau, 134 M 114, 327 P2d 810 (1958).

The duty of a County Treasurer to receive, keep safely, and account for all money of the county, as well as that directed by a court or statute to be deposited with him for safekeeping, being one imposed by express statutory requirement, an action on the official bond of such an officer is on "a liability created by statute" and is barred in 2 years by 27-2-211. Gallatin County v. USF&G Co., 50 M 55, 144 P 1085 (1914), distinguished in School District v. Pondera County, 89 M 342, 297 P 498 (1931).

Section 27-2-211(1)(c) does not apply to an action against a City Treasurer to recover interest received by him on deposits of city funds that he failed to turn over to his principal. Butte v. Goodwin, 47 M 155, 134 P 670 (1913).

Burden of Proof as to Timeliness of Action: Section 27-2-211(3) is not a Statute of Limitations but is of the essence of the right itself, and one who seeks to enforce a right must show affirmatively that his action is timely. (Opinion on rehearing.) State ex rel. Lewis & Clark County v. District Court, 90 M 213, 300 P 544 (1931).

Oil and Gas Lease Forfeiture: An action for the cancellation of record of an oil and gas lease which had theretofore been declared forfeited, brought under 82-1-201 through 82-1-203, was not an action "upon a statute for a penalty or forfeiture" within the meaning of this section or one "upon a liability created by statute other than a penalty or forfeiture". Abell v. Bishop, 86 M 478, 284 P 525 (1930).

Oil and Gas Leases: A Statute of Limitations, such as this section, prescribing a limitation of 2 years for an action "upon a liability created by statute" does not extend to an action based upon defendant's alleged negligence in addition to a statutory liability or to an action in which the element of agreement enters, as where defendant in an action of the nature of the above specifically agreed, as lessee in an oil and gas lease, in case of default on his part to release the lease of record. Abell v. Bishop, 86 M 478, 284 P 525 (1930).

Double Liability of Bank Stockholders:

The statutory liability imposed upon holders of bank stock by section 6036, R.C.M. 1921 (since repealed), for debts of the bank, is in the nature of a guaranty, not primary but secondary, and the liability is created within the meaning of this section, not when the statute imposing it was enacted or when the relation of debtor and creditor between the bank and plaintiff first arose but when the bank became insolvent; therefore, the complaint in such an action showing on its face that it was commenced within the 3-year period was sufficient as against a general demurrer (demurrer abolished, former Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and 25-31-503 (now repealed)). Mitchell v. Banking Corp. of Mont., 83 M 581, 273 P 1055 (1929).

Quaere: When is the double statutory liability of a stockholder in a state bank "created" within the meaning of this section, fixing a limitation of 3 years; was it created at the time the creditor made the deposit in question or at the time the corporation was shown to be without assets? Brown v. Roberts, 78 M 301, 254 P 419 (1927).

While the double liability of stockholders in state banks is contractual in nature, the 5-year limitation on contracts not in writing (27-2-202) does not apply in an action on such liability, but, the liability being one created by law, the provision of this section, that an action of that nature must be brought within 3 years after it was created, applies. Brown v. Roberts, 78 M 301, 254 P 419 (1927).

Accrual of Cause of Action:

Limitation does not begin to run against suit to charge directors of national bank with personal liability for making excessive loans so long as defendants remain in control. Adams v. Clarke, 22 F2d 957 (9th Cir. 1927).

An action by a depositor in an insolvent bank to enforce the stockholders' liability is based on a statutory rather than a contractual liability and is not penal in nature, so under this section it must be commenced within 3 years after the liability was created by law, without reference as to when plaintiff made discovery of the facts in the case. Brown v. Roberts, 78 M 301, 254 P 419 (1927).

An action against a director to enforce his statutory liability for failure of his corporation to file its annual statement is not for a penalty or forfeiture, so it must be brought within 3 years after the liability was created by law and not within 3 years after the aggrieved party discovered the fact with relation thereto. Williams v. Hilger, 77 M 399, 251 P 524 (1926).

Notary Public's Liability: An action against a notary public to recover damages for making a false certificate to a mortgage is one "upon a liability created by statute" within the meaning of this section and barred if not brought within 2 years from the date of false making. Steinbrenner v. Elder, 80 M 395, 260 P 725 (1927).

Actions in Other States:

In an action brought in the federal District Court of a foreign state to enforce directors' liability for failure of a corporation to file the required annual report, the 3-year limitation prescribed by this section governs. N. Pac. Ry. v. Crowell, 245 F 668 (D.C. N.J. 1917).

This section applies to liabilities incurred before its passage under a different statute and goes with them as a qualification when they are sued upon in other states. Davis v. Mills, 194 US 451, 48 L Ed 1067, 24 S Ct 692 (1904), distinguished in Pearson v. NE. Airlines, Inc., 309 F2d 553 (2nd Cir. 1962).

Mining Company's Liability: An action under 39-2-704(1) (now repealed) for personal injuries, founded upon actionable negligence, is not an action on a "liability created by statute"; hence, such an action is not barred in 2 years. Beeler v. Butte & London Copper Dev. Co., 41 M 465, 110 P 528 (1910).

Attorney General's Opinions

Wage Claims by Public Officers Considered Liability Created by Statute — Two-Year Statute of Limitations Applicable: Because the extent and nature of public officers' duties and the amount of compensation are statutorily defined, claims for compensation must be considered liabilities created by statute. Therefore, the 2-year statute of limitations set out in subsection (1)(c) of this section applies to wage claims by public officers, including elected county officials and their deputies, and claims for longevity payments from Deputy Sheriffs and undersheriffs. 43 A.G. Op. 58 (1990).

Stockholders' Liability: An action by a depositor in an insolvent bank to recover on the statutory liability of its stockholders is not one against a bank, and therefore this section has no application. Brown v. Roberts, 78 M 301, 254 P 419 (1927).

Mesne Profits: The period of limitation for an action in ejectment, with claim for mesne profits and the value and use of the property during the period of its wrongful withholding, was 10 years under this section. Kurth v. Le Jeune, 83 M 100, 269 P 408 (1928).

27-2-216. Tort actions — childhood sexual abuse.Compiler's Comments

2023 Amendment: See 2023 Session Law for amendment made by sec. 3, Ch. 167, L. 2023. Amendment effective April 19, 2023.

Severability: Section 38, Ch. 167, L. 2023, was a severability clause.

2019 Amendment: Chapter 367 in (1) at beginning inserted "Except as provided in subsection (4)", after "sexual abuse" inserted "against the individual who committed the acts", and at end deleted "not later than"; in (1)(a) at beginning substituted "before the victim of" for "3 years after" and after "injury" inserted "reaches 27 years of age"; in (1)(b) at beginning inserted "not later than"; deleted former (2) that read: "(2) It is not necessary for a plaintiff to establish which act, in a series of acts of childhood sexual abuse, caused the injury that is the subject of the suit. The plaintiff may compute the period referred to in subsection (1)(a) from the date of the last act by the same perpetrator"; in (2) inserted references to 45-5-508, 45-5-602, 45-5-603, 45-5-627, 45-5-704, and 45-5-705 in list of statutory references; inserted (3) regarding the time by which a legal action against an entity that owed a duty of care to the plaintiff must be commenced; inserted (4) regarding the exception to the statute of limitations for a claim for damages pursuant to subsection (1); inserted (5) regarding the exception to the statute of limitations for a claim for damages pursuant to subsection (3); inserted (6) defining admissions for the purposes of subsection (5); and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective May 7, 2019.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 18, Ch. 367, L. 2019, provided: "(1) Except as provided in subsection (2), [section 3] [27-2-216] applies to all causes of action now pending or commenced on or after [the effective date of this act] [May 7, 2019], regardless of when the cause of action arose, as well as to previously filed actions that have been dismissed on the basis of an expired statute of limitations. To this extent, [section 3] [27-2-216] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109.

(2) [Section 3] [27-2-216] does not apply to:

(a) any claim that has been litigated to finality on the merits in any court of competent jurisdiction prior to [the effective date of this act] [May 7, 2019]; or

(b) any settlement agreement reached prior to [the effective date of this act] [May 7, 2019] for all claims alleging childhood sexual abuse.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 367, L. 2019, provided: "WHEREAS, childhood sexual abuse is an epidemic in Montana, and there are many instances in recent years of victims of childhood sexual abuse being unable to seek criminal or civil justice as the result of short statute of limitations windows in Montana law; and

WHEREAS, the sexual abuse of children is despicable conduct that must be reported, investigated, and prosecuted to create specific deterrence; and

WHEREAS, the State of Montana must ensure appropriate action when mandatory reporters and others report childhood sexual abuse; and

WHEREAS, regardless of the location of the crime, to protect Montana's children, the Department of Public Health and Human Services and the Department of Justice, working closely with local law enforcement and prosecutors, must respond to allegations of sexual abuse with effective investigations and, when viable, effective prosecutions; and

WHEREAS, childhood sexual abuse causes lifelong trauma to survivors of the same; and

WHEREAS, the average reporting age of victims of childhood sexual abuse is 52 years old, requiring the Legislature to take a meaningful look into the time periods presently allowed in Montana law to pursue criminal and civil court action; and

WHEREAS, upon review, the Legislature has determined that the current truncated time periods to bring criminal prosecutions and civil litigation related to allegations of sexual abuse are not in line with mental health science as to reporting of childhood sexual abuse, are too narrow, and should be extended."

Saving Clause: Section 15, Ch. 367, L. 2019, was a saving clause.

Severability: Section 16, Ch. 367, L. 2019, was a severability clause.

2013 Amendment: Chapter 225 in (3) after "45-5-504" deleted "45-5-505". Amendment effective October 1, 2013.

Severability: Section 4, Ch. 158, L. 1989, was a severability clause.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 5, Ch. 158, L. 1989, provided: "[This act] applies to all causes of action commenced on or after October 1, 1989, regardless of when the cause of action arose. To this extent, [this act] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109."

Case Notes

Time of Discovery of Injury Because of Childhood Sexual Abuse as Jury Question — Motion for Directed Verdict Properly Denied: Substantial conflicts in the evidence existed regarding the time at which plaintiff discovered that her mental disorders were connected to sexual abuse that she experienced as a child. It is within the province of the jury to resolve conflicting evidence; therefore, the District Court properly denied defendant's motion for a directed verdict based on the time bar in this section. Werre v. David, 275 M 376, 913 P2d 625, 53 St. Rep. 187 (1996).

Tolling Provision Inclusive of Negligence Claims Against Nonperpetrator — "Based On" Defined: Defendant argued that the plain language of this section refers only to intentional conduct and that the statute does not toll the general 3-year statute of limitations for negligence actions. Defendant further argued that this section includes only claims against perpetrators of intentional sexual abuse and that because defendant was not the perpetrator, a negligence claim could not be maintained. The meaning of the term "based on" is determinative of whether this section includes negligence claims. The plain statutory meaning is that an action is based on intentional conduct if intentional sexual abuse is the starting point or foundation of the claim. Harmonizing 27-2-204 with this section, the Supreme Court held that this section is not limited to intentional tort actions against perpetrators of childhood sexual abuse. The District Court properly concluded that this section includes negligence claims based on intentional conduct by a nonperpetrator. Further, the court distinguished Deeds v. U.S., 306 F. Supp. 348 (D.C. Mont. 1969), and Azure v. U.S. Health & Human Serv., 758 F. Supp. 1382 (D.C. Mont. 1991), in holding that the proposition that when harm is intentionally caused by a third person and is not within the scope of risk created by the defendant's conduct, the third person's intentional act precludes imposition of liability against the defendant applies only to cases on intervening, superseding causes. Werre v. David, 275 M 376, 913 P2d 625, 53 St. Rep. 187 (1996), following State ex rel. Snidow v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 93 M 19, 17 P2d 68 (1933).

Constitutionality of Retroactive Statute of Limitations for Claims Involving Childhood Sexual Abuse: At age 41, appellant filed a complaint of sexual abuse against her father for incidents occurring when she was between the ages of 16 and 19, averring that through counseling she had discovered the alleged abuse and filed the complaint a short time later. The District Court dismissed the complaint by summary judgment, holding that the retroactive application of the childhood sexual abuse statute of limitations placed an unreasonable hardship and oppression on respondent, basically destroying any limitations of actions by reviving a claim after that claim was barred by the conventional statute of limitations in violation of respondent's due process rights. However, as determined in Penrod v. Hoskinson, 170 M 277, 552 P2d 325 (1976), the Legislature has specific power to extend a statute of limitations and apply it retroactively to reverse barred claims. The Supreme Court will not examine the actions of the Legislature in addressing a public need when a statute has a reasonable relation to a legitimate state purpose. The language of this section clearly allows the bringing of a claim for childhood sexual abuse within 3 years of discovering the injuries. Respondent failed to prove unconstitutionality beyond a reasonable doubt. Because there was a genuine issue of fact as to when appellant knew or should have known of her injury and its cause, summary judgment was improper and the case was remanded for trial. Cosgriffe v. Cosgriffe, 262 M 175, 864 P2d 776, 50 St. Rep. 1501 (1993), overruling E.W. v. D.C.H., 231 M 481, 754 P2d 817 (1988).

Case Notes

Generally Applicable Statute of Limitations Not Applicable to Claims for Petroleum Spill Reimbursement — Specific Limitations Identified in Statute: The Montana Petroleum Tank Release Compensation Board found that Cascade County's claims for reimbursement for costs incurred remediating petroleum contamination were time-barred pursuant to the 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231. On initial appeal, the District Court disagreed. The Supreme Court affirmed, finding that 75-11-307 and 75-11-309 both specifically address the relevant action for relief by providing specific time limitations during which reimbursement compensation must be claimed. Therefore, 27-2-231 did not apply. Cascade County v. Mont. Petroleum Tank Release Comp. Bd., 2021 MT 28, 403 Mont. 195, 480 P.3d 815.

Collection on Medicaid Liens by Department — Statute of Limitations on Overpayments — Interpretation of "Third Party": The plaintiffs in a class action filed suit against the Department of Public Health and Human Services for its collection of settlement proceeds in excess of federal Medicaid law. The plaintiffs sought declaratory judgment, injunctive relief, and reimbursement for overpayment for 2,500 plaintiffs. Following the issuance of Arkansas Department of Health and Human Services v. Ahlborn, 547 U.S. 268 (2006), Montana amended its Medicaid lien statutes to seek reimbursement of only those settlement proceeds representing compensation for medical expenses, instead of all settlement proceeds. The term "third party" as used in 53-2-612 includes all other sources of medical assistance available to Medicaid recipients, including a recipient's private health or automobile insurance. As there was no specific statute of limitations applied to relief sought by the plaintiffs, the statute of limitations was 5 years from the issuance of Ahlborn. Blanton v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2011 MT 110, 360 Mont. 396, 255 P.3d 1229.

Time Bar on Writ of Certiorari to Review Contempt Proceedings: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court was asked to establish a timeframe within which a petition for review of a contempt order must be filed. The issue was whether the time limitation should come from Title 25, which includes the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure and the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure, or from Title 27, which prescribes the various statutes of limitation for the commencement of actions. The court noted that there is no appeal, as such, from an order of contempt in a civil proceeding and that the exclusive method of review of civil contempt orders (with certain exceptions) is through a writ of certiorari or writ of review. That review is generally limited to jurisdictional questions and whether evidence supports the contempt. Therefore, the issue of timeliness for filing a petition for a writ of certiorari or review is not a statute of limitations issue, and to mechanically characterize those writs for the review of contempt proceedings as original proceedings governed by the 5-year statute of limitations in this section would be to deny the basic nature of appellate review. Further, petitions for writs of certiorari to review contempt proceedings are fundamentally different from other original proceedings commenced in the Supreme Court and from petitions for writs of supervisory control, which do not so much involve appellate review of and a decision on the underlying proceedings as they involve the court dealing with discreet questions of law during the pendency of the underlying proceedings. Because the timeframe in which to file petitions for writs of certiorari to review contempt proceedings is a procedural issue analogous to the procedure for filing a notice of appeal, the Supreme Court held that former Rule 72, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), former Rule 17, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and 27-25-103 require that the timeframe for those petitions be determined by the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure. Specifically, pursuant to former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), a petition for a writ of certiorari to review contempt proceedings must be filed with the Clerk of the District Court within 30 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding, unless the state is a party, in which case the petition must be filed within 60 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding. This may not be construed to limit the Supreme Court's power to grant writs of supervisory control or to consider applications for other types of original proceedings. The Supreme Court chose not to establish a precedent that allows contempt proceedings to be delayed until the underlying cause is resolved. Jones v. District Court, 2001 MT 276, 307 M 305, 37 P3d 682 (2001), overruling Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937), to the extent that Shaffroth holds that the general 5-year statute of limitations in this section applies to all writs of review authorized in 27-25-102.

Statute of Limitations as Applied to Civil RICO Actions: Section 27-2-211, rather than 27-2-215 (renumbered 27-2-231), provides the Statute of Limitations for claims most analogous to civil RICO claims in Montana since the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) itself contains no limitations. Jacobson v. W. Mont. Prod. Credit Ass'n, 643 F. Supp. 391, 43 St. Rep. 1598 (D.C. Mont. 1986).

Real Estate Actions:

Some causes of action do not clearly fall within the provisions of the specific Statutes of Limitation found in this Code. Normally, the residual Statute of Limitations in 27-2-215 (renumbered 27-2-231) would then be applicable. This is not the case, however, when the cause concerns real estate. Under 70-19-402, it appears that seizure or possession within the 5 years prior to the commencement of the action is the only limitation imposed by statute on plaintiff in this case, who sued to quiet title. Since she was seized of a mineral interest during that period, she was entitled to wait until her title was questioned before filing suit. The running of time (here, more than 25 years) tends to strengthen rather than destroy title determined by decree. Peterson v. Hopkins, 210 M 429, 684 P2d 1061, 41 St. Rep. 1140 (1984).

Specific performance of an oral contract for the sale of real estate may be decreed where possession thereunder, taken by the vendee with the vendor's knowledge or consent, is followed by improvement of the property, even though no part of the purchase price has been paid; in such a case, where the payment and conveyance are to be concurrent acts and the vendee has been ready to pay, the vendor stands in the same position as if payment had been made, that is to say, he holds the legal title in trust for the vendee; and the Statute of Limitations does not run against the action for specific performance until the vendor has, in some manner, disavowed his trust. Wright v. Brooks, 47 M 99, 130 P 968 (1913), distinguished by Situ v. Smole, 2013 MT 33, 369 Mont. 1, 303 P.3d 747.

This section does not apply to a suit to have the executors and heirs of the plaintiff's co-owner in a mining claim declared trustees for his benefit. Delmoe v. Long, 35 M 139, 88 P 778 (1907).

This section does not apply to actions concerning real estate. Grogan v. Valley Trading Co., 30 M 229, 76 P 211 (1904); Burt v. Cook Sheep Co., 10 M 571, 27 P 399 (1891).

Accrual of Cause of Action Shown by Litigation Brought in Different State: Where the plaintiffs brought an action in Oregon in 1977 for an accounting of certain properties and that action was dismissed in 1981 with the stipulation that the claims could be asserted in Montana courts by June 13, 1981, the District Court did not err in dismissing the suit filed in Montana on July 2, 1981. The 5-year period of the statute began to run in 1970 or 1971 when the plaintiffs state they became aware of the dispute; their argument that they did not become aware of the cause of action until 1978 or 1979 must fail, as the previous action was begun in 1977. Wellman v. Wellman, 205 M 504, 668 P2d 1060, 40 St. Rep. 1459 (1983).

Mandamus:

A proceeding in mandamus to compel reinstatement of a member of the faculty of the state university is governed by this section and not by 27-2-203, providing for a 2-year limitation. State ex rel. Phillips v. Ford, 116 M 190, 151 P2d 171 (1944).

The 5-year limitation prescribed by this section was held applicable in a mandamus proceeding; hence a County Treasurer, by law custodian of the funds of an irrigation district, therefore charged with duty not to pay out funds on claims believed by him to be invalid, could properly assert the defense of such limitation in a proceeding to compel payment of a registered district warrant. State ex rel. DeKalb v. Ferrell, 105 M 218, 70 P2d 290 (1937).

This section contains the only limitation applicable to mandamus proceedings, being a general provision applicable to all actions for which special provision is not otherwise made. Notwithstanding the provision, however, the courts may, in their discretion, deny relief when there has been a long delay in applying for it, in the absence of excuse or explanation. State ex rel. Bennetts v. Duncan, 47 M 447, 133 P 109 (1913), distinguished in State ex rel. Boorman v. St. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 109 M 127, 94 P2d 201 (1939).

While the District Court may in its discretion, notwithstanding the provisions of this section and of 27-2-101, deny an application for a Writ of Mandamus where there has been a long delay in making it, in the absence of excuse or explanation, the propriety of issuing it in any particular case will be determined upon the facts of that case; and if it is apparent that the delay has not resulted in prejudice to the rights of the adverse party and that the relief sought does not depend upon the determination of doubtful and disputed questions of fact, the Writ may go. State ex rel. Bennetts v. Duncan, 47 M 447, 133 P 109 (1913), distinguished in O'Neill v. Butte, 96 M 403, 30 P2d 819 (1934); State ex rel. Bailey v. Edwards, 40 M 313, 106 P 703 (1910).

Probate Claims: Statutes of Limitations have no application to creditors' claims in probate that have been approved by the personal representative and allowed by the court. Montgomery v. First Nat'l Bank, 114 M 395, 136 P2d 760 (1943).

Certiorari and Review: This section was applicable to Writs of Certiorari and Review, by virtue of 27-2-404 construing the word "action" to include special proceedings. Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937), overruled in Jones v. District Court, 2001 MT 276, 307 M 305, 37 P3d 682 (2001), to the extent that Shaffroth holds that the general 5-year statute of limitations in this section applies to all writs of review authorized in 27-25-102 because pursuant to former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), a petition for a writ of certiorari to review contempt proceedings must be filed with the Clerk of the District Court within 30 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding, unless the state is a party, in which case the petition must be filed within 60 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding.

Setting Aside Judgment: Under this section the cause of action (a suit to set aside a judgment in a mortgage foreclosure proceeding) accrued on entry of the judgment. Frisbee v. Coburn, 101 M 58, 52 P2d 882 (1935).

Corporate Stockholder's Action: A stockholder in a reservoir company, a corporation organized for profit with power to sell its assets upon a proper vote, who, upon a sale having been made, took no timely steps to assail its legality nor brought suit until after the lapse of 5 years, was estopped by his delay from questioning the proceedings leading to the sale and barred by either this section or 27-2-203 from prosecuting the action. Canyon Creek Irrigation District v. Martin, 52 M 339, 159 P 418 (1916).

Public Land Contest: An action to recover land claimed by plaintiff to have been rightfully entered by him under the public land laws of the United States but wrongfully patented in the Northern Pacific Railway Company under its land grant was barred by this section because it was not commenced until 15 years after patent to the railway company. Kimes v. N. Pac. Ry., 49 M 573, 144 P 156 (1914).

Trust Obligations: The Statute of Limitations applies to suits in equity and actions at law. As between the trustees of an express trust and the cestui que trust, the Statute of Limitations commences to run from the date of the disavowal of the trust by the trustees and knowledge of such disavowal by the cestui que trust. The pendency of another suit operates to suspend the Statute only as to the particular suit brought and not as to the cause of action involved. Mantle v. Speculator Min. Co., 27 M 473, 71 P 665 (1903).

Part 3

Accrual of Cause of Action

Part Case Notes

Architectural Malpractice — Applicability of Continuing Relationship Doctrine: An architect was hired to design and oversee the building of a hospital. Shortly after completion in 1975, problems developed with the heating, air conditioning, and ventilating systems. The hospital contacted the architect about remedies for the problems, seeking and continuing to rely on his advice until 1979, when the parties' relationship ended. The hospital filed suit in 1981, which the architect contended was beyond the statute of limitations that normally would begin running upon substantial completion of the facility in 1975. Distinguishing Schneider v. Leaphart, 228 M 483, 743 P2d 613 (1987), the Supreme Court applied the continuing relationship doctrine because no specific statute of limitations governed the tort of architectural malpractice and because “accrual” was not statutorily defined at the time of the acts giving rise to the action. The continuing relationship doctrine may be used when, during the course of an ongoing, developing, and dependent relationship between a professional and a client, the professional commits a tortious act that injures the client. The doctrine suspends the accrual of the cause of action in order to give the professional an opportunity to remedy, avoid, or establish that there was no error or attempt to mitigate damages. The cause of action does not accrue until either the professional relationship ends or, if a general professional relationship continues between the parties, the professional ceases to treat or advise the client for the particular act causing the injury. Therefore, the statute of limitations in this case was suspended until the professional relationship ended in 1979 and the hospital’s complaint in 1981 was filed well within the general 3-year tort statute of limitations. N. Mont. Hosp. v. Knight, 248 M 310, 811 P2d 1276, 48 St. Rep. 444 (1991).

Products Liability — Statute of Limitations — Fraudulent Concealment Test Adopted: Plaintiff was injured in May 1975, when his holstered Ruger revolver discharged into his leg as he crawled under some brush. He filed this products liability action in September 1979. Ruger moved for summary judgment based upon the Statute of Limitations. The statutory period for tort action in Montana is 3 years. The Statute begins to run from the time the right of action accrues and not from the time when the plaintiff who was ignorant before comes to knowledge of his rights. Plaintiff contended the Statute tolled due to Ruger’s fraudulent concealment of the defective nature of the revolver. The Supreme Court has never considered fraudulent concealment in a products liability case but has considered it in malpractice actions, which could apply here. To toll the Statute, the fraud must be of such a character as to prevent inquiry, elude investigation, or to mislead the party who claims the cause of action. There first must be injury and then concealment. It is the cause of action which must be fraudulently concealed by failing to disclose the fact of injury. Application of this test to this case establishes no fraudulent concealment. There must be some affirmative act of the defendant calculated to obscure the existence of the cause action. Much v. Sturm, Ruger & Co., Inc., 502 F. Supp. 743, 37 St. Rep. 2116 (D.C. Mont. 1980).

Conflicting Evidence on Time of Accrual: The question of whether an action is barred by the Statute of Limitations is for the jury to decide when there is conflicting evidence as to when the cause of action accrued. Hill v. Squibb & Sons, 181 M 199, 592 P2d 1383 (1979).

27-2-301. When demand necessary to perfect right to action.

Compiler’s Comments

1987 Amendment: Near middle of first sentence, after “time when the”, substituted “demand is made except” for “right to make the demand is complete except in one of the following cases”; deleted former (2) that read: “(2) Where there was a deposit of money not to be paid at a fixed time but only upon a special demand or a delivery of personal property not to be returned, specifically or in kind, at a fixed time or upon a fixed contingency, the time must be computed from the demand”; and made minor changes in phraseology.

Case Notes

Two-Year Statute of Limitations Applicable to Filing Suit for Volunteer Fire Department Partial Pension: Marx served as a volunteer firefighter from 1979 to 1995, when he was terminated for failure to complete training requirements. About 6 months after termination, Marx requested the firefighters relief association board to grant him a partial pension. In 2004 Marx was notified by the board that his request was denied pursuant to 19-18-602(5) because there was no other factor beyond Marx’s control that would qualify him for a partial or reduced pension. Marx then filed suit against the association for damages and declaratory relief. The association moved for summary judgment on grounds that Marx had failed to file suit within 2 years of termination as required in 27-2-211. The District Court granted summary judgment for the association and Marx appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Despite Marx’s assertion that under 27-2-301 the time for running the statute of limitations did not begin until his request was formally denied, the District Court did not incorrectly determine the accrual date of Marx’s cause of action. Marx cited no authority for the proposition that a demand was necessary to entitle him to maintain an action for a partial pension, and the Supreme Court declined to insert into 27-2-301 a requirement for formal repudiation or denial of a claim. Rather, the statute of limitation began to run from the time Marx knew the facts that would have justified a demand for the pension. The right to a service pension is a liability created by statute as contemplated in 27-2-211, and the association met its initial burden of establishing both the absence of genuine issues of material fact and its entitlement to judgment as a matter of law, while Marx failed to establish the existence of a genuine issue of material fact. Marx v. Belgrade Volunteer Firefighters Relief Ass'n, 2008 MT 410, 347 M 256, 198 P3d 247 (2008), distinguishing Kosty v. Lewis, 319 F2d 744 (D.C. Cir. 1963), Martin v. Constr. Laborer's Pension Trust, 947 F2d 1381 (9th Cir. 1991), and Wetzel v. Lou Ehlers Cadillac Group, 222 F3d 643 (9th Cir. 2000).

No Error Where Claim of When Action Accrued Not Before Court: In an action for compensatory and exemplary damages for wrongful conversion of plaintiffs' merchandise stored in defendant's warehouse, the District Court properly granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on the basis that the action was barred by the Statute of Limitations. Plaintiffs' claims for recovery accrued 4 years previously when the defendant warehouse sold plaintiffs' merchandise, not, as plaintiff claimed, when plaintiff discovered upon demand that defendant sold the merchandise. In this instance the allegation of knowledge, demand, and then refusal to return the goods was not raised in the complaint, the answer, the interrogatories, or in any affidavit properly before the District Court at the time summary judgment was granted, and thus plaintiffs' allegations as to when the action accrued will not be considered on appeal. Seven Seas Import-Export & Mercantile, Inc. v. Handee Foods, 190 M 508, 621 P2d 1097, 38 St. Rep. 60 (1981).

Separate Transactions: Where two brothers maintaining separate places of business entered into an agreement of partnership with relation to particular transactions in the purchase and sale of precious stones, each transaction was complete in itself, and the Statute of Limitations commenced to run with reference to each thereof from the time the surviving partner (suing the estate of his deceased brother) knows the facts justifying demand on his part for his share of the profits on any one of the transactions relied upon in his action. Pincus v. Davis, 95 M 375, 26 P2d 986 (1933).

Bailor's Demand for Property:

Under this section the limitation of 2 years against an action to recover personal property by a bailor against his bailee does not commence to run until the latter refuses to return it on demand. Gates v. Powell, 77 M 554, 252 P 377 (1926).

The Statute of Limitations does not run against the bailor's right to recover the bailed chattel so long as the bailment lasts and has not been put to an end by the bailee refusing to return the property on demand or otherwise denying the trust and claiming the chattel as his own. This is the rule as to trustees generally, and it applies also to bailees. These principles of law have been embodied in this section. Woods v. Latta, 35 M 9, 88 P 402 (1907), distinguished in Bennett v. Meeker, 61 M 307, 202 P 203 (1921), and explained in Viers v. Webb, 76 M 38, 245 P 257 (1926).

27-2-302. Actions based on mutual accounts.

Case Notes

Account Stated: One who freely pays an account, even though he has expressed dissatisfaction with it, does so with the intent to assent to it and with awareness that it is a final determination of all accounts. Big Sky Livestock v. Herzog, 171 M 409, 558 P2d 1107 (1976).

27-2-303. Actions for waste, trespass, or injury committed during mining work or exploration.

Case Notes

Action to Enforce Implied Covenant in Oil and Gas Lease: In a suit by lessor's grantees to collect damages from defendants/lessees for failure to comply with the common-law offset drilling rule by failing to drill a well to protect the plaintiffs' interests, the suit was not governed by the Statute of Limitations applying to suits to prevent waste to real property. Because the suit was brought to enforce implied provisions of an agreement, it was governed by the Statute of Limitations applicable to contracts. U. V. Indus., Inc. v. Danielson, 184 M 203, 602 P2d 571 (1979).

Rental — Effect of Payments Upon Limitation: Whether or not rent was paid, the lease contained no default clause and no evidence was presented as to termination of lease. Therefore, lease was voidable, not void, and the statute did not begin to run until there was a demand and refusal. Grinde v. Tindall, 172 M 199, 562 P2d 818 (1977).

Injury to Real Property: Where defendant's geophysical exploration injured plaintiffs' real property, Statute of Limitations under this section was not tolled by plaintiffs' decision to permit defendant to repair the damage with approximately 1 year remaining under the Statute. Carlson v. Ray Geophysical Division, 156 M 450, 481 P2d 327 (1971).

27-2-304. Actions involving personal property accruing after death and before issuance of letters of administration.

Case Notes

Delay in Appointment of Administrator:

Under this section, where decedent died on August 5, 1946, letters of administration were deemed to have been issued on or before August 5, 1951. Cocanougher v. Cocanougher, 141 M 28, 375 P2d 1014 (1962).

Action by an administrator, appointed on May 3, 1960, for estate of decedent who died August 5, 1946, for an accounting to recover estate property was barred under this section. Cocanougher v. Cocanougher, 141 M 28, 375 P2d 1014 (1962).

Purpose of Section:

The purpose of this section is to fix a definite point of time from which an applicable Statute of Limitations commences to run rather than have an applicable Statute of Limitations start to run when an administrator is appointed, no matter how long a period has elapsed after the death of an intestate. Cocanougher v. Cocanougher, 141 M 28, 375 P2d 1014 (1962).

The purpose of this section was, by force of the presumption therein created, to fix definite points of time from which the Statute of Limitations would commence to run. Haydon v. Normandin, 55 M 539, 179 P 460 (1919).

Conversion After Appointment of Administrator: Where a conversion of personal property of a decedent takes place before letters of administration are deemed to have been issued, under this section the Statute of Limitations commences to run as fixed by that section; but where it takes place after letters are so deemed to have been issued, the Statute begins to run from the date of the conversion, from the time the cause of action accrues. Stagg v. Stagg, 90 M 180, 300 P 539 (1931).

Procedural Nature of Section: This section operates on the remedy alone; it does not create a new cause of action in favor of the heir. It does not operate retroactively, but it does affect rights of action which might have been enforced at the time it took effect. Haydon v. Normandin, 55 M 539, 179 P 460 (1919).

Part 4

Circumstances Which Extend Period of Limitations

Part Case Notes

Architectural Malpractice — Applicability of Continuing Relationship Doctrine: An architect was hired to design and oversee the building of a hospital. Shortly after completion in 1975, problems developed with the heating, air conditioning, and ventilating systems. The hospital contacted the architect about remedies for the problems, seeking and continuing to rely on his advice until 1979, when the parties' relationship ended. The hospital filed suit in 1981, which the architect contended was beyond the statute of limitations that normally would begin running upon substantial completion of the facility in 1975. Distinguishing Schneider v. Leaphart, 228 M 483, 743 P2d 613 (1987), the Supreme Court applied the continuing relationship doctrine because no specific statute of limitations governed the tort of architectural malpractice and because "accrual" was not statutorily defined at the time of the acts giving rise to the action. The continuing relationship doctrine may be used when, during the course of an ongoing, developing, and dependent relationship between a professional and a client, the professional commits a tortious act that injures the client. The doctrine suspends the accrual of the cause of action in order to give the professional an opportunity to remedy, avoid, or establish that there was no error or attempt to mitigate damages. The cause of action does not accrue until either the professional relationship ends or, if a general professional relationship continues between the parties, the professional ceases to treat or advise the client for the particular act causing the injury. Therefore, the statute of limitations in this case was suspended until the professional relationship ended in 1979 and the hospital's complaint in 1981 was filed well within the general 3-year tort statute of limitations. N. Mont. Hosp. v. Knight, 248 M 310, 811 P2d 1276, 48 St. Rep. 444 (1991).

Requirements of "Equitable Tolling" — Doctrine Not Recognized: Plaintiff relied on out-of-state decisions to present the proposition that, in instances when an injured person has several legal remedies and reasonably and in good faith pursues one, the statute of limitations will not be available as a defense where equitable principles justify tolling of the statute. Requirements of the doctrine, known as "equitable tolling", were outlined in Collier v. Pasadena, 191 Cal. Rep. 681

(Cal. App. 1983): (1) timely notice to the defendant (within the applicable statute of limitations) in filing the first claim; (2) lack of prejudice to defendant in gathering evidence to defend against the second claim; and (3) good faith and reasonable conduct by plaintiff in filing the second claim. The Supreme Court determined that in the present case the notice requirement was not met; therefore, the court did not address arguments with regard to the remaining two elements or recognize the doctrine of equitable tolling in Montana. Erickson v. Croft, 233 M 146, 760 P2d 706, 45 St. Rep. 1379 (1988).

No Judicial Discretion to Alter Statute of Limitations: Plaintiffs' complaint was dismissed because it was not timely filed, missing the statute of limitations by 1 day. Plaintiffs moved for relief under former Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), because of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. The statute of limitations does not discriminate between a just and unjust claim. The statute represents legislative and public policy controlling the rights of potential litigants. A trial court does not have judicial discretion to alter, change, or lessen statutory limits for commencement of actions. Schaffer v. Champion Home Builders Co., 229 M 533, 747 P2d 872, 44 St. Rep. 2196 (1987).

Products Liability — Statute of Limitations — Fraudulent Concealment Test Adopted: Plaintiff was injured in May 1975, when his holstered Ruger revolver discharged into his leg as he crawled under some brush. He filed this products liability action in September 1979. Ruger moved for summary judgment based upon the Statute of Limitations. The statutory period for tort action in Montana is 3 years. The Statute begins to run from the time the right of action accrues and not from the time when the plaintiff who was ignorant before comes to knowledge of his rights. Plaintiff contended the Statute tolled due to Ruger's fraudulent concealment of the defective nature of the revolver. The Supreme Court has never considered fraudulent concealment in a products liability case but has considered it in malpractice actions, which could apply here. To toll the Statute, the fraud must be of such a character as to prevent inquiry, elude investigation, or to mislead the party who claims the cause of action. There first must be injury and then concealment. It is the cause of action which must be fraudulently concealed by failing to disclose the fact of injury. Application of this test to this case establishes no fraudulent concealment. There must be some affirmative act of the defendant calculated to obscure the existence of the cause of action. Much v. Sturm, Ruger & Co., Inc., 502 F. Supp. 743, 37 St. Rep. 2116 (D.C. Mont. 1980).

Bankruptcy Petitioner — Limitation Not Tolled: The Statute of Limitations does not toll for the bankrupt during a bankruptcy action. Under 11 U.S.C. 361, nothing prevents or stays the bankrupt from filing claims against other parties. Thus, the District Court did not err in dismissing a libel action brought after bankruptcy for an event occurring prior to bankruptcy but which was filed after the Statute of Limitations had run. A Statute of Limitations is tolled, under 11 U.S.C. 108, until 2 years after adjudication of bankruptcy for a trustee in bankruptcy, but there is no tolling provision for the debtor. Engine Rebuilders, Inc. v. Seven Seas Import-Export & Merc., Inc., 189 M 236, 615 P2d 871, 37 St. Rep. 1406 (1980).

27-2-401. When person entitled to bring action is under a disability.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendment: Chapter 490 in (1), near middle after "minor or", substituted "has been committed pursuant to 53-21-127" for "seriously mentally ill" and at end substituted "commitment" for "serious mental illness"; in (2), near end, substituted "commenced in a timely manner" for "seasonably commenced"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Saving Clause: Section 40, Ch. 490, L. 1997, was a saving clause.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 46 in (1), in first sentence after "minor", inserted "or" and after "mentally ill" deleted "or imprisoned on a criminal charge or under a sentence for a term less than for life" and at end of second sentence, after "disability", substituted "of serious mental illness" for "except minority"; in (4), after "When", substituted "both disabilities referred to in subsection (1)" for "two or more disabilities" and near end, after "until", substituted "both" for "all"; and made minor changes in style.

Applicability — Retroactive Effect: Section 2, Ch. 46, L. 1995, provided: "[Section 1] [amending 27-2-401] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, as provided in this section. If a cause of action accrued before [the effective date of this act] [effective October 1, 1995] to a person incarcerated on a criminal charge or under a sentence for a term less than life, the person must bring an action by the earlier of the following dates:

(1) the last day on which the action could have been brought under 27-2-401 as that section read prior to [the effective date of this act] [effective October 1, 1995]; or

(2) the last day on which an action can be brought under 27-2-401, as amended by [section 1] [amending 27-2-401], for a cause of action that accrued on [the effective date of this act] [effective October 1, 1995].”

1987 Amendment: At end of (1), after “minority”, deleted “or, in any case, more than 1 year after the disability ceases”; at end of (2) substituted “personal representative” for “executor or administrator”; and made minor changes in phraseology.

Case Notes

Minority Tolling Inapplicable to Survival Claim: A minor was injured in an ATV accident and died the next day. The father sued the doctor for wrongful death and survival medical malpractice. The District Court held that minority tolling did not apply to the action and the father appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. A survival action belongs to a decedent’s estate, and only the estate’s personal representative may bring the survival action. In the case of a minor, only the adult personal representative of the estate may bring a survival medical malpractice claim regarding injuries the deceased allegedly sustained as a minor, regardless of whether the action involves injury to a minor younger or older than 4 years of age. Minority tolling does not apply to the time after a child’s death when, as here, the father and not the child was the person entitled to bring the survival action. In this case, the minor died the day after the doctor first became involved in the minor’s care, so minority tolling extended the limitations period by no more than 1 day. Thus, the District Court properly held that minority tolling did not apply to the survival action or to the wrongful death action against the doctor. Runstrom v. Allen, 2008 MT 281, 345 M 314, 191 P3d 410 (2008), following In re Estate of Lambert, 2006 MT 229, 333 M 444, 143 P3d 426 (2006), and distinguishing Payne v. District Court, 2002 MT 313, 313 M 118, 60 P3d 469 (2002).

Extraordinary Circumstances Constituting Good Cause to Permit Withdrawal of Guilty Pleas: In 1982, Mallak entered the United States from Iraq as a refugee. In 1989, Mallak entered guilty pleas to two felony counts of sale of dangerous drugs (now criminal distribution of dangerous drugs); however, the record of the proceedings was destroyed. Mallak served a 5-year suspended sentence, and 5 years later applied for U.S. citizenship. When federal immigration officials discovered the drug conviction, deportation proceedings were instituted against Mallak, who resisted deportation by filing for asylum and by filing a petition for postconviction relief requesting that he be allowed to withdraw his guilty pleas. Without a hearing, the District Court denied Mallak’s petition on grounds that it was time-barred, and Mallak appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. There is no bright-line rule on the timeliness of a motion to withdraw a guilty plea, and each case must be considered in light of its unique record. Rather, under 46-16-105, a guilty plea may be withdrawn at any time for good cause. In St. v. Koepplin, 213 M 55, 689 P2d 921 (1984), the Supreme Court set out the factors to be considered when determining whether good cause exists to withdraw a guilty plea: (1) the adequacy of the District Court’s interrogation as to the defendant’s understanding of the plea; (2) the promptness of the motion to withdraw the prior plea; and (3) whether the defendant’s plea was apparently the result of a plea bargain in which the guilty plea was given in exchange for dismissal of another charge. The circumstances in Mallak’s case were extraordinary, including his documented mental incapacity, his unfamiliarity with the English language at the time of the change of plea, and the absence of a record of the plea proceedings, all of which raised serious doubts about the voluntariness of Mallak’s guilty pleas. Further, it was not until 1991 that the Legislature passed 46-12-210 requiring that foreign defendants be told during plea proceedings that a guilty plea could result in deportation. Given the unique combination of factors, the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court abused its discretion in denying Mallak’s petition for leave to withdraw his guilty pleas, so the case was remanded to allow Mallak to withdraw his prior pleas. Mallak v. St., 2002 MT 35, 308 M 314, 42 P3d 794 (2002).

Postconviction Relief Barred by Statute of Limitations — Inapplicability of Civil Tolling Provisions in Postconviction Proceeding: Placzekiewicz pleaded guilty in 1992 to felony arson and was sentenced to 20 years in prison with 15 suspended. Following release to begin serving the suspended sentence, Placzekiewicz had four revocation hearings for various probation violations, until the remaining term was 10 years with no time suspended. Placzekiewicz later requested to file a petition for postconviction relief to challenge the original sentence, but the request was denied as time-barred. Placzekiewicz appealed, contending that the statute of limitations should be tolled pursuant to this section to include months of incarceration, plus the 5-year limitations period in 46-21-102 (reduced to 1 year in 1997). The Supreme Court noted that the statutory time bar may be waived when there is a clear miscarriage of justice and the petitioner provides newly discovered evidence that demonstrates actual innocence, but Placzekiewicz failed to satisfy the exception. Placzekiewicz’s argument that the civil tolling provisions in this section should apply also failed because that section does not apply to postconviction proceedings, despite the fact that such proceedings are civil in nature. Rather, the Legislature has provided a specific statute of limitations in 46-21-102 for postconviction proceedings, and that specific provision controls over other statutes of limitations. The District Court's ruling that the petition was time-barred was affirmed. St. v. Placzekiewicz, 2001 MT 254, 307 M 189, 36 P3d 934 (2001).

Statute of Limitations on Tort Claim Against Decedent's Estate: Campbell brought a claim against Allen's estate in connection with injuries allegedly sustained while a prisoner in the state prison, alleging that the injuries occurred as a result of negligent supervision by Allen, who was a prison guard at the time of injury. The ordinary statute of limitations on Campbell's tort claim would be 3 years under 27-2-204; however, because no action was commenced during that time, the claim would be barred. This section would normally extend the limit to 5 years because Campbell was imprisoned. However, 72-3-801 requires that a claim against a decedent's estate must be filed within 4 months from the date of the first publication of notice to creditors, which constitutes a special statute of limitations as to decedents, and there is no extension provided by law even for persons who are incarcerated or are otherwise under a statutory disability. Therefore, the District Court properly held that Campbell's claim was time-barred under 72-3-801 even if the general tort claim statute of limitations under Title 27, ch. 2, part 2, had not run. In re Estate of Allen, 255 M 469, 843 P2d 781, 49 St. Rep. 1071 (1992).

Applicable Statutes of Limitations Not Affected by Statute of Repose Applicable to Real Property Improvements: The plaintiffs, a condominium owners' association and its individual members, sued Big Sky of Montana Realty, Inc., the successor in interest of Big Sky of Montana, Inc., for breach of warranty, strict liability, negligence, fraud, and deceptive practices in connection with a fire in the Deer Lodge Condominiums at Big Sky. The defendants claimed that the actions were barred by the statute of limitations applicable to each individual cause of action. Plaintiffs claimed that the applicable statute of limitations in 27-2-208 allows a 10-year period following completion of real property improvements in which to bring an action. The Supreme Court held that 27-2-208 was a statute of repose and should be interpreted not to extend the statute of limitations otherwise applicable to a cause of action. The statute only provides that if the time for bringing an action was otherwise extended by law under 27-2-409 or this section, the extension could be for no longer than 10 years after completion of the improvement. The District Court therefore properly held that the action was barred by the statutes of limitations. Ass'n of Unit Owners of Deer Lodge Condominium v. Big Sky of Mont., Inc., 245 M 64, 798 P2d 1018, 47 St. Rep. 1814 (1990), followed in Carl v. Chilcote, 255 M 526, 844 P2d 79, 49 St. Rep. 1109 (1992).

Issue of Material Facts as to Plaintiff's Mental Illness — Tolling of Statute of Limitations: Nearly 8 years after the plaintiff was discharged from his employment, his guardian ad litem filed a complaint against his former employer alleging wrongful discharge and claiming that the 3-year statute of limitation was tolled due to the plaintiff's mental illness. Upon the employer's motion for summary judgment, the trial court dismissed the complaint as untimely filed. In response to the employer's contention that the plaintiff's pursuit of other benefit claims demonstrates an absence of mental illness, the Supreme Court held that that is an issue to be decided at trial, not on a motion for summary judgment, because it is not an issue that is susceptible to resolution based on written affidavits without the benefit of cross-examination in court. Therefore, the matter was remanded because there is a material issue of fact concerning the plaintiff's mental condition that precludes summary judgment. Bestwina v. Village Bank, 235 M 329, 767 P2d 338, 46 St. Rep. 27 (1989).

One-Year Extension Allowed For Attainment of Majority: Plaintiff whose ordinary period of limitations would have run completely and expired while under the disability of minority was allowed an additional 1-year period beyond attainment of the age of majority in which to file a claim. (Decision based on statute prior to 1987 amendment.) Livingstone v. Livingstone, 232 M 446, 756 P2d 1172, 45 St. Rep. 1184 (1988).

Period of Repose Different in Each Subsection: Appellant was a minor and was seriously mentally ill at time of alleged tortious conduct against her. She continues to be seriously mentally ill. The District Court construed subsection (1) of this section as providing for a maximum repose of the statute of limitations (27-2-204) of 5 years, and it found subsection (4) of this section, which purports to provide repose until all disabilities are removed, to be inconsistent and ineffective. The Supreme Court held that the 5-year period of repose applies only to plaintiffs with a single disability under subsection (1) and that subsection (4) is effective and provides a different period for plaintiffs suffering from multiple disabilities. Murphy v. St., 229 M 342, 748 P2d 907, 44 St. Rep. 2030 (1987). On remand, the state was granted partial summary judgment on the grounds that sovereign immunity barred recovery for any state actions before July 1, 1973. Murphy v. St., 248 M 82, 809 P2d 16, 48 St. Rep. 335 (1991).

Minors — Tolled Period: Petitioner was injured by an accidental discharge from an allegedly defective revolver designed and manufactured by respondent. At the time of the injury, petitioner was 15 years 2 months of age and about 2 years 10 months under the age of majority. He filed suit 2 years 3 months after attaining majority, and the applicable Statute of Limitations provided for a 3-year period within which to bring an action. This section's provision that if a person entitled to bring an action is a minor at the time the cause of action accrues, the time of such disability is not a part of the time limit for commencing the action means that petitioner had the full 3-year limitation period in which to file suit after attaining majority. The intent of this section is to preserve rights of action that accrue during a disability. The law favors a right of action over a right of limitation, and a statute which tolls a Statute of Limitation will be liberally construed in order to accomplish that purpose. Smith v. Sturm, Ruger & Co., Inc., 198 M 47, 643 P2d 576, 39 St. Rep. 756 (1982).

Statute of Limitations Tolled for Minor Plaintiff: Where appellants brought suit against the respondent to establish paternity and for financial support, the District Court improperly held that 40-6-108(3) revived a claim previously barred by a Statute of Limitations. The claim of the appellants was never barred, as any Statute of Limitations was tolled during the time that the plaintiff child was a minor. Sutherland v. Hurin, 185 M 544, 605 P2d 1133 (1980).

Insanity Tolling Statute: Where plaintiff was insane for approximately 5 months following personal injuries, statute did not begin to run until he recovered his sanity and action was timely filed when commenced within statutory period after that date. State ex rel. Hi-Ball Contractors, Inc. v. District Court, 154 M 99, 460 P2d 751 (1969).

27-2-402. When defendant is out of state.

Compiler's Comments

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

1987 Amendment: In two places, after "state", inserted "and cannot be served with process" and made minor changes in phraseology.

Case Notes

Defendant Out of State But Subject to Montana Jurisdiction — Statute of Limitations Applicable: Plaintiff filed a malpractice action. Summary judgment was granted to defendant physician because the action was barred by the 3-year statute of limitations. Plaintiff appealed on grounds that the statute of limitations should have been tolled because the physician was absent from Montana and thus prevented from being served with a summons and complaint. The Supreme Court held that the power to toll the statute of limitations in 27-2-402 arises only when a defendant remains out of state and cannot be served with process. In this case the alleged malpractice occurred in Montana, and although the physician was out of state, the physician remained at all times subject to the jurisdiction of Montana courts and was therefore amenable to service of process. Thus, the statute of limitations was not tolled and the action was properly dismissed for failure to file the action within 3 years of the alleged malpractice. Cobb v. Saltiel, 2009 MT 171, 350 M 501, 210 P3d 138 (2009).

Plaintiff Out-of-State — No Authority for Argument That Statute of Limitations Be Tolled by Delay Caused by Defendant: Plaintiff sought to apply a reverse rationale of this section in arguing that the statute of limitations be tolled for the time he was absent from the state while recovering from injuries caused by defendant's assault. He asserted that defendant should not be allowed to take advantage of the delay in filing charges when, in fact, defendant caused the delay. The Supreme Court found insufficient evidence that defendant affirmatively induced the delay and held that there was no authority supporting plaintiff's argument. Weston v. Cole, 233 M 61, 758 P2d 289, 45 St. Rep. 1292 (1988).

Known Out-of-State Address — No Tolling: When persons involved in a tort, who were residents of the state at its occurrence, subsequently moved to another state and plaintiff insurance company was aware of their address, the Statute of Limitations didn't toll due to absence from the state under this section because Montana District Courts had jurisdiction under former Rule 4B(1), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and process could be served under the long-arm statute, former Rule 4D(3), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Beedie v. Shelley, 187 M 556, 610 P2d 713 (1980).

Subject to Process: Harmer sued Antimony for attorney fees, and Antimony counterclaimed, sounding in fraud. The court concluded that Antimony knew of Harmer's relationship with Resources (a corporation contracting with Antimony), and therefore the counterclaim is barred by the 2-year Statute of Limitations, 27-2-203. Harmer's contacts with Montana were such as to subject him to the reach of former Rule 4B, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and therefore the Statute of Limitations is not tolled by 27-2-402. Harmer v. Lawrence, 37 St. Rep. 1333 (D.C. Mont. 1980) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Service Possible: Absence of alleged tortfeasor from state did not toll Statute of Limitations where it was possible to obtain service during the entire 3-year period, under Rule 4D(2)(a) initially and under Rule 4D(3) after he left the state. State ex rel. McGhee v. District Court, 162 M 31, 508 P2d 130 (1973).

Corporate Charter Suspended: This section does not toll the running of a Statute of Limitations in an action against a foreign corporation whose charter was suspended for nonpayment of taxes, since the plaintiff could have made service of process on such corporation through the Secretary of State in accordance with section 93-3007, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), and a personal judgment could have been entered on such service. Mont. Valley Land Co. v. Bestul, 126 M 426, 253 P2d 325 (1953).

Sufficiency of Evidence: Evidence did not sustain the contention that the running of the Statute of Limitations had been tolled, under this section, by reason of the absence from the state of the party pleading it. Cook v. MacGinniss, 72 M 280, 233 P 129 (1925).

Intermittent Absence From State: Under this section, where defendant in an action on a promissory note is out of the state at the time the cause of action accrued, the bar of the Statute of Limitations does not commence to run until after his return, and if he thereafter intermittently leaves and returns to the jurisdiction, the time of his absence must be deducted from the limitation of 8 years fixed by 27-2-202, in order to determine whether the full period has expired, i.e., defendant's presence in the state must aggregate the full statutory period to constitute a bar. Stoudt v. Hanson, 62 M 422, 205 P 253 (1922), distinguished in Bahn v. Estate of Fritz, 92 M 84, 10 P2d 1061 (1932).

Decedents' Estates:

This section applies to a cause of action against an executor or administrator. Smith v. Smith, 224 F 1 (9th Cir. 1915).

The legislative intent with respect to the Statute of Limitations is to suspend the Statute, whenever the absence of a party defendant from the state prevents the effective prosecution of a cause of action; hence, absence from the state of a debtor's personal representative, after the death of the debtor, suspends the running of limitations. Smith v. Smith, 210 F 947 (D.C. Mont. 1914).

Strict Construction Avoided: This section is not to be strictly construed so as to prevent the effective prosecution of a cause of action. Smith v. Smith, 210 F 947 (D.C. Mont. 1914).

27-2-403. Actions involving aliens in time of war.

Case Notes

Defense by Aliens: While an enemy alien or ally of such enemy who is a nonresident of this country may not, under the Trading With the Enemy Act (50 U.S.C. Appendix, section 1, et seq.), institute any action in the United States after commencement of war with his country and an action by him is subject to suspension for the duration except possibly for interlocutory relief to maintain the status quo, both the law of nations and the act seem to give to him his day in court whenever he is brought within its jurisdiction for purposes of defense, and not even an "executive order" can deprive him of such right without further legislation. State ex rel. Biering v. District Court, 115 M 174, 140 P2d 583 (1943).

Resident Aliens: The rule that an enemy alien may not prosecute an action in the courts of this country does not apply to an alien enemy residing in this country. State ex rel. Gaspar v. District Court, 113 M 318, 124 P2d 1010 (1942).

1995 Amendment: Chapter 592 deleted (2) that read: "(2) If a person against whom an action may be brought dies before the expiration of the time limited for the commencement thereof and the cause of action survives, an action may be commenced against his representatives after the expiration of that time and within 1 year after the issuing of letters testamentary or of administration. If a person against whom a cause of action exists dies without the state, the time which elapses between his death and the expiration of 1 year after the issuing within the state of letters testamentary or letters of administration is not a part of the time limited for the commencement of an action therefor against his executor or administrator"; and made minor changes in style.

Case Notes

Death of Defendant:

Where accident, in which defendant was driving, occurred November 26, 1941, and defendant died within 3 years thereof and letters of administration for his estate were issued December 13, 1944, and an action for tort against the defendant was instituted December 11, 1945, within 1 year after the issuing of letters testamentary, the action was timely under this section. (See 1995 amendment.) Kujich v. Lillie, 127 M 125, 260 P2d 383 (1953).

The Statute of Limitations does not cease to run on account of the death of the judgment debtor, except that the time between his death and the granting of letters of administration is not to be counted as part of the time within which an action on a judgment must be commenced. (See 1995 amendment.) Whiteside v. Catching, 19 M 394, 48 P 747 (1897).

Case Notes

Injunction Told FELA Statute of Limitations on Asbestos Claim Against Railway: The Bankruptcy Court's order enjoining claims against W.R. Grace and other affiliated entities, including the defendant railway company, tolled the statute of limitations on the plaintiff employee's claim. The plaintiff's asbestos-related disease claim accrued in October 2007. While his claim was still well within the Federal Employers' Liability Act's (FELA's) 3-year statute of limitations under 45 U.S.C. 56, the Bankruptcy Court issued its April 22, 2008, order expanding the injunction to include the defendant as a nondebtor affiliate. This injunction, as modified by the Bankruptcy Court's January 22, 2002, order, barred the commencement of new actions against affiliates. Effective upon the issuance of the Bankruptcy Court's April 22, 2008, order, therefore, the plaintiff was barred from commencing his asbestos-related disease action against the defendant. The Bankruptcy Court's injunction was lifted on February 3, 2014, at which time the plaintiff's statute of limitations resumed running. The plaintiff amended his complaint to include the defendant on November 28, 2014. Approximately 6 months passed between October 22, 2007, when the plaintiff's claim against the defendant accrued, and April 11, 2008, when the Bankruptcy Court's injunction was expanded to include the defendant. Approximately 10 months passed between February 3, 2014, when the Bankruptcy Court's injunction was lifted, and November 28, 2014, when the plaintiff amended his complaint to include the defendant. After excluding the time that the plaintiff was enjoined from commencing an action against the defendant, he amended his complaint to include a claim against the defendant approximately 16 months after his claim accrued, which was well within the FELA's 3-year statute of limitations. Watson v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2017 MT 279, 389 Mont. 292, 405 P.3d 634.

Supersedeas Pending Appeal: Where action to renew a judgment was commenced more than 10 years after its entry, the Statute of Limitations was not tolled by this section because appeals from the judgment had been taken to the Supreme Court of the state and of the United States and supersedeas bonds had been filed on both appeals, since neither the appeals nor the supersedeas precluded an action upon the judgment for its renewal but merely prevented levy of execution thereon. St. v. Hart Refineries, 109 M 140, 92 P2d 766, 123 ALR 555 (1939).

Case Notes

Vexatious Litigant — Dismissal of Complaint Proper Because of Res Judicata and Statute of Limitations: The defendant was originally convicted of aggravated kidnapping and sexual intercourse without consent. This case involved the admission of a taped conversation between the defendant and the victim. His conviction was affirmed in St. v. Belanus, 2010 MT 204, 357 Mont. 463, 240 P.3d 1021. The defendant subsequently sued various people involved in the case, including but not limited to the victim, attorneys, judge, and law enforcement officers. He appealed the majority of these cases, without success, to the Montana Supreme Court, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, and the United States Supreme Court. More than 4 years after his trial, the defendant then sued in District Court. His allegations stemmed from the underlying criminal case and use of the audio recording. The District Court granted summary judgment for several defendants because the complaint was barred by the statute of limitations and res judicata applied. Additionally, the District Court declared the defendant a vexatious litigant. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, finding that the complaint was time barred by the statute of limitations, that res judicata applied to some of the defendants because the claim was similar to his previous lawsuits, and that the District Court had properly found him a vexatious litigant. Belanus v. Potter, 2017 MT 95, 387 Mont. 298, 394 P.3d 906.

Saving Statute Inapplicable — Claim Preclusion Prohibits Pursuit of Common-Law Bad Faith Insurance Claim in State Court After Dismissal in Federal Court: After the original action was dismissed for insufficient pleading in federal court, the plaintiff filed a declaratory judgment action to pursue a common-law bad faith claim against the defendant insurance company. The federal District Court's judgment for inadequate pleading, however, is a final judgment on the merits for purposes of claim preclusion when leave to amend was available and was not requested or was requested but properly denied by the court. Brilz v. Metropolitan Gen. Ins. Co., 2012 MT 184, 366 Mont. 78, 285 P.3d 494, followed in Estate of Kinnaman v. Mtn. W. Bank, 2016 MT 25, 382 Mont. 153, 365 P.3d 486.

Savings Statute Inapplicable to State Action Brought More Than Three Years After Acts Occurred: Following Hawkes' prison term in Montana, he was transferred to Nebraska to serve an additional prison term. Prior to transfer, Hawkes requested that some of his personal belongings be sent to his mother. Hawkes was notified in June 2003 that the items had been destroyed rather than sent to his mother. Hawkes filed a state claim for loss of the property in 2004. In 2006 Hawkes filed an action in federal court based on the same facts alleged in the state court action. The federal court dismissed the action with prejudice for failure to state a claim for which relief could be granted because Hawkes had not alleged the absence of an adequate postdeprivation remedy under state law. Hawkes then filed another state action in 2007 alleging the same facts and claims that were asserted in the first state claim and the federal claim. The District Court dismissed the second state action because more than 3 years had elapsed since the alleged acts occurred, and Hawkes appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The statute of limitations for general and personal injury tort actions is 3 years. An action to recover damages for injury to personal property must be filed within 2 years. Hawkes argued that the District Court erred in dismissing the second state claim because the federal action tolled the statute of limitations by virtue of 27-2-407. However, 27-2-407 denies any extension of time for actions that are voluntarily dismissed or upon which a court renders a final judgment on the merits. The federal court dismissed the entire complaint with prejudice, which constituted a final judgment on the merits, and any claims not presented to the federal court would not be subject to the time extension in 27-2-407. Therefore, neither the first state action nor the federal action qualified for application of 27-2-407, and the District Court properly dismissed the second state action as untimely. Hawkes v. Dept. of Corrections, 2008 MT 446, 348 M 7, 199 P.3d 260 (2008).

Saving Statute Inapplicable to Complaint Filed Against Party Not Originally Named in Complaint: On January 8, 1992, Williams filed a charge with the Human Rights Commission (HRC) of racial discrimination in employment against Zortman Mining, Inc. (Zortman), a wholly owned subsidiary of Pegasus Gold Corporation (Pegasus). At Zortman's request, a right-to-sue letter was issued by the HRC. On June 18, 1993, Williams filed a complaint against Pegasus in federal court, but that complaint was dismissed on November 3, 1993, because Williams had not exhausted his administrative remedies. The federal court noted that Williams was attempting to manipulate the diversity jurisdiction of the federal court by naming the foreign parent corporation, Pegasus, but not the Montana subsidiary, Zortman. Naming Zortman as a party would have defeated diversity jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. 1332. On November 9, 1993, after the 90-day period to file following issuance of a right-to-sue letter, Williams filed a complaint in state District Court naming Zortman as the only defendant. Williams asserted that the federal filing satisfied 49-2-509(2) (now repealed) and that this section, which is the saving statute, gave him 1 year to refile his complaint following dismissal in federal court. However, Zortman was not named in the federal action. Because the federal action was against a different party, this section did not apply. The saving statute applies only when the new complaint and the original complaint are substantially for the same cause of action, including identity of the parties. The statute of limitations in 49-2-509 (now repealed) operated to bar Williams' claim against Zortman.

because Zortman was not a party to the first suit. As set out in Tietjen v. Heberlein, 54 M 486, 171 P 928 (1918), this section applies in cases in which an action has been commenced and, without plaintiff's fault, there is a failure to reach a determination of the merits and the statute of limitations runs during the pendency of the action. Williams v. Zortman Min., Inc., 275 M 510, 914 P2d 971, 53 St. Rep. 289 (1996), following Turner v. Aldor Co. of Nashville, Inc., 827 SW 2d 318 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1991).

Tolling of Statute of Limitations by Second Action Filed Before Dismissal of First Action — Refiled First Action Allowed if Second Action Still Pending: If a first action tolls a statute of limitations and a second (allowable) action is filed before a different forum before the first action is dismissed, the second action continues to toll the statute of limitations. If the first action is then refiled while the second action is pending, it is filed while the statute is tolled and is not barred by the statute of limitations. Webb v. T.D., 275 M 243, 912 P2d 202, 53 St. Rep. 117 (1996).

Tolling of Statute of Repose by Chiropractic Legal Panel Proceeding Filed Before Dismissal of Court Action — Filing of Second Court Action After Panel Decision Not Barred: A medical malpractice complaint filed in District Court on April 16, 1992, tolled the statute of repose pursuant to 27-2-205. On August 2, 1993, an application was timely filed with the Montana Chiropractic Legal Panel. Voluntary dismissal of the District Court complaint without prejudice on August 3, 1993, did not nullify the complaint's tolling of the statute of limitations because under 27-12-701, the filing of the Panel application also tolled the statute. The Montana Chiropractic Legal Panel Act continued to toll the statute while the application under it was pending, and because the second District Court complaint was timely filed under the Act within 30 days after the Panel's decision, the second complaint was not barred by the statute of repose. Webb v. T.D., 275 M 243, 912 P2d 202, 53 St. Rep. 117 (1996).

Statute of Limitations Tolled by Renewal Statute for One Year After Appeal: Hollister was dismissed from her job with the Rosebud County Attorney's Office in 1991 and filed a complaint in federal court the same year, alleging federal and state claims. In 1992, the United States District Court dismissed the complaint and Hollister appealed to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. In 1994, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed, and in the same year, Hollister filed a complaint in Rosebud County District Court. The Rosebud County District Court dismissed, holding that the claims were barred by the 1-year statute of limitations under 39-2-911 and by the 3-year statute of limitations under 27-2-204. Citing Glass v. Basin & Bay St. Min. Co., 34 M 88, 85 P 746 (1906), the Supreme Court held that the word "terminated" in this section includes ultimate termination after final appellate action. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that Hollister's complaint was timely filed. Hollister v. Forsythe, 270 M 91, 889 P2d 1205, 52 St. Rep. 90 (1995).

Suit Dismissed for Failure to Follow Tort Claims Procedures — Refiling Permitted: The events upon which the plaintiff based his tort claim against the state occurred prior to the effective date of 2-9-301, which created new claim filing procedures. The plaintiff filed his claim directly in District Court after the new law became effective. The Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal of the claim on the basis that the statute applied retroactively because it was merely procedural and did not impair substantive rights. The court did point out that the plaintiff could file again under this section. Buettner v. St., 240 M 389, 784 P2d 906, 46 St. Rep. 2220 (1989).

Action Filed in Another State — Saving Statute Inapplicable: An action was filed in Utah but dismissed because it was barred by the Statute of Limitations. The action was then filed in Montana. If the original action had been filed in Montana, it would have been within Montana's Statute of Limitations but it was barred at the time it was filed in Montana. Montana's saving statute does not apply to an action which was originally filed in another state. Allen v. Greyhound Lines, Inc., 476 F. Supp. 244 (D.C. Mont. 1979).

New Action for the Same Cause: An untimely cause of action for intentional assault instituted in federal court was not "renewed" by this section to prevent the running of the Statute of Limitations against a subsequent action in state court for negligent conduct based on the same fact situation. Cassidy v. Finley, 173 M 475, 568 P2d 142 (1977).

Dismissal for Failure to File Amended Complaint: When plaintiff's complaint was dismissed for failure to file an amended complaint pursuant to an order of the court, that failure to do some act which would save a case from a dismissal is either a voluntary dismissal or a dismissal for failure to prosecute within the meaning of this section. Lehtonen v. E. I. DuPont DeNemours & Co., 389 F. Supp. 633 (D.C. Mont. 1975).

Neglect to Prosecute: Dismissal under former Rule 41(e), M.R.Civ.P. (replaced with former Rule 4E, M.R.Civ.P., now superseded), for failure to have summons issued within 1 year after commencement of the action is a dismissal for neglect to prosecute within the meaning of this section, and this section does not operate to permit the commencement of a new action after expiration of the Statute of Limitations. State ex rel. Equity Supply Co. v. District Court, 159 M 34, 494 P2d 911 (1972).

Dismissal of Counterclaim: Quiet title action based on husband's fraud of wife's community property instituted as counterclaim and timely brought under Statute of Limitations but dismissed on husband's motion may be properly instituted as principal action within 1 year after involuntary dismissal. Rozan v. Rosen, 150 M 121, 431 P2d 870 (1967).

Special Statutes of Limitations: This section has no application to a cause of action for which a special limitation period is prescribed, i.e., one where the time within which suit must be brought is a condition attached to the right to sue. King v. Mayor, 71 M 309, 230 P 62 (1924).

Burden of Proof: A plaintiff who seeks to avail himself of the benefit of the provisions of this section and bring a new action for the same cause once sued upon by him but which suit was discontinued and against which the Statute of Limitations has run must show affirmatively that the discontinuance of the prior action was not voluntary on his part, the fact that it was dismissed "without prejudice" being without significance. Tietjen v. Heberlein, 54 M 486, 171 P 928 (1918).

Scope of Section: The provision of this section applies to every case wherein there has been a failure to reach a determination of the merits without plaintiff's fault and the period of limitations becomes complete during the pendency of the action. Tietjen v. Heberlein, 54 M 486, 171 P 928 (1918).

Dismissal Without Prejudice: One who within 1 year after an action is dismissed without prejudice commences a new action brings himself within the privilege accorded by this section. Peterson v. Butte, 44 M 129, 120 P 231 (1911).

Nonsuit Judgment: Where an action is dismissed without prejudice and on the same day a new action is brought that results in a judgment of nonsuit on motion of the defendant and within 1 year from such judgment of nonsuit a third action is brought for the same cause, it is within time and a denial of the defendant's motion to dismiss the action on the ground that it is barred by any Statute of Limitations is proper. Wilson v. Norris, 43 M 454, 117 P 100 (1911).

Insufficient Complaint: The language employed in this section may perhaps be construed as a legislative recognition of the principle that an action is commenced by filing what purports to be a complaint, whether it states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action or not. Clark v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 38 M 177, 99 P 298 (1909).

Dismissal on Pleadings: Where, in a suit for money had and received, a judgment of dismissal on the pleadings had been affirmed on appeal, it was terminated by such affirmance in a manner other than those mentioned in this section, and a second suit on the same cause of action, brought within a year after such termination, was not barred. Glass v. Basin & Bay St. Min. Co., 34 M 88, 85 P 746 (1906).

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

1987 Amendment: Substituted (1) and (2) (see 1987 Session Law for text) for former language that read: "Whenever a defendant in an action has interposed an answer in support of which he would be entitled to rely at the trial upon a defense or counterclaim then existing in his favor the remedy upon which, at the time of the commencement of the action, was not barred by any provision of this code and the complaint is dismissed or the action is discontinued or abates because of the plaintiff's death, the time between the commencement and the termination of the action is not a part of the time limited for the commencement of an action by the defendant to recover for the cause of action so interposed as a defense or to interpose the same defense in another action brought by the same plaintiff or a person deriving title from or under him."

Case Notes

Right to Assert Counterclaims Arising Out of Same Transaction as Foreclosure Action: Ranch Recovery Limited Liability Company (Ranch Recovery) was the assignee of the vendor's interest in real property that was subjected to a mortgage foreclosure brought by First Security Bank of Missoula (First Security). Upon the vendee's default, the District Court awarded summary judgment to First Security. Ranch Recovery moved for reconsideration and for permission to amend its counterclaim based on newly discovered evidence. The District Court denied Ranch Recovery's motion for leave to amend its answer. First Security alleged that leave to amend was properly denied because the counterclaims were barred by the applicable statute of limitations. The Supreme Court held that because Ranch Recovery's claims were counterclaims arising out of the same written contract from which First Security asserted its right to foreclose and to priority, Ranch Recovery was entitled to assert those claims notwithstanding any applicable limitation periods. First Sec. Bank of Missoula v. Ranch Recovery Ltd. Liab. Co., 1999 MT 43, 293 M 363, 976 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 188 (1999).

Counterclaims Entered After Judgment Not Barred by Estoppel: A judgment can bar counterclaims in existence at the time the judgment was entered, but it cannot bar claims that arose after its entry. Nimmick v. Hart, 248 M 1, 808 P2d 481, 48 St. Rep. 293 (1991).

27-2-409. Acknowledgment of debt or part payment.

1987 Amendment: Substituted (1) through (3) (see 1987 Session Law for text) for former language that read: "No acknowledgment or promise is evidence of a new or continuing contract sufficient to cause the relevant statute of limitations to begin running anew unless the same is contained in some writing signed by the party to be charged thereby. However, this section does not alter the effect of any payment of principal or interest, which payment is equivalent to a new promise in writing, duly signed, to pay the residue of the debt."

Case Notes

Allegation of Breach Regarding Capital Credits — Statute of Limitations Expired: The plaintiffs were former customers of the defendant, a rural electrical cooperative. The plaintiffs sued the defendant for not refunding capital credits to customers as required under 35-18-316. The District Court granted the defendant summary judgment, holding that the statute of limitations on the plaintiffs' claims had expired. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that none of the claims had been revived by acknowledgment and that the defendant had not fraudulently concealed facts that would have tolled the statute of limitations. Wolfe v. Flathead Elec. Co-op, Inc., 2018 MT 276, 393 Mont. 312, 431 P.3d 327.

Specific State Law on Statute of Limitations for Debts Applies to UCC Promissory Notes: The defendant argued that the language of 27-2-409 providing that partial payments on a debt result in the relevant statute of limitations starting to run anew did not apply to promissory notes created under the provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's ruling that the statute applies to all debts, including those created under the UCC. Hughes v. Hughes, 2013 MT 176, 370 Mont. 499, 305 P.3d 772.

Stipulation Acknowledging Child Support Arrearages — Tolling of Statute of Limitations: Jody and Stephen were divorced in 1979, and Stephen was ordered to pay child support. Jody brought a URESA action in 1982 to collect arrearages, and the parties stipulated to the amount of those arrearages. The District Court entered an order providing that the stipulation was enforceable by contempt. In 1992, Jody moved to enforce the 1982 stipulation and order. Stephen claimed that collection of certain arrearages was barred by the statute of limitations. Citing Marriage of Hooper & Crittendon, 247 M 322, 806 P2d 541 (1991), the Supreme Court held that the 10-year statute of limitations in 27-2-201 applied to each required payment as if it were a separate judgment, and therefore any payment accruing prior to 10 years before the 1992 motion for enforcement was barred. However, citing Dodd v. Simon, 113 M 536, 129 P2d 224 (1942), the Supreme Court also held that the statute of limitations was tolled by the 1982 stipulation acknowledging the unsatisfied judgments existing prior to the stipulation. Therefore, none of the arrearages were barred. In re Marriage of Brown, 263 M 184, 867 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 7 (1994).

Applicable Statutes of Limitations Not Affected by Statute of Repose Applicable to Real Property Improvements: The plaintiffs, a condominium owners' association and its individual members, sued Big Sky of Montana Realty, Inc., the successor in interest of Big Sky of Montana, Inc., for breach of warranty, strict liability, negligence, fraud, and deceptive practices in connection with a fire in the Deer Lodge Condominiums at Big Sky. The defendants claimed that the actions were barred by the statute of limitations applicable to each individual cause of action. Plaintiffs claimed that the applicable statute of limitations in 27-2-208 allows a 10-year period following completion of real property improvements in which to bring an action. The Supreme Court held that 27-2-208 was a statute of repose and should be interpreted not to extend the statute of limitations otherwise applicable to a cause of action. The statute only provides that if the time for bringing an action was otherwise extended by law under 27-2-401 or this section, the extension could be for no longer than 10 years after completion of the improvement. The District Court therefore properly held that the action was barred by the statutes of limitations. Ass'n of Unit Owners of Deer Lodge Condominium v. Big Sky of Mont., Inc., 245 M 64, 798 P2d 1018, 47 St. Rep. 1814 (1990), followed in Carl v. Chilcote, 255 M 526, 844 P2d 79, 49 St. Rep. 1109 (1992).

Involuntary Payment Not Acknowledgment of Debt — Suspending Statute of Limitations: In 1965, loans made by Worden Trading Company to defendant Trenka were consolidated into two promissory notes. In addition, two other loans were made by means of promissory notes. No payments were made on the notes. In 1970, Trenka attempted to remove some items from his safe deposit box in Farmers State Bank but was prevented from doing so by Richard Hansen, president of the bank and of the Worden Trading Company. Hansen would not release the contents of the box until payment was made on the notes. Trenka's girlfriend wrote two checks to Worden Trading Company in order to obtain the contents of the box. Hansen claimed that he was substituting one form of collateral for another and that the payments were an acknowledgment of the debts. To be a valid acknowledgment of a debt and suspend the running of the Statute of Limitations, payments must be voluntary. The payments here were involuntary because neither Hansen nor Worden Trading Company had a valid security interest in the safe deposit box and the Statute of Limitations ran. Worden Trading Co. v. Trenka, 184 M 256, 602 P2d 601 (1979).

Partial Payment:

Where plaintiff rented building from defendant with understanding that rent was to be applied on several notes made by defendant which plaintiff held, in absence of specific directions by defendant as to application of rent to the various notes, plaintiff could apply rent as he saw fit to interrupt running of Statute of Limitations as to all of the notes. Mercer v. Mercer, 120 M 132, 180 P2d 248 (1947).

The rendering of service, transfer of property or goods, or assumption of obligations taken as part payment of principal or interest is sufficient to toll Statute of Limitations on note. Mercer v. Mercer, 120 M 132, 180 P2d 248 (1947).

In order for payment of principal or interest due on note to toll Statute of Limitations, it must be voluntary and the indebtedness clearly identified so as to warrant inference that debtor had acknowledged existence of liability in his obligation to pay remainder of debt. Mercer v. Mercer, 120 M 132, 180 P2d 248 (1947).

A payment of principal or interest extends time for commencement of action on note from date of last payment. Mercer v. Mercer, 120 M 132, 180 P2d 248 (1947).

Where plaintiff relies on a payment to toll the running of the Statute of Limitations in an action on a promissory note, the mere endorsement of a payment on the instrument by the holder or his agent does not raise a presumption that such payment was made by the makers or either of them; plaintiff to make out a prima facie case must show actual payment made by or for the makers with their knowledge and consent. Nathan v. Jenkins, 113 M 46, 123 P2d 975 (1942).

Partial payment by a joint maker of a note, without the assent or ratification of his comaker, does not suspend the operation of the statute as to the comakers. Nathan v. Jenkins, 113 M 46, 123 P2d 975 (1942); Oleson v. Wilson, 20 M 544, 52 P 372 (1898); First Nat'l Bank v. Bullard, 20 M 118, 49 P 658 (1897).

Part payment renews a note. Parchen v. Chessman, 49 M 326, 142 P 631 (1914).

One joint debtor cannot, by making part payments, suspend the running of the statute as to his joint obligors who do not authorize or ratify his act. Monidah Trust v. Kemper, 44 M 1, 118 P 811 (1911).

Agent Signing Writing: It is not necessary that the party to be charged sign writing himself to take case out of the Statute of Limitations; signing may be done by a duly authorized agent under 28-10-105; in the instant case, man's wife was held implied agent and signed letter which tolled Statute. Breese v. O'Brien, 102 M 547, 59 P2d 65 (1936).

Promise in Writing:

Letters written by a mortgagor 9 and 10 years after maturity of promissory notes secured thereby, in effect stating that the debtor was negotiating for money to make settlement as promised, that he was going to pay and that the mortgagee would be the first to receive his money, and again that he expected to be in a position to make settlement the following summer, were a sufficient acknowledgment or a new promise to interrupt the running of the bar of the Statute of Limitations. Leffek v. Luedeman, 95 M 457, 27 P2d 511, 91 ALR 286 (1933).

Letters referring to and acknowledging an entire indebtedness, with a promise to pay, will take the debt out of the Statute of Limitations. Galvin v. O'Gorman, 40 M 391, 106 P 887 (1910).

Statement of Account: Where, at the time an account was stated, the Statute of Limitations had not intervened against the items contained in the original account, the statement created a new cause of action against which the Statute commenced to run only from the date of its rendition. O'Hanlon Co. v. Jess, 58 M 415, 193 P 65, 14 ALR 237 (1920).

Part 5 Conflict of Laws

Part Commission Notes

Commissioners' Prefatory Note

Traditionally, statutes of limitations have been characterized as "procedural" laws, for conflict of laws purposes, so that the limitation periods prescribed by the forum state's laws were applied. This result was reached despite its substantive effect of determining which party won the lawsuit. Forum shopping by delay-prone plaintiffs, or by their attorneys, with suits filed in states with long limitation periods, inevitably occurred.

One consequence was that the courts developed some rather inexact "exceptions" to the "general rule." These included one that treated as "substantive" any limitation period that was "built into" the very statute, such as a wrongful death act, that created the cause of action sued on; another called the "specificity test" that treated a limitations statute as "substantive" if it was directed specifically to the sort of claim sued on; and possibly others less commonly employed. See Grossman, Statutes of Limitations and the Conflict of Laws: Modern Analysis, 1980 Ariz. St. L.J. 1.

Another consequence was that about three-fourths of the state enacted so-called "borrowing statutes" which followed no regular pattern but required application of a limitation period other than the forum state's if some stated aspect of the cause of action occurred in or was connected with another state. These borrowing statutes are often difficult to interpret and apply. They have been the source of considerable judicial confusion.

In 1957 the Conference promulgated a Uniform Statute of Limitations on Foreign Claims Act which was designed to replace these variant borrowing acts. It achieved no general adoption, and was officially withdrawn in 1978. The major difficulty with it was its abrupt harshness. It cut all sorts of Gordian knots by providing simply that the governing law, as between that of the forum and of the state "where the claim accrued," should be the one that prescribed the shorter period—"whichever bars the claim." That turned out to be not acceptable. The present committee was set up to draft a different "limitations borrowing statute." The consensus was that limitations laws should be deemed substantive in character, like other laws that affect the existence of the cause of action asserted.

Commission Notes

Under the definition of "state," the United States, though included in similar definitions in other uniform acts, is not included here because federal law will control federal limitations problems.

Under the definition of "State," claims based upon the law of governmental units within a State are included within the coverage of the Act.

27-2-503. Conflict of laws — limitation periods.

Commission Notes

This section treats limitation periods as substantive, to be governed by the limitations law of a state whose law governs other substantive issues inherent in the claim. This is true whether the limitation period of the substantively governing law is longer or shorter than that of the forum's law.

The current judicial trend is in this direction. Cases illustrating this approach include Heavner v. Uniroyal, Inc., 63 N.J. 130, 305 A.2d 412 (1973); Air Products & Chemicals, Inc. v. Fairbanks Morse, Inc., 58 Wis.2d 193, 206 N.W.2d 414 (1973); and Henry v. Richardson-Merrell, Inc., 508 F.2d 28 (3d Cir. 1975). In none of these cases did the forum court seem to be averse to applying the other-state substantive law merely because the consequence would be to apply the other-state limitation period also.

This act [This part] does not lay down general conflict of laws rules to govern an adopting state's choice of law. Each enacting state will have its own choice-of-law law, its own conflict of laws law, as each state does now. The current conflict of laws trend is away from older mechanical choice-of-law rules and toward more modern approaches combining most significant relationships, governmental interest analysis, and choice-influencing considerations. It is possible that this combination of modern approaches will gain general acceptance. This act [This part], however, does not rely upon that development. It provides that the enacting state, as forum, will apply its own conflicts law, whatever it may be, to select the substantive law that governs the litigated claim. If different issues involved in a single claim are found to be governed by the substantive laws of different states, the governing limitations law will be that of the one of those two or more states chosen by the conflicts law of the forum, or enacting, state. Thus the forum state's own conflicts law will always choose the limitations law that is substantively governing.

The term "limitation period" refers only to the commencement of an action and does not refer to requirements for giving notice of claims (e.g., to a unit of government or the executor an an estate) as a condition to bringing an action.

Case Notes

Application of Montana Statute of Limitations to Foreign Judgments: When a couple divorced in Arizona, the ex-wife received a judgment for her share of the couple's property in Montana. She registered her judgment in Montana state court after the Arizona statute of limitations expired but before the Montana statute of limitations expired. The District Court ruled that under the full faith and credit clause, the Arizona statute controlled. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, explaining that the Uniform Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act (Title 25, ch. 9, part 5) calls for application of the Montana statute of limitations, and that the conflict of laws statute does not apply because it governs claims based on other states' laws and judgments are not claims. Boudette v. Boudette, 2019 MT 268, 397 Mont. 519, 453 P.3d 893.

27-2-504. Rules applicable to computation of limitation period.

Commission Notes

The phrase "governing conflict of laws" applies to both "statutes" and "rules of law."

This section treats all tolling and accrual provisions as substantive parts of the limitations law of any state whose law may be held applicable. They are part of that state's law as that state would apply it. The limitation period of another state, however, does not include its rules as to when an action is commenced. These rules are part of the procedural law of each forum state.

The final clause in Section 3 [this section] constitutes the standard means of avoiding renvoi problems.

It should be noted that Section 3 [this section] could conceivably give rise to application of the "unfairness" exception in Section 4 [27-2-505], for example, if a state tolls the running of its limitation period because of a defendant's physical absence from the state even though he is at all times subject to service under a longarm statute. Tolling under such circumstances is unfair, and should be eliminated. Reliance upon the Section 4 [27-2-505] exception seems preferable, however, to complete disregard of tolling provisions. Most of them, like accrual provisions which determine when a cause of action comes into existence, are reasonable and not outmoded.

27-2-505. Unfairness.

Commission Notes

This section provides an "escape clause" that will enable a court, in extreme cases, to do openly what has sometimes been done by indirection, to avoid injustice in particular cases. The "strong public policy" of a forum state can be effectuated. The section should rarely be employed, but will be useful if harsh results should in any case ensue from rigid application of the preceding sections. One illustrative possibility is note in the Comment following Section 3 [27-2-504], above.

Litigants will not often be able to take advantage of the "escape clause." It is not enough that the forum state's limitation period is different from that of the state whose substantive law is governing; the difference must be "substantial," and the "fair opportunity" provision constitutes a separate and additional requirement. An "escape clause" is needed, but it is not designed to afford an "easy escape".

CHAPTER 5 UNIFORM ARBITRATION ACT

Chapter Commission NotesCommissioners' Prefatory Note

This Act covers voluntary written agreements to arbitrate. Its purpose is to validate arbitration agreements, make the arbitration process effective, provide necessary safeguards, and provide an efficient procedure when judicial assistance is necessary.

The Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws promulgated a uniform arbitration act in the early 20's. It was adopted in a few states. It proved unsatisfactory and was later withdrawn by the Conference. With the growing interest in a number of states in enacting a modern arbitration statute, the Conference renewed its interest in the subject and approximately five years ago, appointed a committee to prepare a draft act for consideration by the Conference.

The committee so appointed presented its first draft at the Conference of Commissioners in 1954. After revision, it was again presented to and adopted by the Conference on August 20, 1955.

In general, this act follows the pattern of the arbitration statutes of New York and of some fifteen other states. It validates written agreements to arbitrate disputes whether arising subsequent to the agreement or existing at the time it was made. It covers labor-management agreements to arbitrate unless the agreement otherwise provides. In view of the fact that some states, such as New York, extend the coverage of their act without exception, the clause at the end of the last sentence of Section 1 was bracketed.

The act provides that the motion procedure of the state shall be used when orders are desired to enforce the agreement to arbitrate, or for confirming, vacating or modifying an award, or for other purposes designated in the act. An award, once confirmed, may be reduced to judgment which is enforceable as is any other judgment.

Many of the provisions, are designed to meet problems not anticipated by the parties when the agreement was made and for which no provision exists in the agreement. Many of the sections are subject to the terms upon which the parties have agreed.

The grounds specified for confirming, vacating or modifying an award are for the most part the traditional ones recognized by statutes of many states. A provision not generally found permits arbitrators to correct minor errors in their award or to clarify the award when needed.

The section on Appeals is intended to remove doubts as to what orders are appealable and to limit appeals prior to judgment to those instances where the element of finality is present.

Applicability: Section 26, Ch. 684, L. 1985, provided: "Application not retroactive. This act applies only to agreements made subsequent to October 1, 1985."

Severability: Section 27, Ch. 684, L. 1985, was a severability section.

Chapter Case Notes

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM ARBITRATION ACT

Enforceability of Arbitration Absent Clear and Unmistakable Delegation Provision: In an arbitration agreement between a debt relief organization and a debt-ridden consumer, there was no clear and unmistakable delegation provision that would preempt the rule that the enforceability of an arbitration provision is for a court to decide. Therefore, the District Court did not err in reserving to itself the determination of arbitrability. Global Client Solutions, LLC v. Ossello, 2016 MT 50, 382 Mont. 345, 367 P.3d 361.

Parties' Failure to Follow Arbitration Agreement — Procedural Arbitrability: Alleging wrongful discharge, the plaintiff employee association sought declaratory judgment requiring the city of Bozeman to submit to arbitration. Each party argued that the other failed to follow arbitration procedures. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the dispute should be determined by an arbitrator because time limits and conditions precedent invoke procedural arbitrability. Mont. Pub. Employees Ass'n v. Bozeman, 2015 MT 69, 378 Mont. 337, 343 P.3d 1233.

Claim Exempt From Arbitration: Although a plaintiff's claim for personal injury is exempt from arbitration under 27-5-114, it does not follow that all the plaintiff's other claims are exempt from arbitration. To conclude otherwise would void the Uniform Arbitration Act and permit an individual to circumvent the Act by simply asserting one personal injury claim amidst a slew of other claims that are subject to arbitration. Graziano v. Stock Farm Homeowners Ass'n, Inc., 2011 MT 194, 361 Mont. 332, 258 P.3d 999.

Expectation of Arbitration Unreasonable Under Contract of Adhesion: Plaintiff signed a contract to purchase a used motor home and subsequently discovered that it needed $17,000 in mitigation damages. Defendant moved to compel arbitration and the motion was granted, so plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court held that because plaintiff's options were to accept or reject the contract without an opportunity to negotiate the preprinted terms, the contract was one of adhesion. The arbitration clause in the contract by which plaintiff waived various constitutional and procedural rights was not within plaintiff's reasonable expectations, so the arbitration clause was determined to be unenforceable. The District Court was reversed. Woodruff v. Bretz, Inc., 2009 MT 329, 353 M 6, 218 P3d 486 (2009), following Kloss v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 2002 MT 129, 310 M 123, 54 P3d 1 (2002), distinguishing Denton v. First Interstate Bank of Commerce, 2006 MT 193, 333 M 169, 142 P3d 797 (2006). However, see Graziano v. Stock Farm Homeowners Ass'n, Inc., 2011 MT 194, 361 Mont. 332, 258 P.3d 999, which held that an arbitration provision contained in covenants, conditions, and restrictions (CCRs) was within a sophisticated businessman's reasonable expectations since the businessman, a former chief executive officer of Apple Computer, Inc., had prior experience with arbitration provisions and had notice of the CCRs.

Claim Involving Interests of Federal Agency — Order for Arbitration Under Federal Law Proper: A dispute arose between the development manager and a construction manager on a federal construction project for the National Institutes of Health (NIH). The construction manager filed a demand for arbitration, and the District Court ordered the parties to resolve the dispute under the Federal Acquisition Regulation (FAR) or the Federal Contract Disputes Act (CDA) rather than through the American Arbitration Association. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed. Because the dispute did not relate solely to the construction manager's obligations but instead involved the interests of the federal government through the NIH, the District Court did not err in ordering the parties to include the NIH as a party and resolve the dispute under FAR or CDA dispute resolution procedures. Higgins Dev. Partners, LLC v. Skanska USA Bldg., Inc., 2009 MT 287, 352 M 243, 216 P3d 199 (2009).

Party Not Required to Submit to Arbitration Absent Contractual Agreement — Question of Arbitration to Be Decided by Court: A party cannot be required to submit to arbitration if the party has not agreed in the contract to submit to arbitration. Unless the parties clearly and unmistakably provide otherwise, the question of whether the parties agreed to arbitration is to be decided by the court, not the arbitrator. State ex rel. Bullock v. Philip Morris, Inc., 2009 MT 261, 352 M 30, 217 P3d 475 (2009), following AT&T Technologies v. Communication Workers of Am., 475 US 643 (1986), and followed in Higgins Dev. Partners, LLC v. Skanska USA Bldg., Inc., 2009 MT 287, 352 M 243, 216 P3d 199 (2009). See also Willems v. U.S. Bancorp Piper Jaffray, Inc., 2005 MT 37, 326 M 103, 107 P3d 465 (2005).

Arbitration Provision in Adhesive Contract Enforceable — Noncompetition Clause Within Weaker Party's Reasonable Expectation: Larsen asserted that an employment contract containing a noncompetition clause was a contract of adhesion and that the arbitration clause in the contract was unenforceable. The Supreme Court applied the factors in Kloss v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 2002 MT 129, 310 M 123, 54 P3d 1 (2002), and determined that the contract was indeed adhesive. However, simply being adhesive does not render a contract invalid and unenforceable under Kloss. The contract must also either fall outside the weaker party's reasonable expectation or be unconscionable. In this case, Larsen had 20 years' experience in the insurance industry and had entered various similar employment agreements that contained arbitration clauses during those years, and the arbitration provision was stated in bold letters on the first page of the agreement. These facts constituted sufficient grounds to support the conclusion that the arbitration clause fell within Larsen's reasonable expectations and was therefore enforceable. However, once the District Court determined the validity of the arbitration clause, the court exceeded its authority in deciding additional substantive issues under the agreement that should have been decided by an arbitrator, so the case was remanded for arbitration. Larsen v. W. St. Ins. Agency, Inc., 2007 MT 270, 339 M 407, 170 P3d 956 (2007), following Martz v. Beneficial Mont., Inc., 2006 MT 94, 332 M 93, 135 P3d 790 (2006).

Investment Agreement Containing Arbitration Clause Considered Contract of Adhesion — Remand for Consideration of Investor's Reasonable Expectations and Potential Contract Formation Defenses: Zigrang entered an investment agreement with defendant investment company. The agreement contained an arbitration provision. When Zigrang learned that defendant frequently traded securities in Zigrang's account without permission, Zigrang filed a complaint, which was one of 23 suits filed by investors alleging defendant's mismanagement of accounts. Defendant moved to compel arbitration pursuant to the agreement. A panel of three judges sat en banc to hear evidence common to all 23 cases. Defendant's motion to compel arbitration was denied, but the order contained common findings of fact that did not apply to Zigrang, including a mischaracterization of Zigrang's investment agreement. Defendant appealed. The Supreme Court noted that the agreement constituted a contract of adhesion that supported other contract formation defenses, but did not in itself constitute a sufficient basis for invalidating the agreement. The Supreme Court was unable to completely examine Zigrang's contract formation defenses, including unconscionability, waiver, and reasonable expectations, because the District Court's order relied on the mistaken finding of fact. Thus, the court remanded for further findings of fact related to Zigrang's investment agreement, noting that an inquiry into Zigrang's expectations should consist only of an analysis of Zigrang's objectively reasonable expectations regarding the agreement from Zigrang's perspective and that Zigrang's expectations might negate the arbitration provisions. Zigrang v. U.S. Bancorp Piper Jaffray, Inc., 2005 MT 282, 329 M 239, 123 P3d 237 (2005). See also Iwen v. U.S. W. Direct, 1999 MT 63, 293 M 512, 977 P2d 989 (1999), and Kloss v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 2002 MT 129, 310 M 123, 54 P3d 1 (2002).

Predispute Arbitration Provisions Unenforceable — Motion to Compel Arbitration Properly Denied: Plaintiff opened several Piper Automatic Transfer Accounts and later brought an action alleging defendants' mismanagement of the accounts. Defendants sought to compel arbitration based on predispute arbitration clauses in the account agreements requiring that any dispute be resolved by arbitration. The motion to compel arbitration was denied, and defendants appealed. The Supreme Court held that because the agreements granted defendants' brokers the discretion to buy and sell securities, a fiduciary duty was created that defendants breached by failing to explain the consequences of the arbitration provision prior to formation of the contract. The predispute arbitration provisions were therefore unenforceable, and denial of the motion to compel arbitration was affirmed. Willems v. U.S. Bancorp Piper Jaffray, Inc., 2005 MT 37, 326 M 103, 107 P3d 465 (2005), following Kloss v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 2002 MT 129, 310 M 123, 54 P3d 1 (2002). See also Chor v. Piper, Jaffray & Hopwood, 261 M 143, 862 P2d 26 (1993).

No Showing of Acts Inconsistent With Right to Arbitrate — Finding of No Waiver of Arbitration Affirmed: A construction contract between the parties contained an arbitration clause. When plaintiff ceased making payments, defendant proposed attempting nonbinding mediation prior to binding arbitration. Mediation failed, so defendant filed a construction lien and sought arbitration. However, before arbitration occurred, plaintiff filed a breach of contract and slander of title action arising out of allegedly defective construction. Defendant then moved to compel arbitration, and the motion was granted. Plaintiff contended that defendant's actions constituted an implied waiver of arbitration, but the District Court found that defendant had not waived arbitration, so plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. A party asserting waiver bears a heavy burden and must show: (1) knowledge of the existing right to compel arbitration; (2) acts inconsistent with the right to arbitrate; and (3) prejudice to the party resisting arbitration. Here, defendant's counsel's letter proposing mediation was clear that if mediation failed, defendant would enforce arbitration, and the filing of the lien was not to advance litigation, but rather to protect defendant's security interests in the property. Any prejudice to plaintiff from the lien filing would have occurred whether the parties arbitrated or litigated. Therefore, defendant did not engage in acts inconsistent with the right to arbitrate, and the District Court correctly found that defendant did not waive the right to arbitration. Stewart v. Covill & Basham Constr., LLC, 2003 MT 220, 317 M 153, 75 P3d 1276 (2003). See also Downey v. Christensen, 251 M 386, 825 P2d 557 (1992), and Holm-Sutherland Co., Inc. v. Shelby, 1999 MT 150, 295 M 65, 982 P2d 1053 (1999).

Security Brokerage Contracts — Contract of Adhesion Rendering Arbitration Clause Unenforceable: Kloss opened a full-service brokerage account with defendant, which permitted Kloss to purchase securities and maintain a money market account and which included a living trust account. The account did well, and Kloss decided to set up a charitable trust with the bond proceeds. The initial account and the living trust agreement contained a mandatory arbitration clause, and the charitable trust incorporated the arbitration clause by reference. Kloss then had second thoughts about the charitable trust and petitioned to revoke it. Defendant moved to compel arbitration, and the District Court granted the motion, citing Chor v. Piper, Jaffray & Hopwood, 261 M 143, 862 P2d 26 (1993), and Iwen v. U.S. W. Direct, 1999 MT 63, 293 M 512, 977 P2d 989 (1999), for the holding that defendant had no obligation to explain the terms of the contract because it was within Kloss's reasonable expectations and that even if the contract was considered a contract of adhesion, it was not unenforceable because it was not unconscionable. Kloss appealed, arguing that the arbitration clause was part of a contract of adhesion and that waiver of the constitutional right to jury trial should not be presumed from the signing of a contract of adhesion. Defendant maintained that form contracts prepared by securities brokers are not contracts of adhesion dictated by one party to another who has no voice in its formulation, and that arbitration clauses contained in the contracts are not unconscionable. The Supreme Court examined Passage v. Prudential-Bache Sec., Inc., 223 M 60, 727 P2d 1298 (1986), for an explanation of contracts of adhesion in the securities context and the circumstances under which they are unenforceable. The court distinguished both Chor and Passage, finding that the contracts in this case were clearly contracts of adhesion because they were standardized forms containing terms that Kloss had no opportunity to negotiate if wishing to invest with defendant. Further, the arbitration clause by which Kloss waived the right to access to state courts, the right to jury trial, the right to reasonable discovery, the right to findings of fact based on the evidence, and the right to enforce the law by way of appeal was clearly not within Kloss's reasonable expectations. The arbitration clause was never explained by defendant, and Kloss was not aware of the arbitration provision in the contract. Thus, the District Court committed reversible error when it concluded that the arbitration clause was enforceable. Kloss v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 2002 MT 129, 310 M 123, 54 P3d 1 (2002), followed in Larsen v. W. St. Ins. Agency, Inc., 2007 MT 270, 339 M 407, 170 P3d 956 (2007), with regard to factors to be applied in determining a contract of adhesion.

Failure of Employer to Respond to Arbitration Request — Waiver of Right to Arbitrate: The employment agreement between Firestone and Oasis Telecommunications, Data and Records, Inc. (Oasis), contained a dispute resolution clause providing that if a disagreement arose, the parties would negotiate in good faith, and that if they did not reach a solution within 30 days of the first written notice, then upon a 30-day notice by either party, the issue would be submitted to arbitration. Oasis terminated Firestone's employment on May 8, 2000. On May 18, Firestone requested arbitration. On June 7, Firestone submitted a list of potential arbitrators to Oasis for consideration, and requested a response within 10 days. Oasis never responded until August 11, after Firestone had filed federal suit against Oasis on July 7 (which was dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction), and had filed virtually the same suit in state court on August 1, alleging Oasis's breach of the employment contract and the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Oasis moved to compel arbitration on August 25, but the District Court denied the motion, so Oasis appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. When the District Court denied Oasis's request to compel arbitration, the court impliedly found that Oasis's failure to respond constituted waiver of its right to arbitrate the dispute. The Supreme Court applied the factors in Downey v. Christensen, 251 M 386, 825 P2d 557 (1992), in deciding whether a waiver occurred. The factors require the party asserting waiver to demonstrate: (1) knowledge of the existing right to compel arbitration; (2) acts inconsistent with the right to arbitrate the dispute; and (3) prejudice to the party resisting arbitration. The existence of the first factor was undisputed because Oasis did not dispute knowledge of the right to arbitrate. Regarding the second factor, the May 18 notice commenced the 30-day period prescribed by the employment agreement, but Oasis did not deliver a response until well after the expiration of the 30-day period, and that indifference to Firestone's request constituted an act inconsistent with the right to arbitrate the dispute. Regarding the third factor, when Oasis failed to respond to the arbitration request, Firestone had no alternative other than to commence District Court proceedings, was subjected to unnecessary delay, and incurred court costs and fees that could otherwise have been avoided, so Firestone was prejudiced by Oasis's inaction. Therefore, the Downey factors were met, and Oasis's failure to respond to a request for arbitration within the period set out in the employment contract constituted waiver of the right to compel arbitration. Firestone v. Oasis Telecommunications, Data & Records, Inc., 2001 MT 297, 307 M 469, 38 P3d 796 (2001). See also Holm-Sutherland Co., Inc. v. Shelby, 1999 MT 150, 295 M 65, 982 P2d 1053 (1999).

Commencement of Litigation, Delay in Asserting Right to Arbitrate, and Other Acts Held Implied Waiver of Right to Arbitrate: Holm-Sutherland contracted with the town of Shelby to construct sewer and water improvements. When a dispute arose, Holm-Sutherland at first demanded arbitration, but Shelby sued to enjoin arbitration on the grounds that the arbitration clause in the contract did not comply with the then-existing statutory notice requirements. Holm-Sutherland agreed to the injunction. The statutory notice requirements were subsequently held by the U.S. Supreme Court in Doctor's Associates, Inc., v. Casarotto, 517 US 681 (1996), to have been preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act. In the meantime, Holm-Sutherland filed a civil action for damages against Shelby and its engineering firm, seeking damages for breach of contract but not seeking arbitration. Approximately 20 months after the Casarotto decision and less than 10 weeks prior to trial, Holm-Sutherland again demanded arbitration and Shelby responded that by demanding a jury trial in the city's action for damages, Holm-Sutherland had expressly waived its right to arbitration. Arbitration was ordered by the District Court. The Montana Supreme Court held that here had been no express waiver by Holm-Sutherland of its right to arbitrate. However, relying upon its opinions in Thiel v. Johnson, 219 M 271, 711 P2d 829 (1985), and Downey v. Christensen, 251 M 386, 825 P2d 557 (1992), the Supreme Court held that Holm-Sutherland's cumulative actions were so inconsistent with its initial demand for arbitration that the company had impliedly waived its contractual right to arbitration. These inconsistent actions included a demand for a jury trial in response to Shelby's action to enjoin arbitration, initiation of an action for damages against Shelby in which no demand for arbitration was made, and its much delayed demand for arbitration made 20 months after the Casarotto decision by the U.S. Supreme Court. The Montana Supreme Court found that Shelby had been prejudiced by the actions of Holm-Sutherland in electing to pursue a judicial remedy and consequently held those actions to constitute an implied waiver of its right to arbitration. Holm-Sutherland Co., Inc. v. Shelby, 1999 MT 150, 295 M 65, 982 P2d 1053, 56 St. Rep. 595 (1999).

Power of General Powers Town to Arbitrate Contract Held Included in Power to Contract: Holm-Sutherland contracted with the town of Shelby to construct sewer and water improvements within the town. The contract included a provision requiring that all disputes involving the interpretation of the contract documents or breach of the contract were to be settled by arbitration. When a dispute arose, Holm-Sutherland sought arbitration. Litigation ensued, and the town argued that as a noncharter government, it had only those powers granted by the Legislature and that a municipality's council had a duty pursuant to 7-6-4301 and 7-6-4302 to determine the validity of claims and that duty could not be delegated to an arbitrator. The Supreme Court agreed with the District Court that a general powers municipality has broad powers to enter into contracts pursuant to 7-1-4124(4) and (23), that this chapter evidences a general state policy favoring arbitration, and that the powers granted a municipality establish its ability to be bound to the terms of a contract that contains a binding arbitration clause. Holm-Sutherland Co., Inc. v. Shelby, 1999 MT 150, 295 M 65, 982 P2d 1053, 56 St. Rep. 595 (1999).

Arbitration Improperly Remanded to Arbitrator for Reconsideration of Damages — Rationally Derived Arbitration Remedy to Be Upheld on Review: The District Court remanded a wrongful discharge case to the arbitrator for reconsideration of damages. The employee contended that the District Court could not enter judgment for the amended award because the case should not have been remanded and because the arbitrator did not have authority to amend the award. The employer contended that the arbitrator exceeded his powers when he made the first award and that the District Court properly gave the arbitrator authority to vacate portions of the first award pursuant to 27-5-312. However, the exceeding of power by an arbitrator is not one of the provisions in 27-5-217 pursuant to which an arbitrator may modify or correct an award. When the arbitrator granted the employer's motion to vacate portions of the original damage award, he exceeded his statutory authority. Further, the District Court was without authority to vacate or modify the award except for the statutory bases set forth in 27-5-312 and 27-5-313. If the remedy fashioned by the arbitrator is rationally derived from the arbitration agreement, it will be upheld. The Supreme Court remanded for judgment in the amount of the original arbitration award. Nelson v. Livingston Rebuild Center, Inc., 1999 MT 116, 294 M 408, 981 P2d 1185, 56 St. Rep. 486 (1999).

Valuation of Improvements — Standard of Review — All Factors Including Decision of Arbitrators to Be Reviewed De Novo by Department — Arbitration Act Inapplicable: After the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) awarded a lease to Hagemeister, a three-person panel of arbitrators was appointed by the DNRC to appraise the value of improvements made by the previous lessee, Winchell. Two arbitrators agreed to a value in excess of $20,000, while a third valued the improvements at $1,407.35. The DNRC then conducted its own appraisal, set aside the higher values, and established a value of $1,564 for the improvements. The Winchells appealed the valuation to the District Court pursuant to 77-6-306(4), and the District Court granted summary judgment for the DNRC. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that: (1) the correct standard for a de novo review of the District Court's judgment is the standard applicable to the review of a case that is not a "contested" case under the Montana Administrative Procedure Act, the standard applicable in this case being whether the DNRC exceeded its statutory authority under 77-6-306(3) or whether its decision is wholly unsupported by the evidence; (2) even though the District Court applied the wrong standard of review, the standard applicable to a contested case, the District Court reached the correct result; (3) the language in 77-6-303 and 77-6-306(3) and (4), which are to be read together, indicate that the Legislature intended that the DNRC do more than review the paper records of the arbitrators in order to "fix" the value of the improvements, and the DNRC was therefore correct in using an independent valuation procedure conducted by its own appraiser in addition to considering the work of the three arbitrators; and (4) the Uniform Arbitration Act does not apply to this case because that Act establishes a District Court's standard of review in an appellate procedure. Winchell v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 1999 MT 11, 293 M 89, 972 P2d 1132, 56 St. Rep. 48 (1999).

Montana Law Not Preempted by Federal Arbitration Act: Keystone, an auto parts business located in Montana, purchased a computer system from Triad for the management of Keystone's auto parts business. The contract was to be performed in Montana. The system failed to work properly, and Keystone sued Triad in Montana for breach of warranty, breach of contract, negligence, and negligent misrepresentation. The contract provided that disputes between the parties were to be settled before the American Arbitration Association in California, and the District Court held that the proper forum for arbitration was California because, among other reasons, Montana law was preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA)(9 U.S.C. 2). The Supreme Court reviewed the opinion of the U.S. Supreme Court in the case of Doctor's Associates, Inc. v. Casarotto, 517 US 681 (1996), and interpreted that opinion to mean that a state may not place arbitration clauses on an unequal footing from general contract provisions. The Supreme Court pointed out that although 27-5-323 does apply only to arbitration provisions, 28-2-708 applies to contracts generally and that therefore it cannot be said that arbitration provisions are treated differently from contracts generally. The Supreme Court also pointed out that the Montana statutes preserve and do not nullify the parties' duty to arbitrate and for that reason, the case should be distinguished from those cases cited by Triad, holding that the FAA preempted state statute. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that under the rationale of Casarotto, 28-2-708 and 27-5-323 are not preempted by the FAA. Keystone, Inc. v. Triad Sys. Corp., 1998 MT 326, 292 M 229, 971 P2d 1240, 55 St. Rep. 1321 (1998).

DECISIONS UNDER LAW IN EFFECT PRIOR TO OCTOBER 1, 1985

Arbitrability of Claims Against Multiple Defendants — Same Facts, Same Actions: Complaints relating to mishandling or unwise management of accounts were filed against Prudential-Bache Securities, Inc. (Prudential) and G.T. Murray Company (Murray). The Murray defendants' motion to compel arbitration was denied when the District Court found that they were not signatories to the customer agreement form, but Prudential's motion to compel arbitration was granted. Upon examination of the customer agreement, the Supreme Court found that Prudential was not a signatory either; in fact the agreement form did not clearly identify the party with whom plaintiffs were contracting. However, since the claims against Prudential and Murray arose out of the same facts and the same actions, to separate the claims as to the defendants would be inappropriate. Therefore, the court held that the claims against all defendants were arbitrable. Passage v. Prudential-Bache Sec., Inc., 223 M 60, 727 P2d 1298, 43 St. Rep. 1532 (1986).

Claims of Children Stayed Pending Arbitration of Parents' Claims — Arbitration Ordered: Both plaintiffs and defendants objected to a District Court order staying claims on children's accounts pending arbitration of the parents' claims. Defendants argued that the children's claims were subject to arbitration, along with the other claims. Plaintiffs argued that the District Court was correct in finding that the children's accounts were not included under the terms of the customer agreement forms but contended that it was unjust to stay court action on the children's claims. The Supreme Court, citing Merrill Lynch, et al. v. Haydu, 637 F2d 391 (5th Cir. 1981), held that issues that go to the formation of the contract as a whole may properly be arbitrated. Since a factual question remained as to whether the children's accounts were covered by the customer agreement forms, the District Court order was reversed and this issue was subjected to arbitration. Passage v. Prudential-Bache Sec., Inc., 223 M 60, 727 P2d 1298, 43 St. Rep. 1532 (1986).

Election of Arbitration Rules Properly Honored: An election of arbitration rules made within the time allowed by a customer agreement form but made contingent upon arbitration being compelled by the court was properly honored by the District Court once it determined that arbitration was proper. Passage v. Prudential-Bache Sec., Inc., 223 M 60, 727 P2d 1298, 43 St. Rep. 1532 (1986).

Jurisdiction of State Court to Order Arbitration Under Federal Arbitration Law: Under the U.S. Supreme Court decision set out in Southland Corp. v. Keating, 465 US 1, 79 L Ed 2d 1, 104 S Ct 852 (1984), a state court clearly has jurisdiction to order arbitration under the federal arbitration law, 9 U.S.C. 1, et seq. Passage v. Prudential-Bache Sec., Inc., 223 M 60, 727 P2d 1298, 43 St. Rep. 1532 (1986).

Arbitrator's Award Granting Reinstatement to Teachers Upheld: The Supreme Court rejected school district's contention that the arbitrator of a teacher termination case exceeded his authority by determining that the remedy for firing, in violation of union contract procedures, was to offer full reinstatement, which would thereby confer tenured status to the teachers. The school district, contrary to its assertion, had the statutory and constitutional authority to enter into collective bargaining agreements, and the provisions at issue were proper subjects of bargaining. The trustees, having entered into the agreement in good faith, were bound by it. When parties agree to binding arbitration, the role of a court in reviewing the arbitrator's findings is a narrow one. Savage Educ. Ass'n v. Trustees, 214 M 289, 692 P2d 1237, 41 St. Rep. 2479 (1984), followed in Nelson v. Livingston Rebuild Center, Inc., 1999 MT 116, 294 M 408, 981 P2d 1185, 56 St. Rep. 486 (1999).

Waiver of Right to Arbitration: The right to raise enforcement of the arbitration clause may be waived by failure to assert it in a timely manner. Failure to raise the right to arbitrate in the pleadings constitutes such waiver. Ace Plumbing & Heating, Inc. v. School District, 204 M 81, 662 P2d 1327, 40 St. Rep. 678 (1983).

Entry of Award in Judgment Book Proper: Where respondent properly followed the procedures set out in 27-5-303 by showing that notice of the filing of the arbitration award was served on the adverse party and where no order staying the entry of judgment had been served by the adverse party, the District Court committed no error in directing the clerk to enter the award in the judgment book. This is so despite the fact that the adverse party had filed a motion to vacate the award prior to respondent's request for entry of judgment and despite the fact that 10 minutes after respondent's filing, the adverse party filed an order staying the entry of judgment. Kay v. Bottomly, 192 M 149, 626 P2d 1263, 38 St. Rep. 586 (1981).

Failure to Assert Grounds to Vacate an Award: Where appellant fails to assert proper grounds upon which to vacate an arbitration award, the District Court's decision to allow the award to stand is affirmed. Appellant's contention in her motion to vacate an award of attorney's fees was based on arguments concerning the merits of the defendant attorney's actions, not on one of the four bases upon which a court may vacate an award under 27-5-301. Kay v. Bottomly, 192 M 149, 626 P2d 1263, 38 St. Rep. 586 (1981).

Invalidity of Agreement to Arbitrate All Disputes Under a Contract — Injunctive Relief: A contract may require future disputes as to value or quantity to be submitted to arbitration, but contract provisions that require parties to submit future disputes as to questions of law are void. Claims of breach of contract, negligence, and breach of warranty are issues of law or mixed issues of law and fact. In a case involving these claims, an agreement to arbitrate all future disputes is unenforceable and a nullity. An injunction to stay all arbitration proceedings is a proper remedy to avoid a real threat of irreparable injury when the rules of the arbitration body provide that the parties are presumed to have consented to the entry of a judgment upon the arbitrators' award. Palmer Steel Structures v. Westech, Inc., 178 M 347, 584 P2d 152 (1978).

Void Arbitration Clause: Any contract provision which states that all future contract disputes shall be submitted to arbitration is void because it restricts access to the courts. Smith v. Zepp, 173 M 358, 567 P2d 923 (1977).

Honest Effort by Arbitrators: Heating and plumbing contractor was entitled to enforcement of report of arbitrators against school district where arbitrators made a sincere, honest, and industrious effort to render a fair and just award. Hopkins v. School District, 133 M 530, 327 P2d 395 (1958).

Present Existence of Dispute: This section contemplates voluntary submission of disputes in existence at the time of the submission, not to a contractual provision requiring arbitration of future disputes. Green v. Wolff, 140 M 413, 372 P2d 427 (1962).

Legislative Power: The Legislature has power to provide a means by which the parties to a controversy may waive a trial by a court and submit the matter to arbitrators selected by themselves, by whose award it is finally concluded in the absence of fraud, gross error, excess of power, and the like. Shea v. North-Butte Min. Co., 55 M 522, 179 P 499 (1919).

Fire Insurance Loss: Where the parties to a contract of fire insurance, upon destruction of the property, agree to submit the amount of loss to arbitration, the award fixes the amount of loss sustained and is binding upon both parties so that the insured cannot maintain an action upon the policy and have a readjustment of the loss without first having the award set aside. Solem v. Conn. Fire Ins. Co., 41 M 351, 109 P 432 (1910). See also Aetna Ins. Co. v. Hefferlin, 260 F 695 (9th Cir. 1919).

Absence of Arbitrator From Investigation: Where one of the arbitrators was absent during part of the investigation, though he may have authorized one of the other arbitrators to sign his name to the award, the investigation could not lawfully proceed, the award was null and void, and no valid judgment could be entered thereon. Dunphy v. Ford, 2 M 300 (1875).

Case Notes

Limited Exceptions for Only One Party Insufficient to Render Arbitration Clause Facially Unconscionable: A contract between the defendant-appellee and a third-party provider ("TPP") of home automation products allowing remote control over property access, HVAC, and hot water systems included a clause requiring the parties to arbitrate disputes, with two narrow exceptions, both of which would allow the TPP to seek relief in court in lieu of arbitration. The District Court held that the arbitration clause was unenforceable because the exceptions unreasonably favored the TPP, resulting in a lack of mutuality. The Supreme Court disagreed and upheld the arbitration clause. The two exceptions allowed the TPP to join the defendant-appellee as a third-party defendant for purposes of enforcing the contract indemnification provisions and allowed the TPP to seek injunctive relief if the defendant-appellee breached the contract with respect to the TPP's intellectual property, proprietary rights, or business reputation. The Supreme Court held that the defendant-appellee and TPP were dissimilarly situated such that the defendant-appellee had no need for either of the narrow exceptions. Therefore, the limited exceptions being available only for the TPP was insufficient to show the arbitration agreement was lacking in mutual consideration or was otherwise unconscionable. Stowe v. Big Sky Vacation Rentals, Inc., 2019 MT 288, 398 Mont. 91, 454 P.3d 655.

Arbitration Mandatory — Contention of Waiver or Timeliness to Be Considered in Arbitration, Not District Court: Under 27-5-114, a written contract or contract provision by which the parties agree to resolve a future controversy by arbitration is enforceable, valid, and mandatory. An assertion that one party waived its right to arbitration by failing to timely demand it is a matter of procedural arbitrability for determination by the arbitrator and does not affect or limit the scope of the substantive issues. Peeler v. Rocky Mtn. Log Homes Canada, Inc., 2018 MT 297, 393 Mont. 396, 431 P.3d 911.

Agreement Containing Clear and Unambiguous Arbitration Provision Signed by Plaintiffs — Arbitration Properly Enforced: The plaintiffs, who were investors, sued the defendants, two investing and financial businesses, after sustaining substantial losses. The plaintiffs' claims included misrepresentation, fraud, and self-dealing, among others. The defendants filed a motion to stay the legal proceedings and to compel the plaintiffs to arbitrate their claims pursuant to an arbitration agreement. At the hearing on the motion, the plaintiffs each testified that they did not recall reading or receiving the arbitration agreement. The defendants provided evidence that each plaintiff had signed a customer agreement form that contained a clear and unambiguous arbitration clause. The District Court concluded that the fact that none of the plaintiffs recalled reading or receiving the arbitration agreement did not overcome the presumption that they knowingly and without duress signed the agreement. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the stay, agreeing that the plaintiffs, which included a lawyer and an accountant, had validly waived their right to a jury trial. Lenz v. FSC Sec. Corp., 2018 MT 67, 391 Mont. 84, 414 P.3d 1262.

Parties' Failure to Follow Arbitration Agreement — Procedural Arbitrability: Alleging wrongful discharge, the plaintiff employee association sought declaratory judgment requiring the city of Bozeman to submit to arbitration. Each party argued that the other failed to follow arbitration procedures. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the dispute should be determined by an arbitrator because time limits and conditions precedent invoke procedural arbitrability. Mont. Pub. Employees Ass'n v. Bozeman, 2015 MT 69, 378 Mont. 337, 343 P.3d 1233.

Arbitration Clause in Contract Enforceable — Arbitration Within Plaintiffs' Reasonable Expectations: Plaintiffs filed a claim against defendants for negligently designing and constructing the plaintiffs' home. The plaintiffs had signed a standard form contract but had negotiated some terms of the contract. The contract was not a contract of adhesion, there was no disparity in bargaining power, and the plaintiffs were attempting to enforce other parts of the contract against the defendants. Because the terms of the contract were within the plaintiffs' reasonable expectations, the Supreme Court held that the arbitration clause was enforceable. Day v. CTA, Inc., 2014 MT 119, 375 Mont. 79, 324 P.3d 1205.

Claim Exempt From Arbitration: Although a plaintiff's claim for personal injury is exempt from arbitration under 27-5-114, it does not follow that all the plaintiff's other claims are exempt from arbitration. To conclude otherwise would void the Uniform Arbitration Act and permit an individual to circumvent the Act by simply asserting one personal injury claim amidst a slew of other claims that are subject to arbitration. Graziano v. Stock Farm Homeowners Ass'n, Inc., 2011 MT 194, 361 Mont. 332, 258 P.3d 999.

Expectation of Arbitration Unreasonable Under Contract of Adhesion: Plaintiff signed a contract to purchase a used motor home and subsequently discovered that it needed $17,000 in mitigation damages. Defendant moved to compel arbitration and the motion was granted, so plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court held that because plaintiff's options were to accept or reject the contract without an opportunity to negotiate the preprinted terms, the contract was one of adhesion. The arbitration clause in the contract by which plaintiff waived various constitutional and procedural rights was not within plaintiff's reasonable expectations, so the arbitration clause was determined to be unenforceable. The District Court was reversed. Woodruff v. Bretz, Inc., 2009 MT 329, 353 M 6, 218 P3d 486 (2009), following Kloss v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 2002 MT 129, 310 M 123, 54 P3d 1 (2002), distinguishing Denton v. First Interstate Bank of Commerce, 2006 MT 193, 333 M 169, 142 P3d 797 (2006). However, see Graziano v. Stock Farm Homeowners Ass'n, Inc., 2011 MT 194, 361 Mont. 332, 258 P.3d 999, which held that an arbitration provision contained in covenants, conditions, and restrictions (CCRs) was within a sophisticated businessman's reasonable expectations since the businessman, a former chief executive officer of Apple Computer, Inc., had prior experience with arbitration provisions and had notice of the CCRs. See also Kelker v. Geneva-Roth Ventures, Inc., 2013 MT 62, 369 Mont. 254, 303 P.3d 777.

Claim Involving Interests of Federal Agency — Order for Arbitration Under Federal Law Proper: A dispute arose between the development manager and a construction manager on a federal construction project for the National Institutes of Health (NIH). The construction manager filed a demand for arbitration, and the District Court ordered the parties to resolve the dispute under the Federal Acquisition Regulation (FAR) or the Federal Contract Disputes Act (CDA) rather than through the American Arbitration Association. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed. Because the dispute did not relate solely to the construction manager's obligations but instead involved the interests of the federal government through the NIH, the District Court did not err in ordering the parties to include the NIH as a party and resolve the dispute under FAR or CDA dispute resolution procedures. Higgins Dev. Partners, LLC v. Skanska USA Bldg., Inc., 2009 MT 287, 352 M 243, 216 P3d 199 (2009).

Party Not Required to Submit to Arbitration Absent Contractual Agreement — Question of Arbitration to Be Decided by Court: A party cannot be required to submit to arbitration if the party has not agreed in the contract to submit to arbitration. Unless the parties clearly and unmistakably provide otherwise, the question of whether the parties agreed to arbitration is to be decided by the court, not the arbitrator. State ex rel. Bullock v. Philip Morris, Inc., 2009 MT 261, 352 M 30, 217 P3d 475 (2009), following AT&T Technologies v. Communication Workers of Am., 475 US 643 (1986), and followed in Higgins Dev. Partners, LLC v. Skanska USA Bldg., Inc., 2009 MT 287, 352 M 243, 216 P3d 199 (2009). See also Willems v. U.S. Bancorp Piper Jaffray, Inc., 2005 MT 37, 326 M 103, 107 P3d 465 (2005).

Change in Credit Agreement Via "Bill Stuffer" Insufficient Notice on Which Unilateral Change to Contract Acceptable — Enforcement of Arbitration Clause: Defendant issued plaintiff a credit card and subsequently sent a "bill stuffer" with plaintiff's monthly statement that significantly changed the terms of the credit agreement. The change provided for arbitration of all credit disputes and prohibited jury trials and class actions. When plaintiff later filed a claim against defendant for multiple fair debt collections, defendant attempted to compel arbitration, asserting that plaintiff agreed to the credit agreement change through plaintiff's continued use of the credit card. The District Court agreed with defendant, issued an order compelling arbitration, and dismissed plaintiff's action. Plaintiff appealed and the Supreme Court reversed. Making a change in the credit agreement through use of a "bill stuffer" did not provide sufficient consumer notice on which acceptance of a unilateral change to a contract of adhesion could expressly or implicitly be found, including plaintiff's waiver of the fundamental constitutional right to a jury trial. The case was reversed for further proceedings. Kortum-Managhan v. Herbergers NBGL, 2009 MT 79, 349 M 475, 204 P3d 693 (2009), following Keesun Partners v. Ferdig Oil Co., Inc., 249 M 331, 816 P2d 417 (1991), and followed in Riehl v. Cambridge Ct. GF, LLC, 2010 MT 28, 355 Mont. 161, 226 P.3d 581. See also Kloss v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 2002 MT 129, 310 M 123, 54 P3d 1 (2002).

Existence of Contract Issue for Court — Validity of Contract Issue for Arbitrator: When a party challenges a contract containing an arbitration clause on the ground that the parties never entered a contract, the court, not arbitration, is the appropriate forum to decide whether a contract existed, prior to compelling arbitration. Thompson v. Lithia Chrysler Jeep Dodge of Great Falls, 2008 MT 175, 343 M 392, 185 P3d 332 (2008), clarifying this narrow exception to the rule established in Buckeye Check Cashing, Inc. v. Cardegna, 546 US 440 (2006), and Martz v. Beneficial Mont., Inc., 2006 MT 94, 332 M 93, 135 P3d 790 (2006). See also Foss v. Circuit City Stores, Inc., 477 F. Supp. 2d 230 (D.C. Maine 2007).

Challenge to Contract or to Arbitration Clause — When Arbitration Appropriate: Plaintiffs defaulted on a loan with defendant, and nonjudicial foreclosure proceedings were begun. The loan contract contained an arbitration clause, but plaintiffs challenged the validity of the contract as a whole, not the validity of the arbitration clause. On defendant's motion, the District Court ordered arbitration, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court held that under federal law, when a complaint specifically challenges a contract arbitration clause, the doctrine of severability set out in Prima Paint Corp. v. Flood & Conklin Mfg. Co., 388 US 395 (1967), in conjunction with the Federal Arbitration Act, allows a court to hear the challenge. However, when, as here, a complaint challenges a contract as a whole, Prima Paint and Buckeye Check Cashing, Inc. v. Cardegna, 546 US 440 (2006), require a court to grant a motion to compel arbitration if the contract contains an arbitration provision. Thus, despite plaintiffs' contention that the contract itself was void ab initio, the District Court was affirmed. Martz v. Beneficial Mont., Inc., 2006 MT 94, 332 M 93, 135 P3d 790 (2006). However, see Thompson v. Lithia Chrysler Jeep Dodge of Great Falls, 2008 MT 175, 343 M 392, 185 P3d 332 (2008), in which a narrow exception to the Martz rule established that when a party challenges a contract containing an arbitration clause on the ground that the parties never entered a contract, the court, not arbitration, is the appropriate forum to decide whether a contract existed, prior to compelling arbitration.

Predispute Arbitration Provisions Unenforceable — Motion to Compel Arbitration Properly Denied: Plaintiff opened several Piper Automatic Transfer Accounts and later brought an action alleging defendants' mismanagement of the accounts. Defendants sought to compel arbitration based on predispute arbitration clauses in the account agreements requiring that any dispute be resolved by arbitration. The motion to compel arbitration was denied, and defendants appealed. The Supreme Court held that because the agreements granted defendants' brokers the discretion to buy and sell securities, a fiduciary duty was created that defendants breached by failing to explain the consequences of the arbitration provision prior to formation of the contract. The predispute arbitration provisions were therefore unenforceable, and denial of the motion to compel arbitration was affirmed. Willems v. U.S. Bancorp Piper Jaffray, Inc., 2005 MT 37, 326 M 103, 107 P3d 465 (2005), following Kloss v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 2002 MT 129, 310 M 123, 54 P3d 1 (2002). See also Chor v. Piper, Jaffray & Hopwood, 261 M 143, 862 P2d 26 (1993).

Waiver of Right to Object to Construction Contract Arbitration Provisions — Arbitration Properly Compelled: Plaintiff contracted to construct a pipeline and widen a road for defendant, but disputes arose regarding contract performance. The contract provided that disputes be settled by arbitration. Plaintiff notified defendant requesting arbitration, but defendant indicated a desire to settle the dispute through nonbinding mediation rather than arbitration in order to avoid fees. Subsequent settlement offers by defendant were refused, and plaintiff again requested arbitration. Following additional unsuccessful negotiation, plaintiff filed suit to enjoin arbitration, and defendant moved to stay litigation and compel arbitration. The District Court concluded that the contractual arbitration provisions were unambiguous and that by insisting on arbitration, plaintiff waived any legal objection to the arbitration provisions. Plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. To establish a knowing waiver, the party asserting waiver must demonstrate the other party's knowledge of the existing right, acts inconsistent with that right, and resulting prejudice to the party asserting waiver. Here, plaintiff, through counsel, clearly had knowledge of its contractual rights regarding arbitration and litigation; letters from plaintiff's counsel were totally inconsistent with the right to object to arbitration; and the subsequent delay in resolving the matter and the additional cost to defendant in having to defend the arbitration provisions in District Court and on appeal were clearly prejudicial to defendant. The District Court correctly concluded that plaintiff waived the right to object to arbitration and properly compelled arbitration. VanDyke Constr. Co., Inc. v. Stillwater Min. Co., 2003 MT 279, 317 M 519, 78 P3d 844 (2003), followed, regarding elements of waiver, in R.C. Hobbs Enterprises, LLC v. J.G.L. Distrib., Inc., 2004 MT 396, 325 M 277, 104 P3d 503 (2004).

No Showing of Acts Inconsistent With Right to Arbitrate—Finding of No Waiver of Arbitration Affirmed: A construction contract between the parties contained an arbitration clause. When plaintiff ceased making payments, defendant proposed attempting nonbinding mediation prior to binding arbitration. Mediation failed, so defendant filed a construction lien and sought arbitration. However, before arbitration occurred, plaintiff filed a breach of contract and slander of title action arising out of allegedly defective construction. Defendant then moved to compel arbitration, and the motion was granted. Plaintiff contended that defendant's actions constituted an implied waiver of arbitration, but the District Court found that defendant had not waived arbitration, so plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. A party asserting waiver bears a heavy burden and must show: (1) knowledge of the existing right to compel arbitration; (2) acts inconsistent with the right to arbitrate; and (3) prejudice to the party resisting arbitration. Here, defendant's counsel's letter proposing mediation was clear that if mediation failed, defendant would enforce arbitration, and the filing of the lien was not to advance litigation, but rather to protect defendant's security interests in the property. Any prejudice to plaintiff from the lien filing would have occurred whether the parties arbitrated or litigated. Therefore, defendant did not engage in acts inconsistent with the right to arbitrate, and the District Court correctly found that defendant did not waive the right to arbitration. Stewart v. Covill & Basham Constr., LLC, 2003 MT 220, 317 M 153, 75 P3d 1276 (2003). See also Downey v. Christensen, 251 M 386, 825 P2d 557 (1992), and *Holm-Sutherland Co., Inc. v. Real Estate Brokers and Salespersons — Agreement to Arbitrate Among Members Binding as to Nonmembers: A real estate client filed with the Helena Association of REALTORS, Inc., a request to arbitrate a dispute regarding a real estate transaction involving the plaintiffs, two members of the Association. The plaintiffs refused to arbitrate. The Association cited the plaintiffs' professional Code of Ethics and was prepared to proceed to arbitration without the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs sued to enjoin arbitration. The District Court granted summary judgment to the Association. The Supreme Court held that the District Court was correct in dismissing the action because the plaintiffs are bound to proceed to arbitration. The Association's bylaws incorporate the National Association of Realtors' Code of Ethics, which provides that realtors will arbitrate disputes with clients if the client agrees to arbitration. The plaintiffs' voluntary membership in the Association binds the plaintiffs to the provisions of the bylaws and Code of Ethics. Topolski v. Helena Ass'n of REALTORS, Inc., 2000 MT 343, 303 M 224, 15 P3d 414, 57 St. Rep. 1474 (2000).

Dispute Over Whether Agreement to Arbitrate Exists — Motion to Compel Arbitration Improper: The District Court found that the arbitration provision in a contract to provide on-line stock trading was valid and enforceable and compelled arbitration. Although it is true that a court is required to follow a liberal policy in enforcing arbitration agreements, including resolving any doubts concerning the scope of arbitrable issues in favor of arbitration, under 27-5-115, arbitration may not be ordered if there is a substantial and bona fide dispute over whether an arbitration agreement exists. Further, the Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C. 1, et seq., provides that an agreement to arbitrate is valid except when grounds exist at law or in equity to revoke the contract, reversing the longtime judicial hostility to arbitration agreements and putting them on the same footing as other contract provisions. A District Court may properly adjudicate the validity of an arbitration agreement only when a party contests the validity of an arbitration clause within a contract but does not contest the validity of the contract as a whole. Here, plaintiffs were on notice that there was some form of arbitration governing the agreement, but they had no indication that they were agreeing to binding arbitration or that arbitration was their exclusive remedy because they allegedly never received the specific terms and conditions of the agreement, creating a substantial ambiguity. Because there was a substantial and bona fide dispute over the arbitration agreement that could not be overcome by the general policy encouraging upholding agreements to arbitrate, the District Court committed reversible error in not fully addressing whether a valid arbitration agreement existed, in dismissing the case for lack of jurisdiction, and in compelling arbitration. Kingston v. Ameritrade, Inc., 2000 MT 269, 302 M 90, 12 P3d 929, 57 St. Rep. 1137 (2000).

No District Court Jurisdiction to Grant Summary Judgment When Dispute Subject to Arbitration: A condition of Burkhardt's employment agreement with Semitool, Inc. (Semitool), was that employment disputes would be subject to Montana law and the Uniform Arbitration Act. After 8 months of employment, Burkhardt was terminated. He later brought suit against Semitool, alleging that: (1) he had been terminated without good cause; (2) his termination was in retaliation for his refusal to violate public policy; (3) Semitool's opposition to his application for unemployment benefits was without probable cause and motivated by malice; and (4) representations made to him prior to employment were deceptive and motivated by malice, contained misrepresentations, and included false advertisements concerning the kind or character of the employment. In its answer, Semitool demanded arbitration, and Burkhart accepted the arbitration offer on the first two issues. The parties agreed that because trade secrets were involved, the record would be sealed and hearings closed to the public to avoid disclosure of confidential information. Semitool then moved to dismiss for failure to state a claim or, alternatively, to compel arbitration of all four claims. The District Court converted the motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment and held a hearing to discuss both motions, after which it granted summary judgment to Semitool and dismissed all four claims. The court determined that because proof of the allegations in the complaint would require disclosure of confidential attorney-client matters and because violation of the attorney-client privilege prejudiced the public interest, that prejudice was a proper ground upon which to invalidate the arbitration agreement. Burkhart appealed. On appeal, the Supreme Court cited 39-2-914 and Ratchye v. Lucas, 1998 MT 87, 288 M 345, 957 P2d 1128 (1998), as controlling. Once an offer to arbitrate has been accepted, neither the District Court nor the parties have a right to continue the lawsuit. The exception relating to the public interest pertains to the validity of the arbitration agreement, not to the merits of the underlying dispute. Thus, the District Court erred in deciding the merits of the issues because it lacked jurisdiction to do so once the parties agreed to arbitrate. Summary judgment was reversed and the claims were remanded for arbitration. Burkhart v. Semitool, Inc., 2000 MT 201, 300 M 480, 5 P3d 1031, 57 St. Rep. 785 (2000).

No Claim for Wrongful Termination Apart From Either Contract or Wrongful Discharge Act: Solle claimed that her employer violated the common-law duty of good faith and fair dealing by failing to renew her employment contract when she had a reasonable expectation that a renewal would be offered. Solle's employer moved to compel arbitration, the motion was granted, and Solle appealed. Under Meech v. Hillhaven W., Inc., 238 M 21, 776 P2d 488, 46 St. Rep. 1058 (1989), claims for wrongful termination from tort or express or implied contract are no longer viable under Montana law. Rather, 39-2-913 explicitly preempts all common-law remedies but bars only tort and contract claims that are "for discharge". A threshold determination in cases alleging wrongful termination is whether the parties' relationship is governed by a written contract for a specific term or whether it falls under the provisions of the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act, which applies to noncontract situations. Solle's employment was covered by a written contract containing an arbitration clause, and her claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing was inextricably intertwined with and based upon her termination from employment. Although breach of a contract is not a prerequisite to breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, the covenant arises out of a contractual relationship between the parties, and a breach of the covenant is a breach of the contract. Solle's contract was silent as to whether there was an obligation on the employer's part to renew the contract or on Solle's part to accept a renewal offer, so Solle argued that the failure to include such a provision indicated the employer's intent not to cover a claim like this under the arbitration clause. The Supreme Court disagreed and proceeded to treat the dispute as arising out of the employment contract. Solle was not allowed to maintain a wrongful termination claim apart from either the contract or the Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act. Solle's contract contained a provision that any unresolved dispute would be subject to arbitration, but the arbitration clause did not explicitly provide that it would govern issues concerning contract nonrenewal. Nevertheless, the contract governed Solle's employment, termination, and postemployment relationship and did not explicitly exclude disputes arising after contract termination. The presumption favors arbitrability, and the District Court did not err in holding that Solle's claim was subject to arbitration. Solle v. W. St. Ins. Agency, Inc., 2000 MT 96, 299 M 237, 999 P2d 328, 57 St. Rep. 391 (2000). See also Nolde Bros., Inc. v. Bakery & Confectionery Workers Union, 430 US 243, 51 L Ed 2d 300, 97 S Ct 1067 (1977), and Marsden v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Mont., 2012 MT 306, 368 Mont. 34, 291 P.3d 1229.

Construction Contract as Local Transaction Not Involving Interstate Commerce — Dismissal Improper: Based on the U.S. Supreme Court decision in Doctor's Associates, Inc. v. Casarotto, 517 US 681 (1996), that this section was preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act, the District Court dismissed with prejudice a claim by the city of Cut Bank, based on failure to state a cause of action. However, the construction contract at issue in the present case did not involve interstate commerce, a prerequisite for applicability of Casarotto; therefore, the District Court erred in dismissing the complaint for failure to state a claim. Cut Bank v. Tom Patrick Constr., Inc., 1998 MT 219, 290 M 470, 963 P2d 1283, 55 St. Rep. 915 (1998).

District Court Bound by Arbitration Agreement: In 1995, a homeowners' association filed a complaint seeking to compel subdivision developers to complete a water system as designed and approved in the 1970s. The developers contended that the water system was complete as built. Before trial, the parties entered into a settlement agreement that included a provision stating that any disputes would be settled by arbitration. The water system was not completed on time, so the association moved to enforce the settlement agreement by an order of specific performance or by arbitration. The District Court denied the motion for arbitration on grounds that the agreement was clear and ordered the developers to perform the specific terms of the settlement agreement. When a court is asked to compel arbitration of a dispute, the threshold inquiry is whether the parties agreed to arbitrate. Settlement agreements requiring arbitration are enforceable in Montana, as are other contracts, except on grounds that exist at law or in equity for the revocation of a contract. Although the settlement agreement in this case contemplated the remedy of specific performance, it was not an alternative to arbitration but rather a remedy available to the arbitrators when interpreting and enforcing the agreement. Because no conditions existed that would void the arbitration clause, the trial court erred in ignoring the arbitration agreement and deciding the dispute, rather than ordering the parties to arbitrate as they had agreed. Ratchye v. Lucas, 1998 MT 87, 288 M 345, 957 P2d 1128, 55 St. Rep. 354 (1998).

Rules Agreed Upon in Settlement Agreement as Binding Upon Arbitration: Parties agreed in a settlement agreement that controversies would be settled pursuant to the Commercial Arbitration Rules of the American Arbitration Association. A contention by one party that arbitration under those rules would be less efficient, slower, or more expensive than arbitration under Montana's Uniform Arbitration Act was immaterial. The parties were required to arbitrate according to the rules specifically designated in the settlement agreement. Ratchye v. Lucas, 1998 MT 87, 288 M 345, 957 P2d 1128, 55 St. Rep. 354 (1998).

Federal Preemption: A former subsection (see 1997 amendments) that conditioned enforceability of arbitration agreements on compliance with a special notice requirement that was not applicable to contracts generally was preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA) with respect to arbitration agreements covered by the FAA. States may regulate contracts, including arbitration clauses, under general contract law principles, and they may invalidate an arbitration clause upon such grounds as exist at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract. Courts may not invalidate arbitration agreements under state law applicable only to arbitration agreements. Doctor's Associates, Inc. v. Casarotto, 517 US 681, 134 L Ed 2d 902, 116 S Ct 1652 (1996). See also Keystone, Inc. v. Triad Sys. Corp., 1998 MT 326, 292 M 229, 971 P2d 1240, 55 St. Rep. 1321 (1998).

Franchise Agreement — Montana Law Governs — No Federal Preemption: Plaintiffs entered into a franchise agreement with defendants to open a sandwich shop. When informed that their first choice for location was unavailable, plaintiffs agreed to open the shop at a less desirable location, based on a verbal agreement with defendants that when the plaintiffs' preferred location became available, plaintiffs would have the exclusive right to open a shop. Contrary to the agreement, the preferred location was subsequently awarded to another franchisee, resulting in the loss of plaintiffs' business and collateral that secured their loan. Plaintiffs sued, alleging defendants breached their agreement. Pursuant to the franchise agreement, which included, on page 9, an arbitration provision governed by Connecticut law, the District Court granted defendants' motion to stay the proceedings pending arbitration of plaintiffs' breach of contract claims. Plaintiffs appealed, claiming that the arbitration provision was unenforceable because notice was not provided on page 1 as required by Montana law. (See 1997 amendment.) Relying on the United States Supreme Court's decision in Volt Information Sciences, Inc. v. Bd. of Trustees of Leland Stanford Junior Univ., 489 US 468 (1989), the Supreme Court reversed, ruling that application of Connecticut law would be contrary to Montana public policy entitling citizens to notice before entering into an agreement requiring arbitration and holding that Montana's notice requirement is not preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act. Casarotto v. Lombardi, 268 M 369, 886 P2d 931, 51 St. Rep. 1350 (1994), vacated and remanded in 515 US 1129, 132 L Ed 2d 807, 115 S Ct 2552, (1995), and reaffirmed and reinstated in Casarotto v. Lombardi, 274 M 3, 901 P2d 596, 52 St. Rep. 911 (1995), reversed and remanded in Doctor's Associates, Inc. v. Casarotto, 517 US 681, 134 L Ed 2d 902, 116 S Ct 1652 (1996).

Arbitration Clauses Subject to Principles of Contract Interpretation: The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's holding that the defendant, by not stating what law would govern the arbitration clause, had created an ambiguity subject to the general rules of contract interpretation and that the ambiguity would be construed strictly against the defendant. Mueske v. Piper, Jaffray & Hopwood, Inc., 260 M 207, 859 P2d 444, 50 St. Rep. 1009 (1993), followed in Topco, Inc. v. St., 275 M 352, 912 P2d 805, 53 St. Rep. 175 (1996).

Participation in Discovery Not Preclusive of Right to Arbitration — Waiver Not Shown: Downeys presented a number of claims against Christensen and Baker Boy Bake Shops, Inc. (Baker Boy), a donut franchise, alleging fraud, breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and negligence stemming from a franchise agreement between Downeys and Baker Boy. Immediately after serving the complaint, Downeys began discovery by serving requests for production, which were answered separately by Christensen and Baker Boy, who subsequently began their own discovery procedures. The District Court denied a motion to compel arbitration and stay proceedings, finding that participation in discovery constituted a waiver of arbitration. Failure to compel the parties to submit their claims to arbitration was error, given a clause in the franchise agreement requiring arbitration rather than civil litigation, when the waiver was not proved by actions inconsistent with the right to arbitrate or by a showing of prejudice arising from any inconsistent actions. Downey v. Christensen, 251 M 386, 825 P2d 557, 49 St. Rep. 88 (1992), followed in Holm-Sutherland Co. Inc. v. Shelby, 1999 MT 150, 295 M 65, 982 P2d 1053, 56 St. Rep. 595 (1999). However, see Casarotto v. Lombardi, 268 M 369, 886 P2d 931, 51 St. Rep. 1350 (1994).

No Right to Arbitration When Probationary Period Not Served: The Supreme Court upheld the lower court's dismissal of the plaintiff's suit when the plaintiff had worked less than 6 months and the contract stated that arbitration was only available after the 6-month probationary period had been served. Burgess v. Lewis & Clark City-County Bd. of Health, 244 M 275, 796 P2d 1079, 47 St. Rep. 1619 (1990).

Arbitrator's Discrimination Award Proper: The defendant school district was required by the collective bargaining agreement to pay 85% of the teachers' medical insurance costs. The district had been paying 100% of the costs when both spouses worked for the district. The arbitrator ruled that the district had to pay the single teachers for the amount of benefits they had not received in the past. The Supreme Court upheld the order, stating that the remedy for a discrimination violation is to make the injured party whole. The court held that the district could pay 85% of all teachers' medical insurance costs in the future but had to pay the single teachers for the past inequity. Glasgow Educ. Ass'n v. Bd. of Trustees, 242 M 478, 791 P2d 1367, 47 St. Rep. 898 (1990).

Court Without Power to Set Aside Arbitrator's Decision: The parties had entered into a contract that contained a binding arbitration clause. The defendant argued that the award was not binding because the arbitrator had exceeded his authority. The Supreme Court held that the contract contained references to state law that allowed the arbitrator to fashion the remedy contained in his order. The court ruled that the courts are without power to set aside an arbitrator's decision if it is final and binding and within the arbitrator's contractual authority. Glasgow Educ. Ass'n v. Bd. of Trustees, 242 M 478, 791 P2d 1367, 47 St. Rep. 898 (1990).

Arbitration Clause as Part of Performance Review Form — Nonseverability: A statement that employment was subject to arbitration, included as an integral part of signed annual performance reviews, was found to be part of a binding employment agreement between employer and employee. Further, the validity of the arbitration clause was not severable from the validity of other parts of the employment agreement. Vukasin v. D.A. Davidson & Co., 241 M 126, 785 P2d 713, 47 St. Rep. 135 (1990). However, see Miller v. Glacier County, 257 M 422, 851 P2d 401, 50 St. Rep. 339 (1993), and Casarotto v. Lombardi, 268 M 369, 886 P2d 931, 51 St. Rep. 1350 (1994).

Tort Claims Encompassed in Broad Arbitration Provisions: Employee signed an agreement that required arbitration in "any controversy between myself and the Company arising out of my employment or the termination of my employment with the Company for any reason whatsoever". Employee claimed that an allegation of assault was outside the scope of the arbitration clause; however, the incident occurred on company premises, involved company personnel, and resulted in the employee's termination. The Supreme Court cited numerous federal cases where similar broad arbitration provisions were found to encompass tort claims, holding that the assault controversy was clearly subject to arbitration. Vukasin v. D.A. Davidson & Co., 241 M 126, 785 P2d 713, 47 St. Rep. 135 (1990). However, see Casarotto v. Lombardi, 268 M 369, 886 P2d 931, 51 St. Rep. 1350 (1994).

When Arbitration Not Applicable — Insurance Contracts: Plaintiffs challenged a provision of their insurance contract that required arbitration of the value of loss in case of dispute between them and the insurer. The court held that arbitration of such disputes is not provided for under the Uniform Arbitration Act (specifically subsection (2)(b) of this section) and is therefore not exempt from the prohibition of 28-2-708. However, citing Randall v. Am. Fire Ins. Co., 10 M 340, 25 P 953 (1891), the court held that 28-2-708 did not prevent agreements to arbitrate factual questions relating to value or quantity and upheld the arbitration provision in plaintiffs' contract. Garretson v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 234 M 103, 761 P2d 1288, 45 St. Rep. 1764 (1988).

State and Federal Policy on Arbitration — Exception on Grounds to Revoke Entire Contract: The federal policy, based on 9 U.S.C. 2 (similar to this section), is that arbitration is favored when a question of arbitration is raised and a contractual clause is present. The policy further mandates that arbitration agreements are valid, irrevocable, and enforceable, save upon such grounds as exist at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract. Frates v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 233 M 377, 760 P2d 748, 45 St. Rep. 1567 (1988), citing Shearson/Am. Express, Inc. v. McMahon, 482 US 220, 96 L Ed 2d 185, 107 S Ct 2332 (1987).

Case Notes

Substantially Interdependent Misconduct Among Signatories and Nonsignatories to Contract — Nonparty to Contract May Enforce Arbitration Provision Under Equitable Estoppel Theory: A contract contained a provision stating that all disputes, claims, and questions regarding the rights and obligations of the parties were subject to arbitration. The plaintiff sued, alleging breach of contract, contract bad faith, breach of various warranties, negligence, and other claims. Of the two defendants listed, one was listed as a party to the contract and the other was not. However, the complaint alleged that both entities were affiliated and "therefore should be treated as one and the same" and the complaint asserted all contract, tort, and statutory claims against the parties jointly. The signatory defendant initially appeared in the action by moving to compel arbitration and dismiss the plaintiff's complaint, and the nonsignatory defendant filed a notice of joinder in the motion. The plaintiff moved to strike the nonsignatory defendant's notice of joinder on standing grounds. The District Court found that, given the circumstances, equitable estoppel functioned as an exception to the general rule that a nonparty to an arbitration agreement generally lacks standing to enforce the agreement against a party to the agreement because the plaintiff asserted allegations of substantially interdependent and concerted misconduct by the signatory and nonsignatory party. Peeler v. Rocky Mtn. Log Homes Canada, Inc., 2018 MT 297, 393 Mont. 396, 431 P.3d 911.

Whether Right to Compel Arbitration Waived by Failure to Timely Demand — Issue of Procedural Arbitrability for Determination by Arbitrator: A contract contained a provision stating that all disputes, claims, and questions regarding the rights and obligations of the parties were subject to arbitration. The plaintiff sued, alleging breach of contract, contract bad faith, breach of various warranties, negligence, and other claims. The defendant initially appeared in the action by moving to compel arbitration and dismiss the plaintiff's complaint. The plaintiff responded with arguments that arbitration was not mandatory under the contract, and regardless the defendant had waived its right to compel arbitration by failing to demand it within 30 days after the dispute arose. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's order dismissing the action and granting the defendant's motion to compel arbitration, stating that whether a party has waived its right to compel arbitration by failing to timely demand it is a question of procedural arbitrability that must be determined by an arbitrator, rather than by the court. Peeler v. Rocky Mtn. Log Homes Canada, Inc., 2018 MT 297, 393 Mont. 396, 431 P.3d 911.

Enforceability of Arbitration Absent Clear and Unmistakable Delegation Provision: In an arbitration agreement between a debt relief organization and a debt-ridden consumer, there was no clear and unmistakable delegation provision that would preempt the rule that the enforceability of an arbitration provision is for a court to decide. Therefore, the District Court did not err in reserving to itself the determination of arbitrability. Global Client Solutions, LLC v. Ossello, 2016 MT 50, 382 Mont. 345, 367 P.3d 361.

Parties' Failure to Follow Arbitration Agreement — Procedural Arbitrability: Alleging wrongful discharge, the plaintiff employee association sought declaratory judgment requiring the city of Bozeman to submit to arbitration. Each party argued that the other failed to follow arbitration procedures. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the dispute should be determined by an arbitrator because time limits and conditions precedent invoke procedural arbitrability. Mont. Pub. Employees Ass'n v. Bozeman, 2015 MT 69, 378 Mont. 337, 343 P.3d 1233.

Generally Applicable Contract Law Governing Validity of Arbitration Clause: The defendant charged the plaintiff 780% annual interest on a payday loan. The loan agreement included an arbitration clause that purportedly governed the validity of the agreement to arbitrate disputes. The plaintiff brought a class action suit against the defendant for charging an annual interest rate in excess of the 36% authorized by 32-5-301, among other claims. The defendant tried to compel arbitration, but the District Court found that the arbitration clause was unenforceable and denied the request. The Supreme Court found that generally applicable contract law governs the validity of an arbitration clause, and it applied the same analysis for unconscionability of arbitration clauses as for unconscionability of contracts generally. The court found that the arbitration clause was unenforceable because it qualified as a contract of adhesion and unreasonably favored the defendant, resulting in an unconscionable provision. Kelker v. Geneva-Roth Ventures, Inc., 2013 MT 62, 369 Mont. 254, 303 P.3d 777.

Arbitration of Teacher's Grievance Under Collective Bargaining Agreement Upheld—No Error by District Court: A tenured teacher's employment was terminated after he inadvertently failed to renew his teaching certificate. Following his termination, the teacher obtained a retroactive certificate and sought to file a grievance pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement that was in effect when he was hired. The school district refused to participate, arguing the teacher's contract was void because he did not hold a current certificate. The District Court granted a petition to compel arbitration, and the Supreme Court affirmed. A presumption of arbitrability is to be applied if an arbitration agreement is ambiguous, and sufficient questions existed regarding the validity of the contract and the application of the collective bargaining agreement after the teacher's certificate expired. Kalispell Educ. Ass'n v. Bd. of Trustees, 2011 MT 154, 361 Mont. 115, 255 P.3d 199.

No Error in Denial of Motion for Relief Given Live Arbitration Controversy: After defendant decided to cut the length of the school year by 1 week, plaintiff filed a motion to compel arbitration on the issue because of the 40-hour cut in wages of plaintiff's bargaining unit employees. Defendant argued that it had the sole authority to reduce the annual salaries of all employees and moved for dismissal of the case. The District Court denied defendant's motion and granted plaintiff's motion to compel arbitration. Rather than appeal the order to compel arbitration, defendant filed a motion under former Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), for relief from the order on grounds that the matter was moot. Following the order, the parties had agreed to settle a separate grievance concerning a pay increase, but the settlement did not address arbitration. The District Court concluded that the issues in controversy were not moot and denied defendant's motion. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. A live case or controversy regarding arbitration existed throughout the proceedings in District Court. The case was not moot when the District Court issued its arbitration order, so the order was not void under former Rule 60(b)(4) and denial of defendant's motion for relief was not error. Greater Missoula Area Federation of Early Childhood Educators & Related Personnel v. Child Start, Inc., 2009 MT 362, 353 M 201, 219 P3d 881 (2009).

Expectation of Arbitration Unreasonable Under Contract of Adhesion: Plaintiff signed a contract to purchase a used motor home and subsequently discovered that it needed $17,000 in mitigation damages. Defendant moved to compel arbitration and the motion was granted, so plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court held that because plaintiff's options were to accept or reject the contract without an opportunity to negotiate the preprinted terms, the contract was one of adhesion. The arbitration clause in the contract by which plaintiff waived various constitutional and procedural rights was not within plaintiff's reasonable expectations, so the arbitration clause was determined to be unenforceable. The District Court was reversed. Woodruff v. Bretz, Inc., 2009 MT 329, 353 M 6, 218 P3d 486 (2009), following Kloss v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 2002 MT 129, 310 M 123, 54 P3d 1 (2002), distinguishing Denton v. First Interstate Bank of Commerce, 2006 MT 193, 333 M 169, 142 P3d 797 (2006). However, see Graziano v. Stock Farm Homeowners Ass'n, Inc., 2011 MT 194, 361 Mont. 332, 258 P.3d 999, which held that an arbitration provision contained in covenants, conditions, and restrictions (CCRs) was within a sophisticated businessman's reasonable expectations since the businessman, a former chief executive officer of Apple Computer, Inc., had prior experience with arbitration provisions and had notice of the CCRs. Claim Involving Interests of Federal Agency — Order for Arbitration Under Federal Law Proper: A dispute arose between the development manager and a construction manager on a federal construction project for the National Institutes of Health (NIH). The construction manager filed a demand for arbitration, and the District Court ordered the parties to resolve the dispute under the Federal Acquisition Regulation (FAR) or the Federal Contract Disputes Act (CDA) rather than through the American Arbitration Association. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed. Because the dispute did not relate solely to the construction manager's obligations but instead involved the interests of the federal government through the NIH, the District Court did not err in ordering the parties to include the NIH as a party and resolve the dispute under FAR or CDA dispute resolution procedures. Higgins Dev. Partners, LLC v. Skanska USA Bldg., Inc., 2009 MT 287, 352 M 243, 216 P3d 199 (2009).

Party Not Required to Submit to Arbitration Absent Contractual Agreement — Question of Arbitration to Be Decided by Court: A party cannot be required to submit to arbitration if the party has not agreed in the contract to submit to arbitration. Unless the parties clearly and unmistakably provide otherwise, the question of whether the parties agreed to arbitration is to be decided by the court, not the arbitrator. State ex rel. Bullock v. Philip Morris, Inc., 2009 MT 261, 352 M 30, 217 P3d 475 (2009), following AT&T Technologies v. Communication Workers of Am., 475 US 643 (1986), and followed in Higgins Dev. Partners, LLC v. Skanska USA Bldg., Inc., 2009 MT 287, 352 M 243, 216 P3d 199 (2009). See also Willems v. U.S. Bancorp Piper Jaffray, Inc., 2005 MT 37, 326 M 103, 107 P3d 465 (2005).

Existence of Contract Issue for Court — Validity of Contract Issue for Arbitrator: When a party challenges a contract containing an arbitration clause on the ground that the parties never entered a contract, the court, not arbitration, is the appropriate forum to decide whether a contract existed, prior to compelling arbitration. Thompson v. Lithia Chrysler Jeep Dodge of Great Falls, 2008 MT 175, 343 M 392, 185 P3d 332 (2008), clarifying this narrow exception to the rule established in Buckeye Check Cashing, Inc. v. Cardegna, 546 US 440 (2006), and Martz v. Beneficial Mont., Inc., 2006 MT 94, 332 M 93, 135 P3d 790 (2006). See also Foss v. Circuit City Stores, Inc., 477 F. Supp. 2d 230 (D.C. Maine 2007).

Arbitration Provision in Adhesive Contract Enforceable — Noncompetition Clause Within Weaker Party's Reasonable Expectation: Larsen asserted that an employment contract containing a noncompetition clause was a contract of adhesion and that the arbitration clause in the contract was unenforceable. The Supreme Court applied the factors in Kloss v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 2002 MT 129, 310 M 123, 54 P3d 1 (2002), and determined that the contract was indeed adhesive. However, simply being adhesive does not render a contract invalid and unenforceable under Kloss. The contract must also either fall outside the weaker party's reasonable expectation or be unconscionable. In this case, Larsen had 20 years' experience in the insurance industry and had entered various similar employment agreements that contained arbitration clauses during those years, and the arbitration provision was stated in bold letters on the first page of the agreement. These facts constituted sufficient grounds to support the conclusion that the arbitration clause fell within Larsen's reasonable expectations and was therefore enforceable. However, once the District Court determined the validity of the arbitration clause, the court exceeded its authority in deciding additional substantive issues under the agreement that should have been decided by an arbitrator, so the case was remanded for arbitration. Larsen v. W. St. Ins. Agency, Inc., 2007 MT 270, 339 M 407, 170 P3d 956 (2007), following Martz v. Beneficial Mont., Inc., 2006 MT 94, 332 M 93, 135 P3d 790 (2006).

Challenge to Contract or to Arbitration Clause — When Arbitration Appropriate: Plaintiffs defaulted on a loan with defendant, and nonjudicial foreclosure proceedings were begun. The loan contract contained an arbitration clause, but plaintiffs challenged the validity of the contract as a whole, not the validity of the arbitration clause. On defendant's motion, the District Court ordered arbitration, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court held that under federal law, when a complaint specifically challenges a contract arbitration clause, the doctrine of severability set out in Prima Paint Corp. v. Flood & Conklin Mfg. Co., 388 US 395 (1967), in conjunction with the Federal Arbitration Act, allows a court to hear the challenge. However, when, as here, a complaint challenges a contract as a whole, Prima Paint and Buckeye Check Cashing, Inc. v. Cardegna, 546 US 440 (2006), require a court to grant a motion to compel arbitration if the contract contains an arbitration provision. Thus, despite plaintiffs' contention that the contract itself was void ab initio, the District Court was affirmed. Martz v. Beneficial Mont., Inc., 2006 MT 94, 332 M 93, 135 P3d 790 (2006). However, see Thompson v. Lithia Chrysler Jeep Dodge of Great Falls, 2008 MT 175, 343 M 392, 185 P3d 332 (2008), in which a narrow exception to the Martz rule established that when a party challenges a contract containing an arbitration clause on the ground that the parties never entered a contract, the court, not arbitration, is the appropriate forum to decide whether a contract existed, prior to compelling arbitration.

Investment Agreement Containing Arbitration Clause Considered Contract of Adhesion — Remand for Consideration of Investor's Reasonable Expectations and Potential Contract Formation Defenses: Zigrang entered an investment agreement with defendant investment company. The agreement contained an arbitration provision. When Zigrang learned that defendant frequently traded securities in Zigrang's account without permission, Zigrang filed a complaint, which was one of 23 suits filed by investors alleging defendant's mismanagement of accounts. Defendant moved to compel arbitration pursuant to the agreement. A panel of three judges sat en banc to hear evidence common to all 23 cases. Defendant's motion to compel arbitration was denied, but the order contained common findings of fact that did not apply to Zigrang, including a mischaracterization of Zigrang's investment agreement. Defendant appealed. The Supreme Court noted that the agreement constituted a contract of adhesion that supported other contract formation defenses, but did not in itself constitute a sufficient basis for invalidating the agreement. The Supreme Court was unable to completely examine Zigrang's contract formation defenses, including unconscionability, waiver, and reasonable expectations, because the District Court's order relied on the mistaken finding of fact. Thus, the court remanded for further findings of fact related to Zigrang's investment agreement, noting that an inquiry into Zigrang's expectations should consist only of an analysis of Zigrang's objectively reasonable expectations regarding the agreement from Zigrang's perspective and that Zigrang's expectations might negate the arbitration provisions. Zigrang v. U.S. Bancorp Piper Jaffray, Inc., 2005 MT 282, 329 M 239, 123 P3d 237 (2005). See also Iwen v. U.S. W. Direct, 1999 MT 63, 293 M 512, 977 P2d 989 (1999), and Kloss v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 2002 MT 129, 310 M 123, 54 P3d 1 (2002).

Predispute Arbitration Provisions Unenforceable — Motion to Compel Arbitration Properly Denied: Plaintiff opened several Piper Automatic Transfer Accounts and later brought an action alleging defendants' mismanagement of the accounts. Defendants sought to compel arbitration based on predispute arbitration clauses in the account agreements requiring that any dispute be resolved by arbitration. The motion to compel arbitration was denied, and defendants appealed. The Supreme Court held that because the agreements granted defendants' brokers the discretion to buy and sell securities, a fiduciary duty was created that defendants breached by failing to explain the consequences of the arbitration provision prior to formation of the contract. The predispute arbitration provisions were therefore unenforceable, and denial of the motion to compel arbitration was affirmed. Willems v. U.S. Bancorp Piper Jaffray, Inc., 2005 MT 37, 326 M 103, 107 P3d 465 (2005), following Kloss v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 2002 MT 129, 310 M 123, 54 P3d 1 (2002). See also Chor v. Piper, Jaffray & Hopwood, 261 M 143, 862 P2d 26 (1993).

Contract to Arbitrate Not Formed by Employee Handbook and Employee's Acknowledgment — Ambiguous Arbitration Provisions: When Hubner began working for defendant communications company, she signed an acknowledgment in an employee handbook that contained an arbitration provision. The arbitration clause provided that all controversies would be subject to binding arbitration, but the clauses in the handbook specified that the handbook did not constitute a contract of employment or create any relationship other than an employment-at-will relationship. When Hubner's employment was subsequently terminated, she brought a state claim for wrongful discharge, and defendant moved for a summary disposition compelling arbitration pursuant to this section. The District Court agreed with Hubner that there was no agreement to arbitrate and denied the motion, so defendant appealed. Defendant argued that because the arbitration clause was separable, it could be independently enforced. A state contract law defense that goes to the entire contract rather than specifically to an arbitration clause does not defeat a motion to compel arbitration; however, when a defense is aimed directly at the arbitration provision rather than the entire contract, state law contract defenses may be applied to hold that no enforceable agreement to arbitrate was made. Further, acceptance or consent by the party against whom a contract is sought to be enforced is required before a contract is enforceable. The language in the handbook was ambiguous and construed against the drafter. The ambiguity prevented Hubner from knowing and accepting that she was agreeing to binding arbitration by signing the handbook. Thus, no contract to arbitrate was formed by virtue of the handbook and Hubner's acknowledgment, even when the arbitration provision was considered separately from the rest of the handbook. The District Court was affirmed. Hubner v. Cutthroat Communications, Inc., 2003 MT 333, 318 M 421, 80 P3d 1256 (2003).

No Showing of Acts Inconsistent With Right to Arbitrate — Finding of No Waiver of Arbitration Affirmed: A construction contract between the parties contained an arbitration clause. When plaintiff ceased making payments, defendant proposed attempting nonbinding mediation prior to binding arbitration. Mediation failed, so defendant filed a construction lien and sought arbitration. However, before arbitration occurred, plaintiff filed a breach of contract and slander of title action arising out of allegedly defective construction. Defendant then moved to compel arbitration, and the motion was granted. Plaintiff contended that defendant's actions constituted an implied waiver of arbitration, but the District Court found that defendant had not waived arbitration, so plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. A party asserting a waiver bears a heavy burden and must show: (1) knowledge of the existing right to compel arbitration; (2) acts inconsistent with the right to arbitrate; and (3) prejudice to the party resisting arbitration. Here, defendant's counsel's letter proposing mediation was clear that if mediation failed, defendant would enforce arbitration, and the filing of the lien was not to advance litigation, but rather to protect defendant's security interests in the property. Any prejudice to plaintiff from the lien filing would have occurred whether the parties arbitrated or litigated. Therefore, defendant did not engage in acts inconsistent with the right to arbitrate, and the District Court correctly found that defendant did not waive the right to arbitration. Stewart v. Covill & Basham Constr., LLC, 2003 MT 220, 317 M 153, 75 P3d 1276 (2003). See also Downey v. Christensen, 251 M 386, 825 P2d 557 (1992), and *Holm-Sutherland Co., Inc. v. Security Brokerage Contracts — Contract of Adhesion Rendering Arbitration Clause Unenforceable: Kloss opened a full-service brokerage account with defendant, which permitted Kloss to purchase securities and maintain a money market account and which included a living trust account. The account did well, and Kloss decided to set up a charitable trust with the bond proceeds. The initial account and the living trust agreement contained a mandatory arbitration clause, and the charitable trust incorporated the arbitration clause by reference. Kloss then had second thoughts about the charitable trust and petitioned to revoke it. Defendant moved to compel arbitration, and the District Court granted the motion, citing Chor v. Piper, Jaffray & Hopwood, 261 M 143, 862 P2d 26 (1993), and Iwen v. U.S. W. Direct, 1999 MT 63, 293 M 512, 977 P2d 989 (1999), for the holding that defendant had no obligation to explain the terms of the contract because it was within Kloss's reasonable expectations and that even if the contract was considered a contract of adhesion, it was not unenforceable because it was not unconscionable. Kloss appealed, arguing that the arbitration clause was part of a contract of adhesion and that waiver of the constitutional right to jury trial should not be presumed from the signing of a contract of adhesion. Defendant maintained that form contracts prepared by securities brokers are not contracts of adhesion dictated by one party to another who has no voice in its formulation, and that arbitration clauses contained in the contracts are not unconscionable. The Supreme Court examined Passage v. Prudential-Bache Sec., Inc., 223 M 60, 727 P2d 1298 (1986), for an explanation of contracts of adhesion in the securities context and the circumstances under which they are unenforceable. The court distinguished both Chor and Passage, finding that the contracts in this case were clearly contracts of adhesion because they were standardized forms containing terms that Kloss had no opportunity to negotiate if wishing to invest with defendant. Further, the arbitration clause by which Kloss waived the right to access to state courts, the right to jury trial, the right to reasonable discovery, the right to findings of fact based on the evidence, and the right to enforce the law by way of appeal was clearly not within Kloss's reasonable expectations. The arbitration clause was never explained by defendant, and Kloss was not aware of the arbitration provision in the contract. Thus, the District Court committed reversible error when it concluded that the arbitration clause was enforceable. Kloss v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 2002 MT 129, 310 M 123, 54 P3d 1 (2002), followed in Larsen v. W. St. Ins. Agency, Inc., 2007 MT 270, 339 M 407, 170 P3d 956 (2007), with regard to factors to be applied in determining a contract of adhesion.

Failure of Employer to Respond to Arbitration Request — Waiver of Right to Arbitrate: The employment agreement between Firestone and Oasis Telecommunications, Data and Records, Inc. (Oasis), contained a dispute resolution clause providing that if a disagreement arose, the parties would negotiate in good faith, and that if they did not reach a solution within 30 days of the first written notice, then upon a 30-day notice by either party, the issue would be submitted to arbitration. Oasis terminated Firestone's employment on May 8, 2000. On May 18, Firestone requested arbitration. On June 7, Firestone submitted a list of potential arbitrators to Oasis for consideration, and requested a response within 10 days. Oasis never responded until August 11, after Firestone had filed federal suit against Oasis on July 7 (which was dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction), and had filed virtually the same suit in state court on August 1, alleging Oasis's breach of the employment contract and the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Oasis moved to compel arbitration on August 25, but the District Court denied the motion, so Oasis appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. When the District Court denied Oasis's request to compel arbitration, the court impliedly found that Oasis's failure to respond constituted waiver of its right to arbitrate the dispute. The Supreme Court applied the factors in Downey v. Christensen, 251 M 386, 825 P2d 557 (1992), in deciding whether a waiver occurred. The factors require the party asserting waiver to demonstrate: (1) knowledge of the existing right to compel arbitration; (2) acts inconsistent with the right to arbitrate the dispute; and (3) prejudice to the party resisting arbitration. The existence of the first factor was undisputed because Oasis did not dispute knowledge of the right to arbitrate. Regarding the second factor, the May 18 notice commenced the 30-day period prescribed by the employment agreement, but Oasis did not deliver a response until well after the expiration of the 30-day period, and that indifference to Firestone's request constituted an act inconsistent with the right to arbitrate the dispute. Regarding the third factor, when Oasis failed to respond to the arbitration request, Firestone had no alternative other than to commence District Court proceedings, was subjected to unnecessary delay, and incurred court costs and fees that could otherwise have been avoided, so Firestone was prejudiced by Oasis's inaction. Therefore, the Downey factors were met, and Oasis's failure to respond to a request for arbitration within the period set out in the employment contract constituted waiver of the right to compel arbitration. Firestone v. Oasis Telecommunications, Data & Records, Inc., 2001 MT 297, 307 M 469, 38 P3d 796 (2001). See also Holm-Sutherland Co., Inc. v. Shelby, 1999 MT 150, 295 M 65, 982 P2d 1053 (1999).

Dispute Over Whether Agreement to Arbitrate Exists — Motion to Compel Arbitration Improper: The District Court found that the arbitration provision in a contract to provide on-line stock trading was valid and enforceable and compelled arbitration. Although it is true that a court is required to follow a liberal policy in enforcing arbitration agreements, including resolving any doubts concerning the scope of arbitrable issues in favor of arbitration, under this section, arbitration may not be ordered if there is a substantial and bona fide dispute over whether an arbitration agreement exists. Further, the Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C. 1, et seq., provides that an agreement to arbitrate is valid except when grounds exist at law or in equity to revoke the contract, reversing the longtime judicial hostility to arbitration agreements and putting them on the same footing as other contract provisions. A District Court may properly adjudicate the validity of an arbitration agreement only when a party contests the validity of an arbitration clause within a contract but does not contest the validity of the contract as a whole. Here, plaintiffs were on notice that there was some form of arbitration governing the agreement, but they had no indication that they were agreeing to binding arbitration or that arbitration was their exclusive remedy because they allegedly never received the specific terms and conditions of the agreement, creating a substantial ambiguity. Because there was a substantial and bona fide dispute over the arbitration agreement that could not be overcome by the general policy encouraging upholding agreements to arbitrate, the District Court committed reversible error in not fully addressing whether a valid arbitration agreement existed, in dismissing the case for lack of jurisdiction, and in compelling arbitration. Kingston v. Ameritrade, Inc., 2000 MT 269, 302 M 90, 12 P3d 929, 57 St. Rep. 1137 (2000).

No District Court Jurisdiction to Grant Summary Judgment When Dispute Subject to Arbitration: A condition of Burkhardt's employment agreement with Semitool, Inc. (Semitool), was that employment disputes would be subject to Montana law and the Uniform Arbitration Act. After 8 months of employment, Burkhardt was terminated. He later brought suit against Semitool, alleging that: (1) he had been terminated without good cause; (2) his termination was in retaliation for his refusal to violate public policy; (3) Semitool's opposition to his application for unemployment benefits was without probable cause and motivated by malice; and (4) representations made to him prior to employment were deceptive and motivated by malice, contained misrepresentations, and included false advertisements concerning the kind or character of the employment. In its answer, Semitool demanded arbitration, and Burkhardt accepted the arbitration offer on the first two issues. The parties agreed that because trade secrets were involved, the record would be sealed and hearings closed to the public to avoid disclosure of confidential information. Semitool then moved to dismiss for failure to state a claim or, alternatively, to compel arbitration of all four claims. The District Court converted the motion to dismiss into a motion for summary judgment and held a hearing to discuss both motions, after which it granted summary judgment to Semitool and dismissed all four claims. The court determined that because proof of the allegations in the complaint would require disclosure of confidential attorney-client matters and because violation of the attorney-client privilege prejudiced the public interest, that prejudice was a proper ground upon which to invalidate the arbitration agreement. Burkhardt appealed. On appeal, the Supreme Court cited 39-2-914 and Ratchye v. Lucas, 1998 MT 87, 288 M 345, 957 P2d 1128 (1998), as controlling. Once an offer to arbitrate has been accepted, neither the District Court nor the parties have a right to continue the lawsuit. The exception relating to the public interest pertains to the validity of the arbitration agreement, not to the merits of the underlying dispute. Thus, the District Court erred in deciding the merits of the issues because it lacked jurisdiction to do so once the parties agreed to arbitrate. Summary judgment was reversed and the claims were remanded for arbitration. Burkhart v. Semitool, Inc., 2000 MT 201, 300 M 480, 5 P3d 1031, 57 St. Rep. 785 (2000). See also Ensey v. Mini Mart, Inc., 2013 MT 94, 369 Mont. 476, 300 P.3d 1144.

Commencement of Litigation, Delay in Asserting Right to Arbitrate, and Other Acts Held Implied Waiver of Right to Arbitrate: Holm-Sutherland contracted with the town of Shelby to construct sewer and water improvements. When a dispute arose, Holm-Sutherland at first demanded arbitration, but Shelby sued to enjoin arbitration on the grounds that the arbitration clause in the contract did not comply with the then-existing statutory notice requirements. Holm-Sutherland agreed to the injunction. The statutory notice requirements were subsequently held by the U.S. Supreme Court in Doctor's Associates, Inc., v. Casarotto, 517 US 681 (1996), to have been preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act. In the meantime, Holm-Sutherland filed a civil action for damages against Shelby and its engineering firm, seeking damages for breach of contract but not seeking arbitration. Approximately 20 months after the Casarotto decision and less than 10 weeks prior to trial, Holm-Sutherland again demanded arbitration and Shelby responded that by demanding a jury trial in the city's action for damages, Holm-Sutherland had expressly waived its right to arbitration. Arbitration was ordered by the District Court. The Montana Supreme Court held that here had been no express waiver by Holm-Sutherland of its right to arbitrate. However, relying upon its opinions in Thiel v. Johnson, 219 M 271, 711 P2d 829 (1985), and Downey v. Christensen, 251 M 386, 825 P2d 557 (1992), the Supreme Court held that Holm-Sutherland's cumulative actions were so inconsistent with its initial demand for arbitration that the company had impliedly waived its contractual right to arbitration. These inconsistent actions included a demand for a jury trial in response to Shelby's action to enjoin arbitration, initiation of an action for damages against Shelby in which no demand for arbitration was made, and its much delayed demand for arbitration made 20 months after the Casarotto decision by the U.S. Supreme Court. The Montana Supreme Court found that Shelby had been prejudiced by the actions of Holm-Sutherland in electing to pursue a judicial remedy and consequently held those actions to constitute an implied waiver of its right to arbitration. Holm-Sutherland Co., Inc. v. Shelby, 1999 MT 150, 295 M 65, 982 P2d 1053, 56 St. Rep. 595 (1999).

Arbitration Clause in Standardized Form Advertising Agreement — Lack of Mutuality of Obligation and Meaningful Choice Considered Unconscionable Contract of Adhesion: Iwen sued U.S. West Direct for damages for negligent construction of a yellow pages advertisement, infliction of emotional distress, and punitive damages. The District Court held that the parties were bound by the arbitration clause in the directory advertising order. The advertising order was a standardized form, the terms of which Iwen was unable to negotiate and for which Iwen's only choice was to accept or reject, constituting an agreement of adhesion. The arbitration provision lacked mutuality of obligation, was one-sided, and contained terms that were unreasonably favorable to U.S. West Direct, leaving Iwen, as the weaker bargaining party, no meaningful choice regarding acceptance of its provisions. Viewed from the perspective of consumer Iwen, the arbitration clause was held to be unconscionable, and the Supreme Court reversed, striking the arbitration clause, pursuant to 30-2-302, and remanding for further proceedings. Iwen v. U.S. W. Direct, 1999 MT 63, 293 M 512, 977 P2d 989, 56 St. Rep. 263 (1999), following Passage v. Prudential-Bache Sec., Inc., 223 M 60, 727 P2d 1298, 43 St. Rep. 1532 (1986), and Leibrand v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 272 M 1, 898 P2d 1220, 52 St. Rep. 557 (1995), and distinguishing Snap-on Tools Corp. v. Vetter, 838 F. Supp. 468 (D.C. Mont. 1993). District Court Bound by Arbitration Agreement: In 1995, a homeowners' association filed a complaint seeking to compel subdivision developers to complete a water system as designed and approved in the 1970s. The developers contended that the water system was complete as built. Before trial, the parties entered into a settlement agreement that included a provision stating that any disputes would be settled by arbitration. The water system was not completed on time, so the association moved to enforce the settlement agreement by an order of specific performance or by arbitration. The District Court denied the motion for arbitration on grounds that the agreement was clear and ordered the developers to perform the specific terms of the settlement agreement. When a court is asked to compel arbitration of a dispute, the threshold inquiry is whether the parties agreed to arbitrate. Settlement agreements requiring arbitration are enforceable in Montana, as are other contracts, except on grounds that exist at law or in equity for the revocation of a contract. Although the settlement agreement in this case contemplated the remedy of specific performance, it was not an alternative to arbitration but rather a remedy available to the arbitrators when interpreting and enforcing the agreement. Because no conditions existed that would void the arbitration clause, the trial court erred in ignoring the arbitration agreement and deciding the dispute, rather than ordering the parties to arbitrate as they had agreed. Ratchye v. Lucas, 1998 MT 87, 288 M 345, 957 P2d 1128, 55 St. Rep. 354 (1998).

Collective Bargaining — Arbitration — Once Matter Determined to Be Arbitrable Procedure, Wholly Within Jurisdiction of Arbitrator: The union filed a grievance on an employee's behalf, challenging the employee's transfer as a violation of the collective bargaining agreement. Later, the employee reached a retirement agreement with Montana Power Company (MPC) that included a release by the employee of grievances against MPC. MPC claimed that the arbitrability of the grievance was precluded by the private contract entered into by MPC and the employee. MPC went to court seeking an alternative writ of prohibition to prevent arbitration. The court issued a writ of prohibition and, after hearing, made the writ permanent. The union appealed to the Supreme Court, which held that this was a procedural, rather than a substantive, challenge to the collective bargaining agreement and that once a grievance is determined to be arbitrable according to the collective bargaining agreement, subsequent procedural questions are wholly within the jurisdiction of the arbitrator. Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 55, 929 P2d 839, 53 St. Rep. 1296 (1996).

District Court Ruling on Validity of Arbitration Clause: Mueske argued that the arbitration clause in his contract with a securities firm was invalid. The Supreme Court held that as long as a party was disputing the validity of an arbitration clause and not the contract as a whole, then the District Court may rule on the clause's validity rather than require the parties to submit to arbitration, as would be the case if the contract as a whole were being contested. Mueske v. Piper, Jaffray & Hopwood, Inc., 260 M 207, 859 P2d 444, 50 St. Rep. 1009 (1993).

Not All Disputes Subject to Arbitration by Mere Presence of Grievance Clause: Statutes governing collective bargaining for public employees do not provide a basis for requiring arbitration. Although a bargaining agreement may contain a grievance procedure culminating in arbitration, the mere existence of that provision does not require all controversies to be arbitrated, nor does entry by a party into a bargaining agreement containing a grievance procedure imply consent to submitting all disputes to arbitration. Under this section, the District Court must determine the arbitrability of a controversy when one party denies that the issue requires arbitration. If the court determines that an agreement to arbitrate the controversy does not exist, denial of an application for arbitration is proper. Missoula County High School Educ. Ass'n v. Bd. of Trustees, 259 M 438, 857 P2d 696, 50 St. Rep. 870 (1993).

Concurrent Proceedings Not Precluded: A terminated teacher filed an appeal pursuant to 20-3-210. The teacher's union filed a grievance, alleging that the termination was a violation of the collective bargaining agreement. The school superintendent refused to process the grievance pending the teacher's statutory appeal. When the teacher dismissed the statutory appeal, the union filed an action to compel arbitration of the grievance pursuant to the Uniform Arbitration Act and the collective bargaining agreement. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that nothing in the teacher's collective bargaining agreement or in the election of remedies law precludes concurrent proceedings on the termination. Frazer Educ. Ass'n v. Valley County School District No. 2, 256 M 223, 846 P2d 267, 50 St. Rep. 41 (1993).

Participation in Discovery Not Preclusive of Right to Arbitration — Waiver Not Shown: Downeys presented a number of claims against Christensen and Baker Boy Bake Shops, Inc. (Baker Boy), a donut franchise, alleging fraud, breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and negligence stemming from a franchise agreement between Downeys and Baker Boy. Immediately after serving the complaint, Downeys began discovery by serving requests for production, which were answered separately by Christensen and Baker Boy, who subsequently began their own discovery procedures. The District Court denied a motion to compel arbitration and stay proceedings, finding that participation in discovery constituted a waiver of arbitration. Failure to compel the parties to submit their claims to arbitration was error, given a clause in the franchise agreement requiring arbitration rather than civil litigation, when the waiver was not proved by actions inconsistent with the right to arbitrate or by a showing of prejudice arising from any inconsistent actions. Downey v. Christensen, 251 M 386, 825 P2d 557, 49 St. Rep. 88 (1992), followed in Holm-Sutherland Co. Inc. v. Shelby, 1999 MT 150, 295 M 65, 982 P2d 1053, 56 St. Rep. 595 (1999). However, see Casarotto v. Lombardi, 268 M 369, 886 P2d 931, 51 St. Rep. 1350 (1994), vacated and remanded in 515 US 1129, 132 L Ed 2d 807, 115 S Ct 2552, (1995), and reaffirmed and reinstated in Casarotto v. Lombardi, 274 M 3, 901 P2d 596, 52 St. Rep. 911 (1995), reversed and remanded in Doctor's Associates, Inc. v. Casarotto, 517 US 681, 134 L Ed 2d 902, 116 S Ct 1652 (1996).

Jurisdiction in Determining Arbitration Issues: The District Court has jurisdiction only if the issue is the making of the arbitration portion of an agreement. If the issue is the validity of the entire agreement, this must be submitted to the arbitrators. Vukasin v. D.A. Davidson & Co., 241 M 126, 785 P2d 713, 47 St. Rep. 135 (1990), following Larsen v. Opie, 237 M 108, 771 P2d 977, 46 St. Rep. 660 (1989). See also Prima Paint Corp. v. Flood & Conklin Mfg. Co., 388 US 395, 18 L Ed 2d 1270, 87 S Ct 1801 (1967).

Court Review of Claim of Fraud Inducing Arbitration Clause Not Fraud Inducing Entry Into Contract Allowed Under Federal Arbitration Act: The appellant alleged that fraud had induced him to enter into an option agreement and margin contract with the respondents. The appellant further stated that he had not read the arbitration clause or the clause that exposed him to unlimited losses. The Supreme Court ruled that since the appellant only alleged fraud in the inducement and did not specifically allege that he had been induced to agree to the arbitration clause, the entire matter, including fraud in the inducement, was subject to arbitration under the Uniform Arbitration Act (Title 27, ch. 5). Larsen v. Opie, 237 M 108, 771 P2d 977, 46 St. Rep. 660 (1989).

Motion to Compel Arbitration Properly Denied: Where purchase of limited partnership interests occurred prior to execution of an arbitration agreement that prospectively applied arbitration to future accounts, the District Court properly denied a motion to compel arbitration retroactively. Frates v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 233 M 377, 760 P2d 748, 45 St. Rep. 1567 (1988), distinguishing Gilmore v. Shearson/Am. Express, Inc., 668 F. Supp. 314 (S.D.N.Y. 1987).

Arbitrability of Claims Against Multiple Defendants — Same Facts, Same Actions: Complaints relating to mishandling or unwise management of accounts were filed against Prudential-Bache Securities, Inc. (Prudential) and G.T. Murray Company (Murray). The Murray defendants' motion to compel arbitration was denied when the District Court found that they were not signatories to the customer agreement form, but Prudential's motion to compel arbitration was granted. Upon examination of the customer agreement, the Supreme Court found that Prudential was not a signatory either; in fact the agreement form did not clearly identify the party with whom plaintiffs were contracting. However, since the claims against Prudential and Murray arose out of the same facts and the same actions, to separate the claims as to the defendants would be inappropriate. Therefore, the court held that the claims against all defendants were arbitrable. Passage v. Prudential-Bache Sec., Inc., 223 M 60, 727 P2d 1298, 43 St. Rep. 1532 (1986).

Claims of Children Stayed Pending Arbitration of Parents' Claims — Arbitration Ordered: Both plaintiffs and defendants objected to a District Court order staying claims on children's accounts pending arbitration of the parents' claims. Defendants argued that the children's claims were subject to arbitration, along with the other claims. Plaintiffs argued that the District Court was correct in finding that the children's accounts were not included under the terms of the customer agreement forms but contended that it was unjust to stay court action on the children's claims. The Supreme Court, citing Merrill Lynch, et al. v. Haydu, 637 F2d 391 (5th Cir. 1981), held that issues that go to the formation of the contract as a whole may properly be arbitrated. Since a factual question remained as to whether the children's accounts were covered by the customer agreement forms, the District Court order was reversed and this issue was subjected to arbitration. Passage v. Prudential-Bache Sec., Inc., 223 M 60, 727 P2d 1298, 43 St. Rep. 1532 (1986).

Enforceability of Arbitration Clause in Adhesion Contract: Plaintiffs contended that an arbitration clause in a brokerage agreement should have been declared unenforceable because it appeared in a contract of adhesion. The Supreme Court found nothing in the record to indicate that the arbitration clause was not within the parties' expectations or that the clause was oppressive or unconscionable. The court noted that federal case law demonstrates that arbitration clauses are common and enforceable in brokerage agreements (citing Finkle & Ross v. A.G. Becker Paribas, Inc., 622 F. Supp. 1505 (D.C. N.Y. 1985), and Southland Corp. v. Keating, 465 US 1, 79 L Ed 2d 1, 104 S Ct 852 (1984)) and held that even if the customer agreement form was an adhesion contract, the arbitration clause was enforceable. Passage v. Prudential-Bache Sec., Inc., 223 M 60, 727 P2d 1298, 43 St. Rep. 1532 (1986), followed in Chor v. Piper, Jaffray & Hopwood, 261 M 143, 862 P2d 26, 50 St. Rep. 1234 (1993), and Iwen v. U.S. W. Direct, 1999 MT 63, 293 M 512, 977 P2d 989, 56 St. Rep. 263 (1999). See also Cohen v. Wedbush, Noble, Cooke, Inc., 841 F2d 282 (9th Cir. 1988).

Case Notes

Injunction in Arbitration Award Not Restrictive of Constitutional Right to Access Courts: The Langemeiers and Kuehls became involved in a dispute over a county road easement between their adjoining lands, and the dispute eventually was submitted to arbitration. The final arbitration award provided injunctive relief to the Langemeiers by prohibiting the Kuehls from commencing or prosecuting any further action or proceeding regarding the property or challenging the ownership of the parcel. The Kuehls complained that the injunctive language was so overbroad that it took property from them without due process of law and improperly restricted their constitutional right to access courts. However, the initial memorandum of understanding, the settlement agreement, and the final arbitration award all established that the Kuehls had no property interest in the disputed roadway, so they could not complain that they were deprived of the use of property that was not theirs to use. Further, the injunctive language only sought to restrain the Kuehls from contesting matters already decided and from pursuing repetitive claims previously resolved by the settlement agreement concerning property in which they had no interest. The Kuehls had already enjoyed access to the courts as the dispute wound its way through two arbitrations, approval by the District Court, and a Supreme Court appeal. Although the constitution guarantees every person access to the courts, it does not grant a license to relitigate a cause or to burden the resources of the courts with successive claims. Therefore, the injunction did not deny the Kuehls of the use of property or access to the courts, and the arbitration award was affirmed. Langemeier v. Kuehl, 2001 MT 306, 307 M 499, 40 P3d 343 (2001).

No Error in Arbitrator Allowing Signatory to Settlement Agreement to Be Made Party to Proceedings and Awarding Judgment Against Signatory: Although defendant Kuehl's father, Robert, was not a party to the original lawsuit, Robert accompanied Kuehl at the settlement conference and signed a memorandum of understanding and a settlement agreement, having purchased a one-half interest in the property at issue for $10. After Kuehl violated the settlement agreement by refusing a survey of the property at issue, the arbitrator made Robert a party to the proceedings and awarded $801 against Kuehl, provided an injunction against any further action by Kuehl and Robert concerning the disputed property, and awarded attorney fees jointly and severally against Kuehl and Robert. Robert appealed, contending that the District Court exceeded its authority by confirming the actions of the arbitrator in making Robert a party and awarding judgment against him. The Supreme Court affirmed. The dispute over the final arbitration award arose out of the settlement agreement, which Robert signed more than 2 years prior to the proceedings, and his signature provided the arbitrator a rational basis to find that Robert was properly a party to the proceedings and to award judgment against him. Langemeier v. Kuehl, 2001 MT 306, 307 M 499, 40 P3d 343 (2001).

Case Notes

Refusal to Vacate or Modify Arbitration Award — No Abuse of Discretion: Following an automobile accident, plaintiffs and defendant agreed by stipulation to submit the dispute to binding arbitration. By stipulation, each party agreed to pay for its own attorney fees. When the arbitrator's statement included general damages and attorney fees for Margaret, the parties informed the arbitrator of the stipulated agreement. Withdrawing the initial general damages award, the arbitrator then withdrew the initial award but issued a formal written award increasing Margaret's general damages by $40,000 and included a statement that no attorney fees were awarded. Claiming that the arbitrator had improperly "juggled" general damages to cover plaintiffs' attorney fees, the defendant appealed, asking the District Court to modify or partially vacate the award by $40,000. The District Court refused, ruling that the state Uniform Arbitration Act statutorily prohibits judicial review of awards on merit. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that although the arbitrator may have briefly considered awarding attorney fees, the final written arbitration award, which did not exist until the arbitrator reduced it to writing and delivered it to the parties, did not provide for attorney fees. Duchscher v. Vaile, 269 M 1, 887 P2d 181, 51 St. Rep. 1364 (1994). See Geissler v. Sanem, 285 M 411, 949 P2d 243, 54 St. Rep. 1218 (1997), modifying the holding with respect to the scope of review and adopting the manifest disregard of the law standard.

Case Notes

No Error in Denial of Untimely Motion to Amend Arbitration Award Containing Mathematical Error in Calculation of Attorney Fees: Defendant filed a motion under former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), to modify an arbitrated award of attorney fees that was $110,000 higher than the amount claimed by plaintiffs' counsel. The District Court denied the motion and the Supreme Court affirmed on grounds that the award was time barred. Although a motion to amend an award is proper to modify an arbitration award that contains a mathematical error, the motion must be filed within 90 days of delivery of a copy of the award to the applicant pursuant to 27-5-313, or a correction may be requested of the arbitrator pursuant to 27-5-217. Defendant never requested a change of the award by the arbitrator and failed to challenge the calculation until more than 1 year after the award. Thus, even though the award was significantly inflated because of the mathematical error, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion under former Rule 59(g) to alter or amend the judgment. Dick Anderson Constr., Inc. v. Monroe Constr. Co., LLC, 2009 MT 416, 353 M 534, 221 P3d 675 (2009).

Arbitration Improperly Remanded to Arbitrator for Reconsideration of Damages — Rationally Derived Arbitration Remedy to Be Upheld on Review: The District Court remanded a wrongful discharge case to the arbitrator for reconsideration of damages. The employee contended that the District Court could not enter judgment for the amended award because the case should not have been remanded and because the arbitrator did not have authority to amend the award. The employer contended that the arbitrator exceeded his powers when he made the first award and that the District Court properly gave the arbitrator authority to vacate portions of the first award pursuant to 27-5-312. However, the exceeding of power by an arbitrator is not one of the provisions in this section pursuant to which an arbitrator may modify or correct an award. When the arbitrator granted the employer's motion to vacate portions of the original damage award, he exceeded his statutory authority. Further, the District Court was without authority to vacate or modify the award except for the statutory bases set forth in 27-5-312 and 27-5-313. If the remedy fashioned by the arbitrator is rationally derived from the arbitration agreement, it will be upheld. The Supreme Court remanded for judgment in the amount of the original arbitration award. Nelson v. Livingston Rebuild Center, Inc., 1999 MT 116, 294 M 408, 981 P2d 1185, 56 St. Rep. 486 (1999).

Case Notes

Equitable Power of Arbitrator to Award Attorney Fees When Bad Faith or Malicious Behavior Involved: The traditional rule is that an arbitrator should not award attorney fees without a statutory or contractual basis; however, an arbitrator may, under limited circumstances, award attorney fees through the arbitrator's equity powers when bad faith or malicious behavior is involved. Here, the arbitrator noted that defendant Kuehl exhibited malicious and reprehensible behavior after the parties had executed a settlement agreement by turning a dispute over 900 square feet of ground, in a beet field that never belonged to him and that was worth not even $2,000, into litigation that cost the parties tens of thousands of dollars. The award of attorney fees against Kuehl was properly within the arbitrator's equitable powers, and the District Court did not abuse its discretion in confirming the award. Langemeier v. Kuehl, 2001 MT 306, 307 M 499, 40 P3d 343 (2001). See also Nelson v. Livingston Rebuild Center, Inc., 1999 MT 116, 294 M 408, 981 P2d 1185 (1999), and *Terra W. Townhomes, L.L.C. v. Part 3

Procedure Following Award

Part Case Notes

No Authority of Arbitration Panel to Foreclose Construction Lien Against Party Not Involved in Arbitration: An arbitration panel liquidated damages related to breach of contract actions filed by both parties and also made findings of fact regarding the issue of a construction lien placed by plaintiff on improvements to defendant's property. The District Court subsequently relied on the findings in granting summary judgment in plaintiff's favor on the construction lien. Defendant third party that was not a party to arbitration contended that the panel overlooked disputed issues of fact in entering judgment in the lien foreclosure action, and the Supreme Court agreed. The panel had authority to liquidate the parties' breach of contract damages, but no authority to foreclose the construction lien or make findings of fact regarding foreclosure because the third party was not involved in the arbitration. The case was remanded for further proceedings on the lien and its foreclosure. Dick Anderson Constr., Inc. v. Monroe Constr. Co., LLC, 2009 MT 416, 353 M 534, 221 P3d 675 (2009).

Case Notes

Arbitration Award Not Beyond Arbitrator's Authority — Remanded to Confirm Award: A police officer was fired after his discharge was recommended as part of a fitness for duty examination. The officer challenged his discharge pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement (CBA) that required arbitration. Following a hearing, the arbitrator ordered the city to reinstate the police officer, pay him back wages, and remove the examination from his personnel file. The city claimed that the arbitrator had exceeded her authority and the District Court vacated the decision, which the officer appealed. The Supreme Court concluded that the arbitrator had not exceeded her authority because her decision was limited to considering the provisions for discipline and termination in the CBA and was therefore within the scope of the issues presented to her. Accordingly, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case for the District Court to confirm the arbitration award. Livingston v. Mont. Pub. Employees Ass'n, 2014 MT 314, 377 Mont. 184, 339 P.3d 41.

Statutory Limitations on Judicial Review of Arbitration Awards — Standard of Review: Judicial review of arbitration awards is limited by statute. Courts are not permitted to review the merits of a controversy that has been submitted to binding arbitration, but may only confirm, vacate, modify, or correct an arbitration award. The standard of review for a court's refusal to modify or vacate an arbitration award is whether the court abused its discretion. Teamsters Union Local No. 2 v. C.N.H. Acquisitions, Inc., 2009 MT 92, 350 M 18, 204 P3d 733 (2009).

Refusal to Vacate Arbitrator's Award Affirmed Absent Abuse of Discretion — Standard of Review: Parties entered into a written agreement to submit a complex real estate matter to binding arbitration. After the arbitrator made initial summary findings and an award, plaintiff requested vacation of the award on the basis that the award contained miscalculations and that the arbitrator had disregarded Montana law and exceeded his powers. The District Court affirmed the award. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that judicial review of arbitration is limited in that once a matter is submitted to arbitration, courts are not permitted to review the merits of the controversy, but may only confirm, vacate, modify, or correct an arbitration award pursuant to 27-5-311 through 27-5-313. The Supreme Court's standard of review for a lower court's refusal to modify or vacate an arbitration award is whether there was an abuse of discretion. Here, the arbitrator was presented with a number of complex claims, all of which were considered in rendering the final decision. The arbitrator considered applicable law, but misapplied it; however, under the narrow standard of review, an award cannot be overturned simply because the law has been misapplied. Rather, the test for manifest disregard of the law, as set out in Geissler v. Sanem, 285 M 411, 949 P2d 234 (1997), requires that the arbitrator appreciated the existence of a clearly governing legal principle but decided to ignore it. Absent an abuse of discretion in this case, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's refusal to vacate the award. Terra W. Townhomes, L.L.C. v. Stu Henkel Realty, 2000 MT 43, 298 M 344, 996 P2d 866, 57 St. Rep. 207 (2000), following Nelson v. Livingston Rebuild Center, Inc., 1999 MT 116, 294 M 408, 981 P2d 1185, 56 St. Rep. 486 (1999).

Loss of District Court Jurisdiction When Wrongful Discharge Claim Submitted to Arbitration — Leave to Amend Complaint Denied: Dahl brought a wrongful discharge action against Fred Meyer, Inc. The parties agreed to arbitration and chose an arbitrator. Prior to the hearing, the arbitrator dismissed the arbitration on grounds that federal law applied. Dahl did not object to the District Court's confirmation of the arbitrator's decision but did move for leave to amend the complaint to remove the federal implications. However, the District Court lost jurisdiction when the parties agreed to arbitration, at which point the court had authority only to confirm, modify and confirm, or vacate and remand for hearing pursuant to 27-5-311 through 27-5-314, but not the authority to allow Dahl to amend the complaint. Dahl v. Fred Meyer, Inc., 1999 MT 285, 297 M 28, 993 P2d 6, 56 St. Rep. 1149 (1999). See also Ensey v. Mini Mart, Inc., 2013 MT 94, 369 Mont. 476, 300 P.3d 1144.

Arbitration Award Not Beyond Arbitrator's Authority — Remanded to Confirm Award: A police officer was fired after his discharge was recommended as part of a fitness for duty examination. The officer challenged his discharge pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement (CBA) that required arbitration. Following a hearing, the arbitrator ordered the city to reinstate the police officer, pay him back wages, and remove the examination from his personnel file. The city claimed that the arbitrator had exceeded her authority and the District Court vacated the decision, which the officer appealed. The Supreme Court concluded that the arbitrator had not exceeded her authority because her decision was limited to considering the provisions for discipline and termination in the CBA and was therefore within the scope of the issues presented to her. Accordingly, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case for the District Court to confirm the arbitration award. Livingston v. Mont. Pub. Employees Ass'n, 2014 MT 314, 377 Mont. 184, 339 P.3d 41.

Arbitrator Did Not Exceed Powers — Court Review Likely to Undermine Finality and Expediency: A terminated teacher and a school district pursued binding arbitration pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement. The arbitrator issued a decision denying the teacher's grievance and determined that the school district had afforded the teacher due process of law and had good cause for the termination. The District Court refused to vacate, modify, or correct the arbitration award on the grounds that the arbitrator had not exceeded his powers and the teacher had not met the statutory burden. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, as the arbitrator did not decide matters that were not submitted to arbitration. Moreover, the District Court was not required to conduct an evidentiary hearing on an issue previously submitted to and determined in binding arbitration, as it would undermine the finality and expediency provided by arbitration. Roberts v. Lame Deer School District No. 6, 2013 MT 358, 373 Mont. 49, 314 P.3d 647.

District Court Has Authority to Modify or Correct Arbitration Award Only in Matters Not Affecting Merits of Case: A contract dispute between NorthWestern Corporation and Colstrip Energy Limited Partnership (CELP) was submitted to arbitration. The arbitration panel issued a decision stating that although NorthWestern Corporation had breached the contract, CELP had not incurred any damages. CELP appealed the decision to the District Court and asked the court to modify the decision on the basis that the panel had exceeded its authority. The Supreme Court held that the lower court correctly upheld the panel's decision and clarified that under the statutes, an arbitration award is to be vacated, not modified, if the arbitration panel exceeded its authority and the award can be modified or corrected by the lower court only in regard to matters that do not affect the merits of the case. Colstrip Energy Ltd. Partnership v. NorthWestern Corp. 2011 MT 99, 360 Mont. 298, 253 P.3d 870.

No Error in Denial of Untimely Motion to Amend Arbitration Award Containing Mathematical Error in Calculation of Attorney Fees: Defendant filed a motion under former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), to modify an arbitrated award of attorney fees that was $110,000 higher than the amount claimed by plaintiffs' counsel. The District Court denied the motion and the Supreme Court affirmed on grounds that the award was time barred. Although a motion to amend an award is proper to modify an arbitration award that contains a mathematical error, the motion must be filed within 90 days of delivery of a copy of the award to the applicant pursuant to 27-5-313, or a correction may be requested of the arbitrator pursuant to 27-5-217. Defendant never requested a change of the award by the arbitrator and failed to challenge the calculation until more than 1 year after the award. Thus, even though the award was significantly inflated because of the mathematical error, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion under former Rule 59(g) to alter or amend the judgment. Dick Anderson Constr., Inc. v. Monroe Constr. Co., LLC, 2009 MT 416, 353 M 534, 221 P3d 675 (2009).

Statutory Limitations on Judicial Review of Arbitration Awards — Standard of Review: Judicial review of arbitration awards is limited by statute. Courts are not permitted to review the merits of a controversy that has been submitted to binding arbitration, but may only confirm, vacate, modify, or correct an arbitration award. The standard of review for a court's refusal to modify or vacate an arbitration award is whether the court abused its discretion. Teamsters Union Local No. 2 v. C.N.H. Acquisitions, Inc., 2009 MT 92, 350 M 18, 204 P3d 733 (2009).

Insufficient Debt Amount to Trigger Arbitration — Award Void Ab Initio — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff bank sued Talmage for $112,250.84 that was owed on a credit card. Talmage received an arbitration award from a Florida arbitrator and moved to dismiss, asserting that the claim was subject to mandatory arbitration. The District Court denied the motion, and Talmage appealed. The Supreme Court noted that in this case, arbitration was governed not by Montana law but by the Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C. 1 through 16, and that the federal Act provided that when arbitration does not follow the format provided for in the arbitration agreement, an arbitration award is void ab initio. In this case, the arbitration agreement provided for mandatory arbitration only if the amount owing was not less than $250,000. Because the amount owing was less than the trigger amount, the award was void ab initio and denial of Talmage's dismissal motion was proper. Summary judgment for plaintiff was proper because the only genuine issue that Talmage raised was the claim that the dispute was subject to a binding arbitration award. The District Court was affirmed. Wells Fargo Bank v. Talmage, 2007 MT 45, 336 M 125, 152 P3d 1275 (2007).

Failure to Use Designated Arbitrator — Arbitration Award Void Under Federal Arbitration Act: In a dispute over credit card debt, defendant unilaterally chose an arbitrator who issued an award to defendant. Defendant then sought to have the award confirmed pursuant to Montana law. The District Court declined to confirm the award, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The cardmember agreement provided that arbitration was to be conducted pursuant to the Federal Arbitration Act rather than state law and that a specific arbitrator other than defendant's chosen arbitrator was to be used. Under the federal Act, when arbitration does not follow the format provided for in the arbitration agreement, the arbitration award is invalid ab initio. Thus, the award in this case was void because the arbitrator was not the arbitrator specified in the agreement and because plaintiff did not consent to the arbitration. Bank of America, N.A. (USA) v. Dahlquist, 2007 MT 32, 336 M 50, 152 P3d 718 (2007). See also Citibank (S. Dak.), N.A. v. Dahlquist, 2007 MT 42, 336 M 100, 152 P3d 693 (2007).

No Abuse of Discretion in Refusing to Vacate Arbitration Award Based on Allegations of Arbitrator Partiality Absent Showing of Evident Partiality: Plaintiffs contended that an arbitration award should be vacated because one of the arbitrators, a former employee of one of the agencies involved in the arbitration, was not neutral. The motion to vacate was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Employment status is insufficient, of itself, to establish partiality, and plaintiffs' argument amounted to a speculative and conclusory allegation of partiality, rather than the direct and demonstrable evidence of partiality required to vacate an award. Paulson v. Flathead Conserv. District, 2004 MT 136, 321 M 364, 91 P3d 569 (2004).

Equitable Power of Arbitrator to Award Attorney Fees When Bad Faith or Malicious Behavior Involved: The traditional rule is that an arbitrator should not award attorney fees without a statutory or contractual basis; however, an arbitrator may, under limited circumstances, award attorney fees through the arbitrator's equity powers when bad faith or malicious behavior is involved. Here, the arbitrator noted that defendant Kuehl exhibited malicious and reprehensible behavior after the parties had executed a settlement agreement by turning a dispute over 900 square feet of ground, in a beet field that never belonged to him and that was worth not even $2,000, into litigation that cost the parties tens of thousands of dollars. The award of attorney fees against Kuehl was properly within the arbitrator's equitable powers, and the District Court did not abuse its discretion in confirming the award. Langemeier v. Kuehl, 2001 MT 306, 307 M 499, 40 P3d 343 (2001). See also Nelson v. Livingston Rebuild Center, Inc., 1999 MT 116, 294 M 408, 981 P2d 1185 (1999), and Terra W. Townhomes, L.L.C. v. Stu Henkle Realty, 2000 MT 43, 298 M 344, 996 P2d 866 (2000).

Injunction in Arbitration Award Not Restrictive of Constitutional Right to Access Courts: The Langemeiers and Kuehls became involved in a dispute over a county road easement between their adjoining lands, and the dispute eventually was submitted to arbitration. The final arbitration award provided injunctive relief to the Langemeiers by prohibiting the Kuehls from commencing or prosecuting any further action or proceeding regarding the property or challenging the ownership of the parcel. The Kuehls complained that the injunctive language was so overbroad that it took property from them without due process of law and improperly restricted their constitutional right to access courts. However, the initial memorandum of understanding, the settlement agreement, and the final arbitration award all established that the Kuehls had no property interest in the disputed roadway, so they could not complain that they were deprived of the use of property that was not theirs to use. Further, the injunctive language only sought to restrain the Kuehls from contesting matters already decided and from pursuing repetitive claims previously resolved by the settlement agreement concerning property in which they had no interest. The Kuehls had already enjoyed access to the courts as the dispute wound its way through two arbitrations, approval by the District Court, and a Supreme Court appeal. Although the constitution guarantees every person access to the courts, it does not grant a license to relitigate a cause or to burden the resources of the courts with successive claims. Therefore, the injunction did not deny the Kuehls of the use of property or access to the courts, and the arbitration award was affirmed. Langemeier v. Kuehl, 2001 MT 306, 307 M 499, 40 P3d 343 (2001).

No Error in Arbitrator Allowing Signatory to Settlement Agreement to Be Made Party to Proceedings and Awarding Judgment Against Signatory: Although defendant Kuehl's father, Robert, was not a party to the original lawsuit, Robert accompanied Kuehl at the settlement conference and signed a memorandum of understanding and a settlement agreement, having purchased a one-half interest in the property at issue for $10. After Kuehl violated the settlement agreement by refusing a survey of the property at issue, the arbitrator made Robert a party to the proceedings and awarded $801 against Kuehl, provided an injunction against any further action by Kuehl and Robert concerning the disputed property, and awarded attorney fees jointly and severally against Kuehl and Robert. Robert appealed, contending that the District Court exceeded its authority by confirming the actions of the arbitrator in making Robert a party and awarding judgment against him. The Supreme Court affirmed. The dispute over the final arbitration award arose out of the settlement agreement, which Robert signed more than 2 years prior to the proceedings, and his signature provided the arbitrator a rational basis to find that Robert was properly a party to the proceedings and to award judgment against him. Langemeier v. Kuehl, 2001 MT 306, 307 M 499, 40 P3d 343 (2001).

Refusal to Vacate Arbitrator's Award Affirmed Absent Abuse of Discretion — Standard of Review: Parties entered into a written agreement to submit a complex real estate matter to binding arbitration. After the arbitrator made initial summary findings and an award, plaintiff requested vacation of the award on the basis that the award contained miscalculations and that the arbitrator had disregarded Montana law and exceeded his powers. The District Court affirmed the award. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that judicial review of arbitration is limited in that once a matter is submitted to arbitration, courts are not permitted to review the merits of the controversy, but may only confirm, vacate, modify, or correct an arbitration award pursuant to 27-5-311 through 27-5-313. The Supreme Court's standard of review for a lower court's refusal to modify or vacate an arbitration award is whether there was an abuse of discretion. Here, the arbitrator was presented with a number of complex claims, all of which were considered in rendering the final decision. The arbitrator considered applicable law, but misapplied it; however, under the narrow standard of review, an award cannot be overturned simply because the law has been misapplied. Rather, the test for manifest disregard of the law, as set out in Geissler v. Sanem, 285 M 411, 949 P2d 234 (1997), requires that the arbitrator appreciated the existence of a clearly governing legal principle but decided to ignore it. Absent an abuse of discretion in this case, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's refusal to vacate the award. Terra W. Townhomes, L.L.C. v. Stu Henkel Realty, 2000 MT 43, 298 M 344, 996 P2d 866, 57 St. Rep. 207 (2000), following Nelson v. Livingston Rebuild Center, Inc., 1999 MT 116, 294 M 408, 981 P2d 1185, 56 St. Rep. 486 (1999). See also Hughes v. Hughes, 2013 MT 176, 370 Mont. 499, 305 P.3d 772, refusing to vacate an ambiguous arbitration award.

Failure to Raise Issue of Arbitrator's Authority in Arbitration or District Court as Waiver of Right to Object to Arbitrator's Ruling on Appeal: Dahl brought a wrongful discharge action against Fred Meyer, Inc. The parties agreed to arbitration and chose an arbitrator. Prior to the hearing, the arbitrator determined that because the complaint alleged a motive for the discharge, it was intended to state a cause of action under ERISA (29 U.S.C. 1001, et seq.), requiring exclusive federal court jurisdiction, so arbitration was dismissed. By failing to raise the issue of whether the arbitrator lacked authority to decide that the issue was preempted by federal law, failing to contest the basis of the arbitrator's decision, and failing to object to the motion in District Court to confirm the arbitrator's award through a motion to vacate, Dahl waived the right to object to the ruling on appeal. Dahl v. Fred Meyer, Inc., 1999 MT 285, 297 M 28, 993 P2d 6, 56 St. Rep. 1149 (1999). See also St. Farm v. Cabs, Inc., 751 P2d 61 (Colo. 1988).

Arbitration Improperly Remanded to Arbitrator for Reconsideration of Damages — Rationally Derived Arbitration Remedy to Be Upheld on Review: The District Court remanded a wrongful discharge case to the arbitrator for reconsideration of damages. The employee contended that the District Court could not enter judgment for the amended award because the case should not have been remanded and because the arbitrator did not have authority to amend the award. The employer contended that the arbitrator exceeded his powers when he made the first award and that the District Court properly gave the arbitrator authority to vacate portions of the first award pursuant to this section. However, the exceeding of power by an arbitrator is not one of the provisions in 27-5-217 pursuant to which an arbitrator may modify or correct an award. When the arbitrator granted the employer's motion to vacate portions of the original damage award, he exceeded his statutory authority. Further, the District Court was without authority to vacate or modify the award except for the statutory bases set forth in 27-5-313 and this section. If the remedy fashioned by the arbitrator is rationally derived from the arbitration agreement, it will be upheld. The Supreme Court remanded for judgment in the amount of the original arbitration award. Nelson v. Livingston Rebuild Center, Inc., 1999 MT 116, 294 M 408, 981 P2d 1185, 56 St. Rep. 486 (1999), followed in Terra W. Townhomes, L.L.C. v. Stu Henkel Realty, 2000 MT 43, 298 M 344, 996 P2d 866, 57 St. Rep. 207 (2000).

"Manifest Disregard of Law" Standard Applied on Review — Prior Holdings Modified: After an arbitration ruling in favor of the defendants, the plaintiffs filed an appeal from the arbitration, claiming partiality and misconduct by the panel and that the panel had exceeded its authority.

The District Court granted the defendants' motions to dismiss on the grounds that the appeal failed to state a claim for which relief could be granted. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in dismissing the appeal. The Supreme Court adopted a manifest disregard of the law standard of review for arbitration awards under this section and modified prior holdings that held otherwise. In this case, the panel acted entirely within its power when it made an award without including specific findings of fact or conclusions of law. To determine that an arbitrator ruled in manifest disregard of the law requires more than simply a misapplication of the law by the arbitrator. Geissler v. Sanem, 285 M 411, 949 P2d 234, 54 St. Rep. 1218 (1997), followed in Roberts v. Lame Deer School District No. 6, 2013 MT 358, 373 Mont. 49, 314 P.3d 647.

Review of Arbitration Award Based on Sufficiency of Evidence Beyond Scope of Judicial Review: Stockade Enterprises argued that the lower court erred in refusing to set aside or modify the decision rendered by the arbitrator. The Supreme Court stated that the District Court had incorrectly refused to review the arbitration award on the basis that the lower court felt that it had no authority to review the award based upon the stipulation and order provisions indicating that the arbitrator's decision was binding and final. The Supreme Court indicated that Montana's Uniform Arbitration Act does allow a court to review an arbitration award regardless of the "binding" nature of the arbitration procedure. However, in the case before it, the Supreme Court held that Stockade Enterprises based its request for modification of the award on the sufficiency of the evidence and that was not one of the statutory grounds on which a court could review the award. Therefore, the refusal to review the award was not an abuse of discretion. Stockade Enterprises v. Ahl, 273 M 520, 905 P2d 156, 52 St. Rep. 1096 (1995), followed in Nelson v. Livingston Rebuild Center, Inc., 1999 MT 116, 294 M 408, 981 P2d 1185, 56 St. Rep. 486 (1999), and Terra W. Townhomes, L.L.C. v. Stu Henkel Realty, 2000 MT 43, 298 M 344, 996 P2d 866, 57 St. Rep. 207 (2000).

Refusal to Vacate or Modify Arbitration Award — No Abuse of Discretion: Following an automobile accident, plaintiffs and defendant agreed by stipulation to submit the dispute to binding arbitration. By stipulation, each party agreed to pay for its own attorney fees. When the arbitrator's statement included general damages and attorney fees for Margaret, the parties informed the arbitrator of the stipulated agreement. Withdrawing the initial general damages award, the arbitrator then withdrew the initial award but issued a formal written award increasing Margaret's general damages by $40,000 and included a statement that no attorney fees were awarded. Claiming that the arbitrator had improperly "juggled" general damages to cover plaintiffs attorney fees, the defendant appealed, asking the District Court to modify or partially vacate the award by $40,000. The District Court refused, ruling that the state Uniform Arbitration Act statutorily prohibits judicial review of awards on merit. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that although the arbitrator may have briefly considered awarding attorney fees, the final written arbitration award, which did not exist until the arbitrator reduced it to writing and delivered it to the parties, did not provide for attorney fees. Duchscher v. Vaile, 269 M 1, 887 P2d 181, 51 St. Rep. 1364 (1994), followed in May v. First Nat'l Pawn Brokers, Ltd., 269 M 19, 887 P2d 185, 51 St. Rep. 1367 (1994). The Duchscher and May holdings were modified in Geissler v. Sanem, 285 M 411, 949 P2d 234, 54 St. Rep. 1218 (1997), which adopted the manifest disregard of the law standard on appeals.

Arbitrator Did Not Exceed Powers — Court Review Likely to Undermine Finality and Expediency: A terminated teacher and a school district pursued binding arbitration pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement. The arbitrator issued a decision denying the teacher's grievance and determined that the school district had afforded the teacher due process of law and had good cause for the termination. The District Court refused to vacate, modify, or correct the arbitration award on the grounds that the arbitrator had not exceeded his powers and the teacher had not met the statutory burden. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, as the arbitrator did not decide matters that were not submitted to arbitration. Moreover, the District Court was not required to conduct an evidentiary hearing on an issue previously submitted to and determined in binding arbitration, as it would undermine the finality and expediency provided by arbitration. Roberts v. Lame Deer School District No. 6, 2013 MT 358, 373 Mont. 49, 314 P.3d 647.

District Court Has Authority to Modify or Correct Arbitration Award Only in Matters Not Affecting Merits of Case: A contract dispute between NorthWestern Corporation and Colstrip Energy Limited Partnership (CELP) was submitted to arbitration. The arbitration panel issued a decision stating that although NorthWestern Corporation had breached the contract, CELP had not incurred any damages. CELP appealed the decision to the District Court and asked the court to modify the decision on the basis that the panel had exceeded its authority. The Supreme Court held that the lower court correctly upheld the panel's decision and clarified that under the statutes, an arbitration award is to be vacated, not modified, if the arbitration panel exceeded its authority and the award can be modified or corrected by the lower court only in regard to matters that do not affect the merits of the case. Colstrip Energy Ltd. Partnership v. NorthWestern Corp. 2011 MT 99, 360 Mont. 298, 253 P.3d 870.

No Error in Denial of Untimely Motion to Amend Arbitration Award Containing Mathematical Error in Calculation of Attorney Fees: Defendant filed a motion under former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), to modify an arbitrated award of attorney fees that was $110,000 higher than the amount claimed by plaintiff's counsel. The District Court denied the motion and the Supreme Court affirmed on grounds that the award was time barred. Although a motion to amend an award is proper to modify an arbitration award that contains a mathematical error, the motion must be filed within 90 days of delivery of a copy of the award to the applicant pursuant to 27-5-313, or a correction may be requested of the arbitrator pursuant to 27-5-217. Defendant never requested a change of the award by the arbitrator and failed to challenge the calculation until more than 1 year after the award. Thus, even though the award was significantly inflated because of the mathematical error, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion under former Rule 59(g) to alter or amend the judgment. Dick Anderson Constr., Inc. v. Monroe Constr. Co., LLC, 2009 MT 416, 353 M 534, 221 P3d 675 (2009).

Statutory Limitations on Judicial Review of Arbitration Awards — Standard of Review: Judicial review of arbitration awards is limited by statute. Courts are not permitted to review the merits of a controversy that has been submitted to binding arbitration, but may only confirm, vacate, modify, or correct an arbitration award. The standard of review for a court's refusal to modify or vacate an arbitration award is whether the court abused its discretion. Teamsters Union Local No. 2 v. C.N.H. Acquisitions, Inc., 2009 MT 92, 350 M 18, 204 P3d 733 (2009).

Refusal to Vacate Arbitrator's Award Affirmed Absent Abuse of Discretion — Standard of Review: Parties entered into a written agreement to submit a complex real estate matter to binding arbitration. After the arbitrator made initial summary findings and an award, plaintiff requested vacation of the award on the basis that the award contained miscalculations and that the arbitrator had disregarded Montana law and exceeded his powers. The District Court affirmed the award. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that judicial review of arbitration is limited in that once a matter is submitted to arbitration, courts are not permitted to review the merits of the controversy, but may only confirm, vacate, modify, or correct an arbitration award pursuant to 27-5-311 through 27-5-313. The Supreme Court's standard of review for a lower court's refusal to modify or vacate an arbitration award is whether there was an abuse of discretion. Here, the arbitrator was presented with a number of complex claims, all of which were considered in rendering the final decision. The arbitrator considered applicable law, but misapplied it; however, under the narrow standard of review, an award cannot be overturned simply because the law has been misapplied. Rather, the test for manifest disregard of the law, as set out in Geissler v. Sanem, 285 M 411, 949 P2d 234 (1997), requires that the arbitrator appreciated the existence of a clearly governing legal principle but decided to ignore it. Absent an abuse of discretion in this case, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's refusal to vacate the award. Terra W. Townhomes, L.L.C. v. Stu Henkel Realty, 2000 MT 43, 298 M 344, 996 P2d 866, 57 St. Rep. 207 (2000), following Nelson v. Livingston Rebuild Center, Inc., 1999 MT 116, 294 M 408, 981 P2d 1185, 56 St. Rep. 486 (1999).

Arbitration Improperly Remanded to Arbitrator for Reconsideration of Damages — Rationally Derived Arbitration Remedy to Be Upheld on Review: The District Court remanded a wrongful discharge case to the arbitrator for reconsideration of damages. The employee contended that the District Court could not enter judgment for the amended award because the case should not have been remanded and because the arbitrator did not have authority to amend the award.

The employer contended that the arbitrator exceeded his powers when he made the first award and that the District Court properly gave the arbitrator authority to vacate portions of the first award pursuant to 27-5-312. Case Notes

No Statutory Basis for Award of Attorney Fees in Arbitrated Case: Defendant in an arbitrated case contended that attorney fees should have been awarded because defendant prevailed on the question of whether the arbitration award should be vacated. The District Court concluded that under Montana law, attorney fees are not allowed unless specifically provided by statute or agreement, except under extraordinary circumstances that did not apply here. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that this section does not provide for an award of attorney fees in an arbitrated case, that fees were not provided for by contract between the parties, and that this case did not fit any of the narrow exceptions to the traditional rule. Terra W. Townhomes, L.L.C. v. Stu Henkel Realty, 2000 MT 43, 298 M 344, 996 P2d 866, 57 St. Rep. 207 (2000), following Tanner v. Dream Island, Inc., 275 M 414, 913 P2d 641, 53 St. Rep. 208 (1996). Loss of District Court Jurisdiction When Wrongful Discharge Claim Submitted to Arbitration — Leave to Amend Complaint Denied: Dahl brought a wrongful discharge action against Fred Meyer, Inc. The parties agreed to arbitration and chose an arbitrator. Prior to the hearing, the arbitrator dismissed the arbitration on grounds that federal law applied. Dahl did not object to the District Court's confirmation of the arbitrator's decision but did move for leave to amend the complaint to remove the federal implications. However, the District Court lost jurisdiction when the parties agreed to arbitration, at which point the court had authority only to confirm, modify and confirm, or vacate and remand for hearing pursuant to 27-5-311 through 27-5-314, but not the authority to allow Dahl to amend the complaint. *Dahl v. Court Review of Claim of Fraud Inducing Arbitration Clause Not Fraud Inducing Entry Into Contract Allowed Under Federal Arbitration Act: The appellant alleged that fraud had induced him to enter into an option agreement and margin contract with the respondents. The appellant further stated that he had not read the arbitration clause or the clause that exposed him to unlimited losses. The Supreme Court ruled that since the appellant only alleged fraud in the inducement and did not specifically allege that he had been induced to agree to the arbitration clause, the entire matter, including fraud in the inducement, was subject to arbitration under the Uniform Arbitration Act (Title 27, ch. 5). *Larsen v. 2021 Amendment: Chapter 376 inserted (2)(a) regarding agreements concerning venue that involve an electrical generation facility; inserted (2)(b) defining electrical generation facility; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective May 3, 2021.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 4, Ch. 376, L. 2021, provided: "[This act] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to applications made on or after January 1, 2021."

Code Commissioner Correction: To reflect the repeal of 15-24-3001 and the enactment of an identical definition of "electrical generation facility" in 75-20-104 by Ch. 13, L. 2021, the Code Commissioner in (2)(b) substituted "75-20-104" for "15-24-3001".

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 376, L. 2021, provided: "WHEREAS, electrical generation facilities located in Montana have significant implications for the economy, environment, and health and welfare of Montana consumers; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature, mindful of its constitutional obligations under Article II, section 16, of the Montana Constitution, enacted section 27-5-323, MCA, to ensure Montana residents have a right to arbitrate in Montana; and

WHEREAS, arbitration of disputes concerning Montana electrical generation facilities outside of Montana threatens Montana's laws, policies, and the interests of Montana in securing and maintaining a reliable source of electricity.

Severability: Section 2, Ch. 376, L. 2021, was a severability clause.

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Case Notes

Choice of California Forum for Arbitration Held Void: Keystone, an auto parts business located in Montana, purchased a computer system from Triad for the management of Keystone's auto parts business. The contract was to be performed in Montana. The system failed to work properly, and Keystone sued Triad in Montana for breach of warranty, breach of contract, negligence, and negligent misrepresentation. The contract provided that disputes between the parties were to be settled before the American Arbitration Association in California, and the District Court held that the proper forum for arbitration was California. Citing Casarotto v. Lombardi, 268 M 369, 886 P2d 931 (1994), reversed on other grounds in Doctor's Associates, Inc. v. Casarotto, 517 US 681 (1996), the Supreme Court held that a contractual choice of law is governed in Montana by sections 187 and 188 of Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws. These sections provide that: (1) the state chosen by the parties will be the forum unless the application of the law of the chosen state would be contrary to the fundamental policies of another state that has a materially greater interest than the chosen state; (2) the other state would be the forum in the absence of an effective choice of law by the parties; and (3) one of the factors to be considered in making the determination of whether another state has a material interest in the enforcement of the contract is the place where the contract is to be performed. The Supreme Court noted that the contract was to be performed exclusively in Montana and therefore held that Montana had a materially greater interest in the contract issue than did California and that Montana law would therefore apply in the absence of the choice of a forum provision in the contract. The Supreme Court then held, citing State ex rel. Polaris Indus., Inc. v. District Court, 215 M 110, 695 P2d 471 (1985), and Rindal v. Seckler, 786 F. Supp. 890 (D.C. Mont. 1992), that the application of California law would be contrary to a fundamental policy of Montana as expressed in 28-2-708 because that section has historically been applied: (1) to protect Montana residents from having to litigate outside of Montana; and (2) to invalidate predispute arbitration agreements. The Supreme Court noted that whether or not 28-2-708 applies to arbitration contracts, this section provides the same protection as 28-2-708 does, but explicitly in the context of arbitration agreements. Because this section allows the waiver of a party's right to arbitration in Montana only upon advice of counsel and because there was no evidence that the right was waived based on the advice of counsel, the Supreme Court held that the provision in the contract making California the forum for arbitration was void. Keystone, Inc. v. Triad Sys. Corp., 1998 MT 326, 292 M 229, 971 P2d 1240, 55 St. Rep. 1321 (1998), followed in Wolf's Interstate Leasing & Sales, LLC v. Banks, 2009 MT 354, 353 M 189, 219 P3d 1260 (2009).

Montana Law Not Preempted by Federal Arbitration Act: Keystone, an auto parts business located in Montana, purchased a computer system from Triad for the management of Keystone's auto parts business. The contract was to be performed in Montana. The system failed to work properly, and Keystone sued Triad in Montana for breach of warranty, breach of contract, negligence, and negligent misrepresentation. The contract provided that disputes between the parties were to be settled before the American Arbitration Association in California, and the District Court held that the proper forum for arbitration was California because, among other reasons, Montana law was preempted by the Federal Arbitration Act (FAA)(9 U.S.C. 2). The Supreme Court reviewed the opinion of the U.S. Supreme Court in the case of Doctor's Associates, Inc. v. Casarotto, 517 US 681 (1996), and interpreted that opinion to mean that a state may not place arbitration clauses on an unequal footing from general contract provisions. The Supreme Court pointed out that although this section does apply only to arbitration provisions, 28-2-708 applies to contracts generally and that therefore it cannot be said that arbitration provisions are treated differently from contracts generally. The Supreme Court also pointed out that the Montana statutes preserve and do not nullify the parties' duty to arbitrate and for that reason, the case should be distinguished from those cases cited by Triad, holding that the FAA preempted state statute. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that under the rationale of Casarotto, 28-2-708 and this section are not preempted by the FAA. Keystone, Inc. v. Triad Sys. Corp., 1998 MT 326, 292 M 229, 971 P2d 1240, 55 St. Rep. 1321 (1998).

Case Notes

Federal Arbitration Act — Sophisticated Businessman — Appeal Timing of District Court's Order: The plaintiff was terminated by the defendant financial institution. The plaintiff sued his former employer and its CEO, alleging wrongful discharge under the Montana Wrongful Discharge From Employment Act. The District Court granted the defendants' motion to compel arbitration pursuant to the parties' employment agreement, and the arbitrator subsequently granted summary judgment to the defendants. The plaintiff appealed after the District Court denied his application to vacate, correct, or modify the arbitrator's award. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the District Court's order compelling arbitration and staying further proceedings was not final and appealable, that the parties had a valid agreement to arbitrate, that the provision in the employment contract was not unconscionable because the plaintiff was an experienced businessman, that the Federal Arbitration Act did not prevent the plaintiff from filing his application in state court, that which rules were applicable to the arbitration was outside the scope of its review, and that the District Court did not abuse its discretion when ruling on discovery issues. Tedesco v. Home Sav. Bancorp, Inc., 2017 MT 304, 389 Mont. 468, 407 P.3d 289.

No Abuse of Discretion in Refusing to Vacate Arbitration Award Based on Allegations of Arbitrator Partiality Absent Showing of Evident Partiality: Plaintiffs contended that an arbitration award should be vacated because one of the arbitrators, a former employee of one of the agencies involved in the arbitration, was not neutral. The motion to vacate was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Employment status is insufficient, of itself, to establish partiality, and plaintiffs' argument amounted to a speculative and conclusory allegation of partiality, rather than the direct and demonstrable evidence of partiality required to vacate an award. Paulson v. Flathead Conserv. District, 2004 MT 136, 321 M 364, 91 P3d 569 (2004).

District Court Bound by Arbitration Agreement: In 1995, a homeowners' association filed a complaint seeking to compel subdivision developers to complete a water system as designed and approved in the 1970s. The developers contended that the water system was complete as built. Before trial, the parties entered into a settlement agreement that included a provision stating that any disputes would be settled by arbitration. The water system was not completed on time, so the association moved to enforce the settlement agreement by an order of specific performance or by arbitration. The District Court denied the motion for arbitration on grounds that the agreement was clear and ordered the developers to perform the specific terms of the settlement agreement. When a court is asked to compel arbitration of a dispute, the threshold inquiry is whether the parties agreed to arbitrate. Settlement agreements requiring arbitration are enforceable in Montana, as are other contracts, except on grounds that exist at law or in equity for the revocation of a contract. Although the settlement agreement in this case contemplated the remedy of specific performance, it was not an alternative to arbitration but rather a remedy available to the arbitrators when interpreting and enforcing the agreement. Because no conditions existed that would void the arbitration clause, the trial court erred in ignoring the arbitration agreement and deciding the dispute, rather than ordering the parties to arbitrate as they had agreed. Ratchye v. Lucas, 1998 MT 87, 288 M 345, 957 P2d 1128, 55 St. Rep. 354 (1998).

Appeal Upon Denial of Motion to Compel Arbitration: This section allows appeal when a District Court denies a motion to compel arbitration. Further, 28 U.S.C. 1292(a)(1) permits appeal from an order denying arbitration as an interlocutory appeal. Frates v. Edward D. Jones & Co., 233 M 377, 760 P2d 748, 45 St. Rep. 1567 (1988).

CHAPTER 6
MONTANA MEDICAL LEGAL PANEL ACTChapter Case Notes

General Practitioner's Standard of Care — Geographical Limitation Eliminated: The Supreme Court adopted a new standard of care to be applied prospectively to treatment extended to patients, commencing on March 31, 1990. The court ruled that a nonboard-certified general practitioner is held to the standard of care of a reasonably competent general practitioner acting in the same or similar circumstances in the same or a similar community in the United States. The new rule abandons the "locality" rule that was limited to Montana communities and reverses anything to the contrary in Tallbull v. Whitney, 172 M 326, 564 P2d 162 (1977). Chapel v. Allison, 241 M 83, 785 P2d 204, 47 St. Rep. 101 (1990).

Confidentiality of Medical Legal Panel — Denial of Transcript Upheld: Plaintiffs who filed a claim with the Montana Medical Legal Panel alleging malpractice against two doctors requested a stenographic record of the hearing. The doctors opposed the request, and the Panel chairman ruled that under Rule 15(c), Panel Rules of Procedure, no transcript would be made. Plaintiffs then applied to the District Court for a Writ of Mandamus, and the court ruled that denial of the transcript violated due process under the 14th amendment of the U.S. Constitution and Art. II, sec. 17., Mont. Const. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the language of 27-6-502 indicated legislative intent that the Montana Administrative Procedure Act provisions concerning transcripts do not apply. The court held that the Panel is a purely advisory body and therefore confidential. Given its confidential nature, it cannot be said that Rule 15(c) arbitrarily denies parties a transcript or that denial of a transcript destroys the right to fully cross-examine witnesses at trial. The court found no constitutional infirmities in the workings of Rule 15(c); therefore, the District Court was reversed. State ex rel. Hufford v. Mont. Medical Legal Panel, 223 M 73, 724 P2d 186, 43 St. Rep. 1541 (1986).

Mandatory Submission of Claims to Panel — Jury Trial: Mandatory submission of claims to the panel does not unconstitutionally interfere with the right to trial by jury. A claimant is free to continue to jury trial no matter what the decision of the panel, and the jury remains the final determiner of fact. Further, the panel decision is not binding, nor is it admissible at trial. Submission to the panel is merely a permissible delay in the path to the ultimate jury verdict. Linder v. Smith, 193 M 20, 629 P2d 1187, 38 St. Rep. 912 (1981).

Expansion of Locality Rule — Medical Standards: Montana's "locality rule" imposes on a physician undertaking the care of a patient the legal duty of possessing and exercising that reasonable and ordinary degree of learning, skill, and care possessed and exercised by physicians of good standing of the same school of practice in the same or similar (emphasis added) locality in Montana. A "similar locality in Montana" within the meaning of this rule is a locality of similar geographical location, size, and character in a medical context. Tallbull v. Whitney, 172 M 326, 564 P2d 356 (1977), geographical limit eliminated, Chapel v. Allison, 241 M 83, 785 P2d 204, 47 St. Rep. 101 (1990).

Right of Access to Courts Hindered — Rational Basis: The panel act does not deny plaintiff his right of access to the courts. In cases not involving a fundamental right, access may be hindered if there exists a rational basis for doing so. The articulated basis for the panel acts in other states has been the malpractice crises existing in many states, with this legislation intended as a means to limit malpractice filings to those which are clearly meritorious. The Montana act was enacted by the Legislature for the same reason. Linder v. Smith, 193 M 20, 629 P2d 1187, 38 St. Rep. 912 (1981).

Specificity of Medical Legal Panel Pleading — Reasonable Detail: Plaintiff's small intestine was perforated during a procedure by the defendant doctor. The plaintiff filed a claim with the Montana Medical Legal Panel (MMLP), alleging failure to disclose all material facts regarding the procedure. In the District Court action, the plaintiff alleged that the defendant was negligent for not considering alternative procedures. The defendant moved to dismiss, arguing that this issue was not specifically raised in the MMLP pleading. The Supreme Court disagreed on interlocutory appeal, stating that the plaintiff's MMLP pleading was sufficient to encompass her claims in the District Court action. *Pickett v. Rules of Procedure: The following rules of procedure for the Montana Medical Legal Panel became effective August 30, 2001. Revisions reflecting 1985, 1987, and 1989 legislative changes in the Montana Medical Legal Panel Act were drafted by the director as of September 1990. Persons wishing to obtain a copy of the panel's revised rules may contact the director, Montana Medical Legal Panel, 2021 Eleventh Avenue, Helena, Montana 59601.

RULE 1. Definitions. As used in these Rules:

(a) "Health care provider" means a "physician," "dentist," "podiatrist," or a "health care facility."

(b) "Physician" means, for all purposes other than assessment of the annual surcharge required under § 27-6-206(3), an individual or business entity, who at the time of the occurrence of the incident giving rise to the claim:

(1) was an individual, licensed to practice medicine under the provisions of Title 37, Chapter 3, who had the State of Montana as his or her principal residence or place of medical practice and was not employed full-time by any federal governmental agency or entity; or

(2) was a professional service corporation, partnership, or other business entity organized under the laws of any state to render medical services, whose shareholders, partners, or owners were all individual physicians licensed to practice medicine under the provisions of Title 37, Chapter 3, or included a shareholder, partner, owner or employee who was a physician under (b)(i) of this Rule and is a proper party to the claim.

(c) "Dentist" means, for all purposes other than assessment of the annual surcharge required under § 27-6-206(3), an individual or business entity, who at the time of the occurrence of the incident giving rise to the claim:

(1) was an individual, licensed to practice dentistry under the provisions of Title 37, Chapter 4, who had the State of Montana as his or her principal residence or place of dental practice and was not employed full-time by any federal governmental agency or entity; or

(2) was a professional service corporation, partnership, or other business entity organized under the laws of any state to render dental services, and whose shareholders, partners, or owners were all individual dentists licensed to practice dentistry under the provisions of Title 37, Chapter 4, or included a shareholder, partner, owner or employee who was a dentist under (c)(i) of this Rule and is a proper party to the claim.

(d) "Health care facility" means, for all purposes other than assessment of the annual surcharge required under 27-6-206(3), a facility (other than an infirmary) licensed as a health care facility under Title 50, Chapter 5, at the time of the occurrence of the incident giving rise to the claim, excluding a chemical dependency facility, an end-stage renal dialysis facility, a home infusion therapy agency, or a residential care facility.

(e) "Malpractice claim" means any claim or potential claim of a claimant against a health care provider for medical or dental treatment, lack of medical or dental treatment, or other alleged departure from accepted standards of health care in the rendering of professional services which causes injury to the claimant, whether the claimant's claim or potential claim sounds in tort or contract, and includes but is not limited to allegations of battery or wrongful death.

(f) "Panel" means the Montana Medical Legal Panel provided for in Section 27-6-104, MCA.

(g) "Act" means the Montana Medical Legal Panel Act as established by Sections 27-6-101 through 27-6-704, MCA.

(h) "Director" means the Director of the Panel, or an authorized member of the Director's staff.

(i) "Substantial evidence" is such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion, or, stated another way, enough evidence to justify refusal to direct a verdict on a factual issue in jury trial.

(j) "Claimant" is the person (or persons) who was the patient who received or was to receive services from the health care provider against whom the claim is made, or is the authorized representative of the patient.

(k) "Patient" is the person who received or was to receive services from the health care provider against whom the claim is made or who received services from other health care providers prior or subsequent to that of the health care provider against whom the claim is made.

(l) "Hospital" means a hospital as defined in 50-5-101, MCA, licensed as a hospital at the time of the occurrence of the incident giving rise to the claim.

(m) "Podiatrist" means, for all purposes other than assessment of the annual surcharge required under § 27-6-206(3), MCA, an individual licensed to practice podiatry under the provisions of Title 37, Chapter 6, who at the time of the occurrence of the incident giving rise to the claim:

(1) was an individual, licensed to practice podiatry under the provisions of Title 37, Chapter 6, who had the State of Montana as his or her principal residence or place of podiatric practice and was not employed full-time by any federal governmental agency or entity; or

(2) was a professional service corporation, partnership, or other business entity organized under the laws of any state to render podiatric services, and whose shareholders, partners, or owners were all individual podiatrists licensed to practice podiatry under the provisions of Title 37, Chapter 6, or included a shareholder, partner, owner or employee who was a podiatrist under (c)(i) of this Rule and is a proper party to the claim.

RULE 2. Scope of Rules. These Rules apply to all proceedings before the Montana Medical Legal Panel established by the Act.

RULE 3. Purpose of the Panel. The purpose of the Panel is to prevent, where possible, the filing in court of actions against health care providers and their employees for professional liability in situations where the facts do not permit at least a reasonable inference of malpractice and to make possible the fair and equitable disposition of such claims against health care providers as are or reasonably may be well founded.

RULE 4. Fees. No fees or charges are to be levied upon claimants as a precondition to the bringing of a malpractice claim before the Panel.

RULE 5. Representation and Appearance - Counsel. The parties may be represented by counsel in proceedings before the Panel though it shall not be required. Any party acting as their own counsel will be required to adhere to these Rules of Procedure.

If any party retains legal counsel, such legal counsel shall informally enter his or her appearance with the Director, by letter if representing a pro se claimant, or upon by the filing of the required Application, a responsive Motion to the Application, or an Answer. Thereafter, all communications required by these Rules to be transmitted to a party and all other communications directed to a represented party shall be directed to the appropriate counsel, with a copy to the Director, except that the Notice of Hearing required by Rule 12 shall be provided to all parties involved and their counsel, if any.

RULE 6. Presentation of Claims.

(a) These Rules shall apply to all malpractice claims arising from a health care provider's acts and/or omissions, unless the claim is the subject of a valid arbitration agreement under the Uniform Arbitration Act, at § 27-5-111, et seq., MCA, where the agreement to arbitrate was signed after the alleged incident occurred:

(1) as to all physicians and health care facilities, where the alleged incident occurred on or after April 1, 1977;

(2) as to all dentists, where the alleged incident occurred on or after October 1, 1987;

(3) as to all podiatrists, where the alleged incident occurred on or after January 1, 1999;

(4) with respect to (1), (2) and (3) above, claims arising prior to the respective dates may be submitted to the Panel upon all parties consenting thereto.

(b) Prior to filing a complaint in any State District or Justice Court in Montana, claimants shall submit a case for consideration of the Panel, and no malpractice claim to which the Act is applicable may be filed in any such court against a health care provider before an application is made to the Panel and its decision rendered. If a complaint has been filed in any such court prior to the filing of an application before the Panel, the claimant, at the time of filing an application with the Panel, shall notify the Panel of such fact by providing to the Panel a conformed copy of the complaint and a conformed copy of any order related to the submission of the claim to the Panel, along with a brief report as to the status of the case.

(c) Claimants shall submit a case for consideration of the Panel by delivery of an application in writing and signed by the claimant or his or her attorney, by certified mail, to the office of the Director. Facsimile copies of applications received by the Panel shall be shown as received by the Panel on the date of receipt, and shall be placed in the claim file. The use of such a procedure shall not relieve a party from the requirements of the first sentence of this paragraph.

(d) The application, on a form provided by the Director, must be signed by the claimant or his or her attorney and must contain the following:

(1) A statement in reasonable detail of the elements of the health care provider's conduct that are believed to constitute a malpractice claim, the dates the conduct occurred, and the names and addresses of all persons having knowledge of any facts relating to the claim or defense to it, and the names and addresses of all physicians, dentists, podiatrists, hospitals, long-term care facilities or other persons or entities (whether named as parties to the claim or not) who have possession, custody, or control of any medical, dental, podiatric, hospital or long-term care facility records (such as xrays) or other such information pertaining to the claim. Any claim against an employee of a health care provider who is other than a health care provider as defined in Rule 1 shall be brought only by naming the employer as a party before the Panel.

(2) A statement signed by the claimant, and dated, on a form provided by the Director, for each health care provider involved (whether a party or not), authorizing the Panel to obtain access to all medical, dental, podiatric, and hospital records and information pertaining to the claim and, for purposes of its consideration of the matter only, which includes distribution of such records only to the health care providers named in the claim before the Panel or their attorneys and the panelists reviewing the claim, waiving any privilege as to the contents of those records. The statement may not in any way be construed as waiving that privilege for any other purpose or in any other context, in or out of court nor is this Rule intended to provide for discovery of information which would be privileged or otherwise beyond discovery, pursuant to Rule 26(b)(4)(B), Montana Rules of Civil Procedure.

(3) A claimant may amend the application as a matter of course within twenty (20) days of the receipt of the application by the Panel, but thereafter only upon approval of the Director, or the Chairperson of the Panel, if one is selected. The Director or, the Chairperson in the event of the selection of a Panel Chairperson, may, upon his or her own initiative or upon the written request of the health care provider, request the application be amended to provide additional details of the claim. Such an amendment, and any other amendments to the application, must be delivered to the Director within twenty (20) days of receipt of a written request or authorization by the Director or Chairperson, along with sufficient copies for service by the Panel on all other parties. In the event an amendment to the claim is filed less than thirty (30) days prior to hearing, upon request of the Director, Panel Chairperson or health care provider, the hearing may be continued by the Panel Chairperson or the Director without a request from a party, or upon the request of a party upon a showing of good cause and in the manner required by Rule 12(b) of these Rules.

(4) Upon receipt of a completed application, the Director shall immediately notify the health care provider of filing of the claim and furnish the health care provider a copy thereof. For purposes of this paragraph, a completed application shall be one which is in compliance with subsections (1) and (2) of section (d) of this Rule. If a claimant revokes the required written consent provided in section(d)(2) of this Rule, the application shall not be a completed application.

(e) If a claimant or health care provider has retained or otherwise obtained legal counsel for prosecution or defense of a claim during or subsequent to any panel proceeding, that attorney shall file an appearance with the Director, pursuant to Rules of Procedure.

RULE 7. Answer to Application.

(a) Within twenty (20) days after receipt of the claim, the health care provider shall answer the application for review, by delivery of the answer in writing and signed by the health care provider or his or her attorney, by certified mail, to the office of the Director, with sufficient copies for service by the Panel on all other parties. For good cause shown, the Director may extend the answer time.

The answer shall be deemed an answer to any amended application, unless within twenty (20) days after the receipt of the amended application, the health care provider delivers in the same manner as required above, an amended answer.

(b) The health care provider shall, on a form provided by the Director, authorize the Panel to inspect all medical, dental, podiatric and hospital records and information pertaining to the application and, for the purposes of such inspection only, which includes distribution of such records only to the claimant or his or her attorney and the panelists reviewing the claim, waiving any privilege as to the contents of those records. Nothing in the statement waives that privilege for any other purpose or in any other context, in or out of court nor is this Rule intended to provide for discovery of information which would be privileged or otherwise beyond discovery, pursuant to Rule 26(b)(4)(B), Montana Rules of Civil Procedure.

(c) Upon the receipt of an answer or an amended answer to an application, the Director shall serve a true copy of the same upon the claimant and all other health care providers in the same manner as provided for service of the application in Rule 8(a).

RULE 8. Transmittal of Records and Documents.

(a) Upon receipt of an application for review or an amendment thereto, the Director shall serve a true copy of the same upon all health care providers whose conduct is claimed by the application to have constituted the basis for a malpractice claim. Service shall be effected by mailing, certified, a copy of the claim to the health care provider, postage prepaid, return receipt requested, to the provider's last-known address.

(b) Additionally, upon the receipt of the application for review, the Director shall mail a copy of the application to the directors of the health care provider's professional society or association and the State Bar. If no state professional society or association exists with respect to such health care provider, or if the health care provider does not belong to such a society or association, the Director shall transmit the application to the health care provider's state licensing board.

(c) Upon receipt of the names of selected panelists pursuant to Rule 9, the Director shall transmit by mail to all parties a list of all panel members selected, including a short professional biographical sketch of each panelist.

(d) At least ten (10) days prior to the hearing date set for a claim, the Director shall furnish to each panel member copies of all claims, briefs, medical, podiatric, hospital, or dental records of the patient which have been obtained by the Panel, and other documents pertaining to the claim; except when the Chairperson, or Director if a Chairperson has not been selected, of the Panel determines that it is impractical to reproduce or mail a medical, podiatric, hospital, or dental record or other document, or where the Panel Chairperson has ruled after application of a party and a telephonic hearing that certain records should not be transmitted on grounds of relevancy, privilege, or prohibition in state or federal law. Where access to health care information is denied by a health care provider under 50-16-542(1), the Panel Chair may order disclosure of health care information, with or without restrictions as to its use, as the Panel Chair considers necessary, subject to an allowance for any party being provided a full opportunity for district court review of the Panel Chair's decision. In deciding whether to order disclosure, the Panel Chair shall consider the explanation submitted by the health care provider, the reasons for denying access to health care information set forth in 50-16-542(1), and any arguments presented by interested parties. Such records or documents as are required or allowed to be transmitted shall be made available to panel members at the hearing and at the Panel office prior to the hearing, and each panel member and party shall be notified of the decision of the Chairperson or Director and the availability of the materials.

At or prior to the above time, the Director shall furnish to each party, or their attorney if represented, a copy of the medical, podiatric, hospital, or dental records of the patient which have been obtained by the Panel and which are required and allowed to be transmitted and which have been determined to be practical to reproduce or mail. At or prior to such time, the Panel shall notify the parties which records are deemed to be impractical to reproduce or mail, which records shall then be available for inspection by the parties, or their attorneys if they are represented, at the offices of the Panel, during regular business hours, upon reasonable notice of the intended time and date of inspection.

If a party claims that medical or other records or information which pertain to the claim are in the possession, custody and control of another party to the claim or persons other than a party to the claim, or if the application to the claim alleges that the mental or physical condition of a health care provider who is a party to the Panel claim is an element of the claim, or if a party has failed or refuses to execute the necessary consent forms required by Rule 6(d)(2) or 7(b) of these Rules, a party who seeks such records and information shall, as a condition of obtaining a subpoena: (a) make a request in writing to the Panel that the Panel obtain specified records or information on behalf of the party, stating how the records or information pertain to the claim and the name and address of the custodian of those records; and (b) comply with the notice requirements of MCA 50-16-536(1) and provide proof of compliance to the Panel; and (d) shall provide the Panel with the written certification required under MCA 50-16-536(2); and (e) shall request the issuance of a subpoena by the Panel Chairperson.

The cost of a request for records or other information, either pursuant to an appropriate consent form or a subpoena, and the reproduction and transmission of the records or other information to the parties, shall be at the expense of the Panel, but not including the cost of service of subpoenas or witness fees, which shall be at the expense of the party seeking service of the same.

The Panel Chairperson, upon being selected, shall issue a subpoena for all such records and information which pertain to the claim unless relieved of the responsibility therefor by order of a district court. The Panel shall report the results of the service to the parties, including any denial of information from the holder of the records and the reasons therefor.

(e) It is the responsibility of each panel member to return the copies of the claim, medical, podiatric, or dental records, exhibits and other documents to the Panel office upon completion of the claim.

(f) Except as otherwise provided in Rule 7 and Rule 8 of these Rules with respect to the service of the application, answer, and any amendments thereto by the Director, all motions, memoranda, and other papers presented to the Panel shall be served upon all parties and a copy filed with the Panel in the manner provided by Rule 5 of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure.

RULE 9. Selection of Panel Members.

(a) Except as otherwise provided in Rule 9(f), those eligible to sit on the Panel are health care providers licensed pursuant to Montana law residing in Montana and members of the State Bar of Montana residing in Montana.

(b) Except as otherwise provided in Rule 9(f), the health care provider's professional association or society and the State Bar shall, as to each claim, select twelve (12) prospective panel members within fourteen (14) days from the date of transmittal of the application for review to said societies, for use by the Panel and parties as the pool of available panelists for a claim. If no such society or association exists or if the health care provider does not belong to such a society or association, the health care provider's state licensing board shall, within the same time period as required above, select such twelve (12) persons from the health care provider's profession and, where applicable, persons specializing in the same field or discipline as the health care provider. Alternatively, the entire list of available prospective panel members shall be annually provided by such association, society or licensing board to the Panel as a pool of available panelists for the claims filed during that year. The Panel shall provide to the parties, or their counsel if a counsel has appeared before the Panel, a list of 12 selected prospective panelists for a claim, either as the 12 provided to the Panel as required by this subsection or as randomly selected by the Panel from the annual lists provided to the Panel as allowed in this subsection.

(c) Whenever there are multiple health care providers the claim against each health care provider may be reviewed by a separate Panel, or at the discretion of the Panel initially appointed or by stipulation of the parties, a single Panel may review all the claims against all parties.

(d) Except as otherwise provided in (f), six (6) panel members shall sit in review of each case. Where a panel has six members, each claim shall have three (3) panel members who are health care providers, as specified in subsection (e) and three (3) panel members who are attorneys. Not later than ten (10) days prior to the date set for the hearing of the claim, the Panel Director shall select one of the attorney panelists as Chairperson of the Panel, unless one of the parties objects to the Chairperson selected, in which case the Chairperson selected by the Panel shall thereafter cease to act as the Chairperson and the attorney panelists shall select any one of the attorney panelists as Chairperson within the time requirements of this provision.

(e) The health care provider panel members shall consist of:

(1) Three (3) physicians when the claim is only against one or more physicians; or three (3) dentists when the claim is only against one or more dentists; or three (3) podiatrists when the claim is only against one or more podiatrists. If the claim is only against one or more health care facilities, two (2) of the panel members must be administrators of the same type of facility or facilities and one (1) panel member must be a physician.

(2) In cases against physicians and/or dentists and/or podiatrists, and a health care facility, two (2) panel members must be chosen from the physician's and/or dentist's and/or podiatrist's profession(s) and one (1) Panel member must be an administrator from the same type of facility.

(3) In cases against one or more physicians or one or more dentists or one or more podiatrists and no facility, two (2) panel members must be physicians and one (1) panel member must be a dentist, if there is a dentist in the claim, or one (1) panel member must be a podiatrist, if there is a podiatrist in the claim, unless the number of dentists or podiatrists named exceeds the number of physicians named, then in that event two (2) panel members must be dentists if dentists exceed the number of physicians named, or two (2) panel members must be podiatrists if podiatrists exceed the number of physicians named, and one (1) panel member must be a physician.

(f) Provided, however, that in each instance the parties may stipulate to a lesser number of health care provider or attorney panelists, which stipulation shall be effective only upon approval of the director, or of the Panel Chairperson if one be selected. There shall be no requirement that a physician, dentist, or podiatrist panelist be in the same specialty or sub-specialty as one or more of the individual health care providers against whom a claim is made if all such panelists as are selected would otherwise be competent to act as an expert witness in a suit at law involving the individual health care providers and if the number of prospective panelists available in the specialty or sub-specialty would be insufficient from which to select a panel.

(g) Upon selection of panel members, the names of those selected shall be communicated to the Director, along with short professional biographical sketches of the persons selected and their business telephone numbers and addresses.

RULE 10. Disqualification of Proposed Panelists.

(a) Any Panel member shall disqualify himself or herself from consideration of any case in which, by virtue of circumstances, the Panel member feels his or her presence on the Panel would be inappropriate, considering the purpose of the Panel.

(b) The Director may excuse a proposed panelist from serving on the Panel.

(c) Whenever a party makes and files an affidavit that a Panel member selected by these Rules cannot, according to the belief of the party making an affidavit, sit in review of the application nor review the claim with impartiality, that Panel member may proceed no further. A party may not disqualify by affidavit more than three Panel members in any single malpractice claim. Any such affidavit to be effective must be filed within fifteen (15) days of the transmittal by mail to the parties by the Director of the name or names of the proposed panelist[s] who is [are] sought to be disqualified. Nothing in these rules shall additionally be construed so as to defeat a party's right to such disqualification.

(d) To replace any Panel member disqualified or excused under these Rules, a replacement Panel member shall be selected, pursuant to Rule 9 of these Rules, by the entity originally selecting the Panel member under that Rule. The replacement shall be selected by said entity within five (5) days of receipt of notification from the Director of the Panel member disqualified or excused. Notification of replacement Panel members shall be made by the Director pursuant to Rule 8 (c).

RULE 11. Medical and Dental Consultation. A claimant request for Director cooperation in retaining a consultant must be made within four (4) weeks of transmittal of the application to the defendants. The Director shall cooperate fully with the claimant in retaining a physician, dentist, podiatrist, or other health care provider qualified in the field of medicine, dentistry, or podiatry involved, who will consult for purposes of the panel hearing with the claimant upon payment of a reasonable fee by the claimant. The fee shall be calculated on an hourly rate and, upon claimant's request, reviewed by the Panel. If the full Panel selected to hear the claim determines the consulting fee charged the claimant is unreasonably high, that Panel shall, upon vote of majority, reduce the same to a reasonable fee. Communications between the consultant and the claimant or the claimant's attorney are privileged unless that privilege is waived by the claimant or is otherwise required to be disclosed by Rule 26(b) of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure.

RULE 12. Time and Place of Hearing.

(a) Except as otherwise provided in Rule 12(d), after the application has been received, a date, time and place for the hearing shall be fixed by the Director, and prompt notice thereof shall be given by the Director to the parties involved and the members of the Panel.

A telephonic hearing shall be authorized upon the written stipulation of all parties and upon the approval of the Panel Chairperson, where the interests of justice would not be served by requiring an in-person hearing and then only under the following specific circumstances where the circumstances of the case and the requirements of orderly processing of the claim: (i) make physical travel to the Panel offices in Helena, Montana impractical for panelists who must be utilized; (ii) impose an unusual economic burden upon a party; or (iii) the issues as represented by each of the parties are such that the use of a telephonic hearing would allow full consideration of the matter by the Panel selected to hear the claim.

(b) In no instance may the date of the hearing set be more than one hundred twenty (120) days after the transmittal by the Director to the health care provider of the application for review, unless the Panel Chairperson or the Director finds good cause exists for extending the period. All requests for a continuance and change of hearing date must be submitted to the Panel in writing, stating the reasons therefor, and must include a selection of four alternative future dates for the hearing which are known to be available to each of the parties to the claim. If the request is on an emergency basis within five (5) calendar days from the date of the scheduled hearing, facsimile requests to the Panel are acceptable if the original is mailed on the date of the request.

(c) Panel hearings may be held in any county the Panel considers necessary or advisable. The county commissioners or other governing authority shall provide, upon request of the Director, suitable facilities for any such hearing.

(d) A hearing need not be held, telephonic or otherwise, and a decision shall be rendered by the Panel only on the written record, where all of the parties or their counsel have stipulated in writing to the waiver of a hearing.

RULE 13. Pre-hearing Telephone Conference.

(a) At least five (5) days prior to the hearing date set, the following parties shall confer, by telephone conference call or personally, with the Chairperson of the Panel: claimant or the claimant's attorney, the health care provider or the health care provider's attorney, and the Director of the Panel. During the pre-hearing conference call, the parties shall consider the following:

- (1) Simplification and identification of issues;
- (2) Obtaining of admissions to or stipulations of facts not remaining in dispute and of the authenticity of documents;
- (3) Limitation of the number of witnesses to be called and scheduling of their appearances;
- (4) Estimation of length of hearing and, if applicable, consideration of any transcription request;

(5) Any other matters that might aid in expeditious consideration and determination of the claim;

(6) Any materials submitted pursuant to Rule 14.

RULE 14. Exhibits and Documentary Evidence. No later than fourteen (14) days prior to the hearing date set for the claim, the parties shall furnish each other a copy and the Director seven (7) copies of all records and other documents and exhibits other than medical, hospital, podiatric or dental records obtained by the Panel, properly identified, upon which they intend to rely at the time of the hearing. If a party makes a sufficient showing by affidavit, filed with the Panel and provided to the parties and the Panel Chairperson, that documents or records upon which they intend to rely were not available within such fourteen (14) day period, the Chairperson shall have the discretionary authority to admit such later-acquired evidence upon such terms and conditions as are just and equitable in the premises. At the time of filing the required affidavit, the party providing the same shall serve copies of the documents or records in dispute on the Panel, the Chairperson and all other parties.

RULE 15. Hearing Procedures.

(a) At the time set for hearing, the claimant submitting the case for review shall be present, personally, unless that presence is: (1) waived by all health care providers; or (2) excused by the Panel Chairperson or the Director upon a timely request stating the reasons therefor. The claimant or claimant's counsel shall make a brief introduction of the case, including a resume of the facts constituting the alleged professional malpractice which he or she is prepared to prove. The health care provider against whom the claim is brought shall also be present, which presence may be excused in like manner as the claimant as provided by this Rule, and may make an introductory statement of his or her case, personally or through counsel.

(b) Claimant shall proceed first with his or her case, followed by the health care provider. Both parties may call witnesses to testify, who shall be subject to cross-examination and who shall be sworn. Medical, hospital, podiatric, or dental texts, journals and other documentary evidence relied upon by either party may be offered and admitted, if relevant, and if submitted timely under Rule 14. Written statements of fact by treating health care providers or claimants may be reviewed by the Panel.

(c) The hearing will be confidential and informal, and the Panel shall not make, pay for or retain any transcript; with the consent of the Chairperson of the Panel and all parties to the claim, the parties may provide for the making, payment and retention of a transcript. The Montana Rules of Evidence shall not apply to hearings before the Panel; however, irrelevant, immaterial or unduly repetitious evidence may be excluded by the Chairperson.

(d) All members of the Panel and counsel to the parties, or the parties if unrepresented, shall have the right to examine the parties and witnesses, including the parties when called as witnesses, subject to the control of the Chairperson.

(e) At the conclusion of the hearing, the Panel may take the claim under advisement or may request that additional facts, records, witnesses or other information be obtained and presented to it at a supplemental hearing, which shall be set for a date and time certain, not longer than thirty (30) days from the date of the original hearing, unless the party bringing the matter for review consents in writing to a longer period.

(f) Any supplemental hearing shall be held in the same manner as the original hearing, and the parties and their attorneys may be present.

(g) No Panel member may be called to testify in any proceeding concerning the deliberations, discussions, decisions and internal proceedings of the Panel.

RULE 16. Panel Deliberations and Decisions.

(a) The deliberations of the Panel are confidential. Upon consideration of all the relevant material, the Panel shall decide:

(1) Is there substantial evidence that the acts or omissions constitute a departure from the accepted standards of health care;

(2) If the answer to (1) is "Yes," whether there is a reasonable probability that the patient was injured thereby.

(b) All votes of the Panel on the questions for discussion shall be by secret ballot. The decision shall be by a majority vote of those voting members of the Panel who sat on the entire case. The decision shall be communicated in writing to the parties and their attorneys of record, or to a party if that party has no attorney, and a copy thereof shall be retained in the permanent files of the Panel.

(c) The decision shall, in every case, be signed for the Panel by the Chairperson and shall contain only the conclusions reached by a majority of its members and shall list the number of members, if any, dissenting therefrom. Upon request of any party, the majority shall briefly explain the reasoning and the basis for their decision, and the dissenters may likewise explain the reason for disagreement.

(d) The decision and the reasoning and basis for the decision of the Panel is not admissible as evidence in any action subsequently brought in any court of law. A copy of the decision shall be sent by the Director to the health care provider's professional licensing board.

(e) Panelists and witnesses are immune from civil liability for all communications, findings, opinions and conclusions made in the course and scope of the duties prescribed by the Act.

(f) The Panel's decision is without administrative or judicial authority and is not binding upon any party. The Panel may, however, recommend an award, approve settlement agreements consented to by the parties and discuss the same and all such approved settlement agreements are binding on the parties.

RULE 17. Travel Expenses. All members of the Panel, the Director, and the Director's staff are entitled to travel expenses incurred while on the business of the Panel, as provided in Sections 2-18-501 through 2-18-503, MCA, but such expenses shall be approved by the Director before payment is made.

RULE 18. Compensation of the Panel. All members of the Panel shall be paid a fee of Forty Dollars ($40.00) per hour, up to a maximum of Three Hundred Twenty Dollars ($320.00) per day in which a hearing or part of a hearing is held, for the time spent in hearing claims, subject to the approval of the Director and upon presentation of a billing itemizing to the one-tenth(1/10th) of an hour the nature of the services performed and the time involved. Upon the effective date of an amendment to Section 27-6-203, MCA, authorizing the same, the amount of such compensation shall be increased to Fifty Dollars ($50.00) per hour, up to a maximum of Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) per day in which a hearing or part of a hearing is held, for the time spent in hearing claims. Additional compensation for travel time and other services shall be considered by the Director under circumstances including, but not limited to, weather or distance.

RULE 19. Additional authority of panel. The Panel may provide for the administration of oaths, the receipt of claims filed, the promulgation of forms required by the Act, the issuance of subpoenas in connection with the administration of the Act, and the performance of other acts to fairly and effectively administer the Act.

RULE 20. Statute of Limitations - Separately-designated Necessary or Proper Parties.

(a) The running of the applicable limitation period in a malpractice claim is tolled upon receipt by the Director of the application for review, as to all health care providers named in the application as parties to the Panel proceeding, and as to all other persons or entities named in the application as necessary or proper parties, for any court action which might subsequently arise out of the same factual circumstances set forth in the application.

(b) The running of the applicable limitation period in a malpractice claim does not begin again until 30 days after either an order of dismissal, with or without prejudice against re-filing, is issued from the Panel Chairperson or from the Director upon the consent of the parties to the claim, or the Panel's final decision, whichever occurs first, is entered in the permanent files of the Panel and a copy is served upon the complainant or claimant's attorney, if he or she is represented by counsel, by certified mail.

27-6-206. Funding.

Compiler's Comments

1997 Amendments: Chapter 133 in (2)(a), at beginning after "surcharge", inserted "or assessment", near end of second sentence inserted "podiatrists", and in third sentence, at beginning, inserted exception clause and inserted "the group of all podiatrists"; in (2)(b), at beginning, inserted exception clause; inserted (2)(b)(iv) relating to podiatrists; inserted (2)(c) establishing minimum annual assessment of $15; near end of (2)(d) inserted reference to minimum annual assessment of $15; in (3), at end of first sentence, substituted "must be paid on April 1 of each year" for "must be paid on or before the date that physicians' and dentists' annual registration or renewal fees are due under 37-3-313 and 37-4-307", deleted former fourth sentence that read: "The director has the same powers and duties in connection with the collection of and failure to pay the annual surcharge as the department of commerce has under 37-3-313 and 37-4-307 in connection with physicians' and dentists' annual registration or renewal fees", and inserted last sentence allowing panel to collect surcharge by action at law; and made minor changes in style.

Chapter 492 in (2), in first sentence, substituted "a surcharge" for "an annual surcharge"; and in (3), at end of first sentence, substituted "April 1 of each year" for "the date that physicians' and dentists' annual registration or renewal fees are due under 37-3-313 and 37-4-307" and substituted last sentence concerning collection by action at law for former sentence concerning power and duty under 37-3-313 and 37-4-307. Amendment effective July 1, 1997.

Section Not Codified: Section 7, Ch. 133, L. 1997, provided: "Podiatric contributions to fund — delayed implementation — capital contribution. The director may not levy an annual assessment against or collect an annual assessment from podiatrists until 1998. For the years 1998 through 2002, podiatrists shall pay an additional capital contribution of $50 to the fund in addition to the amount of the annual assessment computed under 27-6-206."

Applicability: Section 8, Ch. 133, L. 1997, provided: "[This act] applies to causes of action arising on or after [the effective date of this act]." Effective October 1, 1997.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 492, L. 1997, provided: "WHEREAS, the Legislature finds that delays in licensing board responses to complaints of misconduct by licensees and unlicensed practice that result in frustration on behalf of the public, licensees, and boards is caused by a lack of personnel to assist with compliance issues; and

WHEREAS, licensing boards collect and accumulate sufficient funds from the fees charged to licensees to meet the cost of compliance and enforcement personnel, but these same boards often lack the authority to expend the funds that they collect; and

WHEREAS, the delayed processing and the accumulating complaint backlog have a deleterious effect on the productivity and reputation of the licensees; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature finds that certain licensing boards need to be granted temporary spending authority to address the delayed processing and accumulated complaint backlog; and

WHEREAS, a uniformly flexible approach to license renewal scheduling would also reduce frustration on the part of licensees and the public that they serve; and

WHEREAS, inflexible examination dates for license applicants in the plumbing and electrical fields have caused undue hardship with no discernable [sic] public benefit; and

WHEREAS, the Committee on Business and Labor [now Economic Affairs Interim Committee] desires to alleviate these and other related problems by appropriating funds for certain professional and occupational boards that need additional compliance specialists, by allowing the Department of Commerce to establish license renewal dates by rule, and by allowing electrical and plumbing apprentices to take the examination required for licensure before the apprenticeships expire."

Coordination Instruction: Section 56(2), Ch. 492, L. 1997, provided: "If House Bill No. 396 and [this act] are both passed and approved, then 27-6-206(3) must read as follows:

"(3) The annual surcharge must be paid on or before April 1 of each year. All unpaid assessments bear a late charge fee equal to the judgment rate of interest. The late charge fee is part of the annual surcharge. The panel may collect the annual surcharge by an action at law." House Bill No. 396 (Ch. 133, L. 1997) was approved March 24, 1997. Therefore, the amendment contained in this section is valid and an amendment made by sec. 3, Ch. 492, 1997, to subsection (3) is void.

1995 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 418 in (2), in fourth sentence at end, deleted "as to all claims closed since April 19, 1977" and in fifth sentence, at end, substituted "department of public health" for "department of health and environmental sciences"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

Chapter 546 in (2), at end of fifth sentence, substituted "department of public health and human services" for "department of health and environmental sciences"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

A style change in the chapters was slightly different. The codifier chose the most appropriate.

Transition: Section 499, Ch. 418, L. 1995, provided: "The provisions of 2-15-131 through 2-15-137 apply to [this act]."

Saving Clauses: Section 503, Ch. 418, L. 1995, and sec. 571, Ch. 546, L. 1995, were saving clauses.

1987 Amendment: Inserted references throughout to dentists; and in (3) added references to renewal fees and cites to 37-4-307.

1985 Amendment: In (2) at end of first sentence, deleted "except physicians not engaged in the private practice of medicine", near middle of second sentence, after "director", deleted "who shall allocate a projected cost" and inserted "and must be apportioned", at end of second sentence substituted "providers by group" for "facilities", and substituted third through seventh sentences, relating to the assessment of various groups, for former language that read: "The amount of the assessment for an individual physician, hospital, or other health care facility must be that portion of the total assessment which bears the same relationship to the total assessment as the number of claims against such physician, hospital, or other health care facility bears to the total number of claims against physicians, hospitals, and other health care facilities that have been filed with the panel since April 19, 1977, as that total number of claims is shown in the annual reports of the panel. However, the assessment for an individual hospital must also be determined by dividing the total percentage of the assessment for all hospitals by the total number of hospital beds existing at the time of the assessment and multiplying the result by the number of beds in the hospital to be assessed"; and in middle of (3) inserted "All unpaid assessments bear a late charge fee equal to the judgment rate of interest. The late charge fee is part of the annual surcharge."

1983 Amendment: Substituted (2) (see 1983 Session Law for text) for former (2) that read: "To create the fund, an annual surcharge shall be levied on all health care providers. The amount of the assessment shall be set by the director, who shall allocate a projected cost among health care providers on a per capita basis, except that an individual not engaged in the practice of his profession in Montana is exempt from payment of the assessment. The director may provide a different allocation upon approval by the supreme court. Surplus funds, if any, over and above the amount required for the annual administration of the chapter shall be retained by the director and used to finance the administration of this chapter in succeeding years, in which event the director shall reduce the annual assessment in subsequent years, commensurate with the proper administration of this chapter."

1981 Amendments: Chapter 6 in (2) exempted from payment of assessment those individuals not engaged in practice in Montana.

Chapter 274 substituted "department of commerce" for "department of professional and occupational licensing" in (3).

Case Notes

Cost Allocation Based on Other Than Per Capita Basis Disapproved: Prior to the 1983 amendment to this section, the director of the Montana Medical Malpractice Panel petitioned the Supreme Court for approval of an allocation of the cost of the pretrial review fund of 60% to Montana physicians and 40% to Montana hospitals. Under the proposal, the director of the Montana Hospital Association was to determine how much each hospital would pay. The court found the plan unworkable because the hospital association is voluntary and the director is not authorized by law to assess or collect the amount due from its members. Petition denied. In re Mont. Medical Malpractice Panel, 36 St. Rep. 206 (1979) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports). (Decided prior to 1981, 1983, and 1985 amendments to 27-6-206.)

27-6-207. Panel audits.

Compiler's Comments

2019 Amendment: Chapter 264 in (1) in first sentence near beginning substituted "may" for "must" and in second sentence at beginning substituted "Any audit that is conducted by the legislative auditor under 5-13-411" for "The audit"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective May 2, 2019.

Implementation: Section 2, Ch. 96, L. 1987, provided: "The first audit to be conducted under 27-6-207 must be for the 2 fiscal years ending June 30, 1987."

Part 3 Preliminary Procedure

Case Notes

Specificity of Medical Legal Panel Pleading — Reasonable Detail: Plaintiff's small intestine was perforated during a procedure by the defendant doctor. The plaintiff filed a claim with the Montana Medical Legal Panel (MMLP), alleging failure to disclose all material facts regarding the procedure. In the District Court action, the plaintiff alleged that the defendant was negligent for not considering alternative procedures. The defendant moved to dismiss, arguing that this issue was not specifically raised in the MMLP pleading. The Supreme Court disagreed on interlocutory appeal, stating that the plaintiff's MMLP pleading was sufficient to encompass her claims in the District Court action. Pickett v. Cortese, 2014 MT 166, 375 Mont. 320, 328 P.3d 660.

Causation in Legal Malpractice Claim — Summary Judgment Not Proper — Plaintiffs Not Required to Show Claim Would Have Been Successful: An attorney missed a statute of limitations deadline in a medical malpractice case by failing to file an application with the Montana Medical Legal Panel before filing a complaint in District Court, as required under 27-6-301 and 27-6-701. After the medical malpractice claim was dismissed, the plaintiffs filed a legal malpractice case against the attorney, but the District Court dismissed the legal malpractice case during summary judgment on the grounds that the plaintiffs did not carry the burden of showing that the underlying medical malpractice claim would have been successful. On appeal, the Supreme Court revisited Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 Mont. 342, 916 P.2d 122 (1996), Babcock Place Ltd. Partnership v. Berg, Lilly, Andriolo, & Tollefsen, P.C., 2003 MT 111, 315 Mont. 364, 69 P.3d 1145, and Fisher v. Swift Transp. Co., Inc., 2008 MT 105, 342 Mont. 335, 181 P.3d 601, and determined that it was error for the District Court to require the plaintiffs to prove that the medical malpractice case would have been successful given that there was no independent intervening cause after the plaintiffs' injury. All that was required was a showing that the plaintiffs' injury (not being able to pursue the case) would not have occurred but for the attorney's negligent conduct. Labair v. Carey, 2012 MT 312, 367 Mont. 453, 291 P.3d 1160. On remand in Labair v. Carey, 2016 MT 272, 385 Mont. 233, 383 P.3d 226, the Supreme Court determined that the plaintiffs more probably than not would have recovered a settlement. Thus, the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment as a matter of law on this first element of settlement damages.

Case Notes

Existence of Doctors on Panel — Due Process Not Violated: The Supreme Court rejected plaintiff's contention of a denial of due process by reason of the existence of doctors on the panel. The only effect of the panel's decision on a plaintiff's case would be to discourage him from taking his claim to court. Even in those states in which the decision is admissible at a later trial, the courts considering this issue have found an insufficient showing of bias or prejudice to amount to a denial of due process. In order to effectuate the purposes of the panel, it is advisable to have medical personnel on the panel. Additionally, a claimant has the opportunity to disqualify any member who is in fact subject to the charge of bias. Linder v. Smith, 193 M 20, 629 P2d 1187, 38 St. Rep. 912 (1981).

Part 5 Hearing Procedure

Part Case Notes

General Practitioner's Standard of Care — Geographical Limitation Eliminated: The Supreme Court adopted a new standard of care to be applied prospectively to treatment extended to patients, commencing on March 31, 1990. The court ruled that a nonboard-certified general practitioner is held to the standard of care of a reasonably competent general practitioner acting in the same or similar circumstances in the same or a similar community in the United States. The new rule abandons the "locality" rule that was limited to Montana communities and reverses anything to the contrary in Tallbull v. Whitney, 172 M 326, 564 P2d 162 (1977). Chapel v. Allison, 241 M 83, 785 P2d 204, 47 St. Rep. 101 (1990).

Confidentiality of Medical Legal Panel — Denial of Transcript Upheld: Plaintiffs who filed a claim with the Montana Medical Legal Panel alleging malpractice against two doctors requested a stenographic record of the hearing. The doctors opposed the request, and the Panel chairman ruled that under Rule 15(c), Panel Rules of Procedure, no transcript would be made. Plaintiffs then applied to the District Court for a Writ of Mandamus, and the court ruled that denial of the transcript violated due process under the 14th amendment of the U.S. Constitution and Art. II, sec. 17., Mont. Const. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the language of 27-6-502 indicated legislative intent that the Montana Administrative Procedure Act provisions concerning transcripts do not apply. The court held that the Panel is a purely advisory body and therefore confidential. Given its confidential nature, it cannot be said that Rule 15(c) arbitrarily denies parties a transcript or that denial of a transcript destroys the right to fully cross-examine witnesses at trial. The court found no constitutional infirmities in the workings of Rule 15(c); therefore, the District Court was reversed. State ex rel. Hufford v. Mont. Medical Legal Panel, 223 M 73, 724 P2d 186, 43 St. Rep. 1541 (1986).

Expansion of Locality Rule — Medical Standards: Montana's "locality rule" imposes on a physician undertaking the care of a patient the legal duty of possessing and exercising that reasonable and ordinary degree of learning, skill, and care possessed and exercised by physicians of good standing of the same school of practice in the same or similar (emphasis added) locality in Montana. A "similar locality in Montana" within the meaning of this rule is a locality of similar geographical location, size, and character in a medical context. Tallbull v. Whitney, 172 M 326, 564 P2d 356 (1977), geographical limit eliminated, Chapel v. Allison, 241 M 83, 785 P2d 204, 47 St. Rep. 101 (1990).

Prior Pleadings — Statements Properly Excluded: Novartis alleged the District Court erred when it excluded a statement in the complaint alleging the prescribing physician was aware of the risks associated with Zometa and negligently failed to warn the plaintiff. However, the statements were not statements of fact and were not judicial admissions. Novartis also alleged the District Court should have allowed it to introduce in an answer filed with the Montana Medical Legal Panel a statement from the oral surgeon who performed dental surgery on the plaintiff. Novartis sought to impeach the plaintiff with evidence that tooth extraction was the only treatment option, but it was not clear that the evidence would have affected the outcome of the case. The District Court did not err in excluding the statement. Stevens v. Novartis Pharmaceuticals Corp., 2010 MT 282, 358 Mont. 474, 247 P.3d 244.

Separation of Powers Argument Rejected: The Supreme Court rejected plaintiff's contention that the panel act violates the prohibitions against unlawful delegation of judicial and legislative power and infringes on the doctrine of separation of powers. The decision of the panel is not enforceable, and unlike the panel decisions in most states, it is not even admissible at trial. Consequently, there are no constitutional violations under the Montana act. Linder v. Smith, 193 M 20, 629 P2d 1187, 38 St. Rep. 912 (1981).

Causation in Legal Malpractice Claim — Summary Judgment Not Proper — Plaintiffs Not Required to Show Claim Would Have Been Successful: An attorney missed a statute of limitations deadline in a medical malpractice case by failing to file an application with the Montana Medical Legal Panel before filing a complaint in District Court, as required under 27-6-301 and 27-6-701. After the medical malpractice claim was dismissed, the plaintiffs filed a legal malpractice case against the attorney, but the District Court dismissed the legal malpractice case during summary judgment on the grounds that the plaintiffs did not carry the burden of showing that the underlying medical malpractice claim would have been successful. On appeal, the Supreme Court revisited Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 Mont. 342, 916 P.2d 122 (1996), Babcock Place Ltd. Partnership v. Berg, Lilly, Andriolo, & Tollefsen, P.C., 2003 MT 111, 315 Mont. 364, 69 P.3d 1145, and Fisher v. Swift Transp. Co., Inc., 2008 MT 105, 342 Mont. 335, 181 P.3d 601, and determined that it was error for the District Court to require the plaintiffs to prove that the medical malpractice case would have been successful given that there was no independent intervening cause after the plaintiffs' injury. All that was required was a showing that the plaintiffs' injury (not being able to pursue the case) would not have occurred but for the attorney's negligent conduct. *Labair v. Thus, the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment as a matter of law on this first element of settlement damages.

Mandatory Submission of Claims to Panel — Jury Trial: Mandatory submission of claims to the panel does not unconstitutionally interfere with the right to trial by jury. A claimant is free to continue to jury trial no matter what the decision of the panel, and the jury remains the final determiner of fact. Further, the panel decision is not binding, nor is it admissible at trial. Submission to the panel is merely a permissible delay in the path to the ultimate jury verdict. Linder v. Smith, 193 M 20, 629 P2d 1187, 38 St. Rep. 912 (1981).

Tolling of Statute of Repose by Chiropractic Legal Panel Proceeding Filed Before Dismissal of Court Action — Filing of Second Court Action After Panel Decision Not Barred: A medical malpractice complaint filed in District Court on April 16, 1992, tolled the statute of repose pursuant to 27-2-205. On August 2, 1993, an application was timely filed with the Montana Chiropractic Legal Panel. Voluntary dismissal of the District Court complaint without prejudice on August 3, 1993, did not nullify the complaint's tolling of the statute of limitations because under 27-12-701, the filing of the Panel application also tolled the statute. The Montana Chiropractic Legal Panel Act continued to toll the statute while the application under it was pending, and because the second District Court complaint was timely filed under the Act within 30 days after the Panel's decision, the second complaint was not barred by the statute of repose. Webb v. T.D., 275 M 243, 912 P2d 202, 53 St. Rep. 117 (1996).

Tolling Provision Not Limited to Malpractice Claims: Plaintiff filed a products liability claim against Ethicon, a medical supply company, when a broken suture caused a subsequent stroke. Ethicon moved for dismissal, claiming that the provision tolling the statute of limitations applies only to malpractice claims. Affirming the District Court decision, the Supreme Court held that while the statute is ambiguous on its face, legislative history supports the conclusion that the tolling provision applies not only to malpractice claims but also to actions against all persons or entities named as necessary or proper parties for court action arising out of the same facts. (See 1995 amendment.) Eisenmenger v. Ethicon, Inc., 264 M 393, 871 P2d 1313, 51 St. Rep. 296 (1994).

Language Excised to Uphold Constitutionality of Malpractice Panel Act: The phrase in subsection (2), "No statement made by any person during a hearing before the panel may be used as impeaching evidence in court" (deleted by 1983 amendment), must be severed from the act in order to uphold the constitutionality of the panel act. It is fundamental to our adversarial system that litigants retain the right to impeach the sworn testimony of a witness testifying against them. A litigant may not receive a full and fair hearing if he is unable to fully cross-examine in court the witness that testified in the prior hearing. *Linder v. CHAPTER 7 SUBMISSION OF CONTROVERSY WITHOUT ACTION

Part 1 General Provisions

27-7-101. When and in what court controversy may be submitted.

Case Notes

Heirship Proceedings: Proceedings to determine heirship, while partaking in form of the nature of a civil action, are not such, and therefore the provisions of this section have no application to such proceedings. In re Spriggs' Estate, 68 M 92, 216 P 1108 (1923).

Quiet Title Cause: A cause, having for its purpose the obtaining of a decree to quiet the title to land, may be submitted without pleadings under an agreed statement of facts. Lockey v. Bozeman, 42 M 387, 113 P 286 (1910).

Controversy Required:

This section may be said to encourage the submission of agreed cases where they involve a real controversy. Carlson v. Helena, 38 M 581, 101 P 163 (1909).

The action of the District Court in deciding or answering questions submitted under this section by a statement that fails to show the controversy between the parties does not constitute an enforceable or appealable order or judgment. Bd. of County Comm'rs v. Gilliam, 17 M 333, 42 P 852 (1895).

Stipulation Raising Issues: Where a complaint is filed giving jurisdiction and a stipulation is then filed, treated by the District Court and parties as amending the complaint and raising an issue, the case is not an agreed case that has to be submitted with the formalities required by this chapter to give jurisdiction. Bickford v. Kirwin, 30 M 1, 75 P 518 (1904).

27-7-103. Entry of judgment — costs.

Case Notes

Order Constituting Judgment: Where an order of the District Court constitutes its final judgment, it is properly a part of the judgment roll and the recitals therein are properly before the Supreme Court for its consideration on appeal. Weir v. Silver Bow County, 113 M 237, 124 P2d 1003 (1942).

CHAPTER 8 UNIFORM DECLARATORY JUDGMENTS ACT

Chapter Compiler's Comments

Uniform State Law: Title 27, ch. 8, constitutes the "Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act" approved by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws in 1922 and adopted in the states of Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Jersey, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and Wyoming and also in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

Chapter Case Notes

Constitutionality of Since-Terminated Statutes — No Longer Justiciable: Although the statutes at issue regarding the State Fund were still in effect at the time the plaintiffs brought suit in District Court challenging their constitutionality, the statutes terminated before the plaintiffs appealed to the Supreme Court. Therefore, the statutes were neither constitutional nor unconstitutional because they were no longer statutes, and the case before the Supreme Court was no longer justiciable. Moody's Market, Inc. v. Mont. St. Fund, 2020 MT 217, 401 Mont. 168, 471 P.3d 68.

Challenge to Alleged Improper Certification by Secretary of State — Cognizable Claim for Relief Properly Recognized: After the Secretary of State certified the Montana Green Party for the 2018 ballot, the plaintiff, the Montana Democratic Party, sought a declaratory judgment that the certification was invalid due to noncompliance with 13-10-601. The plaintiff also sought an injunction to prevent the Secretary of State from giving any effect to the Green Party's petition. The Secretary of State argued that the plaintiff failed to state a cognizable claim for relief. After the District Court ruled that a number of signatures were invalid, the Secretary of State appealed. After analyzing the factors to determine whether a private right of action based on a statutory scheme was precluded, the Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that the plaintiff's claims stated cognizable claims for relief. Larson v. St., 2019 MT 28, 394 Mont. 167, 434 P.3d 241.

Antidiscrimination Ordinance — Plaintiffs Requesting Advisory Opinion — Dismissal Proper: The Bozeman City Commission adopted a nondiscrimination ordinance that prohibited discrimination on the basis of actual or perceived sexual orientation or gender identity or expression. The plaintiffs filed an action seeking a legal declaration that the ordinance was preempted by state law and beyond the Commission's authority. The District Court dismissed the action, concluding that the plaintiffs were requesting an advisory opinion. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the plaintiffs did not allege any facts indicating that they had engaged or were about to engage in any concrete transaction that would violate the ordinance. Arnone v. Bozeman, 2016 MT 184, 384 Mont. 250, 376 P.3d 786.

Declaratory Action Properly Dismissed for Lacking Justiciable Controversy: The defendant Commissioner of Political Practices found sufficient evidence that the plaintiff, a resident of Gallatin County, had violated state campaign practice laws and that civil adjudication of the violations was warranted. The defendant forwarded the sufficiency decision to the Lewis and Clark County Attorney for consideration. The plaintiff filed an action for declaratory relief in the Eighteenth Judicial District Court in Gallatin County arguing that the defendant should have referred the sufficiency decision to the Gallatin County Attorney rather than the Lewis and Clark County Attorney. After the Lewis and Clark County Attorney waived his right to participate in the action pursuant to 13-37-124, the defendant filed a complaint against the plaintiff in the First Judicial District Court in Lewis and Clark County, alleging campaign finance and practice violations. The Eighteenth Judicial District Court dismissed the plaintiff's declaratory relief action for lack of a justiciable controversy. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that the plaintiff has an alternative remedy available to him in the First Judicial District Court action because he may raise the issues raised in the declaratory relief action as defenses in that action. In addition, any decision the Eighteenth Judicial District Court would have issued would not have been binding on the First Judicial District Court and would merely be an advisory opinion, which is impermissible. Murray v. Motl, 2015 MT 216, 380 Mont. 162, 354 P.3d 197.

Standing — Juridical Relationship Exception: Plaintiff employees sued defendant employers, healthcare businesses, challenging the discontinuation of a sick leave buyback program. Defendants claimed the plaintiffs lacked standing to sue the defendants, for whom the plaintiffs did not work directly. The Supreme Court, applying the juridical relationship exception adopted in Murer v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 257 Mont. 434, 849 P.2d 1036 (1993), concluded that the plaintiffs had standing to sue all of the defendants because the injuries alleged were the result of a concerted scheme and a juridical link existed between the defendants based on common ownership and identical employment terms. Chipman v. NW. Healthcare Corp., 2012 MT 242, 366 Mont. 450, 288 P.3d 193.

Action for Residual Diminished Value — Lack of Standing Under UDJA: The plaintiff, individually and on behalf of a class, sought residual diminished value damages — the difference between the value of a vehicle immediately before an accident and the value of the vehicle after postaccident repairs have been made — under the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act (UDJA). The Supreme Court concluded the District Court erred in granting class certification. Because residual diminished value does not qualify as a type of damage that must be paid in advance as "not reasonably in dispute", the plaintiff was barred from seeking damages under the UDJA without first meeting the requirements of 33-18-242. Since the plaintiff had not satisfied the 33-18-242 requirements, he lacked individual standing to raise his claim and, therefore, lacked the requisite typicality to raise a claim on behalf of the class. Hop v. Safeco Ins. Co., 2011 MT 215, 361 Mont. 510, 261 P.3d 981.

Purpose of Act — Declaratory Judgment Properly Used to Test Constitutionality of Criminal Jurisdictional Statute — Previous Opinion Applied by Remand: Defendants in criminal proceedings in several different Justices' Courts filed actions under the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act (UDJA) to have declared unconstitutional statutes requiring a criminal defendant in a Justice's Court proceeding to choose between a jury trial in Justice's Court or in District Court. Several civil actions requesting the same relief under the UDJA were consolidated for the purposes of appeal. The state argued that the UDJA was not intended to be used for this purpose and that the various criminal defendants could obtain the same relief by raising the unconstitutionality of the underlying statute as a defense in their individual criminal prosecutions. The Supreme Court noted that acceptance of the state's position would require each criminal defendant to litigate the constitutionality of the pertinent sections of law both in the District Courts and in the Montana Supreme Court. Citing Goff v. St., 141 M 605, 374 P2d 862 (1962), St. v. Wilson, 160 M 473, 503 P2d 522 (1972), and Gryczan v. St., 283 M 433, 942 P2d 112 (1997), and noting that the issue of the constitutionality of the pertinent statutes could be raised, but not finally decided, in the District Courts, the Supreme Court held that it was proper to use the UDJA to determine the constitutionality of the statutes requiring the election of a jury trial in one court and not both courts. On this substantive issue, the Supreme Court cited its recent decision in Woirhaye v. District Court, 1998 MT 320, 292 M 185, 972 P2d 800, 55 St. Rep. 1298 (1998), holding that the statute requiring the election was unconstitutional, and remanded the cases to the District Courts with directions to enter declaratory judgments in favor of the plaintiffs and appellants. McGillivray v. St., 1999 MT 3, 293 M 19, 972 P2d 804, 56 St. Rep. 11 (1999).

Review of Health Board Decision Not Proper Subject for Declaratory Judgment — Writ of Mandate and Declaratory Relief Properly Denied: Skinner Enterprises, Inc., sought relief in the form of a declaratory judgment stating that the local board of health could not require an intermittent sand filter sewage treatment system on a proposed subdivision, by making an issue of the District Court's failure to evaluate the factual basis for the board's decision, in effect attempting to appeal the board's decision. However, review of the board's decision was not a proper subject for a declaratory judgment, and that form of relief was properly denied. Further, a writ of mandate ordering the board to approve the subdivision was also inappropriate, given the board's discretionary authority to approve or disapprove a subdivision. Skinner Enterprises, Inc. v. Lewis & Clark County Bd. of Health, 286 M 256, 950 P2d 733, 54 St. Rep. 1398 (1997).

Taxpayer Action to Be Brought in Accordance With Statutory Requirements — Woith Distinguished: Taxpayers brought a civil action against the Department of Revenue and others, seeking a declaratory judgment relief and repayment of property taxes assessed in 1989 through 1992, based upon their rights as adjudicated in Dept. of Revenue v. Sheehy, 262 M 104, 862 P2d 1181 (1993). In that case, the Supreme Court found the stratified sales assessment ratio valuation adjustment in 15-7-111 to be unconstitutional. The taxpayers brought their action under both 15-1-406 and the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act, Title 27, ch. 8. The District Court dismissed the cause of action under this chapter, reasoning that it was precluded by 15-1-406. The Supreme Court agreed with the District Court, holding that bringing an action pursuant to 15-1-406 precludes an action under this chapter. In response to the taxpayers' argument that the Supreme Court's decision in Woith v. Cascade County Treasurer, 262 M 170, 864 P2d 752 (1993), recognizes that other causes of action may be brought under other statutes, the Supreme Court held that its decision in Woith does not exempt the taxpayers from having to comply with the provisions of those other statutes. Although an action under 15-1-405 is subject to this chapter by virtue of 15-1-407, the Supreme Court said, there is still a limited amount of time in which the action may be brought, and that period of time is specified in 15-1-406. For these reasons, the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court did not err in dismissing the taxpayers' claim brought pursuant to the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act. Samson v. St., 285 M 310, 948 P2d 232, 54 St. Rep. 1165 (1997).

Standing to Bring Declaratory Judgment Action — Possibility of Prosecution Under Criminal Statute Held Sufficient: Gryczan and others, who were homosexuals, brought a declaratory judgment action against the state, seeking a determination of whether 45-5-505 (renumbered 45-8-218), proscribing deviate sexual conduct, was unconstitutional as applied, as a violation of their right to privacy. The plaintiffs alleged that they had in the past and intend in the future to engage in acts that violate the statute. The state contested the plaintiffs' right to bring the action, arguing that the statute had never been enforced. Relying upon Lee v. St., 195 M 1, 635 P2d 1282 (1981), and Helena Parents v. Lewis & Clark County, 277 M 367, 922 P2d 1140 (1996), the Supreme Court reviewed the criteria for standing generally and standing to challenge a criminal statute in particular and noted that it had never required a person to suffer arrest in order to challenge a criminal statute. Moreover, the Supreme Court noted that although it had never been enforced, the Legislature had amended the statute as late as 1991 and had even later rejected attempts to repeal the statute. The Supreme Court reviewed opinions decided by the U.S. Supreme Court and other federal courts and held that because the Legislature did not regard the statute as moribund and because the Attorney General had not foresworn the enforcement of the statute, plaintiffs had a legitimate and realistic fear of criminal prosecution along with other psychological harms. Noting that the plaintiffs are precisely the individuals against whom the statute is intended to operate, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in holding that the plaintiffs had standing to challenge the statute. Gryczan v. St., 283 M 433, 942 P2d 112, 54 St. Rep. 699 (1997), followed in Mont. Env'tl. Information Center v. Dept. of Environmental Quality, 1999 MT 248, 296 M 207, 988 P2d 1236, 56 St. Rep. 964 (1999). (See 2013 amendments to 45-2-101 and 45-8-218.)

Standing to Seek Declaratory Judgment: Plaintiff, a group of taxpayers residing in Lewis and Clark County who have children attending Helena School District No. 1, brought an action against the county, seeking a declaratory judgment that certain financial practices of the county were illegal. Citing Lee v. St., 195 M 1, 635 P2d 1282 (1981), and distinguishing Chovanak v. Matthews, 120 M 520, 188 P2d 582 (1948), the Supreme Court held that plaintiff association had standing to bring the action even though the harm claimed by plaintiff was a form of harm in common with other members of a larger class of people because the harm each claimed is not common to all members of the general public. Helena Parents Comm'n v. Lewis & Clark County Comm'rs, 277 M 367, 922 P2d 1140, 53 St. Rep. 687 (1996).

Award of Attorney Fees in Declaratory Judgment Insurance Action — Distinction Between Third-Party Claimant and Insured: As a general rule, an insured is not entitled to recover attorney fees and expenses incurred in defending a declaratory judgment action brought by an insurer to determine the existence of coverage under a liability insurance policy. However, recovery is appropriate where it is ultimately determined by the court that the insurer was not acting in good faith in contesting coverage and instituting declaratory judgment proceedings. A third-party claimant is not entitled to recover attorney fees incurred in a declaratory judgment proceeding, even if the claimant arguably falls within the policy definition of "insured". Iowa Mut. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 689 F. Supp. 1028, 45 St. Rep. 1361 (D.C. Mont. 1988).

Court Determination of Correct Loss-Per-Vehicle Figure Under Flat Fee System — Declaratory Judgment Proper: A declaratory judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court after finding that a county had the right to have the District Court construe 61-3-536 and thereby to determine the correct loss-per-vehicle figure to be used by the state after the county miscalculated the amount due the county under the flat fee system. Lewis & Clark County v. St., 224 M 223, 728 P2d 1348, 43 St. Rep. 2150 (1986).

Supreme Court Original Jurisdiction Over Declaratory Action Concerning Statewide Water Adjudication: The Supreme Court had power to determine an action for declaratory judgment involving the constitutionality of the requirement in 85-2-234 that final water decrees state "the amount of water, rate, and volume, included in the right". The issue affects all rights in the statewide adjudication process. Determination of the issue by the Supreme Court: (1) will provide guidance to the water court; (2) is in the interests of judicial economy; and (3) would serve the public policy of the state by expediting the determination of existing water rights. McDonald v. St., 220 M 519, 722 P2d 598, 43 St. Rep. 576 (1986), rehearing denied, 220 M 519, 722 P2d 598, 43 St. Rep. 1397 (1986).

Declaratory Judgment Not Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy Precluding Writ of Prohibition: In an appeal of the District Court's issuance of a Writ of Prohibition prohibiting the County Commission and the County Recorder from placing on an election ballot the question of retaining the charter form of county government, appellants claimed that prohibition did not lie because there were other plain, speedy, and adequate remedies available to petitioners. The Supreme Court affirmed the Writ's issuance, ruling that a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy was not afforded by: (1) the judicial review procedure set forth in 7-3-154; (2) the injunction procedure set forth in Title 27, ch. 19; or (3) the declaratory judgment procedure set forth in Title 27, ch. 8. Allen v. Madison County Comm'n, 211 M 79, 684 P2d 1095, 41 St. Rep. 1226 (1984).

Criminal Cases: This chapter does not apply to criminal cases. Goff v. St., 141 M 605, 374 P2d 862 (1962).

Part 1 General Provisions

Part Case Notes

Commissioner of Political Practices — No Statutory Authority to Subpoena Production of Documents: A campaign finance complaint was filed with the Commissioner of Political Practices alleging that the Montana Republican Party (the Party) had failed to comply with the reporting and disclosure requirements of 13-37-111. The Commissioner requested documents from the Party as a part of his investigation; however, the Party refused to produce them even after the Commissioner issued a subpoena. Ultimately, the Commissioner filed a petition for declaratory relief to compel their production. The District Court granted the Party summary judgment, ruling that 13-37-111 does not provide statutory authority for the Commissioner to subpoena the production of documents. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the plain language of the statute did not confer power to the Commissioner to subpoena documents. Comm'r of Political Practices v. Mont. Republican Party, 2021 MT 99, 404 Mont. 80, 485 P.3d 741.

Complaint Fails to Allege Fact That, If Proven, Would Result in Coverage — No Duty to Defend: The petitioning insurer filed a declaratory judgment action to determine whether it had a duty to defend. As the insurer had no knowledge of facts outside the complaint that could potentially trigger coverage, the complaint and policy constituted the universe with regard to the insurer's duty to defend. If there is no coverage under the terms of the policy based on the facts of the complaint, there is no duty to defend. Fire Ins. Exch. v. Weitzel, 2016 MT 113, 383 Mont. 364, 371 P.3d 457. See also Farmers Ins. Exch. v. Minemyer, 2023 MT 138, 413 Mont. 60, 532 P.3d 837.

Factors in Determining Original Jurisdiction: The three major factors necessary for a valid exercise of Supreme Court original jurisdiction are where: (1) constitutional issues of major statewide importance are involved; (2) the questions involved are purely legal questions of statutory or constitutional construction; and (3) urgency and emergency factors exist, making the normal appeal process inadequate. White v. St., 233 M 81, 759 P2d 971, 45 St. Rep. 1310 (1988).

Duty to Defend — Intentional Versus Negligent Damage — Covered Occurrence: Plaintiff was retained to drill test holes on placer claims. The claim owners refused to pay plaintiff, causing plaintiff to foreclose on a mechanics' lien (now construction lien). The claim owners then counterclaimed, alleging plaintiff had intentionally or negligently salted the test results. Plaintiff tendered defense of the counterclaim to his insurer, the defendant. Defendant refused to defend, contending the allegations of the counterclaim were not covered by the insurance policy. The policy excluded from coverage damage "intended from the standpoint of the insured". In a declaratory judgment action the Supreme Court held that if the salting was done by third parties as a result of plaintiff's negligence, the action was covered by the policy. The drilling expense and inherent production costs established an intrinsic value in the core samples. There was a tangible property loss within the policy's coverage. The counterclaim set forth a covered "occurrence" as defined in the policy, and defendant was obliged to defend the counterclaim. Lindsay Drilling v. USF&G, 208 M 91, 676 P2d 203, 41 St. Rep. 193 (1984).

Case Notes

Constitutionality of Since-Terminated Statutes — No Longer Justiciable: Although the statutes at issue regarding the State Fund were still in effect at the time the plaintiffs brought suit in District Court challenging their constitutionality, the statutes terminated before the plaintiffs appealed to the Supreme Court. Therefore, the statutes were neither constitutional nor unconstitutional because they were no longer statutes, and the case before the Supreme Court was no longer justiciable. Moody's Market, Inc. v. Mont. St. Fund, 2020 MT 217, 401 Mont. 168, 471 P.3d 68.

Case Notes

Justiciability of Unenforced Ordinance Subject to Attorney General Opinion: The city of Missoula enacted an ordinance regarding firearms, and the Attorney General issued an opinion concluding Missoula lacked authority to enact the ordinance. Missoula did not attempt to enforce the ordinance and filed an action challenging the opinion and seeking a declaration that the ordinance was lawful. The District Court concluded a justiciable controversy existed, and ultimately ruled in favor of Missoula. The Supreme Court affirmed regarding justiciability and stated that justiciability is a threshold determination for all actions and affirmed that a justiciable controversy existed because if Missoula sought to enforce the ordinance in contravention of the opinion, which carries the imprimatur of legal authority unless overruled, the city would carry the risk of whatever liabilities could result from such action. However, the Supreme Court ultimately ruled against Missoula on the merits, reversing and remanding for a judgment in favor of the Attorney General. Missoula v. Fox, 2019 MT 250, 397 Mont. 388, 450 P.3d 898.

Antidiscrimination Ordinance — Plaintiffs Requesting Advisory Opinion — Dismissal Proper: The Bozeman City Commission adopted a nondiscrimination ordinance that prohibited discrimination on the basis of actual or perceived sexual orientation or gender identity or expression. The plaintiffs filed an action seeking a legal declaration that the ordinance was preempted by state law and beyond the Commission's authority. The District Court dismissed the action, concluding that the plaintiffs were requesting an advisory opinion. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the plaintiffs did not allege any facts indicating that they had engaged or were about to engage in any concrete transaction that would violate the ordinance. Arnone v. Bozeman, 2016 MT 184, 384 Mont. 250, 376 P.3d 786.

Failure of District Court to Rule Whether Collateral Source Reduction Applicable During Settlement Negotiations — Declaratory Judgment Inappropriate Absent Justiciable Controversy: Miller sought a declaratory judgment in District Court concerning whether 27-1-308 regarding collateral source reduction could be applied by insurance companies when evaluating cases and making settlement offers. Miller's motion for a declaratory judgment was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Before a court may exercise declaratory judgment jurisdiction, a justiciable controversy must exist. Seeking a declaratory judgment too early in the proceedings, when other remedies are still available, may amount to an advisory opinion. Here, Miller was requesting the District Court to interject its opinion regarding what factors and circumstances parties may consider in negotiating a settlement. As a matter of state policy, settlement is encouraged, and once a settlement is reached, courts can enforce the agreement. Insurers have a duty to attempt in good faith to negotiate prompt, fair, and equitable settlements in cases in which liability is reasonably clear. In this case, a dispute existed over the settlement amount, but there was no justiciable controversy regarding the existing and genuine rights or interests of the parties. Neither party was legally obligated to settle, nor can a court dictate what factors a party may or may not consider while engaging in a voluntary settlement process. Absent a justiciable controversy, a declaratory judgment was inappropriate. Miller v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2007 MT 85, 337 M 67, 155 P3d 1278 (2007), following Northfield Ins. Co. v. Mont. Ass'n of Counties, 2000 MT 256, 301 M 472, 10 P3d 813 (2000), and distinguishing Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997).

Attorney Fees Not Considered Costs — Declaratory Judgment Equitable Exception to Rule That Attorney Fees Not Awarded Absent Contractual or Statutory Provision: The District Court initially awarded costs and attorney fees to defendants for defending a declaratory judgment action. Plaintiff moved under former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), to strike the award of attorney fees. The District Court then concluded that it lacked authority to award attorney fees because plaintiff did not force defendants to defend against a frivolous or malicious action, so the court struck the award of attorney fees, and defendants appealed. Generally, under the American rule, a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory provision, although equitable exceptions are recognized. Section 27-8-311 provides that in any proceeding under this chapter, equitable and just costs may be awarded, but attorney fees are not, in any proper sense, considered part of the costs in a case and thus are not allowed as costs under 27-8-311. However, 27-8-313 draws no distinction between declaratory judgment actions adjudicating the rights of an insured against an insurer and actions adjudicating rights outside the confines of an insurance policy, so a court may award attorney fees pursuant to 27-8-313 when the court, in its discretion, considers such an award necessary or proper. Therefore, after finding that the District Court erred in concluding that it lacked authority to award attorney fees, the Supreme Court reversed for a determination of whether an award of attorney fees was necessary or proper in this case. Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum, 2003 MT 97, 315 M 210, 69 P3d 663 (2003), overruling State ex rel. Swart v. Casne, 172 M 302, 564 P2d 983 (1977), State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Lincoln County, 178 M 410, 584 P2d 1293 (1978), State ex rel. Leach v. Visser, 234 M 438, 767 P2d 858 (1988), McKamey v. St., 268 M 137, 885 P2d 515 (1994), and Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121 (1998), to the extent that those cases hold that a District Court has no discretionary authority to award attorney fees in a declaratory judgment action, and followed in Renville v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2004 MT 366, 324 M 509, 105 P3d 280 (2004). See also Horace Mann Ins. Co. v. Hanke, 2013 MT 320, 372 Mont. 350, 312 P.3d 429.

Incorrect Dismissal of Declaratory Judgment Seeking Payment of Prejudgment Medical Expenses — Ridley and Safeco Clarified: DuBray filed a complaint for a declaratory judgment, asking for a determination that Farmers Insurance Exchange (Farmers) was required to pay DuBray's medical expenses prior to settlement of or judgment on the underlying claim. DuBray also sought prejudgment interest, costs of suit, and compensatory and punitive damages. The District Court found that the complaint was effectively a bad faith action barred by 33-18-242 prior to resolution of the underlying claim against Farmers and dismissed the claim in its entirety for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. DuBray appealed, citing Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834 (2000), wherein the Supreme Court approved declaratory judgment actions as a means for compelling advance payment of medical expenses. Farmers contended that Safeco authorized declaratory judgment actions only for damages that, according to Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997), are owed prior to final judgment, that the only damages to which Ridley applied are undisputed medical expenses, and that the District Court should therefore be affirmed. The Supreme Court affirmed Safeco inasmuch as that case does not authorize a declaratory judgment to determine an insurer's liability prior to resolution of the underlying claim, with the exception of damages for which liability is reasonably clear, which are not barred by 33-18-242. Therefore, the District Court correctly dismissed DuBray's claims for pain and discomfort, mental distress, inconvenience, and punitive damages. However, Farmers' liability for medical damages was reasonably clear, so the District Court committed reversible error in dismissing the portion of DuBray's claim that sought payment of medical expenses. The Supreme Court went on to clarify Safeco and Ridley to ensure that those cases not be construed to apply only to medical expenses, because medical expenses are just one of the obligations incurred by victims that mandatory liability insurance laws were designed to eliminate, another being lost wages that are reasonably certain and directly related to an insured's negligence or wrongful act. DuBray v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2001 MT 251, 307 M 134, 36 P3d 897 (2001). See also Hop v. Safeco Ins. Co., 2011 MT 215, 361 Mont. 510, 261 P3d 981, which held that residual diminished value—the difference between the value of a vehicle immediately before an accident and the value of the vehicle after postaccident repairs have been made—does not qualify as a type of damage that must be paid in advance as “not reasonably in dispute”.

State Court Determination of Indemnification Inappropriate When Underlying Federal Class Action Case Undecided — Dismissal of Declaratory Judgment Action Proper Absent Justiciable Controversy: A class action suit was brought against Park County and several individual county officials in federal District Court. The county's primary insurer assumed the defense and indemnification. Two secondary assurance companies sought a declaratory judgment in state District Court that under the terms of their policy with the primary insurer, they had no duty to indemnify the primary insurer in connection with the claims in federal court. The state District Court dismissed the action for lack of a justiciable controversy, and the secondary assurance companies appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. The secondary assurance companies had no existing and genuine interest at stake at the time, nor could they claim any immediate danger of direct injury from the indemnification provisions of the policy. Putting a secondary insurer on notice of a lawsuit does not constitute a claim for indemnification, nor may a secondary insurer's duty to indemnify be said to exist if primary coverage has not been exhausted. The underlying federal case that was the subject of any potential indemnification had yet to be tried or settled. At this stage, the federal record contained only unproved and perhaps incomplete allegations of fact, and it would be premature to determine conclusively that any claims upon which the plaintiffs in the federal case might prevail arose from conduct that would preclude coverage under the policy. A declaratory judgment would serve only as speculative advice, subject to possible amendment or nullification upon resolution of the federal case, rather than as a final adjudication of the indemnification issue. Thus, the judicial determination that the secondary assurance companies sought involved a contractual duty for indemnification that had not yet arisen and that might never arise, so a determination of the issue would involve an advisory opinion that courts have no jurisdiction to issue. Northfield Ins. Co. v. Mont. Ass'n of Counties, 2000 MT 256, 301 M 472, 10 P3d 813, 57 St. Rep. 1049 (2000). See also Hardy v. Krutzfeldt, 206 M 521, 672 P2d 274 (1983), Brisendine v. St., 253 M 361, 833 P2d 1019 (1992), Skinner v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2005 MT 323, 329 M 511, 127 P3d 359 (2005), and Stroebe v. St., 2006 MT 19, 331 M 23, 127 P3d 1051 (2006).

Declaratory Judgment Not Seeking Bad Faith Damages Not Statutorily Barred Under Unfair Trade Practices Act: Applying Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997), the District Court granted declaratory judgment against Safeco Insurance Company of Illinois (Safeco) for payment of medical expenses that were no longer in dispute and that were owed under a Safeco insured's policy. Safeco appealed on grounds that the declaratory judgment should be stayed under 33-18-242 until after the settlement or final adjudication of the claim against its insured. The Supreme Court pointed out that under Fisher v. St. Farm Gen. Ins. Co., 1999 MT 308, 297 M 201, 991 P2d 452 (1999), an unfair trade practices claim against an insurer is an independent cause of action and only a third-party claimant who prevails at trial or achieves a settlement may in turn bring an unfair trade practices claim, theoretically extinguishing meritless claims before they are filed, thus protecting insurers from frivolous claims and facilitating judicial economy. However, the Supreme Court declined to transform the declaratory judgment claim in this case into an unfair trade practices claim, noting that, in fact, the unfair trade practices claim and the common-law bad faith claim had been dismissed by stipulation of the parties. The District Court did not err in concluding that because the declaratory judgment claim did not directly seek bad faith damages for an unfair trade practices violation, there was no statutory bar under 33-18-242. The declaratory judgment did not constitute a money judgment for damages in the ordinary sense, but merely removed all uncertainty and controversy over the issue of when the inevitable policy proceeds were due, and that judgment was therefore affirmed. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834, 57 St. Rep. 604 (2000), followed and clarified in DuBray v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2001 MT 251, 307 M 134, 36 P3d 897 (2001), insofar as nothing in Ridley or Safeco suggests that its scope should be limited to undisputed medical expenses. See also Hop v. Safeco Ins. Co., 2011 MT 215, 361 Mont. 510, 261 P.3d 981, which held that residual diminished value—the difference between the value of a vehicle immediately before an accident and the value of the vehicle after postaccident repairs have been made—does not qualify as a type of damage that must be paid in advance as “not reasonably in dispute”.

Supervisory Control Granted to Address Stay of Declaratory Judgment Until Settlement Reached or Judgment Entered: Hill was injured in a vehicle accident caused by the negligence of Bennett, an insured of Safeco Insurance Company of Illinois (Safeco). Although Safeco apparently paid some of Hill's initial medical bills, Safeco eventually disputed the causal relationship between the accident and the injuries, refusing to pay any further medical bills after a specific date. Hill sued Bennett for negligence and Safeco for nonpayment of medical expenses, seeking a declaratory judgment that he was entitled to advance payment of medical costs prior to settlement or final judgment and claiming that a declaratory judgment was proper under the Unfair Trade Practices Act and Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997). The District Court granted the declaratory judgment, and Safeco sought a writ of supervisory control because a direct appeal would be an inadequate remedy. The Supreme Court agreed and granted the writ. Safeco's application presented an appropriate legal issue for supervisory control because if the ordered payment of medical expenses was a mistake of law or incorrect, the delay in awaiting the outcome of the corollary litigation could create an unfair prejudice for Safeco, while any unnecessary delay in the payment of the medical costs would certainly prejudice Hill. Ultimately, the Supreme Court affirmed on grounds that the declaratory judgment did not constitute a money judgment for damages in the ordinary sense, but merely removed all uncertainty and controversy over the issue of when the inevitable policy proceeds were due. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834, 57 St. Rep. 604 (2000).

Emergency Factor Warranting Declaratory Judgment Not Present: The appellants did not request a hearing when the state agency they worked for terminated them for cause and indicated it would not pay them for accrued leave. The lower court ruled that the appellants could not challenge the constitutionality of the state law concerning accrued leave because they had not exhausted their administrative remedies. The Supreme Court reversed on the basis that an individual does not have to submit to the provisions of a law he claims is unconstitutional before he can seek a declaratory ruling on the issue of constitutionality. However, the Supreme Court also held that the case should be remanded to the lower court to rule on the constitutional issues because no emergency existed that would justify a declaratory ruling. Stuart v. Dept. of Social and Rehabilitation Services, 247 M 433, 807 P2d 710, 48 St. Rep. 238 (1991).

Declaratory Judgment Substituted for Administrative Procedure: The plaintiffs initiated an action to obtain a declaratory judgment from the District Court granting relief from an agency's ruling. The Supreme Court ruled that the lower court did not have the discretion to proceed under the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act when the Montana Administrative Procedure Act provided a remedy for the party alleging a grievance. Roeber v. St., 243 M 437, 795 P2d 424, 47 St. Rep. 1293 (1990).

Justiciable Controversy Required:

The Supreme Court applied the rationale in Hardy v. Krutzfeldt, 206 M 521, 672 P2d 274 (1983), in holding that plaintiffs' request for a declaratory judgment regarding the legality of closing school board meetings to the public amounted to a request for an advisory opinion that would have no impact on present or future rights of the parties. Because plaintiff did not seek to void the meetings, a justiciable controversy did not exist and a declaratory judgment action could not be maintained. Flesh v. Bd. of Trustees, 241 M 158, 786 P2d 4, 47 St. Rep. 161 (1990).

When a declaratory judgment had been sought on the issue of whether a right of first refusal of real property was invalid under the rule against perpetuities, it should have been dismissed by the District Court because no justiciable controversy existed. Relying on Hardy v. Krutzfeldt, 206 M 521, 672 P2d 274, 40 St. Rep. 1823 (1983), the Supreme Court noted that in this case there was no pending sale or offer for sale or purchase or offer to purchase the affected property. Neither had a third party challenged the clause's application to him. Parker v. Weed, 220 M 49, 713 P2d 535, 43 St. Rep. 162 (1986).

The parties were all heirs of Robert Hardy. He created trusts that became operative upon his death. The trusts were terminated, and the heirs entered negotiations for the division of a ranch making up the corpus of the trust. An agreement was entered dividing the ranch into seven tracts. The agreement provided that prior to the sale of any tract the other six heirs were to be given the right of first refusal. If all declined and a contract was entered into with a third party, all six had the right to meet the offer, with the first to accept to be given priority. The plaintiffs filed a complaint for declaratory relief seeking to have the provisions on first refusal declared an unreasonable restraint on alienation. The District Court granted summary judgment to defendants. On appeal, the Supreme Court remanded with instructions to dismiss. The court held that there was no justiciable controversy as no attempts had been made to sell any of the tracts. The court held that the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act could not be used as a platform for the courts in Montana to plunge into indefinite, amorphous ponds of contract interpretation. Hardy v. Krutzfeldt, 206 M 521, 672 P2d 274, 40 St. Rep. 1823 (1983).

Court Determination of Correct Loss-Per-Vehicle Figure Under Flat Fee System — Declaratory Judgment Proper: A declaratory judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court after finding that a county had the right to have the District Court construe 61-3-536 and thereby to determine the correct loss-per-vehicle figure to be used by the state after the county miscalculated the amount due the county under the flat fee system. Lewis & Clark County v. St., 224 M 223, 728 P2d 1348, 43 St. Rep. 2150 (1986).

Jurisdiction to Determine Validity of Will Prior to Death: The courts have no power to pass on the validity of the will of a living person. Colbo v. Coty, 184 M 72, 601 P2d 697 (1979).

Adjudication of Hypothetical Contingencies: Courts have no jurisdiction to determine matters purely speculative, enter anticipatory judgments, or provide for contingencies which may later arise. Provisions in a judgment will be stricken if they purport to adjudicate rights and status under a future hypothetical contingency. Dept. of Natural Resources v. Intake Water Co., 171 M 416, 558 P2d 1110 (1976).

Workers' Compensation Court (WCC) Lacks Jurisdiction to Consider Constitutional Challenges to WCC and Workers' Compensation Act (WCA) After All Disputes Involving WCA Benefits Are Settled — WCC Has Authority to Rule Over Constitutional Challenges to WCC or WCA Only in Context of Benefit Dispute and Only as to Applicability of Statute, Rule, or Order to That Dispute. Allum v. Mont. St. Fund, 2023 MT 121, 412 Mont. 546, 531 P.3d 560.

Granting Summary Judgment Not Error When Plaintiff Has Not Demonstrated How It Suffered or Will Suffer Any Injury to Legal Rights. Kageco Orchards, LLC v. Dept. of Transportation, 2023 MT 71, 412 Mont. 45, 528 P.3d 1097.

No Private Cause of Action Under 2007 Version of Statute: A plaintiff appealed entry of summary judgment, arguing that she had a private cause of action under the 2007 version of the Montana Retail Installment Sales Act (RISA). The Supreme Court applied its analysis from Ibsen v. Caring for Montanans, Inc., 2016 MT 111, 383 Mont. 346, 371 P.3d 446, and Wombold v. Assocs. Fin. Servs. Co of Mont., Inc., 2004 MT 397, 325 Mont. 290, 104 P.3d 1080, and held that the 2007 version of RISA is an administrative statute authorizing government enforcement, not private action. Strauser v. RJC Inv., Inc., 2019 MT 163, 396 Mont. 348, 445 P.3d 803.

Plaintiff Entitled to Declaratory Judgment: A party to an installment loan contract appealed dismissal of her case for failure to state a claim when she asked for a declaratory judgment clarifying her legal relationship to her creditor under the Retail Installment Sales Act. On the facts presented, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded to the District Court for a clarification of the plaintiff's rights and legal obligations. Strauser v. RJC Inv., Inc., 2019 MT 163, 396 Mont. 348, 445 P.3d 803.

Failure of District Court to Dismiss Case — Unfair Trade Practices Claim Not Precluded by Insurance Settlement— Collateral Source Reduction Subject to Review: The District Court erred in granting the defendants' motion to dismiss by relying on Miller v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2007 MT 85, 337 Mont. 67, 155 P.3d 1278, and concluding as part of a declaratory judgment action that a justiciable controversy did not exist. Unlike Miller, the plaintiff was litigating a claim under existing rights or interests provided for in the Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA). The plaintiff and the defendants, two insurance companies, entered into and completed a settlement. Once the defendant insurers entered into a settlement with the plaintiff, the insurers became subject to the UTPA. Under the UTPA, insurers have duties and obligations regarding their settlement practices to an insured or third-party claimant. Thus, the parties had existing and genuine rights arising from the UTPA. The first requirement to find a justiciable controversy under the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act therefore was met. A judgment in the plaintiff's case would determine the parties' rights, status, or legal relationship by deciding whether the defendant insurers reduced the plaintiff's damages by applying the collateral source statute pursuant to 27-1-308. Assuming the defendant insurers unlawfully reduced the plaintiff's damages by relying on the collateral source rule, the plaintiff would be able to seek recovery. Marshall v. Safeco Ins. Co., 2018 MT 45, 390 Mont. 358, 413 P.3d 828, distinguishing Miller v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2007 MT 85, 337 Mont. 67, 155 P.3d 1278.

Same-Sex Couples Seeking Declaratory and Injunctive Relief for Rights Afforded Married Couples — Relief Exceeds Bounds of Justiciable Controversy — Remanded to Allow Plaintiffs to Amend Complaint: Six same-sex couples filed suit against the state seeking declaratory and injunctive relief in order to receive protections and benefits equal to those provided to married couples under state law. Although they claimed that Montana's statutory scheme denied them several rights under Article II of the Montana Constitution — among them, the rights to equal protection, due process, and dignity — the plaintiffs did not seek a declaration that particular statutes were unconstitutional. The District Court granted the state's motion to dismiss, concluding that the matter exceeded the bounds of a justiciable controversy and that to grant the plaintiffs the broad injunction and declaratory judgment they sought would not terminate the controversy giving rise to the proceeding. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal but remanded the matter to the District Court to allow the plaintiffs the opportunity to amend their complaint to identify the statutes they claim violate their constitutional rights. Donaldson v. St., 2012 MT 288, 367 Mont. 228, 292 P.3d 364.

Claim for Declaration of Rights Following Statutory Change Justiciable: Plaintiff caregivers sought a determination that the 2009 Medical Marijuana Act allowed caregiver-to-caregiver transactions for the purpose of supplying qualified patients with medical marijuana. Although the MMA was amended in 2011 to prohibit caregiver-to-caregiver transactions, the claim was appropriate for declaratory relief because the plaintiffs were insecure concerning their legal status under the 2009 MMA and at least two of the plaintiffs faced criminal charges. Medical Marijuana Growers Ass'n, Inc. v. Corrigan, 2012 MT 146, 365 Mont. 346, 281 P.3d 210.

Workers' Compensation Court Authorized to Issue Only Limited Declaratory Judgments: Several workers filed claims in the Workers' Compensation Court seeking benefits. In a separate action, the workers filed a petition for a declaratory judgment in the Workers' Compensation Court seeking a declaration that the claimant disclosure waiver procedures in 39-71-604(3) and 50-16-527(5) violated the workers' right to privacy and deprived them of property without due process. The Workers' Compensation Court granted summary judgment for the workers and declared the statutory provisions unconstitutional. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The Workers' Compensation Court erred in concluding that it had jurisdiction to enter a declaratory judgment in the context of this case. As a court of limited jurisdiction, the Workers' Compensation Court is statutorily authorized to issue declaratory rulings only in the context of a dispute concerning benefits under the Workers' Compensation Act and only as to the applicability of any statutory provision, rule, or order of an agency to that dispute. Benefits were not at issue in this case, so the Workers' Compensation Court did not have jurisdiction to issue a declaratory judgment concerning the constitutionality of 39-71-604(3) and 50-16-527(5), nor is the Workers' Compensation Court a court of record because it does not appear in the list in 3-1-102. (Note that the Legislature added the Workers' Compensation Court to the list of courts of record effective October 1, 2007.) Thompson v. St., 2007 MT 185, 338 M 511, 167 P3d 867 (2007). See also Allum v. Mont. St. Fund, 2023 MT 121, 412 Mont. 546, 531 P.3d 560.

Failure of District Court to Rule Whether Collateral Source Reduction Applicable During Settlement Negotiations — Declaratory Judgment Inappropriate Absent Justiciable Controversy: Miller sought a declaratory judgment in District Court concerning whether 27-1-308 regarding collateral source reduction could be applied by insurance companies when evaluating cases and making settlement offers. Miller's motion for a declaratory judgment was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Before a court may exercise declaratory judgment jurisdiction, a justiciable controversy must exist. Seeking a declaratory judgment too early in the proceedings, when other remedies are still available, may amount to an advisory opinion. Here, Miller was requesting the District Court to interject its opinion regarding what factors and circumstances parties may consider in negotiating a settlement. As a matter of state policy, settlement is encouraged, and once a settlement is reached, courts can enforce the agreement. Insurers have a duty to attempt in good faith to negotiate prompt, fair, and equitable settlements in cases in which liability is reasonably clear. In this case, a dispute existed over the settlement amount, but there was no justiciable controversy regarding the existing and genuine rights or interests of the parties. Neither party was legally obligated to settle, nor can a court dictate what factors a party may or may not consider while engaging in a voluntary settlement process. Absent a justiciable controversy, a declaratory judgment was inappropriate. Miller v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2007 MT 85, 337 M 67, 155 P3d 1278 (2007), following Northfield Ins. Co. v. Mont. Ass'n of Counties, 2000 MT 256, 301 M 472, 10 P3d 813 (2000), and distinguishing Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997).

Dismissal for Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction Proper Upon Failure to Exhaust Administrative Remedies Absent Showing of Futility: Plaintiff filed for declaratory judgment and injunctive relief against state agencies and a subdivision water development company regarding plaintiff's provision of water to subdivisions developed by the company. The District Court dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, and plaintiff appealed. Generally, before a party can seek declaratory relief in District Court, the party must exhaust its administrative remedies, although courts generally will not require exhaustion of administrative remedies when recourse to an administrative remedy would be futile. However, the mere possibility of an adverse decision does not mean that resort to an administrative agency is futile, nor does the possibility that agencies might render decisions that could in some degree conflict justify bypassing the administrative process. Plaintiff in this case could not demonstrate futility, and seeking to skip the administrative process constituted an unwarranted intrusion into the agencies' regulatory authority. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion by dismissing the action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction when plaintiff did not first exhaust its administrative remedies before seeking judicial review. Mtn. Water Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 2005 MT 84, 326 M 416, 110 P3d 20 (2005), following Brisendine v. St., 253 M 361, 833 P2d 1019 (1992), and Art v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 2002 MT 327, 313 M 197, 60 P3d 958 (2002).

Incorrect Dismissal of Declaratory Judgment Seeking Payment of Prejudgment Medical Expenses — Ridley and Safeco Clarified: DuBray filed a complaint for a declaratory judgment, asking for a determination that Farmers Insurance Exchange (Farmers) was required to pay DuBray's medical expenses prior to settlement of or judgment on the underlying claim. DuBray also sought prejudgment interest, costs of suit, and compensatory and punitive damages. The District Court found that the complaint was effectively a bad faith action barred by 33-18-242 prior to resolution of the underlying claim against Farmers and dismissed the claim in its entirety for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. DuBray appealed, citing Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834 (2000), wherein the Supreme Court approved declaratory judgment actions as a means for compelling advance payment of medical expenses. Farmers contended that Safeco authorized declaratory judgment actions only for damages that, according to Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997), are owed prior to final judgment, that the only damages to which Ridley applied are undisputed medical expenses, and that the District Court should therefore be affirmed. The Supreme Court affirmed Safeco inasmuch as that case does not authorize a declaratory judgment to determine an insurer's liability prior to resolution of the underlying claim, with the exception of damages for which liability is reasonably clear, which are not barred by 33-18-242. Therefore, the District Court correctly dismissed DuBray's claims for pain and discomfort, mental distress, inconvenience, and punitive damages. However, Farmers' liability for medical damages was reasonably clear, so the District Court committed reversible error in dismissing the portion of DuBray's claim that sought payment of medical expenses. The Supreme Court went on to clarify Safeco and Ridley to ensure that those cases not be construed to apply only to medical expenses, because medical expenses are just one of the obligations incurred by victims that mandatory liability insurance laws were designed to eliminate, another being lost wages that are reasonably certain and directly related to an insured's negligence or wrongful act. DuBray v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2001 MT 251, 307 M 134, 36 P3d 897 (2001). See also Hop v. Safeco Ins. Co., 2011 MT 215, 361 Mont. 510, 261 P.3d 981, which held that residual diminished value—the difference between the value of a vehicle immediately before an accident and the value of the vehicle after postaccident repairs have been made—does not qualify as a type of damage that must be paid in advance as “not reasonably in dispute”.

State Court Determination of Indemnification Inappropriate When Underlying Federal Class Action Case Undecided — Dismissal of Declaratory Judgment Action Proper Absent Justiciable Controversy: A class action suit was brought against Park County and several individual county officials in federal District Court. The county's primary insurer assumed the defense and indemnification. Two secondary assurance companies sought a declaratory judgment in state District Court that under the terms of their policy with the primary insurer, they had no duty to indemnify the primary insurer in connection with the claims in federal court. The state District Court dismissed the action for lack of a justiciable controversy, and the secondary assurance companies appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. The secondary assurance companies had no existing and genuine interest at stake at the time, nor could they claim any immediate danger of direct injury from the indemnification provisions of the policy. Putting a secondary insurer on notice of a lawsuit does not constitute a claim for indemnification, nor may a secondary insurer's duty to indemnify be said to exist if primary coverage has not been exhausted. The underlying federal case that was the subject of any potential indemnification had yet to be tried or settled. At this stage, the federal record contained only unproved and perhaps incomplete allegations of fact, and it would be premature to determine conclusively that any claims upon which the plaintiffs in the federal case might prevail arose from conduct that would preclude coverage under the policy. A declaratory judgment would serve only as speculative advice, subject to possible amendment or nullification upon resolution of the federal case, rather than as a final adjudication of the indemnification issue. Thus, the judicial determination that the secondary assurance companies sought involved a contractual duty for indemnification that had not yet arisen and that might never arise, so a determination of the issue would involve an advisory opinion that courts have no jurisdiction to issue. Northfield Ins. Co. v. Mont. Ass'n of Counties, 2000 MT 256, 301 M 472, 10 P3d 813, 57 St. Rep. 1049 (2000). See also Hardy v. Krutzfeldt, 206 M 521, 672 P2d 274 (1983), *Brisendine v. Mootness — No Appeal Absent District Court Ruling on Declaratory Judgment: The high school sports association decided that Grabow was ineligible to play basketball because his eligibility pursuant to the semester rule had elapsed while Grabow was an exchange student in Germany. Grabow filed a complaint in District Court asking for a declaratory ruling that the association lacked rulemaking and adjudicatory authority and requested a hearing on whether a preliminary injunction should be issued precluding enforcement of the association rule until the case could be adjudicated on its merits. After deciding that it was unlikely that Grabow would ultimately prevail, the District Court denied the injunction. Grabow appealed. The Supreme Court granted the injunction pending final disposition of the appeal, and Grabow played basketball during his senior year. The Supreme Court found that the 1999-2000 season was the only one in which Grabow claimed that he had a right to participate and that because the season was completed, the initial grounds for application of the mootness doctrine to the preliminary injunction issue were met. The declaratory judgment issue was not one capable of repetition, but was one that would evade review, so the Supreme Court remanded for further consideration of Grabow's complaint for declaratory judgment, which would then be subject to appeal following final judgment by the District Court. Grabow v. Mont. High School Assn., 2000 MT 159, 300 M 227, 3 P3d 650, 57 St. Rep. 654 (2000). See also Shamrock Motors, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 1999 MT 21, 293 M 188, 974 P2d 1150 (1999).

Declaratory Judgment Not Seeking Bad Faith Damages Not Statutorily Barred Under Unfair Trade Practices Act: Applying Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997), the District Court granted declaratory judgment against Safeco Insurance Company of Illinois (Safeco) for payment of medical expenses that were no longer in dispute and that were owed under a Safeco insured's policy. Safeco appealed on grounds that the declaratory judgment should be stayed under 33-18-242 until after the settlement or final adjudication of the claim against its insured. The Supreme Court pointed out that under Fisher v. St. Farm Gen. Ins. Co., 1999 MT 308, 297 M 201, 991 P2d 452 (1999), an unfair trade practices claim against an insurer is an independent cause of action and only a third-party claimant who prevails at trial or achieves a settlement may in turn bring an unfair trade practices claim, theoretically extinguishing meritless claims before they are filed, thus protecting insurers from frivolous claims and facilitating judicial economy. However, the Supreme Court declined to transform the declaratory judgment claim in this case into an unfair trade practices claim, noting that, in fact, the unfair trade practices claim and the common-law bad faith claim had been dismissed by stipulation of the parties. The District Court did not err in concluding that because the declaratory judgment claim did not directly seek bad faith damages for an unfair trade practices violation, there was no statutory bar under 33-18-242. The declaratory judgment did not constitute a money judgment for damages in the ordinary sense, but merely removed all uncertainty and controversy over the issue of when the inevitable policy proceeds were due, and that judgment was therefore affirmed. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834, 57 St. Rep. 604 (2000), followed and clarified in DuBray v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2001 MT 251, 307 M 134, 36 P3d 897 (2001), insofar as nothing in Ridley or Safeco suggests that its scope should be limited to undisputed medical expenses. See also Hop v. Safeco Ins. Co., 2011 MT 215, 361 Mont. 510, 261 P.3d 981, which held that residual diminished value—the difference between the value of a vehicle immediately before an accident and the value of the vehicle after postaccident repairs have been made—does not qualify as a type of damage that must be paid in advance as “not reasonably in dispute”.

Power of Court in Declaratory Judgment Action — Justiciable Controversy Presented — Brisendine Distinguished: Guaranty National admitted 90% of the liability for an accident involving Ridley and its insured, Roope, but refused to pay Ridley's medical expenses without settling all of Ridley's claim against its insured. Ridley filed an action for a declaratory judgment against Guaranty National, asking the District Court to find that Guaranty National had a duty to pay medical expenses under 33-18-201. Citing Brisendine v. Dept. of Commerce, 253 M 361, 833 P2d 1019 (1992), the District Court held that the controversy was not justiciable under the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act, because there were still factual issues left to be decided, and granted Guaranty National's motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court distinguished Brisendine and noted that under the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act, a party is entitled to a decision whether or not it determines all of the issues between the parties to the action. The Supreme Court also noted that Guaranty National had some legal basis for claiming that it could not legally settle part of Ridley's claims because two opinions of the U.S. District Court in Montana incorrectly construed 33-18-242(5) concerning an insurer's liability if the insurer has a reasonable basis in law or fact for contesting the claim. For these reasons, the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court erred when it granted the insurer's motion for summary judgment. Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987, 54 St. Rep. 1430 (1997), followed and clarified in DuBray v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2001 MT 251, 307 M 134, 36 P3d 897 (2001), insofar as nothing in Ridley or in Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834 (2000), which followed Ridley, suggests that its scope should be limited to undisputed medical expenses.

Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies Doctrine Not Applicable if Constitutional Violation Alleged: Since declaratory judgment petitioner argued that the state requirement that firefighters working for it at an airport and protecting civilian and military aircraft be members of the Montana Air National Guard was unconstitutional, the doctrine requiring exhaustion of administrative remedies before seeking a declaratory judgment did not apply. McKamey v. St., 268 M 137, 885 P2d 515, 51 St. Rep. 1218 (1994).

Possibility of Being Fired as Controversy With Employer: The state required firefighters working for it at an airport and protecting civilian and military aircraft to be members of the Montana Air National Guard. Since another firefighter was terminated because of noncompliance with this requirement, after retiring from the National Guard, petitioner firefighter's employment would be threatened if he resigned or retired from the National Guard. In addition, the existence of a case or controversy was amply demonstrated by multiple lawsuits concerning the pay and employment status of the firefighters. Therefore, the declaratory judgment requirement of a threatened injury and a case or controversy was met. It was proper to refuse to dismiss the petition for a judgment declaring the National Guard membership requirement unconstitutional. It was not necessary for petitioner to have already suffered an injury. McKamey v. St., 268 M 137, 885 P2d 515, 51 St. Rep. 1218 (1994), followed in Chipman v. NW. Healthcare Corp., 2012 MT 242, 366 Mont. 450, 288 P.3d 193.

Right to Declaratory Judgment on Discretionary Military Policy Threatening Public Sector Harm: The general rule of no subject matter court jurisdiction over a discretionary military policy (in this case, a state government military policy) did not apply to a state requirement that its firefighters protecting civilian and National Guard aircraft belong to the Montana Air National Guard. Loss of the job for failure to belong was a threatened injury resulting from military intrusion into the civilian sector by the state. The state did not show that the requirement was related to military employment. Therefore, the rule could not be used to dismiss a firefighter's petition for declaratory judgment. McKamey v. St., 268 M 137, 885 P2d 515, 51 St. Rep. 1218 (1994).

Justiciable Controversy Required:

The Supreme Court applied the rationale in Hardy v. Krutzfeldt, 206 M 521, 672 P2d 274 (1983), in holding that plaintiffs' request for a declaratory judgment regarding the legality of closing school board meetings to the public amounted to a request for an advisory opinion that would have no impact on present or future rights of the parties. Because plaintiff did not seek to void the meetings, a justiciable controversy did not exist and a declaratory judgment action could not be maintained. Flesh v. Bd. of Trustees, 241 M 158, 786 P2d 4, 47 St. Rep. 161 (1990).

When a declaratory judgment had been sought on the issue of whether a right of first refusal of real property was invalid under the rule against perpetuities, it should have been dismissed by the District Court because no justiciable controversy existed. Relying on Hardy v. Krutzfeldt, 206 M 521, 672 P2d 274, 40 St. Rep. 1823 (1983), the Supreme Court noted that in this case there was no pending sale or offer for sale or purchase or offer to purchase the affected property. Neither had a third party challenged the clause's application to him. Parker v. Weed, 220 M 49, 713 P2d 535, 43 St. Rep. 162 (1986).

The parties were all heirs of Robert Hardy. He created trusts that became operative upon his death. The trusts were terminated, and the heirs entered negotiations for the division of a ranch making up the corpus of the trust. An agreement was entered dividing the ranch into seven tracts. The agreement provided that prior to the sale of any tract the other six heirs were to be given the right of first refusal. If all declined and a contract was entered into with a third party, all six had the right to meet the offer, with the first to accept to be given priority. The plaintiffs filed a complaint for declaratory relief seeking to have the provisions on first refusal declared an unreasonable restraint on alienation. The District Court granted summary judgment to defendants. On appeal, the Supreme Court remanded with instructions to dismiss. The court held that there was no justiciable controversy as no attempts had been made to sell any of the tracts. The court held that the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act could not be used as a platform for the courts in Montana to plunge into indefinite, amorphous ponds of contract interpretation. Hardy v. Krutzfeldt, 206 M 521, 672 P2d 274, 40 St. Rep. 1823 (1983).

Declaratory Judgment on Requiring Prepayment of Jury Fees by Party Demanding Jury: The Supreme Court took original jurisdiction of, and heard, a petition for a declaratory judgment that it was unconstitutional to require prepayment, by a party requesting a civil jury trial, of each day's jury fees at or before the end of the prior day. The requirement was contained in Rule 14F, M.J.C.R. Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 22, superseded 1990). There was a justiciable controversy of statewide impact in that the rule applied to all justice courts; delay could abridge vital constitutional rights of litigants; the purpose of the declaratory judgment would serve the office of a writ, and the court has jurisdiction to issue, hear, and determine writs; and it would promote judicial economy to accept jurisdiction rather than force piecemeal litigation on the constitutionality of the rule. The court said that the prepayment requirement was contained in the rule and 3-15-203, which provided that "In civil actions, the jurors' fees must be paid by the party demanding the jury and taxed as costs against the losing party", and declared both the statute and rule unconstitutional. Hammer v. Justice Court, 222 M 35, 720 P2d 281, 43 St. Rep. 1040 (1986).

Supreme Court Original Jurisdiction Over Declaratory Action Concerning Statewide Water Adjudication: The Supreme Court had power to determine an action for declaratory judgment involving the constitutionality of the requirement in 85-2-234 that final water decrees state "the amount of water, rate, and volume, included in the right". The issue affects all rights in the statewide adjudication process. Determination of the issue by the Supreme Court: (1) will provide guidance to the water court; (2) is in the interests of judicial economy; and (3) would serve the public policy of the state by expediting the determination of existing water rights. McDonald v. St., 220 M 519, 722 P2d 598, 43 St. Rep. 576 (1986), rehearing denied, 220 M 519, 722 P2d 598, 43 St. Rep. 1397 (1986).

Constitutional Claims Not Properly Before Court: In city's declaratory judgment action on interpretation of a particular statute, police officer also appealed city's decision to discharge him. The officer claimed he had been denied due process of law by the procedure used by the city. The District Court refused to consider the due process claim as it related to the declaratory judgment action. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court decision. A declaratory judgment proceeding is primarily intended to determine the meaning of a law or a contract and to adjudicate the rights of the parties therein, but not to determine controversial issues of fact such as the existence or denial of a procedural due process. Raynes v. Great Falls, 215 M 114, 696 P2d 423, 42 St. Rep. 224 (1985), followed in Remington v. Dept. of Corrections and Human Services, 255 M 480, 844 P2d 50, 49 St. Rep. 1084 (1992).

Justiciable Controversy Found to Exist:

A motorist seeking to have the 55-mile-per-hour speed limit statute at 61-8-304 (now repealed) declared unconstitutional presented a justiciable controversy meeting the criteria of In re Secret Grand Jury Inquiry, 170 M 354, 553 P2d 987 (1976). The fact that all motorists in the state have an affected interest in the statute attacked does not insulate the statute from attack by the petitioner. Lee v. St., 195 M 1, 635 P2d 1282, 38 St. Rep. 1729 (1981), rehearing denied, 195 M 1, 38 St. Rep. 1931 (1981), and followed in Helena Parents Comm'n v. Lewis & Clark County Comm'rs, 277 M 367, 922 P2d 1140, 53 St. Rep. 687 (1996). See also Gryczan v. St., 283 M 433, 942 P2d 112, 54 St. Rep. 699 (1997).

District Judge's petition to the Supreme Court seeking determination of his authority over grand jury subpoenas, his authority to examine grand jury proceedings to determine whether instructions given upon empanelment are being adhered to, and his authority to determine whether agents of the grand jury are acquitting themselves legally and appropriately as attaches of the court was in the nature of a request for a declaratory judgment, not an advisory opinion, and presented a justiciable controversy within the contemplation of this act because: (1) it involved a controversy concerning existing and genuine rights; (2) a judgment of the court might effectively operate on such a controversy; and (3) judicial determination would have the effect of a final judgment upon the rights of the parties. In re Secret Grand Jury Inquiry, 170 M 354, 553 P2d 987 (1976).

All Issues Stipulated by Parties Not Adjudicated: In a declaratory judgment action a District Court is not bound to rule on all of the issues stipulated by the parties, especially issues that are ancillary, speculative, conjectural, and academic. In reviewing the findings and conclusions of the District Court, all of the major issues in this case were addressed by the court, and as to the other issues discussed in the briefs submitted to the District Court, rejection of those arguments may be implied from the court's general conclusion pertaining to the Public Service Commission's jurisdiction. Billings v. P.S.C., 193 M 358, 631 P2d 1295, 38 St. Rep. 1162 (1981).

Jurisdiction to Determine Validity of Will Prior to Death: The courts have no power to pass on the validity of the will of a living person. Colbo v. Coty, 184 M 72, 601 P2d 697 (1979).

Attorney's Fees: There is no provision for an award of attorney's fees in an action for declaratory judgment. State ex rel. Dept. of Health & Environmental Sciences v. Lincoln County, 178 M 410, 584 P2d 1293 (1978).

Administrative Orders and Regulations:

A declaratory judgment establishes the rights and duties of the parties. It is not a proper vehicle to obtain relief from rulings within the jurisdiction of administrative bodies exercising judicial or quasi-judicial powers. In re Dewar, 169 M 437, 548 P2d 149 (1976).

District Court should have denied application for Writ of Prohibition to restrain Board of Equalization from enforcing amendments to regulations relating to corporation license tax allegedly due on patronage dividends of farm cooperatives where action for declaratory judgment could have been brought under Title 27, ch. 8. State ex rel. Fulton v. District Court, 139 M 573, 366 P2d 435 (1961).

If a governmental board delays unreasonably in instituting legal action seeking enforcement of its order and compliance with section 50-435, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), which requires coal mines to erect washrooms if they have more than 12 employees, the coal mine may institute an action at law for declaratory judgment under this chapter. Jeffries Coal Co. v. Indus. Accident Bd., 126 M 411, 252 P2d 1046 (1952).

Jurisdiction: Original jurisdiction of action arising out of a dispute as to the interpretation of a tax statute and involving no factual dispute was accepted by the court where appeal to the State Tax Appeal Board (now Montana Tax Appeal Board) was pending upon court's acceptance of jurisdiction. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown v. Dept. of Revenue, 168 M 284, 541 P2d 1219 (1975).

Prior Federal Determination as Being Jurisdictional: Savings and loan associations were not required to secure prior federal approval before seeking a declaratory judgment because there were two questions of legality, federal and state, which were separate and gave rise to a justiciable controversy. Gate City S & L Ass'n v. Mont. S&L League, 166 M 411, 533 P2d 1083 (1975).

Contracts: In proceeding under this act a court's resolution of ambiguity on face of contract constituted construction, not contract reformation. Heller v. Osburnsen, 162 M 182, 510 P2d 13 (1973).

Supreme Court:

Supreme Court could entertain original action for declaratory judgment on calling, election of delegates to, and implementation of constitutional convention required by vote of the electors in view of necessity for Legislature to act within 60-day session then in progress. Forty-Second Legislative Assembly v. Lennon, 156 M 416, 481 P2d 330 (1971).

Supreme Court could accept original jurisdiction in suit for declaratory judgment where statute that taxed nonresident contractors indiscriminately was declared unconstitutional, since Supreme Court was a court of record and under its own rules could accept original jurisdiction in emergency situations. State ex rel. Schultz-Lindsay Constr. Co. v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 145 M 380, 403 P2d 635 (1965).

Oral Testimony Proper: Oral testimony is properly within the matters that the court may consider on motions for summary judgment. Citizens St. Bank v. Duus, 154 M 18, 459 P2d 696 (1969); Daniels v. Paddock, 145 M 207, 399 P2d 740 (1965).

Termination of Annexation Proceedings: Where a majority of the resident freeholders of a first-class city validly protested proposed annexation under Title 7, ch. 2, part 43, but City Council instead of terminating the annexation proceedings took arbitrary action, mandamus was proper to compel Council to terminate the process. This chapter did not furnish the protestants a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. State ex rel. Konen v. Butte, 144 M 95, 394 P2d 753 (1964).

Tax Exemption: The question as to whether property leased to a school district was exempt from taxation was proper to adjudicate in a declaratory judgment proceeding. NW. Improvement Co. v. Rosebud County, 129 M 412, 288 P2d 657 (1955).

Public Officers as Defendants: Suits against tax officials based upon the illegality of their action in assessing or collecting taxes are not considered suits against the state, so that it is not necessary for the plaintiff to allege that the state has consented to be sued under the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act of Montana. Brophy Coal Co. v. Matthews, 125 M 212, 233 P2d 397 (1951).

Finding of Facts Required: In order to sustain a declaratory judgment, the court must first have made findings of fact upon which the judgment could be based and the findings of fact cannot go outside the issues formulated by the pleadings. Nat'l Sur. Corp. v. Kruse, 121 M 202, 192 P2d 317 (1948).

Abstract Questions: The judicial power under this act extends only to actual cases and controversies and not to abstract questions. Chovanak v. Matthews, 120 M 520, 188 P2d 582 (1948). Insurer's Standing to Challenge Obligation to Continue Medical Payments — Standing to File for Declaratory Judgment Proper. Depositors Ins. Co. v. Sandidge, 2022 MT 33, 407 Mont. 385, 504 P.3d 477.

Failure of District Court to Dismiss Case — Unfair Trade Practices Claim Not Precluded by Insurance Settlement— Collateral Source Reduction Subject to Review: The District Court erred in granting the defendants' motion to dismiss by relying on Miller v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2007 MT 85, 337 Mont. 67, 155 P.3d 1278, and concluding as part of a declaratory judgment action that a justiciable controversy did not exist. Unlike Miller, the plaintiff was litigating a claim under existing rights or interests provided for in the Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA). The plaintiff and the defendants, two insurance companies, entered into and completed a settlement. Once the defendant insurers entered into a settlement with the plaintiff, the insurers became subject to the UTPA. Under the UTPA, insurers have duties and obligations regarding their settlement practices to an insured or third-party claimant. Thus, the parties had existing and genuine rights arising from the UTPA. The first requirement to find a justiciable controversy under the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act therefore was met. A judgment in the plaintiff's case would determine the parties' rights, status, or legal relationship by deciding whether the defendant insurers reduced the plaintiff's damages by applying the collateral source statute pursuant to 27-1-308. Assuming the defendant insurers unlawfully reduced the plaintiff's damages by relying on the collateral source rule, the plaintiff would be able to seek recovery. Marshall v. Safeco Ins. Co., 2018 MT 45, 390 Mont. 358, 413 P.3d 828, distinguishing Miller v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2007 MT 85, 337 Mont. 67, 155 P.3d 1278.

Motor Vehicle Accident — Disputed Causation of Damages — Declaratory Action Inappropriate: The plaintiff filed a declaratory action resulting from a vehicle accident in which she was injured. Although it paid initial medical costs, the defendant insurer subsequently disputed that the accident caused the plaintiff's damages. The District Court determined that a declaratory action was appropriate, that the plaintiff's damages were causally related to the accident, that the opinions of the defendant's experts did not create a disputed issue of material fact, and that the defendant's experts lacked foundation. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that declaratory actions are an inappropriate method to adjudicate disputed issues of material fact and that the case presented material disputes relating to causation of the plaintiff's damages. Teeter v. Mid-Century Ins. Co., 2017 MT 292, 389 Mont. 407, 406 P.3d 464.

Declaratory Judgments — Private Attorney General Doctrine — Justiciable Controversy Required: The private attorney general doctrine is not a cause of action requirement, and the requirement of a justiciable controversy applies to declaratory judgment actions. Without a concrete, threatened injury, the taxpayer plaintiffs were unable to establish standing to sue the county or the state for mismanagement of county finances under the Single Audit Act or the Local Government Budget Accounting Act. Mitchell v. Glacier County, 2017 MT 258, 389 Mont. 122, 406 P.3d 427, following Marbut v. Secretary of St., 231 Mont. 131, 752 P.2d 148 (1988).

Covenants Intended to Remain in Effect Until Rejected by Property Owners — Failure of Sufficient Tract Owners to Vote to Amend Covenants: Subdivision property owners entered covenants that would automatically extend for "successive period" of 10 years. The covenants could also be amended by a two-thirds vote of the owners of the original tracts. Some of the owners contended that the covenant extension language was ambiguous because it was not clear if the covenants would be renewed only for a single 10-year period or for successive 10-year periods. The District Court held that the language was not ambiguous, but rather contained a typographical error, and that successive 10-year periods applied. Plaintiffs appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Taken as a whole the covenant language intended that the covenants remain in effect until affirmatively rejected by the property owners. In this case, five of the eight original tract owners voted to amend the covenants, so without the required two-thirds vote, the covenants remained unamended. Brewer v. Hawkinson, 2009 MT 346, 353 M 154, 221 P3d 643 (2009). See also Creveling v. Ingold, 2006 MT 57, 331 M 322, 132 P3d 531 (2006).

Declaratory Judgment, Mandamus, and Judicial Review Inappropriate Remedies for Discretionary Decision of Commissioner of Political Practices: Doty, a political candidate, filed a complaint with the Commissioner of Political Practices, alleging that an opponent violated Montana's political civil libel statute and the false swearing statute when the opponent filed a complaint with the Commissioner, alleging that Doty was unqualified for office. The Commissioner found insufficient evidence that the opponent violated the law and decided not to prosecute the opponent, so Doty sought a declaratory judgment, mandamus, and judicial review in District Court challenging the Commissioner's decision. The Commissioner moved to dismiss on grounds that: (1) Doty lacked standing to request a declaratory judgment because Doty's rights, status, or other legal relations were not affected by the Commissioner's decision not to pursue legal action; (2) the decision was not subject to mandamus because it was discretionary; and (3) the decision was not subject to judicial review because it was not a contested case and because Doty's rights were not prejudiced. The District Court agreed and dismissed the complaint, and Doty appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The court first noted that the Commissioner's authority to enforce campaign laws is discretionary and that the laws are for the benefit of the public at large. Pursuant to Jeppeson v. St., 205 M 282, 667 P2d 428 (1983), a writ of mandamus will not issue to compel performance of a discretionary function. Also, Doty himself was not prosecuted or threatened with prosecution for violating campaign laws, so his legal rights were unaffected by the Commissioner's decision. Thus, neither a declaratory judgment action nor judicial review was appropriate. Doty v. Comm'r of Political Practices, 2007 MT 341, 340 M 276, 173 P3d 700 (2007).

Failure of District Court to Rule Whether Collateral Source Reduction Applicable During Settlement Negotiations — Declaratory Judgment Inappropriate Absent Justiciable Controversy: Miller sought a declaratory judgment in District Court concerning whether 27-1-308 regarding collateral source reduction could be applied by insurance companies when evaluating cases and making settlement offers. Miller's motion for a declaratory judgment was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Before a court may exercise declaratory judgment jurisdiction, a justiciable controversy must exist. Seeking a declaratory judgment too early in the proceedings, when other remedies are still available, may amount to an advisory opinion. Here, Miller was requesting the District Court to interject its opinion regarding what factors and circumstances parties may consider in negotiating a settlement. As a matter of state policy, settlement is encouraged, and once a settlement is reached, courts can enforce the agreement. Insurers have a duty to attempt in good faith to negotiate prompt, fair, and equitable settlements in cases in which liability is reasonably clear. In this case, a dispute existed over the settlement amount, but there was no justiciable controversy regarding the existing and genuine rights or interests of the parties. Neither party was legally obligated to settle, nor can a court dictate what factors a party may or may not consider while engaging in a voluntary settlement process. Absent a justiciable controversy, a declaratory judgment was inappropriate. Miller v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2007 MT 85, 337 M 67, 155 P3d 1278 (2007), following Northfield Ins. Co. v. Mont. Ass'n of Counties, 2000 MT 256, 301 M 472, 10 P3d 813 (2000), and distinguishing Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997).

Boundary Dispute Not Considered Appropriate for Declaratory Judgment — Attorney Fees Properly Denied: In a prescriptive easement dispute based on competing surveys, the District Court relied on 25-10-201 and denied plaintiffs' request for attorney fees. On appeal, plaintiffs asserted that because defendant had alleged that the case was a declaratory judgment action, attorney fees should have been granted under 27-8-311. The Supreme Court disagreed. Under this section, an action for declaratory judgment encompasses the construction of a deed or other instrument, not a determination of a boundary based on competing surveys. Plaintiffs provided no other basis for an award of attorney fees, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the District Court judgment. Steiger v. Brown, 2007 MT 29, 336 M 29, 152 P3d 705 (2007).

Contract Interpretation Applicable to Restrictive Covenants — How Ambiguity Resolved — Restrictive Covenants Strictly Construed: General rules of contract interpretation apply to restrictive covenants, and any person having an interest under a restrictive covenant may seek declaratory relief concerning any question of construction arising under the covenant. When a restrictive covenant has been reduced to writing, the intent of the parties is to be ascertained, when possible, from the writing alone, and when the language of a covenant is clear, a court must apply the language as written. Restrictive covenants are strictly construed, and ambiguities in covenants are resolved to allow free use of property. The determination of whether an ambiguity exists in a restrictive covenant is a question of law for a court to decide, but mere disagreement between the parties as to interpretation of a restrictive covenant does not automatically create an ambiguity. Creveling v. Ingold, 2006 MT 57, 331 M 322, 132 P3d 531 (2006). See also Newman v. Wittmer, 277 M 1, 917 P2d 926 (1996), and Toavs v. Sayre, 281 M 243, 934 P2d 165 (1997).

Dismissal for Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction Proper Upon Failure to Exhaust Administrative Remedies Absent Showing of Futility: Plaintiff filed for declaratory judgment and injunctive relief against state agencies and a subdivision water development company regarding plaintiff's provision of water to subdivisions developed by the company. The District Court dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, and plaintiff appealed. Generally, before a party can seek declaratory relief in District Court, the party must exhaust its administrative remedies, although courts generally will not require exhaustion of administrative remedies when recourse to an administrative remedy would be futile. However, the mere possibility of an adverse decision does not mean that resort to an administrative agency is futile, nor does the possibility that agencies might render decisions that could in some degree conflict justify bypassing the administrative process. Plaintiff in this case could not demonstrate futility, and seeking to skip the administrative process constituted an unwarranted intrusion into the agencies' regulatory authority. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion by dismissing the action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction when plaintiff did not first exhaust its administrative remedies before seeking judicial review. Mtn. Water Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 2005 MT 84, 326 M 416, 110 P3d 20 (2005), following Brisendine v. St., 253 M 361, 833 P2d 1019 (1992), and Art v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 2002 MT 327, 313 M 197, 60 P3d 958 (2002).

Failure by Insurer to Present Facts to Controvert Testimony That Ongoing Medical Expenses Causally Related to Accident — Declaratory Judgment Proper: In Renville v. Taylor, 2000 MT 217, 301 M 99, 7 P3d 400 (2000), the Supreme Court held that defendant insurer was liable for all expenses related to a collision involving Renville and remanded for a new trial on the issue of damages. Renville then asked the District Court for a declaratory judgment ordering defendant to pay for ongoing medical expenses incurred by Renville subsequent to trial. The District Court denied the request on grounds that factual issues existed regarding Renville's ongoing medical expenses that required resolution by a jury. Renville appealed, asserting that the court failed to follow the law of the case, and the Supreme Court agreed and reversed. Although an insurer is entitled to dispute its obligation to pay medical expenses, there must be a factual basis for doing so. Here, defendant insurer refused to pay Renville's ongoing medical expenses because the expenses were allegedly not causally related to the collision; however, the insurer failed to present any evidence to controvert Renville's expert testimony on causation, choosing instead to rely on testimony from the first trial that had been disregarded by the jury and that was not relevant to the issue of ongoing medical expenses. Thus, the District Court erred in failing to grant Renville's motion for declaratory judgment, and defendant insurer was required to pay Renville's ongoing medical expenses pursuant to Ridley v. Guarantee Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997), and the law of the case. Renville v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2003 MT 103, 315 M 295, 69 P3d 217 (2003), followed in Hoffman v. Austin, 2006 MT 289, 334 M 357, 147 P3d 177 (2006).

Incorrect Dismissal of Declaratory Judgment Seeking Payment of Prejudgment Medical Expenses — Ridley and Safeco Clarified: DuBray filed a complaint for a declaratory judgment, asking for a determination that Farmers Insurance Exchange (Farmers) was required to pay DuBray's medical expenses prior to settlement of or judgment on the underlying claim. DuBray also sought prejudgment interest, costs of suit, and compensatory and punitive damages. The District Court found that the complaint was effectively a bad faith action barred by 33-18-242 prior to resolution of the underlying claim against Farmers and dismissed the claim in its entirety for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. DuBray appealed, citing Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834 (2000), wherein the Supreme Court approved declaratory judgment actions as a means for compelling advance payment of medical expenses. Farmers contended that Safeco authorized declaratory judgment actions only for damages that, according to Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997), are owed prior to final judgment, that the only damages to which Ridley applied are undisputed medical expenses, and that the District Court should therefore be affirmed. The Supreme Court affirmed Safeco inasmuch as that case does not authorize a declaratory judgment to determine an insurer's liability prior to resolution of the underlying claim, with the exception of damages for which liability is reasonably clear, which are not barred by 33-18-242. Therefore, the District Court correctly dismissed DuBray's claims for pain and discomfort, mental distress, inconvenience, and punitive damages. However, Farmers' liability for medical damages was reasonably clear, so the District Court committed reversible error in dismissing the portion of DuBray's claim that sought payment of medical expenses. The Supreme Court went on to clarify Safeco and Ridley to ensure that those cases not be construed to apply only to medical expenses, because medical expenses are just one of the obligations incurred by victims that mandatory liability insurance laws were designed to eliminate, another being lost wages that are reasonably certain and directly related to an insured's negligence or wrongful act. DuBray v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2001 MT 251, 307 M 134, 36 P3d 897 (2001). See also Hop v. Safeco Ins. Co., 2011 MT 215, 361 Mont. 510, 261 P.3d 981, which held that residual diminished value—the difference between the value of a vehicle immediately before an accident and the value of the vehicle after postaccident repairs have been made—does not qualify as a type of damage that must be paid in advance as "not reasonably in dispute".

State Court Determination of Indemnification Inappropriate When Underlying Federal Class Action Case Undecided — Dismissal of Declaratory Judgment Action Proper Absent Justiciable Controversy: A class action suit was brought against Park County and several individual county officials in federal District Court. The county's primary insurer assumed the defense and indemnification. Two secondary assurance companies sought a declaratory judgment in state District Court that under the terms of their policy with the primary insurer, they had no duty to indemnify the primary insurer in connection with the claims in federal court. The state District Court dismissed the action for lack of a justiciable controversy, and the secondary assurance companies appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. The secondary assurance companies had no existing and genuine interest at stake at the time, nor could they claim any immediate danger of direct injury from the indemnification provisions of the policy. Putting a secondary insurer on notice of a lawsuit does not constitute a claim for indemnification, nor may a secondary insurer's duty to indemnify be said to exist if primary coverage has not been exhausted. The underlying federal case that was the subject of any potential indemnification had yet to be tried or settled. At this stage, the federal record contained only unproved and perhaps incomplete allegations of fact, and it would be premature to determine conclusively that any claims upon which the plaintiffs in the federal case might prevail arose from conduct that would preclude coverage under the policy. A declaratory judgment would serve only as speculative advice, subject to possible amendment or nullification upon resolution of the federal case, rather than as a final adjudication of the indemnification issue. Thus, the judicial determination that the secondary assurance companies sought involved a contractual duty for indemnification that had not yet arisen and that might never arise, so a determination of the issue would involve an advisory opinion that courts have no jurisdiction to issue. Northfield Ins. Co. v. Mont. Ass'n of Counties, 2000 MT 256, 301 M 472, 10 P3d 813, 57 St. Rep. 1049 (2000). See also Hardy v. Krutzfeldt, 206 M 521, 672 P2d 274 (1983), *Brisendine v. Power of Court in Declaratory Judgment Action — Justiciable Controversy Presented — Brisendine Distinguished: Guaranty National admitted 90% of the liability for an accident involving Ridley and its insured, Roope, but refused to pay Ridley's medical expenses without settling all of Ridley's claim against its insured. Ridley filed an action for a declaratory judgment against Guaranty National, asking the District Court to find that Guaranty National had a duty to pay medical expenses under 33-18-201. Citing Brisendine v. Dept. of Commerce, 253 M 361, 833 P2d 1019 (1992), the District Court held that the controversy was not justiciable under the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act, because there were still factual issues left to be decided, and granted Guaranty National's motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court distinguished Brisendine and noted that under the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act, a party is entitled to a decision whether or not it determines all of the issues between the parties to the action. The Supreme Court also noted that Guaranty National had some legal basis for claiming that it could not legally settle part of Ridley's claims because two opinions of the U.S. District Court in Montana incorrectly construed 33-18-242(5) concerning an insurer's liability if the insurer has a reasonable basis in law or fact for contesting the claim. For these reasons, the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court erred when it granted the insurer's motion for summary judgment. Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987, 54 St. Rep. 1430 (1997), followed and clarified in DuBray v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2001 MT 251, 307 M 134, 36 P3d 897 (2001), insofar as nothing in Ridley or in Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834 (2000), which followed Ridley, suggests that its scope should be limited to undisputed medical expenses.

Possibility of Being Fired as Controversy With Employer: The state required firefighters working for it at an airport and protecting civilian and military aircraft to be members of the Montana Air National Guard. Since another firefighter was terminated because of noncompliance with this requirement, after retiring from the National Guard, petitioner firefighter's employment would be threatened if he resigned or retired from the National Guard. In addition, the existence of a case or controversy was amply demonstrated by multiple lawsuits concerning the pay and employment status of the firefighters. Therefore, the declaratory judgment requirement of a threatened injury and a case or controversy was met. It was proper to refuse to dismiss the petition for a judgment declaring the National Guard membership requirement unconstitutional. It was not necessary for petitioner to have already suffered an injury. McKamey v. St., 268 M 137, 885 P2d 515, 51 St. Rep. 1218 (1994), distinguished in Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987, 54 St. Rep. 1430 (1997), and followed in Chipman v. NW. Healthcare Corp., 2012 MT 242, 366 Mont. 450, 288 P.3d 193.

Use of Declaratory Judgment to Settle Question of Business Association Between Dentist and Denturist Improper — Dismissal for Failure to State Claim and Exhaust Administrative Remedies: Brisendine, a licensed denturist, presented to the Board of Dentistry a proposal stating his desire to enter into a business association with a dentist regarding fees and compensation. The Board issued a letter stating that it was considering the proposal but that such association would probably constitute the illegal practice of dentistry. The Board further threatened sanctions against Brisendine if he went forward with his proposal, but no final decision was ever issued by the Board. Brisendine sought a declaratory judgment and injunctive relief in District Court, requesting a decision on whether the business association was legal. The District Court dismissed the complaint for failure to present a justiciable controversy. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that use of a declaratory judgment at this stage of the proceedings constituted an attempt to seek an advisory opinion and an unwarranted intrusion into the Board's regulatory authority. The Supreme Court noted that Brisendine could seek a declaratory judgment from the Board without subjecting his license to suspension or revocation and that dismissal of the motion for declaratory judgment was proper because Brisendine had not exhausted his administrative remedies. Brisendine v. St., 253 M 361, 833 P2d 1019, 49 St. Rep. 444 (1992).

Declaratory Judgment — Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies Not Required — Summary Judgment Improper: The District Court erred in granting the Town of West Yellowstone's motion for summary judgment in a declaratory judgment action brought to challenge the constitutionality of an off-street parking ordinance. When a bona fide constitutional issue is raised, a plaintiff has a right to resort to the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act for a determination of his rights and he may not be required to submit himself to the provisions of the ordinance that he claims are unconstitutional. This is so even though, as the District Court implied, the monetary result to the plaintiff under the zoning ordinance may be inconsequential. Mitchell v. W. Yellowstone, 235 M 104, 765 P2d 745, 45 St. Rep. 2226 (1988).

Dismissal of "Friendly Suit" as Nonjusticiable Controversy: Relator applied to the Supreme Court to commence an original proceeding for declaratory judgment, writ of mandate, and other appropriate relief. He sought a court requirement of the Secretary of State to commence the administrative process for inclusion of two constitutional initiatives in the next regular statewide election. The court found no justiciable controversy existed because the Secretary of State had already advised county election officials that he intended to place the initiatives on the ballot, which was essentially the same relief relator sought through the court by his "friendly suit". A declaratory judgment and writ of mandate are inappropriate in the absence of a justiciable controversy; therefore, relator's application for an original proceeding was dismissed. Marbut v. Secretary of St., 231 M 131, 752 P2d 148, 45 St. Rep. 487 (1988).

Court Determination of Correct Loss-Per-Vehicle Figure Under Flat Fee System — Declaratory Judgment Proper: A declaratory judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court after finding that a county had the right to have the District Court construe 61-3-536 and thereby to determine the correct loss-per-vehicle figure to be used by the state after the county miscalculated the amount due the county under the flat fee system. Lewis & Clark County v. St., 224 M 223, 728 P2d 1348, 43 St. Rep. 2150 (1986).

Constitutionality of Statutes:

Sections 3-1-607 and 3-1-608 forbid what Art. VII, sec. 10, Mont. Const., allows in that they require a Supreme Court Justice or Chief Justice or a District Court Judge to resign if he becomes a candidate for any elective office, while Art. VII, sec. 10, Mont. Const., provides that such a person does not have to resign if he runs for another judicial office. Standing to challenge the constitutionality of 3-1-607 and 3-1-608 existed where a petition for declaratory judgment was brought by registered voters and the two statutes adversely affected the election process contemplated by the constitution. The registered voters had standing to assert the public interest clearly intended by Art. VII, sec. 10, Mont. Const., to assert the integrity and supremacy of the constitution, and to assert the public interest in challenging the legality of legislative action that allegedly flies in the face of the constitution. The Comm. for an Effective Judiciary v. St., 209 M 105, 679 P2d 1223, 41 St. Rep. 581 (1984).

A decision on the constitutionality of a statute cannot be obtained under the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act by a person who has no interest in the question except that of a "resident, citizen, taxpayer and elector". Chovanak v. Matthews, 120 M 520, 188 P2d 582 (1948).

In a proceeding involving the constitutionality of sections 91-519 through 91-522, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), relating to the status of escheated estates, the Attorney General, whose legal duty is affected by the act, is entitled to seek a declaratory judgment under this section. Bottomly v. Meagher County, 114 M 220, 133 P2d 770 (1943).

Declaratory Judgment to Determine Insurer's Duties and Preclude Charge of Bad Faith: Kevin Cumiskey leased a restaurant from Elizabeth Bradley. The lease provided Cumiskey could make improvements to the premises, but he was to insure Bradley's interests. Cumiskey's father and mother operated the restaurant after it was incorporated. The restaurant was damaged by fire that appeared to be intentionally set. Plaintiff brought suit for a declaratory judgment to determine if Kevin Cumiskey was the recipient of policy proceeds, to determine rights and relationships of parties, and to subrogate any claim paid by plaintiff from the father who was suspected of the arson. Cumiskey counterclaimed for bad faith on the insurer's part. The District Court granted the insurer summary judgment. The Supreme Court held that a declaratory judgment action may be brought for the purpose of settling and affording relief from uncertainty and insecurity with respect to rights, status, and other legal relations. In a proper case, an insurer may use a declaratory judgment to obtain a determination of the validity, continuance, or coverage of an insurance policy; a determination of the extent of liability; or a determination of the insurer's duties under the policy. The action was proper, and the summary judgment on the counterclaim was properly awarded. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Cumiskey, 204 M 350, 665 P2d 223, 40 St. Rep. 891 (1983).

Moratorium on Conditional-Use Permits — Zoning — Mandamus — Prohibition — Declaratory Judgment: Diehl requested a conditional-use permit for a planned shopping center. In response, the city of Helena established a 1-year moratorium on the granting of all conditional-use permits. Diehl then filed his complaint and petition for a declaratory judgment, Writ of Mandate, and order to show cause. On appeal, the court found: (1) the city may adopt a reasonable general moratorium, but the procedure required by 76-2-306 must be followed; (2) the discretion of the City Commission to approve, modify, or deny the recommendation of the Zoning Commission cannot be controlled by Writ of Mandate, prohibition, or by declaratory judgment; (3) a Writ of Mandate requiring the city to act on Diehl's application within a reasonable time is proper under the circumstances in this case. State ex rel. Diehl Co. v. Helena, 181 M 306, 593 P2d 458 (1979).

Standing: The plaintiff had the requisite standing to bring an action under Montana's Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act requesting interpretation of 7-5-2411 (renumbered 18-7-411), et seq. W. Litho v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 174 M 245, 570 P2d 891 (1977). See also Helena Parents Comm'n v. Lewis & Clark County Comm'rs, 277 M 367, 922 P2d 1140, 53 St. Rep. 687 (1996).

Adjudication of Hypothetical Contingencies: Courts have no jurisdiction to determine matters purely speculative, enter anticipatory judgments, or provide for contingencies that may later arise. Provisions in a judgment will be stricken if they purport to adjudicate rights and status under a future hypothetical contingency. Dept. of Natural Resources v. Intake Water Co., 171 M 416, 558 P2d 1110 (1976).

Existence of Oral Contract in Controversy: Declaratory judgment is improper when existence of oral contract is in controversy, as a declaratory judgment proceeding is primarily intended to construe the meaning of a law and not to determine the existence of controverted facts. State ex rel. Indus. Indem. Co. v. District Court, 169 M 10, 544 P2d 438 (1975).

Franchises: Where a controversy existed between a rural electric cooperative and an electric power company as to the right of the cooperative to supply service to an addition to a city, the cooperative could have brought an action to determine its legal position before proceeding to install facilities to service the addition. Mont. Power Co. v. Park Elec. Co-op, 140 M 293, 371 P2d 1 (1962).

Oral Contract: An action for a declaratory judgment can be maintained to interpret an oral contract. Carpenter v. Free, 138 M 552, 357 P2d 882 (1960).

Declaratory Judgment — Interpretation of Land Exchange Agreement: Shortly after entering into a land purchase agreement, the parties changed the agreement into a tax-free land exchange agreement. The new agreement gave buyer 3½ years to acquire like-kind property to be exchanged for seller's ranch. The like-kind property was to be purchased with funds placed periodically by buyer in an escrow account. Several years later a dispute arose concerning the nature and timing of the payments. Buyer submitted the questions to the District Court in a declaratory judgment action. The District Court interpreted the contract in a manner generally favorable to seller, and buyer appealed, claiming that the District Court's decision was unreasonable, contrary to the parties' intentions, and improper under the rules of construction of contracts. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that the District Court's interpretation had not been unreasonable since: (1) its decision on the timing of the rental payments was reflective of the parties' intentions as shown by their past performance; (2) its decision on the timing of the amortization payments was consistent with the rule of construction requiring that a contract be construed in such a way as to give effect to all of its provisions; and (3) its ruling on the intention of the parties was supported by the evidence. Finally, 28-3-206 did not entitle buyer to have ambiguities construed in his favor; even though buyer claimed that the nature of the agreement was changed solely for seller's benefit, the agreement was prepared by an attorney for both parties, not by one party alone. Lewis v. Murphy, 199 M 368, 649 P2d 740, 39 St. Rep. 1459 (1982).

Declaratory Judgment Not Seeking Bad Faith Damages Not Statutorily Barred Under Unfair Trade Practices Act: Applying Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997), the District Court granted declaratory judgment against Safeco Insurance Company of Illinois (Safeco) for payment of medical expenses that were no longer in dispute and that were owed under a Safeco insured's policy. Safeco appealed on grounds that the declaratory judgment should be stayed under 33-18-242 until after the settlement or final adjudication of the claim against its insured. The Supreme Court pointed out that under Fisher v. St. Farm Gen. Ins. Co., 1999 MT 308, 297 M 201, 991 P2d 452 (1999), an unfair trade practices claim against an insurer is an independent cause of action and only a third-party claimant who prevails at trial or achieves a settlement may in turn bring an unfair trade practices claim, theoretically extinguishing meritless claims before they are filed, thus protecting insurers from frivolous claims and facilitating judicial economy. However, the Supreme Court declined to transform the declaratory judgment claim in this case into an unfair trade practices claim, noting that, in fact, the unfair trade practices claim and the common-law bad faith claim had been dismissed by stipulation of the parties. The District Court did not err in concluding that because the declaratory judgment claim did not directly seek bad faith damages for an unfair trade practices violation, there was no statutory bar under 33-18-242. The declaratory judgment did not constitute a money judgment for damages in the ordinary sense, but merely removed all uncertainty and controversy over the issue of when the inevitable policy proceeds were due, and that judgment was therefore affirmed. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834, 57 St. Rep. 604 (2000), followed and clarified in DuBray v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2001 MT 251, 307 M 134, 36 P3d 897 (2001), insofar as nothing in Ridley or Safeco suggests that its scope should be limited to undisputed medical expenses. See also Hop v. Safeco Ins. Co., 2011 MT 215, 361 Mont. 510, 261 P.3d 981, which held that residual diminished value—the difference between the value of a vehicle immediately before an accident and the value of the vehicle after postaccident repairs have been made—does not qualify as a type of damage that must be paid in advance as "not reasonably in dispute".

Supervisory Control Granted to Address Stay of Declaratory Judgment Until Settlement Reached or Judgment Entered: Hill was injured in a vehicle accident caused by the negligence of Bennett, an insured of Safeco Insurance Company of Illinois (Safeco). Although Safeco apparently paid some of Hill's initial medical bills, Safeco eventually disputed the causal relationship between the accident and the injuries, refusing to pay any further medical bills after a specific date. Hill sued Bennett for negligence and Safeco for nonpayment of medical expenses, seeking a declaratory judgment that he was entitled to advance payment of medical costs prior to settlement or final judgment and claiming that a declaratory judgment was proper under the Unfair Trade Practices Act and Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997). The District Court granted the declaratory judgment, and Safeco sought a writ of supervisory control because a direct appeal would be an inadequate remedy. The Supreme Court agreed and granted the writ. Safeco's application presented an appropriate legal issue for supervisory control because if the ordered payment of medical expenses was a mistake of law or incorrect, the delay in awaiting the outcome of the corollary litigation could create an unfair prejudice for Safeco, while any unnecessary delay in the payment of the medical costs would certainly prejudice Hill. Ultimately, the Supreme Court affirmed on grounds that the declaratory judgment did not constitute a money judgment for damages in the ordinary sense, but merely removed all uncertainty and controversy over the issue of when the inevitable policy proceeds were due. Safeco Ins. Co. of Ill. v. District Court, 2000 MT 153, 300 M 123, 2 P3d 834, 57 St. Rep. 604 (2000).

Tax Exemption: The question as to whether property leased to a school district was exempt from taxation was proper to adjudicate in a declaratory judgment proceeding. NW. Improvement Co. v. Rosebud County, 129 M 412, 288 P2d 657 (1955).

Failure of District Court to Dismiss Case — Unfair Trade Practices Claim Not Precluded by Insurance Settlement— Collateral Source Reduction Subject to Review: The District Court erred in granting the defendants' motion to dismiss by relying on Miller v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2007 MT 85, 337 Mont. 67, 155 P.3d 1278, and concluding as part of a declaratory judgment action that a justiciable controversy did not exist. Unlike Miller, the plaintiff was litigating a claim under existing rights or interests provided for in the Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA). The plaintiff and the defendants, two insurance companies, entered into and completed a settlement. Once the defendant insurers entered into a settlement with the plaintiff, the insurers became subject to the UTPA. Under the UTPA, insurers have duties and obligations regarding their settlement practices to an insured or third-party claimant. Thus, the parties had existing and genuine rights arising from the UTPA. The first requirement to find a justiciable controversy under the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act therefore was met. A judgment in the plaintiff's case would determine the parties' rights, status, or legal relationship by deciding whether the defendant insurers reduced the plaintiff's damages by applying the collateral source statute pursuant to 27-1-308. Assuming the defendant insurers unlawfully reduced the plaintiff's damages by relying on the collateral source rule, the plaintiff would be able to seek recovery. Marshall v. Safeco Ins. Co., 2018 MT 45, 390 Mont. 358, 413 P.3d 828, distinguishing Miller v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2007 MT 85, 337 Mont. 67, 155 P.3d 1278.

Declaratory Action Properly Dismissed for Lacking Justiciable Controversy: The defendant Commissioner of Political Practices found sufficient evidence that the plaintiff, a resident of Gallatin County, had violated state campaign practice laws and that civil adjudication of the violations was warranted. The defendant forwarded the sufficiency decision to the Lewis and Clark County Attorney for consideration. The plaintiff filed an action for declaratory relief in the Eighteenth Judicial District Court in Gallatin County arguing that the defendant should have referred the sufficiency decision to the Gallatin County Attorney rather than the Lewis and Clark County Attorney. After the Lewis and Clark County Attorney waived his right to participate in the action pursuant to 13-37-124, the defendant filed a complaint against the plaintiff in the First Judicial District Court in Lewis and Clark County, alleging campaign finance and practice violations. The Eighteenth Judicial District Court dismissed the plaintiff's declaratory relief action for lack of a justiciable controversy. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that the plaintiff has an alternative remedy available to him in the First Judicial District Court action because he may raise the issues raised in the declaratory relief action as defenses in that action. In addition, any decision the Eighteenth Judicial District Court would have issued would not have been binding on the First Judicial District Court and would merely be an advisory opinion, which is impermissible. Murray v. Motl, 2015 MT 216, 380 Mont. 162, 354 P.3d 197.

Failure of District Court to Rule Whether Collateral Source Reduction Applicable During Settlement Negotiations — Declaratory Judgment Inappropriate Absent Justiciable Controversy: Miller sought a declaratory judgment in District Court concerning whether 27-1-308 regarding collateral source reduction could be applied by insurance companies when evaluating cases and making settlement offers. Miller's motion for a declaratory judgment was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Before a court may exercise declaratory judgment jurisdiction, a justiciable controversy must exist. Seeking a declaratory judgment too early in the proceedings, when other remedies are still available, may amount to an advisory opinion. Here, Miller was requesting the District Court to interject its opinion regarding what factors and circumstances parties may consider in negotiating a settlement. As a matter of state policy, settlement is encouraged, and once a settlement is reached, courts can enforce the agreement. Insurers have a duty to attempt in good faith to negotiate prompt, fair, and equitable settlements in cases in which liability is reasonably clear. In this case, a dispute existed over the settlement amount, but there was no justiciable controversy regarding the existing and genuine rights or interests of the parties. Neither party was legally obligated to settle, nor can a court dictate what factors a party may or may not consider while engaging in a voluntary settlement process. Absent a justiciable controversy, a declaratory judgment was inappropriate. Miller v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2007 MT 85, 337 M 67, 155 P3d 1278 (2007), following Northfield Ins. Co. v. Mont. Ass'n of Counties, 2000 MT 256, 301 M 472, 10 P3d 813 (2000), and distinguishing Ridley v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997).

State Court Determination of Indemnification Inappropriate When Underlying Federal Class Action Case Undecided — Dismissal of Declaratory Judgment Action Proper Absent Justiciable Controversy: A class action suit was brought against Park County and several individual county officials in federal District Court. The county's primary insurer assumed the defense and indemnification. Two secondary assurance companies sought a declaratory judgment in state District Court that under the terms of their policy with the primary insurer, they had no duty to indemnify the primary insurer in connection with the claims in federal court. The state District Court dismissed the action for lack of a justiciable controversy, and the secondary assurance companies appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. The secondary assurance companies had no existing and genuine interest at stake at the time, nor could they claim any immediate danger of direct injury from the indemnification provisions of the policy. Putting a secondary insurer on notice of a lawsuit does not constitute a claim for indemnification, nor may a secondary insurer's duty to indemnify be said to exist if primary coverage has not been exhausted. The underlying federal case that was the subject of any potential indemnification had yet to be tried or settled. At this stage, the federal record contained only unproved and perhaps incomplete allegations of fact, and it would be premature to determine conclusively that any claims upon which the plaintiffs in the federal case might prevail arose from conduct that would preclude coverage under the policy. A declaratory judgment would serve only as speculative advice, subject to possible amendment or nullification upon resolution of the federal case, rather than as a final adjudication of the indemnification issue. Thus, the judicial determination that the secondary assurance companies sought involved a contractual duty for indemnification that had not yet arisen and that might never arise, so a determination of the issue would involve an advisory opinion that courts have no jurisdiction to issue. Northfield Ins. Co. v. Mont. Ass'n of Counties, 2000 MT 256, 301 M 472, 10 P3d 813, 57 St. Rep. 1049 (2000). See also Hardy v. Krutzfeldt, 206 M 521, 672 P2d 274 (1983), *Brisendine v. Mootness — No Appeal Absent District Court Ruling on Declaratory Judgment: The high school sports association decided that Grabow was ineligible to play basketball because his eligibility pursuant to the semester rule had elapsed while Grabow was an exchange student in Germany. Grabow filed a complaint in District Court asking for a declaratory ruling that the association lacked rulemaking and adjudicatory authority and requested a hearing on whether a preliminary injunction should be issued precluding enforcement of the association rule until the case could be adjudicated on its merits. After deciding that it was unlikely that Grabow would ultimately prevail, the District Court denied the injunction. Grabow appealed. The Supreme Court granted the injunction pending final disposition of the appeal, and Grabow played basketball during his senior year. The Supreme Court found that the 1999-2000 season was the only one in which Grabow claimed that he had a right to participate and that because the season was completed, the initial grounds for application of the mootness doctrine to the preliminary injunction issue were met. The declaratory judgment issue was not one capable of repetition, but was one that would evade review, so the Supreme Court remanded for further consideration of Grabow's complaint for declaratory judgment, which would then be subject to appeal following final judgment by the District Court. Grabow v. Mont. High School Assn., 2000 MT 159, 300 M 227, 3 P3d 650, 57 St. Rep. 654 (2000). See also Shamrock Motors, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 1999 MT 21, 293 M 188, 974 P2d 1150 (1999).

Discretion of Court: In absence of showing of abuse of discretion, refusal of lower court to rule on issue for reason that decree would not terminate controversy or remove uncertainty will not be reversed. Helena Valley Irrigation District v. St. Highway Comm'n, 150 M 192, 433 P2d 791 (1967).

Dismissal of Action — Possible Parties Not Joined: Court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing insurance company's action for declaratory judgment that defendant's policy was void because obtained by fraud, since, under 27-8-301, there were possible parties not joined, defendant having been in an accident several months prior to expiration of the policy, and under this section, District Court could refuse to enter the judgment on the basis that it would not terminate the controversy as to all parties. Empire Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Goodman, 147 M 396, 412 P2d 569 (1966).

Part 3 Procedure

Part Case Notes

Complaint Fails to Allege Fact That, If Proven, Would Result in Coverage — No Duty to Defend. The petitioning insurer filed a declaratory judgment action to determine whether it had a duty to defend. As the insurer had no knowledge of facts outside the complaint that could potentially trigger coverage, the complaint and policy constituted the universe with regard to the insurer's duty to defend. If there is no coverage under the terms of the policy based on the facts of the complaint, there is no duty to defend. Fire Ins. Exch. v. Weitzel, 2016 MT 113, 383 Mont. 364, 371 P.3d 457. Case Notes

Failure to Join Landowners as Necessary Parties Harmless Error — Substantial Rights Not Violated: In a dispute over the constitutionality of the county zoning protest statute, the intervening landowners who exercised their rights to file a zoning protest alleged the District Court abused its discretion by denying the landowners' motion to dismiss for failure to join them as necessary parties. Although the landowners were necessary parties, they were not entitled to dismissal of the complaint since they were allowed to intervene in the early stages of the litigation and could not demonstrate that their substantial rights were harmed. Williams v. Missoula County, 2013 MT 243, 371 Mont. 356, 308 P.3d 88, distinguishing Ethen Revocable Trust v. River Resource Outfitters, LLC, 2011 MT 143, 361 Mont. 57, 256 P.3d 913.

Denial of Joinder of Other Landowners in Boundary Dispute — No Abuse of Discretion: In a declaratory action involving a boundary dispute, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in declining to join other landowners, as the other landowners held no legal interest in the acreage at issue. Ethen Revocable Trust v. River Resource Outfitters, LLC, 2011 MT 143, 361 Mont. 57, 256 P.3d 913, following Mtn. W. Bank v. Mine & Mill Hydraulics, Inc., 2003 MT 35, 314 Mont. 248, 64 P.3d 1048.

Rules Not Designed to Promote Litigation: When defendant in a personal injury accident attempted to compel a potential litigant to appear and bring suit by naming her a defendant in a third-party declaratory judgment action, the trial court properly dismissed the complaint since the third-party defendant was not an indispensable party or compelled to litigate a claim that she had no intention of pursuing. If equity was to be done in a situation such as this, attorney fees were properly awarded the third-party defendant. Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114 (1978).

Dismissal of Action: Court could take into account this section in refusing to grant declaratory judgment in favor of insurance company, which claimed that defendant's policy was void when accident in which he was involved occurred because there were other parties not joined, and therefore the declaratory judgment would not terminate the controversy should other parties sue defendant. Empire Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Goodman, 147 M 396, 412 P2d 569 (1966).

Joinder of Actions: In an action under this chapter by insured under a policy covering commercial hauling of trailer homes, against the insurer, the insurer's general agent, and local insurance agent, District Court did not err in overruling insurer's demurrer (demurrer abolished, former Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and 25-31-503 (now repealed)) on grounds of misjoinder of causes of action and parties defendant, contending that action against local agent for tort and action against the insurer and general agent on a contract could not be combined and the defect could not be cured by a declaratory judgment, since the rights of all of the parties were intimately connected by the one transaction and the presence of all of the parties was necessary to a determination of their rights. The liability of the insurer depended upon the existence of an amendment to the contract and the liability of the local agent depended upon an absence of that same amendment. Adams & Gregoire, Inc. v. Nat'l Indem. Co., 141 M 103, 375 P2d 112 (1962).

Attorney General's Opinions

Compensation of County Clerk and Recorder — Effect of Declaration Judgment on Attorney General Opinion: In 1981, the Attorney General issued an opinion declaring it unlawful to pay the County Clerk and Recorder extra for serving as election administrator (39 A.G. Op. 7 (1981)). In 1984, a District Court held the reverse in a declaratory judgment. The opinion was not expressly overruled and remains valid. Although the parties to the declaratory judgment are bound, it is questionable that this judgment can serve as binding precedent for all judicial districts. The Attorney General is not bound by a declaratory judgment to which he is not a party and which does not explicitly overrule a previous opinion. Although the District Court opinion is entitled to weight, the Attorney General may reach a contrary result in his interpretation. 41 A.G. Op. 33 (1985).

District Court Declaratory Judgment — Effect on Attorney General Opinions: The Attorney General, in issuing advisory opinions, is not bound by a conclusion of law expressed in a District Court declaratory judgment in an action to which the Attorney General is not a party. 38 A.G. Op. 112 (1980).

Case Notes

No Absolute Right to Jury Trial: Nothing in the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act gives an absolute right to a trial by jury. It is a recognized general rule of law that the nature of the issues determines the right to a jury trial. If the issues are strictly equitable, there is no right to a jury trial. Thus, it was not error for the District Court to deny jury trial in an action originally filed as a declaratory judgment but amended to enjoin interference with recreational use of the Beaverhead River. Furthermore, the court did not err in granting leave to file an amended complaint since the matter was clearly injunctive in nature and the issues equitable since inception. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access v. Hildreth, 211 M 29, 684 P2d 1088, 41 St. Rep. 1192 (1984).

Existence of Oral Contract in Controversy: Declaratory judgment is improper when existence of oral contract is in controversy, since a declaratory judgment proceeding is primarily intended to construe the meaning of a law and not to determine the existence of controverted facts. State ex rel. Indus. Indem. Co. v. District Court, 169 M 10, 544 P2d 438 (1975).

Review of Declaratory Judgments: In a declaratory judgment action, the District Court determines issues of fact in the same manner as any other civil action, and the Supreme Court will review the judgment in the same manner as any other case. Highway Comm'n v. Flood Control & Drainage District, 155 M 157, 468 P2d 753 (1970).

Case Notes

No Authority of Workers' Compensation Court to Grant Attorney Fees and Costs Pursuant to Improper Declaratory Judgment: When the Workers' Compensation Court improperly issued a declaratory judgment in a case that did not involve a dispute concerning benefits, the court did not have authority to then award attorney fees and costs pursuant to this section. Thompson v. St., 2007 MT 185, 338 M 511, 167 P3d 867 (2007).

Boundary Dispute Not Considered Appropriate for Declaratory Judgment — Attorney Fees Properly Denied: In a prescriptive easement dispute based on competing surveys, the District Court relied on 25-10-201 and denied plaintiffs' request for attorney fees. On appeal, plaintiffs asserted that because defendant had alleged that the case was a declaratory judgment action, attorney fees should have been granted under this section. The Supreme Court disagreed. Under 27-8-202, an action for declaratory judgment encompasses the construction of a deed or other instrument, not a determination of a boundary based on competing surveys. Plaintiffs provided no other basis for an award of attorney fees, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the District Court judgment. Steiger v. Brown, 2007 MT 29, 336 M 29, 152 P3d 705 (2007).

Attorney Fees Not Considered Costs — Declaratory Judgment Equitable Exception to Rule That Attorney Fees Not Awarded Absent Contractual or Statutory Provision: The District Court initially awarded costs and attorney fees to defendants for defending a declaratory judgment action. Plaintiff moved under former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), to strike the award of attorney fees. The District Court then concluded that it lacked authority to award attorney fees because plaintiff did not force defendants to defend against a frivolous or malicious action, so the court struck the award of attorney fees, and defendants appealed. Generally, under the American rule, a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory provision, although equitable exceptions are recognized. This section provides that in any proceeding under this chapter, equitable and just costs may be awarded, but attorney fees are not, in any proper sense, considered part of the costs in a case and thus are not allowed as costs under this section. However, 27-8-313 draws no distinction between declaratory judgment actions adjudicating the rights of an insured against an insurer and actions adjudicating rights outside the confines of an insurance policy, so a court may award attorney fees pursuant to 27-8-313 when the court, in its discretion, considers such an award necessary or proper. Therefore, after finding that the District Court erred in concluding that it lacked authority to award attorney fees, the Supreme Court reversed for a determination of whether an award of attorney fees was necessary or proper in this case. Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum, 2003 MT 97, 315 M 210, 69 P3d 663 (2003), overruling State ex rel. Swart v. Casne, 172 M 302, 564 P2d 983 (1977), State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Lincoln County, 178 M 410, 584 P2d 1293 (1978), State ex rel. Leach v. Visser, 234 M 438, 767 P2d 858 (1988), McKamey v. St., 268 M 137, 885 P2d 515 (1994), and Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121 (1998), to the extent that those cases hold that a District Court has no discretionary authority to award attorney fees in a declaratory judgment action.

Unsuccessful Defense to State's Requirement That Firefighters at Airport Belong to National Guard — Costs and Attorney Fees Denied: Because the state's defense to a firefighter's petition for judgment declaring it unconstitutional for the state to require Air National Guard membership of its firefighters protecting National Guard aircraft was not frivolous or in bad faith, it was not an abuse of discretion to refuse costs and attorney fees to the prevailing firefighter. McKamey v. St., 268 M 137, 885 P2d 515, 51 St. Rep. 1218 (1994), followed in Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121, 55 St. Rep. 777 (1998).

Award of Attorney Fees in Declaratory Judgment Insurance Action — Distinction Between Third-Party Claimant and Insured: As a general rule, an insured is not entitled to recover attorney fees and expenses incurred in defending a declaratory judgment action brought by an insurer to determine the existence of coverage under a liability insurance policy. However, recovery is appropriate where it is ultimately determined by the court that the insurer was not acting in good faith in contesting coverage and instituting declaratory judgment proceedings. A third-party claimant is not entitled to recover attorney fees incurred in a declaratory judgment proceeding, even if the claimant arguably falls within the policy definition of "insured". Iowa Mut. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 689 F. Supp. 1028, 45 St. Rep. 1361 (D.C. Mont. 1988).

Attorney's Fees: There is no provision for an award of attorney's fees in an action for declaratory judgment. State ex rel. Dept. of Health & Environmental Sciences v. Lincoln County, 178 M 410, 584 P2d 1293 (1978).

Failure by Insurer to Present Facts to Controvert Testimony That Ongoing Medical Expenses Causally Related to Accident — Declaratory Judgment Proper: In Renville v. Taylor, 2000 MT 217, 301 M 99, 7 P3d 400 (2000), the Supreme Court held that defendant insurer was liable for all expenses related to a collision involving Renville and remanded for a new trial on the issue of damages. Renville then asked the District Court for a declaratory judgment ordering defendant to pay for ongoing medical expenses incurred by Renville subsequent to trial. The District Court denied the request on grounds that factual issues existed regarding Renville's ongoing medical expenses that required resolution by a jury. Renville appealed, asserting that the court failed to follow the law of the case, and the Supreme Court agreed and reversed. Although an insurer is entitled to dispute its obligation to pay medical expenses, there must be a factual basis for doing so. Here, defendant insurer refused to pay Renville's ongoing medical expenses because the expenses were allegedly not causally related to the collision; however, the insurer failed to present any evidence to controvert Renville's expert testimony on causation, choosing instead to rely on testimony from the first trial that had been disregarded by the jury and that was not relevant to the issue of ongoing medical expenses. Thus, the District Court erred in failing to grant Renville's motion for declaratory judgment, and defendant insurer was required to pay Renville's ongoing medical expenses pursuant to Ridley v. Guarantee Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997), and the law of the case. Renville v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2003 MT 103, 315 M 295, 69 P3d 217 (2003), followed in Hoffman v. Austin, 2006 MT 289, 334 M 357, 147 P3d 177 (2006).

Alteration of Theory on Appeal in Declaratory Action: An appellant has no more latitude to alter his theory on appeal in a declaratory action than in other types of civil actions. An appellate court will not determine legal issues that the parties failed to present to the trial court, either by objection or by pleadings. Velte v. Allstate Ins. Co., 181 M 300, 593 P2d 454 (1979).

Review of Declaratory Judgments Same as Other Civil Action: In a declaratory judgment action, the District Court determines issues of fact in the same manner as any other civil action, and the Supreme Court will review the judgment in the same manner as any other case. *Highway Comm'n v. Quiet Title Action — District Court Abused Discretion by Granting Attorney Fees Without Holding Evidentiary Hearing and Calculating Award Based Solely on Affidavit of Counsel — Award of Attorney Fees Must Be Based on Competent Evidence. Thomas Mann Post No. 81 v. Knudsen Family Ltd. Partnership, 2022 MT 150, 409 Mont. 318, 514 P.3d 409.

Award of Attorney Fees Discretionary for District Court — Equities Generally Do Not Support Award of Fees Between Similarly Situated Parties Genuinely Disputing Their Rights: The District Court awarded costs and interest to the prevailing party in an easement dispute but did not award attorney fees. The prevailing party appealed, arguing abuse of discretion. The Supreme Court noted that the equities generally do not support an award of fees if parties are similarly situated and genuinely disputing their rights, found that the parties were in such a case, and did not dispute the District Court's discretion to not award attorney fees in this case. Whitefish Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Inc. v. Caltabiano, 2019 MT 228, 397 Mont. 284, 449 P.3d 812.

Consent Judgment — Finding of Collusion — Attorney Fees Properly Awarded: In earlier litigation related to the construction of a multimillion-dollar home, Abbey/Land, LLC v. Interstate Mechanical, Inc., 2015 MT 77, 378 Mont. 372, 345 P.3d 1032, the Supreme Court ordered the District Court to allow the defendant's insurer to intervene and challenge the reasonableness of a $12 million consent judgment. On remand, and after the parties conducted discovery, the District Court found that the original parties had colluded and that the judgment was unreasonable. The District Court ordered that the judgment be reduced and awarded the insurer attorney fees under the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act. The original parties appealed, arguing that the exceptions to the American Rule did not apply. The Supreme Court, however, affirmed the award of attorney fees and costs based on equitable considerations and on its findings that the actions of the initial parties were so offensive as to warrant dismissal of their claims with prejudice. Abbey/Land, LLC v. Glacier Constr. Partners, LLC, 2019 MT 19, 394 Mont. 135, 433 P.3d 1230.

Attorney Fees Not Permitted Under Montana Recall Act — Result Not Changed by Amendment for Declaratory Judgment: The District Court did not err in concluding that the mayor and town council (elected officers) were not entitled to attorney fees from either Jefferson County or a resident who sought the recall of the elected officers, even though the elected officers amended their initial filing to include an action for declaratory judgment. Attorney fees and costs are not recoverable under the Montana Recall Act when an injunction is the requested avenue for relief. Additionally, even if an additional declaratory judgment action had been necessary or proper to stop the recall election or to invalidate the recall documents to ensure against their future use, equity did not support awarding the elected officers the attorney fees and costs under 27-8-313. Davis v. Jefferson County Election Office, 2018 MT 32, 390 Mont. 280, 412 P.3d 1048.

Summary Judgment — Encroachment and Tree-Felling Constitute Civil Trespass — No Other Relief at Law Available Prior to Final Judgment: The parties were owners of adjoining tracts of rural property. Without verification or inquiry, the defendants mistakenly assumed that a line of pink survey flags running across the ground from a corner survey marker delineated the boundary line. As a result, the defendants cut down several trees on the plaintiffs' property and built a shop building and installed an accompanying septic system drain field near their property line mistakenly encroaching on the plaintiffs' property. The District Court granted the plaintiffs' summary judgment declaring that the defendants' encroachments and tree-felling constituted civil trespasses. However, the District Court denied the plaintiffs' requests for immediate ejection and removal of all encroaching improvements, site restoration, and a permanent injunction enjoining any further intrusion on the plaintiffs' property or noncompliance with county zoning setback requirements. On appeal of the summary judgment motion, the Supreme Court analyzed civil trespass, common law trespass and ejectment, declaratory judgment of trespass and ejectment, and supplemental preliminary and permanent equitable relief. As applied, the plaintiffs obtained summary judgment declaring that the defendants' tree-felling and encroaching building and drain field constituted civil trespasses. As far as it goes, that declaratory judgment was the substantive equivalent of a judgment of ejectment declaring the plaintiffs' right to exclusive possession of their property to the exclusion of the subject encroachments. Thus, the plaintiffs successfully obtained an interlocutory judgment, prevailing on their alternatively pleaded declaratory judgment and common law ejectment claims. Except for undetermined damages not at issue on appeal, and in contrast to any supplemental injunctive relief otherwise appropriate in equity, no other relief at law was available to the plaintiffs on their common law ejectment claim prior to final judgment. As such, the District Court did not err in declining to grant relief at law other than a declaration of trespass on the plaintiffs' common law ejectment claim. Davis v. Westphal, 2017 MT 276, 389 Mont. 251, 405 P.3d 73.

Attorney Fees Not Warranted in Challenge to Zoning Ordinances — No Equitable Considerations Compelling Award: The District Court erred by granting attorney fees to the plaintiffs under the Uniform Declaratory Judgment Act. The plaintiffs sought a judicial declaration concerning the validity of zoning ordinances, which constituted a garden variety declaratory action that did not involve equitable considerations compelling a fee award. Citizens for a Better Flathead v. Flathead County Bd. of County Comm'rs, 2016 MT 325, 385 Mont. 505, 386 P.3d 567.

No Error by District Court in Adopting Jury Verdict as Supplemental Relief and Awarding Money Damages: When, during the 15-year history of the case, the defendant continuously thwarted public easement rights and disregarded multiple court decisions, adoption of an advisory jury verdict as supplemental relief was appropriate. In addition, the District Court's award of attorney fees is fully supported by equity. Pub. Land/Water Access Ass'n v. Jones, 2015 MT 299, 381 Mont. 267, 358 P.3d 899.

Attorney Fees Improperly Denied in Declaratory Judgment Action — Necessary and Proper Under Tangible Parameter Test — Reversed and Remanded for Determination of Fees: The city brought suit against a homeowner for violating a local building code. The homeowner filed a claim for declaratory judgment that the code was invalid and unenforceable. The District Court agreed that the city did not have the authority to adopt the code, but it denied attorney fees to the homeowner. On appeal, the Supreme Court applied the test in Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum, 2003 MT 97, 315 Mont. 210, 69 P.3d 663, and determined that attorney fees were warranted because all three prongs of the Buxbaum test were satisfied. It therefore reversed the denial of attorney fees and remanded the case for a calculation of fees. Helena v. Svee, 2014 MT 311, 377 Mont. 158, 339 P.3d 32.

Award Based On Hourly Fee Upheld Even Though Defendants Signed Contingency Agreement — Fee Amount Within District Court's Discretion: The defendants prevailed on a counterclaim for specific performance under a lease that included an option to purchase the land. At the hearing on attorney fees, the defendants provided testimony that they had signed a contingent fee agreement and that the $585,966 in attorney fees claimed was based on the contingent share of the fair market value of the land minus the lease's purchase option price for the land. The District Court rejected the total fee claim as unreasonable and instead awarded attorney fees on an hourly basis in the amount of $98,431. The defendants cross-appealed the District Court's action, but the Supreme Court denied the claim. Concluding that the District Court had properly assessed the reasonableness of the claim based on the factors outlined in Plath v. Schonrock, 2003 MT 21, 314 Mont. 101, 64 P.3d 984, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion and therefore upheld the hourly award. Shephard v. Widhalm, 2012 MT 276, 367 Mont. 166, 290 P.3d 712.

Good Faith Defense of Statute by Attorney General When Constitutional Rights Vindicated — Private Attorney General Doctrine Inapplicable: Following the United States Supreme Court's ruling in Citizens United v. F.E.C., 558 US 310, 130 S Ct 876 (2010), the plaintiffs challenged a Montana statute that prohibited campaign contributions from corporations, claiming it violated the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. The District Court granted the plaintiffs summary judgment, the Montana Supreme Court reversed, and the United States Supreme Court summarily reversed the Montana Supreme Court. The plaintiffs then sought attorney fees under the private attorney general doctrine. The Montana Supreme Court concluded that the plaintiffs were not entitled to attorney fees because even though the plaintiffs vindicated constitutional rights, the Attorney General defended a statute that was grounded in constitutional principles and his defense of the statute was neither frivolous nor in bad faith. W. Tradition Partnership, Inc. v. Attorney General, 2012 MT 271, 367 Mont. 112, 291 P.3d 545, followed in Gateway Village, LLC v. Dept. of Environmental Quality, 2015 MT 285, 381 Mont. 206, 357 P.3d 917.

Award of Attorney Fees Improper — Equity Threshold Not Satisfied: A District Court may award attorney fees in a declaratory relief action under this section if equity supports the award and if the award qualifies as necessary and proper under the “tangible parameters” test. Before applying the “tangible parameters” test, the court must first conclude equity supports the award. Equity generally does not support an award if the parties are similarly situated and are genuinely disputing their rights. In this disputed easement case, the District Court erroneously awarded attorney fees. Equity did not support an award of attorney fees since the parties were similarly situated — they had operated neighboring ranches for years and had dealt with each other on relatively equal footing. Hughes v. Ahlgren, 2011 MT 189, 361 Mont. 319, 258 P.3d 439, followed in New Hope Lutheran Ministry v. Faith Lutheran Church of Great Falls, Inc., 2014 MT 69, 374 Mont. 229, 328 P.3d 586, and JRN Holdings, LLC v. Dearborn Meadows Land Owners Ass'n, 2021 MT 204, 405 Mont. 200, 493 P.3d 340.

Absence of Equitable Considerations Supporting Award of Attorney Fees: In a declaratory action involving a boundary dispute, no equitable considerations supported an award of attorney fees when both parties genuinely believed they owned the disputed property and one party had negotiated a reduced purchase price for the property in light of potential litigation over the boundary dispute. Ethen Revocable Trust v. River Resource Outfitters, LLC, 2011 MT 143, 361 Mont. 57, 256 P.3d 913.

Statute-Based Holding — Private Attorney General Doctrine Inapplicable Absent Vindication of Constitutional Interests: The private attorney general doctrine for the award of attorney fees applies when the government fails to properly enforce interests that are significant to its citizens, but the doctrine only applies when constitutional interests are vindicated. When a holding is statute-based rather than a determination of constitutional interests, the award of fees under the private attorney general doctrine is not warranted. Baxter v. St., 2009 MT 449, 354 M 234, 224 P3d 1211 (2009). See also Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800 (1999), and Am. Cancer Soc'y v. St., 2004 MT 376, 325 M 70, 103 P3d 1085 (2004).

Determination Whether Equities Support Award of Attorney Fees Required Before Tangible Parameters Test Applied: Application of the tangible parameters test for awarding attorney fees set out in Martin v. SAIF Corp., 2007 MT 234, 339 M 167, 167 P3d 916 (2007), is subject to the threshold determination of whether the equities support a grant of attorney fees. Thus, a District Court has discretion to award attorney fees under 27-8-313, but the award is appropriate only if equitable considerations support the award. Mungas v. Great Falls Clinic, LLP, 2009 MT 426, 354 M 50, 221 P3d 1230 (2009), following United Nat'l Ins. Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 2009 MT 269, 352 M 105, 214 P3d 1260 (2009).

Failure to Hold Hearing Before Award of Sanctions — Remand: The District Court awarded attorney fees and costs against plaintiff for bringing a frivolous suit. However, the court did not adequately set forth its findings and conclusions or set forth its reasons for an award of fees, nor did the court hold a hearing before granting sanctions as required in former Rule 11, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Thus, the case was remanded for a hearing and for further proceedings on the reasonableness of attorney fees and costs. Good Schools Missoula, Inc. v. Missoula County Pub. School Dist. No. 1, 2008 MT 231, 344 M 374, 188 P3d 1013 (2008), following Glaspey v. Workman, Attorney Fees Improperly Awarded to Insurer in Declaratory Judgment Action — Not Necessary and Proper Under Tangible Parameter Test: In Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum, 2003 MT 97, 315 M 210, 69 P3d 663 (2003), the Supreme Court held that this section provides a statutory basis for awarding attorney fees in declaratory judgment actions if the award is necessary and proper and determined in Renville v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2004 MT 366, 324 M 509, 105 P3d 280 (2004), that the award may be considered necessary and proper under a tangible parameter test when: (1) an insurance company possesses what the plaintiffs sought in the declaratory judgment action; (2) it is necessary to seek a declaratory judgment showing that plaintiffs are entitled to the relief sought; and (3) the declaratory relief sought was necessary in order to change the status quo. In this case, plaintiff Martin sought a declaratory judgment seeking a declaration that Montana law rather than Oregon law controlled in a workers' compensation subrogation case. The District Court granted summary judgment to the defendant insurer, dismissed the declaratory judgment claim, and awarded attorney fees to the insurer. The Supreme Court held that the insurer could not meet even the first prong of the tangible parameter test because it actually sought proceeds from Martin's third-party settlement. The District Court's reliance on the fact that the insurer prevailed and was entitled to attorney fees did not comport with the Buxbaum necessary and proper requirement. In fact, neither party was entitled to attorney fees, so the award was vacated. Martin v. SAIF Corp., 2007 MT 234, 339 M 167, 167 P3d 916 (2007), followed in United Nat'l Ins. Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 2009 MT 269, 352 M 105, 214 P3d 1260 (2009). See also Horace Mann Ins. Co. v. Hanke, 2013 MT 320, 372 Mont. 350, 312 P.3d 429.

Insurer's Breach of Duty to Indemnify — Recovery of Attorney Fees by Injured Third-Party Claimant Who Prevails in Insurance Coverage Action Against Motor Vehicle Liability Insurer — Modification of Insurance Exception — Standard of Review of Question of Law: Following remand in Christensen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 2000 MT 378, 303 M 493, 22 P3d 624 (2000), the Christensens requested attorney fees incurred in the declaratory judgment action. The District Court denied the request, and the Christensens appealed. Generally, under the American rule, a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory provision, although equitable exceptions are recognized. Here, the parties agreed that there was no contractual authority to support an award of attorney fees, although the Supreme Court held in Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum, 2003 MT 97, 315 M 210, 69 P3d 663 (2003), that this section authorizes a District Court to award attorney fees when the court, in its discretion, considers such an award to be necessary or proper. The Christensens submitted that the defendant insurer was obligated to reimburse them based on the insurance exception rationale articulated in Home Ins. Co. v. Pinski Bros., Inc., 160 M 219, 500 P2d 945 (1972), which approved an award of attorney fees in cases in which an insurer breaches its obligation to defend an insured. The Supreme Court noted that the issue presented a question of law, so the standard of review was whether the District Court's interpretation of law was correct. The Supreme Court held that an insurer that breaches its duty to indemnify is liable for attorney fees when an insured is forced to assume the burden of legal action to obtain the full benefit of the insurance contract, regardless of whether the insurer's duty to defend is at issue. However, in this case, the Christensens were third-party beneficiaries, and the Supreme Court declined to extend the insurance exception to third-party claimants because that would sanction attorney fee awards for simply demonstrating the existence of any insurance contract from which a third-party claimant successfully established coverage, which would undermine the American rule. Thus, although the Christensens were precluded from recovering attorney fees under the obligatory insurance exception, the case was remanded for a determination of whether attorney fees were necessary or proper under Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum and this section. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Brewer, 2003 MT 98, 315 M 231, 69 P3d 652 (2003), overruling Yovish v. United Serv. Auto. Ass'n, 243 M 284, 794 P2d 682 (1990), and followed in Hernandez v. Yellowstone County Comm'rs, 2008 MT 251, 345 M 1, 189 P3d 638 (2008), with regard to award of attorney fees only to a prevailing party under the private attorney general theory.

No Waiver of Attorney Fees by Injured Third-Party Claimant Who Prevails in Insurance Coverage Action on Remand: Following remand in Christensen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 2000 MT 378, 303 M 493, 22 P3d 624 (2000), the Christensens requested attorney fees incurred in the declaratory judgment action. The District Court denied the request, and the Christensens appealed. Defendant insurer argued that because the Christensens never requested attorney fees in their motion for summary judgment or in their first appeal, their right to attorney fees was waived. Former Rule 8(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), requires that a party give notice of facts that the party expects to prove, and the facts must disclose the presence of all elements necessary to make out a claim. In this case, the defendant insurer had notice of the Christensens' desire to seek attorney fees because that relief was specifically prayed for in the initial petition for declaratory judgment, and defendant successfully defended against that request in District Court. However, the Christensens did not prevail until the case was remanded, so waiting to file a motion for attorney fees until prevailing on appeal was proper. Thus, the Christensens did not waive their entitlement to attorney fees. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Brewer, 2003 MT 98, 315 M 231, 69 P3d 652 (2003), following Kunst v. Pass, 1998 M 71, 288 M 264, 957 P2d 1 (1998).

Attorney Fees Not Considered Costs — Declaratory Judgment Equitable Exception to Rule That Attorney Fees Not Awarded Absent Contractual or Statutory Provision: The District Court initially awarded costs and attorney fees to defendants for defending a declaratory judgment action. Plaintiff moved under former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), to strike the award of attorney fees. The District Court then concluded that it lacked authority to award attorney fees because plaintiff did not force defendants to defend against a frivolous or malicious action, so the court struck the award of attorney fees, and defendants appealed. Generally, under the American rule, a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory provision, although equitable exceptions are recognized. Section 27-8-311 provides that in any proceeding under this chapter, equitable and just costs may be awarded, but attorney fees are not, in any proper sense, considered part of the costs in a case and thus are not allowed as costs under 27-8-311. However, this section draws no distinction between declaratory judgment actions adjudicating the rights of an insured against an insurer and actions adjudicating rights outside the confines of an insurance policy, so a court may award attorney fees pursuant to this section when the court, in its discretion, considers such an award necessary or proper. Therefore, after finding that the District Court erred in concluding that it lacked authority to award attorney fees, the Supreme Court reversed for a determination of whether an award of attorney fees was necessary or proper in this case. Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum, 2003 MT 97, 315 M 210, 69 P3d 663 (2003), overruling State ex rel. Swart v. Casne, 172 M 302, 564 P2d 983 (1977), State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Lincoln County, 178 M 410, 584 P2d 1293 (1978), State ex rel. Leach v. Visser, 234 M 438, 767 P2d 858 (1988), McKamey v. St., 268 M 137, 885 P2d 515 (1994), and Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121 (1998), to the extent that those cases hold that a District Court has no discretionary authority to award attorney fees in a declaratory judgment action, and followed in Renville v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2004 MT 366, 324 M 509, 105 P3d 280 (2004). See also Horace Mann Ins. Co. v. Hanke, 2013 MT 320, 372 Mont. 350, 312 P.3d 429.

Scope of Supplemental Relief: This section enables the District Court to retain jurisdiction to grant further relief as it considers necessary and proper to enforce a declaratory judgment. The supplemental relief should be designed to provide complete relief to the parties and may include a monetary judgment, coercive relief, or both. In fashioning the remedy, the court is not bound by the relief requested in the complaint but may order any relief needed to effectuate the judgment. Goodover v. Lindey's, Inc., 246 M 80, 802 P2d 1258, 47 St. Rep. 2268 (1990), citing Dry Canyon Farms, Inc. v. U.S. Nat'l Bank, 772 P2d 1343 (Or. App. 1989), and followed in *Goodover v. Rules of Procedure: The following rules of procedure for the Montana Chiropractic Legal Panel became effective October 24, 1990.

Montana Chiropractic Legal Panel Rules of Procedure:

RULE 1. Definitions. As used in these rules, the following definitions apply:

(1) "Act" means the Montana Chiropractic Legal Panel Act provided for in 27-12-101 through 27-12-703, MCA.

(2) "Substantial evidence" means such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion or, stated another way, enough evidence to justify refusal to direct a verdict on a factual issue in a jury trial.

Authority: 27-12-204, MCA Implemented: 27-12-101 through 27-12-703, MCA RULE 2. Scope of rules — applicability. (1) These rules apply to all proceedings before the Montana Chiropractic Legal Panel created in 27-12-104, MCA, that are conducted pursuant to the act.

(2) These rules apply to a malpractice claim arising from a chiropractic physician's acts or omissions occurring on or after January 1, 1990. A claim arising prior to that date may be submitted to the panel for review upon the consent of the affected parties.

Authority: 27-12-204, MCA Implemented: 27-12-101 through 27-12-703, MCA

RULE 3. Fees. A claimant may not be required to pay a fee or other charge as a condition for bringing a malpractice claim before the panel.

Authority: 27-12-204, MCA Implemented: 27-12-204, MCA

RULE 4. Representation by and appearance of legal counsel. (1) A party may be represented by legal counsel in proceedings before the panel, although the party is not required to be represented. If a party chooses to retain legal counsel, his attorney shall informally enter an appearance with the director.

(2) If a party is represented by legal counsel and the attorney has entered an appearance, a notice or communication required by the act or these rules and any other communication must be transmitted to the party's legal counsel, with a copy transmitted to the director, except that the notice of hearing required by 27-12-501, MCA, must be provided to all parties and their respective legal counsel, if any.

Authority: 27-12-204, MCA Implemented: 27-12-306, MCA

RULE 5. Presentation of claim — application. (1) A claimant shall submit a malpractice claim for the panel's consideration by delivering, by certified mail, to the office of the director, a written application signed by the claimant or the claimant's legal counsel.

(2) The application must:

(a) be submitted on a form provided by the director; and

(b) comply with the requirements of 27-12-302, MCA.

(3) The director shall immediately notify the chiropractic physician against whom the claim is made that a claim has been filed and furnish him with a copy of the claim.

(4) This rule does not provide for discovery of information that would be privileged or otherwise beyond discovery pursuant to Rule 26(b)(4)(B), Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, Title 25, chapter 20, MCA.

Authority: 27-12-204, MCA Implemented: 27-12-301 and 27-12-302, MCA

RULE 6. Amendment of application — request for continuance of hearing. (1) A claimant may amend the application as a matter of course within 20 days of the date the director receives it. Thereafter, the claimant may amend it only with the director's approval, or if a panel has been selected, with the approval of the panel chairman.

(2) The following persons may request that the claimant amend the application to provide additional details of the claim:

(a) the director or, if a panel has been selected, the panel chairman; and

(b) the chiropractic physician against whom the claim is made, upon written request to the director, or, if a panel has been selected, to the panel chairman.

(3) (a) The claimant shall deliver an amendment to the director within 20 days of the date the claimant receives:

- (i) the written request for additional information from the director or panel chairman; or
- (ii) notice of approval by the director or panel chairman of the chiropractic physician's request.

(b) The claimant shall provide sufficient copies of the amendment for service by the director on all other parties.

(c) If an amendment is filed less than 30 days prior to the date set for hearing, the director or, if a panel has been selected, the panel chairman may continue the hearing upon a showing of good cause.

Authority: 27-12-204, MCA Implemented: 27-12-303, MCA

RULE 7. Answer to application — amended answer. (1) The chiropractic physician against whom the malpractice claim is made shall answer the application within 20 days after he receives it. He shall answer by delivering, by certified mail, to the office of the director, a written statement signed by the chiropractic physician or his legal counsel, with copies for service by the director on all other parties.

(2) The director or, if a panel has been selected, the panel chairman may extend the answer period upon a showing of good cause.

(3) The chiropractic physician against whom the malpractice claim is made shall submit an answer to an amended application within 20 days of the date the chiropractic physician receives the amended application. If he does not answer within 20 days, his original statement is considered the answer to the amended application.

(4) When the director receives an answer or amended answer, the director shall serve a copy of it upon the claimant in the manner provided in Rule 8 for service of the application.

Authority: 27-12-204, MCA Implemented: 27-12-306, MCA

RULE 8. Transmittal of documents. (1) (a) When the director receives an application or an amendment to an application, the director shall serve a copy of it upon the chiropractic physician against whom the malpractice claim is made. Service must be effected by mailing a certified copy of the application or amendment to the chiropractic physician at the chiropractic physician's last-known address, postage prepaid, return receipt requested.

(b) The director shall also mail a copy of the application to the directors of the chiropractic physician's professional society or association and the state bar. If the chiropractic physician does not belong to a professional society or association, the director shall mail a copy of the application to the chiropractic physician's state licensing board.

(2) When the director receives the names of the panelists selected pursuant to 27-12-402, MCA, the director shall transmit, by certified mail, to all parties a list of those selected and a brief professional biographical sketch of each panelist.

(3) At least 10 days prior to the date set for hearing, the director shall furnish each panelist with copies of all claims, briefs, medical or hospital records, and other documents pertaining to the claim. If the panel chairman, or the director if a chairman has not yet been selected, determines it is impractical to reproduce or mail a medical record or other document, the record or document must be made available to panel members at the hearing and at the director's office prior to the hearing. Each panelist must be notified of the decision of the chairman or the director and of the availability of the records or documents.

(4) Except as provided in Rule 7 and this rule relating to the service of the application, answer, and any amendments to the application or answer, all motions, memoranda, and other papers presented to the panel must be served upon the parties and copies filed with the director in a manner provided by Rule 5, Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, Title 25, chapter 20, MCA, relating to service and filing of pleadings and other papers.

Authority: 27-12-204, MCA Implemented: 27-12-305, 27-12-308, 27-12-402, 27-12-502, 27-12-603, 27-12-702, 27-12-703, MCA RULE 9. Selection of panelists and panel chairman. (1) Upon selection of proposed panelists pursuant to 27-12-402, MCA, the directors of the chiropractic physician's professional society or association and the state bar shall transmit to the director a list of those selected, their respective business addresses and telephone numbers, and a brief professional biographical sketch of each proposed panelist.

(2) Pursuant to 27-12-601, MCA, the three attorney members of the panel shall select a panel chairman, who must be an attorney, as soon as possible after selection of the panelists and, if possible, at least 10 days prior to the date set for the hearing.

Authority: 27-12-204, MCA Implemented: 27-12-402 and 27-12-601, MCA

RULE 10. Disqualification — excuse of panelist. (1) An affidavit of disqualification of a panelist filed by a party pursuant to 27-12-404, MCA, must be filed within 15 days of the date the director transmits the panelists' names by mail to the parties. Nothing in these rules may be construed to defeat a party's right to the disqualification.

(2) The director may excuse a proposed panelist from serving on the panel at the panelist's request.

(3) If a panelist has been disqualified or excused, a replacement panelist must be selected pursuant to 27-12-402, MCA. The director shall promptly notify the professional society or association or the state bar of the need to select a replacement panelist. The organization, within 5 days of receipt of the notice, shall select another panelist and notify the director of the replacement.

Authority: 27-12-204, MCA Implemented: 27-12-402 and 27-12-404, MCA RULE 11. Expert consultant. (1) Pursuant to 27-12-307, MCA, a claimant may request the director's cooperation in retaining a chiropractic physician as an expert consultant by submitting a written request to the director within 30 days of the date the director transmitted the claimant's application to the chiropractic physician against whom the claim is made. The director shall cooperate fully with the claimant in retaining a chiropractic physician qualified in the field of chiropractic who will consult for purposes of the panel hearing.

(2) Communications between the consultant and the claimant or the claimant's legal counsel are privileged unless the privilege is waived by the claimant or is otherwise required to be disclosed by Rule 26(b), Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, Title 25, chapter 20, [MCA.]

Authority: 27-12-204, MCA Implemented: 27-12-307, MCA

RULE 12. Time and place of hearing. (1) When the director receives the claimant's application, the director shall set a date, time, and place for the hearing and provide prompt notice of the hearing to the parties, their respective legal counsel, if any, and the panelists.

(2) The date may not be set more than 120 days after transmittal of the application by the director unless the panelists, by majority vote, find that good cause exists for extending the time period. The vote may be taken by letter or telephone.

Authority: 27-12-204, MCA Implemented: 27-12-501, MCA

RULE 13. Prehearing telephone conference. At least 5 days prior to the date set for hearing, the claimant and his legal counsel, if the claimant is represented, the chiropractic physician against whom the claim is made and his legal counsel, if the chiropractic physician is represented, and the director shall confer with the panel chairman by telephone conference call or in person. The purposes of the prehearing conference are to:

- (1) identify and simplify issues;
- (2) secure stipulations to, or admissions of, facts not remaining in dispute;
- (3) confirm the authenticity of documents;
- (4) limit the number of expert witnesses to be called and the schedule of their appearances;
- (5) estimate the length of the hearing;
- (6) consider, if applicable, a transcription request; and
- (7) consider any other matter that may aid in expeditious consideration and determination of the claim.

Authority: 27-12-204, MCA. Implemented: 27-12-502, MCA

RULE 14. Exhibits and other documentary evidence — return of documents by panelists. (1) At least 30 days prior to the date set for hearing, each party shall furnish all other parties a copy, and the director with seven copies, of all records, exhibits, and documents other than medical records obtained by the panel, properly identified, upon which the party intends to rely at the hearing. However, if a party proves that competent evidence was not available within this period, the party producing the evidence shall notify the director, other parties, and all panelists of the evidence as soon as it becomes available and serve copies upon those persons. The panel chairman may admit later-acquired evidence upon terms and conditions he considers just and equitable.

(2) A panelist shall return the copies of the application and answer and any amendments to the application or answer, medical records, exhibits, and all other documents relating to the claim to the director's office upon completion of the hearing and issuance of the panel's decision. A party may retain his copies of any evidentiary materials. The acquiescence of a party to the consideration of such materials by the panel may not be construed as the party's consent to the admission of the material into evidence in a subsequent judicial proceeding.

Authority: 27-12-204, MCA. Implemented: 27-12-308 and 27-12-502, MCA RULE 15. Conduct of hearing — hearing procedures — application of rules of evidence. (1) The panel chairman shall order the conduct of the hearing.

(2) The claimant must be present personally unless his presence is:

(a) waived by the chiropractic physician against whom the claim is made; or
(b) excused by the director, or the panel chairman if a chairman has been selected, upon a timely request to be excused. A request is timely if made at least 30 days before the hearing date unless the request is based on facts not reasonably known 30 days before the hearing date.

(3) At the hearing, the claimant shall proceed first, followed by the chiropractic physician against whom the claim is made, if the chiropractic physician appears.

(4) Both parties may call witnesses who must be sworn and who are subject to cross-examination. Records, exhibits, and other documents relied on by either party may be offered and admitted into evidence if relevant and timely submitted under Rule 14. The panel may review written statements of fact by the claimant and by treating chiropractic physicians.

(5) The hearing is confidential and informal. The panel may not make, pay for, or retain any transcript of the hearing or proceedings relating to the hearing. A party may make, pay for, and retain a transcript with the consent of the panel chairman and the other parties.

(6) The Montana Rules of Evidence, Title 26, chapter 10, MCA, do not apply to the hearing. However, the panel chairman may exclude irrelevant, immaterial, or unduly repetitious evidence.

(7) A panelist and a party, or a party's legal counsel if the party is represented, may examine a party and its witnesses, subject to the control of the panel chairman.

Authority: 27-12-204, MCA. Implemented: 27-12-502, MCA

RULE 16. Compensation of panelists. (1) A panelist must be paid a fee of $40 an hour, up to a maximum of $320 a day in which a hearing or part of a hearing is held, for the time spent in hearing the claim. The panel chairman must be paid the same fee for time spent hearing and deciding any preliminary matter. A panelist must also be a paid fee of $10 an hour for time spent preparing for the hearing.

(2) The director may pay additional compensation for travel time and other services under circumstances including but not limited to consideration of weather and distance.

(3) A claim for fees is subject to the approval of the director.

(4) To obtain compensation, a panelist and panel chairman shall present a bill for the approval of the director stating the nature of the services performed and itemizing to the one-tenth of an hour time spent.

Tolling of Statute of Repose by Chiropractic Legal Panel Proceeding Filed Before Dismissal of Court Action — Filing of Second Court Action After Panel Decision Not Barred: A medical malpractice complaint filed in District Court on April 16, 1992, tolled the statute of repose pursuant to 27-2-205. On August 2, 1993, an application was timely filed with the Montana Chiropractic Legal Panel. Voluntary dismissal of the District Court complaint without prejudice on August 3, 1993, did not nullify the complaint's tolling of the statute of limitations because under this section, the filing of the Panel application also tolled the statute. The Montana Chiropractic Legal Panel Act continued to toll the statute while the application under it was pending, and because the second District Court complaint was timely filed under the Act within 30 days after the Panel's decision, the second complaint was not barred by the statute of repose. Webb v. T.D., 275 M 243, 912 P2d 202, 53 St. Rep. 117 (1996).

CHAPTER 17
CLAIM AND DELIVERY
OF PERSONAL PROPERTYChapter Case Notes

Analysis for Jurisdiction of District Court Over Tribal Member and Tribal Property: The correct analysis in both regulatory and adjudicatory actions involving tribal members or lands is whether the exercise of jurisdiction by a state court or regulatory body is preempted by federal law or, if not, whether it infringes on tribal self-government. If either element is met, a state may not assume civil jurisdiction or take regulatory action over Indian people or their territories within the boundaries of their reservations. In re Estate of Big Spring, 2011 MT 109, 360 Mont. 370, 255 P.3d 121, overruling Iron Bear v. District Court, 162 Mont. 335, 512 P.2d 1292 (1973), in its entirety and In re Marriage of Skillen, 1998 MT 43, 287 Mont. 399, 956 P.2d 1, in part and overruling numerous cases to the extent they followed the principles of Iron Bear or Skillen.

No Subject Matter Jurisdiction for District Court in Probate for Tribal Member — Jurisdiction Presumptively With Tribal Court — Proceedings Before District Court Void: The District Court erred when it assumed subject matter jurisdiction over the probate of an enrolled Blackfeet Tribal member's estate when all of the decedent's estate property was located within the exterior boundaries of the Blackfeet Reservation. The Supreme Court overruled Iron Bear and held that civil jurisdiction over non-Indians and Indians on reservation lands presumptively lies in the tribal court. Absent express congressional limitation, the tribe maintained sovereign power and exclusive jurisdiction over the probate of the decedent. A state court has an independent obligation to determine whether it has jurisdiction in a case involving an Indian person and Indian Country. The court declared void the 7 years of proceedings before the District Court with reference to the decedent's estate. In re Estate of Big Spring, 2011 MT 109, 360 Mont. 370, 255 P.3d 121, overruling Iron Bear v. District Court, 162 Mont. 335, 512 P.2d 1292 (1973), in its entirety and In re Marriage of Skillen, 1998 MT 43, 287 Mont. 399, 956 P.2d 1, in part and overruling numerous cases to the extent they followed the principles of Iron Bear or Skillen.

District Court Jurisdiction Over Probate of and Claim and Delivery Action by Estate of Enrolled Tribal Indian: Where, following the death of an enrolled member of an Indian tribe, the decedent's wife petitioned the District Court to probate her deceased husband's estate, and estate property consisting of a road grader was later unlawfully sold by the deceased's wife to her brother, the District Court erred in holding that it did not have jurisdiction over the claim and delivery action instituted on behalf of the estate to recover the road grader or its value. The fact that there is no federal treaty or statute preempting the jurisdiction of the District Court and the fact that the tribal court has not had and is not exercising jurisdiction over the case properly resulted in the District Court's taking jurisdiction of the probate of the estate. Because the action for claim and delivery is the enforcement process to recover property within the jurisdiction of the probate court, the District Court should have exercised subject matter jurisdiction over the claim and delivery action as well. Estate of Standing Bear v. Belcourt, 193 M 174, 631 P2d 285, 38 St. Rep. 1064 (1981), overruled in part in In re Estate of Big Spring, 2011 MT 109, 360 Mont. 370, 255 P.3d 121.

Part 1
General ProvisionsPart Case Notes

Repossession of Collateral Pursuant to Uniform Commercial Code to Follow Judicial Procedures: A secured party that seeks to repossess collateral after default pursuant to 30-9A-609 of the Uniform Commercial Code must follow the specific, systematic judicial procedures provided in either the claim and delivery statutes in Title 27, ch. 17, or the prejudgment attachment statutes in Title 27, ch. 18, if applicable. Yellowstone Fed. Credit Union v. Daniels, 2008 MT 111, 342 M 451, 181 P3d 595 (2008).

Strict Compliance With Claim and Delivery Statutes Required in Repossession of Property: A plaintiff seeking relief pursuant to the claim and delivery statutes must strictly comply with all statutory and procedural requirements before it may effect repossession of a defendant's property. In this case, a credit union presented an affidavit rather than evidence supporting its ex parte writ in aid of repossession, in violation of 27-17-203. The District Court did not transfer the collateral to the Sheriff for 5 days before delivery after issuing the writ, in violation of 27-17-308. The District Court ordered that the credit union be permitted to sell the collateral before a final judgment was rendered when the credit union had a statutory duty to keep the property in good condition pending final judgment, in violation of 27-17-402. Failure to comply with the statutory requirements during repossession of defendant's property rendered the seizure void. Yellowstone Fed. Credit Union v. Daniels, 2008 MT 111, 342 M 451, 181 P3d 595 (2008).

Case Notes

No Basis for Damages Absent Evidence of Wrongful Detainer — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff sought damages for defendant's detention of a tractor in which plaintiff had a security interest. Defendant moved to dismiss the claims, and the District Court granted summary judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Claim and delivery require that the claimant prove that property is wrongfully detained and that the claimant has the right to immediate possession at the time that the action is brought. However, in this case, there was insufficient evidence that defendant wrongfully detained the tractor because defendant had no contractual relationship with plaintiff regarding the tractor and owed no contractual duty to return the tractor to plaintiff. Absent evidence of wrongful detainer, there was no basis for plaintiff to recover damages, so summary judgment was proper. 1st Bank v. Winderl, 2002 MT 339, 313 M 306, 60 P3d 998 (2002).

Loss of Possession by Defendant: Where a Sheriff seized oil well piping under a search warrant and subsequently released it by order of the same Justice of the Peace to the custody from which he seized it, incidentally enabling the person who procured the warrant to take it under claim of ownership, claim and delivery does not lie against Sheriff on theory of wrongful and negligent loss of possession or constructive possession. Harri v. Isaac, 111 M 152, 107 P2d 137 (1940).

Lessee's Rights: In claim and delivery, plaintiff must plead and prove ownership or right of possession in himself and defendant's wrongful possession and recover on the strength of his own title rather than on weakness of his adversary's; under the facts presented, lessee, whose lease had expired but was later extended by oral agreement, was entitled to share of the crops planted as against plaintiff grazing permittee who in the meantime had been granted a permit for grazing from the owner but who also planted crop in addition to grazing. Hall v. Hilling, 107 M 432, 86 P2d 648 (1938).

Fixtures: In an action in claim and delivery to recover the possession of a dredge used in placer mining operations claimed by plaintiff lessee as personal property and defendant lessor as a fixture, the trial court erred in directing a verdict for plaintiff in view of the evidence relating to the intention of the parties in entering into the contract of lease, from which different inferences might have been drawn by different reasonable men. Story Gold Dredging Co. v. Wilson, 106 M 166, 76 P2d 73 (1938).

Conditional Sales:

The owner of an automobile who places it in the hands of an established dealer with apparent authority to sell it, although title is reserved to the owner under a conditional sale contract, is estopped to deny title in an innocent purchaser who, in the absence of circumstances putting him on guard, was not required to make investigation relative to the status of the title. Rasmussen v. Lee & Co., 104 M 278, 66 P2d 119 (1937).

The buyer of an automobile from a dealer, even though cognizant that finance company had acquired conditional sale contract thereon by assignment with title reserved to the owner, could nevertheless be an innocent purchaser since he could rightfully assume that, waiving its interest in the car, the finance company had consented to the sale and was looking to the dealer for payment. Rasmussen v. Lee & Co., 104 M 278, 66 P2d 119 (1937).

Where the buyer of an automobile under a conditional sale contract prior to its seizure for taxes had defaulted, the right to its possession was in the seller, and after its seizure resulting in a void sale that right again reverted to him, and therefore he could properly sue the purchaser at the tax sale in claim and delivery to recover its possession. Perham v. Putnam, 82 M 349, 267 P 305 (1928).

Demand for Possession Required:

A demand for possession of personal property is not a condition precedent to bringing an action in claim and delivery where it appears that if made it would have been futile or where the taking was wrongful from its inception; therefore the contention that damages do not accrue until after demand is made and refused was not meritorious under the facts considered. Rasmussen v. Lee & Co., 104 M 278, 66 P2d 119 (1937).

Where defendants in an action in claim and delivery obtained possession of household goods rightfully under an executory contract of purchase, plaintiff was required to plead a demand for them and a refusal as prerequisites to a termination of their right of possession and the creation of the right to immediate possession in plaintiff. Hennessy Co. v. Wagner, 69 M 46, 220 P 101 (1923).

Measure of Damage: The fixing of damages for the wrongful taking and retention of personal property (an automobile in the instant case) is left largely to the discretion of the jury, and where automobile was used by plaintiff in his business of selling cars, the cost incurred in making trips in pursuit of the car and the fact that he was required to hire another car were proper elements of damage. Owner may testify as to value of its use to him. Rasmussen v. Lee & Co., 104 M 278, 66 P2d 119 (1937).

Forfeiture of Contract: In a claim and delivery action by an automobile dealer to recover possession of a car sold to the purchaser under conditional sale contract and bought by defendants on delinquent tax sale before it had been fully paid for, plaintiff was not required to plead the contract and forfeiture; nor, the purchaser having been in default and out of possession, was it necessary to show a demand upon him for possession. Perham v. Putnam, 82 M 349, 267 P 305 (1928); Hennessy Co. v. Wagner, 69 M 46, 220 P 101 (1923).

Tax Claims: While claim and delivery does not lie to recover possession of personal property seized for a tax and in possession of an officer unless the tax is absolutely void, it does lie against the purchaser at the tax sale for fatal irregularity in the sale. Perham v. Putnam, 82 M 349, 267 P 305 (1928).

Judgment in the Alternative: In claim and delivery the judgment must be in the alternative, for the delivery of the possession of the property or for its value in case delivery cannot be made. Hennessy Co. v. Wagner, 69 M 46, 220 P 101 (1923).

Replevin Abolished: The Writ of Replevin has been dispensed with in this state, and the proceedings provided for in this chapter, to gain possession of the property and to hold it pending the trial of the cause, have been substituted instead. State ex rel. Bruce v. District Court, 33 M 359, 83 P 641 (1906).

No Basis for Damages Absent Evidence of Wrongful Detainer — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff sought damages for defendant's detention of a tractor in which plaintiff had a security interest. Constitutionality: Replevin provisions which authorized state agents to seize property in possession of another person upon application of claimant and subsequent posting of bond prior to a hearing to determine parties' rights to possession are invalid because they work a deprivation of property without due process of law by denying an opportunity to be heard before chattels are taken from the possessor. Fuentes v. Shevin, 407 US 67, 32 L Ed 2d 556, 92 S Ct 1983 (1972), distinguished in Northrip v. Federal Nat'l Mtg. Ass'n, 527 F2d 23 (9th Cir. 1975), Mercy Gen. Hosp. v. Weinberger, 410 F. Supp. 344 (D.C. Affidavit Containing Conclusory Allegations as Well as Required Statements — No Error in Issuance: The District Court did not err in issuing a claim and delivery order that contained the statutorily required statements and that alleged two grounds for the order when there was sufficient evidence to enable the judge to conclude that notice and delay would seriously impair plaintiff's remedy of repossession. First Bank W. Mont. Missoula v. Gregoroff, 236 M 345, 770 P2d 512, 46 St. Rep. 412 (1989).

Proof of Right to Possession: In such actions it is incumbent on plaintiff to establish by a preponderance of the evidence the right to the immediate possession in himself at the time the action is brought and that the defendant is wrongfully in possession. Plaintiff must rely upon the strength of his own right of possession and not upon the weakness of his adversary's claim to such right. O'Connell v. Haggerty, 126 M 442, 253 P2d 578 (1953).

Cause of Action: To state a cause of action in claim and delivery, the complaint must allege ownership or right of possession in plaintiff, that defendant is wrongfully in possession, and the value of the property. Perham v. Putnam, 82 M 349, 267 P 305 (1928); Hennessy Co. v. Wagner, 69 M 46, 220 P 101 (1923).

Strict Compliance With Claim and Delivery Statutes Required in Repossession of Property: A plaintiff seeking relief pursuant to the claim and delivery statutes must strictly comply with all statutory and procedural requirements before it may effect repossession of a defendant's property. In this case, a credit union presented an affidavit rather than evidence supporting its ex parte writ in aid of repossession, in violation of 27-17-203. The District Court did not transfer the collateral to the Sheriff for 5 days before delivery after issuing the writ, in violation of 27-17-308. The District Court ordered that the credit union be permitted to sell the collateral before a final judgment was rendered when the credit union had a statutory duty to keep the property in good condition pending final judgment, in violation of 27-17-402. Failure to comply with the statutory requirements during repossession of defendant's property rendered the seizure void. Yellowstone Fed. Credit Union v. Daniels, 2008 MT 111, 342 M 451, 181 P3d 595 (2008).

Constitutionality of Claim and Delivery Procedures: When presented with a claim that subsection (2) of this section is unconstitutional because it allows a court-ordered seizure of property without requiring notice of or opportunity for an immediate postseizure hearing, the Supreme Court held that Montana's claim and delivery procedure provides constitutional safeguards required by the state and federal constitutions. The procedure balances and protects the interests of both parties in the following ways: (1) a prehearing seizure may be obtained only if plaintiff swears to facts and posts a bond appropriate to protect defendant; (2) a delivery order must be obtained through a judge or Justice of the Peace rather than a court or administrative officer; (3) defendant may file a bond to immediately regain possession of the property; (4) defendant may immediately apply for a motion to quash the order; (5) defendant may promptly seek Supreme Court review under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded); and (6) defendant may challenge the validity of the order at the final judicial determination of liability following seizure. First Bank W. Mont. Missoula v. Gregoroff, 236 M 345, 770 P2d 512, 46 St. Rep. 412 (1989). See also Mitchell v. W.T. Grant Co., 416 US 600, 40 L Ed 2d 406, 94 S Ct 1895 (1974).

"Open Court" Construed: Defendant argued the District Court erred in meeting with plaintiff's attorney and signing the order in the Clerk of Court's office rather than in open court as required by this section. However, subsection (2) of this section requires only that the evidence be presented in open court; it does not require that a record of the hearing be made. The "open court" language requires that the plaintiff or his attorney be present before the judge or justice when the ex parte motion for claim and delivery is made and prevents the plaintiff from obtaining the order merely upon written application. The judge was acting in his official capacity when he heard the evidence, and his decision to meet in the Clerk of Court's office did not constitute reversible error. First Bank W. Mont. Missoula v. Gregoroff, 236 M 345, 770 P2d 512, 46 St. Rep. 412 (1989).

Case Notes

Bond Benefits Only Person Named in Bond: Paccar leased trucks to MPT. MPT entered into an agreement to buy tires from Les Schwab on credit. When MPT defaulted on its purchase agreement, Schwab brought an action to recover the tires and simultaneously obtained a bond from ICNA to indemnify MPT in the event that Schwab was found to have wrongfully repossessed the tires. Paccar argued that the lower court had erred in dismissing ICNA from the suit and that Paccar had the right to assert a claim against the bond for damages suffered as a result of MPT's actions. The Supreme Court held that the bond was expressly written for the benefit of MPT and therefore only MPT could act upon and enforce the bond. Paccar Financial Corp. v. Les Schwab Tire Centers of Mont., Inc., 277 M 171, 920 P2d 977, 53 St. Rep. 652 (1996).

Constitutionality: Replevin provisions which authorized state agents to seize property in possession of another person upon application of claimant and subsequent posting of bond prior to a hearing to determine parties' rights to possession are invalid because they work a deprivation of property without due process of law by denying an opportunity to be heard before chattels are taken from the possessor. Fuentes v. Shevin, 407 US 67, 32 L Ed 2d 556, 92 S Ct 1983 (1972), distinguished in Northrip v. Federal Nat'l Mtg. Ass'n, 527 F2d 23 (9th Cir. 1975), Mercy Gen. Hosp. v. Weinberger, 410 F. Supp. 344 (D.C. Supp. 34 (D.C. Mont. 1976).

Amount of Recovery on Undertaking: Under this section, plaintiff in an action on the undertaking may recover the damages he is able to prove to the full amount of the penalty; where no other damages are asked, the full recovery is the value of the property at the time it was taken, with costs, regardless of whether or not a return of the property had theretofore been adjudged. Fergus Motor Co. v. Schott, 95 M 249, 26 P2d 365 (1933).

Surety's Liability on Undertaking:

The giving of a redelivery bond does not amount to a waiver or discharge of the undertaking in a claim and delivery action, nor does the fact that the property held under Writ of Attachment was subsequently sold under execution release the surety from liability for costs awarded in the claim and delivery action. Clark v. Nat'l Sur. Co., 81 M 113, 261 P 618 (1927).

The surety on an undertaking in an action in claim and delivery against a Sheriff, conditioned for the return of the property if return be adjudged and for the payment of such sum as might from any cause be recovered against plaintiff, is liable for the costs incurred by the defendant Sheriff on judgment in his favor. Clark v. Nat'l Sur. Co., 81 M 113, 261 P 618 (1927).

Where an undertaking in a claim and delivery action had accomplished the purpose for which it was given, the surety will not be permitted to free itself from the obligations and disadvantages of its engagement on the ground that the Sheriff never relinquished possession of the property in question and that therefore there was no consideration for the undertaking, it appearing that the same surety company had furnished a redelivery bond to permit the Sheriff to retain possession. Clark v. Nat'l Sur. Co., 81 M 113, 261 P 618 (1927).

Interference With Officer: Resistance of or interference with an officer while endeavoring to take property into his possession pursuant to the provisions of this section constitutes a contempt within the meaning of 3-1-501(1)(g). State ex rel. Bruce v. District Court, 33 M 359, 83 P 641 (1906).

Failure of Sureties to Justify: Where the sureties on a return bond of the defendant have failed to justify, it is the duty of the Sheriff, specially enjoined upon him by this section, to deliver possession of the property to the plaintiff. State ex rel. Johnson v. Collins, 41 M 526, 110 P 526 (1940).

Justification as Condition Precedent: Where the defendant in a claim and delivery action, after seizure of the property by the Sheriff, desires a redelivery to himself, he must not only tender to the officer the redelivery bond provided for by this section but also have the sureties on said bond justify, in the same manner as upon bail on arrest, as a condition precedent to his right to the return of the property, even though exception to their sufficiency is not taken by plaintiff or notice thereof given to defendant. State ex rel. Johnson v. Collins, 41 M 526, 110 P 526 (1940).

Notice to Defendant of Insufficiency: This section omits any requirement that written notice, or any notice, be given to the defendant that the sureties upon his redelivery bond are not judged sufficient. State ex rel. Johnson v. Collins, 41 M 526, 110 P 526 (1940).

Tender of Cash Bond: Where, in claim and delivery, defendant, at the time the Sheriff served the papers and sought to take possession of the property, tendered to the officer cash bond to retain the property, he thereby waived his right to tender a redelivery bond thereafter. State ex rel. Johnson v. Collins, 41 M 526, 110 P 526 (1940).

27-17-308. Delivery of property to plaintiff if not returned to defendant.

Case Notes

Strict Compliance With Claim and Delivery Statutes Required in Repossession of Property: A plaintiff seeking relief pursuant to the claim and delivery statutes must strictly comply with all statutory and procedural requirements before it may effect repossession of a defendant's property. In this case, a credit union presented an affidavit rather than evidence supporting its ex parte writ in aid of repossession, in violation of 27-17-203. The District Court did not transfer the collateral to the Sheriff for 5 days before delivery after issuing the writ, in violation of 27-17-308. The District Court ordered that the credit union be permitted to sell the collateral before a final judgment was rendered when the credit union had a statutory duty to keep the property in good condition pending final judgment, in violation of 27-17-402. Failure to comply with the statutory requirements during repossession of defendant's property rendered the seizure void. Yellowstone Fed. Credit Union v. Daniels, 2008 MT 111, 342 M 451, 181 P3d 595 (2008).

Sheriff's Liability: The only connection a Sheriff had with a transaction that culminated in a claim and delivery action was in his official capacity in serving process and in seizing a band of horses and delivering them to the plaintiff as provided by this section. No redelivery bond was furnished, and the owner made no third-party claim for possession as provided by 27-17-309. The owner was successful in a subsequent action for possession but was not entitled to damages for their detention or injuries. Jackson v. McDonald, 115 M 269, 143 P 898 (1943).

Part 4

Judgment — Return of Property

27-17-401. Form of judgment.Case Notes

Hearing on Damages After Reversal: Where the trial court, after hearing a claim and delivery action on its merits, erroneously determined that the complaint did not state a cause of action but the evidence clearly showed that plaintiff was entitled to recover, necessitating reversal of the judgment and remand of the cause for further proceedings, the court may, if necessary, hear further evidence to determine the amount of damages to which plaintiff was entitled. Schneider v. Nelson, 111 M 377, 110 P2d 972 (1940).

Date of Valuation: In an action in claim and delivery to recover a band of sheep or their value, an instruction fixing the measure of damages recoverable as the value of the property as of the date of the trial was erroneous, the measure being its value at the time of the wrongful taking, with interest to the time of trial. First Nat'l Bank v. Perrine, 97 M 262, 33 P2d 997 (1934).

Alternative Judgment Required:

Prior to trial of a claim and delivery action, the property in controversy was turned back to plaintiff under appropriate proceedings. Failure of the District Court to enter judgment in his favor in the alternative (for its return or its value in case return could not be had) did not constitute error of which defendant could complain, because there was no necessity under such circumstances for incorporation of the alternative clause. Fergus Motor Co. v. Schott, 95 M 249, 26 P2d 365 (1933); Hayes v. Moffatt, 83 M 185, 271 P 452 (1928).

The judgment in a claim and delivery action must be in the alternative. Kelsey v. Yadish, 66 M 23, 212 P 495 (1923); Hynes v. Barnes, 30 M 25, 75 P 523 (1904).

The requirement that in an action in claim and delivery the judgment must be in the alternative, namely, for the return of the property or, in case return cannot be made, for its value, applies only to a case tried upon the merits, and therefore such a judgment in a case in which a verdict was directed for defendant because the complaint did not state facts sufficient to state a cause of action was error. Barrett v. Shipley, 63 M 152, 206 P 430 (1922).

Under this section there can be no judgment for the value if there can be a delivery of the property, but a judgment is not necessarily erroneous if the alternative is not expressed on its face. An absolute judgment for the money is equivalent to a special finding that a delivery cannot be made. Boley v. Griswold, 20 Wall. (87 US) 486, 22 L Ed 375 (1874).

Failure of Defendant to Claim Damages: Where defendant in an action in claim and delivery fails in his answer to demand the return of the property or its value and the jury's verdict is in favor of plaintiff as to a portion thereof only, failure of the District Court to incorporate in the judgment a provision in favor of defendant as to the portion eliminated by the jury is not error. Hayes v. Moffatt, 83 M 185, 271 P 452 (1928).

Damages for Retention: This section and 25-7-503 recognize the right of the defendant in a claim and delivery action who is awarded a return of the property to recover damages for the wrongful taking and detention of it. Hammond v. Thompson, 54 M 609, 173 P 229 (1918).

Damages From Date of Judgment to Outcome of Appeal: Chesnut obtained a judgment against Sales for the return of two mules. Sales refused to return the mules pending the outcome of his appeal. Sales lost the appeal, and the court said that Chesnut was entitled to damages for the time after the judgment when he was denied possession of his mules. Chesnut v. Sales, 49 M 318, 141 P 986 (1914).

Defective Title: Where, at the time of the alleged tender of return, title to the property was clouded by a chattel mortgage and other claims, defendant was not bound to accept the return or to designate a place of return. Hoeh v. Kirby, 98 M 391, 39 P2d 657 (1935).

CHAPTER 18 PREJUDGMENT ATTACHMENT

Chapter Case Notes

Wrongful Attachment — Action by Plaintiff Debtor Against Defendant Creditor: The Supreme Court relied on the decision in Lugar v. Edmondson Oil Co., 457 US 922, 73 L Ed 2d 482, 102 S Ct 2744 (1982), in holding that an action under 42 U.S.C. 1983 may be brought by a plaintiff debtor against a defendant creditor who has wrongfully obtained prejudgment attachment of plaintiff's assets under a defective state statute regarding prejudgment attachment. The necessary inquiry is whether: (1) the deprivation results from exercise of a right or privilege having its source in state authority; and (2) the creditor, as a private party, could be appropriately characterized as a "state actor". Stensvad v. Towe, 232 M 378, 759 P2d 138, 45 St. Rep. 1129 (1988).

Wrongful Attachment — Extent of Duty to Mitigate Damages: Damages for wrongful attachment were proper despite defendants' contention that plaintiff failed to mitigate by posting an attachment bond or seeking to have the attachment released, considering plaintiff's presentation of expert testimony that he had no obligation to do more than he did and the fact that the jury was properly instructed on proximate cause and duty to mitigate. Stensvad v. Towe, 232 M 378, 759 P2d 138, 45 St. Rep. 1129 (1988).

Defects in Issuance — Persons Entitled to Raise Issue: Defects in the issuance of Writs of Attachment may be raised only by those named as defendants in the attachment proceeding. A third party not named as a defendant may assert its interest in the attached property but may not raise defects in the Writs. Hull v. D. Irvin Transp., Ltd., 213 M 75, 690 P2d 414, 41 St. Rep. 1954 (1984).

Constitutionality: Where prejudgment Writ of Attachment reached no property but real property of which the debtor retained the ownership, actual use, and physical control and therefore did "nothing more than impinge upon economic interests of the property owner", it did not violate the notice and hearing requirements of the 14th amendment Due Process Clause and was therefore constitutional. Bustell v. Bustell, 170 M 457, 555 P2d 722 (1976).

Third Person's Property: The attachment of one person's property to satisfy a claim against another is a conversion of the property. Cent. Mont. Stockyards v. Fraser, 133 M 168, 320 P2d 981 (1957).

Dissolution of Attachment: Where an attachment is dissolved the lien on the property seized thereunder is vacated, the right to hold the property ceases, and the officer holding it should return the same promptly. Cent. Mont. Stockyards v. Fraser, 133 M 168, 320 P2d 981 (1957).

Ancillary Remedy:

An attachment is a provisional remedy ancillary to the civil action in which it is issued; it but impounds and conserves the property as security for the satisfaction of a judgment that may be recovered, and the lien attaches only upon the title which the attachment debtor has in the property at the time of the levy. Short v. Karnop, 84 M 276, 275 P 278 (1929).

Attachment is a provisional remedy ancillary to the civil action in which it is issued. Am. Sur. Co. v. Kartowitz, 54 M 92, 166 P 685 (1917).

Attachment is classified by the Code as a provisional remedy. It is a summary proceeding ancillary to the action in which it is issued. As employed in this chapter, the writ was unknown to the common law. It is of statutory origin and depends for its validity entirely upon a compliance with the statutory requirements. Duluth Brewing & Malting Co. v. Allen, 51 M 89, 149 P 494- (1915).

Liberal Construction:

Although the attachment statute, being remedial in character, must be liberally construed, substantial compliance with its requirements is necessary. Gilna v. Barker, 78 M 343, 254 P 169 (1927).

The attachment law is a remedial statute and must be liberally construed. Cope v. Upper Missouri Min. & Prospecting Co., 1 M 53 (1868).

Writ Asking for More Than Due Valid: The validity of an attachment is not affected by the fact that the complaint upon which the writ was issued asked for more than was justly due, nor may the attachment be discharged on that ground. Gilna v. Barker, 78 M 343, 254 P 169 (1927).

Amendment of Pleadings: Where after a Writ of Attachment was issued the complaint was amended to show a reduction of the amount of the indebtedness due from defendant sureties because of payments made by other sureties on their bonds, the Writ issued was not rendered invalid thereby; having conformed to the demand made in the original complaint, it was not rendered void by what transpired thereafter. State ex rel. Nauman v. Pondera Valley St. Bank, 77 M 1, 248 P 207 (1926).

Merger in Judgment: Where an attachment exists at the time of judgment in favor of the attaching creditor, it becomes merged in the judgment. Harboldt v. Hensen, 75 M 512, 244 P 488 (1926).

Cancellation of Oil and Gas Leases: In an action brought under 82-1-201 through 82-1-203 to obtain the cancellation of an oil and gas lease and to recover the penalty provided therein for the lessee's failure to release within the time specified and resultant damages, a Writ of Attachment may issue as authorized by 82-1-202. Daley v. Torrey, 71 M 513, 230 P 782 (1924).

Invalid Attachment: Where an attachment is issued in an action not falling within the provision of this section and service of summons is made by publication only, the property of defendant is not brought within the jurisdiction and control of the court, and a judgment by default, being one in personam, is void. Hinderager v. MacGinniss, 61 M 312, 202 P 200 (1921).

Part 1 General Provisions

Part Case Notes

Repossession of Collateral Pursuant to Uniform Commercial Code to Follow Judicial Procedures: A secured party that seeks to repossess collateral after default pursuant to 30-9A-609 of the Uniform Commercial Code must follow the specific, systematic judicial procedures provided in either the claim and delivery statutes in Title 27, ch. 17, or the prejudgment attachment statutes in Title 27, ch. 18, if applicable. Yellowstone Fed. Credit Union v. Daniels, 2008 MT 111, 342 M 451, 181 P3d 595 (2008).

Summary Judgment for Bank That Disbursed Funds to Constituencies Absent Showing of Conversion, Despite Presence of Attorney's Lien on Funds: Plaintiff law firm represented a woman in divorce proceedings and filed a lien against the woman for attorney fees that she allegedly owed the firm. A divorce decree was issued that awarded the woman $400,000 from a bank trust account, but no fees were awarded to the firm, which subsequently filed a collection action against the woman, the account trustees, and the bank, asserting a breach of duty, conversion, malice, and actual fraud and seeking punitive damages. However, at no time did the firm obtain a judgment on the lien or a prejudgment attachment of the trust account. The District Court granted summary judgment for the account trustees and the bank, and the firm appealed regarding the conversion claim. The Supreme Court affirmed because the firm failed to establish conversion of its lien. Without a judgment fixing the debt or a writ executing a judgment upon the trust fund account, the firm could not establish its ownership of the funds or a right to possession of them, and the mere assertion of a lien did not suffice to defeat the bank's or the trustee's fiduciary duties, so summary judgment was proper. St. Peter & Warren, P.C. v. Purdom, 2006 MT 172, 333 M 9, 140 P3d 478 (2006), following King v. Zimmerman, 266 M 54, 878 P2d 895 (1994).

Evidence of Malicious Attachment — Motion to Dismiss Properly Denied: In Spooner Constr. & Tree Serv., Inc. v. Maner, 2000 MT 161, 300 M 268, 3 P3d 641 (2000), it was held that plaintiff admitted no entitlement to any money from a logging agreement or any rental fees associated with defendant's use of a logging skidder. Nevertheless, plaintiff made no attempt to contact defendant to submit a bill, request payment, or discuss the logging contract, but instead, after disabling the skidder, plaintiff filed a lien against and later attached the skidder, with the intent to bid on it at a Sheriff's sale. Defendant presented both direct and circumstantial evidence that, without probable cause, plaintiff wrongfully attached the skidder with an improper motive and with reckless disregard for the facts, constituting a prima facie case of malicious wrongful attachment. Plaintiff's motion to dismiss was properly denied. Spooner Constr. & Tree Serv., Inc. v. Maner, 2003 MT 43, 314 M 268, 66 P3d 263 (2003).

Deficiency Judgment — Order to Assign Future Proceeds From Separate Cause of Action to Judgment Creditor Not Erroneous: Andersen executed a promissory note in favor of the Alpine Buffalo, Elk and Llama Ranch, Inc. (Alpine), and secured the note with real property. When no payments were made, Alpine received a judgment and foreclosure decree. After Andersen's property was sold, Alpine also received a deficiency judgment in the amount still owing. Andersen neither appealed the judgment nor made payment. Alpine later learned that Andersen was plaintiff in a pending malpractice claim against her former attorney, so Alpine sought and received an assignment of the prospective proceeds from that action. Andersen appealed the assignment order, claiming that Alpine's reliance on former Rule 70, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), was misplaced because that rule is a civil contempt statute that applies only to a contemptuous party. Alpine conceded the inapplicability of the rule, but the Supreme Court pointed out that former Rule 70 was not the sole basis for Alpine's motion for assignment, citing Smith v. Foss, 177 M 443, 582 P2d 329 (1978), for the proposition that a District Court possesses jurisdiction to enter any necessary orders to enforce its judgments. The District Court's assignment order did not assign Andersen's legal malpractice cause of action to Alpine, nor did Alpine receive all legal rights and title to that action. Rather, the assignment order merely required Andersen to assign future proceeds from the other litigation to Alpine in an amount limited to the funds necessary to satisfy the deficiency judgment amount. Andersen failed to establish error in the District Court's order requiring Andersen, as judgment debtor, to assign future proceeds from the separate cause of action to Alpine, the judgment creditor. Alpine Buffalo, Elk & Llama Ranch, Inc. v. Andersen, 2001 MT 307, 307 M 509, 38 P3d 815 (2001), distinguishing Coty v. Cogswell, 100 M 496, 50 P2d 249 (1935), and Youngblood v. Am. St. Ins. Co., 262 M 391, 866 P2d 203 (1993).

Promissory Note Secured by Alleged Mortgage on Real Property as Well as Collateral — Writ of Attachment for Possession of Collateral Harmless Error: Defendants, who borrowed $5,000, claimed the District Court erred in issuing a Writ of Attachment when the promissory note was secured by an alleged mortgage on real property as well as other collateral. The Supreme Court found a grave question as to whether the wording of the note constituted a hypothecation for real estate mortgage purposes, but noted that the parties did not dispute a security interest in the other collateral. Under the Uniform Commercial Code, plaintiff as secured party had the right to take possession of the collateral upon default, and the alleged erroneous issuance of the Writ of Attachment to take possession of the collateral was harmless error. Montgomery v. Hunt, 227 M 279, 738 P2d 887, 44 St. Rep. 1081 (1987).

Direct Payment of Money:

Plaintiff attended a party in a motel room. A fight erupted, and the room was damaged. The next day the owner of the motel brought an action in Justice Court against all persons present in the room. The complaint alleged liability on an implied contract basis. At the time the complaint was filed, the Justice Court issued an ex parte prejudgment attachment of plaintiff's pickup, which was impounded. At the hearing, plaintiff argued against the attachment, alleging it was not properly issued under the statute. The Justice Court upheld the attachment. Plaintiff filed a Writ of Certiorari in District Court, which was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the Justice Court's authority to issue a Writ of Prejudgment Attachment is subject to certain conditions precedent. Under 27-18-101 and 27-18-202, plaintiffs must show defendant is indebted to the plaintiff under a contract for the direct payment of money. The court found that the implied contract not to damage the room was not one for the direct payment of money, therefore, the Justice Court was without jurisdiction to order the attachment. Buffalo v. Thiel, 213 M 280, 691 P2d 1343, 41 St. Rep. 2116 (1984).

The District Court correctly found that plaintiff had wrongfully attached defendant's property when the contract did not call for direct payment of money but required further performance as a condition to payment. Miller v. Fox, 174 M 504, 571 P2d 804 (1977).

In order to constitute a contract, express or implied, one for the direct payment of money, within the meaning of the attachment statute, the obligation sued upon must be for a definite sum, unconditional, absolute, payable at a specific time, and free from intervening agencies or conditions; it must not be a collateral agreement or dependent upon any other agreement. Gilna v. Barker, 78 M 343, 254 P 169 (1927).

Where the contract made the basis of attachment proceedings does not specify the precise amount to be paid by defendant but points to an instrument which furnishes the measure of ascertaining defendant's liability, it is sufficient to meet the requirement of this section, that it must be one for the "direct payment of money" to warrant the issuance of a Writ of Attachment. Gilna v. Barker, 78 M 343, 254 P 169 (1927).

A contract whereby defendants leased to plaintiff certain mining property for the purpose of mining, plaintiff to receive from defendants 65% of the net proceeds, was one for the "direct payment of money", and the court erred in discharging an attachment on the ground that it was not. Gilna v. Barker, 78 M 343, 254 P 169 (1927).

An action by the buyer of an automobile to recover its purchase price with interest thereon from the date of sale because of failure of title in the seller was not one upon a contract for the direct payment of money, and therefore an attachment issued therein was properly dissolved. Heffron v. Thomas, 61 M 10, 201 P 572 (1921).

Attachment does not lie in an action by the buyer of hay at an agreed price per ton to recover damages from the seller because of the inferior quality of the hay delivered, the action not being one upon a contract for the direct payment of money. Beartooth Stock Co. v. Grosscup, 57 M 595, 189 P 773 (1920), distinguished in State ex rel. Barnett v. Reynolds, 68 M 572, 220 P 525 (1923).

An action to recover damages, unliquidated in character, upon hail insurance policies, under which total and partial losses were alleged, was not one upon contracts for the direct payment of money, and an attachment was properly dissolved. Carter v. Bankers Ins. Co., 58 M 319, 192 P 827 (1920), distinguishing Ancient Order of Hibernians v. Sparrow, 29 M 132, 74 P 197 (1903).

Direct Payment of Money — Guaranty Not Contract (prior to 1985 amendment):

A guaranty of repayment of a loan is not a contract "for direct payment of money" within the meaning of this section and therefore cannot support the issuance of a Writ of Attachment. Stensvad v. Miners & Merchants Bank of Roundup, 183 M 160, 598 P2d 1083 (1979). (Decided prior to 1985 amendment which added subsection (3).)

The word "direct" denotes absence of any intervening agency, medium, or influence, an unconditional and absolute obligation to pay money, and not a collateral agreement dependent or contingent upon some other agreement. The guaranty made by a machinery company to a finance company to which it assigned a conditional sales contract, that the purchaser would faithfully perform all of its conditions, was not a contract for the direct payment of money but one conditioned upon the purchaser's default, a problematical event, and the District Court properly dissolved Writ of Attachment. Gen. Fin. Co. v. Powell, 112 M 535, 118 P2d 751 (1941). (Decided prior to 1985 amendment which added subsection (3).)

A contract guaranteeing "the collection and payment of the within note" was not one for the direct payment of money within the meaning of the attachment statute and therefore an attachment issued in an action to enforce the guaranty was properly dissolved. Square Butte St. Bank v. Ballard, 64 M 554, 210 P 1889 (1922), distinguished in Baroch v. Greater Mont. Oil Co., 70 M 93, 225 P 800 (1924). (Decided prior to 1985 amendment which added subsection (3).)

Unconstitutional Application: The Writ of Attachment statute, as applied, was violative of the requirements of notice and opportunity to be heard guaranteed by the Due Process Clause of the United States Constitution. Williams v. Matovich, 172 M 109, 560 P2d 1338 (1977).

Judgment as Basis for Attachment: A New York divorce judgment is not a contract, express or implied, for the direct payment of money so as to qualify under this section. Gibson v. Gibson, 137 M 528, 353 P2d 344 (1960).

Secured Debts — Future Advances: A chattel mortgage, which by its terms stated that it was to be security for future advances, was security for a later loan so that attachment was not available in an action for default of a later loan. The chattel mortgage was plain and unambiguous and needed no construction, so that parol evidence which tended to vary or alter the terms of the written mortgage was required to be disregarded. First Nat'l Bank of Plains v. Green Mtn. Soil Conservation District, 130 M 1, 293 P2d 289 (1956).

Secured Debts — Real Property Contracts: In a contract for the sale of real property wherein there was provided a remedy for and security to the vendors for a breach thereof, this section precluded a rightful attachment and seizure of defendant's personal property. The contract was not one for the direct payment of money, and such payments due under the contract were secured by the provisions of the contract. Fraser v. Clark, 129 M 56, 282 P2d 459 (1955).

Surety Contract:

Where a surety is compelled to pay the principal's obligation, the law implies a contract on the part of the principal to reimburse his surety, and such a contract is one for the direct payment of money presenting a proper case for attachment proceedings. Kipp v. Paul, 110 M 513, 103 P2d 675 (1940).

A bond given in pursuance to Title 7, ch. 6, part 2, to insure the safety and prompt payment of county funds deposited by the County Treasurer, disregarding an unintelligible clause, was a contract for the direct payment of money, warranting the issuance of a Writ of Attachment against the property of the sureties in an action to recover thereon. State ex rel. Nauman v. Pondera Valley St. Bank, 77 M 1, 248 P 207 (1926).

An action by a County Treasurer to recover on a bond securing bank deposits of county funds is one on a contract for the direct payment of money, warranting the issuance of a Writ of Attachment against the property of the sureties. Jenkins v. First Nat'l Bank, 73 M 110, 236 P 1085 (1925).

An action by a surety for contribution from his cosurety is one on an implied contract for money paid by the former for the use and benefit of the latter, which the latter unconditionally and absolutely is required to pay, under 28-11-417(2), in a definite sum, namely, his proportion of the amount which plaintiff was required to pay on the undertaking; hence the action is one for the direct payment of money in which attachment may issue. Wall v. Brookman, 72 M 228, 232 P 774 (1925).

A bond in which the sureties unconditionally agreed to indemnify a County Treasurer for default of a bank to pay over to him on demand any funds he might have on deposit therein was a contract of surety and not of guaranty, by which they bound themselves to pay a fixed and definite sum not exceeding that named in the bond, namely, the amount on deposit. This was a contract for the direct payment of money, warranting the issuance of an attachment against the property of the sureties in an action on the bond. State ex rel. Barnett v. Reynolds, 68 M 572, 220 P 525 (1923).

An action against sureties on a bond, conditioned to be void if the principal performed his contract, is not an action on a contract for the "direct payment" of money. Ancient Order of Hibernians v. Sparrow, 29 M 132, 74 P 197 (1903), distinguished in Carter v. Bankers' Ins. Co., 58 M 319, 192 P 827 (1920), State ex rel. Barnett v. Reynolds, 68 M 572, 220 P 525 (1923), and St. v. Am. Sur. Co. of New York, 78 M 504, 255 P 1063 (1927).

Secured Debts — Worthless Security: Section 71-1-222 does not prohibit a personal action and levy of attachment by a mortgagee when the security has become valueless without fault on his part, and he is not required to first foreclose the mortgage and exhaust that remedy but may prove that the security is valueless in the attachment proceedings. Bailey v. Hansen, 105 M 552, 74 P2d 438 (1937).

Cause of Action Attached: A cause of action for personal injuries is not a "chase in action" such as may be classed as personal property, within the meaning of 25-13-501 and 27-18-407, and likewise does not constitute a "debt" as the term is used in 27-18-407 and is not subject to attachment before judgment. Coty v. Cogswell, 100 M 496, 50 P2d 249 (1935).

Support Obligations:

Contracts made by the wife for necessities under authority of 40-2-103, where the husband fails or refuses to furnish them, are his contracts, and the obligations arising thereunder are his obligations; the agency referred to above is statutory but the husband's obligations are contractual; therefore attachment may issue in an action to recover for necessities furnished the wife as upon contracts "express or implied, for the direct payment of money" within the meaning of this section. McQuay v. McQuay, 86 M 535, 284 P 532 (1930).

In an action by the assignee of claims against defendant to recover the reasonable value of medical and surgical attention and hospital care provided for his wife during her last illness, the claims were based upon contracts for the direct payment of money, authorizing attachment of funds belonging to defendant. (Mr. Justice Angstman, dissenting.) McQuay v. McQuay, 86 M 535, 284 P 532 (1930).

Effect of Judgment: Attachment may not issue upon a cause of action which has ripened into judgment. Harboldt v. Hensen, 75 M 512, 244 P 488 (1926).

Defects in Pleadings:

A mere defective statement of a cause of action readily susceptible of amendment is not a sufficient ground for the discharge of an attachment. Wall v. Brookman, 72 M 228, 232 P 774 (1925).

Where discharge of an attachment is sought on the ground that the complaint does not state a cause of action, the inquiry as to the sufficiency of the pleading is confined to the questions whether the action is upon a contract, express or implied, for the direct payment of money, whether it states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the defendant, and if not, whether it can be amended so as to state a cause of action, a mere defective statement of a cause of action not being a sufficient ground for the discharge of an attachment. Savage Tire Sales Co. v. Stuart, 61 M 524, 203 P 364 (1921).

Tort Action: The Legislature, by enacting the general attachment statute under which the writ can issue only in an action upon a contract, express or implied, for the direct payment of money, was not thereby deprived of its power to grant the remedy in an action ex delicto. Daley v. Torrey, 71 M 513, 230 P 782 (1924).

Complaint as Basis of Writ: The question whether an action is one in which a Writ of Attachment may issue under this section must be determined upon the complaint alone. Heffron v. Thomas, 61 M 10, 201 P 572 (1921).

Acceleration of Debt: The plaintiff is entitled to an attachment, upon making and filing the affidavit required by section 93-4302, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), where, under the terms of a mortgage given upon personal property to secure the payment of a note, he is authorized to take possession of the mortgaged property whenever he considers possession essential to the security of the note, and at his option to declare the full amount of the note due; and where he has exercised such option, the unpaid balance of the note after exhaustion of the security is an indebtedness due upon an express contract for the payment of money and will support an attachment of other property. Union Bank & Trust Co. v. Himmelbauer, 56 M 82, 181 P 332 (1919), distinguished in Bice v. Daffern, 88 M 479, 293 P 433 (1930).

Requisites for Attachment: The necessary requisites for an attachment are the pendency of an action on a contract, express or implied, for the direct payment of money and an outstanding valid summons issued in such action. Am. Sur. Co. v. Kartowitz, 54 M 92, 166 P 685 (1917); Duluth Brewing & Malting Co. v. Allen, 51 M 89, 149 P 494 (1915).

Secured Debts — Burden of Proof: To justify a Justice of the Peace in discharging an attachment on the ground that the debt was secured, defendant had the burden of showing that it was secured in a manner described in this section. State ex rel. Malin-Yates Co. v. Justice of the Peace Court, 51 M 133, 149 P 709 (1915).

Secured Debts — Conditional Sale: Where personalty is sold under an agreement that title shall remain in the seller until the purchase price is paid, possession being delivered to the prospective purchaser upon giving his note for the amount thereof, the seller did not have a mortgage, pledge, or lien to secure its claim against the purchaser, within the meaning of this section, so as to destroy its right to a Writ of Attachment in an action on the note. State ex rel. Malin-Yates Co. v. Justice of the Peace Court, 51 M 133, 149 P 709 (1915).

Contractual Action: Where part of the debt sued for is on an express and part on an implied contract, an affidavit simply stating the affiant's conclusion, namely, that the defendants are indebted to the plaintiffs in a specified sum, upon an express and implied contract for the payment of money, which is now due and payable, is a sufficient compliance with the requirement of the statute that the debt sued for be upon contract. Newell v. Whitwell, 16 M 243, 40 P 866 (1895).

Subcontractor's Lien Against Housing Authority Improper: A subcontractor's mechanics' lien (now construction lien) for utility installation on a Municipal Housing Authority project was improper. Even though Montana's mechanics' lien (now construction lien) laws are to be liberally construed to protect the rights of lien claimants and housing authorities may be sued, 7-15-4532 exempts Authority property from levy and sale by execution and 27-18-102 exempts it from attachment and execution. Bender v. Rookhuizen, 211 M 366, 685 P2d 343, 41 St. Rep. 1418 (1984).

Unconstitutional Application: The Writ of Attachment statute, as applied, was violative of the requirements of notice and opportunity to be heard guaranteed by the Due Process Clause of the United States Constitution. Williams v. Matovich, 172 M 109, 560 P2d 1338 (1977).

Liquor License: A retail liquor license is subject to attachment. Stallinger v. Goss, 121 M 437, 193 P2d 810 (1948).

Debts Due Defendant:

Under this section and 27-18-405, a debt is property which may be attached, and a levy upon it operates to impound it and in effect to place it in the custody of the law and beyond the control of its owner; hence where a debt due plaintiff was wrongfully attached in an action against another, the seizure amounted to a conversion. Englehart v. Sage, 73 M 139, 235 P 767, 40 ALR 590 (1925).

"All debts due such defendant" does not include judgments and promissory notes not due. Perkins v. Guy, 2 M 15 (1873).

Contract for Sale of Property: Where an owner sold his land, to be paid for in installments to run through a number of years and placed a deed in escrow to be delivered to the purchaser when all of the payments should have been made, but such land was attached before the last payment was made, the title still remained in the vendor and the land was, under this section, 27-18-402, and 25-13-501, subject to attachment at the time of the levy. Knapp v. Andrus, 56 M 37, 180 P 908 (1919), distinguished in Christie v. Morris, 119 M 383, 176 P2d 660 (1946).

Part 2

Procedure for Obtaining Writ

Part Attorney General's Opinions

Writs of Attachment to Be Issued Under Judicial Supervision: Montana recognizes the existence of common law, but only insofar as it does not conflict with specific statutory enactments. Montana has established statutory procedures for attaching property. The petition must be supported by an affidavit of the person seeking attachment. The petitioner must furnish a written undertaking to be approved by a court. Finally, a judge, not the petitioner, issues the Writ of Attachment. Prejudgment common-law Writs of Attachment are not issued under judicial supervision. This directly conflicts with the statutory requirements of Montana's prejudgment attachment laws. Thus, common-law Writs of Attachment issued without judicial supervision are of no effect in Montana. 38 A.G. Op. 115 (1980).

Writ of Attachment on Concert Proceeds — Pleading Prior Security Interest in Proceeds: Respondent obtained a Writ of Attachment in the proceeds of a rock concert to the extent of the appellant's alleged indebtedness to him. Appellant attempted to assert a third party's prior perfected security interest in the attached proceeds. The Supreme Court held that the third party must assert his own interest. The appellant lacked standing to raise the third party's interest as a defense to the attachment. The District Court's continuance of the Writ of Attachment over any liens which may possibly have been superior to the respondent's interest in the concert proceeds was proper. N. Dak. v. Newberger, d.b.a. Amusement Conspiracy, 188 M 323, 613 P2d 1002, 37 St. Rep. 1119 (1980).

Unconstitutional Application: The Writ of Attachment statute, as applied, was violative of the requirements of notice and opportunity to be heard guaranteed by the Due Process Clause of the United States Constitution. Williams v. Matovich, 172 M 109, 560 P2d 1338 (1977).

Writ of Attachment Issued Before Summons:

The Writ of Attachment may issue at the time of issuing summons or thereafter but not before. Am. Sur. Co. v. Kartowitz, 54 M 92, 166 P 685 (1917).

A Writ of Attachment which is issued before a valid summons is absolutely void and not merely voidable. Duluth Brewing & Malting Co. v. Allen, 51 M 89, 149 P 494 (1915); Burke v. Inter-State S & L Ass'n, 25 M 315, 64 P 879 (1901), distinguished in Jenkins v. Carroll, 42 M 302, 112 P 1064 (1910); Sharman v. Huot, 20 M 555, 52 P 558 (1898), distinguished in Kipp v. Burton, 29 M 96, 74 P 85 (1903).

Where the original summons was void because entitled in the wrong county, a so-called "alias summons" was not such in fact but was the first valid summons issued in the action and could not give legal effect to a Writ of Attachment issued and served before it was issued. *Duluth Brewing & Malting Co. v. No Contract for Direct Payment of Money — Lack of Justice Court Jurisdiction for Attachment: Plaintiff attended a party in a motel room. A fight erupted, and the room was damaged. Writ of Attachment Improperly Issued — Failure to Prove Debt and Disposition of Sale Proceeds: Where the plaintiff real estate brokers obtained a Writ of Attachment directed at tying up proceeds of a house sale in order to assure sufficient funds to pay their commission should they prevail in an action against the defendants for that commission, the court committed reversible error in refusing to dissolve the Writ. At trial the plaintiffs contended that no debt was owed until the property was sold. No evidence was presented that the sale had actually closed nor was any evidence, as opposed to conclusory statements, presented in the plaintiffs' affidavit, from which the court could reasonably conclude that the sellers or buyers intended to defraud the plaintiffs of their commission. *Mather v. Evidence of Malicious Attachment — Motion to Dismiss Properly Denied: In Spooner Constr. & Tree Serv., Inc. v. Maner, 2000 MT 161, 300 M 268, 3 P3d 641 (2000), it was held that plaintiff admitted no entitlement to any money from a logging agreement or any rental fees associated with defendant's use of a logging skidder. Nevertheless, plaintiff made no attempt to contact defendant to submit a bill, request payment, or discuss the logging contract, but instead, after disabling the skidder, plaintiff filed a lien against and later attached the skidder, with the intent to bid on it at a Sheriff's sale. Defendant presented both direct and circumstantial evidence that, without probable cause, plaintiff wrongfully attached the skidder with an improper motive and with reckless disregard for the facts, constituting a prima facie case of malicious wrongful attachment. Plaintiffs motion to dismiss was properly denied. Spooner Constr. & Tree Serv., Inc. v. Maner, 2003 MT 43, 314 M 268, 66 P3d 263 (2003).

Counterclaim Premised on Malicious Prosecution or Abuse of Process as Suit in Tort — Necessary Elements: A counterclaim alleging damages for breach of fiduciary duty, constructive fraud, creditor overreaching, and wrongful attachment did not meet the conditions of a counterclaim and third-party complaint on an attachment bond as provided in 27-18-204. The counterclaim was then premised upon the common-law notions of malicious prosecution or abuse of process, which is a suit in tort. To recover on such a suit, the elements of malice and want of probable cause must be present and proved. Absent evidence of these elements, the counterclaim was properly dismissed. Montgomery v. Hunt, 227 M 279, 738 P2d 887, 44 St. Rep. 1081 (1987).

Award of Costs and Attorney Fees — Use of Contingency Agreement: Defendants defaulted on a promissory note. The bank and defendants negotiated a new note and executed a security agreement. This note provided the debtor would be liable for collection costs, including reasonable attorney fees, upon default. Defendants defaulted, and the bank repossessed and sold the security. A deficiency remained. The bank retained an attorney under a contingency fee agreement to collect the deficiency, and suit was filed. Defendants' answer raised defenses necessitating research and investigation. The attorney discovered defendants owned unmortgaged land, which they were attempting to transfer. The bank attached the land and acted as its own surety and purchased a separate surety bond. The trial court included the bond in allowable costs and awarded $5,000 in attorney fees to the bank. The bond was required under 27-18-204, and under the note was clearly a cost of collection. The attorney estimated 50 hours of work. The trial court followed the guidelines of Crncevich v. Georgetown Recreation Corp., 168 M 113, 541 P2d 56 (1975), for awarding attorney fees and found that since he would be entitled to more under the contingency agreement, which was not binding on the court, the award was reasonable. The Supreme Court found that the trial court's findings and conclusions adequately supported the award. First Nat'l Bank v. Beckstrom, 200 M 323, 651 P2d 45, 39 St. Rep. 1778 (1982).

Writ of Attachment on Concert Proceeds — Pleading Prior Security Interest in Proceeds: Respondent obtained a Writ of Attachment in the proceeds of a rock concert to the extent of the appellant's alleged indebtedness to him. Appellant attempted to assert a third party's prior perfected security interest in the attached proceeds. The Supreme Court held that the third party must assert his own interest. The appellant lacked standing to raise the third party's interest as a defense to the attachment. The District Court's continuance of the Writ of Attachment over any liens which may possibly have been superior to the respondent's interest in the concert proceeds was proper. N. Dak. v. Newberger, d.b.a. Amusement Conspiracy, 188 M 323, 613 P2d 1002, 37 St. Rep. 1119 (1980).

Wrongful Attachment Action Improperly Dismissed: The District Court erred in dismissing defendant's complaint for wrongful attachment with prejudice since the court clearly decided that plaintiff was not entitled to the attachment and its order dissolving the attachment had become final. Audit Serv., Inc. v. Haugen, 181 M 9, 591 P2d 1105 (1979).

Unconstitutional Application: The Writ of Attachment statute, as applied, was violative of the requirements of notice and opportunity to be heard guaranteed by the Due Process Clause of the United States Constitution. Williams v. Matovich, 172 M 109, 560 P2d 1338 (1977).

Action on Bond: A defendant's cause of action under an attachment bond accrues only when judgment for him in the attachment action has been made, entered, and filed, so his recovery must be by a separate action on the bond rather than being included in the judgment in the original action. Yellowstone Livestock Comm'n v. Dupuis, 133 M 454, 325 P2d 691 (1958).

Estoppel of Surety: In an action on a bond given to procure an attachment, the obligor is estopped to deny the validity of the attachment proceeding, and on the Sheriff's return of an attachment levy, the obligor will not be heard to question the legality of the levy. Williard v. Fed. Sur. Co., 91 M 465, 8 P2d 633 (1932).

Judgment Dissolving Attachment: A judgment on the merits dissolving an attachment is conclusive that the writ was wrongfully issued, in a subsequent action on the attachment bond to recover the damages flowing from its levy. Williard v. Fed. Sur. Co., 91 M 465, 8 P2d 633 (1932).

Legal Expense in Defending:

Plaintiff in an action on an attachment bond may recover as damages the amount paid or contracted to be paid by him in bringing about a dissolution of the attachment. Williard v. Fed. Sur. Co., 91 M 465, 8 P2d 633 (1932).

Attorney's fees, paid or agreed to be paid for services rendered in having an attachment dissolved, fall within the purview of this section. Plymouth Gold Min. Co. v. USF&G Co., 35 M 23, 88 P 565 (1907).

Public Officers Attaching: Under 25-1-402, a County Treasurer is not required to furnish an undertaking on attachment in an action brought in his official capacity for the benefit of the county to recover on an indemnity bond against loss of county funds in a bank. Jenkins v. First Nat'l Bank, 73 M 110, 236 P 1085 (1925).

Signature of Undertaking: An undertaking in attachment need not be signed by the plaintiff. The statute is complied with if two sufficient sureties sign the undertaking on behalf of the plaintiff. If such undertaking is defective, a new one may be filed. Woodman v. Calkins, 13 M 363, 34 P 187 (1893); Hoskins v. White, 13 M 70, 32 P 163 (1893); McIntosh v. Hurst, 6 M 287, 12 P 647 (1887); Pierse v. Miles, 5 M 549, 6 P 347 (1885), distinguished in Deer Lodge County v. USF&G Co., 42 M 315, 112 P 1060 (1910).

Terms of Undertaking: An undertaking in attachment, in which the sureties contract to answer for the wrongful suing out of the attachment, is not a sufficient compliance with a statute requiring such undertaking to be conditioned for the payment of all damages that the defendant may sustain, if it is finally decided that the plaintiff was not entitled to the attachment. Pierse v. Miles, 5 M 549, 6 P 347 (1885).

Storage Costs Reasonable: County Sheriff, in seizing and storing a motorcycle pursuant to a writ of prejudgment attachment, incurred costs that greatly exceeded the amount the judgment creditor obtained upon execution sale. When the creditor questioned the reasonableness of the storage costs, the court properly determined the Sheriff acted reasonably to fulfill his duty to attach and safely keep the property pursuant to the writ of attachment. *Carl Weissman & Sons, Inc. v. Simulation of Legal Process: The practice of a collection agency of addressing to debtors, on regular legal paper used in court proceedings bearing the names of the parties as plaintiff and defendant, what was designated "final notice" containing the legend "original to the defendant, and duplicate to the clerk of the court", before any action was commenced, thus simulating legal process, was condemned in a proceeding in contempt for practicing law without a license. *State ex rel. Contents of Writ:

Where the complaint on which a Writ of Attachment is issued demands different amounts from several defendants, the Writ must conform to the complaint in that respect and direct the attachment of so much property of the respective defendants as will secure the amount alleged to be due from each one. State ex rel. Nauman v. Pondera Valley St. Bank, 77 M 1, 248 P 207 (1926).

The clerk is required to insert in the writ the amount of the plaintiff's demand or demands, in conformity with that cause of action or those causes of action, set out in the complaint, on which, as shown by the affidavit, plaintiff is entitled to attach. When the writ so states, the ministerial duty of the clerk is performed. Wilson v. Barbour, 21 M 176, 53 P 315 (1898).

Exempt Property: Authority is given to attach or levy upon property not exempt. When exempt personal property is mortgaged, it is still exempt as to all the world except the mortgagee. Cheney v. Caldwell, 20 M 77, 49 P 397 (1897).

Sufficiency of Writ — Third Person Subject of Attachment: This section, together with 27-18-401 and 25-13-501, establishes that service of a Writ of Attachment or Execution is not alone sufficient to create a lien when a debt owed by a third person is the subject of the attachment; also required is service of a notice that the debt owing is attached in pursuance of the Writ. If the Writ and notice are not served, the debt is not properly attached and no lien is created. It necessarily follows that if the property is not properly attached, the Writ of Attachment is a nullity. Phillips v. Loberg, 186 M 331, 607 P2d 561 (1980).

Time of Attachment of Lien: Property seized under a Writ of Attachment is impressed with a lien from the date on which the Writ was levied, and this lien continues in force until judgment. Moreland v. Monarch Min. Co., 55 M 419, 178 P 175 (1919).

Execution to Enforce Attachment:

The levy of an attachment on real property made at the commencement of an action on a promissory note creates a lien which may be enforced by execution where the levy was made and judgment obtained prior to the judgment debtor's death. Andrews v. Smithson, 114 M 360, 136 P2d 531 (1943).

In the absence of a statute so providing, the death of the defendant in an action in which his real property was attached, occurring after levy and before judgment, does not dissolve the attachment or render it nonenforceable. In re Stevenson's Estate, 87 M 486, 289 P 566 (1930), explained in Andrews v. Smithson, 114 M 360, 136 P2d 531 (1943).

Abandonment of Attached Property: Where personal property capable of manual delivery is abandoned by the keeper placed in charge of it and the Sheriff does not retake or attempt to retake possession, the abandonment is equivalent to a surrender of the property and the attachment is dissolved. Keith v. Ramage, 66 M 578, 214 P 326 (1923).

Substantial Compliance Required: The requirements that personal property capable of manual delivery must be attached by taking it into custody and that property of that description incapable of such delivery must be attached by leaving a copy of the writ with the owner or the person in control of it as his agent, together with a notice that it is attached in pursuance of the writ, must be substantially followed, the statute recognizing no equivalent or evasion; otherwise, the attaching creditor acquires no lien upon the property in satisfaction of any judgment he may thereafter obtain. *Keith v. Notice Together With Writ Required for Valid Attachment: Service of a Writ of Attachment alone is not sufficient to create a lien under 27-18-307 when the debt owed by a third person is the subject of attachment; also required is service of a notice that the debt owing is attached in pursuance of the Writ. Phillips v. Loberg, 186 M 331, 607 P2d 561 (1980).

Unconstitutional Application: The Writ of Attachment statute, as applied, was violative of the requirements of notice and opportunity to be heard guaranteed by the Due Process Clause of the United States Constitution. Williams v. Matovich, 172 M 109, 560 P2d 1338 (1977).

Equitable Rights: In garnishment the equitable title to the property sought to be reached will prevail over the bare legal title. Notice or knowledge by a county of the assignment by its Sheriff to a Deputy of his claim for mileage was not necessary unless it acted to the county's prejudice before notice. A judgment creditor who levies execution on all money due from a county to his debtor (here a Deputy Sheriff) acquires all the rights which the debtor had at the time of the levy to the extent of the creditor's claim. DeForest v. Cascade County, 112 M 599, 120 P2d 425 (1941).

Third Party Holding Property:

Where an attachment is made upon personal property in the possession of a third person (a garnishment), the property is in custodia legis irrespective of the answer made by the garnishee in the return, and thereby the garnisher acquires such a lien or interest in the property as will enable him to hold the garnishee liable for the property or its value. Fousek v. DeForest, 90 M 448, 4 P2d 472 (1931).

Where property of a defendant is held by one whose possession the plaintiff has no right to disturb, garnishment is the only method by which it may be attached. Noel v. Cowan, 80 M 258, 260 P 116 (1927).

Evidences of Indebtedness: The “credits” referred to in (1) of this section, providing the manner in which debts, credits, and personal property not capable of manual delivery must be attached, are something belonging to the defendant but in possession and under the control of the garnishee, such as promissory notes or other evidences of indebtedness which may be delivered to the Sheriff. Davis v. Claxton, 82 M 574, 268 P 787 (1928).

Levy on Cause of Action: A cause of action being personal property not capable of manual delivery, levy of execution upon it must, under 25-13-501, be made in like manner as upon a Writ of Attachment, which is, under subsection (1) of this section, by leaving a copy of the Writ and a notice that the cause of action is levied upon with the owner; hence where the copy and notice were delivered to the Clerk of the District Court and not to the owner, the levy was ineffective. State ex rel. Coffey v. District Court, 74 M 355, 240 P 667 (1925).

Debts Due Defendant: Under 27-18-102 and this section, a debt is “property” which may be attached, and a levy upon it operates to impound it and in effect to place it in the custody of the law and beyond the control of its owner; hence where a debt due plaintiff was wrongfully attached in an action against another, the seizure amounted to a conversion. Englehart v. Sage, 73 M 139, 235 P 767, 40 ALR 590 (1925).

Bulk Transfers: Under this section and 25-13-501, where plaintiff, after recovery of judgment against a mercantile corporation which had theretofore transferred its entire stock of merchandise in bulk to defendant without complying with the provisions of the bulk sales law, had served a copy of a Writ of Execution on defendant, together with a notice that any property in his possession or under his control belonging to the judgment debtor was attached pursuant to the Writ, a specific lien was created and fastened upon the property in favor of plaintiff sufficient to enable it to prosecute a creditor’s bill against the purchaser. Wheeler & Motter Mercantile Co. v. Moon, 49 M 307, 141 P 665 (1914).

Dismissal of Attachment: Under this section and 27-18-902, on the dismissal of an attachment, the Sheriff is bound to account to the successful defendant for money collected under the attachment from such defendant’s debtor. Michener v. Fransham, 33 M 108, 81 P 953 (1905).

Debts Shown by Books of Account: It is the duty of a Sheriff who has levied an attachment upon a stock of goods and has in his possession thereunder the books of account of the defendant to garnish those who appear therein as debtors, without first receiving a written notice from the plaintiff or his attorney. Mont. Mill. Co. v. Jeffries, 14 M 143, 35 P 908 (1894).

Attorney General’s Opinions

Sheriff’s Protection From Liability for Attaching Exempt Property: To protect himself from liability when attaching property, as required by this section, which may be rightfully claimed as exempt by the attachment debtor, a Sheriff may require an indemnity bond from the attachment creditor or may request the attachment debtor to file his exemption affidavit in the Justice Court issuing the Writ of Attachment for a determination of the exempt status of the property attached. 28 A.G. Tort Causes of Action: A cause of action for personal injuries is not a "chose in action" such as may be classed as personal property, within the meaning of 25-13-501 and 27-18-407, does not constitute a "debt" as the term is used in 27-18-407, and is not subject to attachment before judgment. *Coty v. Case Notes

Unconstitutional Application: The Writ of Attachment statute, as applied, was violative of the requirements of notice and opportunity to be heard guaranteed by the Due Process Clause of the United States Constitution. Williams v. Matovich, 172 M 109, 560 P2d 1338 (1977).

Mandamus to Compel Delivery: Where an attachment creditor failed for 10 days after notice and affidavit that horses attached at his instance were claimed by a third party to give the Sheriff a good and sufficient bond to indemnify him against any loss or damage by his retaining, the Sheriff must deliver them to the claimant, and failing to do so, mandamus lies to compel delivery. The question of ownership should not be litigated unless and until the requirement is complied with. State ex rel. Fiebrantz v. Armstrong, 114 M 212, 133 P2d 768 (1943).

Sureties' Liability: The liability of a surety is fixed by the terms and conditions of the contract made by him and may not be extended to matters not covered by the contract; therefore, sureties on an indemnity bond given to the Sheriff on refusal of a demand for the release of attached property to a third-party claimant pursuant to the provisions of this section were liable only for damages resulting from the attachment, seizing, levying, taking, or retention of the property under attachment and could not be held responsible for the wrongful conversion by the Sheriff of some of the property attached. McGinley v. Md. Cas. Co., 85 M 1, 277 P 414 (1929).

Action Against Sheriff:

The duty of a Sheriff who is sued in conversion for property attached and retained by him is to deliver the paper served on him to the plaintiff and pay no further attention to the matter. Gehlert v. Quinn, 38 M 1, 98 P 369 (1908).

Where the answer in an action against a Sheriff for damages for the illegal seizure of saloon fixtures and stock in trade denied plaintiff's claim of ownership, it was not necessary for the latter to show that he made a third-party claim, under this section, as a condition precedent to maintaining his action. O'Brien v. Quinn, 35 M 441, 90 P 166 (1907). See also Englehart v. Sage, 73 M 139, 235 P 767, 40 ALR 590 (1925).

Unconstitutional Application: The Writ of Attachment statute, as applied, was violative of the requirements of notice and opportunity to be heard guaranteed by the Due Process Clause of the United States Constitution. Williams v. Matovich, 172 M 109, 560 P2d 1338 (1977).

Waiver of Defects by Garnishee: A garnishee did not waive defects in the process by answering. There is no relation between the return made to the writ and the general appearance in court of a party to an action. Only a general appearance in court in a regular action waives defects in process. Merchants Credit Serv., Inc. v. Chouteau County Bank, 112 M 229, 114 P2d 1074 (1941), distinguished in Stokke v. Graham, 129 M 96, 281 P2d 1025 (1955).

Case Notes

Irregularities in Levy and Return: The recitals of the Sheriff's return on a Writ of Attachment are not made conclusive by statute, and the facts may be shown by other competent evidence, such as by affidavit of plaintiff filed at time an order of publication of summons was made. The attaching creditor's lien is dependent upon the levy, not the return, and the date of levy may be shown by other evidence. Failure to file return on Writ within the time prescribed by this section does not destroy its legal effect where no rights of third persons have intervened. Issuance of summons for publication may be shown by facts other than the record, and mailing of a copy to defendant may be shown by clerk's affidavit. Smith v. Hamill, 111 M 585, 112 P2d 195 (1941).

Methods of Defending Against Attachment

27-18-701. Right to hearing following seizure without notice — notice of right.

Case Notes

Specific Methods of Service as Governing Over General Methods: Where specific statutes such as 27-18-701 provide for the method of service, those specifics govern over the general rules set out in the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. *Taylor, Thon, Thompson & Peterson v. 27-18-711. Motion to discharge writ improperly issued.Case Notes

Unconstitutional Application: The Writ of Attachment statute, as applied, was violative of the requirements of notice and opportunity to be heard guaranteed by the Due Process Clause of the United States Constitution. Williams v. Matovich, 172 M 109, 560 P2d 1338 (1977).

Constitutionality of Attachment — Effect: The procedures of this statute do not operate to save the Writ of Attachment statutes from being violative of due process requirements as applied. Williams v. Matovich, 172 M 109, 560 P2d 1338 (1977).

Exempt Property:

Since the discharge of a Writ of Attachment involves a judicial determination that the Writ should not have been issued and since direction by plaintiff as to how and on what property levy shall be made does not amount to a discharge as to property not levied upon, it is immaterial on motion to discharge that he did not intend that levy should be made upon property not subject to attachment or in excess of defendant's liability as authorized by the Writ. Jenkins v. First Nat'l Bank, 73 M 110, 236 P 1085 (1925).

This section does not authorize discharge of an attachment on the ground that the proceeds of sale of homestead lands were exempt from seizure. Davis v. Bryant, 62 M 352, 205 P 209 (1922).

General Appearance by Defendant: Defendant's general appearance in an action does not defeat the right to move thereafter to discharge the attachment on the ground that it had been issued prior to the issuance of a valid summons. Duluth Brewing & Malting Co. v. Allen, 51 M 89, 149 P 494 (1915).

Partial Sufficiency of Affidavit: Where a Writ of Attachment has been issued upon an affidavit which is sufficient as to five of seven causes of action but insufficient as to the remaining two, a motion to discharge the whole Writ is properly denied. Wilson v. Barbour, 21 M 176, 53 P 315 (1898).

Grounds Stated in Motion: The notice of motion and motion provided for by this section should state the grounds upon which the motion is based. Omaha Upholstering Co. v. Chauvin-Fant Furniture Co., 18 M 468, 45 P 1087 (1896).

Merits Not Tried on Motion: An attachment may be dissolved for irregularities or imperfections in its issuance, not only apparent upon the face of the papers but upon other grounds, wherein it is made to appear that the issuance of the writ was improper, but it is not within the scope of the inquiry under a motion to dissolve to try the merits of the main action. Newell v. Whitwell, 16 M 243, 40 P 866 (1895).

27-18-712. Use of affidavits to support or oppose motion.Case Notes

Unconstitutional Application: The Writ of Attachment statute, as applied, was violative of the requirements of notice and opportunity to be heard guaranteed by the Due Process Clause of the United States Constitution. Williams v. Matovich, 172 M 109, 560 P2d 1338 (1977).

Deficient Oath on Affidavit of Attachment: Where an affidavit for attachment does not purport to have been made under oath or before an officer authorized to administer an oath, and a motion is made to discharge the attachment on the ground that no affidavit was presented at the time the writ was issued, it is not proper practice to present, in opposition to the motion, affidavits to the effect that the declarations contained in the writing were made under oath and that by inadvertence the officer omitted his signature, though such affidavits would be proper in support of an application, made under 27-18-713, to amend. Cont. Oil Co. v. Jameson, 53 M 466, 164 P 727 (1917).

27-18-713. Decision of court.Compiler's Comments

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Case Notes

Unconstitutional Application: The Writ of Attachment statute, as applied, was violative of the requirements of notice and opportunity to be heard guaranteed by the Due Process Clause of the United States Constitution. Williams v. Matovich, 172 M 109, 560 P2d 1338 (1977).

False Affidavit of Attachment: A Writ of Attachment based upon a fatally defective or erroneous affidavit is improper and irregular. Such Writ will be dissolved or discharged when the affidavit on which it is issued states that the obligation is unsecured, whereas it is in fact secured. First Nat'l Bank of Plains v. Green Mtn. Soil Conservation District, 130 M 1, 293 P2d 289 (1956).

Amendment of Affidavit or Undertaking:

The District Court may and should, on motion to discharge a Writ of Attachment because of a defective affidavit, in furtherance of justice permit amendment of the affidavit and deny the motion where the defect is readily amendable. Jenkins v. First Nat'l Bank, 73 M 110, 236 P 1085 (1925).

The procuring of an attachment is a proceeding within the spirit of the code, and, if such proceeding is defective, the same may be amended in furtherance of justice, like any other proceeding. Wilson v. Barbour, 21 M 176, 53 P 315 (1898); Herbst Importing Co. v. Hogan, 16 M 384, 41 P 135 (1895); Newell v. Whitwell, 16 M 243, 40 P 866 (1895); Muth v. Erwin, 14 M 227, 36 P 43 (1894); Joseph v. Mady Clothing Co., 13 M 195, 33 P 1 (1893); Magee v. Fogerty, 6 M 237, 11 P 668 (1886); Langstaff v. Miles, 5 M 554, 6 P 356 (1885); Pierse v. Miles, 5 M 549, 6 P 347 (1885).

Security Statement in Affidavit:

Where the affidavit for a Writ of Attachment originally recited that the debt sued on had not been secured, the court properly permitted the affiant to amend to the effect that while the debt had originally been secured, the security had become valueless without any fault of his and refusal to dissolve the attachment was proper. Hetrick v. Renwald, 73 M 426, 236 P 1089 (1925).

An affidavit on attachment stating that the debt "is not secured" instead of "has not been secured", as required by statute, though defective, was not void but subject to amendment under this section. Am. Sur. Co. v. Kartowitz, 59 M 1, 195 P 99 (1920).

Release and Discharge Distinguished: The "release" of an attachment authorized under the attachment statute refers exclusively to the levy of the writ, involves a ministerial duty on the part of the officer directed to make the release, and may be ordered by the party who caused the levy to be made. The "discharge" refers to the writ itself. It involves a judicial function that the party securing the writ cannot perform or procure to have performed by an officer for him. Nat'l Bank v. First Nat'l Bank, 71 M 242, 228 P 80 (1924).

Complaint Deficient:

If the attachment was improperly issued, it should have been discharged, and it was issued improperly if this action does not belong to the class of actions in which an attachment is authorized. Butler v. Peters, 62 M 381, 205 P 247, 26 ALR 560 (1922); State ex rel. Malin-Yates Co. v. Justice of the Peace Court, 51 M 133, 149 P 709 (1915).

An attachment is properly discharged where the complaint does not state a cause of action, though the affidavit for attachment does do so; the court must look to the complaint to ascertain whether a cause of action in contract, express or implied, is stated. Kyle v. Chester, 42 M 522, 113 P 749 (1911), distinguished in Am. Sur. Co. v. Kartowitz, 54 M 92, 166 P 685 (1917), and in Union Bank & Trust Co. v. Himmelbauer, 56 M 82, 181 P 332 (1919).

Amendment of Complaint: In view of the statutory liberality in permitting amendments to be made, the sustaining of a general demurrer (demurrer abolished, former Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., now superseded) to the complaint in a case where an attachment has issued, and granting the plaintiff time to amend, does not dissolve the attachment if the complaint can be amended so as to state a proper cause of action. Am. Sur. Co. v. Kartowitz, 54 M 92, 166 P 685 (1917).

Alternative Cases Covered: This section considers two classes of cases, one in which an attachment has been issued in an action which does not fall within the class of actions mentioned in 27-18-101, and the other, one in which the writ has been issued in a proper action but in which the proceedings to secure it have been irregular. State ex rel. Malin-Yates Co. v. Justice of the Peace Court, 51 M 133, 149 P 709 (1915).

Justice of the Peace: A Justice of the Peace must discharge an attachment if it appears that the writ was improperly or irregularly issued. State ex rel. Malin-Yates Co. v. Justice of the Peace Court, 51 M 133, 149 P 709 (1915).

Constitutionality — Prior Notice and Hearing: The nonpossessory attachment of a defendant's interest in real property does not deprive him of the use, possession, or alienation of his property, and there is not such a significant taking of a property interest as to require prior notice and a hearing prior to attachment. Bustell v. Bustell, 170 M 457, 555 P2d 722 (1976).

Appealable Order: Fact that motion was to vacate or release attachment rather than to dissolve the attachment would not prevent the order from being appealable. Stallinger v. Goss, 121 M 437, 193 P2d 810 (1948).

Common-Law Bond: If an undertaking places a greater burden on the surety than contemplated by this section and may therefore not be good as a statutory undertaking, it will nevertheless be sustained as a common-law bond. Sloan v. Young, 86 M 414, 284 P 131 (1930).

Surety's Liability: An undertaking for the release of attached personalty providing unqualifiedly that if plaintiff in the action in which the writ was issued shall recover judgment, the obligor will pay the amount thereof fixes an unconditional obligation upon the surety to pay the judgment irrespective of any defects or irregularities in the issuance or levying of the attachment. Sloan v. Young, 86 M 414, 284 P 131 (1930).

Officer to Demand Redelivery: The officer to whom the undertaking is given is the proper person to make the demand for the redelivery of the property. Driggs v. Harrington, 2 M 30 (1874).

Removal of Property From State: In an action brought against the sureties upon a statutory undertaking for the redelivery of attached property, no demand is required for the redelivery of the property when the property has been removed from the state by the defendant in the attachment suit and said defendant is insolvent and has left the state and has not place of residence or business therein and the sureties have been notified that the judgment, which was obtained in the attachment suit, remains unpaid. *Driggs v. Part 8Sale of Attached Property*27-18-801. Sheriff to sell perishable property.*Case Notes

Discretion of Sheriff: A sale of perishable property under attachment is made, before judgment, by the Sheriff on his own responsibility, under the authority conferred by this section; no showing is necessary, and no order of court need be made. *State ex rel. Depreciation in Value: Attached property that is depreciating in value may be sold before judgment, under an order of court, upon a proper showing made. State ex rel. Myersick v. District Court, 53 M 450, 164 P 546 (1917).

Interest of Parties Shown: It is only when attached property is sought to be sold, before judgment, under this section, that a showing as to subserving “the interests of the parties” is necessary; in such a case the authority to sell is dependent upon an order of court. State ex rel. Myersick v. District Court, 53 M 450, 164 P 546 (1917).

Title of Defendant: A court’s authority to order a sale of attached property before judgment is not affected by the fact that the defendants have no title; the court has power to order a sale of whatever interest they have. State ex rel. Myersick v. District Court, 53 M 450, 164 P 546 (1917).

Part 15

Attachment in Justice's Court

27-18-1501. Justice's authority to issue writ.

Case Notes

Certiorari — Proper Remedy — Lack of Justice Court Jurisdiction for Attachment: Plaintiff attended a party in a motel room. A fight erupted, and the room was damaged. The next day the owner of the motel brought an action in Justice Court against all persons present in the room. The complaint alleged liability on an implied contract basis. At the time the complaint was filed, the Justice Court issued an ex parte prejudgment attachment of plaintiff's pickup, which was impounded. At the hearing, plaintiff argued against the attachment, alleging it was not properly issued under the statute. The Justice Court upheld the attachment. Plaintiff filed a Writ of Certiorari in District Court, which was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the Justice Court's authority to issue a Writ of Prejudgment Attachment is subject to certain conditions precedent. Under 27-18-101 and 27-18-202, plaintiffs must show defendant is indebted to the plaintiff under a contract for the direct payment of money. The court found that the implied contract not to damage the room was not one for the direct payment of money, therefore, the Justice Court was without jurisdiction to order the attachment. A Writ of Certiorari may not be used to correct errors in a lower court's jurisdiction but to determine whether the lower court had and was acting within its jurisdiction. In a case such as this where there are conditions precedent to jurisdiction, a Writ of Certiorari is the proper remedy for reviewing jurisdictional facts such as whether the case involved a contract for the direct payment of money. The District Court erred in dismissing the petition. Buffalo v. Thiel, 213 M 280, 691 P2d 1343, 41 St. Rep. 2116 (1984).

Constitutionality: This section violated Art. VIII, sec. 20, 1889 Mont. Const. (similar to Art. VII, sec. 5, 1972 Mont. Const.), to the extent that it authorized a Writ of Attachment issued out of a Justice of the Peace Court to be directed to the Sheriff of any other county than that of the Justice. 16 A.G. INJUNCTIONS

Chapter Case Notes

Abuse of Discretion — Preliminary Injunction for Past Acts — Status Quo: In a case involving a 1984 agreement between a railroad and the state, which required the railroad to make per-car payments to a third party, the District Court abused its discretion by granting the state a preliminary injunction that restored the status quo as it existed in 1984, instead of the status quo that existed at the time the preliminary injunction was sought, in 2010. At the time the state requested a preliminary injunction, the railroad had stopped making per-car payments and the injury sought to be enjoined had occurred. Because the entire injury had already occurred, a preliminary injunction could not issue. St. v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2011 MT 108, 360 Mont. 361, 254 P.3d 561.

Not Within Scope of Preliminary Injunction to Determine Merits of Case: Defendants sought to subdivide their property. Plaintiffs filed for a preliminary injunction on grounds that if defendants were not immediately enjoined from proceeding with a boundary realignment, plaintiffs would suffer irreparable injury through loss of access. The District Court issued a temporary restraining order prohibiting defendants from pursuing the boundary realignment and from using a road to transport heavy equipment pending a show cause hearing. At the hearing, defendants informed the court that they had withdrawn their subdivision exemption application, rendering the boundary realignment issue moot. The court then denied plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction and dissolved the temporary restraining order. However, the court went on to address and resolve many of the issues that plaintiffs had raised in their complaint. The Supreme Court affirmed the denial of the preliminary injunction because plaintiffs failed to meet the burden under 27-19-201 but noted that the limited function of a preliminary injunction is to preserve the status quo and minimize the harm to all parties pending full trial, rather than to determine the merits of the case. Therefore, the District Court erred in making sweeping and final factual legal determinations following the hearing on the propriety of issuing a preliminary injunction, and the Supreme Court reversed and remanded for trial on the issues. Yockey v. Kearns Properties, LLC, 2005 MT 27, 326 M 28, 106 P3d 1185 (2005).

Supervision and Enforcement of Pre-1973 Water Decree by District Court — No Due Process Violation: Plaintiff brought a contempt and injunction action in District Court to prevent defendant from interfering with plaintiff's appropriation rights under a 1940 water decree. Following a bench trial in District Court, plaintiff's petition was dismissed and plaintiff was enjoined from interfering with defendant's diversion works and conveyance system. Following a determination of the source and flow of the water, the District Court also ordered that defendant allow a specific amount of water through the diversion system to plaintiff. On appeal, plaintiff contended that the permanent modification of the 1940 decree by the District Court in a contempt and injunction action violated plaintiff's due process rights. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not exceed its jurisdiction by supervising the distribution of previously adjudicated water, enforcing the 1940 decree, and filling in the pre-1973 decree with further delineations. Because the District Court did not permanently modify the 1940 decree, plaintiff's due process rights were not violated. Hidden Hollow Ranch v. Field, 2004 MT 153, 321 M 505, 92 P3d 1185 (2004).

Standard of Review of Grant or Denial of Injunction — Manifest Abuse of Discretion: For more than 100 years, the Supreme Court has applied two different standards of review when an injunction has been granted or denied. The first standard, applied in Nelson v. O'Neal, 1 M 284 (1871), was an abuse of discretion standard. Later, in Craver v. Stapp, 26 M 314, 67 P 937 (1902), a manifest abuse of discretion standard was introduced. To rectify the disparity, the Supreme Court decided that the high degree of discretion vested in District Courts to maintain the status quo through injunctive relief warranted application of the more appropriate deferential manifest abuse of discretion standard. A manifest abuse of discretion is one that is obvious, evident, or unmistakable. Nelson and any other cases that did not apply the manifest abuse standard were overruled to the extent of their inconsistency with this holding. Shammel v. Canyon Resources Corp., 2003 MT 372, 319 M 132, 82 P3d 912 (2003).

Failure to Follow Injunctive Order Regarding Use of Spotlights — Personal Representative Responsible for Compliance With Injunction: The District Court issued an order enjoining Robert Hanley from displaying blinking spotlights on his residence and from directing the lights toward the Laniers' residence because the act unreasonably interfered with the Laniers' peaceable enjoyment of their property. Following a bench trial, the court found that the lights no longer blinked, but noted that Hanley had not redirected the spotlights as directed and so held Hanley in contempt and awarded damages to the Laniers. Robert subsequently died, and his wife Joanne was substituted as personal representative of Robert's estate for any allegations in the Laniers' counterclaims. Joanne appealed the injunctive relief granted to the Laniers, contending that she was exempt from the provisions of the injunction because the injunction was directed only at Robert. The Supreme Court disagreed. As personal representative, Joanne was subject to the injunction. She participated and acted with Robert in failing to follow the directives regarding the spotlights and was not exempt from the order prohibiting the spotlights from being directed toward the Laniers' residence. Morton v. Lanier, 2002 MT 214, 311 M 301, 55 P3d 380 (2002).

Injunction in Arbitration Award Not Restrictive of Constitutional Right to Access Courts: The Langemeiers and Kuehls became involved in a dispute over a county road easement between their adjoining lands, and the dispute eventually was submitted to arbitration. The final arbitration award provided injunctive relief to the Langemeiers by prohibiting the Kuehls from commencing or prosecuting any further action or proceeding regarding the property or challenging the ownership of the parcel. The Kuehls complained that the injunctive language was so overbroad that it took property from them without due process of law and improperly restricted their constitutional right to access courts. However, the initial memorandum of understanding, the settlement agreement, and the final arbitration award all established that the Kuehls had no property interest in the disputed roadway, so they could not complain that they were deprived of the use of property that was not theirs to use. Further, the injunctive language only sought to restrain the Kuehls from contesting matters already decided and from pursuing repetitive claims previously resolved by the settlement agreement concerning property in which they had no interest. The Kuehls had already enjoyed access to the courts as the dispute wound its way through two arbitrations, approval by the District Court, and a Supreme Court appeal. Although the constitution guarantees every person access to the courts, it does not grant a license to relitigate a cause or to burden the resources of the courts with successive claims. Therefore, the injunction did not deny the Kuehls of the use of property or access to the courts, and the arbitration award was affirmed. Langemeier v. Kuehl, 2001 MT 306, 307 M 499, 40 P3d 343 (2001).

Cause of Action for Erection of Spite Fence Solely Intended to Injure Neighbor — Availability of Injunctive Relief or Nuisance Claim — Bordeaux Overruled: Kottas built a 200-foot long, 7 feet 3 inches to 7 feet 9 inches high wooden fence that obstructed Haugen's view. Haugen sought injunctive relief for removal of the fence, alleging that it was a spite fence. The District Court concluded that it was indeed a spite fence, but declined to issue an injunction or recognize any remedy under Montana law, citing Bordeaux v. Greene, 22 M 254, 56 P 218 (1899), in holding that a person with a legal right can enforce the enjoyment of that right without inquiry into motive. The Supreme Court noted the many changes in property law since 1899 and overruled Bordeaux, adopting instead the rationale in Sundowner, Inc. v. King, 509 P2d 785 (Idaho 1973). Sundowner rejected the older rule that erection of a spite fence is not an actionable wrong and held that a property owner cannot erect a structure for the sole purpose of injuring a neighbor, such as a spite fence, which is of no beneficial use to the owner but is erected and maintained for the purpose of annoying a neighbor. A spite fence gives rise to an action for both injunctive relief and damages and may also be addressed through a nuisance claim. The Supreme Court reversed for a determination of the proper remedy. Haugen v. Kottas, 2001 MT 274, 307 M 301, 37 P3d 672 (2001).

Failure to Enjoin Against Interference With Secondary Easement Rights Not Error: Engel asserted District Court error in failing to enjoin Gampps from interfering with Engel's use of a secondary easement to maintain an irrigation ditch running across the property of both parties. However, there was substantial evidence that Engel's access for routine inspections and maintenance was, and always had been, free and uninterrupted. Although failing to enjoin Gampps, the District Court nevertheless fashioned an order balancing Engel's reserved right for occasional access with Gampps' right not to be unreasonably burdened by Engel's secondary easement, so the District Court was affirmed. Engel v. Gampp, 2000 MT 17, 298 M 116, 993 P2d 701, 57 St. Rep. 96 (2000).

Attorney Fees Improperly Granted — Injunction Held Unlike Mandamus for Purposes of Fees: Wittmers purchased a manufactured home and moved it to a subdivision in Gallatin County. Newmans and others brought an action to restrain Wittmers from maintaining the home in the subdivision in violation of a restrictive covenant prohibiting mobile homes. The District Court issued the injunction and also awarded Newmans their fees and costs. The Supreme Court held that attorney fees were improperly granted because even though fees are awardable in a mandamus action, the remedy of injunction is unlike the remedy of mandamus. For that reason, no analogy can be made to mandamus cases awarding fees. Newman v. Wittmer, 277 M 1, 917 P2d 926, 53 St. Rep. 516 (1996).

Claim of Wrongful Injunction Invalid When No Injunction Issued: Defendant's counterclaim alleging wrongful injunction was properly dismissed by summary judgment absent the issuance of an injunction. St. v. Kandarian, 268 M 408, 886 P2d 954, 51 St. Rep. 1381 (1994), distinguishing Interstate Nat'l Bank v. McCormick, 67 M 80, 214 P 949 (1923).

No Showing of Irreparable Injury — Mandatory Injunction Inappropriate: The Department of Highways reconstructed the highway across Curran's property, including removing a bridge across Flat Creek and replacing it with twin culverts. During a flood the following spring, the culverts were blocked by ice and debris and the creek overflowed, covering 17 acres of Curran's grazing land, causing erosion, and leaving debris and gravel on the land that rendered the property unusable for its ordinary purposes. Curran's amended complaint waived damages, seeking only a mandatory injunction requiring the Department to replace the stream crossing in a manner that would abate the nuisance. The District Court denied the injunction and dismissed Curran's complaint, finding no act that would produce irreparable injury to justify a mandatory injunction. Relying on Riddock v. Helena, 212 M 390, 687 P2d 1386 (1984), the Supreme Court stated the theory that to allow a landowner injunctive relief would defeat a public entity's power of eminent domain. As a matter of public policy, the better alternative is to ensure compensation to a damaged landowner by requiring the state to purchase any property it takes for a public purpose. Citing Willhite v. Billings, 39 M 1, 101 P 168 (1909), the court found no basis for an order compelling the Department to reconstruct the stream crossing. If Curran could show that the crossing caused the inundation of his land, he might be entitled to compensation in an inverse condemnation action. However, if his loss could be compensated, it is not an irreparable injury, nor did the voluntary waiver of damages create an irreparable injury. Absent a showing of irreparable injury, Curran was not entitled to a mandatory injunction, the proper remedy being an action for condemnation or damages. Curran v. Dept. of Highways, 258 M 105, 852 P2d 544, 50 St. Rep. 450 (1993). See also Gabriel v. Wood, 261 M 170, 862 P2d 42, 50 St. Rep. 1246 (1993).

Real Estate Cases — General Rule: The general rule is that title to or right of possession of real estate may not be litigated in an action for an injunction. Erickson v. Hart, 231 M 7, 750 P2d 1089, 45 St. Rep. 388 (1988).

Used Poker Machine Licensing — Temporary Restraining Order and Preliminary Injunction Proper: It was reasonable for the District Court to issue a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction when the court found that plaintiffs risked losing their used, unmodified video poker machines unless they could buy modification kits or new machines within 3 days and kits were not available. Under these circumstances, plaintiffs would suffer irreparable injury if they lost use of the used machines or had to buy more expensive new machines. As none of the criteria of the court orders changed or contravened the Video Draw Poker Machine Control Law of 1985, the Department of Revenue was not prevented under 27-19-103 from executing its duties. Further, it was also proper for the court to structure terms of the final order to protect licensees and limit the time for them to come into compliance with the new law. Mont. Tavern Ass'n v. St., 224 M 258, 729 P2d 1310, 43 St. Rep. 2180 (1986).

Injunction Not Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law: In an appeal of the District Court's issuance of a Writ of Prohibition prohibiting the County Commission and the County Recorder from placing on an election ballot the question of retaining the charter form of county government, appellants claimed that prohibition did not lie because there were other plain, speedy, and adequate remedies available to petitioners. The Supreme Court affirmed the Writ's issuance, ruling that a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy was not afforded by: (1) the judicial review procedure set forth in 7-3-154; (2) the injunction procedure set forth in Title 27, ch. 19; or (3) the declaratory judgment procedure set forth in Title 27, ch. 8. Allen v. Madison County Comm'n, 211 M 79, 684 P2d 1095, 41 St. Rep. 1226 (1984).

Refusal to Enjoin Installation of Sewage System Held Proper: The District Court denied the Smiths' motion for a preliminary injunction restraining their neighbor, Sacks, from placing a new septic system into operation and restraining the Board of Health from issuing permits for any septic systems in the area of the Smiths' property. The Supreme Court affirmed the denial. The granting of a preliminary injunction is vested in the discretion of the District Court, and the Supreme Court will not interfere in the exercise of this discretion unless manifest abuse is shown. In this case, no abuse was shown since the evidence presented to the District Court did not clearly show that the Smiths' water well would be damaged if the sewage system were installed. Smith v. Ravalli County Bd. of Health, 209 M 292, 679 P2d 1249, 41 St. Rep. 716 (1984).

Master Zoning Plan (now Growth Policy) — Failure to Comply — Injunction Proper: A joint city-county master zoning plan (now growth policy) was adopted, recommending that the Cameron tract be zoned residential. The tract, located adjacent to the city, remained unzoned despite the master plan (now growth policy). Because the city-county master plan (now growth policy) had been adopted, the city could not extend its municipal zoning regulations beyond its boundaries. The owners of the tract planned to build a shopping center and requested the county to zone the tract commercial. The owners also sought a building permit from the city as provided by 50-60-106. Adjacent landowners sought to enjoin the county from zoning the tract as commercial and to enjoin the city from issuing the building permit. The Supreme Court held that the injunctions were properly granted because the plaintiff had no statutory basis to contest the county's proposed action to zone the tract commercial and it would have been inequitable to allow the builders to begin construction and then later deny them the right to build. Little v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 193 M 334, 631 P2d 1282, 38 St. Rep. 1124 (1981).

Attorney Fees Not Allowed Unless Final Judgment: The award of attorney fees in this case is premature as no final judgment has been entered on the merits of the underlying controversy in favor of respondents. No permanent injunction was awarded. No Writ of Mandate was issued. All other considerations aside, respondents are not entitled to a judgment for attorney fees without a final determination of the underlying controversy in their favor. Dreyer v. Bd. of Trustees of Mid-Rivers Tel. Co-op, Inc., 193 M 95, 630 P2d 226, 38 St. Rep. 972 (1981). See also Dreyer v. Bd. of Trustees of Mid-Rivers Tel. Co-op, Inc., 204 M 75, 666 P2d 1214, 40 St. Rep. 673 (1983).

Determination of Water Rights: Water rights should not be determined in a preliminary proceeding for injunctive relief. Eliason v. Evans, 178 M 212, 583 P2d 398 (1978).

Injunction Not Refused Because Corporate Defendant Offers Bond: An injunction pendente lite to restrain majority stockholders of a corporation from ratifying an illegal transfer of the corporate property and one that is ultra vires, made by the officers and directors, will not be refused because the corporation offers a bond. Forrester v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 21 M 544, 55 P 229 (1898).

Case Notes

Same-Sex Couples Seeking Declaratory and Injunctive Relief for Rights Afforded Married Couples — Relief Exceeds Bounds of Justiciable Controversy — Remanded to Allow Plaintiffs to Amend Complaint: Six same-sex couples filed suit against the state seeking declaratory and injunctive relief in order to receive protections and benefits equal to those provided to married couples under state law. Although they claimed that Montana's statutory scheme denied them several rights under Article II of the Montana Constitution — among them, the rights to equal protection, due process, and dignity — the plaintiffs did not seek a declaration that particular statutes were unconstitutional. The District Court granted the state's motion to dismiss, concluding that the matter exceeded the bounds of a justiciable controversy and that to grant the plaintiffs the broad injunction and declaratory judgment they sought would not terminate the controversy giving rise to the proceeding. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal but remanded the matter to the District Court to allow the plaintiffs the opportunity to amend their complaint to identify the statutes they claim violate their constitutional rights. Donaldson v. St., 2012 MT 288, 367 Mont. 228, 292 P.3d 364.

Abuse of Discretion — Preliminary Injunction for Past Acts — Status Quo: In a case involving a 1984 agreement between a railroad and the state, which required the railroad to make per-car payments to a third party, the District Court abused its discretion by granting the state a preliminary injunction that restored the status quo as it existed in 1984, instead of the status quo that existed at the time the preliminary injunction was sought, in 2010. At the time the state requested a preliminary injunction, the railroad had stopped making per-car payments and the injury sought to be enjoined had occurred. Because the entire injury had already occurred, a preliminary injunction could not issue. St. v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2011 MT 108, 360 Mont. 361, 254 P.3d 561.

Injunction Initiated by Application — No Right to Jury Trial: In an action to stop work based on the failure to obtain a building permit, the city may apply for an injunction with notice, and a complaint and a summons are not required. Under applicable statutes and because it is an action in equity, an injunction is granted by a judge and there is no right to a jury trial. City of Great Falls v. Forbes, 2011 MT 12, 359 Mont. 140, 247 P.3d 1086.

Recall Act — When Attorney Fees Available: Section 2-16-615 of the Montana Recall Act provides two procedural remedies, depending on the relief sought. If an official refuses to accept a proper recall petition, relief is by mandamus and attorney fees may be recoverable. If a legally insufficient recall petition has been accepted for filing, relief is by injunction and attorney fees are not available. Thus, the right to attorney fees depends on the underlying action and is not reciprocal. Further, the statute does not provide for relief by writ of prohibition. Braach v. Graybeal, 1999 MT 234, 296 M 138, 988 P2d 761, 56 St. Rep. 919 (1999), affirming Sheehy v. Ferda, 235 M 63, 765 P2d 722, 45 St. Rep. 2162 (1988).

Preliminary Injunction Denied Based on Mootness: A citizens' group applied for a preliminary injunction to prohibit a school district Board of Trustees from purchasing property without submitting the purchase to the voters. The District Court properly dismissed the application based on mootness because the property had already been purchased at the time of hearing, forestalling the prospect for meaningful relief. Awareness Group v. Bd. of Trustees, 243 M 469, 795 P2d 447, 47 St. Rep. 1333 (1990).

Parties Bound by Injunction: An injunction operates only in personam and affects only the parties to the action, and a party occupying the relation of privy who was not a party to the suit at the time of the rendition of the judgment cannot be held to obey the mandate of the injunction. Big Four v. Bisson, 132 M 87, 314 P2d 863 (1957).

Temporary Restraining Order:

An order which requires a person to refrain from a particular act for any period of time, no matter what its purpose, is an injunction, and this applies to a "restraining order". Sheridan County Elec. Co-op v. Ferguson, 124 M 543, 227 P2d 597 (1951).

A temporary restraining order is an injunction, the purpose of which is to keep matters in status quo until upon a trial of the merits the rights of the parties may be determined. Labbitt v. Bunston, 80 M 293, 260 P 727 (1927).

Affirmative Acts Ordered:

Though this section, defining an injunction, makes no provision for an order commanding affirmative action, a mandatory injunction may be issued in a proper case, such as involves nuisances or continuing trespasses of an irreparable nature or even where the act causing the injury has been completed before suit brought, for the purpose of putting complainant in status quo. Grosfield v. Johnson, 98 M 412, 39 P2d 660 (1935).

Where defendant, who had been enjoined from removing an old fence and erecting a new one on a dividing line claimed by him to be the proper one, nevertheless completed the new fence after the proceeding had been brought, the District Court had jurisdiction to order removal of part of the fence and replacement of it on the true line found by the court. Grosfield v. Johnson, 98 M 412, 39 P2d 660 (1935).

While it is only in rare instances that a court of equity will decree the mandatory form of injunction for any other purpose than to restore and maintain a condition which has been wrongfully changed, it will relax the rule in order to attain the ends of justice. Grosfield v. Johnson, 98 M 412, 39 P2d 660 (1935).

27-19-102. When final injunction may be granted to prevent breach of obligation.

Case Notes

Trespass to Land Established — Lack of Evidence on Summary Judgment Motion to Support Preliminary or Final Injunctive Relief: The District Court's interlocutory denial of preliminary or final mandatory injunctive relief was neither irreconcilable with its summary judgment declaring a trespass to land nor a manifest abuse of discretion. In support of a motion for summary judgment, the plaintiffs submitted only a one-page map prepared by a surveyor showing the boundary line encroachments, a copy of the defendants' letter accepting responsibility and apologizing for the encroachments, and the affidavit of one of the plaintiffs regarding the nature, discovery, and continued existence of the encroachments. Though this evidence was sufficient for the District Court to adjudicate the existence of continuing or recurring trespasses as a matter of law, the limited evidentiary record was insufficient to show a complete absence of any genuine issue of fact material as to whether the balance of the equities warranted the extraordinary remedy of a mandatory injunction compelling removal of the encroachments. This deficiency was particularly manifest based on the defendants' willingness to remove the encroachments upon determination or negotiation of a reasonable deadline for removal. Davis v. Westphal, 2017 MT 276, 389 Mont. 251, 405 P.3d 73.

Permanent Injunction Granted Based on Summary Judgment: The board of pharmacy had brought a series of successful actions against the defendant for the unlicensed practice of pharmacy. The District Court granted the board's motion for summary judgment and in addition issued a permanent injunction barring the defendant from practicing pharmacy. The defendant argued that the lower court could not issue a permanent injunction in conjunction with a summary judgment motion. The Supreme Court held that the District Court had outlined the grounds underlying its summary judgment ruling and therefore a permanent injunction could be granted on the summary judgment. Bd. of Pharmacy v. Kennedy, 2010 MT 227, 358 Mont. 57, 243 P.3d 415.

House Construction Properly Enjoined Because of Permit Violations: Injunctive relief requiring removal of a house from the property was properly granted to a city based on violations of development and site zoning permits regarding the general structure of the house and setback requirements and because the house could not be completed in a manner that would be historically appropriate and would not compromise the city's historical integrity. Further, it was not error for the District Court to summarily dismiss defendants' counterclaims that the city's ordinances were unconstitutionally vague because defendants were found to have violated development and site zoning permits, not city ordinances. Virginia City v. Estate of Olsen & Mason, 2009 MT 3, 348 M 279, 201 P3d 115 (2009).

Award of Injunction and Damages in Same Case — No Error: A subdivision developer was found to have been negligent and in breach of contract with the purchaser of two subdivision lots for failing to record a restrictive covenant prohibiting commercial use and for the resulting diminution in property value when another subdivision tenant operated an auto body shop in the subdivision. The jury held the developer liable for damages, and a permanent injunction was issued against the auto body shop operator, who complained that the award of both damages and an injunction resulted in double recovery. The Supreme Court disagreed. Montana law does not prohibit awarding money damages and an injunction in the same case. Both were justified here, and the award of both was affirmed. Rice v. C.I. Lanning, 2004 MT 237, 322 M 487, 97 P3d 580 (2004), followed in St. James Healthcare v. Cole, 2008 MT 44, 341 M 368, 178 P3d 696 (2008).

Permanent Injunction Inappropriate Limitation of Lawful Irrigation Practices: The Wellses built a home on property adjacent to land that had been flood irrigated by the Youngs for generations. Between 1994 and 1998, the Youngs' land was irrigated three times, and on each occasion, the Wellses experienced flooding in the crawl space of their home. The Wellses sought damages in excess of $80,000 based on tort theories of negligence, nuisance, and trespass. The District Court reasoned that because the irrigation practices predated the construction of the Wellses' home, they could not recover damages or recover on their trespass claim under 85-7-2212. The court also concluded that the nuisance claim was barred by 27-30-101. The court held that the Youngs breached the general obligation imposed by 28-1-201 because their irrigation practices caused immediate, irreparable, and substantial harm to the Wellses' home, but the negligence claim was disposed of because the Wellses failed to establish that the irrigation practiced breached the standard of care of a reasonable farm irrigator engaged in flood irrigation. Nevertheless, the District Court permanently enjoined the Youngs from irrigating their property because future irrigation without modification of the head ditch would result in an unreasonable and substantial risk of continuing harm and irreparable injury to the Wellses' property. The Youngs moved to vacate the injunction based on the determination that their irrigation practices were lawful, but the motion was denied, so the Youngs appealed. The Supreme Court examined the record for abuse of discretion, noting that a District Court must find a breach of an obligation by the party sought to be enjoined before imposing a permanent injunction. The District Court's general finding that the Youngs breached the duty imposed under 28-1-201 conflicted with the specific findings that the Youngs did not trespass or create a nuisance and conformed to the applicable standard of care. Absent a specific breach of obligation, the District Court abused its discretion in issuing a permanent injunction enjoining the Youngs from engaging in lawful flood irrigation practices. Wells v. Young, 2002 MT 102, 309 M 419, 47 P3d 809 (2002), distinguishing Madison Fork Ranch v. L&B Lodge Pole Timber Prod., 189 M 292, 615 P2d 900 (1980).

Interpleader Purporting to Release Potentially Liable Individuals Remanded for Clarification That Only Insurer Released Upon Payment of Policy Limits: The District Court granted an insurer's request in a prayer for interpleader for an order "enjoining and restraining each and all of the defendants from instituting or prosecuting further any proceeding on account of the incident or the insurance policy". Defendants claimed that the order infringed on their right to seek further relief from other potentially liable persons individually after the maximum policy limits were distributed. The Supreme Court noted that the measure of damages for negligence, notwithstanding available insurance proceeds, is the amount that will compensate the injured for all detriment proximately caused, but in this instance, it was not clear whether the insurer specifically requested additional relief for other parties or intended such a comprehensive exclusion of remedies. Pursuant to the principles of subject matter jurisdiction, the District Court should have released only the insurer from further claims, not the other potentially liable individuals involved. The case was remanded for a clarification of the order. Infinity Ins. Co. v. Dodson, 2000 MT 287, 302 M 209, 14 P3d 487, 57 St. Rep. 1196 (2000).

Damage to Irrigation Ditch: Under the provisions of 70-17-112, defendants, owners of adjoining land, owed plaintiffs an obligation to refrain from impairing an irrigation ditch easement. The District Court did not err in granting plaintiffs a permanent injunction and in awarding damages, costs, and attorney fees. Butler v. Germann, 251 M 107, 822 P2d 1067, 48 St. Rep. 1083 (1991).

Improper to Issue Injunction if Contract Obligation Cannot Be Specifically Enforced: Contract between the parties dealt with present and future obligations concerning the construction of a sewage treatment facility and the handling of wastes. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the lower court's granting of an injunction on the grounds that the performance required under the contract was not clear enough to allow for specific performance. Therefore, it was not sufficiently certain to warrant the issuing of an injunction. Westland Enterprises, Inc. v. Boyne USA, Inc., 237 M 186, 772 P2d 309, 46 St. Rep. 724 (1989).

Refusal to Enjoin Installation of Sewage System Held Proper: The District Court denied the Smiths' motion for a preliminary injunction restraining their neighbor, Sacks, from placing a new septic system into operation and restraining the Board of Health from issuing permits for any septic systems in the area of the Smiths' property. The Supreme Court affirmed the denial. The granting of a preliminary injunction is vested in the discretion of the District Court, and the Supreme Court will not interfere in the exercise of this discretion unless manifest abuse is shown. In this case, no abuse was shown since the evidence presented to the District Court did not clearly show that the Smiths' water well would be damaged if the sewage system were installed. Smith v. Ravalli County Bd. of Health, 209 M 292, 679 P2d 1249, 41 St. Rep. 716 (1984).

Injunction to Enforce Agreement Improper When Agreement Contained Remedy for Breach: A tender of stock containing an agreement not to compete contained a clear provision setting forth an appropriate remedy upon breach, which was a reduction of one-third in the stock price. Injunction was not a proper remedy to enforce the agreement because the agreement provided an adequate remedy in law. Although the agreement didn't expressly limit available remedies to those in the agreement, the court held that such limitation was not necessary because allowing injunctive relief would have nullified the remedy agreement agreed to by the parties, contrary to the intentions of the parties. Foster v. Realty Title Co., Inc., 209 M 183, 680 P2d 323, 41 St. Rep. 630 (1984).

Injunction Not Allowed When Adequate Remedy Available: Injunction was not allowed employees of defendant railroad when the latter attempted to move a home terminal because there was no convincing showing of any unlawful act and, if there were, a remedy in damages was plain, speedy, and adequate. Hamblin v. Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pac. RR., 34 St. Rep. 1048 (1977) (apparently not reported in Montana Reports).

Exhaustion of Statutory Administrative Remedies: When the Department of Revenue was outside its statutory authority in attempting to implement a nonuniform and discriminatory appraisal, taxpayers were not required to exhaust statutory administrative remedies. Larson v. Dept. of Revenue, 166 M 449, 534 P2d 854 (1975).

Case Notes

No Injunction for Ground Water Pumping Violation When Water Use Permit Granted — Request for Attorney Fees Moot: Defendant water and wastewater system operator was granted a provisional permit to pump ground water to service various businesses and residences in a water district, conditioned upon final state approval. However, defendant began pumping ground water before final approval was granted, and plaintiffs sought an injunction to stop the pumping and sought attorney fees in connection with the request for injunctive relief. Defendant moved for summary dismissal on grounds that plaintiffs did not have standing to enforce the Montana Water Use Act. The District Court agreed and dismissed plaintiffs' complaint, and plaintiffs appealed. About 2 weeks before the appeal was filed, the state granted final approval of defendant's permit. The Supreme Court held that issuance of the final permit rendered moot plaintiffs' request for injunctive relief and for attorney fees as well, including attorney fees under the private attorney general doctrine. The District Court was affirmed. Faust v. Util. Solutions, LLC, 2007 MT 326, 340 M 183, 173 P3d 1183 (2007).

Prohibition on Use of Injunction to Enforce Negative Covenants in Personal Services Contracts: Plaintiff broadcasting company had exclusive rights to broadcast Montana State University-Bozeman (MSU) athletic contests, and at the request of the university, plaintiff entered an exclusive contract with the MSU football coach for broadcast rights for a 1-hour program during football season, in addition to several commercials. The university subsequently sought bids for a new broadcast contract, and plaintiff notified the university that there was a potential conflict concerning the contract with the coach. The university ultimately contracted with another broadcasting company and notified the coach that he was expected to provide interviews with the new company. Plaintiff then sought a temporary restraining order restricting the coach from performing services elsewhere during the term of the contract. The request was denied, and plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Subsection (5) of this section, coupled with the specific contract enforcement prohibition in 27-1-412(1), prohibits the use of injunctive relief to enforce negative covenants contained in personal services contracts that prevent a party from performing services elsewhere during the life of the contract, and Montana courts may not enjoin the violation of a contract when specific performance is barred by Montana law. Reier Broadcasting Co., Inc. v. Kramer, 2003 MT 165, 316 M 301, 72 P3d 944 (2003). See also Anderson v. Neal Institutes Co., 173 P 779 (Calif. App. 1918), and Titus v. Superior Court, 368 P2d 874 (Ariz. 1962).

Enforcement of Fee Shooting Ban Improperly Enjoined — No Challenge to Constitutionality of Initiative Measure No. 143: In November 2000, voters enacted Initiative Measure No. 143, which included a ban on fee shooting of animals on alternative livestock ranches. Spoklie was granted a preliminary injunction prohibiting the state from interfering with the sale of alternative livestock to third persons, even if the third persons subsequently shot the animals at the alternative livestock ranch. The state and intervenors moved to dissolve the injunction, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Spoklie clearly considered the right of third persons to harvest elk at an alternative livestock ranch to be an important part of the consideration received in exchange for fees paid, but the fee shooting arrangement is exactly what is prohibited by 87-4-414, as amended by the initiative. The preliminary injunction interfered with the state's enforcement of 87-4-414, a statute enacted for the public benefit, and was therefore prohibited under this section. Further, Spoklie's argument that an injunction was proper upon a showing of irreparable harm, as stated in dicta in The New Club Carlin, Inc. v. Billings, 237 M 194, 772 P2d 303 (1989), was also misplaced. As set out in State ex rel. Freebourn v. District Court, 85 M 439, 279 P 234 (1929), courts are prohibited from issuing injunctions to prevent the execution of a public statute by officers of the law for the public benefit. The only exception is when a statute or ordinance is unconstitutional or otherwise invalid and when, in the attempt to enforce it, there is a direct invasion of property rights resulting in irreparable injury. Spoklie neither alleged nor demonstrated that Initiative Measure No. 143 or 87-4-414 was unconstitutional; therefore, the District Court erred as a matter of law when it enjoined the state's execution of 87-4-414. The order denying the motion to dissolve the injunction was reversed. Spoklie v. Dept. of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks, 2002 MT 228, 311 M 427, 56 P3d 349 (2002).

Right as Corporate Director Unsubstantiated — Injunction Properly Denied: Plaintiff, once the sole shareholder and director of Electronic Parts, Inc. (EPI), sold all interest in the corporation pursuant to a stock redemption agreement. When the director of EPI died, plaintiff sought two injunctions, alleging that as the sole remaining director of EPI, plaintiff was entitled to terminate EPI's legal counsel, to prohibit officers, agents, and employees from altering EPI documents, to inspect and review corporate records, and to prevent a shareholders' meeting. When the District Court denied both injunctions, plaintiff appealed, alleging that the court abused its discretion. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that the lower court's finding that the evidence did not support plaintiff's claim of directorship was not clearly erroneous. As a result, plaintiff had no right to terminate EPI's legal counsel, to inspect records, or to enjoin a shareholders' meeting. Smith v. Electronic Parts, Inc., 274 M 252, 907 P2d 958, 52 St. Rep. 1215 (1995). See Shammel v. Canyon Resources Corp., 2003 MT 372, 319 M 132, 82 P3d 912 (2003), in which a manifest abuse of discretion standard was adopted for review of granting or denying an injunction.

No Property Interest or Right to Teacher Tenure — Denial of Injunction Proper: Because Talley did not have a property interest in his position as a part-time community college instructor or a right to tenure under Montana law, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying a request for both injunctive relief and rehire after Talley's term contract was not renewed. Talley v. Flathead Valley Community College, 259 M 479, 857 P2d 701, 50 St. Rep. 889 (1993). See Shammel v. Canyon Resources Corp., 2003 MT 372, 319 M 132, 82 P3d 912 (2003), in which a manifest abuse of discretion standard was adopted for review of granting or denying an injunction.

No Showing of Irreparable Injury — Mandatory Injunction Inappropriate: The Department of Highways reconstructed the highway across Curran's property, including removing a bridge across Flat Creek and replacing it with twin culverts. During a flood the following spring, the culverts were blocked by ice and debris and the creek overflowed, covering 17 acres of Curran's grazing land, causing erosion, and leaving debris and gravel on the land that rendered the property unusable for its ordinary purposes. Curran's amended complaint waived damages, seeking only a mandatory injunction requiring the Department to replace the stream crossing in a manner that would abate the nuisance. The District Court denied the injunction and dismissed Curran's complaint, finding no act that would produce irreparable injury to justify a mandatory injunction. Relying on Riddock v. Helena, 212 M 390, 687 P2d 1386 (1984), the Supreme Court stated the theory that to allow a landowner injunctive relief would defeat a public entity's power of eminent domain. As a matter of public policy, the better alternative is to ensure compensation to a damaged landowner by requiring the state to purchase any property it takes for a public purpose. Citing Wilhite v. Billings, 39 M 1, 101 P 168 (1909), the court found no basis for an order compelling the Department to reconstruct the stream crossing. If Curran could show that the crossing caused the inundation of his land, he might be entitled to compensation in an inverse condemnation action. However, if his loss could be compensated, it is not an irreparable injury, nor did the voluntary waiver of damages create an irreparable injury. Absent a showing of irreparable injury, Curran was not entitled to a mandatory injunction, the proper remedy being an action for condemnation or damages. Curran v. Dept. of Highways, 258 M 105, 852 P2d 544, 50 St. Rep. 450 (1993). See also Gabriel v. Wood, 261 M 170, 862 P2d 42, 50 St. Rep. 1246 (1993).

Construction Contracts Generally Not Subject to Specific Enforcement: Kenneys, a contractor, obtained a permanent injunction against Park County enjoining the county from interfering with Kenneys' contract for sludge removal. The Supreme Court dissolved the injunction on the basis that construction contracts generally cannot be specifically enforced because performance would constitute a personal service approximating involuntary servitude. Monetary damages provide an adequate remedy. State ex rel. Park County v. District Court, 253 M 331, 833 P2d 210, 49 St. Rep. 575 (1992).

Money Damages Not Irreparable Harm — Injunction Denied: Employees of a bar were arrested for violating a city ordinance that prohibits nude dancing in establishments selling alcoholic beverages. The bar owners sought a preliminary injunction that was denied by the trial court. The Supreme Court held that under this section, an injunction cannot be granted to prevent the execution of a public statute for the public benefit without a showing of irreparable harm or a violation of a constitutional right as required by 27-19-201. Money damages are not considered to be irreparable harm because recovery of money damages is available in an action at law without resort to equity. New Club Carlin, Inc. v. Billings, 237 M 194, 772 P2d 303, 46 St. Rep. 731 (1989), followed in Dicken v. Shaw, 255 M 231, 841 P2d 1126, 49 St. Rep. 914 (1992), and clarified in Spoklie v. Dept. of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks, 2002 MT 228, 311 M 427, 56 P3d 349 (2002), to the extent that a mere showing of irreparable injury is not sufficient to overcome subsection (4) of this section, and the only exception to the general rule that courts are prohibited from issuing injunctions to prevent the execution of a public statute by officers of the law for the public benefit is when a statute or ordinance is unconstitutional or otherwise invalid and when, in the attempt to enforce it, there is a direct invasion of property rights resulting in irreparable injury.

Improper to Issue Injunction if Contract Obligation Cannot Be Specifically Enforced: Contract between the parties dealt with present and future obligations concerning the construction of a sewage treatment facility and the handling of wastes. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the lower court's granting of an injunction on the grounds that the performance required under the contract was not clear enough to allow for specific performance. Therefore, it was not sufficiently certain to warrant the issuing of an injunction. Westland Enterprises, Inc. v. Boyne USA, Inc., 237 M 186, 772 P2d 309, 46 St. Rep. 724 (1989).

Used Poker Machine Licensing — Temporary Restraining Order and Preliminary Injunction Proper: It was reasonable for the District Court to issue a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction when the court found that plaintiffs risked losing their used, unmodified video poker machines unless they could buy modification kits or new machines within 3 days and kits were not available. Under these circumstances, plaintiffs would suffer irreparable injury if they lost use of the used machines or had to buy more expensive new machines. As none of the criteria of the court orders changed or contravened the Video Draw Poker Machine Control Law of 1985, the Department of Revenue was not prevented under 27-19-103 from executing its duties. Further, it was also proper for the court to structure terms of the final order to protect licensees and limit the time for them to come into compliance with the new law. Mont. Tavern Ass'n v. St., 224 M 258, 729 P2d 1310, 43 St. Rep. 2180 (1986).

Department Actions Not Arbitrary and Capricious — Injunction Not Proper: In 1950, the Department of State Lands (now Department of Natural Resources and Conservation) leased a parcel of grazing land to Jeppeson's father. The lease was renewed to the father's estate in 1960. In 1970, the lease was changed to Jeppeson's name. Jeppeson paid his lease rent late in 1973 and not at all in 1974. The lease was canceled for nonpayment, and the land remained unleased for 2 years. In 1976, the Department leased to someone who assigned the lease to Jeppeson. Jeppeson was late in his payment in 1977 and in 1978 lost the lease temporarily for paying late. In 1980, no rent was paid and the lease was canceled. The parcel was not re-leased until 1981 when Hawks leased it. Hawks agreed with Jeppeson to assign the lease to him. Application for approval of the assignment was made to the Department on January 29, 1982. The Department wrote to Jeppeson in late March stating that it was hesitant to approve the assignment due to Jeppeson's poor paying record. No one paid the 1982 payment that was due on April 1, 1982, and on April 22, 1982, the Department notified Hawks that the lease was canceled. The Supreme Court ruled that there was no evidence of arbitrary and capricious action on the part of the Department so as to justify injunctive relief, and the restrictions on issuance of injunctions contained in this section would not allow a court to enjoin the Department from re-leasing the land. Jeppeson v. St., 205 M 282, 667 P2d 428, 40 St. Rep. 1272 (1983).

Standing: Injunctive relief to enjoin violations of the Montana Environmental Policy Act, Title 75, ch. 1, by the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Department of Environmental Quality) in the approval of a development was proper where injury to individual rights and public rights was shown. Mont. Wilderness Ass'n v. Bd. of Health & Environmental Sciences, 171 M 477, 559 P2d 1157 (1976).

Application to Cases Where There Is Illegal Tax Appraisal: This section does not apply to cases where an unconstitutional and illegal tax appraisal is being used since it was the intent of the Legislature to provide for the retention of equitable remedies in taxation cases where statutory remedies prove inadequate. Larson v. Dept. of Revenue, 166 M 449, 534 P2d 854 (1975).

Enforcement of Public Statute:

Subsection (4) does not prohibit injunctive relief against implementation of an appraisal where such implementation would be illegal and unauthorized. Larson v. Dept. of Revenue, 166 M 449, 534 P2d 854 (1975), overruling State ex rel. Keast v. Krieg, 145 M 521, 402 P2d 405 (1965).

District Court acted beyond its jurisdiction by issuing injunction to prevent Board of Equalization (now the Department of Revenue) from revising grading and valuation of nonirrigated farmland pursuant to Title 15, ch. 7. State ex rel. Lord v. District Court, 154 M 269, 463 P2d 323 (1969).

Where the Industrial Accident Board (now Division of Workers' Compensation) issued an order directing a coal mine to erect a washhouse for its employees in compliance with section 50-435, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), the coal mine cannot obtain an injunction to enjoin enforcement of the order based on facts that they can assert as a defense to any proceeding brought by the Board. Jeffries Coal Co. v. Indus. Accident Bd., 126 M 411, 252 P2d 1046 (1952).

An injunction may not be granted to prevent the enforcement of the criminal law. State ex rel. Olsen v. Horsky, 122 M 547, 206 P2d 1157 (1949).

The fact that a County Attorney, alleged to be threatening to institute a criminal proceeding, is insolvent and therefore cannot respond in damages for the injury done by the prosecution does not authorize injunctive relief; nor does the writ lie to restrain proceedings for the seizure or forfeiture of property used in violation of law or to enjoin one from applying for an injunction. Under this section courts are prohibited from issuing injunctions to prevent the execution of a public statute by officers of the law for the public benefit. State ex rel. Freebourn v. District Court, 85 M 439, 279 P 234 (1929).

Discretionary Appointment: Taxpayer was not entitled to an injunction in action questioning the qualifications of supervisor appointed by Board of Railroad Commissioners (now the Public Service Commission) in the proper exercise of its discretion. Steel v. Bd. of Railroad Comm'rs, 144 M 432, 397 P2d 101 (1964).

Political Questions: A private citizen who does not show that he will be injured in any property or civil right cannot invoke equitable cognizance of a purely political question; and where plaintiff's complaint, in an action seeking an injunction preventing the Secretary of State from certifying nominees for a vacancy in the Board of Railroad Commissioners (now the Public Service Commission), shows that his only interest is as a taxpaying, private citizen and prospective absentee voter, he is without standing or capacity to maintain the suit. State ex rel. Mitchell v. District Court, 128 M 325, 275 P2d 642 (1954).

Real Estate Cases: Title or right to possession to real estate may not be litigated in a suit for an injunction. Where there was a lease which was allegedly breached, the plaintiff is not entitled to a restraining order preventing the defendants from occupying the land pending a determination of the case on its merits since it was found that the relationship of the parties was one of landlord and tenant and was not a cropping agreement. Davis v. Burton, 126 M 137, 246 P2d 236 (1952), followed in Erickson v. Hart, 231 M 7, 750 P2d 1089, 45 St. Rep. 388 (1988). See also Jeppeson v. St., 205 M 282, 667 P2d 428, 40 St. Rep. 1272 (1983).

Judicial Proceedings: A court of equity will not enjoin the prosecution of an action at law where another court has already acquired jurisdiction of the subject matter unless such restraint is necessary to prevent a multiplicity of such proceedings or unless there is some equitable circumstance in which a party cannot avail himself at law. Lutey Bros. v. Jackson, 55 M 556, 179 P 459 (1919).

Labor Disputes: Subsection (8) adds nothing to the preexisting law, since there never has been, in theory at least, one rule for the wage earner and another for the rest of the community; yet it must be taken as an expression by the Legislature of the belief that injunctions have been granted in labor disputes when, under exactly similar conditions, they would not have been granted in controversies of a different character, and of an intention to forestall this possibility in this state. Empire Theatre Co. v. Cloke, 53 M 183, 163 P 107 (1917).

Bond Issues: Since there pertains to every citizen and taxpayer the right to sue to enjoin the issue of bonds by the state under legislation which he alleges to be invalid, it is idle for the state to oppose such a suit on the ground that to grant the injunction will prevent the execution by officers of the law of a statute made for the public good. Hill v. Rae, 52 M 378, 158 P 826 (1916).

Condemnation Proceedings: Under subsection (1), injunction does not lie to restrain condemnation proceedings, in the absence of a showing that the restraint is necessary to prevent a multiplicity of proceedings. Spratt v. Helena Power Transmission Co., 37 M 60, 94 P 631 (1908).

Failure to Follow Injunctive Order Regarding Use of Spotlights — Personal Representative Responsible for Compliance With Injunction: The District Court issued an order enjoining Robert Hanley from displaying blinking spotlights on his residence and from directing the lights toward the Laniers' residence because the act unreasonably interfered with the Laniers' peaceable enjoyment of their property. Following a bench trial, the court found that the lights no longer blinked, but noted that Hanley had not redirected the spotlights as directed and so held Hanley in contempt and awarded damages to the Laniers. Robert subsequently died, and his wife Joanne was substituted as personal representative of Robert's estate for any allegations in the Laniers' counterclaims. Joanne appealed the injunctive relief granted to the Laniers, contending that she was exempt from the provisions of the injunction because the injunction was directed only at Robert. The Supreme Court disagreed. As personal representative, Joanne was subject to the injunction. She participated and acted with Robert in failing to follow the directives regarding the spotlights and was not exempt from the order prohibiting the spotlights from being directed toward the Laniers' residence. Morton v. Lanier, 2002 MT 214, 311 M 301, 55 P3d 380 (2002).

Standing to Sue Based on Denial of Individual Right to Vote: A citizens' group sought to get the issues of site and construction approval for a middle school on the general ballot by alleging that the school district Board of Trustees violated the group's civil right to vote by denying its members their individual right to vote. The Supreme Court found that if the Board was statutorily required to submit the issues to the voters, failure to do so significantly affected the constitutionally protected right to vote of each member of the group. The court held that although the general public right to vote was coextensive with that of the group, the group had standing to sue because the individual members had standing to sue based on their individual right to vote. The court noted that the group was not required to provide the names, addresses, and a statement of the respective injuries of the individual members because the group sought no damages in the complaint. Awareness Group v. Bd. of Trustees, 243 M 469, 795 P2d 447, 47 St. Rep. 1333 (1990).

Injunctive Relief Granted to Persons Not Specifically Named as Plaintiffs — Representative Capacity Not Challenged: The District Court did not exceed its personal jurisdiction by granting injunctive relief to persons other than those specifically named as plaintiffs in the complaint when the voluntary trade organization, as plaintiff, alleged that it was representing persons holding liquor licenses in Montana and the state, as defendant, did not challenge the adequacy of the association's representative capacity under former Rule 9(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Mont. Tavern Ass'n v. St., 224 M 258, 729 P2d 1310, 43 St. Rep. 2180 (1986).

Standing of Association to Sue Over Planning and Zoning District Adoption: County Commissioners adopted a planning and zoning district. In response, plaintiff public interest groups filed an action for a declaratory judgment. The County Commissioners on appeal contended that it was the plaintiffs' duty to allege in their complaint an injury to the property or to a civil right of the individuals of the association, distinguishable from an injury to the public generally, and to set forth names and addresses of the injured members and a statement of the injury in order to obtain injunctive relief. The District Court found that the plaintiffs did in fact have standing to file the complaint without supplying all of the above information. Noting that the plaintiffs had alleged injury in fact which was similar to injuries suffered by other members of the public generally, the Supreme Court said the plaintiffs therefore brought themselves within this section and declined to hold on constitutional issues of equal access to the courts and freedom of association under this section. Mont. Wildlife Fed'n v. Sager, 190 M 247, 620 P2d 1189, 37 St. Rep. 1897 (1980).

Case Notes

Insurance Settlements — Class Certification for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief Proper — Class Certification for Punitive Damages Not Proper Without Showing of Actual Fraud or Malice — Individual Cases Required to Establish Amount of Individual Punitive Damages: Six days after an auto accident, the plaintiff signed a release and settled with the defendant insurer for $3,500. About 1 month later, the plaintiff asked the defendant to rescind the release because the plaintiff experienced additional pain, but the defendant refused. The plaintiff then retained counsel, and the defendant rescinded the release and settled the claim for about $200,000. After settlement, the plaintiff pursued a class action lawsuit in District Court seeking declaratory and injunctive relief and certification of a potential classwide punitive damages award. On appeal, the defendant insurer asserted that there were multiple factual differences between the plaintiff and the proposed class and that the District Court abused its discretion by certifying the class. The Supreme Court held that the proposed class satisfied the commonality, typicality, and adequacy requirements and that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in certifying the class for potential declaratory and injunctive relief. However, the Supreme Court reversed the certification of a potential classwide punitive damages award and instructed the District Court to determine if the defendant insurer was engaged in actual fraud or malice. Further, the Supreme Court determined that if there is a finding of actual fraud or malice, then later individual cases may determine the amount of individual punitive damages. Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2013 MT 244, 371 Mont. 393, 310 P.3d 452.

Nonparty in Concert With Joined Party Properly Enjoined When Notice Received: The District Court granted a permanent injunction against a subdivision lot owner who was operating an auto body shop in the subdivision in violation of a restrictive covenant against commercial activity. The shop operator's mother formed a sham corporation in an attempt to get around the injunction by allowing her son to continue to operate the shop on the adjacent lot, which she owned. The District Court extended the injunction to include the mother, and she appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Under Morton v. Lanier, 2002 MT 214, 311 M 301, 55 P3d 380 (2002), and this section, a nonparty to an injunction may be enjoined if the nonparty is in active concert or participation with the enjoined party, as long as the nonparty receives actual notice of the injunction by personal service or otherwise. The mother received actual notice of the original injunction through the attorney who represented both her and her son in the present action, so extending the injunction to the mother was not an abuse of discretion. Rice v. C.I. Lanning, 2004 MT 237, 322 M 487, 97 P3d 580 (2004).

Injunction in Arbitration Award Not Restrictive of Constitutional Right to Access Courts: The Langemeiers and Kuehls became involved in a dispute over a county road easement between their adjoining lands, and the dispute eventually was submitted to arbitration. The final arbitration award provided injunctive relief to the Langemeiers by prohibiting the Kuehls from commencing or prosecuting any further action or proceeding regarding the property or challenging the ownership of the parcel. The Kuehls complained that the injunctive language was so overbroad that it took property from them without due process of law and improperly restricted their constitutional right to access courts. However, the initial memorandum of understanding, the settlement agreement, and the final arbitration award all established that the Kuehls had no property interest in the disputed roadway, so they could not complain that they were deprived of the use of property that was not theirs to use. Further, the injunctive language only sought to restrain the Kuehls from contesting matters already decided and from pursuing repetitive claims previously resolved by the settlement agreement concerning property in which they had no interest. The Kuehls had already enjoyed access to the courts as the dispute wound its way through two arbitrations, approval by the District Court, and a Supreme Court appeal. Although the constitution guarantees every person access to the courts, it does not grant a license to relitigate a cause or to burden the resources of the courts with successive claims. Therefore, the injunction did not deny the Kuehls of the use of property or access to the courts, and the arbitration award was affirmed. Langemeier v. Kuehl, 2001 MT 306, 307 M 499, 40 P3d 343 (2001).

Cause of Action for Erection of Spite Fence Solely Intended to Injure Neighbor — Availability of Injunctive Relief or Nuisance Claim — Bordeaux Overruled: Kottas built a 200-foot long, 7 feet 3 inches to 7 feet 9 inches high wooden fence that obstructed Haugen's view. Haugen sought injunctive relief for removal of the fence, alleging that it was a spite fence. The District Court concluded that it was indeed a spite fence, but declined to issue an injunction or recognize any remedy under Montana law, citing Bordeaux v. Greene, 22 M 254, 56 P 218 (1899), in holding that a person with a legal right can enforce the enjoyment of that right without inquiry into motive. The Supreme Court noted the many changes in property law since 1899 and overruled Bordeaux, adopting instead the rationale in Sundowner, Inc. v. King, 509 P2d 785 (Idaho 1973). Sundowner rejected the older rule that erection of a spite fence is not an actionable wrong and held that a property owner cannot erect a structure for the sole purpose of injuring a neighbor, such as a spite fence, which is of no beneficial use to the owner but is erected and maintained for the purpose of annoying a neighbor. A spite fence gives rise to an action for both injunctive relief and damages and may also be addressed through a nuisance claim. The Supreme Court reversed for a determination of the proper remedy. Haugen v. Kottas, 2001 MT 274, 307 M 301, 37 P3d 672 (2001).

Equitable Estoppel Defense Defeated — Failure of Counterclaim to State Claim for Which Relief May Be Granted: The city of Whitefish sought and obtained a permanent injunction against Troy Town Pump, Inc. (Town Pump), requiring removal of a sign that violated the city's ordinance. Town Pump's defense was that the city's approval of the original building plan equitably estopped the city's claim. Alternatively, Town Pump counterclaimed for the costs of remodeling the building. In order for the city to obtain a permanent injunction, it first had to overcome Town Pump's counterclaim that it was equitably estopped from doing so. The city successfully defeated the counterclaim. Absent a legal theory upon which to base damages, the city could not be held liable, so the District Court did not err in dismissing Town Pump's counterclaim for damages on grounds that it failed to state a claim for which relief could be granted. Whitefish v. Troy Town Pump, Inc., 2001 MT 58, 304 M 346, 21 P3d 1026 (2001).

Revocation of Prior City Approval of Building Plan Based on Incorrect Conclusion That Proposed Fascia Did Not Constitute Sign — Equitable Estoppel Inapplicable — Jurisdiction Properly Retained: The city of Whitefish adopted a master plan that included a policy providing that commercial signs are a blighting factor and that contained strict limits on the size and character of signs. Troy Town Pump, Inc. (Town Pump), submitted blueprints to the city for a new exterior, referred to as a fascia, that included lettering above an awning. The city manager reviewed the blueprints for the design before it was installed and, believing that only the written words but not the entire awning constituted a sign, approved the design and issued a building permit. When installed, the awning consisted of a band of translucent, raspberry-colored material 4 feet 11 inches high, extending about 162 feet across the entire length of the front of the building. Four rows of white fluorescent light tubes located behind the awning extended the entire length of the material and lit it from behind, and four neon lights were placed in front of the awning, which ran horizontally the entire length of the front of the building and approximately 42 feet along the rear of the building. The City Council concluded that the entire awning constituted a sign that violated the city ordinance because it was too big and directed Town Pump to remove the lighting. When Town Pump refused, the city sought an injunction prohibiting Town Pump from operating the lighting. Town Pump's defense was that the city's claims were barred under the doctrine of equitable estoppel, because the design had already been reviewed and the building permit issued. During a bench trial, the city manager testified that if he had realized that the fascia would create a lighting scheme that dwarfed the lettering and far exceeded general lighting needs, he would not have approved the building permit. The District Court issued a permanent injunction requiring removal of all lighting and reserved jurisdiction to determine whether the entire awning constituted a sign within the meaning of the ordinance, thereby justifying further injunctive relief. In a subsequent order, the court granted the city's motion for judgment on the pleadings on the counterclaim on grounds that the counterclaim failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. Town Pump appealed. The Supreme Court held that original approval of the building permit was based on an incorrect misrepresentation of law, not fact, that the fascia did not constitute a sign. Thus, Town Pump failed to establish the first element of equitable estoppel, which requires a misrepresentation of fact. Further examination revealed that Town Pump failed to establish even one element of equitable estoppel, dooming its defense to the city's request for an injunction. The city's broad definition of sign was intended to include not only traditional signs, but also embellishments intended to draw attention to a traditional sign or to the business itself, so the District Court did not abuse its discretion in ordering removal of the lighting. Further, under the city's broad request for relief, the court did not err in retaining jurisdiction to allow the city to return to court after the lighting was removed to consider an order requiring removal of the awning. The court simply exercised its discretion in a manner that allowed it to grant all relief necessary in the matter. Whitefish v. Troy Town Pump, Inc., 2001 MT 58, 304 M 346, 21 P3d 1026 (2001).

Discharge of Water as Continuing Invasion of Property Rights Within Scope of Injunction: Tumas constructed a trout pond that continuously discharged water downstream across Ducham's property, impeding or prohibiting Ducham's historical use of the property and constituting a continuing invasion of property rights and irreparable injury. Absent injunctive relief, Ducham would have been forced to bring a multiplicity of actions at law in order to be compensated for the ongoing injury. Issuance of a permanent injunction is precisely the relief anticipated under these kinds of ongoing injuries, and failure by the trial court to issue a permanent injunction in this case constituted reversible error. Ducham v. Tuma, 265 M 436, 877 P2d 1002, 51 St. Rep. 595 (1994), followed in Engel v. Gampp, 2000 MT 17, 298 M 116, 993 P2d 701, 57 St. Rep. 96 (2000).

Injunctive Relief Granted to Persons Not Specifically Named as Plaintiffs — Representative Capacity Not Challenged: The District Court did not exceed its personal jurisdiction by granting injunctive relief to persons other than those specifically named as plaintiffs in the complaint when the voluntary trade organization, as plaintiff, alleged that it was representing persons holding liquor licenses in Montana and the state, as defendant, did not challenge the adequacy of the association's representative capacity under former Rule 9(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Mont. Tavern Ass'n v. St., 224 M 258, 729 P2d 1310, 43 St. Rep. 2180 (1986).

Scope of Injunction — Cutting of Timber: The District Court enjoined defendant from cutting all timber instead of merely enjoining the cutting of timber not included in the contract. Defendant contended that this falls within the role that an injunction should be limited to enjoining the wrong and should not extend to preventing lawful activity under the contract. The court considered the character and use of the property as well as the conduct of the appellant. The District Court did not abuse its discretion or grant an overbroad injunction. On the basis of appellant's conduct in reentering the land after a notification of termination, the District Court was warranted in enjoining all future cutting to prevent future irreparable injury to the land. Madison Fork Ranch v. L & B Lodge Pole Timber Prod., 189 M 292, 615 P2d 900, 37 St. Rep. 1468 (1980). See Shammel v. Canyon Resources Corp., 2003 MT 372, 319 M 132, 82 P3d 912 (2003), in which a manifest abuse of discretion standard was adopted for review of granting or denying an injunction.

Part 2

Availability of Preliminary Injunction

Part Case Notes

Preliminary Injunction — Factual and Legal Statements Not Final Opinion — Conclusions Reserved for Trial on Merits — District Court Did Not Prematurely Rule on Merits of Case Despite Certain Factual and Legal Statements — Proper Standards of Proof Still Required During Trial. Flying T Ranch, LLC v. Catlin Ranch Ltd. Partnership, 2022 MT 162, 409 Mont. 478, 515 P.3d 806.

Not Within Scope of Preliminary Injunction to Determine Merits of Case: Defendants sought to subdivide their property. Plaintiffs filed for a preliminary injunction on grounds that if defendants were not immediately enjoined from proceeding with a boundary realignment, plaintiffs would suffer irreparable injury through loss of access. The District Court issued a temporary restraining order prohibiting defendants from pursuing the boundary realignment and from using a road to transport heavy equipment pending a show cause hearing. At the hearing, defendants informed the court that they had withdrawn their subdivision exemption application, rendering the boundary realignment issue moot. The court then denied plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction and dissolved the temporary restraining order. However, the court went on to address and resolve many of the issues that plaintiffs had raised in their complaint. The Supreme Court affirmed the denial of the preliminary injunction because plaintiffs failed to meet the burden under 27-19-201 but noted that the limited function of a preliminary injunction is to preserve the status quo and minimize the harm to all parties pending full trial, rather than to determine the merits of the case. Therefore, the District Court erred in making sweeping and final factual legal determinations following the hearing on the propriety of issuing a preliminary injunction, and the Supreme Court reversed and remanded for trial on the issues. Yockey v. Kearns Properties, LLC, 2005 MT 27, 326 M 28, 106 P3d 1185 (2005).

Disjunctive Rules — Single Subsection Improperly Used as Basis for Denial of Preliminary Injunction: Sweet Grass Farms, Ltd. (Sweet Grass), sought a preliminary injunction to halt building of a subdivision on land adjacent to Sweet Grass property. An applicant for a preliminary injunction must establish a prima facie case or show that it is at least doubtful whether or not irreparable injury will be suffered before the applicant's rights can be fully litigated. Here, the District Court denied the motion on the sole basis that it did not satisfy 27-19-201(2), without considering any of the other subsections of this section, finding that the hardships that would be suffered by the developer outweighed those that would be suffered by Sweet Grass and that Sweet Grass would not be irreparably harmed if the subdivision were allowed to proceed during the pendency of the action. However, sale of any lots during the litigation would tend to render a judgment in favor of Sweet Grass ineffectual. The Supreme Court noted that the subsections of 27-19-201 are disjunctive, meaning that only one subsection need be met for an injunction to issue. The District Court abused its discretion when it denied Sweet Grass's motion for a preliminary injunction based solely on subsection (2). The Supreme Court remanded with instructions to issue injunctive relief pursuant to subsection (3). Sweet Grass Farms, Ltd. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 2000 MT 147, 300 M 66, 2 P3d 825, 57 St. Rep. 576 (2000), following Stark v. Borner, 226 M 356, 735 P2d 314 (1987). See Shammel v. Canyon Resources Corp., 2003 MT 372, 319 M 132, 82 P3d 912 (2003), in which a manifest abuse of discretion standard was adopted for review of granting or denying an injunction.

Reversal of Denial of Preliminary Injunction — Consideration of Underlying Issues Precluded: On appeal of the merits of a preliminary injunction, plaintiff requested that the Supreme Court provide substantive guidance by addressing several underlying issues regarding interaction between injunction laws and subdivision statutes, as well as the likelihood of plaintiff to prevail on issues still pending in District Court. In determining the merits of a preliminary injunction on appeal, it is not the province of either the District Court or the Supreme Court to make final determinations on matters that might arise upon a trial on the merits. The request for substantive guidance was declined. Sweet Grass Farms, Ltd. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 2000 MT 147, 300 M 66, 2 P3d 825, 57 St. Rep. 576 (2000). See also Porter v. K&S Partnership, 192 M 175, 627 P2d 836 (1981), and Dreyer v. Bd. of Trustees of Mid-Rivers Tel. Co-op, Inc., 193 M 95, 630 P2d 226 (1981).

Preliminary Injunction Dissolved — Three Bases — Restrictive Covenants: In an action by subdivision property owners for a preliminary injunction enjoining the use of a building as an apartment building as opposed to use as a single-family dwelling contrary to restrictive covenants, the Supreme Court held that the injunction should be dissolved for the following reasons: plaintiff's case was rebutted, the status quo would not be preserved, and injury to both parties would not be minimized by granting the injunction. Porter v. K & S Partnership, 192 M 175, 627 P2d 836, 38 St. Rep. 648 (1981), followed in Dicken v. Shaw, 255 M 231, 841 P2d 1126, 49 St. Rep. 914 (1992), and *M.H. v. Mont. COVID-19 Pandemic — District Court's Denial of Preliminary Injunction to Enjoin Public School District Masking Requirements Not Abuse of Discretion — Failure by Plaintiff to Show Masking Policy Implicated Fundamental Right — Rational Basis Standard Applied — Legitimate Interest by School in Preventing Viral Infections to Ensure Sufficient Staffing Levels. Stand Up Mont. v. Missoula County Pub. Schools, 2022 MT 153, 409 Mont. 330, 514 P.3d 1062.

Preliminary Injunction — Failure to Preserve Status Quo: The plaintiffs challenged a deadline for the receipt of a ballot in order to be counted as valid. The District Court entered a preliminary injunction, which modified the deadline, and the Secretary of State appealed the ruling to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court reversed the modification to the deadline because it did not preserve the status quo. Driscoll v. Stapleton, 2020 MT 247, 401 Mont. 405, 473 P.3d 386.

Hearing Required for Granting or Denying Preliminary Injunction: The District Court granted a motion for a preliminary injunction without holding a hearing. The nonmoving party appealed the decision. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded, noting that although the District Court retains discretion to grant or deny a temporary restraining order without a hearing, the District Court must hold a hearing before either granting or denying preliminary injunctive relief. Flying T Ranch, LLC v. Catlin Ranch, L.P., 2020 MT 99, 400 Mont. 1, 462 P.3d 218.

2005 Amendments to Abortion Law Challenged in 2018 — Standing — Injunctive Relief Upheld: The 2005 Montana Legislature amended 50-20-109 to restrict the performance of previability abortions to licensed physicians and physician assistants. The plaintiffs, a certified nurse practitioner and a certified nurse midwife, filed an action in 2018 seeking a declaratory judgment that the statute violated Montana's constitutional rights of privacy, equal protection, and dignity. The District Court held that the plaintiffs were entitled to a preliminary injunction because they had made a showing that enforcement of the statute prior to the conclusion of litigation would cause irreparable injury. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the plaintiffs had standing to seek relief on their claim, enforcement of the statute prior to the conclusion of litigation would cause irreparable injury, and enjoinder of the statute through a preliminary injunction was not too contingent or remote to support present adjudication. Weems v. St., 2019 MT 98, 395 Mont. 350, 440 P.3d 4.

Prima Facie Showing of Prescriptive Easement — Finding of Irreparable Harm Unnecessary — Grant of Preliminary Injunction Pending Quiet Title Action Proper: In a quiet title action, the defendants requested a preliminary injunction to allow them to continue using a driveway that encroached on the plaintiffs' property. The District Court granted the preliminary injunction. The plaintiff appealed the order granting the injunction on the basis that the defendants had not established irreparable harm. The Supreme Court affirmed the ruling, holding that a showing of irreparable harm is not necessary when a party can make a prima facie showing of their prescriptive easement. BAM Ventures, LLC v. Schifferman, 2019 MT 67, 395 Mont. 160, 437 P.3d 142.

No Issuance of Preliminary Injunction for Encroachment Removal — Plaintiffs Failed to Reference Statute — No Factual Showing of Potential Ineffectual Subsequent Final Judgment: The plaintiffs asserted that, upon granting summary judgment declaring encroachments on land as trespasses, the District Court erred by failing to go further and issue a preliminary injunction for their removal. However, the Supreme Court reasoned that preliminary injunctions may not issue except upon evidence or affidavit considered at a duly noticed hearing. As applied, the plaintiffs abandoned their initial motion for a preliminary injunction by stipulation long before they moved for summary judgment, did not clearly articulate a renewed request for a preliminary injunction in their summary judgment motion, and in any event failed to request a preliminary injunction hearing on or incident to their motion for summary judgment. Moreover, though they requested that the court order ejectment of the encroachments, compel the defendants to remove the encroachments, provide for forcible removal if necessary, and conditionally authorize them to remove them if the defendants failed to act, nowhere in the plaintiffs' conflated summary judgment motion and briefing was any reference to 27-19-201, or a factual showing that the failure to grant a preliminary mandatory injunction would render ineffectual any subsequent final judgment that might include, as appropriate, final injunctive relief. Consequently, the District Court did not err in declining to issue a preliminary injunction for removal of the subject encroachments upon granting summary judgment declaring them as trespasses. Davis v. Westphal, 2017 MT 276, 389 Mont. 251, 405 P.3d 73.

Trespass to Land Established — Lack of Evidence on Summary Judgment Motion to Support Preliminary or Final Injunctive Relief: The District Court's interlocutory denial of preliminary or final mandatory injunctive relief was neither irreconcilable with its summary judgment declaring a trespass to land nor a manifest abuse of discretion. In support of a motion for summary judgment, the plaintiffs submitted only a one-page map prepared by a surveyor showing the boundary line encroachments, a copy of the defendants' letter accepting responsibility and apologizing for the encroachments, and the affidavit of one of the plaintiffs regarding the nature, discovery, and continued existence of the encroachments. Though this evidence was sufficient for the District Court to adjudicate the existence of continuing or recurring trespasses as a matter of law, the limited evidentiary record was insufficient to show a complete absence of any genuine issue of fact material as to whether the balance of the equities warranted the extraordinary remedy of a mandatory injunction compelling removal of the encroachments. This deficiency was particularly manifest based on the defendants' willingness to remove the encroachments upon determination or negotiation of a reasonable deadline for removal. Davis v. Westphal, 2017 MT 276, 389 Mont. 251, 405 P.3d 73.

Abuse of Discretion to Restrict Injunction to Light Vehicles Only — Preliminary Injunction Improper: The plaintiffs sought declaratory judgment to have legal access along a road that crossed the defendants' property. The plaintiffs sought a preliminary injunction on the theory that there was an express public easement on that portion of the road. The District Court granted a preliminary injunction enjoining the defendants from barring the plaintiffs' access to the road and allowing the plaintiffs to drive only light vehicles on the road. The plaintiffs appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed the restriction because, the court determined, the status quo had been the plaintiffs driving some heavy equipment across the easement to maintain their property. Flora v. Clearman, 2016 MT 290, 385 Mont. 341, 384 P.3d 448.

Preliminary Injunction Granted on Theory of Prescriptive Easement — Appeal on Public Easement Premature: The plaintiffs sought declaratory judgment to have legal access along a road that crossed the defendants' property. The plaintiffs sought a preliminary injunction on the theory that there was an express public easement on that portion of the road. The District Court granted the plaintiffs a preliminary injunction enjoining the defendants from barring the plaintiffs' access to the road under the theory of prescriptive easement. The plaintiffs appealed to the Supreme Court, which affirmed the ruling and noted that the plaintiffs' appeal regarding a public easement was premature because the District Court's order had not been certified and therefore was not final. Flora v. Clearman, 2016 MT 290, 385 Mont. 341, 384 P.3d 448.

Disputed Location of Point of Diversion — Request for Preliminary Injunction — Court Within Its Authority to Interpret Location: The defendants had placed a dam that diverted water from the plaintiffs' ditch. The plaintiffs sought a preliminary injunction in order to distribute water to their property by installing a headgate on the defendants' land. The defendants countered that the ditch, through which the plaintiffs' water had traveled, was not located on their land. After 4 days of hearings on the location of the ditch, the District Court granted a preliminary injunction allowing the plaintiffs to install a headgate on the defendants' property. The defendants appealed, arguing that the District Court had exceeded its jurisdiction by determining the location of the point of diversion. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that the District Court has authority to supervise the distribution of established water rights. Mack v. Anderson, 2016 MT 204, 384 Mont. 368, 380 P.3d 730.

Preliminary Injunction Despite Disputed Location of Point of Diversion — Final Determination of Merits Reserved for Trial — Rights to Jury Trial Not Usurped: The defendants had placed a dam that diverted water from the plaintiffs' ditch. The plaintiffs sought a preliminary injunction in order to distribute water to their property by installing a headgate on the defendants' land. The defendants countered that the ditch, through which the plaintiffs' water had traveled, was not located on their land. After 4 days of hearings on the location of the ditch, the District Court granted a preliminary injunction allowing the plaintiffs to install a headgate on the defendants' property. The defendants appealed, arguing that by granting the preliminary injunction the judge had usurped their right to a jury trial. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed, noting the language in the order that explicitly provided for a jury to make a final determination of the location of the ditch at trial. Mack v. Anderson, 2016 MT 204, 384 Mont. 368, 380 P.3d 730.

Noncompete Clause of 5 Years and 100 Miles Upheld: When the sale of a business includes sale of goodwill, the seller may agree to refrain from carrying on a similar business. In this case, because the noncompete clause was upheld by the District Court, it is likely that the plaintiffs will ultimately prevail and that the contract and the noncompete clause will be determined to be valid and enforceable. The likelihood of success is sufficient to warrant the preliminary injunction. Friedman v. Lasco, 2016 MT 115, 383 Mont. 381, 372 P.3d 451.

Preliminary Injunction Improper — Underlying Action Warranted Monetary Damages: The plaintiffs entered into a lease agreement with the defendants for the removal of scoria from the plaintiffs' property. The plaintiffs received periodic royalty payments under the terms of the lease but alleged that the defendants breached the lease by failing to make regular royalty payments. Although the plaintiffs requested both monetary damages and a permanent injunction to prevent the removal of additional scoria from their property, the Supreme Court held that a preliminary injunction awarded by the District Court was improper in a breach of contract action when pecuniary compensation was contemplated and would afford adequate relief. Caldwell v. Sabo, 2013 MT 240, 371 Mont. 328, 308 P.3d 81, distinguishing Van Loan v. Van Loan, 271 Mont. 176, 895 P.2d 614 (1995).

Phrase "Private or Public Land in Montana" Not Applicable to Tribal Lands — Injunction Prohibiting Transfer of Bison Improper: The Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks transferred some Yellowstone bison to the Fort Peck Reservation, with part of the herd to be subsequently transferred to the Fort Belknap Reservation. The District Court issued a preliminary injunction to prohibit the transfer of some of the bison to Fort Belknap on the basis that the Department had not complied with the requirements of 87-1-216, which provides that the Department may not release, transplant, or allow wild buffalo or bison on any private or public land in Montana that has not been authorized for that use by the private or public owner. The Supreme Court reversed on the basis that the phrase "private or public land in Montana" does not apply to tribal lands and therefore it was error on the District Court's part to issue an injunction based on a violation of 87-1-216. Citizens for Balanced Use v. Maurier, 2013 MT 166, 370 Mont. 410, 303 P.3d 794.

Abuse of Discretion — Preliminary Injunction for Past Acts — Status Quo: In a case involving a 1984 agreement between a railroad and the state, which required the railroad to make per-car payments to a third party, the District Court abused its discretion by granting the state a preliminary injunction that restored the status quo as it existed in 1984, instead of the status quo that existed at the time the preliminary injunction was sought, in 2010. At the time the state requested a preliminary injunction, the railroad had stopped making per-car payments and the injury sought to be enjoined had occurred. Because the entire injury had already occurred, a preliminary injunction could not issue. St. v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2011 MT 108, 360 Mont. 361, 254 P.3d 561.

Injunction Initiated by Application — No Right to Jury Trial: In an action to stop work based on the failure to obtain a building permit, the city may apply for an injunction with notice, and a complaint and a summons are not required. Under applicable statutes and because it is an action in equity, an injunction is granted by a judge and there is no right to a jury trial. City of Great Falls v. Forbes, 2011 MT 12, 359 Mont. 140, 247 P.3d 1086.

Preliminary Injunction Proper to Prevent Interference in Exercise of Nonjudicial Remedy Involving Lease of Real Property: Although title to or possession of property should not be decided by injunction pending the outcome of litigation, the District Court did not err in granting a preliminary injunction to prevent interference with a nonjudicial contractual remedy, even though the contract was a lease agreement for property that allowed reentry of the real property and termination of the lease upon nonpayment of rent. Sandrock v. DeTienne, 2010 MT 237, 358 Mont. 175, 243 P.3d 1123.

Injunction to Preclude Reporting of Physician's Suspension Until Breach of Contract Issue Settled: A physician applied for a preliminary injunction to preclude defendant medical center from reporting the physician's suspension until the issue of whether defendant breached its contract by suspending the physician without just cause was resolved. The District Court granted the injunction and defendant appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Defendant failed to demonstrate that the District Court manifestly abused its discretion by issuing the preliminary injunction. The District Court correctly found that the physician had met two criteria for issuance of the injunction by demonstrating the likelihood of success on the merits of the case and the need for relief to prevent great or irreparable injury to the physician. The criteria for issuing the injunction having been met, the District Court did not err in dismissing defendant's motion to dismiss. Doe v. Community Medical Center, Inc., 2009 MT 395, 353 M 378, 221 P3d 651 (2009). See also Cole v. St. James Healthcare, 2008 MT 453, 348 M 68, 199 P3d 810 (2008).

Preliminary Injunction to Ensure Entry to Property for Gas and Oil Drilling: Plaintiff was granted a preliminary injunction to prohibit defendant from denying plaintiff's entry onto defendant's land to exercise oil and gas drilling rights pursuant to a surface and damage agreement between the parties. Defendant contended that the injunction was improperly granted because plaintiff failed to provide statutory notice as required by 82-10-503(1). Plaintiff satisfied all other statutory requirements, but instead of sending notice to defendant's address of record, plaintiff sent notice to the land manager's personal address. The land manager then met with the plaintiff and accepted written correspondence and the statutory notice. Under common law and by specific terms of the agreement, plaintiff was allowed access to exercise its mineral rights. The statute was not intended to abrogate the common-law right of entry, and defendant offered no authority that would bar plaintiff from entering the land for failing to provide statutory notice. Rather, plaintiff established the likelihood of success on its claim and the likelihood of irreparable damage if the injunction was not granted. Therefore, the Supreme Court affirmed the grant of the preliminary injunction. Pinnacle Gas Resources, Inc. v. Diamond Cross Properties, LLC, 2009 MT 12, 349 M 17, 201 P3d 160 (2009). See also Hurley v. N. Pac. Ry. Co., 153 M 199, 455 P2d 321 (1969), and W. Energy Co. v. Genie Land Co., 195 M 202, 635 P2d 1297 (1981).

Sufficient Grounds for Preliminary Injunction to Prevent Hospital From Taking Adverse Action Against Doctor: Plaintiff physician's status at defendant hospital was changed from active member to consulting member without notice to plaintiff. Plaintiff filed a complaint alleging that hospital bylaws constituted an enforceable contract between the parties, and plaintiff also requested a preliminary injunction to prevent the hospital from taking further adverse action against plaintiff. The District Court concluded that a contract existed and granted the preliminary injunction. Defendant appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. By granting the injunction, the District Court returned plaintiff to active status, restrained the hospital from adopting the recommendations of a challenged internal investigation, and prohibited any further adverse action against the physician, thereby protecting the physician's patients and professional reputation at minimal cost to defendant, appropriately minimizing injury to both parties, and preserving the status quo pending the outcome of further litigation. Thus, the application for a preliminary injunction satisfied the statutory requirement and the District Court did not abuse its discretion in granting the injunction. Cole v. St. James Healthcare, 2008 MT 453, 348 M 68, 199 P3d 810 (2008).

City Entitled to Preliminary Injunction Pending Trial on County's Rescission of Interlocal Agreement: In 2005, the city of Whitefish entered an agreement with the Flathead County Board of County Commissioners that memorialized many cooperative planning practices in which the city and county had engaged for several decades and that altered some traditional practices and boundaries. In 2008, the county unilaterally rescinded the county's consent to the agreement in violation of the express terms of the agreement. The city then sought a preliminary injunction and various forms of relief. The District Court denied the injunction and ruled that the agreement was invalid, so the city appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. The city established the prospect of irreparable harm that could not be remedied by a monetary award if the county proceeded to act in violation of the agreement by rezoning land in the extraterritorial area. The city also made a prima facie showing of the existence of a duly executed contract with the county, as well as a violation of the city's rights under the contract by virtue of the county's unilateral decision to breach the contract by withdrawing from it. The situation precisely met the criteria of this section, and the District Court order denying a preliminary injunction was vacated and the case was remanded for entry of a preliminary injunction to preserve the status quo pending a trial on the merits. Whitefish v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 2008 MT 436, 347 M 490, 199 P3d 201 (2008), following Billings v. County Water District, 281 M 219, 935 P2d 246 (1997).

Failure of Applicant to Show Likelihood of Success on Claims, Irreparable Injury, or Ineffectual Judgment — No Error in Denial of Preliminary Injunction: Plaintiffs sought a preliminary injunction to prevent the implementation of a settlement agreement regarding implementation of subdivision regulations. The District Court denied the injunction, and on appeal the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court did not manifestly abuse its discretion in denying the injunction based on plaintiffs' failure to: (1) make a prima facie case that they were likely to succeed on their claims of constitutional violations by the county regarding the right to participate and the right to know; (2) sufficiently show that implementation of the settlement agreement would cause plaintiffs great and irreparable injury; and (3) show that some action by the Board of County Commissioners might violate plaintiffs' rights in a manner that implementing the settlement agreement would render ineffectual a judgment in plaintiffs' favor. Bitterrooters for Planning v. Bd. of County Comm'r's of Ravalli County, 2008 MT 249, 344 M 529, 189 P3d 624 (2008), distinguishing Bryan v. Yellowstone County Elementary School District No. 2, 2002 MT 264, 312 M 257, 60 P3d 381 (2002).

Injunction Prohibiting Contact and Threats by Radiologist Partly Violative of Prior Restraints Against Free Speech — Remand: Following numerous complaints of harassing and intimidating comments by a radiologist, plaintiff hospital sought and was granted an injunction prohibiting the radiologist from: (1) contacting and threatening another doctor; (2) indicating to patients, potential patients, or physicians that the hospital's services were inadequate or unprofessional; (3) contacting any potential candidate for the radiology department in a manner that would discourage or intimidate the candidate from negotiating or contracting with the hospital; and (4) threatening any employee or agent of the hospital. The radiologist appealed on grounds that the injunction violated the right to free speech. The Supreme Court noted that of all forms of infringement on the right to free speech, prior restraints are the most serious and least tolerable and cited the definition of prior restraint in Alexander v. U.S., 509 US 544 (1993), that a prior restraint is a judicial or administrative order, such as a temporary restraining order or permanent injunction, that forbids certain communications when issued in advance of the time that the communications are to occur. Declining to apply the test in Kuiper v. District Court, 193 M 452, 632 P2d 694 (1981), which the court limited to injunctions issued in the context of the discovery process, the court instead applied the rationale in Tory v. Cochran, 544 US 734 (2005), which focuses on whether an injunction sweeps more broadly than necessary and is precisely and narrowly tailored to achieve the pinpoint objective needs of the case. Here, the prohibition against the radiologist indicating to patients, potential patients, or physicians that the hospital's services were inadequate or unprofessional was overly broad because it potentially interfered with the radiologist's practice. The court directed that that condition be stricken. Likewise, the prohibition against contacting any potential candidate for the radiology department in a manner that would discourage or intimidate the candidate from negotiating or contracting with the hospital was also overbroad, although the provision was found not to interfere with the radiologist's free speech if only the provision against intimidation was left intact. The court directed that the language prohibiting the radiologist from discouraging candidates be stricken. However, the remaining provisions of the injunction were precisely and narrowly tailored to achieve the pinpoint objective needs of the case, did not amount to prior restraint, and were thus constitutionally permissible. The court remanded with directions to strike the unconstitutional conditions of the injunction. St. James Healthcare v. Cole, 2008 MT 44, 341 M 368, 178 P3d 696 (2008).

Standing of Party to Request Injunction Respecting Third Parties: Following numerous complaints of harassing and intimidating comments by a radiologist, plaintiff hospital sought and was granted an injunction prohibiting the radiologist from contacting and threatening another doctor, contacting any potential candidate for the radiology department in a manner that would intimidate the candidate from negotiating or contracting with the hospital, and threatening any employee or agent of the hospital. The radiologist appealed on grounds that certain provisions of the injunction were invalid because only the hospital had requested the injunction and not the parties who were protected by the injunction, so the other parties were not eligible for injunctive relief. The Supreme Court disagreed. The hospital had standing to request an injunction to protect against the radiologist from engaging in specified harassing and threatening speech and conduct toward third-party individuals and organizations upon which the hospital relied for its continued success in order to prevent the hospital from suffering immediate and irreparable harm. St. James Healthcare v. Cole, 2008 MT 44, 341 M 368, 178 P3d 696 (2008).

Sufficient Evidence of Threatening and Harassing Conduct to Warrant Injunction Against Physician: Following numerous complaints of harassing and intimidating comments by a radiologist, plaintiff hospital sought and was granted an injunction prohibiting the radiologist from contacting and threatening another doctor, contacting any potential candidate for the radiology department in a manner that would intimidate the candidate from negotiating or contracting with the hospital, and threatening any employee or agent of the hospital. The radiologist appealed on grounds that there was insufficient evidence for issuance of the injunction. The Supreme Court disagreed. The District Court had evidence of threatening e-mails and telephone calls made by the radiologist and testimony from persons who stated that they feared for their safety or were intimidated or harassed by the radiologist. The evidence in the record was sufficient to warrant an injunction, and the Supreme Court declined to second-guess the District Court's determinations regarding the credibility of the witnesses or the strength and weight of the testimony. St. James Healthcare v. Cole, 2008 MT 44, 341 M 368, 178 P3d 696 (2008).

No Abuse of Discretion in Denial of Hospital's Request for Preliminary Injunction Against Opening Other Hospital Based on Lack of Irreparable Injury and Public Participation: Plaintiff hospital sought a preliminary injunction against defendant partnership to keep the partnership from opening another hospital in Great Falls, based on potential irreparable injury and on the lack of public participation in the licensing process. The District Court denied the injunction. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that plaintiff failed to present evidence demonstrating that plaintiff would suffer some injury that would be irreparable by a future award of legal or other equitable relief. Additionally, the District Court relied on Kadillak v. The Anaconda Co., 184 M 127, 602 P2d 147 (1979), for the proposition that there is no independent right of public participation in an agency's decisionmaking process when the Legislature has not provided for participation. The Supreme Court noted that the state has been given very limited statutory direction in licensing hospitals and that there is no express statutory requirement for the state to permit public participation in licensing matters, concluding that whatever the state's obligations are in evaluating hospital license applications, plaintiff did not demonstrate that those obligations were clearly violated. Staying within the limits of review of a denial of a request for a preliminary injunction without reaching the merits of the underlying case, the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court did not manifestly abuse its discretion in denying the preliminary injunction, and the District Court was affirmed. Benefis Healthcare v. Great Falls Clinic, LLP, 2006 MT 254, 334 M 86, 146 P3d 714 (2006).

Failure of Trial Court to Set Forth Findings and Facts in Granting Preliminary Injunction Reversible Error: The District Court granted a preliminary injunction in a road easement case, but failed to set forth findings of fact and conclusions of law. The Supreme Court noted that former Rule 52(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), requires a trial court to set forth findings of fact and conclusions of law that constitute the grounds of the trial court's action in granting or refusing interlocutory injunctions, and failure to do so makes it impossible for the Supreme Court to evaluate the parties' arguments on appeal. It is not enough that the trial court simply regurgitate the parties' contentions and reach a conclusion. Legal conclusions must be articulated and be in accord with governing statutes and interpretive case law. Thus, failure of a trial court to set forth findings of fact and conclusions of law is reversible error, and the Supreme Court remanded with instructions to vacate the order for an injunction and reconsider the matter. Snavelly v. St. John, 2006 MT 175, 333 M 16, 140 P3d 492 (2006).

Not Within Scope of Preliminary Injunction to Determine Merits of Case: Defendants sought to subdivide their property. Plaintiffs filed for a preliminary injunction on grounds that if defendants were not immediately enjoined from proceeding with a boundary realignment, plaintiffs would suffer irreparable injury through loss of access. The District Court issued a temporary restraining order prohibiting defendants from pursuing the boundary realignment and from using a road to transport heavy equipment pending a show cause hearing. At the hearing, defendants informed the court that they had withdrawn their subdivision exemption application, rendering the boundary realignment issue moot. The court then denied plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction and dissolved the temporary restraining order. However, the court went on to address and resolve many of the issues that plaintiffs had raised in their complaint. The Supreme Court affirmed the denial of the preliminary injunction because plaintiffs failed to meet the burden under this section but noted that the limited function of a preliminary injunction is to preserve the status quo and minimize the harm to all parties pending full trial, rather than to determine the merits of the case. Therefore, the District Court erred in making sweeping and final factual legal determinations following the hearing on the propriety of issuing a preliminary injunction, and the Supreme Court reversed and remanded for trial on the issues. Yockey v. Kearns Properties, LLC, 2005 MT 27, 326 M 28, 106 P3d 1185 (2005).

High School Association Requirement That Member Schools Hire Certified Teachers Not Violative of Freedom of Religion: As a condition of membership and participation in interscholastic competitions with other member schools, defendant, a private and voluntary association of public and private schools, required that schools in the association be accredited by the state. When plaintiff, a private religious school, hired an uncertified teacher who nevertheless met its philosophical criteria, the school lost its state accreditation, its membership in the association, and the ability to compete in certain interscholastic competitions. The school moved for a preliminary injunction preventing the association from enforcing its rules on grounds that the association bylaws constituted an impermissible burden on the school's free exercise of religion. The motion was denied, and the school appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The court applied the test in Thomas v. Review Bd. of Ind. Employment Sec. Div., 450 US 707 (1981), to determine whether a burden on religion existed. The first part of the test involves whether an important benefit is at issue, and the court concluded that association membership and participation were important benefits. The next part of the test focuses on conduct proscribed by religious faith and conduct mandated by religious belief. Here, rather than attempting to preserve a unique religious culture and a right to live apart from the predations and vices of modern society, the school sought to fully integrate itself and allow its students to exemplify their Christian ideals in competition with students from other schools. Thus, the school failed to show that its religious belief was incompatible with teacher certification, and the court found no constitutional basis for the school's claim that the association should have to yield to the school's wish to employ a teacher who was devoted to the school's principles but not certified by the state. Valley Christian School v. Mont. High School Ass'n, 2004 MT 41, 320 M 81, 86 P3d 554 (2004), distinguishing Wis. v. Yoder, 406 US 205 (1972).

Preliminary Injunction Against Seed Potato Sale in Violation of Contract — Injury to Reputation, Investment, and Montana Farming: Plaintiffs contracted to sell generation two seed potatoes to defendants, which defendants would grow, with plaintiffs having the sole right to market the resulting generation three seed potatoes. Defendants replanted some of the generation three seed potatoes in order to grow their own generation four certified seed potatoes. Generation four is the point at which farmers can plant the potatoes for wholesale or retail sales. Plaintiffs were entitled to a preliminary injunction enjoining defendants from certifying their generation four seed potatoes. The potatoes of this variety are vulnerable to fusarium dry rot, and plaintiffs believed that it would take several more years for them to become acceptable. Plaintiffs were worried about the spread of fusarium dry rot in this variety of potato if defendants sold the potatoes. Plaintiffs had a good reputation in the field and were worried about the danger to Montana and their reputation and about the loss of their investment. If the potatoes were certified before plaintiffs' case against defendants was concluded, plaintiffs would likely lose the ability to keep generation four seed potatoes out of the market and would lose control over them. The lower court properly waived plaintiffs' posting of a bond to protect defendants, ruling that the interests of justice allowed waiver. Defendants could sell the potatoes; they just could not sell them as certified seed potatoes. Furthermore, defendants admitted that they had violated the contract. The statute allowing waiver of bond "in the interest of justice" is not limited to protection of the person against whom the injunction is sought, as claimed by defendants. Four Rivers Seed Co. v. Circle K Farms, Inc., 2000 MT 360, 303 M 342, 16 P3d 342, 57 Mt. Rep. 1533 (2000).

Mootness — No Appeal Absent District Court Ruling on Declaratory Judgment: The high school sports association decided that Grabow was ineligible to play basketball because his eligibility pursuant to the semester rule had elapsed while Grabow was an exchange student in Germany. Grabow filed a complaint in District Court asking for a declaratory ruling that the association lacked rulemaking and adjudicatory authority and requested a hearing on whether a preliminary injunction should be issued precluding enforcement of the association rule until the case could be adjudicated on its merits. After deciding that it was unlikely that Grabow would ultimately prevail, the District Court denied the injunction. Grabow appealed. The Supreme Court granted the injunction pending final disposition of the appeal, and Grabow played basketball during his senior year. The Supreme Court found that the 1999-2000 season was the only one in which Grabow claimed that he had a right to participate and that because the season was completed, the initial grounds for application of the mootness doctrine to the preliminary injunction issue were met. The declaratory judgment issue was not one capable of repetition, but was one that would evade review, so the Supreme Court remanded for further consideration of Grabow's complaint for declaratory judgment, which would then be subject to appeal following final judgment by the District Court. Grabow v. Mont. High School Assn., 2000 MT 159, 300 M 227, 3 P3d 650, 57 St. Rep. 654 (2000). See also Shamrock Motors, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 1999 MT 21, 293 M 188, 974 P2d 1150 (1999).

Disjunctive Rules — Single Subsection Improperly Used as Basis for Denial of Preliminary Injunction. Sweet Grass Farms, Ltd. (Sweet Grass), sought a preliminary injunction to halt building of a subdivision on land adjacent to Sweet Grass property. An applicant for a preliminary injunction must establish a prima facie case or show that it is at least doubtful whether or not irreparable injury will be suffered before the applicant's rights can be fully litigated. Here, the District Court denied the motion on the sole basis that it did not satisfy subsection (2) of this section, without considering any of the other subsections of this section, finding that the hardships that would be suffered by the developer outweighed those that would be suffered by Sweet Grass and that Sweet Grass would not be irreparably harmed if the subdivision were allowed to proceed during the pendency of the action. However, sale of any lots during the litigation would tend to render a judgment in favor of Sweet Grass ineffectual. The Supreme Court noted that the subsections of this section are disjunctive, meaning that only one subsection need be met for an injunction to issue. The District Court abused its discretion when it denied Sweet Grass's motion for a preliminary injunction based solely on subsection (2). The Supreme Court remanded with instructions to issue injunctive relief pursuant to subsection (3). Sweet Grass Farms, Ltd. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 2000 MT 147, 300 M 66, 2 P3d 825, 57 St. Rep. 576 (2000), following Stark v. Borner, 226 M 356, 735 P2d 314 (1987). See Shammel v. Canyon Resources Corp., 2003 MT 372, 319 M 132, 82 P3d 912 (2003), in which a manifest abuse of discretion standard was adopted for review of granting or denying an injunction.

Reversal of Denial of Preliminary Injunction — Consideration of Underlying Issues Precluded. On appeal of the merits of a preliminary injunction, plaintiff requested that the Supreme Court provide substantive guidance by addressing several underlying issues regarding interaction between injunction laws and subdivision statutes, as well as the likelihood of plaintiff to prevail on issues still pending in District Court. In determining the merits of a preliminary injunction on appeal, it is not the province of either the District Court or the Supreme Court to make final determinations on matters that might arise upon a trial on the merits. The request for substantive guidance was declined. Sweet Grass Farms, Ltd. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 2000 MT 147, 300 M 66, 2 P3d 825, 57 St. Rep. 576 (2000). See also Porter v. K&S Partnership, 192 M 175, 627 P2d 836 (1981), and Dreyer v. Bd. of Trustees of Mid-Rivers Tel. Co-op, Inc., 193 M 95, 630 P2d 226 (1981).

What Constitutes Prima Facie Case — Status Quo Clarified. An applicant for a preliminary injunction must establish a prima facie case or show that it is at least doubtful whether or not irreparable injury will be suffered before the applicant's rights can be fully litigated. In deciding whether an applicant has established a prima facie case, a court should determine whether a sufficient case has been made out to warrant the preservation of the property or rights in the status quo until trial without expressing a final opinion as to the rights. Status quo has been defined as the last actual, peaceable, noncontested condition that preceded the pending controversy. Here, the District Court denied a preliminary injunction solely on the basis of subsection (2) of this section, without considering any of the other subsections of this section, which in effect would allow development of a subdivision before the injunction applicant's concerns with the County Commission's conditional approval of the development could be addressed, including the fact that the Commission stated that the subdivision plat conformed to the master plan primary land use goals despite recommendations and findings of the planning board and staff to the contrary. In maintaining the status quo, the court should have granted the preliminary injunction pursuant to subsection (3) of this section. Final approval of the subdivision before resolution of the appeal of the conditional approval would allow sale of the lots, tending to render a judgment in favor of the applicant ineffectual. The case was remanded with instructions to issue injunctive relief. Sweet Grass Farms, Ltd. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 2000 MT 147, 300 M 66, 2 P3d 825, 57 St. Rep. 576 (2000). See also *Porter v. Question of Whether Preliminary Injunction Properly Granted — Appeal Moot: A student filed a complaint concerning her freshman eligibility to play college sports and requested a preliminary injunction to allow her to play. The injunction was granted. On appeal, the question was raised as to whether the injunction was properly granted. However, by the time the appeal was considered, the student had finished her freshman year. The Supreme Court held that the injunction issuance question was moot but remanded to allow the underlying claim to proceed. *Van Troba v. Mont. Party May Choose to Breach Contract and Pay Damages: American Music Co. (AMC) sued Higbee and requested a preliminary injunction for Higbee's not honoring the parties' contract by replacing AMC's gambling machines with other machines. The Supreme Court stated that an injunction was not available because a party has a right to breach a contract if the party is willing to pay the damages caused by the breach and, in the present case, the amount of damages could be determined. Am. Music Co. v. Higbee, 1998 MT 150, 289 M 278, 961 P2d 109, 55 St. Rep. 586 (1998).

Answer Pleading Insufficient Knowledge Creates Factual Dispute Subject to Trial — Disposition of Trial Issues by TRO Prohibited — Verified Complaint Not Basis for Agreed Facts — Denial of Due Process: After a writ of execution was issued against certain property belonging to her husband, Nancy filed a verified complaint against the Sheriff who would execute on the property. She also filed a petition for a temporary restraining order (TRO), claiming to be a tenant by the entirety in the property subject to execution. The District Court issued the TRO and, at a later show cause hearing, discussed the underlying law with counsel but took no testimony. The Sheriff then filed his answer, pleading insufficient knowledge to admit or deny. A creditor was later allowed to intervene. The creditor's answer also pleaded insufficient knowledge, but his brief took a position opposing Nancy's view of the law applicable to ownership of the property. Nancy then responded with a brief in which she asked the District Court to allow oral argument and reiterated her view of the law. The District Court issued findings and conclusions and quashed the writ of execution, relying upon the "undisputed" facts alleged in Nancy's verified complaint. The Supreme Court reversed, noting that under former Rule 8(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the effect of pleading insufficient knowledge is to deny a plaintiff's allegations. The Sheriff's and intervenor's answers pleading insufficient knowledge put into issue the allegations in Nancy's complaint. The only way that those issues of fact could be resolved, short of a trial on the merits, was by a motion for summary judgment or judgment on the pleadings, neither of which was made. The Supreme Court also noted that there was no discovery and no hearing at which facts were determined because there was no testimony taken by the District Court. Citing Porter v. K&S Partnership, 192 M 175, 627 P2d 836 (1981), and Knudson v. McDunn, 271 M 61, 894 P2d 295 (1995), the Supreme Court held that a District Court may not determine, in proceedings on a preliminary injunction or a temporary restraining order, those issues that may arise in a trial on the merits. In this case, the District Court negated Nancy's burden of proof and, without notice, precluded discovery and deprived the Sheriff and the intervenor of the opportunity to disprove Nancy's allegations concerning her right of ownership in the property, thereby depriving the Sheriff and intervenor of their right to procedural due process under the Montana Constitution. For these reasons, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court and remanded for proceedings consistent with the Supreme Court's opinion. Lurie v. Sheriff, 284 M 207, 944 P2d 205, 54 St. Rep. 847 (1997).

No Finding of Great or Irreparable Injury — Injunction Improperly Granted: The District Court granted a preliminary injunction in favor of First Interstate Bank of Commerce, as holder of a perfected security interest in a cattle herd, prohibiting the removal of the cattle from the family ranch as part of a marriage dissolution. Reversing the judgment, the Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion when it granted the injunction without first specifically finding that the bank would suffer a great or irreparable injury, as required in this section. First Interstate Bank of Commerce v. Ward, 282 M 266, 937 P2d 470, 54 St. Rep. 343 (1997). See Shammel v. Canyon Resources Corp., 2003 MT 372, 319 M 132, 82 P3d 912 (2003), in which a manifest abuse of discretion standard was adopted for review of granting or denying an injunction.

Grant of Preliminary Injunction — Prima Facie Showing of Violation of Constitutional and Contract Rights: A 1963 contract between the city of Billings and the Billings Heights County Water District fixed water rate charges and limited any subsequent rate increase charged the district unless the same percentage increase was applied to all city water users. Needing to raise additional revenue, in 1993, the city raised average water rates by 9.2% and the district rates by 32%. The district relied on the contract and increased its payments by 9.2%. In 1994, the city initiated an action to recover from the district the difference between the 1993 rate and the rate that the district paid from that time. In 1996, the city raised rates again, resulting in a 123% increase to the district and no such dramatic increase to any other city water customer. The district applied for a preliminary injunction to prevent the city from imposing the 1996 rate until the 1994 action had been addressed, but the application was denied and the district appealed. The Supreme Court found that the district made: (1) a sufficient showing that application of 69-7-101, granting the city control over utility rates, substantially impaired the district's rights under the 1963 contract; and (2) a prima facie case that application of 69-7-101 violated its rights under contract clauses of the U.S. and Montana Constitutions. Without ruling on the merits of the case, the court held that the district was thus entitled to the temporary injunction. Billings v. County Water District of Billings Heights, 281 M 219, 935 P2d 246, 54 St. Rep. 144 (1997).

Propriety of Preliminary Injunction in Context of Claim for Monetary Damages: The elements constituting the test to determine whether a preliminary injunction should issue when a party's monetary judgment may be made ineffectual by the actions of the adverse party, thereby irreparably injuring the applicant, are: (1) the likelihood that the movant will succeed on the merits of the action; (2) the likelihood that the movant will suffer irreparable injury absent the issuance of a preliminary injunction; (3) the threatened injury to the movant outweighs whatever damage that the proposed injunction may cause the opposing party; and (4) the injunction, if issued, would not be adverse to the public interest. The moving party has the burden of proving the elements. This analysis is to be narrowly interpreted because courts cannot countenance routine, meritless, or vindictive petitions for injunctions of this sort. An injunction is to be issued pursuant to subsection (2) or (3) of this section under only the most clear facts that fully satisfy the four-part test. This holding and the test apply only in cases in which a party seeking money damages alleges that the defendant is hiding or dissipating the assets in such a manner that a money judgment will be ineffectual or the plaintiff will be irreparably injured. Van Loan v. Van Loan, 271 M 176, 895 P2d 614, 52 St. Rep. 390 (1995). The four-part Van Loan test was applied in Shammel v. Canyon Resources Corp., 2003 MT 372, 319 M 132, 82 P3d 912 (2003).

Determination of Merits at Hearing Requesting Injunctive Relief — Reversible Error — Award of Attorney Fees Improper: Plaintiffs filed a complaint seeking an injunction pendente lite prohibiting defendants from completing construction of their home for alleged violations of subdivision building covenants. At a hearing, the District Court resolved the substantive issues of the complaint, deciding that the building covenants were ambiguous and unenforceable and that defendants had not violated the covenants, and awarded attorney fees and costs to defendants. It was error for the court to determine matters at the show cause hearing that should have been determined at a trial on the merits and to finally determine the merits before obtaining responsive pleadings and without allowing discovery. The court should have restricted itself to determining whether plaintiffs made a sufficient case to warrant preserving a right in status quo until a trial on the merits could be held. The case was remanded for further proceedings, and the award of fees and costs was reversed. Knudson v. McDunn, 271 M 61, 894 P2d 295, 52 St. Rep. 336 (1995), following Boyer v. Karagacin, 178 M 26, 582 P2d 1173 (1978), and Porter v. K&S Partnership, 192 M 175, 627 P2d 836 (1981), and followed in Billings v. County Water District of Billings Heights, 281 M 219, 935 P2d 246, 54 St. Rep. 144 (1997). Knudson was followed in Lurie v. Sheriff, 284 M 207, 944 P2d 205, 54 St. Rep. 847 (1997).

Vacation of Injunction for Failure to Support It With Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law: Because the District Court improperly failed to make supporting findings of fact and conclusions of law when it issued its injunction, the Supreme Court had no basis to decide whether the injunction itself was proper. Therefore, the Supreme Court vacated the injunction and remanded for reconsideration and issuance of findings of fact and conclusions of law. Traders St. Bank of Poplar v. Mann, 258 M 226, 852 P2d 604, 50 St. Rep. 509 (1993). Knudson was followed in Lurie v. Sheriff, 284 M 207, 944 P2d 205, 54 St. Rep. 847 (1997).

Money Damages Not Irreparable Harm — Injunction Denied: Employees of a bar were arrested for violating a city ordinance that prohibits nude dancing in establishments selling alcoholic beverages. The bar owners sought a preliminary injunction that was denied by the trial court. The Supreme Court held that under 27-19-103, an injunction cannot be granted to prevent the execution of a public statute for the public benefit without a showing of irreparable harm or a violation of a constitutional right as required by this section. Money damages are not considered to be irreparable harm because recovery of money damages is available in an action at law without resort to equity. New Club Carlin, Inc. v. Billings, 237 M 194, 772 P2d 303, 46 St. Rep. 731 (1989), followed in Dicken v. Shaw, 255 M 231, 841 P2d 1126, 49 St. Rep. 914 (1992), distinguished in Van Loan v. Van Loan, 271 M 176, 895 P2d 614, 52 St. Rep. 390 (1995), and clarified in Spoklie v. Dept. of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks, 2002 MT 228, 311 M 427, 56 P3d 349 (2002), to the extent that a mere showing of irreparable injury is not sufficient to overcome 27-19-103(4), and the only exception to the general rule that courts are prohibited from issuing injunctions to prevent the execution of a public statute by officers of the law for the public benefit is when a statute or ordinance is unconstitutional or otherwise invalid and when, in the attempt to enforce it, there is a direct invasion of property rights resulting in irreparable injury.

Partition Proceeding — Injunction May Be Granted: A court of equity may, in a partition proceeding, grant an injunction to preserve the property pending the proceeding. Granting a preliminary injunction is within the discretion of the trial court and will not be interfered with unless a manifest abuse of discretion is shown. Frame v. Frame, 227 M 439, 740 P2d 655, 44 St. Rep. 1216 (1987), followed in Tillett v. Lippert, 275 M 1, 909 P2d 1158, 53 St. Rep. 1 (1996).

Buyers in Default: The court properly found that buyers of ranch property were in default under their contract for deed before granting the sellers' application for injunctive relief to restrain the buyers from interfering with the sellers' repossession of the property. Stark v. Borner, 226 M 356, 735 P2d 314, 44 St. Rep. 717 (1987), affirmed in Stark v. Borner, 234 M 254, 762 P2d 857, 45 St. Rep. 1885 (1988).

Findings to Satisfy One Subsection Sufficient: The subsections of this statute are disjunctive, and findings to satisfy all subsections are not required for issuance of injunction. Stark v. Borner, 226 M 356, 735 P2d 314, 44 St. Rep. 717 (1987), affirmed in Stark v. Borner, 234 M 254, 762 P2d 857, 45 St. Rep. 1885 (1988), and followed in Sweet Grass Farms, Ltd. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 2000 MT 147, 300 M 66, 2 P3d 825, 57 St. Rep. 576 (2000).

Seizure of Legally Licensed Poker Machines — Injunction Proper: Issuance of a temporary restraining order and injunction to prevent Department of Revenue seizure of used poker machines entitled to legal licensure was proper. Buelow v. Willems, 225 M 225, 731 P2d 1309, 44 St. Rep. 189 (1987).

Injunction Pending Outcome of Agency Investigation: The Montana Power Company proposed a corporate reorganization. The Public Service Commission instituted an investigation of the reorganization plan and ordered Montana Power to take no further steps toward establishment of the holding company until the investigation was complete. Section 27-19-201(3) indicates legislative intent that an injunction might be issued in this fact situation where the Commission contends that permitting Montana Power to reorganize would render the Commission's final determination ineffective. Mont. Power Co. v. P.S.C., 206 M 359, 671 P2d 604, 40 St. Rep. 1712 (1983).

Findings and Conclusions Required With Injunction: The parties entered an oral agreement for plaintiff to loan money to defendant to purchase a semitruck, subject to an oral security interest and repayment schedule. Plaintiff later located defendant and the truck in Missoula and filed a complaint alleging breach of contract and replevin. An injunction was also requested. Following a show cause hearing, plaintiff was given immediate temporary custody of the truck and allowed to operate it to mitigate his damages. Defendant appealed the ruling under former Rule 1(b), M.R.App.Civ.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court vacated the injunction, holding that the court's order failed to preserve the status quo. It determined substantive property rights and did not set forth findings of fact and conclusions of law at the time the injunction was issued. Ensley v. Murphy, 202 M 406, 658 P2d 418, 40 St. Rep. 173 (1983).

Injunctive Relief Improper to Remedy Past Wrong: Injunctive relief was improper to compel appellants to comply with a state permit requirement that was in effect from 1975 through 1977. Injunctive relief cannot remedy a past wrong, and since all of the harm occurred in 1975 through 1977, there is no continuing nuisance subject to injunctive relief. Billings Assoc. Plumbing, Heating & Cooling Contractors v. Bd. of Plumbers, 184 M 249, 602 P2d 597 (1979). See also Mustang Holdings, LLC v. Zaveta, 2006 MT 234, 333 M 471, 143 P3d 456 (2006), and St. v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2011 MT 108, 360 Mont. 361, 254 P.3d 561.

Showing of Need for Temporary Restraining Order: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in initially issuing and subsequently refusing to quash a temporary restraining order when plaintiffs offered proof that they had suffered and would continue to suffer a loss of business unless defendant was restrained from parking in such manner as to prevent visibility of and proper ingress to plaintiffs' business. This showing was sufficient since there was no means of determining the precise number of potential patrons who passed by the drive-in due to defendant's vehicle or how much each would have spent upon entering. Boyer v. Karagacin, 178 M 26, 582 P2d 1173 (1978), distinguished in Van Loan v. Van Loan, 271 M 176, 895 P2d 614, 52 St. Rep. 390 (1995). See Shammel v. Canyon Resources Corp., 2003 MT 372, 319 M 132, 82 P3d 912 (2003), in which a manifest abuse of discretion standard was adopted for review of granting or denying an injunction.

Temporary Restraining Order — Jurisdiction to Continue: A temporary restraining order did not expire after a reasonable time without notice and hearing when it was due to the delays of defendant in changing counsel and disqualifying the judges called in. Thus, the court had jurisdiction to order a continuance of the temporary restraining order. Boyer v. Karagacin, 178 M 26, 582 P2d 1173 (1978).

Minority Business Enterprise Requirements — Public Effect: The court denied an application for a preliminary injunction to prevent defendants' enforcement of minority business enterprise requirements because a restraining order would have frustrated the congressional policy to immediately reduce unemployment and would have jeopardized the entire program in Montana. Mont. Contractors' Ass'n v. Secretary of Commerce, 439 F. Supp. 1331 (D.C. Mont. 1977).

Real Estate Cases:

An order enjoining landowner from proceeding with mobile home subdivision on his land until zoning regulations were adopted was improper because it was impossible to predict whether landowner's plans would conflict with zoning regulations finally adopted. State ex rel. Corning v. District Court, 156 M 81, 474 P2d 701 (1970).

Where, in action to quiet title and for injunction to prevent trespass on land in which plaintiff claimed title and defendants in answer claimed title by adverse possession which plaintiff denied, the pleadings presented the issues of title and ownership which the court had power to determine. Tiffany v. Uhde, 123 M 507, 216 P2d 375 (1950).

A wife may not obtain injunction to restrain her husband from selling property when her title to the property is not clear. Emery v. Emery, 122 M 201, 200 P2d 251 (1948), distinguished in Johnson v. Johnson, 137 M 11, 349 P2d 310 (1960).

Title to or right of possession of real estate is not triable by injunction. Emery v. Emery, 122 M 201, 200 P2d 251 (1948).

Where the house of plaintiff stood on the line of an alley which lay between her lots and those of defendant, the alley never having been dedicated to public use and being owned in equal portions by the litigants, and defendant commenced the erection of a fence on plaintiff's portion of the alley, which would have closed up certain windows in said house, injunction was properly granted as defendant's action was likely to produce an irreparable injury to plaintiff. Sankey v. St. Mary's Female Academy, 8 M 265, 21 P 23 (1889).

Clean Hands: To entitle an applicant to an injunction he must show not only that he is in danger of losing a substantial right but also that he is in no fault. Emery v. Emery, 122 M 201, 200 P2d 251 (1948), distinguished in Johnson v. Johnson, 137 M 11, 349 P2d 310 (1960).

Imminence of Injury: In addition to having a clear right there must also be an apparent and pressing necessity for an injunction, and the injury threatened must be imminent and such as can only be avoided by an injunction. Emery v. Emery, 122 M 201, 200 P2d 251 (1948), distinguished in Johnson v. Johnson, 137 M 11, 349 P2d 310 (1960).

Water Drainage: Complaint in an action by the owner of agricultural land to enjoin a neighboring owner from conducting drainage water onto the former's property until such time as defendant should provide an outlet for such water other than plaintiff's land, alleging that defendant by the course pursued would flood, destroy the productivity, and permanently injure plaintiff's property, stated a cause of action as against a general demurrer (demurrer abolished, former Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., now superseded), and findings for plaintiff were sustained by evidence. O'Hare v. Johnson, 116 M 410, 153 P2d 888 (1944).

Insolvent Defendant:

Where the trespass is continuous or where acts of wrong are repeated or threatened and the defendant is insolvent, injunction may issue pending suit by a lessor seeking restitution of the property from the lessee. Gibbons v. Huntsinger, 105 M 562, 74 P2d 443 (1937), distinguished in Davis v. Burton, 126 M 137, 246 P2d 236 (1952).

When it appears from the decisions in prior litigation that a mining company, in a pending suit, will probably recover a large judgment against another company for the value of ore extracted from veins owned by plaintiff, a court is authorized to grant an injunction restraining the defendant from extracting and selling the ore from its mine, where it is shown by affidavit that the result would be that it would not have sufficient property remaining to respond to the judgment. Mont. Min. Co. v. St. Louis Min. & Mill. Co., 168 F 514 (9th Cir. 1909).

Utility Rate Regulation: Citing Title 69, ch. 3, part 4 (now repealed), federal court did not have jurisdiction of suit to enjoin rate order issued by state Public Service Commission on ground that statute denied supersedeas or stay in state court, where United States Supreme Court has held a similar statute of state void as denying due process and this section would permit state court to grant stay on proper showing. Mont. Power Co. v. P.S.C., 12 F. Supp. 946 (D.C. Mont. 1935).

Relation of Injunction to Main Action: An injunction may be granted only with relation to something connected with the subject matter of the action in which it is sought; hence where the holder of a mortgage covering two adjoining tracts of land separately owned by husband and wife proceeded to foreclose as to the land owned by the latter only, he having purchased the husband's land at bankruptcy sale, the District Court properly denied defendant an injunction pendente lite to restrain plaintiff from interfering with the wife's possession of land formerly owned by the husband; such land not having been involved in the suit, the matter of its possession was foreign to it and injunction did not lie. Nat'l Bank of Mont. v. Bingham, 83 M 21, 269 P 162 (1928).

Water Rights: Where in a water right suit, plaintiffs had filed their complaint, positively verified, and introduced uncontradicted oral proof in support of their application for a temporary restraining order, defendants appearing by general demurrer (demurrer abolished, former Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., now superseded), and neither filing verified answer nor submitting evidence, the court did not abuse its discretion in granting a temporary injunction. Parsons v. Mussigbrod, 59 M 336, 196 P 528 (1921). See Shammel v. Canyon Resources Corp., 2003 MT 372, 319 M 132, 82 P3d 912 (2003), in which a manifest abuse of discretion standard was adopted for review of granting or denying an injunction.

Taxpayer's Action: The complaint of a city taxpayer which omitted to show that he was a police officer or that he would suffer a special injury by a resolution of the council authorizing the appointment of a commission to make a physical examination of the members of the police force for the purpose of ascertaining whether any one of them had, by reason of old age or disease, become permanently incapacitated to discharge the duties of his office was, under this section, insufficient as a basis for an injunction to restrain the examination or the incurring of the expense incident to it. Larkin v. Butte, 52 M 410, 158 P 316 (1916).

Prima Facie Case Required:

If, upon the hearing for a preliminary injunction, a prima facie case as to the truth of the charges of wrongful conduct by the defendant is not shown, the restraining order should be set aside and the injunction refused. Rea Bros. Sheep Co. v. Rudi, 46 M 149, 127 P 85 (1912).

If the plaintiff for a preliminary injunction makes out a prima facie case, or if, upon the showing made, it is left doubtful whether he will suffer irreparable injury before his rights can be fully investigated and determined, the court ought to incline to issue the injunction and preserve the status quo. Rea Bros. Sheep Co. v. Rudi, 46 M 149, 127 P 85 (1912).

Temporary Restraining Order: The purpose and office of a restraining order is merely to prevent such injury as may occur before the hearing for an injunction can be had and inquiry be made as to the truth of the preliminary showing made by the plaintiff. This is its only office. When the hearing has been had, its office is accomplished and it is without further efficiency. Rea Bros. Sheep Co. v. Rudi, 46 M 149, 127 P 85 (1912).

Attorney General's Opinions

Allegations Necessary for Petition for Injunctive Relief: A petition for injunctive relief under subsection (3) of 40-4-121 must allege physical abuse, harm, or bodily injury. 43 A.G. Op. 50 (1989).

Case Notes

Public Service Commission — Power to Issue Summary Injunction-Type Order: The Public Service Commission issued an order prohibiting Montana Power from proceeding with a proposed corporate reorganization until the P.S.C. could investigate the reorganization. The order was issued without notice or hearing. Section 69-3-110 shows the clear legislative intent that the Commission use the court system to seek enforcement by injunction, as distinguished from issuing the injunction-type order on its own part. Summary issuance of an injunction-type order without notice or hearing should be limited to situations where the public risk to be avoided outweighs the limitations placed on the constitutional rights of the parties. In this case the Commission has advanced no justification for its disregard of the due process rights of Montana Power. Mont. Power Co. v. P.S.C., 206 M 359, 671 P2d 604, 40 St. Rep. 1712 (1983).

Case Notes

Injunction Initiated by Application — No Right to Jury Trial: In an action to stop work based on the failure to obtain a building permit, the city may apply for an injunction with notice, and a complaint and a summons are not required. Under applicable statutes and because it is an action in equity, an injunction is granted by a judge and there is no right to a jury trial. City of Great Falls v. Forbes, 2011 MT 12, 359 Mont. 140, 247 P.3d 1086.

County Right-of-Way Considered Easement — Injunction Proper Remedy to Ensure Access to Right-of-Way: Jefferson County filed a complaint for a temporary injunction, an order allowing entry upon land to survey McCarty Creek Road, which passed through McCauley's land to public land beyond, and an order setting a show cause hearing. The District Court issued the injunction allowing the survey and set a date for hearing. At the hearing, the court found extensive documentary evidence, dating back to 1883, confirming the existence of McCarty Creek Road and, in its final order, determined that the road, as it crossed McCauley's property, was a dedicated and established county road. The court further enjoined McCauley from interfering with access or obstructing ingress and egress on the road. The Supreme Court affirmed, finding substantial credible evidence to support the District Court's determination and finding no abuse of discretion in enjoining McCauley from interfering with the public use of McCarty Creek Road. Jefferson County v. McCauley Ranches, 1999 MT 333, 297 M 392, 994 P2d 11, 56 St. Rep. 1329 (1999), following Bolinger v. Bozeman, 158 M 507, 493 P2d 1062 (1972), Reid v. Park County, 192 M 231, 627 P2d 1210, 38 St. Rep. 631 (1981), and Bailey v. Ravalli County, 201 M 138, 653 P2d 139, 39 St. Rep. 2010 (1982), and distinguishing Porter v. K&S Partnership, 192 M 175, 627 P2d 836 (1981), Knudson v. McDunn, 271 M 61, 894 P2d 295 (1995), and Lurie v. Sheriff, 284 M 207, 944 P2d 205, 54 St. Rep. 847 (1997). See Shammel v. Canyon Resources Corp., 2003 MT 372, 319 M 132, 82 P3d 912 (2003), in which a manifest abuse of discretion standard was adopted for review of granting or denying an injunction.

No Formal, Written Application Required for Injunction: Although reasonable notice of the time and place of making an application for a preliminary injunction is required under this section, there is no Montana statute that requires a party to submit a formal, written application or petition for an injunction. Buelow v. Willems, 225 M 225, 731 P2d 1309, 44 St. Rep. 189 (1987).

No Error in Issuance of Preliminary Injunction — Defendant Silent: The court held that the District Court did not err in issuing plaintiffs' preliminary injunction without defendants presenting evidence at the show cause hearing. The defendants remained silent at the hearing and did not raise an objection then or request plaintiffs to provide an offer of proof at the close of the hearing. This issue cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Bowman v. Prater, 213 M 459, 692 P2d 9, 41 St. Rep. 2236 (1984).

Injunction Without Notice: Petition by female minor for injunction prohibiting rodeo from refusing to allow her to participate as a bareback bronc rider was not such an emergency as to invoke the extraordinary remedies of the court without notice, bond, or plenary hearing. State ex rel. Reno v. District Court, 165 M 289, 529 P2d 1407 (1974).

Service of Affidavit: The provision of 27-19-304 (now repealed), that where an injunction order is granted upon the complaint accompanied by affidavit in support thereof, a copy of the affidavit shall be served with the injunction order, is mandatory, and failure to serve the affidavit constitutes a jurisdictional defect fatal to the subsequent issuance of an injunction pendente lite, the rule applying also under this section, the two sections being construable together. State ex rel. McKenzie v. District Court, 111 M 241, 107 P2d 885 (1940).

Judicial Proceedings Restrained: While the District Court has jurisdiction to grant a temporary restraining order to preserve conditions in status quo for a reasonable time until a hearing may be had on notice for an injunction pendente lite, it is without jurisdiction, in the absence of notice, to restrain pending suit, where the rights of the parties depend upon disputed title and ownership of the property in question. State ex rel. Cook v. District Court, 105 M 72, 69 P2d 746 (1937), distinguished in State ex rel. McKenzie v. District Court, 111 M 241, 107 P2d 885 (1940).

Restraining Order Distinguished: This section and 27-19-314 clearly make a distinction between an injunction and a restraining order. A restraining order is distinguishable from an injunction in that a restraining order is intended only as a restraint upon the defendant until the propriety of the granting of an injunction, temporary or perpetual, can be determined, and it does no more than restrain the proceedings until such determination. Such an order is limited in its operation and extends only to such reasonable time as may be necessary to have a hearing on an order to show cause why an injunction should not issue. Wetzstein v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 25 M 135, 63 P 1043 (1901), distinguished in Jordan v. Andrus, 26 M 37, 66 P 502 (1901).

Time of Hearing on Injunction: Where a temporary restraining order, pending the hearing of an order to show cause why an injunction should not issue, was against a mining company and suspended the operation of valuable property, it was an abuse of discretion to stay the hearing on the order to show cause 6 weeks from the issuance of the temporary restraining order, as it was unreasonable to suspend the operation of the mine for so long a period. Wetzstein v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 25 M 135, 63 P 1043 (1901).

27-19-303. Time of granting injunction, evidence required.

Case Notes

No Issuance of Preliminary Injunction for Encroachment Removal — Plaintiffs Failed to Reference Statute — No Factual Showing of Potential Ineffectual Subsequent Final Judgment: The plaintiffs asserted that, upon granting summary judgment declaring encroachments on land as trespasses, the District Court erred by failing to go further and issue a preliminary injunction for their removal. However, the Supreme Court reasoned that preliminary injunctions may not issue except upon evidence or affidavit considered at a duly noticed hearing. As applied, the plaintiffs abandoned their initial motion for a preliminary injunction by stipulation long before they moved for summary judgment, did not clearly articulate a renewed request for a preliminary injunction in their summary judgment motion, and in any event failed to request a preliminary injunction hearing on or incident to their motion for summary judgment. Moreover, though they requested that the court order ejectment of the encroachments, compel the defendants to remove the encroachments, provide for forcible removal if necessary, and conditionally authorize them to remove them if the defendants failed to act, nowhere in the plaintiffs' conflated summary judgment motion and briefing was any reference to 27-19-201, or a factual showing that the failure to grant a preliminary mandatory injunction would render ineffectual any subsequent final judgment that might include, as appropriate, final injunctive relief. Consequently, the District Court did not err in declining to issue a preliminary injunction for removal of the subject encroachments upon granting summary judgment declaring them as trespasses. Davis v. Westphal, 2017 MT 276, 389 Mont. 251, 405 P.3d 73.

Trespass to Land Established — Lack of Evidence on Summary Judgment Motion to Support Preliminary or Final Injunctive Relief: The District Court's interlocutory denial of preliminary or final mandatory injunctive relief was neither irreconcilable with its summary judgment declaring a trespass to land nor a manifest abuse of discretion. In support of a motion for summary judgment, the plaintiffs submitted only a one-page map prepared by a surveyor showing the boundary line encroachments, a copy of the defendants' letter accepting responsibility and apologizing for the encroachments, and the affidavit of one of the plaintiffs regarding the nature, discovery, and continued existence of the encroachments. Though this evidence was sufficient for the District Court to adjudicate the existence of continuing or recurring trespasses as a matter of law, the limited evidentiary record was insufficient to show a complete absence of any genuine issue of fact material as to whether the balance of the equities warranted the extraordinary remedy of a mandatory injunction compelling removal of the encroachments. This deficiency was particularly manifest based on the defendants' willingness to remove the encroachments upon determination or negotiation of a reasonable deadline for removal. Davis v. Westphal, 2017 MT 276, 389 Mont. 251, 405 P.3d 73.

Injunction Initiated by Application — No Right to Jury Trial: In an action to stop work based on the failure to obtain a building permit, the city may apply for an injunction with notice, and a complaint and a summons are not required. Under applicable statutes and because it is an action in equity, an injunction is granted by a judge and there is no right to a jury trial. City of Great Falls v. Forbes, 2011 MT 12, 359 Mont. 140, 247 P.3d 1086.

Court Discretion to Allow Witness Testimony Following Close of Case in Chief for Issuance of Preliminary Injunction: At a hearing for a preliminary injunction, plaintiff presented no evidence, stating that it would rely on its verified complaint as an affidavit. Defendant objected to use of the complaint as insufficient evidence in support of the injunction request. Following close of its case in chief, plaintiff requested that a witness be allowed to testify regarding the sufficiency of the verified complaint. The court allowed the testimony and subsequently granted the injunction. On appeal, defendant asserted that by allowing plaintiff to call a witness at that stage of the proceedings, the court erroneously allowed plaintiff an unwarranted second opportunity to present evidence. The Supreme Court noted that a District Court has general discretion to conduct proceedings in an appropriate manner and that the order in which proof is admitted at trial is also within the sound discretion of the trial court. In this case, plaintiff offered witness testimony not to offer new or additional facts but to verify the information in the complaint that defendant had objected to as technically insufficient. The District Court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the witness testimony or by relying on the evidence in determining whether to issue the injunction. The District Court was affirmed. Pinnacle Gas Resources, Inc. v. Diamond Cross Properties, LLC, 2009 MT 12, 349 M 17, 201 P3d 160 (2009). See also DeLaurentis v. Vaino, 169 M 520, 549 P2d 464 (1976), and Maxwell v. Anderson, 181 M 215, 593 P2d 29 (1979).

The court further enjoined McCauley from interfering with access or obstructing ingress and egress on the road. The Supreme Court affirmed, finding substantial credible evidence to support the District Court's determination and finding no abuse of discretion in enjoining McCauley from interfering with the public use of McCarty Creek Road. Jefferson County v. Canyon Resources Corp., 2003 MT 372, 319 M 132, 82 P3d 912 (2003), in which a manifest abuse of discretion standard was adopted for review of granting or denying an injunction.

No Error in Issuance of Preliminary Injunction — Defendant Silent: The court held that the District Court did not err in issuing plaintiffs' preliminary injunction without defendants presenting evidence at the show cause hearing. The defendants remained silent at the hearing and did not raise an objection then or request plaintiffs to provide an offer of proof at the close of the hearing. This issue cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Bowman v. Prater, 213 M 459, 692 P2d 9, 41 St. Rep. 2236 (1984). See Shammel v. Canyon Resources Corp., 2003 MT 372, 319 M 132, 82 P3d 912 (2003), in which a manifest abuse of discretion standard was adopted for review of granting or denying an injunction.

Verification of Complaint:

The purpose of the requirement under this section that a complaint be verified is to ensure good faith and truthfulness on the part of the complainant; where the requirement was not met, but at the trial complainant testified under oath as to matters found in the complaint, the issue of noncompliance was rendered moot. DeLaurentis v. Vainio, 169 M 520, 549 P2d 461 (1976).

On the hearing of an order to show cause why an injunction pendente lite should not issue, the proposed answer of defendant to the suit and the proposed answer of defendant to another suit concerning the same property, the complaint of which had been made a part of the present complaint, were properly rejected where the verifications of the same were on information and belief, as in such case positive verifications are required. Wetzstein v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 26 M 193, 66 P 943 (1901).

A restraining order cannot be granted on a complaint by a corporation verified only on information and belief; the affidavit of verification must be made positively. Butte & Boston Consol. Min. Co. v. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co., 24 M 125, 60 P 1039 (1900).

Insufficient Facts: Where petition or complaint fails to state any facts entitling plaintiff to injunctive relief, it was proper for District Court to dismiss. Gehring v. Warner, 169 M 275, 546 P2d 260 (1976).

Injunction Granted After Hearing: Portion of statute pertaining to affidavits does not apply to injunction issued on basis of hearing on order to show cause. State ex rel. Martin v. District Court, 151 M 41, 438 P2d 563 (1968).

Oral Answer: There cannot be a final joining of the issues based on an answer in the form of a general denial orally interposed by counsel upon a hearing to show cause why an abatement order should not issue under the provision of section 94-1002, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), and a permanent injunction and order of abatement cannot be ordered. State ex rel. Harrison v. Baker, 135 M 180, 340 P2d 142 (1959).

Service of Affidavit:

An order to show cause why a divorce decree should not be modified was not sufficiently served where nothing at all was served on the wife and where the wife's mother was served with the first order but without supporting affidavit. Hand v. Hand, 131 M 571, 312 P2d 990 (1957).

Where a temporary restraining order and an order to show cause why an injunction pendente lite should not issue were based upon the complaint and an affidavit in support thereof and the affidavit had not been served upon the defendant as required by this section, the trial court was without jurisdiction to order the injunction to issue and should have dissolved the temporary order and dismissed the proceeding upon motion of defendant. State ex rel. McKenzie v. District Court, 111 M 241, 107 P2d 885 (1940).

Contents of Affidavit:

In affidavit for restraining order to prevent defendant in divorce action from molesting plaintiff or entering their home, it was necessary to state facts showing specific improper acts or conduct. Emery v. Emery, 122 M 201, 200 P2d 251 (1948), distinguished in Johnson v. Johnson, 137 M 11, 349 P2d 310 (1960).

In affidavit for restraining order to restrain withdrawal of bank funds, statement that "the defendant is addicted to spendthrift and profligate habits" is a bare conclusion, and where there are no specific acts alleged, it is insufficient. Emery v. Emery, 122 M 201, 200 P2d 251 (1948), distinguished in Johnson v. Johnson, 137 M 11, 349 P2d 310 (1960).

The requirement that the affidavit should show that sufficient grounds exist for the restraining order is not met by statements of the legal conclusions of the pleader or of mere matters of opinion unsupported by sufficient facts. Emery v. Emery, 122 M 201, 200 P2d 251 (1948), distinguished in Johnson v. Johnson, 137 M 11, 349 P2d 310 (1960).

Where restraining order is granted on affidavits, they must contain a statement of the material facts essential to establish the applicant's right to the relief sought. Emery v. Emery, 122 M 201, 200 P2d 251 (1948), distinguished in Johnson v. Johnson, 137 M 11, 349 P2d 310 (1960).

Temporary Restraining Order: A temporary restraining order, a species of injunction, is designed to maintain conditions in status quo until a hearing can be had to determine whether an injunction pendente lite should be issued; it is auxiliary to the order to show cause why such an injunction should not be granted, and when hearing and decision on the show cause order have been had, the temporary order becomes functus officio and is ineffective for any purpose. State ex rel. McKenzie v. District Court, 111 M 241, 107 P2d 885 (1940).

Complaint as Basis for Order:

An injunction may be granted on the complaint alone where its material allegations setting forth the grounds for the relief asked are made positively and not upon information and belief. Peterson v. Fugle, 96 M 537, 31 P2d 1030 (1934).

In exigent cases, a preliminary injunction may be granted without notice, either upon the verified complaint alone or upon affidavits, if, in the opinion of the court, irreparable injury will result from the delay required by giving notice. Lowery v. Cole, 47 M 64, 130 P 410 (1913).

An injunction order may be made upon the complaint alone or upon the complaint with affidavits; in either case it must satisfactorily appear that sufficient grounds exist for granting it. Rea Bros. Sheep Co. v. Rudi, 46 M 149, 127 P 85 (1912).

Order Before Filing of Complaint: A temporary restraining order issued upon a reading of the complaint by the District Judge, which complaint was not filed until 2 days thereafter, was void and was not rendered valid by a modification thereof, after such filing, on a hearing of defendant's motion to dissolve the injunctive order, since then such an order could be made only upon affidavits filed. Labbitt v. Bunston, 80 M 293, 260 P 727 (1927).

Amendment of Affidavit: Where after motion to dissolve a temporary injunction but before hearing thereon, the court properly permitted plaintiff to substitute his affidavit made positively for one made on information and belief, the amendment related back to the commencement of the action, and it was error to dissolve the injunction after hearing on the ground that the complaint originally did not have a positive verification attached to it. Claussen v. Chapin, 69 M 205, 221 P 1073 (1923).

Insolvency of Defendant: The fact that the complaint seeking specific performance of a contract, under the terms of which defendant agreed, among other things, to take over certain lots owned by plaintiffs in discharge of a judgment held by her, and asking a preliminary injunction restraining conduct on defendant's part which would result in a condition rendering a final decree in favor of plaintiffs ineffective, failed to allege that defendant was insolvent did not render the court's action in granting the injunction erroneous; the pleading having been verified upon knowledge, the requirements of this section were met. Lowery v. Cole, 47 M 64, 130 P 410 (1913).

Affidavits as Evidence: Ex parte affidavits may be used by the plaintiff as evidence in support of an application for an injunction. Wetzstein v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 26 M 193, 66 P 943 (1901).

Compiler's Comments

1995 Amendment: Chapter 575 at beginning of first sentence in (1) inserted "Subject to 25-1-402", before "judge" deleted "court or", and after "applicant" deleted "in such sum as the court considers proper" and at beginning of second sentence inserted exception clause; inserted (1)(a) requiring undertaking to be fixed at a sum that the judge considers proper; in (1)(b) substituted language authorizing undertaking to the waived for language providing that undertaking may not be required; in (1)(b)(i), after "or", deleted "when the state or a state agency, a county or subdivision thereof, or a municipal corporation is the party seeking the injunction or restraining order. In any case, the court in its discretion may waive the undertaking"; inserted (2)(a) requiring judge to require filing of written undertaking if party seeks injunction or restraining order against industrial operation or activity and providing criteria for written undertaking; inserted (2)(b) defining industrial operation or activity; in (3) increased from 5 days to 30 days the time following service of injunction for enjoined party to object to sureties sufficiency; inserted (4) providing that section does not prohibit person wrongfully enjoined from filing action without limit on recovery; and made minor changes in style.

Case Notes

Question of Sufficiency of Bond Moot — Underlying Reasons No Longer Exist: The challenge to the sufficiency of a bond imposed by the District Court at a preliminary injunction hearing was moot on appeal to the Supreme Court when the conditions underlying the imposition of the bond no longer existed. Diana's Great Idea, LLC v. Jarrett, 2020 MT 199, 401 Mont. 1, 471 P.3d 38.

Motion for Written Undertaking Properly Denied Absent Active Industrial Operation or Activity: Defendant mining company moved for a written undertaking pursuant to this section based on its reclamation activities, even though the company was no longer engaged in mining. The motion was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The express purpose of an undertaking is to protect employees of the party enjoined from loss of wages, salaries, and benefits during the period that operations are enjoined. The injunction at issue in this case did not restrain the company from engaging in an industrial operation or activity, but rather required sequestration of proceeds from the sale of company assets. Therefore, this section was inapplicable, and a written undertaking was not required. Shammel v. Canyon Resources Corp., 2003 MT 372, 319 M 132, 82 P3d 912 (2003).

Voluntary Dismissal of Injunction Not Per Se Equivalent to Wrongful Issue of Injunction: The Osmolaks were granted a temporary restraining order against the Olsons in connection with a land deal, but before the show cause hearing, the Osmolaks were assured that the Olsons intended to perform as agreed in the buy-sell agreement, so the Osmolaks, convinced that there was no need to continue litigation, dismissed the action. The Olsons then sought attorney fees and costs for wrongful injunction, arguing that the voluntary dismissal had the same effect as a court decision finding that the Osmolaks were not entitled to the injunction. In defense, the Osmolaks sought to introduce into evidence the reasons why they had voluntarily dismissed the suit, but the District Court disallowed the evidence, holding that dismissal prior to an adjudication on the propriety of the injunction was an admission that the restraining order was without merit, entitling the Olsons to summary judgment and damages. The Osmolaks appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. An order of dissolution in such cases is not per se equivalent to a court determination of wrongful injunction, but is only prima facie evidence that the injunction was improperly issued and may be rebutted by the party against whom damages are sought. The District Court erred in resolving the case on summary judgment because the Osmolaks should have been allowed to introduce evidence that their voluntary dismissal was justified, so the case was remanded for further proceedings. Olson v. Osmolak, 2003 MT 151, 316 M 216, 70 P3d 1242 (2003), following Stewart v. Miller, 1 M 301 (1871), and distinguishing Hatch v. Nat'l Sur. Corp., 105 M 245, 72 P2d 107 (1937), and Sheridan County Elec. Co-op, Inc. v. Ferguson, 124 M 543, 227 P2d 597 (1951).

Preliminary Injunction Against Seed Potato Sale in Violation of Contract — Injury to Reputation, Investment, and Montana Farming: Plaintiffs contracted to sell generation two seed potatoes to defendants, which defendants would grow, with plaintiffs having the sole right to market the resulting generation three seed potatoes. Defendants replanted some of the generation three seed potatoes in order to grow their own generation four certified seed potatoes. Generation four is the point at which farmers can plant the potatoes for wholesale or retail sales. Plaintiffs were entitled to a preliminary injunction enjoining defendants from certifying their generation four seed potatoes. The potatoes of this variety are vulnerable to fusarium dry rot, and plaintiffs believed that it would take several more years for them to become acceptable. Plaintiffs were worried about the spread of fusarium dry rot in this variety of potato if defendants sold the potatoes. Plaintiffs had a good reputation in the field and were worried about the danger to Montana and their reputation and about the loss of their investment. If the potatoes were certified before plaintiffs' case against defendants was concluded, plaintiffs would likely lose the ability to keep generation four seed potatoes out of the market and would lose control over them. The lower court properly waived plaintiffs' posting of a bond to protect defendants, ruling that the interests of justice allowed waiver. Defendants could sell the potatoes; they just could not sell them as certified seed potatoes. Furthermore, defendants admitted that they had violated the contract. The statute allowing waiver of bond "in the interest of justice" is not limited to protection of the person against whom the injunction is sought, as claimed by defendants. Four Rivers Seed Co. v. Circle K Farms, Inc., 2000 MT 360, 303 M 342, 16 P3d 342, 57 Mt. Rep. 1533 (2000).

Determination of Merits at Hearing Requesting Injunctive Relief — Reversible Error — Award of Attorney Fees Improper: Plaintiffs filed a complaint seeking an injunction pendente lite prohibiting defendants from completing construction of their home for alleged violations of subdivision building covenants. At a hearing, the District Court resolved the substantive issues of the complaint, deciding that the building covenants were ambiguous and unenforceable and that defendants had not violated the covenants, and awarded attorney fees and costs to defendants. It was error for the court to determine matters at the show cause hearing that should have been determined at a trial on the merits and to finally determine the merits before obtaining responsive pleadings and without allowing discovery. The court should have restricted itself to determining whether plaintiffs made a sufficient case to warrant preserving a right in status quo until a trial on the merits could be held. The case was remanded for further proceedings, and the award of fees and costs was reversed. Knudson v. McDunn, 271 M 61, 894 P2d 295, 52 St. Rep. 336 (1995), following Boyer v. Karagacin, 178 M 26, 582 P2d 1173 (1978), and Porter v. K&S Partnership, 192 M 175, 627 P2d 836 (1981), and followed in Billings v. County Water District of Billings Heights, 281 M 219, 935 P2d 246, 54 St. Rep. 144 (1997). Knudson was followed in Lurie v. Sheriff, 284 M 207, 944 P2d 205, 54 St. Rep. 847 (1997).

Attorney Fees Denied to Governmental Agencies: Several state agencies were successful in securing the dissolution of an injunctive order and sought attorney fees from the other party, a private company. The agencies sought attorney fees on the basis that the attorneys involved could have been working on other projects and therefore reasonable fees were due the agencies as an element of damages. The Supreme Court ruled that since the agencies' attorneys were salaried employees, attorney fees were not incurred because no additional financial burden was placed on the taxpayers. N. Border Pipeline Co. v. St., 237 M 133, 772 P2d 839, 46 St. Rep. 681 (1989).

Waive Undertaking: On granting an injunction, the court may waive the undertaking in the interest of justice. In this case, the court protected the property buyers' interest by ordering the sellers and buyers to perform or refrain from performing certain acts. Stark v. Borner, 226 M 356, 735 P2d 314, 44 St. Rep. 717 (1987), affirmed in Stark v. Borner, 234 M 254, 762 P2d 857, 45 St. Rep. 1885 (1988).

Bond Inappropriate When No Order in Effect: In an action by a corporation for interference with a contract, the trial court, after dissolving a temporary restraining order that had been wrongfully issued, ordered the plaintiff corporation to post a bond under the authority of 27-19-306. This section is inapplicable because it provides for the posting of a bond by the party who obtained the order. In this instance, there was no order in effect at the time the court ordered posting of the bond. The purpose of 27-19-306, requiring a party who is granted a temporary restraining order or injunction to post bond, is to cover the cost of damages that may be suffered by a party who is wrongfully enjoined or restrained. Mktg. Specialists, Inc. v. Serv. Mktg. of Mont., Inc., 214 M 377, 693 P2d 540, 42 St. Rep. 32 (1985).

Recovery of Attorney's Fees According to a Reasonable Standard When No Bond Involved: Attorney fees and costs are recoverable under 27-19-306 as elements of the damages sustained by reason of an injunction which is later dissolved. Despite the fact that 27-19-306 provides for recovery by an action on an injunction bond, the Supreme Court may apply the same reasonable standard to those actions for attorney fees in which a bond is not involved. In making attorney fees an element of damages under 27-19-306, the Legislature did not intend to make the recovery depend on the judge's discretion in demanding an injunction bond. First Am. Ins. Agency v. Gould, 203 M 217, 661 P2d 451, 40 St. Rep. 402 (1983); Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981).

Consecutive Restraining Orders: Where bond was executed in connection with granting of temporary restraining order which was thereafter dissolved but on the same day the judge continued the restraint by another restraining order and continued the bond, the sureties on the original bond were liable for damages sustained through the period of restraint imposed by the second order. Sheridan County Elec. Co-op v. Ferguson, 124 M 543, 227 P2d 597 (1951).

Consideration for Bond: A bond executed pursuant to and in substantial compliance with this section needs no consideration. Sheridan County Elec. Co-op v. Ferguson, 124 M 543, 227 P2d 597 (1951).

Legal Expenses as Damages:

Fact that person suing on bond became obligated for attorney's fees in injunction is sufficiently shown by proof that he employed an attorney who procured a dissolution of the injunction and of the reasonable value of his services. Sheridan County Elec. Co-op v. Ferguson, 124 M 543, 227 P2d 597 (1951).

Where there was evidence as to expenses and attorney's fees in a sum in excess of the amount of the bond, it was error to grant motion for nonsuit but case should have gone to jury. Sheridan County Elec. Co-op v. Ferguson, 124 M 543, 227 P2d 597 (1951).

Under a bond given in accordance with this section, reasonable expenses are recoverable, including attorney's fees and costs of procuring the dissolution of the restraint from the time such restraint was imposed to the final determination thereof. Sheridan County Elec. Co-op v. Ferguson, 124 M 543, 227 P2d 597 (1951).

Plaintiffs in an action to recover on an injunction bond were entitled to an attorney's fee notwithstanding the party securing the injunction order voluntarily dismissed the proceeding before hearing of the order to show cause, where the evidence showed that some legal work was done in preparation of a motion for change of venue and to meet the order to show cause. Hatch v. Nat'l Sur. Corp., 105 M 245, 72 P2d 107 (1937).

The word "damages" as used in this section embraces the reasonable expenses and costs of procuring the dissolution of the injunction when wrongfully issued, including attorneys' fees. Foster v. Royal Indem. Co., 83 M 170, 271 P 609 (1928).

Attorney's fees paid or contracted to be paid in securing the dissolution of an injunction, recoverable as damages in an action on the injunction bond, are to be limited to compensation for services rendered before a hearing of the cause on the merits, except where a trial of the merits is the only available means of testing plaintiff's right to the injunction or where timely motion to dissolve has been made but decision withheld until trial upon the merits. McDermott v. Am. Bonding Co., 56 M 1, 179 P 828 (1919).

Court costs and witness fees necessarily incurred in procuring the dissolution of an injunction wrongfully issued are properly recoverable in an action on the bond. McDermott v. Am. Bonding Co., 56 M 1, 179 P 828 (1919).

If counsel fees come within the provisions of this section, then by the same rule of construction they fall within the purview of 27-18-204 and may be recovered as an element of damages on the contract of a surety. Plymouth Gold Min. Co. v. USF&G Co., 35 M 23, 88 P 565 (1907).

Measure of Damages: The measure of damages in an action on the injunction bond is the amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused by the injunction during the time it is operative or which in the ordinary course of things would be likely to result therefrom. Sheridan County Elec. Co-op v. Ferguson, 124 M 543, 227 P2d 597 (1951).

Voluntary Dismissal:

Where appeal was taken from action dissolving temporary restraining order and thereafter appellant dismissed his appeal, such dismissal constituted a final adjudication that appellant was not entitled to injunction, thereby making the sureties liable. Sheridan County Elec. Co-op v. Ferguson, 124 M 543, 227 P2d 597 (1951), distinguished in Olson v. Osmolak, 2003 MT 151, 316 M 216, 70 P3d 1242 (2003).

The voluntary dismissal or discontinuance by plaintiff of the action in which an injunction was issued has the same effect as a decision of the District Court that he was not entitled thereto and gives rise to a cause of action on the bond. Hatch v. Nat'l Sur. Corp., 105 M 245, 72 P2d 107 (1937), distinguished in Olson v. Osmolak, 2003 MT 151, 316 M 216, 70 P3d 1242 (2003).

Surety's Liability:

In an action on an injunction bond, the provisions of this section, with reference to what the party securing the injunction shall pay as damages to the party enjoined in case it be decided that the former was not entitled thereto, together with the terms of the bond, determine the contractual liability of the surety. Hatch v. Nat'l Sur. Corp., 105 M 245, 72 P2d 107 (1937).

A surety on an injunction bond contracts with reference to the provisions of this section, and his contractual liability is determinable by its terms and those of the bond. Foster v. Royal Indem. Co., 83 M 170, 271 P 609 (1928).

Plaintiff Not Entitled to Injunction: A finding of the District Court in its order of dissolution of a temporary injunction that "the court should not have granted the injunction in the first instance" was tantamount to saying that plaintiff "was not entitled thereto" and therefore sufficient to show a breach of the condition of the bond and to support judgment in favor of plaintiff in his action on the injunction bond to recover damages sustained by him incident to procuring dissolution of the injunction. Foster v. Royal Indem. Co., 83 M 170, 271 P 609 (1928).

Final Decision: Where a motion to dissolve an injunction pendente lite was not made because not authorized by law, the decision made by the District Court when the trial of the case on the merits was concluded and the injunction dissolved was the final decision, upon the making of which the sureties on the injunction bond had bound themselves to pay damages flowing from the wrongful issuance of the writ. McDermott v. Am. Bonding Co., 56 M 1, 179 P 828 (1919).

Interest as Damages: Whenever the direct and proximate effect of an injunction wrongfully issued is to deprive the party enjoined of the use of money which belongs to him, interest thereon at the legal rate for the time the money was impounded may be recovered by way of damages in an action on the injunction bond. McDermott v. Am. Bonding Co., 56 M 1, 179 P 828 (1919).

27-19-307. New undertaking for security following hearing.Compiler's Comments

1995 Amendment: Chapter 575 in first sentence, near beginning before "judge", deleted "court or", before "sureties" substituted "similar" for "like", and before "effect" substituted "same" for "like"; inserted fourth sentence requiring new undertaking to comply with 27-19-306; and made minor changes in style.

Case Notes

Bond Inappropriate When No Order in Effect: In an action by a corporation for interference with a contract, the trial court, after dissolving a temporary restraining order that had been wrongfully issued, ordered the plaintiff corporation to post a bond under the authority of 27-19-307. This section is inapplicable because it provides for the posting of a bond by the party who obtained the order. In this instance, there was no order in effect at the time the court ordered posting of the bond. The purpose of 27-19-307, requiring a party who is granted a temporary restraining order or injunction to post bond, is to cover the cost of damages that may be suffered by a party who is wrongfully enjoined or restrained. Mktg. Specialists, Inc. v. Serv. Mktg. of Mont., Inc., 214 M 377, 693 P2d 540, 42 St. Rep. 32 (1985).

27-19-314. Temporary restraining order.Case Notes

Injunction Granted Without Hearing — Grant of Relief Beyond Court Discretion: Without a hearing, a District Court granted an injunction enjoining a trustee from logging trust property, stating in its order and accompanying memorandum that it was granting the injunction regardless of whether the order strictly complied with injunction statutes. An injunction issued without a hearing is a temporary restraining order subject to expiration in 10 days. Because the court acted beyond its discretion and contrary to statutory mandates regarding injunctive relief, the Supreme Court dissolved the injunction. In re George Trust, 253 M 341, 834 P2d 1378, 49 St. Rep. 424 (1992).

Sworn Statement Concerning Mother's Threat Sufficient for Temporary Restraining Order: The sworn statement of the natural father that the mother had threatened to remove their children from the court's jurisdiction pending a determination of custody modification was sufficient grounds for issuing a temporary restraining order to prevent their removal. In re Marriage of Morazan, 237 M 294, 772 P2d 872, 46 St. Rep. 814 (1989).

Used Poker Machine Licensing — Temporary Restraining Order and Preliminary Injunction Proper: It was reasonable for the District Court to issue a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction when the court found that plaintiffs risked losing their used, unmodified video poker machines unless they could buy modification kits or new machines within 3 days and kits were not available. Under these circumstances, plaintiffs would suffer irreparable injury if they lost use of the used machines or had to buy more expensive new machines. As none of the criteria of the court orders changed or contravened the Video Draw Poker Machine Control Law of 1985, the Department of Revenue was not prevented under 27-19-103 from executing its duties. Further, it was also proper for the court to structure terms of the final order to protect licensees and limit the time for them to come into compliance with the new law. Mont. Tavern Ass'n v. St., 224 M 258, 729 P2d 1310, 43 St. Rep. 2180 (1986).

Department of Labor Not Limited to Investigation — "State" Claims No Justification for Restraining Order: The Supreme Court held incorrect the District Court's finding that the Department of Labor and Industry had only investigatory wage enforcement powers. The alleged but unproven harm incurred by an employer's having to defend "state" wage claims did not alone threaten the employer's rights sufficiently to justify court-ordered restraint of the Department. Further, the Department is required not only to inquire diligently into the validity of wage claims but also to determine their validity in a hearing. Intermountain Deaconess Home v. St., 191 M 309, 623 P2d 1384, 38 St. Rep. 272 (1981).

Order Only Effective for a Reasonable Time — Water Right Claim: A temporary restraining order is effective only for the reasonable time necessary to give notice and schedule a hearing to determine the appropriateness of an injunction pendente lite. The show cause hearing on the temporary restraining order did not produce a final determination on the merits of the plaintiff's water right claim. Eliason v. Evans, 178 M 212, 583 P2d 398 (1978).

Judicial Proceedings Restrained: While the District Court has jurisdiction to grant a temporary restraining order to preserve conditions in status quo for a reasonable time until a hearing may be had on notice for an injunction pendente lite, it is without jurisdiction, in the absence of notice, to restrain pending suit, where the rights of the parties depend upon disputed title and ownership of the property in question. State ex rel. Cook v. District Court, 105 M 72, 69 P2d 746 (1937), distinguished in State ex rel. McKenzie v. District Court, 111 M 241, 107 P2d 885 (1940).

Restraining Order Distinguished: This section and 27-19-301 clearly make a distinction between an injunction and a restraining order. A restraining order is distinguishable from an injunction in that a restraining order is intended only as a restraint upon the defendant until the propriety of the granting of an injunction, temporary or perpetual, can be determined, and it does no more than restrain the proceedings until such determination. Such an order is limited in its operation and extends only to such reasonable time as may be necessary to have a hearing on an order to show cause why an injunction should not issue. Wetzstein v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 25 M 135, 63 P 1043 (1901), distinguished in Jordan v. Andrus, 26 M 37, 66 P 502 (1901).

Time of Hearing on Injunction: Where a temporary restraining order, pending the hearing of an order to show cause why an injunction should not issue, was against a mining company and suspended the operation of valuable property, it was an abuse of discretion to stay the hearing on the order to show cause 6 weeks from the issuance of the temporary restraining order, as it was unreasonable to suspend the operation of the mine for so long a period. Wetzstein v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 25 M 135, 63 P 1043 (1901).

Part 4 Dissolution or Modification of Preliminary Injunction

27-19-401. Application to dissolve or modify injunction.

Case Notes

Taxation of Tribal Lands Allowed by Change in Federal Law — Inherent Court Power to Dissolve Injunction When Law Upon Which Injunction Based Changed by Subsequent Judicial Interpretation: In 1989, Jefferson, a member of the Crow Tribe, challenged Big Horn County’s authority to impose and collect real property taxes on reservation land owned in fee simple by enrolled tribal members and requested that the District Court permanently enjoin Big Horn County from assessing and collecting taxes on Crow Reservation lands in the county. In 1990, while Jefferson’s complaint was pending, the Ninth Circuit Court decided Confederated Tribes & Bands of the Yakima Nation v. County of Yakima, 903 F2d 1207 (9th Cir. 1990) (Yakima), which concluded that the Indian General Allotment Act of 1887 (GAA), 25 U.S.C. 349, manifested Congress’s unmistakably clear intent to permit states to tax land allotted under the GAA. The District Court then applied Yakima later in 1990 and ruled in favor of Jefferson, holding that because Jefferson’s land was never subject to the GAA, it was not taxable by the county. The court required Big Horn County to refund taxes paid under protest and remove Crow Tribe members from the tax rolls, stating that the declaratory ruling established a future tax-exempt status for land located within the Crow Reservation that was owned by Crow tribal members and not subject to the GAA. About 7 years later, the county moved to dissolve the 1990 decision on grounds that subsequent federal cases had established that alienable land owned by enrolled tribal members was subject to state ad valorem taxes even if it had not been patented in fee subject to the GAA. The county cited Cass County, Minn. v. Leech Lake Band of Chippewa Indians, 524 US 103, 141 L Ed 2d 90, 118 S Ct 1904 (1998) (Leech Lake), in which the U.S. Supreme Court rejected the Yakima rationale and held that when Congress made reservation lands freely alienable, it was unmistakably clear that Congress intended that land to be taxable by state and local governments unless a contrary intent was clearly manifested. The District Court then dissolved that portion of its 1990 decision that had granted a future tax-exempt status to tribal members, who appealed to the Montana Supreme Court on grounds that the doctrine of res judicata barred the District Court from vacating its decision. The state responded that the 1990 decision was a form of injunctive relief that the District Court could modify or dissolve pursuant to Santa Rita Oil & Gas Co. v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 112 M 224, 114 P2d 521 (1941) (Santa Rita). The Supreme Court found that the 1990 order was not strictly a declaratory judgment, but rather an injunction containing both retrospective and prospective relief, that 15-1-404 did not preclude the District Court from ordering injunctive relief, and that the court's declaratory judgment could not exempt Jefferson's property from future taxation without a further order of injunctive relief. Under Santa Rita, a court has inherent power to modify or dissolve perpetual injunctive relief based on a subsequent change in the judicial interpretation of a law. The judicial interpretation of the law upon which the 1990 relief was based was changed by Leech Lake; thus, the District Court did not err when it vacated the injunctive portion of its 1990 judgment. Jefferson v. Big Horn County, 2000 MT 163, 300 M 284, 4 P3d 26, 57 St. Rep. 682 (2000).

Pleading and Motion Distinguished: Affidavit to set aside temporary injunction granted without notice was not a responsive pleading in answer to complaint in original action to enjoin construction and operation of stock car racetrack as a nuisance. State ex rel. Thompson v. District Court, 132 M 53, 313 P2d 1034 (1957), distinguished in Guardian Life Ins. v. Bd. of Equalization, 134 M 526, 335 P2d 310 (1959).

Abatement of Nuisance: Where complaint and affidavits showed prima facie that premises constituted a nuisance per se under section 94-1002, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), it was error to quash the temporary injunction issued thereunder when defendant filed affidavit under this section and before any hearing on the complaint was had. State ex rel. Olsen v. 30 Club, 124 M 91, 219 P2d 307 (1950).

Affidavits and Testimony of Plaintiff: Plaintiff, in an abatement proceeding in which a temporary injunction was issued without notice, has the right to present affidavits and oral testimony at a hearing to dissolve the injunction in opposition to the motion to dissolve; since defendant knew of the time the hearing would be had and was advised by this section of plaintiff's right, service of notice of plaintiff's intention to ask leave of court to file affidavits and offer oral testimony was not required under 25-3-401. State ex rel. Bottomly v. District Court, 115 M 400, 143 P2d 559 (1943).

Burden of Proof: Where a temporary restraining order was issued upon the filing of the complaint to recover possession of lands in the hands of a cropper and order to show cause why an injunction pendente lite should not issue, and defendant moved to dissolve the temporary order while court erred in placing the burden of proof upon defendant, the error, in absence of showing of prejudice, will be deemed immaterial because order of proof is discretionary and on final analysis determination is dependent on where preponderance of the evidence lay. Gibbons v. Huntsinger, 105 M 562, 74 P2d 443 (1937).

Voluntary Dismissal: The voluntary dismissal or discontinuance by plaintiff of the action in which an injunction was issued has the same effect as a decision of the District Court that he was not entitled thereto and gives rise to a cause of action on the bond. Hatch v. Nat'l Sur. Corp., 105 M 245, 72 P2d 107 (1937).

Order Granted on Notice:

A temporary restraining order granted upon notice and after a hearing may not, in the absence of a showing of inadvertence, mistake, or change in existing circumstances or of a provision in the order preserving to the party enjoined the privilege of moving for a modification, be modified thereafter pending trial of the cause on its merits. Winnett Pac. Oil Co. v. Wilson, 71 M 250, 229 P 850 (1924).

Where an injunction pendente lite was issued after notice and a hearing, a motion to dissolve prior to trial upon the merits was unauthorized; it is only where the injunction issues without notice that the party enjoined may move for dissolution before a trial on the merits. McDermott v. Am. Bonding Co., 56 M 1, 179 P 828 (1919).

The manifest implication of this section and 27-19-404 is that, unless authority therefor exists elsewhere in the law, an application for the dissolution or modification of an injunction granted upon notice will not lie and that an injunction order so granted must stand, so far as the power of the District Court is concerned, until the cause in which it was granted is tried. Butte Consol. Min. Co. v. Frank, 24 M 506, 62 P 922 (1900).

Complaint as Basis for Motion: Where defendant's motion to dissolve a temporary injunction is based on the complaint alone, plaintiff has no right to file an affidavit in support of the complaint. Campbell v. Flannery, 29 M 246, 74 P 450 (1903).

Mandamus to Compel Hearing: Mandamus will not issue to compel a court to hear a motion to dissolve or modify an interlocutory injunction granted on order to show cause, based on the discovery of additional evidence tending to establish facts alleged in opposition to the injunction, where the motion to modify is based upon the same facts and rests upon the same grounds as those which had been presented in opposition to the granting of the injunction and where the privilege of applying for such dissolution or modification was not reserved in the order granting the injunction. Such hearing is in the discretion of the court. State ex rel. Hickey v. District Court, 23 M 564, 59 P 917 (1900).

Case Notes

Codification — Proper Statement of Law — No Practical Difference Between Two Versions: In an action by an out-of-state corporation against Montana parties for interference with a contract, it was discovered that the codified version of 27-19-405, a statute central to the case, differed from the corresponding official enrolled bill passed by the Legislature. The difference arose because the section was amended in two separate bills by the 1979 Legislature. The version as codified by the Code Commissioner is a hybrid of the two legislative enactments; there is no practical difference between the different versions of the section. The Legislature has given the Code Commissioner the power to change the language of a law without changing its substance or intent. The codification of 27-19-405 contained in the 1983 Montana Code Annotated is a proper statement of the law as intended by the Legislature. Mktg. Specialists, Inc. v. Serv. Mktg. of Mont., Inc., 214 M 377, 693 P2d 540, 42 St. Rep. 32 (1985).

Section Not Applicable to Dissolution of Temporary Restraining Order: This section applies to a case in which an injunction has been issued and presently is being dissolved. It does not apply to a case in which a temporary restraining order was issued but later was dissolved, such as occurred in this case. Mktg. Specialists, Inc. v. Serv. Mktg. of Mont., Inc., 214 M 377, 693 P2d 540, 42 St. Rep. 32 (1985).

27-19-406. Costs upon dissolution.

Case Notes

Statute Applicable Only Upon Dissolution of Injunction: A party obtained an injunction to keep a road open in a prescriptive easement case and then sought attorney fees. However, under this section, the grant of fees applies only to a party who obtains a dissolution of an injunctive order. Rasmussen v. Fowler, 245 M 308, 800 P2d 1053, 47 St. Rep. 2134 (1990).

Injunction Dissolved: Defendants requested and were entitled to costs and attorney fees in action where plaintiffs received an injunction pendente lite ordering defendants to remove a fence from the road and to allow plaintiffs to use the road, but the evidence later showed that plaintiffs had no easement rights in the defendant's land. Godfrey v. Pilon, 165 M 439, 529 P2d 1372 (1974). See also Parker v. Elder, 254 M 270, 836 P2d 1236, 49 St. Rep. 805 (1992).

Habeas Corpus: Where mother brought habeas corpus proceedings to enforce court order awarding custody of child in divorce proceedings, she was entitled to damages under the provisions of this section. Benson v. Benson, 121 M 439, 193 P2d 827 (1948).

Alternative Remedy:

This section is permissive only, and the court may therefore award such costs or leave the party enjoined to an action at law on the bond, if that instrument is so conditioned as to permit of such an action. Foster v. Royal Indem. Co., 83 M 170, 271 P 609 (1928).

Plaintiff in an action on an injunction bond after dissolution of the injunction, issued without notice, to recover expenses incident to procuring its dissolution, was not required to allege in his complaint that the court had awarded him costs in its order of dissolution and that he had served and filed a memorandum of costs and disbursements. Foster v. Royal Indem. Co., 83 M 170, 271 P 609 (1928).

Statutory Basis for Costs: The power to allow costs is purely statutory, and unless some statutory authority exists for their allowance, an allowance thereof is erroneous. Colusa-Parrot Min. & Smelting Co. v. Barnard, 28 M 11, 72 P 45 (1903).

CHAPTER 20 RECEIVERS

Chapter Case Notes

Farm Credit Administration Not Empowered to Abate Existing Lawsuits in Cases of Liquidation: Although 12 U.S.C. 2183(b) gives the Farm Credit Administration (FCA) power to provide for liquidation of a production credit association (PCA), it does not expressly empower the FCA to abate existing lawsuits; therefore, a motion by PCA to dismiss on the ground that the proceedings were barred or stayed due to PCA liquidation was denied. Jacobson v. W. Mont. Prod. Credit Ass'n, 643 F. Supp. 391, 43 St. Rep. 1598 (D.C. Mont. 1986).

Case Notes

Receivership Pendente Lite Appointment Not Appropriate in Dispute Over County's Alleged Deficit Spending: The District Court erred in appointing a receiver to determine personal liability of county officers in a case involving allegations that the officials had mismanaged the county's finances. Under 27-20-102, the limited purpose of a receivership pendente lite is to prevent imminent or irreparable harm to the property subject to litigation. Here, the court's stated purpose in appointing the receiver was to determine and report on the extent of the officials' personal liability, which is outside the limited circumstances prescribed by 27-20-102. Gottlob v. DesRosier, 2020 MT 212, 401 Mont. 72, 470 P.3d 194.

Plaintiff Not Required to Show Conclusively Entitled to Relief to Have Receiver Appointed so Long as Major Asset in Danger of Being Lost: Valley West appealed the lower court's appointment of a receiver, arguing that Crowley had not demonstrated that he was incontrovertibly entitled to relief in the trial that would follow. The Supreme Court held that a plaintiff only has to demonstrate a reasonable probability of success, particularly when the plaintiff has a lien on or an interest in the property in the hands of the defendant. The Supreme Court further held that the defendant's attempt to avoid execution on assets by judgment creditors, when Crowley was the only creditor, demonstrated that the major asset in the parties' transactions was in danger of loss, removal, or material injury. Crowley v. Valley W. Water Co., 267 M 144, 882 P2d 1022, 51 St. Rep. 976 (1994).

Receivership Denied — Sale of Stock to Corporation Ordered — Value of Stock: Brother and sister, each owning 75 shares of family ranch incorporated into 1,000 shares, sued brother (owning 849 shares) and mother (owning 1 share) who lived on the ranch for receivership and sale of the ranch. Plaintiff brother settled for $20,000 and 20 acres of the ranch land in return for his shares. The court ordered sister to settle on the same terms. On remand for valuation of the corporation and its land, the lower court computed the net worth of the corporation, found the sister's shares worth $49,326.38, and ordered her to transfer her shares to the corporation for $9,326.38 and 20 acres of the ranch that would be worth $40,000. This was also overturned on appeal, the Supreme Court ordering that sister be paid $20,000 and 20 acres. Maddox v. Norman, 215 M 458, 697 P2d 1368, 42 St. Rep. 539 (1985).

Debt as Basis for Appointment:

Where bank held stock as security on loans made by farming corporation but it appeared that stockholders were, in good faith, planning to meet their obligation and the corporation was solvent, appointment of receiver at instance of bank merely to protect the price of the stock was erroneous. State ex rel. Larry C. Iverson, Inc. v. District Court, 146 M 362, 406 P2d 828 (1965).

In the absence of a statute so providing, a receiver of a corporation may not be appointed on petition of a general creditor. Mieyr v. Fed. Sur. Co., 94 M 508, 23 P2d 959 (1933), reversed on other grounds, 292 US 112, 78 L Ed 1160, 54 S Ct 615 (1934). See also Mieyr v. Fed. Sur. Co., 97 M 503, 34 P2d 982 (1934), affirmed in 294 US 211, 79 L Ed 865, 55 S Ct 356 (1935).

While a receiver pendente lite may be appointed, upon a proper showing, in an action involving conflicting rights to the subject matter of the action, to husband the property for the benefit of the party who may be ultimately found entitled thereto, this section contains no authority for the appointment of such an officer in a bare action for debt. Scholefield v. Merrill Mortuaries, Inc., 93 M 192, 17 P2d 1081 (1932).

Extraordinary Remedy:

Appointment of a receiver being a "drastic" remedy, which deprives the lawful owner of property the right to manage and control his own interests, the power to appoint a receiver should be exercised sparingly only upon a strong showing and not as of course. If the desired outcome may be achieved in any other way, then this course should be followed. State ex rel. Larry C. Iverson, Inc. v. District Court, 146 M 362, 406 P2d 828 (1965). See also Crowley v. Valley W. Water Co., 267 M 144, 882 P2d 1022, 51 St. Rep. 976 (1994).

Receivership is an extraordinary provisional remedy of ancillary character, allowable only in an action pending for some other purpose; the power of appointment should be exercised with unusual caution and only to prevent manifest wrong imminently impending or where the case shows clearly that the complaining party is in danger of suffering irreparable loss and there is no other plain, speedy, or adequate remedy. Doggett v. Johnson, 72 M 443, 234 P 252 (1925).

Receivership is an extraordinary remedy, never to be allowed except upon a showing that it is necessary. Masterson v. Hubbert, 54 M 613, 173 P 421 (1918); Mont. Ranches Co. v. Dolan, 53 M 397, 164 P 306 (1917); Prudential Sec. Co. v. Three Forks, Helena & Madison Valley R.R., 49 M 567, 144 P 158 (1914); Brown v. Erb-Harper-Rigney Co., 48 M 17, 133 P 691 (1913); Berryman v. Billings Mut. Heating Co., 44 M 517, 121 P 280 (1912).

This section is to be read in connection with the recognized principle that receivership is an extraordinary remedy, never to be allowed except upon a showing that it is necessary; no such showing is made by mere insolvency, nor, by a parity of reasoning, because the conduct of the corporation has been such that its corporate rights are subject to forfeiture. Prudential Sec. Co. v. Three Forks, Helena & Madison Valley R.R., 49 M 567, 144 P 158 (1914).

Judgment as Basis for Appointment:

Plaintiff wife's joint interest in a house trailer was merged in a Washington divorce decree ordering sale of the trailer or, in the alternative, awarding plaintiff lump-sum alimony. In a suit in Montana, the suit is on the debt created by the judgment, and for the collection of a judgment debt the relief by receiver does not lie. Little v. Little, 125 M 278, 234 P2d 832 (1951).

This section does not authorize the appointment of a receiver when a money judgment has been recovered in a simple action at law, as the creditor can himself take the necessary steps to enforce the judgment. Forsell v. Pittsburg & Mont. Copper Co., 42 M 412, 113 P 479 (1911).

Trusts: In an action to quiet title to mining property owned by a common-law trust of five trustees, the interest of one of whom had allegedly been transferred to cross complainant who had never received his stock, resulting in a hopeless deadlock of the remaining four in business matters by a vote of two to two, the remedies provided by the trust agreement should have been exhausted before the appointment of a receiver, and under 72-23-507 (now repealed) the court could appoint a successor to fill the vacancy if the agreement does not provide a method. Demos v. Doecker, 116 M 264, 149 P2d 544 (1944).

Partnership Property:

The purpose of appointing a receiver in an action for the dissolution of a partnership is to prevent the partner at fault from dissipating the common property; it is not the province of the court, through its receiver, to become the general manager of a private enterprise or conduct the business of a partnership; the power to appoint is to be exercised sparingly and with extreme caution; it should be resorted to only in cases of emergency because of the harshness of the remedy, particularly where both parties have equal rights of possession and management of the property and neither has excluded the other from enjoyment of his possession or rents and profits. Stoner v. Hannan, 113 M 210, 127 P2d 233 (1942), followed in Crowley v. Valley W. Water Co., 267 M 144, 882 P2d 1022, 51 St. Rep. 976 (1994), and Sandrock v. DeTienne, 2010 MT 237, 358 Mont. 175, 243 P.3d 1123.

Under the rules of subsections (1) and (5) (see 2009 amendment), the discretion in granting or denying an application for appointment of a receiver is limited. The following reasons are insufficient grounds for appointments unless partnership assets or operation are endangered: mortgage, with complainant's consent; withdrawals in proportion to partner's interest or profits out of collections for personal obligations evidenced by tabs left in the till; the fact that the partnership is losing money or is considerably in debt; or mere disagreement between partners preventing their speaking to each other. Stoner v. Hannan, 113 M 210, 127 P2d 233 (1942).

A proper case for the appointment of a receiver is not shown where it appeared from the complaint that all the joint operations in respect to the partnership property had been consummated except the collection of the balance of the price for which it had been sold and there remained simply a dispute between plaintiff and defendant as to the proper apportionment of the fund arising from the sale of the property, there being no averment that the defendant was insolvent or that the partnership fund was in danger of being lost, squandered, or removed from the jurisdiction. McIntosh v. Perkins, 13 M 143, 32 P 653 (1893).

Pending Action Required:

Under this section, a receiver for a dissolved or insolvent corporation may be appointed only in an action pending. Mieyr v. Fed. Sur. Co., 97 M 503, 34 P2d 982 (1934), affirmed in 294 US 211, 79 L Ed 865, 55 S Ct 356 (1935).

The power to appoint a receiver should be exercised sparingly and with extreme caution and only to prevent manifest wrong immediately impending or irreparable injury; to invoke the power there must be an action pending in which the right asserted can be litigated and a judgment rendered. Scholefield v. Merrill Mortuaries, Inc., 93 M 192, 17 P2d 1081 (1932).

The action which, under this section, is required to be pending before ancillary relief by way of receivership may be granted must be one for relief that could be litigated even though the application for the appointment of a receiver be denied and presupposes a sufficient complaint. Hartnett v. St. Louis Min. & Mill. Co., 51 M 395, 153 P 437 (1915).

There is no such thing in this state as an action for the appointment of a receiver. Hartnett v. St. Louis Min. & Mill. Co., 51 M 395, 153 P 437 (1915).

Receivership is a provisional remedy of ancillary character, allowable only in an action pending for some other purpose. Hartnett v. St. Louis Min. & Mill. Co., 51 M 395, 153 P 437 (1915); State ex rel. First Trust & Sav. Bank v. District Court, 50 M 259, 146 P 539 (1915); Lyon v. USF&G Co., 48 M 591, 140 P 86 (1914).

An action may not be brought for the appointment of a receiver; to justify such appointment, there must be an action pending, as provided in this section. State ex rel. First Trust & Sav. Bank v. District Court, 50 M 259, 146 P 539 (1915).

Mortgage Foreclosure:

A mortgage on farm lands contained an acceleration clause and provided that on breach of the contract the rents and profits should at once accrue to the benefit of the mortgagee; it did not authorize the latter to take possession. At the time suit to foreclose was brought no part of the principal ($31,000) had been paid, and interest amounting to $10,000 remained unpaid. Showing was made that the property was worth no more than $25,000. Unpaid taxes amounted to about $2,000. The court did not err in appointing a receiver pendente lite. Hastings v. Wise, 89 M 325, 297 P 482 (1931).

The rule that a receiver will not be appointed in a mortgage foreclosure action unless it is probable that the mortgagee will succeed in his action was met by the showing made by plaintiff justifying the conclusion of his ultimate success. Hastings v. Wise, 89 M 325, 297 P 482 (1931).

In an action for the foreclosure of a mortgage on residence property and other relief in which it appeared that for failure to file a renewal affidavit, the mortgage lien had expired prior to the commencement of the action and that plaintiff was in possession of the property, etc., there was no manifest abuse of the trial court's discretion in refusing to appoint a receiver. Pereira v. Wulf, 83 M 343, 272 P 532 (1928).

Rents and Profits:

Where rents and profits are pledged for the payment of a debt secured by mortgage on lands from which they flow, they with the lands are primarily liable for each payment, and an application for the appointment of a receiver to take possession of such rents and profits pending determination of foreclosure proceedings should ordinarily be granted, regardless of the solvency or insolvency of the mortgagor, unless the court be satisfied that the mortgaged land, exclusive of rents and profits, is ample security for the payment of the debt. Hastings v. Wise, 89 M 325, 297 P 482 (1931).

If a mortgagee desires to avail himself of his right to rents and profits pledged by a mortgage which does not give him the right of immediate possession, he must invoke the aid of a court of equity for the appointment of a receiver to take possession of the rents and profits under this section; if he forecloses without asking for such appointment he waives his right to the rents and profits accruing before foreclosure, since foreclosure may not be had by piecemeal, and the mortgagor is entitled to them. Long v. W. P. Devereux Co., 87 M 198, 286 P 402 (1930).

Burden of Proof: A party seeking the appointment of a receiver has the burden of showing to the trial court that his case falls within this section, and on appeal from an order denying relief he must be able to show that the court manifestly abused its discretion. Pereira v. Wulf, 83 M 343, 272 P 532 (1928).

Discretion of Trial Court:

Receivership is an extraordinary remedy of an ancillary character, its purpose being to husband the property in litigation for the benefit of the person who may ultimately be found entitled thereto; it is never a matter of right, but the application is addressed to the sound legal discretion of the court, which discretion must be exercised sparingly and with unusual caution and only to prevent manifest wrong immediately impending or where it is made to appear clearly that plaintiff is in danger of suffering irreparable injury and there is no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy available. Pereira v. Wulf, 83 M 343, 272 P 532 (1928).

An application for the appointment of a receiver is addressed to the sound legal discretion of the trial court. Mont. Ranches Co. v. Dolan, 53 M 397, 164 P 306 (1917); Hartnett v. St. Louis Min. & Mill. Co., 51 M 395, 153 P 437 (1915); Brown v. Erb-Harper-Rigney Co., 48 M 17, 133 P 691 (1913); Hickey v. Parrot Silver & Copper Co., 25 M 164, 64 P 330 (1901).

The power to appoint a receiver is to be exercised sparingly and not as of course. A strong showing should be made, and even then the authority must be exercised with conservatism and caution. Hartnett v. St. Louis Min. & Mill. Co., 51 M 395, 153 P 437 (1915); Brown v. Erb-Harper-Rigney Co., 48 M 17, 133 P 691 (1913); Jacobs v. Jacobs Mercantile Co., 37 M 321, 96 P 723 (1908); Hickey v. Parrot Silver & Copper Co., 25 M 164, 64 P 330 (1901).

Quiet Title Actions: Quaere: May a receiver be appointed in an action to quiet title, under subsection (5) (see 2009 amendment)? Doggett v. Johnson, 77 M 461, 251 P 145 (1926).

Landlord and Tenant:

An action in unlawful detainer itself afforded plaintiff landlord speedy and adequate relief against the unlawful holding over by his tenant, and the appointment of a receiver therein was unwarranted. Doggett v. Johnson, 72 M 443, 234 P 252 (1925).

A lessee is no more entitled to have a receiver appointed than is his landlord. Hickey v. Parrot Silver & Copper Co., 25 M 164, 64 P 330 (1901).

Danger of Loss or Injury:

The power to appoint a receiver is to be exercised sparingly and with unusual caution and only to prevent manifest wrong imminently impending or where there is no other plain, speedy, or adequate remedy. Masterson v. Hubbert, 54 M 613, 173 P 421 (1918); Mont. Ranches Co. v. Dolan, 53 M 397, 164 P 306 (1917). See also Pac. Coast Pipe Co. v. Conrad City Water Co., 245 F 846 (9th Cir. 1917).

To justify the appointment of a receiver, it must appear that the property is in danger of being lost, removed, or materially injured. Brown v. Erb-Harper-Rigney Co., 48 M 17, 133 P 691 (1913).

The provision of (1) of this section, that "on the application of the plaintiff or of any party whose right or interest in the property is probable, and where the property is in danger of being lost or materially injured", cannot be construed as creating new cases for a receiver but merely provides on whose application and under what circumstances the appointment may be made in the cases already enumerated. State ex rel. N.Y. Sheep Co. v. District Court, 14 M 577, 37 P 969 (1894).

Purpose of Remedy: Receivership is an extraordinary remedy of ancillary character, the chief reason for its allowance being to husband the property in litigation for the benefit of the person who may ultimately be found entitled thereto. Lyon v. USF&G Co., 48 M 591, 140 P 86 (1914).

Attached Property:

Neither (1) nor (5) (see 2009 amendment) of this section authorizes the appointment of a receiver in an attachment suit. Berryman v. Billings Mut. Heating Co., 44 M 517, 121 P 280 (1912).

An action for debt in which defendant's property has been attached is not an action by a creditor to subject any property or fund to his claim, nor is it an action between persons jointly interested in any property or fund and is not within subsection (1). State ex rel. N.Y. Sheep Co. v. District Court, 14 M 577, 37 P 969 (1894), distinguished in Merchants' Nat'l Bank v. Greenhood, 16 M 395, 41 P 250 (1895).

The District Court has no jurisdiction, under either subsection (1) or (5) (see 2009 amendment), in actions for debt in which the debtor's property has been attached, to appoint a receiver of the property so attached, on the application of a junior attaching creditor, though it appears that the property may be lost or materially injured if left in the hands of the Sheriff. State ex rel. N.Y. Sheep Co. v. District Court, 14 M 577, 37 P 969 (1894), distinguished in Merchants' Nat'l Bank v. Greenhood, 16 M 395, 41 P 250 (1895).

Execution as Basis for Appointment: A receiver cannot be appointed in aid of execution where no proceedings in aid of execution have been had and no property has been found. Forsell v. Pittsburg & Mont. Copper Co., 42 M 412, 113 P 479 (1911).

Injunction Proceedings: Under subsection (5) (see 2009 amendment), a receiver will not be appointed in an action for an injunction against trespasses, with power to take away the substance of the estate, on the ground that the defendant will enjoin or has enjoined the plaintiff in possession from extracting ore from the property. Hickey v. Parrot Silver & Copper Co., 25 M 164, 64 P 330 (1901).

Mining Leases: Under subsection (5) (see 2009 amendment), the lessee in possession of a certain mine, the operation of which was enjoined pending the settlement of a dispute as to title between the lessor and others, was not entitled to the appointment of a receiver, with power to remove ore, on the ground that his lease would expire before final adjudication and hence be rendered valueless by the injunction. Hickey v. Parrot Silver & Copper Co., 25 M 164, 64 P 330 (1901).

Assignee of Insolvent: Neither an original assignee nor his successor, as such, is a receiver, and the successor of the assignee of an insolvent may be sued without leave of court. Babcock v. Maxwell, 21 M 507, 54 P 943 (1898). See Aetna Accident & Liab. Co. v. Miller, 54 M 377, 170 P 760 (1918).

27-20-103. Appointment of receiver upon dissolution of corporation.

Case Notes

Statutory Authority Required: In the absence of a statute so providing, a receiver of a corporation may not be appointed on petition of a general creditor. Mieyr v. Fed. Sur. Co., 97 M 503, 34 P2d 982 (1934), affirmed in 294 US 211, 79 L Ed 865, 55 S Ct 356 (1935); Mieyr v. Fed. Sur. Co., 94 M 508, 23 P2d 959 (1933), reversed on other grounds, 292 US 112, 78 L Ed 1160, 54 S Ct 615 (1934).

Trust of Assets: Under this section the directors of a corporation, on dissolution of the same, become trustees, with power to settle its affairs and to sell property but without title, which, subject to the trust, vests in the stockholders, who, as to its real estate, become tenants in common. Barker v. Edwards, 259 F 484 (9th Cir. 1919).

Case Notes

Waiver of Notice:

Where one of counsel for defendant mortgagor, though present in court when the mortgagee asked for the appointment of a receiver, did not object to taking up the matter at that time or protest because of lack of statutory notice, but he and cocounsel had anticipated the application and concluded not to do anything because the complaint was insufficient, and thereafter for a number of years knew of the appointment of the officer, defendant waived formal notice of the application. Burgess v. Lasby, 94 M 534, 24 P2d 147 (1933).

While notice of application for the appointment of a receiver to defendant is necessary where he has appeared in the action, notice may be waived, and recognition of the receivership and efforts to obtain benefits thereunder estop him from attacking the validity of the appointment. Burgess v. Lasby, 94 M 534, 24 P2d 147 (1933).

Litigated Rights in Danger: To justify the appointment of a receiver without notice, it must be made to appear that the delay resulting from giving notice would defeat the very right which plaintiff seeks to protect or imperil the property involved in the litigation. Masterson v. Hubbert, 54 M 613, 173 P 421 (1918).

Immediate Danger:

Under this section, the burden is on the applicant to show that there is immediate danger of the removal, loss, or destruction of the property or fund so as to authorize the appointment ex parte, and when the case is brought before a court of review, such showing must affirmatively appear from the record. Benepe-Owenhouse Co. v. Scheidegger, 32 M 424, 80 P 1024 (1905).

A showing that there was imminent danger that property in the possession of defendant would be removed beyond the jurisdiction of the District Court and unlawfully disposed of unless a receiver were appointed ex parte is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction to appoint such receiver without notice of the application therefor. State ex rel. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. District Court, 22 M 241, 56 P 281 (1899); State ex rel. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. District Court, 22 M 376, 56 P 687 (1899).

An order appointing a receiver, made before judgment is entered in the action, will be vacated when it is made without notice to the adverse party, whose time to appear in the action has not expired, unless it is made to appear to the District Court that there is immediate danger that the property or fund for which a receiver is sought will be removed from the jurisdiction of the court or lost, materially injured, destroyed, or unlawfully disposed of. State ex rel. Thornton-Thomas Mercantile Co. v. Clancy, 20 M 284, 50 P 852 (1897).

Corporate Dissolution: A complaint which merely alleges mismanagement of the business of a corporation, a resolution of the stockholders to wind up the business of the company because it was losing money, the refusal of the officers to comply with the resolution, and that they were wrongfully, fraudulently, and willfully carrying on and continuing the same in violation of the resolution in order that they might convert the proceeds of the business to their own benefit does not state facts sufficient to justify the granting of an order appointing a receiver, when the application is made before judgment and without notice to the adverse party who is not in default. State ex rel. Thornton-Thomas Mercantile Co. v. Clancy, 20 M 284, 50 P 852 (1897). See also State ex rel. Johnston v. District Court, 21 M 155, 53 P 272 (1898).

Case Notes

Property Not Returned: In an action on an undertaking, conditioned as prescribed in this section, the value of property delivered to the receiver but not returned by him may be recovered even though it is not shown that the loss was due to his fault or that it could not have occurred without his fault. Lyon v. USF&G Co., 48 M 591, 140 P 86 (1914), distinguished in St. John v. Taintor, 56 M 204, 182 P 129 (1919).

Wrongful and Malicious Appointment:

In an action on an undertaking given pursuant to the provisions of this section, an adjudication that the appointment of the receivership was procured wrongfully, maliciously, and without sufficient cause may be implied from the final decree in the primary suit, adjudging the ownership of the property to be in the defendant. Lyon v. USF&G Co., 48 M 591, 140 P 86 (1914), distinguished in St. John v. Taintor, 56 M 204, 182 P 129 (1919).

In an action on an undertaking given pursuant to the provisions of this section, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to allege and prove a specific adjudication, in the primary suit, that the appointment of the receiver was procured wrongfully, maliciously, or without sufficient cause; or that the receivership has been vacated in response to a motion for that purpose. Lyon v. USF&G Co., 48 M 591, 140 P 86 (1914), distinguished in St. John v. Taintor, 56 M 204, 182 P 129 (1919).

Responsibility for Ex Parte Appointment: Where the appointment of a receiver in an action rests solely upon an ex parte showing which upon trial has been found wanting in proof to sustain it, the appointment ought not to be allowed to stand where the proceedings virtually destroy the business and result in great and unjust damage, if the action is not well founded, unless the plaintiff assumes effectually a position of responsibility to answer for such damage in case the action is found to be without sufficient cause. Arnold v. Sinclair, 12 M 248, 29 P 1124 (1892).

Case Notes

Borrowing Power of Receiver: Under this section the court has broad discretion, which may not be said, on application of a general unsecured creditor for Writ of Supervisory Control, to have been abused by authorizing the receiver of a mining corporation appointed in a mortgage foreclosure suit to borrow the sum of $3,000 per month for exploration and development work, the money to be advanced by the mortgagee at whose instance the receiver was appointed and added to the face of the mortgage. State ex rel. Perry v. District Court, 110 M 533, 104 P2d 1 (1940).

Actions by Receiver:

The appointment of a receiver for a corporation invests the receiver with the right to the possession and control of the corporation's assets and to the same extent suspends the functions of the corporation. Suits with reference to the trust estate must thereafter be prosecuted by the receiver, and, to the same extent that this power is lodged in the receiver, it is withdrawn from the corporation. State ex rel. First Trust & Sav. Bank v. District Court, 50 M 259, 146 P 539 (1915).

The appointment of a receiver for a corporation, when coupled with his due qualification, invests him with the right to sue in behalf of the corporation and suspends the capacity of the corporation to sue for the time being; if the receiver refuses to bring a necessary action, the proper practice requires an application to the court for an order directing him to institute the action. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co., 24 M 142, 60 P 990 (1900).

Title to Property: Where a receiver was appointed for a corporation, the property still belongs to the corporation, though it is in the hands of the receiver to be administered under the law. State ex rel. First Trust & Sav. Bank v. District Court, 50 M 259, 146 P 539 (1915).

Stay of Appointment: The appointment of a receiver for a corporation does not operate to dissolve the corporation or to transfer the ownership of the property involved in the receivership. The property still belongs to the corporation, but where a stay was granted pending a hearing in the Supreme Court, the corporation had full power to bring suit until the receiver took possession and after his discharge to prosecute to completion an action so commenced during the stay. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co., 27 M 431, 71 P 471 (1903).

CHAPTER 25

CERTIORARI — WRIT OF REVIEW

Part 1

General Provisions

27-25-101. Name of writ.Case Notes

Time Bar on Writ of Certiorari to Review Contempt Proceedings: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court was asked to establish a timeframe within which a petition for review of a contempt order must be filed. The issue was whether the time limitation should come from Title 25, which includes the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure and the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure, or from Title 27, which prescribes the various statutes of limitation for the commencement of actions. The court noted that there is no appeal, as such, from an order of contempt in a civil proceeding and that the exclusive method of review of civil contempt orders (with certain exceptions) is through a writ of certiorari or writ of review. That review is generally limited to jurisdictional questions and whether evidence supports the contempt. Therefore, the issue of timeliness for filing a petition for a writ of certiorari or review is not a statute of limitations issue, and to mechanically characterize those writs for the review of contempt proceedings as original proceedings governed by the 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231 would be to deny the basic nature of appellate review. Further, petitions for writs of certiorari to review contempt proceedings are fundamentally different from other original proceedings commenced in the Supreme Court and from petitions for writs of supervisory control, which do not so much involve appellate review of and a decision on the underlying proceedings as they involve the court dealing with discreet questions of law during the pendency of the underlying proceedings. Because the timeframe in which to file petitions for writs of certiorari to review contempt proceedings is a procedural issue analogous to the procedure for filing a notice of appeal, the Supreme Court held that former Rule 72, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), former Rule 17, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and 27-25-103 require that the timeframe for those petitions be determined by the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure. Specifically, pursuant to former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), a petition for a writ of certiorari to review contempt proceedings must be filed with the Clerk of the District Court within 30 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding, unless the state is a party, in which case the petition must be filed within 60 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding. This may not be construed to limit the Supreme Court's power to grant writs of supervisory control or to consider applications for other types of original proceedings. The Supreme Court chose not to establish a precedent that allows contempt proceedings to be delayed until the underlying cause is resolved. Jones v. District Court, 2001 MT 276, 307 M 305, 37 P3d 682 (2001), overruling Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937), to the extent that Shaffroth holds that the general 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231 applies to all writs of review authorized in 27-25-102.

Clarification of Family Law Exception to Supreme Court Review of District Court Contempt Orders — When Writ of Certiorari Required — Ancillary Order Exception: Seeking to narrow and clarify the judicially created family law exception to the writ of certiorari requirement of 3-1-523 that was expressly extended to dissolution of marriage contempt proceedings in In re Marriage of Smith, 212 M 223, 686 P2d 912 (1984), and In re Marriage of Sessions, 231 M 437, 753 P2d 1306, 45 St. Rep. 744 (1988), and to balance the exception with the statute and longstanding Montana case law generally allowing no direct appeal from a contempt order unless the writ is granted, the Supreme Court concluded that it would be poor public policy to create circumstances whereby a District Court's contempt powers are diminished in any manner by one party's ability to file a direct appeal that in turn frivolously and needlessly delays that party's compliance with the lower court's judgments and orders. To cover contentious disputes that arise in family law, the court created the ancillary order exception, establishing that the family law direct appeal exception applies only when the judgment appealed from includes an ancillary order, meaning an order that determines the rights of the parties as a result of the contemptuous conduct—all under one judgment, that affects the substantial rights of the parties. The ancillary order may result from the proper exercise of the court's jurisdiction, in which case a writ of certiorari would necessarily be denied. However, a lone contempt order, regardless of the underlying law of the case, cannot be reviewed by the Supreme Court on direct appeal. Lee v. Lee, 2000 MT 67, 299 M 78, 996 P2d 389, 57 St. Rep. 308 (2000), followed in In re Marriage of DeLude, 2000 MT 75, 299 M 123, 999 P2d 306, 57 St. Rep. 331 (2000). See also State ex rel. Zosel v. District Court, 56 M 578, 185 P 1112 (1919), and Milanovich v. Milanovich, 200 M 83, 655 P2d 959, 39 St. Rep. 1554 (1982).

Contempt Conviction: The only method to review an adjudication for contempt is by Writ of Certiorari. State ex rel. Porter v. District Court, 123 M 447, 215 P2d 279 (1950).

Special Proceeding: Certiorari is an extraordinary remedy, and the proceeding under the writ is a special proceeding. State ex rel. Lay v. District Court, 122 M 61, 198 P2d 761 (1948).

GENERAL

Planned Unit Development — Certiorari Inappropriate: Writ of certiorari was an inappropriate remedy for review of a zoning commission's approval of planned unit development because petitioner had an adequate appeal remedy under 76-2-110. Bridger Canyon Property Owners' Ass'n, Inc. v. Planning & Zoning Comm'n, 270 M 160, 890 P2d 1268, 52 St. Rep. 125 (1995).

De Novo Appeal From City Court to District Court as Adequate Remedy: Maloney was convicted in City Court of speeding and driving under the influence of alcohol. Maloney appealed his conviction de novo for a trial in District Court and, at the same time, filed a petition for a writ of review, mandamus, and supervisory control, asking the District Court to direct the City Court to dismiss the charges. The District Court denied the petition. The Supreme Court held that the de novo appeal to the District Court constituted an adequate legal remedy. Maloney v. Gordon, 254 M 314, 837 P2d 1341, 49 St. Rep. 834 (1992).

Writ of Certiorari Not Available — Appropriation of In-Lieu Funds: When the County Commission appropriated in-lieu park funds to a project not specifically authorized in the county outdoor recreation and open space plan, a Writ of Certiorari did not lie because the Commission, in appropriating money, was acting in a legislative, not judicial, capacity. There is no action more clearly legislative than that of appropriation of public funds. Burgess v. Gallatin County Comm'n, 215 M 503, 698 P2d 862, 42 St. Rep. 585 (1985).

When Writ of Certiorari May Be Granted by District Court: All three requirements of 27-25-102(2) must be met before certiorari can be granted by the District Court. St. v. Crane, 196 M 305, 639 P2d 514, 39 St. Rep. 126 (1982).

Availability of Writ of Prohibition — Drunk Driving: Plaintiff was cited for driving while intoxicated. The Justice's Court did not hear the case although a trial had been scheduled. The defendant then sought a Writ of Prohibition against the Justice's Court to stop further proceedings in the prosecution of the D.W.I. charge. On appeal, the sole issue was whether the District Court judgment for the defendant Justice's Court, denying relief to the plaintiff and granting the motion to quash the Writ of Prohibition, was justified under the state of the record. The Supreme Court held that a Writ of Prohibition was not the appropriate remedy in the case. A Writ of Prohibition is available only when there is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. It is not issued as a matter of right but only in the exercise of sound judicial discretion when there is no other remedy. In this case, the plaintiff did not show why he could not assert his jurisdictional defense in the Justice's Court directly or by Writ of Certiorari in the District Court. State ex rel. Morse v. Justice Court, 192 M 95, 626 P2d 836, 38 St. Rep. 542 (1981).

Zoning Resolution: Although scope of review upon Writ of Certiorari is ordinarily limited to whether the inferior tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction, further inquiry is permitted by the provisions of 76-2-227, which grant the District Courts a broader scope of review than the general Montana statutes pertaining to certiorari. Bryant Dev. Ass'n v. Dagel, 166 M 252, 531 P2d 1320 (1975).

Motion to Quash Writ: On motion to quash a writ the court must accept the allegations of the petition as stating the facts. Application of Banschbach, 133 M 312, 323 P2d 1112 (1958).

Harmless Error: The writ will not be granted for the correction of merely harmless, technical, or formal errors which are not shown to have resulted prejudicially or to have caused substantial injustice to the relator. State ex rel. Lay v. District Court, 122 M 61, 198 P2d 761 (1948).

Requirements for Writ:

So that the Writ of Certiorari may be successfully invoked under this section, it is indispensable that it appear: (1) that the inferior court, tribunal, board, or officer, the validity of whose action is questioned, has exceeded its or his jurisdiction; (2) that there is no appeal; and (3) that there is no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy other than certiorari. State ex rel. Lay v. District Court, 122 M 61, 198 P2d 761 (1948); White v. Corbett, 101 M 1, 52 P2d 156 (1931); State ex rel. Hahn v. District Court, 83 M 400, 272 P 525 (1928); State ex rel. Mahood v. Bd. of Railroad Comm'rs, 73 M 1, 234 P 834 (1925); State ex rel. Prato v. District Court, 55 M 560, 179 P 497 (1919); *State ex rel. Furnish v. The office of the Writ of Certiorari is merely to annul acts of an inferior tribunal, board, or officer that are clearly without or in excess of jurisdiction and not to prevent, in advance, threatened wrongs; nor will it be granted for the correction of merely harmless, technical, or formal errors which are not shown to have resulted prejudicially or caused substantial injustice to relator. State ex rel. Pereira v. District Court, 83 M 349, 272 P 242 (1928).

Court Requesting Writ: Where respondent court in a proceeding in certiorari to set aside an order allegedly made without jurisdiction relating to costs, in its return to the alternative writ, by "cross-petition" prayed that if the order complained of be annulled the Supreme Court also annul another order made in the same cause relating to the same subject to enable the lower court to reconsider the propriety of the latter order also, such request could not be granted without proper record, and lower court could not request against its own order. State ex rel. Vaughn v. District Court, 111 M 552, 111 P2d 810 (1941).

Limitation of Actions: While the statutes relating to the Writ of Review or Certiorari make no provision as to the limitation of time within which such proceeding must be brought, the limitation of 5 years provided by 27-2-215 (renumbered 27-2-231), in an "action" not otherwise provided for, is controlling under 27-2-101, including special proceedings of a civil nature. Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937), overruled in Jones v. District Court, 2001 MT 276, 307 M 305, 37 P3d 682 (2001), to the extent that Shaffroth holds that the general 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231 applies to all writs of review authorized in this section because pursuant to former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), a petition for a writ of certiorari to review contempt proceedings must be filed with the Clerk of the District Court within 30 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding, unless the state is a party, in which case the petition must be filed within 60 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding.

Nonjudicial Act: Certiorari does not lie to annul an order of the District Judge filling a vacancy considered to exist because of the alleged unconstitutionality of the act under which the office was filled and because the incumbent was holding two offices regarded as incompatible; the order was ministerial and not judicial. State ex rel. Downen v. District Court, 50 M 249, 146 P 467 (1915).

Extraordinary Remedy: The remedy upon certiorari is one uniformly classed as an extraordinary remedy and can only be resorted to in the class of cases to which it is applicable—when there is no appeal, or any plain, speedy, or adequate remedy in the ordinary course at law. State ex rel. Reynolds v. Laurendeau, 27 M 522, 71 P 754 (1903).

Peace Bond Proceedings: The only way open to a party to have reviewed an order of a Justice of the Peace committing him to jail, in default of security to keep the peace, is by means of the review allowed under the Writ of Certiorari. State ex rel. Jackson v. Kennie, 24 M 45, 60 P 589 (1900).

Receivership Proceeding: On certiorari to determine the propriety of the appointment of a receiver, the court cannot consider the weight of the evidence and the propriety of such appointment, but the review is limited to determining whether the lower court has regularly pursued its authority. State ex rel. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. District Court, 22 M 241, 56 P 281 (1899).

CONTEMPT

Failure to Show That Justice's Court Exceeded Its Jurisdiction in Holding Defendant in Contempt in DUI Case — Writ of Review Properly Denied: Schaefer was charged in Justice's Court with repeat misdemeanor DUI per se and sentenced to a chemical dependency course, but he did not complete all conditions of the course, so the court held him in contempt. Schaefer then filed a writ of review in District Court, but the writ was dismissed because the court concluded that a petition for postconviction relief provided Schaefer with a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, so the court lacked jurisdiction. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed denial of the writ, but not because a petition for postconviction relief was more appropriate, but rather because the Justice's Court properly exercised its jurisdiction and because the conflicting evidence issue of aftercare remained in the exclusive jurisdiction of the Justice's Court. Although the District Court incorrectly found that a writ of review was not appropriate, denial of the petition was nevertheless affirmed because Schaefer failed to satisfy the first prong of the test in this section by showing that the Justice's Court exceeded its jurisdiction by holding him in contempt. Schaefer v. Egeland, 2004 MT 199, 322 M 274, 95 P3d 724 (2004).

Time Bar on Writ of Certiorari to Review Contempt Proceedings: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court was asked to establish a timeframe within which a petition for review of a contempt order must be filed. The issue was whether the time limitation should come from Title 25, which includes the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure and the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure, or from Title 27, which prescribes the various statutes of limitation for the commencement of actions. The court noted that there is no appeal, as such, from an order of contempt in a civil proceeding and that the exclusive method of review of civil contempt orders (with certain exceptions) is through a writ of certiorari or writ of review. That review is generally limited to jurisdictional questions and whether evidence supports the contempt. Therefore, the issue of timeliness for filing a petition for a writ of certiorari or review is not a statute of limitations issue, and to mechanically characterize those writs for the review of contempt proceedings as original proceedings governed by the 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231 would be to deny the basic nature of appellate review. Further, petitions for writs of certiorari to review contempt proceedings are fundamentally different from other original proceedings commenced in the Supreme Court and from petitions for writs of supervisory control, which do not so much involve appellate review of and a decision on the underlying proceedings as they involve the court dealing with discreet questions of law during the pendency of the underlying proceedings. Because the timeframe in which to file petitions for writs of certiorari to review contempt proceedings is a procedural issue analogous to the procedure for filing a notice of appeal, the Supreme Court held that former Rule 72, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), former Rule 17, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and 27-25-103 require that the timeframe for those petitions be determined by the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure. Specifically, pursuant to former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), a petition for a writ of certiorari to review contempt proceedings must be filed with the Clerk of the District Court within 30 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding, unless the state is a party, in which case the petition must be filed within 60 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding. This may not be construed to limit the Supreme Court's power to grant writs of supervisory control or to consider applications for other types of original proceedings. The Supreme Court chose not to establish a precedent that allows contempt proceedings to be delayed until the underlying cause is resolved. Jones v. District Court, 2001 MT 276, 307 M 305, 37 P3d 682 (2001), overruling Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937), to the extent that Shaffroth holds that the general 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231 applies to all writs of review authorized in this section.

Clarification of Family Law Exception to Supreme Court Review of District Court Contempt Orders — When Writ of Certiorari Required — Ancillary Order Exception: Seeking to narrow and clarify the judicially created family law exception to the writ of certiorari requirement of 3-1-523 that was expressly extended to dissolution of marriage contempt proceedings in In re Marriage of Smith, 212 M 223, 686 P2d 912 (1984), and In re Marriage of Sessions, 231 M 437, 753 P2d 1306, 45 St. Rep. 744 (1988), and to balance the exception with the statute and longstanding Montana case law generally allowing no direct appeal from a contempt order unless the writ is granted, the Supreme Court concluded that it would be poor public policy to create circumstances whereby a District Court's contempt powers are diminished in any manner by one party's ability to file a direct appeal that in turn frivolously and needlessly delays that party's compliance with the lower court's judgments and orders. To cover contentious disputes that arise in family law, the court created the ancillary order exception, establishing that the family law direct appeal exception applies only when the judgment appealed from includes an ancillary order, meaning an order that determines the rights of the parties as a result of the contemptuous conduct—all under one judgment, that affects the substantial rights of the parties. The ancillary order may result from the proper exercise of the court's jurisdiction, in which case a writ of certiorari would necessarily be denied. However, a lone contempt order, regardless of the underlying law of the case, cannot be reviewed by the Supreme Court on direct appeal. Lee v. Lee, 2000 MT 67, 299 M 78, 996 P2d 389, 57 St. Rep. 308 (2000), followed in In re Marriage of DeLude, 2000 MT 75, 299 M 123, 999 P2d 306, 57 St. Rep. 331 (2000). See also State ex rel. Zosel v. District Court, 56 M 578, 185 P 1112 (1919), and Milanovich v. Milanovich, 200 M 83, 655 P2d 959, 39 St. Rep. 1554 (1982).

Standard for Review of Family Law Contempt Orders — Jurisdiction and Evidence — Family Law Exception Clarified: The standard for review of contempt orders, pursuant to the granting of a writ of certiorari, is, first, to determine whether the court that found contempt acted within its jurisdiction. For a court to have acted within its jurisdiction: (1) it must have cognizance of the subject matter; (2) it must have presence of the proper parties; and (3) its action must be invoked by proper pleadings and the judgment must be within the issues raised. A court lacks or exceeds jurisdiction by any act that exceeds the defined power of the court, whether that power is defined by constitutional provision, statute, or court rule or under the doctrine of stare decisis. The second part of the standard for review of contempt orders is to determine whether substantial evidence exists to support the court's findings. The family law exception relevant to review on direct appeal of a District Court judgment and orders made in cases of contempt is subject to the same standard of review. Lee v. Lee, 2000 MT 67, 299 M 78, 996 P2d 389, 57 St. Rep. 308 (2000), following State ex rel. Porter v. First Judicial District, 123 M 447, 215 P2d 279 (1950), and Kauffman v. District Court, 1998 MT 239, 291 M 122, 966 P2d 715, 55 St. Rep. 1001 (1998), and followed in In re Marriage of Coward, 2000 MT 128, 300 M 1, 2 P3d 822, 57 St. Rep. 531 (2000). See also In re Marriage of Sullivan, 258 M 531, 853 P2d 1194, 50 St. Rep. 648 (1993).

Review of Contempt Order: The judgment and orders of the District Court in contempt cases are "final and conclusive", and no appeal may be taken from them. The Supreme Court will not consider matters of contempt on direct appeal. The proper avenue to use to gain review of a contempt order is a Writ of Certiorari. Milanovich v. Milanovich, 200 M 83, 655 P2d 959, 39 St. Rep. 1554 (1982). However, see Lee v. Lee, 2000 MT 67, 299 M 78, 996 P2d 389, 57 St. Rep. 308 (2000), in which it was held that a lone contempt order, regardless of the underlying law of the case, cannot be reviewed by the Supreme Court on direct appeal; however, direct appeal is allowed under the family law exception when the judgment includes an ancillary order that affects the substantial rights of the parties.

Contempt — Divorce Proceedings — Jurisdiction Exceeded:

The relator sought a Writ of Supervisory Control in a contempt proceeding arising out of a divorce suit. The relator challenged the jurisdiction of the trial court upon the ground that the provision he is accused of violating has no valid existence. The relator's remedy is not supervisory control, which concedes the jurisdiction of the court, but certiorari is the remedy where the jurisdiction has been exceeded. State ex rel. Enochs v. District Court, 113 M 227, 123 P2d 971 (1942).

An order for payment of counsel fees and alimony in an action for divorce being an appealable order, certiorari will not lie to review the action of the lower court in committing defendant for contempt in refusing to obey such order. In re Finkelstein, 13 M 425, 34 P 847 (1893).

Contempt Proceedings: An appeal does not lie from a judgment of contempt, and neither may the Writ of Certiorari run in such a proceeding where the trial court has not acted in excess of jurisdiction. State ex rel. Middleton v. District Court, 85 M 215, 278 P 122 (1929).

REQUIREMENTS FOR WRIT — WRIT PROPER REMEDY

Trespass Charge Properly in Justice's Court — Motion to Dismiss and Writ for Review Denied: Shiplet was charged in Justice's Court with criminal misdemeanor trespass. He moved to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction, claiming that subsequent to the filing of the charge, he filed a civil action in District Court seeking to enjoin the people claiming trespass from interfering with his purported ditch easement. Shiplet argued that the District Court, as opposed to the Justice's Court, was a better forum to determine whether he was legally exercising his ditch rights because it had jurisdiction over his civil suit and concurrent jurisdiction over the trespass charge. Shiplet's motion was denied, and his District Court petition for writ of review was denied. The Supreme Court stated that a writ of review can be granted only if the petitioner establishes both that: (1) the Justice's Court exceeded its jurisdiction; and (2) there is no appeal or there is no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. The Supreme Court held that Shiplet could not meet the two-pronged test because a Justice's Court clearly has jurisdiction over a misdemeanor trespass charge and that he had the right to appeal a Justice's Court decision. The Supreme Court also stated that the District Court did not have concurrent jurisdiction over the criminal charge under the requirements for concurrent jurisdiction delineated in 3-5-302. Shiplet v. Egeland, 2001 MT 21, 304 M 141, 18 P3d 1001 (2001).

Court Acting Without Personal Jurisdiction — No Need to Appeal From Void Judgment: Heinle, a resident of California, petitioned for a writ of certiorari to challenge the jurisdiction of a Montana District Court that increased his child support payments and entered a default judgment against him when there was no basis for the District Court's jurisdiction. The Supreme Court held that because there was no basis upon which the District Court could have had constitutional jurisdiction over Heinle, the District Court's judgment was void. The Supreme Court said that under these circumstances, the District Court cannot compel Heinle to use the method of appeal from its judgments because there is no need to appeal from a void judgment. Certiorari was therefore properly used. Heinle v. District Court, 260 M 489, 861 P2d 171, 50 St. Rep. 1141 (1993).

Excess of Trial Court Jurisdiction — Writ of Certiorari Proper: The procedural requirements of 27-25-201 provide that an application for a writ must be made on affidavit by the party beneficially interested. There is no requirement that the application be filed within 30 days of judgment. The District Court improperly dismissed an appeal as untimely, based on a decision made at a show cause hearing, even though no order or final judgment issued out of the hearing. Under this section, a writ of certiorari was appropriate when the lower court exceeded its jurisdiction and there was no remedy of appeal. Helena v. Buck, 247 M 313, 806 P2d 27, 48 St. Rep. 213 (1991).

Lack of Justice Court Jurisdiction for Attachment — Certiorari as Proper Remedy: Plaintiff attended a party in a motel room. A fight erupted, and the room was damaged. The next day the owner of the motel brought an action in Justice Court against all persons present in the room. The complaint alleged liability on an implied contract basis. At the time the complaint was filed, the Justice Court issued an ex parte prejudgment attachment of plaintiff's pickup, which was impounded. At the hearing, plaintiff argued against the attachment, alleging it was not properly issued under the statute. The Justice Court upheld the attachment. Plaintiff filed a Writ of Certiorari in District Court, which was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the Justice Court's authority to issue a Writ of Prejudgment Attachment is subject to certain conditions precedent. Under 27-18-101 and 27-18-202, plaintiffs must show defendant is indebted to the plaintiff under a contract for the direct payment of money. The court found that the implied contract not to damage the room was not one for the direct payment of money, therefore, the Justice Court was without jurisdiction to order the attachment. A Writ of Certiorari may not be used to correct errors in a lower court's jurisdiction but to determine whether the lower court had and was acting within its jurisdiction. In a case such as this where there are conditions precedent to jurisdiction, a Writ of Certiorari is the proper remedy for reviewing jurisdictional facts such as whether the case involved a contract for the direct payment of money. The District Court erred in dismissing the petition. Buffalo v. Thiel, 213 M 280, 691 P2d 1343, 41 St. Rep. 2116 (1984).

REQUIREMENTS FOR WRIT — WRIT NOT PROPER REMEDY

Board Decision Supported by Record and Within Scope of Statutory Authority — Writ Properly Denied: The Ravalli County Board of County Commissioners denied the petition of a group of landowners to abandon a portion of a county road extending beyond their gate. The Board denied the petition because it found that the county road extended miles past the gate and that it was precluded from abandoning the portion beyond the landowners' gate because no other road provided similar access to the public land and waters at the end of the road. The landowners filed a petition for writ of review in the District Court, which the District Court denied. On review, the Supreme Court found that the District Court did not abuse its discretion by denying the writ because the landowners failed to show that the Board had exceeded its discretion. The Board had jurisdiction to consider petitions to establish, alter, or abandon county roads and to complete the investigations necessary to establish the feasibility, desirability, and cost of granting such petitions. Bugli v. Ravalli County, 2019 MT 154, 396 Mont. 271, 444 P.3d 399.

District Court Writ of Certiorari Properly Denied When City Court Did Not Exceed Jurisdiction: A City Court issued a warrant for Jenkins' arrest for failure to pay an assessed fine and fees following conviction for felony DUI. Jenkins moved the City Court to quash the warrant, but that court declined, so Jenkins sought a writ of certiorari in District Court on grounds that the City Court exceeded its jurisdiction by denying him the ability to qualify for community corrections programs while in the custody of the Department of Corrections. The District Court refused to issue the writ, and Jenkins appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Exceeding jurisdiction by a lower court is a prerequisite for issuance of a writ of certiorari, and Jenkins could not show that the City Court exceeded its jurisdiction by denying a motion to quash the warrant or that the City Court was under some legal obligation to quash an otherwise valid warrant merely to facilitate Jenkins' prerelease. St. v. Jenkins, 2006 MT 85, 332 M 34, 134 P3d 79 (2006).

Writ Not Properly Granted When Defendant Failed to Invoke Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy: Marks obtained a writ of certiorari from the District Court remanding his case with Marcher to Justice's Court with instructions to set aside Marcher's default judgment against Marks on the grounds that the damages and treble damages awarded to Marcher in the landlord-tenant dispute exceeded the $5,000 jurisdictional limit of the Justice's Court. The Supreme Court held that the writ had been improperly granted because Marks did not appear in the original case in Justice's Court and did not appeal the default judgment that was entered against him, which was a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy available to him. By not taking advantage of an available remedy, Marks failed to meet the statutory requirement for a writ through a showing that no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy was available to him. Marcher v. Bonzell, 2004 MT 294, 323 M 364, 104 P3d 436 (2004).

Jurisdiction of Contempt Case Not Lost Despite Bankruptcy Filing: A bankruptcy proceeding does not divest a state court of jurisdiction over a contempt matter; it only stays or suspends the contempt proceedings. A writ of certiorari seeking review of a contempt order was denied upon a finding that despite petitioner's bankruptcy filing, the District Court had not lacked or exceeded its jurisdiction. Valley Unit Corp. v. Bozeman, 232 M 52, 754 P2d 822, 45 St. Rep. 860 (1988).

Jurisdictional Defect Required:

The District Court properly denied defendant's application for a Writ of Certiorari to review his Justice's Court criminal contempt conviction. The Justice's Court clearly had jurisdiction under 3-10-303 of a misdemeanor criminal contempt action. Thus, one of the three indispensable requisites to the granting of a Writ, that an inferior board has exceeded its jurisdiction, is absent. St. v. McAllister, 218 M 196, 708 P2d 239, 42 St. Rep. 1515 (1985).

A Writ of Review or Certiorari may be granted only when a trial court has exceeded its jurisdiction. The trial court's issuance of an order to show cause rather than a warrant in civil contempt proceeding against petitioner did not constitute jurisdictional defect. In re Graveley & Hammerbacker, 188 M 546, 614 P2d 1033 (1980), followed in Rose v. District Court, 192 M 341, 628 P2d 662, 38 St. Rep. 830 (1981).

The writ cannot be used to correct errors within jurisdiction. Application of Banschbach, 133 M 312, 323 P2d 1112 (1958).

The power of a court of review to issue a Writ of Certiorari is limited, and the Writ may be granted only when there has been an excess of jurisdiction. State ex rel. Lay v. District Court, 122 M 61, 198 P2d 761 (1948).

The Writ of Certiorari cannot be employed to correct errors committed in the exercise of jurisdiction. State ex rel. Lay v. District Court, 122 M 61, 198 P2d 761 (1948).

The function of a Writ of Review (Certiorari) is to determine whether an inferior tribunal, board, or officer exercising judicial functions has exceeded his jurisdiction, and the Writ cannot be used to correct errors committed in the exercise of jurisdiction. State ex rel. Mercer v. Woods, 116 M 533, 155 P2d 197 (1945).

On application for a Writ of Certiorari directed to the District Court, the question for determination is whether the court exceeded its jurisdiction in rendering the judgment complained of; the Writ cannot be used to correct errors within jurisdiction. State ex rel. Cheadle v. District Court, 92 M 94, 10 P2d 586 (1932).

Certiorari lies when jurisdiction has been exceeded and there is no appeal or other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. State ex rel. Weisz v. District Court, 61 M 427, 202 P 387 (1921).

Error committed by a Board of Commissioners appointed to adjust the indebtedness between an old and a newly created county, though a function judicial in character, constitutes error within jurisdiction not correctable by certiorari, even though provision is not made for an appeal or some other mode of review of the Board's action. State ex rel. Furnish v. Mullendore, 53 M 109, 161 P 949 (1916).

Where the lower court had jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the parties, its action in refusing an injunction and dismissing the action cannot be reviewed by certiorari, since the remedy can only be employed to determine whether a tribunal has exceeded its authority. The writ cannot be used for the purpose of correcting errors committed in the exercise of jurisdiction. State ex rel. King v. District Court, 24 M 494, 62 P 820 (1900).

District Court Writ of Certiorari: Certiorari is never properly granted where the matters over which review is sought are pending or undetermined; thus, District Court could not properly issue Writ of Certiorari to determine, in a case pending before the Police Commission, whether the Commission could compel a witness's testimony. In re Dewar, 169 M 437, 548 P2d 149 (1976).

Police Commission Hearing in Progress — Writ of Certiorari Not Available: A Writ of Certiorari is not proper where the proceedings to be reviewed are pending or undetermined because before a Writ of Certiorari will lie, there must be an absence of the right of appeal, which cannot arise while proceeding is in progress but only after a decision or judgment is rendered. In re Dewar, 169 M 437, 548 P2d 149 (1976).

Habeas Corpus: Where a witness committed by a notary public was discharged under a Writ of Habeas Corpus issued by the District Court, the Supreme Court has no power under a Writ of Certiorari to review the action of the District Court, since the District Court had authority to make the discharge and was acting within the bounds of its appropriate jurisdiction. State ex rel. Whiteside v. District Court, 24 M 539, 63 P 395 (1900).

NONAPPEALABLE ORDERS — WRIT PROPER REMEDY

Adoption Order: Since an order of adoption is not appealable and the Writ of Habeas Corpus is inadequate for the purpose of setting aside such an order made without jurisdiction, the Writ of Certiorari is the proper remedy, within the rule permitting the issuance of the latter Writ only where there is no appeal or any other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. State ex rel. Thompson v. District Court, 75 M 147, 242 P 959 (1926).

Bail Bond Proceedings: Inasmuch as an appeal does not lie from a judgment summarily entered against the sureties on a bail bond and there is not any other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, certiorari lies to annul it. State ex rel. Van v. District Court, 54 M 577, 172 P 540 (1918).

APPEALABLE ERRORS — WRIT DENIED

Appealable Error:

A Writ of Certiorari is not available in Montana to review question of alleged violations of federal constitutional rights of petitioner concerning voluntariness of guilty plea, where he had not moved to withdraw the plea. Brown v. St., 202 F. Supp. 29 (D.C. Mont. 1962).

Writ of Review is not available where the plaintiff simply did not take his appeal within the statutory time of 60 days under section 93-8004, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed). McVay v. McVay, 128 M 31, 270 P2d 393 (1954).

District Court exceeded its jurisdiction by issuing a Writ of Review and making orders against the Justice of the Peace when the record shows that: (1) the Justice of the Peace was acting within his jurisdiction; (2) the defendants may appeal to the District Court from any judgment entered against them in the Justice's Court; (3) on such appeal the cause will be tried anew in the District Court; and (4) such remedies so available to defendants are plain, speedy, and adequate. State ex rel. Borberg v. District Court, 125 M 481, 240 P2d 854 (1952), distinguished in St. v. Porter, 130 M 299, 300 P2d 952 (1956).

Where intermediate judgment requiring the payment of alimony pendente lite in action for divorce was not appealed, it cannot be reviewed and annulled on Writ of Certiorari after judgment for contempt. State ex rel. Houtchens v. District Court, 122 M 76, 199 P2d 272 (1948).

The aggrieved party may not permit the time for taking an appeal to lapse and then have the judgment or order against him reviewed and annulled on Writ of Certiorari. State ex rel. Lay v. District Court, 122 M 61, 198 P2d 761 (1948).

Where the remedy by appeal is available, the Writ of Certiorari does not lie, even though such remedy is not speedy or adequate. State ex rel. N. Am. Life Ins. Co. v. District Court, 97 M 523, 37 P2d 329 (1934); State ex rel. Deck v. District Court, 64 M 110, 207 P 1004 (1922).

The Writ of Certiorari may not be granted where the party aggrieved has an appeal, even though the remedy by appeal may not be speedy or adequate; hence the Writ was not available to defendant in a divorce proceeding to have an order for the payment of alimony pendente lite reviewed. State ex rel. McGrath v. District Court, 82 M 463, 267 P 803 (1928).

The fact that either the State or the claimant could appeal from the judgment rendered in a proceeding under the Enforcement Act of 1917, relative to searches, seizures, and forfeitures of intoxicating liquors, precluded relief under this section by certiorari. State ex rel. Prato v. District Court, 55 M 560, 179 P 497 (1919).

If there is either an appeal or a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, certiorari does not lie; if the order of judgment is not appealable but there is any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy other than certiorari, the writ does not lie; the remedy by appeal need not be speedy or adequate. State ex rel. Davis v. District Court, 29 M 153, 74 P 200 (1903); State ex rel. King v. District Court, 24 M 494, 62 P 820 (1900).

Prior to the decision in State ex rel. King v. District Court, 24 M 494, 62 P 820 (1900), Writs of Certiorari were issued by the Supreme Court, though the party had an appeal, where it was apparent that the appeal was not wholly adequate, or where the proceeding by certiorari was more expeditious or convenient. The construction thus given to this section was clearly erroneous and was changed by the decision in that case. Subsequent to that decision the doctrine announced therein has been adhered to. State ex rel. Davis v. District Court, 29 M 153, 74 P 200 (1903).

The Writ of Certiorari is peculiarly inapplicable to use in aid of appellate jurisdiction and cannot be lawfully issued in cases where error may be reached by appeal. In re MacKnight, 11 M 126, 27 P 336 (1891).

District Court Writ of Certiorari:

Where one adjudged guilty of contempt before a Justice of the Peace sought relief by Writ of Certiorari in the District Court, where a peremptory Writ was denied, since the District Court acted within its jurisdiction, the remedy of petitioner was by appeal to the Supreme Court and not by certiorari. State ex rel. Mercer v. District Court, 115 M 385, 145 P2d 527 (1943).

Where it appears by the return to a Writ of Certiorari issued by the Supreme Court to a Justice of the Peace that the relator had applied to the District Court for a similar Writ and that the case had been heard and a judgment entered quashing the Writ, the Writ issued from the Supreme Court will be dismissed since the relator's proper remedy is by appeal from the judgment of the District Court. State ex rel. Shing v. Lenahan, 17 M 518, 43 P 712 (1896).

Order After Judgment:

An order vacating an order setting aside a default judgment is a special order made after final judgment and as such appealable, and therefore the Writ of Certiorari does not lie to review the action of the court in making the order. State ex rel. N. Am. Life Ins. Co. v. District Court, 97 M 523, 37 P2d 329 (1934); State ex rel. Deck v. District Court, 64 M 110, 207 P 1004 (1922).

An order so modifying a decree of divorce as to suspend payment of alimony and awarding the custody of a minor child to the father upon remarriage of the mother was a special order made after final judgment and appealable under section 93-8003, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), and therefore the Writ of Review was not available to review the correctness of the order. State ex rel. Gates v. District Court, 69 M 322, 221 P 543 (1923).

Where a Justice of the Peace overruled a motion to vacate a default judgment, the judgment could not be reviewed by certiorari. State ex rel. Reynolds v. Laurendeau, 27 M 522, 71 P 754 (1903).

QUASI-JUDICIAL BODIES

Quasi-Judicial Bodies:

A proceeding under this section seeking a Writ of Review of the action of the state Livestock Sanitary Board (now Board of Livestock) is proper. State ex rel. Lee v. St. Livestock Sanitary Bd., 138 M 536, 357 P2d 685 (1960).

After an order of the Board of Railroad Commissioners (now the Public Service Commission) directing the station facilities at a certain town to be removed to another town, relator had a sufficient remedy under 69-14-402 (now repealed), by an action in the District Court, to determine whether the order was just and reasonable, and therefore certiorari did not lie. State ex rel. Mahood v. Bd. of Railroad Comm'rs, 73 M 1, 234 P 834 (1925).

Certiorari lies to review the actions of Boards of County Commissioners taken with reference to the creation of new counties, since they act in such proceedings as quasi-judicial tribunals. State ex rel. Jacobson v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 47 M 531, 134 P 291 (1913).

This section applies to quasi-judicial bodies as well as to courts and judicial officers strictly so called. State ex rel. Jacobson v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 47 M 531, 134 P 291 (1913).

Where a Board of County Commissioners decides whether a petition, presented to them for the submission of the removal of the county seat to the electors of the county, is signed by a sufficient number to require them to submit the question to an election, it exercises judicial functions within the meaning of this section. State ex rel. Buck v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 21 M 469, 54 P 939 (1898).

27-25-103. Application of rules of procedure.

Case Notes

Time Bar on Writ of Certiorari to Review Contempt Proceedings: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court was asked to establish a timeframe within which a petition for review of a contempt order must be filed. The issue was whether the time limitation should come from Title 25, which includes the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure and the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure, or from Title 27, which prescribes the various statutes of limitation for the commencement of actions. The court noted that there is no appeal, as such, from an order of contempt in a civil proceeding and that the exclusive method of review of civil contempt orders (with certain exceptions) is through a writ of certiorari or writ of review. That review is generally limited to jurisdictional questions and whether evidence supports the contempt. Therefore, the issue of timeliness for filing a petition for a writ of certiorari or review is not a statute of limitations issue, and to mechanically characterize those writs for the review of contempt proceedings as original proceedings governed by the 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231 would be to deny the basic nature of appellate review. Further, petitions for writs of certiorari to review contempt proceedings are fundamentally different from other original proceedings commenced in the Supreme Court and from petitions for writs of supervisory control, which do not so much involve appellate review of and a decision on the underlying proceedings as they involve the court dealing with discreet questions of law during the pendency of the underlying proceedings. Because the timeframe in which to file petitions for writs of certiorari to review contempt proceedings is a procedural issue analogous to the procedure for filing a notice of appeal, the Supreme Court held that former Rule 72, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), former Rule 17, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and 27-25-103 require that the timeframe for those petitions be determined by the Montana Rules of Appellate Procedure. Specifically, pursuant to former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), a petition for a writ of certiorari to review contempt proceedings must be filed with the Clerk of the District Court within 30 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding, unless the state is a party, in which case the petition must be filed within 60 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding. This may not be construed to limit the Supreme Court's power to grant writs of supervisory control or to consider applications for other types of original proceedings. The Supreme Court chose not to establish a precedent that allows contempt proceedings to be delayed until the underlying cause is resolved. Jones v. District Court, 2001 MT 276, 307 M 305, 37 P3d 682 (2001), overruling Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937), to the extent that Shaffroth holds that the general 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231 applies to all writs of review authorized in 27-25-102.

Part 2

Procedure for Obtaining and Serving Writ

27-25-201. Application for writ — notice.

Case Notes

Excess of Trial Court Jurisdiction — Writ of Certiorari Proper: The procedural requirements of this section provide that an application for a writ must be made on affidavit by the party beneficially interested. There is no requirement that the application be filed within 30 days of judgment. The District Court improperly dismissed an appeal as untimely, based on a decision made at a show cause hearing, even though no order or final judgment issued out of the hearing. Under 27-25-102, a writ of certiorari was appropriate when the lower court exceeded its jurisdiction and there was no remedy of appeal. Helena v. Buck, 247 M 313, 806 P2d 27, 48 St. Rep. 213 (1991).

Party Beneficially Interested:

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari presented to the Supreme Court by a bank and verified positively by its president is sufficient to meet the requirement of this section that it must be made by a party beneficially interested, and whether the party is so interested must be determined from the return made. State ex rel. Union Bank & Trust Co. v. District Court, 108 M 151, 91 P2d 403 (1939).

The provision that the Writ of Certiorari will only issue at the instance of a party beneficially interested does not require that the applicant be a party to the action or proceeding in which the court is alleged to have acted without jurisdiction, but if he is able to show that he is interested because of some special or peculiar injury to himself in person or property, the court may in its discretion issue the Writ. State ex rel. Johnston v. District Court, 93 M 439, 19 P2d 220 (1933).

The fact that one is an agent or attorney of a party beneficially interested in an application for certiorari does not attract to him the beneficial interest of his principal, so as to enable him to make the application. State ex rel. Allen v. Napton, 24 M 450, 62 P 686 (1900).

This section should be construed as meaning that the application for certiorari should be made by the party beneficially interested but that the affidavit in support thereof might be made by anyone conversant with the facts. State ex rel. Allen v. Napton, 24 M 450, 62 P 686 (1900).

This section does not require that affiant's interest shall be distinguishable from the mass of the community when the matter sought to be reviewed affects the people generally and the object of the writ is to inquire into the performance of a duty owing to the public. State ex rel. Buck v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 21 M 469, 54 P 939 (1898). See also Buck v. Fitzgerald, 21 M 482, 54 P 942 (1898); Milligan v. Miles City, 51 M 374, 153 P 276 (1915); Poe v. Sheridan County, 52 M 279, 157 P 185 (1916).

Allegations in Affidavit:

Where the petition or affidavit contains only statements of conclusions and does not allege the facts from which those conclusions are drawn, the court is without jurisdiction to issue the writ. State ex rel. Examining & Trial Bd. v. Jackson, 58 M 90, 190 P 295 (1920).

The affidavit for a Writ of Review becomes functus officio when the Writ is issued. It is not a pleading, and its averments cannot be traversed by any other pleading. State ex rel. First Trust & Sav. Bank v. District Court, 50 M 259, 146 P 539 (1915).

Motion to Quash: Motion to quash or demurrer (demurrer abolished, former Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., now superseded) is the proper method to determine the sufficiency of a petition or affidavit for a Writ of Certiorari. State ex rel. Examining & Trial Bd. v. Jackson, 58 M 90, 190 P 295 (1920).

27-25-202. Contents of writ.

Case Notes

Record Required for Contempt Review: Defendant was held in contempt of court for failure to comply with a judgment entered against him. Contempt of a District Court is reviewable only by application for a Writ of Certiorari to the Supreme Court. Where an indirect contempt is involved, as here, the Writ would command the District Court to transmit its record of the contempt proceedings. The Supreme Court's review would be limited to an examination of the record to determine whether the District Court acted within its jurisdiction and whether the evidence supported the finding and order of contempt. In this case, no transcript of the contempt proceeding was made. The Supreme Court set aside the contempt order for lack of a record. Schneider v. Ostwald, 190 M 29, 617 P2d 1293, 37 St. Rep. 1728 (1980).

Writ of Certiorari Not Proper — Writ of Supervisory Control Proper: Because the Supreme Court did not have a fully certified transcript of the record and proceedings pursuant to 27-25-202, a Writ of Certiorari was not a proper remedy to review a contempt order. But under Art. VII, sec. 2, Mont. Const., the Supreme Court may exercise supervisory power since the relator is barred from using a Writ of Certiorari. State ex rel. Anderson v. District Court, 188 M 77, 610 P2d 1183 (1980). See also Jones v. District Court, 2001 MT 276, 307 M 305, 37 P3d 682 (2001).

Record Certified:

Where a Writ of Certiorari is issued by the Supreme Court accompanied by an order staying proceedings in the matter in which issued, it is the duty of the court to which directed to certify the record as it was at the time the Writ was served, and thereafter it is without power materially to alter or add to the record as made, and if it does so, so much of its return as is altered or added to will be disregarded by the Supreme Court. Ex parte Burns, 83 M 200, 271 P 439 (1928).

Upon certiorari, the judgment for a direct contempt is the only record, and a certified copy of it constitutes the full return to be made to the appellate court in obedience to the writ, and it cannot be supplemented by evidence or by facts certified up in the return by the judge. State ex rel. Rankin v. District Court, 58 M 276, 191 P 772 (1920), distinguished in State ex rel. Cheadle v. District Court, 92 M 94, 10 P2d 586 (1932).

By its terms, the Writ of Review commands the party to whom it is directed to certify to the court issuing the Writ "a transcript of the records and proceedings", so far as necessary to obtain the review sought. Recitals, denials, affirmative allegations, or matters not copied from the records or matters copied from the records but not called for by the Writ are out of place in the return and do not constitute any part of it. State ex rel. Sell v. District Court, 52 M 457, 158 P 1018 (1916).

It is the duty of a court upon whom a Writ of Certiorari has been duly served to certify up the record without alteration as it is at the time that the Writ was served, otherwise, without reference to any express stay, there may be contempt in not obeying the Writ. In re Harney, 29 M 370, 74 P 1080 (1904).

Review of District Court Writ: An appeal from a judgment of the District Court on a Writ of Review to a Justice of the Peace brings up for review only such questions as appear on the judgment roll, and other papers are not before the court. State ex rel. Grissom v. Justice Court, 31 M 258, 78 P 498 (1904).

27-25-203. Stay of proceedings.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 10 in third sentence substituted "lower tribunal" for "inferior tribunal"; and made minor changes in style.

1981 Amendment: Substituted "tribunal, board" for "court".

Case Notes

Alteration of Order by Judge: A Judge of a District Court is not guilty of contempt in altering an order after he has been served with a Writ of Review from the Supreme Court directing that "all proceedings under said order be stayed", the stay being by its terms limited to the enforcement of the order. In re Harney, 29 M 370, 74 P 1080 (1904).

27-25-205. To whom writ directed — return.Case Notes

Standing of Board of Adjustment to Appeal District Court Review of Board Decision: After plaintiffs built an addition on their house, they applied for a zoning variance because the addition violated the subdivision setback requirement. The variance was denied by the defendant board of adjustment, and plaintiffs appealed to District Court for a writ of certiorari. The court granted the variance, and the board appealed. Plaintiffs contended that the board lacked standing because the board was a quasi-judicial body, not an aggrieved party, and because under 7-1-201, an administrative board may not sue or be sued independently of the local government unless authorized by state law. The Supreme Court disagreed. The writ of certiorari was directed to the board, and plaintiffs' petition named the board as the opposing party, so the board was a party to the litigation and had standing to appeal. Arkell v. Middle Cottonwood Bd. of Zoning Adjustment, 2007 MT 160, 338 M 77, 162 P3d 856 (2007).

Direction of Writ Proper but Adverse Party Not Properly Designated Defendant: Although Writ of Certiorari was properly directed to the Board of Adjustment, the Board is not the defendant and certain procedural difficulties could have been avoided if the adverse party had been properly designated as defendant. Bryant Dev. Ass'n v. Dagel, 166 M 252, 531 P2d 1320 (1975).

Transcript of Lower Court Proceedings:

Although under this section it is the duty of the Clerk of the District Court to prepare the return required by the Supreme Court on issuance of a Writ of Certiorari, the court to which the Writ is directed has the power to order the court stenographer to prepare not only a transcript of the evidence but the entire transcript, as one of his implied duties, without extra compensation. Pelletier v. Glacier County, 107 M 221, 82 P2d 595 (1938).

Since this section makes it the duty of the Clerk of the Court to return the transcript required by the writ to the court out of which the writ is issued, the outlay incident to the carriage of the return, maps, etc., should be ultimately borne by the party whose fault occasioned the expense. State ex rel. King v. District Court, 25 M 1, 63 P 402 (1901).

Return by Clerk: As the return in certiorari running to a court must be made by its clerk, as provided in this section, an answer to the averments of relator's affidavit, filed by the judge of the court as his "return", was not such and had no place in the proceedings. State ex rel. First Trust & Sav. Bank v. District Court, 50 M 259, 146 P 539 (1915). See also State ex rel. USF&G Co. v. District Court, 77 M 214, 250 P 609 (1926).

Writ Directed to District Judge: Where the order sought to be annulled by certiorari was made by the District Court and not by its judge, a writ directed to the judge will be quashed upon motion. State ex rel. Healy v. District Court, 26 M 224, 68 P 470 (1902). See also State ex rel. Grissom v. Justice Court, 31 M 258, 78 P 498 (1904).

Part 3Procedure Upon Return of Writ*27-25-303. Scope of review upon writ.*Case Notes

Clarification of Family Law Exception to Supreme Court Review of District Court Contempt Orders — When Writ of Certiorari Required — Ancillary Order Exception: Seeking to narrow and clarify the judicially created family law exception to the writ of certiorari requirement of 3-1-523 that was expressly extended to dissolution of marriage contempt proceedings in In re Marriage of Smith, 212 M 223, 686 P2d 912 (1984), and In re Marriage of Sessions, 231 M 437, 753 P2d 1306, 45 St. Rep. 744 (1988), and to balance the exception with the statute and longstanding Montana case law generally allowing no direct appeal from a contempt order unless the writ is granted, the Supreme Court concluded that it would be poor public policy to create circumstances whereby a District Court's contempt powers are diminished in any manner by one party's ability to file a direct appeal that in turn frivolously and needlessly delays that party's compliance with the lower court's judgments and orders. To cover contentious disputes that arise in family law, the court created the ancillary order exception, establishing that the family law direct appeal exception applies only when the judgment appealed from includes an ancillary order, meaning an order that determines the rights of the parties as a result of the contemptuous conduct—all under one judgment, that affects the substantial rights of the parties. The ancillary order may result from the proper exercise of the court's jurisdiction, in which case a writ of certiorari would necessarily be denied. However, a lone contempt order, regardless of the underlying law of the case, cannot be reviewed by the Supreme Court on direct appeal. Lee v. Lee, 2000 MT 67, 299 M

78, 996 P2d 389, 57 St. Rep. 308 (2000), followed in In re Marriage of DeLude, 2000 MT 75, 299 M 123, 999 P2d 306, 57 St. Rep. 331 (2000). See also State ex rel. Zosel v. District Court, 56 M 578, 185 P 1112 (1919), and Milanovich v. Milanovich, 200 M 83, 655 P2d 959, 39 St. Rep. 1554 (1982).

Review of Board of Adjustment Decision — Scope Broader Than General: A District Court's scope of review upon a writ of certiorari ordinarily cannot be extended further than to determine whether an inferior tribunal, board, or officer has regularly acted within its authority. However, under 76-2-327, a District Court has a broader scope of review of an appeal from a decision by the Board of Adjustment. The court may hold a hearing and reverse, modify, or affirm a Board decision. In reviewing a District Court decision involving the exercise of the statutory option to take additional evidence, the standard applied by the Supreme Court is whether the District Court abused its discretion and whether the decision was supported by substantial evidence. In re Petition of Sutey Oil Co., Inc. v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County Planning Bd., 1998 MT 127, 289 M 99, 959 P2d 496, 55 St. Rep. 499 (1998), followed in Arkell v. Middle Cottonwood Bd. of Zoning Adjustment, 2007 MT 160, 338 M 77, 162 P3d 856 (2007). See also Lambros v. Bd. of Adjustment, 153 M 20, 452 P2d 398 (1969), Cutone v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County, 187 M 515, 610 P2d 691 (1980), and Whistler v. Burlington N. RR Co., 228 M 150, 741 P2d 422 (1987).

Review of Board of Adjustment Decision: The District Court's review under this section of a zoning decision of the Bozeman Board of Adjustment was proper because the court determined that the Board lawfully granted a zoning variance upon which it properly placed restrictions. Schendel v. Bd. of Adjustment, 237 M 278, 774 P2d 379, 46 St. Rep. 800 (1989).

Contempt Proceedings:

A Writ of Certiorari to review judgment of contempt can only be made when there is a showing that the tribunal acted in excess of jurisdiction. State ex rel. Porter v. District Court, 123 M 447, 215 P2d 279 (1950).

A judgment or order of the District Court made in a contempt proceeding is reviewable by the Supreme Court on Writ of Certiorari, the review going no further than to determine whether the lower court regularly pursued its authority; the Writ cannot be used to correct errors committed in the exercise of jurisdiction. State ex rel. Murphy v. District Court, 99 M 209, 41 P2d 1113 (1935).

On application for Writ of Certiorari to review a judgment of contempt, the Supreme Court may review the evidence introduced in the proceedings to determine whether the charges against contemner are unsupported by the evidence or the findings are contrary to all of the substantial evidence or whether the decision has no evidence to support it, but the court cannot review the evidence to determine the preponderance thereof. State ex rel. Murphy v. District Court, 99 M 209, 41 P2d 1113 (1935).

Jurisdictional Defect Required:

The power of a court of review to issue a Writ of Certiorari is limited, and the Writ may be granted only when there has been an excess of jurisdiction. State ex rel. Lay v. District Court, 122 M 61, 198 P2d 761 (1948).

The writ cannot be used to correct errors committed in the exercise of jurisdiction. State ex rel. Griffiths v. Mayor of Butte, 57 M 368, 188 P 367 (1920).

Questions Determined:

The hearing in a certiorari proceeding is limited to a review of the record of the inferior tribunal, board, or officer for the sole purpose of determining from such record whether the tribunal, board, or officer had jurisdiction to do the act, to make the order, or to render the judgment of which complaint is made. State ex rel. Lay v. District Court, 122 M 61, 198 P2d 761 (1948).

The only questions that can be presented for determination to the reviewing court must appear affirmatively from the face of the record. State ex rel. First Trust & Sav. Bank v. District Court, 50 M 259, 146 P 539 (1915).

Upon an application to review the action of a District Judge, the Supreme Court is limited in its inquiry to the questions as to whether the application is properly made, and if so, whether the District Judge exceeded his jurisdiction. State ex rel. King v. District Court, 24 M 494, 62 P 820 (1900); State ex rel. Independent District Tel. Co. v. District Court, 15 M 324, 39 P 316 (1895); In re Ming, 15 M 79, 38 P 228 (1894); State ex rel. Congdon v. District Court, 10 M 456, 26 P 182 (1891); State ex rel. Murphy v. District Court, 10 M 401, 25 P 1053 (1891).

Harmless Error: The office of the Writ of Certiorari is merely to annul acts of an inferior tribunal, board, or officer that are clearly without or in excess of jurisdiction and not to prevent, in advance, threatened wrongs; nor will it be granted for the correction of merely harmless, technical, or formal errors that are not shown to have resulted prejudicially or cause substantial injustice to relator. State ex rel. Pereira v. District Court, 83 M 349, 272 P 242 (1928).

County Commissioners' Proceedings: The affidavit for a Writ of Certiorari was insufficient where the petition for the removal of a county seat bore the required number of names and recited that the signers were qualified, since in the absence of an objection and of fraud, which did not appear, it indicated that the Board of Commissioners had regularly pursued its authority, and by this section the review on a Writ of Certiorari was to determine whether they had or not. State ex rel. Buck v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 21 M 469, 54 P 939 (1898).

27-25-304. Hearing and judgment.

Case Notes

Dismissal of Proceeding: Where defendant in a proceeding for a Writ of Certiorari after return filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings, which motion was argued by the parties and submitted for decision, and the court, instead of rendering judgment as required by this section, made an order, nonappealable in character, dismissing the proceeding, the Writ of Mandate compelling it to render judgment is the proper remedy. State ex rel. Altop v. District Court, 72 M 49, 231 P 99 (1924).

Affirmance, Annulment, or Modification Only: The office of the Writ of Certiorari is to annul, modify, or affirm the action of an inferior tribunal; it cannot supply defects or restrain excesses. State ex rel. Furnish v. Mullendore, 53 M 109, 161 P 949 (1916).

CHAPTER 26

MANDAMUS — WRIT OF MANDATE

Chapter Case Notes

Review of Health Board Decision Not Proper Subject for Declaratory Judgment — Writ of Mandate and Declaratory Relief Properly Denied: Skinner Enterprises, Inc., sought relief in the form of a declaratory judgment stating that the local board of health could not require an intermittent sand filter sewage treatment system on a proposed subdivision, by making an issue of the District Court's failure to evaluate the factual basis for the board's decision, in effect attempting to appeal the board's decision. However, review of the board's decision was not a proper subject for a declaratory judgment, and that form of relief was properly denied. Further, a writ of mandate ordering the board to approve the subdivision was also inappropriate, given the board's discretionary authority to approve or disapprove a subdivision. Skinner Enterprises, Inc. v. Lewis & Clark County Bd. of Health, 286 M 256, 950 P2d 733, 54 St. Rep. 1398 (1997).

Attorney Fees Improperly Granted — Injunction Held Unlike Mandamus for Purposes of Fees: Wittmers purchased a manufactured home and moved it to a subdivision in Gallatin County. Newmans and others brought an action to restrain Wittmers from maintaining the home in the subdivision in violation of a restrictive covenant prohibiting mobile homes. The District Court issued the injunction and also awarded Newmans their fees and costs. The Supreme Court held that attorney fees were improperly granted because even though fees are awardable in a mandamus action, the remedy of injunction is unlike the remedy of mandamus. For that reason, no analogy can be made to mandamus cases awarding fees. Newman v. Wittmer, 277 M 1, 917 P2d 926, 53 St. Rep. 516 (1996).

Attorney Fees Not Allowed Unless Final Judgment: The award of attorney fees in this case is premature as no final judgment has been entered on the merits of the underlying controversy in favor of respondents. No permanent injunction was awarded. No Writ of Mandate was issued. All other considerations aside, respondents are not entitled to a judgment for attorney fees without a final determination of the underlying controversy in their favor. Dreyer v. Bd. of Trustees of Mid-Rivers Tel. Co-op, Inc., 193 M 95, 630 P2d 226, 38 St. Rep. 972 (1981). See also Dreyer v. Bd. of Trustees of Mid-Rivers Tel. Co-op, Inc., 204 M 75, 666 P2d 1214, 40 St. Rep. 673 (1983).

Correct or Revise Erroneous Action Already Taken — Writ Vacated: The District Court issued a Writ of Mandate compelling the Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) to offer the property in dispute at a public sale. This essentially requires the Department to correct erroneous action already taken. Requiring this type of action is beyond the scope of a Writ of Mandate. The Supreme Court therefore vacated the Writ. Castles v. State ex rel. Dept. of Highways, 187 M 356, 609 P2d 1223 (1980).

Nature of Action: Mandamus is not a civil action, and the Statute of Anne is not in force in this jurisdiction. State ex rel. Casleton v. Bd. of Prison Comm'rs, 84 M 14, 273 P 1044 (1929); Bailey v. Edwards, 47 M 363, 133 P 1095 (1913); Territory ex rel. Tanner v. Potts, 3 M 364 (1879); Chumasero v. Potts, 2 M 242 (1875).

Pleadings and Practice: The statute assimilates mandamus, in respect of pleading and practice, to the ordinary civil action. Greeley v. Cascade County, 22 M 580, 57 P 274 (1899).

Part 1 General Provisions

Part Case Notes

Admissibility of Evidence From Earlier Related Lawsuit in Mandamus Proceeding: In a proceeding for a Writ of Mandamus compelling county officers to accept for recording a deed and certificate of survey, it was proper for the trial court to admit into evidence exhibits and testimony from an earlier lawsuit concerning similar issues and the same property. The applicant's conduct is a proper consideration in a mandamus action. Further, the evidence is relevant under Rule 401, Montana Rules of Evidence. Withers v. Beaverhead County, 218 M 447, 710 P2d 1339, 42 St. Rep. 1730 (1985).

Writ of Mandamus Improper — No City Commission Duty: It was inappropriate for the District Court to issue a Writ of Mandamus, in essence directing the City Commission to undertake certain procedures that it had no duty to perform. There was no requirement under law that the City Commission, in support of a decision granting or denying a rezoning request, enter written findings of fact, keep a verbatim record of the proceedings, or conduct its proceedings in an adjudicative manner so as to give an applicant full procedural due process rights. Foster v. Bozeman City Comm'n, 189 M 64, 614 P2d 1072 (1980).

1993 Amendment: Chapter 10 in (1), at beginning, substituted "A writ of mandamus" for "It" and in two places substituted "lower tribunal" for "inferior tribunal"; and made minor changes in style.

GENERAL

Attorney Fees Not Warranted in Challenge to Zoning Ordinances — No Equitable Considerations Compelling Award: The District Court erred by granting attorney fees to the plaintiffs under the Uniform Declaratory Judgment Act. The plaintiffs sought a judicial declaration concerning the validity of zoning ordinances, which constituted a garden variety declaratory action that did not involve equitable considerations compelling a fee award. Citizens for a Better Flathead v. Flathead County Bd. of County Comm'rs, 2016 MT 325, 385 Mont. 505, 386 P.3d 567.

No Specified Time Within Which Denial of Concealed Weapon Permit Must Issue — Writ of Mandate Properly Denied: Smith applied for a concealed weapon permit in October 1995, but the Sheriff denied the application in April 1996. Smith reapplied in April 1997, and the second application was denied in August 1997. Smith applied for a writ of mandate, which was also denied. Smith contended that because he was qualified under 45-8-321(1), the Sheriff had 60 days within which to exercise the discretion, pursuant to 45-8-321(2), or else Smith was entitled to a permit as a matter of law. The District Court concluded that the Sheriff had no legal duty to issue Smith a permit. The Supreme Court agreed because 45-8-321(2) describes the circumstances in which a Sheriff may deny a permit but does not specify a time within which a denial must issue. Further, it was not error for the District Court to deny the writ of mandate or mandamus because there was no clear legal duty by the Sheriff, acting discretionarily, to issue the permit. Smith v. Missoula County, 1999 MT 330, 297 M 368, 992 P2d 834, 56 St. Rep. 1318 (1999), distinguishing Phillips v. Livingston, 268 M 156, 885 P2d 528, 51 St. Rep. 1227 (1994). See also Becky v. Butte-Silver Bow School District No. 1, 274 M 131, 906 P2d 193, 52 St. Rep. 1154 (1995).

Recall Act — When Attorney Fees Available: Section 2-16-615 of the Montana Recall Act provides two procedural remedies, depending on the relief sought. If an official refuses to accept a proper recall petition, relief is by mandamus and attorney fees may be recoverable. If a legally insufficient recall petition has been accepted for filing, relief is by injunction and attorney fees are not available. Thus, the right to attorney fees depends on the underlying action and is not reciprocal. Further, the statute does not provide for relief by writ of prohibition. Braach v. Graybeal, 1999 MT 234, 296 M 138, 988 P2d 761, 56 St. Rep. 919 (1999), affirming Sheehy v. Ferda, 235 M 63, 765 P2d 722, 45 St. Rep. 2162 (1988).

National Honor Society Records Not "Documents of Public Body" — Writ of Mandate Properly Denied: The father of a high school student sought a writ of mandate to obtain names and rankings of teachers who evaluated the student and whose low rankings prevented the student from being admitted into the National Honor Society. The Supreme Court held that because the teachers acted voluntarily and the school did not keep records related to Honor Society membership, the documents sought were not "documents of a public body" as provided in the Montana Constitution. Therefore, the District Court's denial of the writ of mandate was correct. Becky v. Butte-Silver Bow School District No. 1, 274 M 131, 906 P2d 193, 52 St. Rep. 1154 (1995).

No Duty of Clerk and Recorder to Record Invalid Deed — Writ of Mandamus Improper: Under 7-4-2617, a County Clerk and Recorder is obligated to record only an instrument, paper, or notice that is authorized by law to be recorded. Under 76-3-302, a County Clerk and Recorder has a mandatory duty not to accept and record an otherwise proper deed if it fails to comply with the applicable survey requirements. The District Court did not err in refusing to issue a writ of mandamus requiring recording of deeds when a landowner attempted to divide a large parcel of land into smaller parcels by executing a deed in which the landowner was both grantor and grantee, which is not authorized by law, and when the statutorily required plat was not filed. Rocky Mtn. Timberlands, Inc. v. Lund, 265 M 463, 877 P2d 1018, 51 St. Rep. 653 (1994).

Writ Denied Based on Mootness: A citizens' group applied for a writ of mandate to compel a school district Board of Trustees to seek approval for the purchase of property through a vote of district residents. The District Court properly dismissed the application based on mootness because the property had already been purchased at the time of hearing, forestalling the prospect for meaningful relief. Awareness Group v. Bd. of Trustees, 243 M 469, 795 P2d 447, 47 St. Rep. 1333 (1990).

Dismissal of "Friendly Suit" as Nonjusticiable Controversy: Relator applied to the Supreme Court to commence an original proceeding for declaratory judgment, writ of mandate, and other appropriate relief. He sought a court requirement of the Secretary of State to commence the administrative process for inclusion of two constitutional initiatives in the next regular statewide election. The court found no justiciable controversy existed because the Secretary of State had already advised county election officials that he intended to place the initiatives on the ballot, which was essentially the same relief relator sought through the court by his "friendly suit". A declaratory judgment and writ of mandate are inappropriate in the absence of a justiciable controversy; therefore, relator's application for an original proceeding was dismissed. Marbut v. Secretary of St., 231 M 131, 752 P2d 148, 45 St. Rep. 487 (1988).

Petition for Mandamus Premature Remedy:

Applicant who was denied transfer of a liquor license had plain, adequate, and speedy remedy in law under 16-4-411; therefore, the court properly denied his application for alternative Writ of Mandamus or Prohibition. Applicant failed to exhaust his administrative remedies and did not show that the Department of Revenue or State Tax Appeal Board (now Montana Tax Appeal Board) was acting contrary to law. Christopherson v. St., 226 M 350, 735 P2d 524, 44 St. Rep. 712 (1987). See also Roche v. Sabo, 259 M 76, 853 P2d 1258, 50 St. Rep. 689 (1993).

The plaintiffs' petition for mandamus to compel public officers to declare property adjacent to plaintiffs' a public nuisance and abate same was premature, as the plaintiffs failed to show they had asked officers to abate the alleged nuisance before filing petition for a Writ of Mandamus. Generally, before mandamus will issue to a public officer, a demand for performance of the act sought to be compelled is required. Liebman v. Brunell, 212 M 459, 689 P2d 248, 41 St. Rep. 1863 (1984).

Applicability of Writ: A Writ of Mandate is a writ to compel action and is not applicable when relator sought to stop the action of the Judicial Standards Commission. State ex rel. Shea v. Judicial Standards Comm'n, 198 M 15, 643 P2d 210, 39 St. Rep. 521 (1982).

Use of Mandamus to Void Unlawfully Held Public Meeting: Where respondent County Commissioners failed to give public notice of a meeting so that the result was voidable by the court under 2-3-114 and 2-3-213, a Writ of Mandamus would be appropriate in the case to void the illegal meeting. In future cases, the remedy should take the form of a simple petition to void an action or a petition for declaratory judgment. Bd. of Trustees v. County Comm'rs, 186 M 148, 606 P2d 1069 (1980), followed in Goyen v. Troy, 276 M 213, 915 P2d 824, 53 St. Rep. 353 (1996).

Moratorium on Conditional-Use Permits — Zoning — Mandamus — Prohibition — Declaratory Judgment: Diehl requested a conditional-use permit for a planned shopping center. In response, the city of Helena established a 1-year moratorium on the granting of all conditional-use permits. Diehl then filed him complaint and petition for a declaratory judgment, Writ of Mandate, and order to show cause. On appeal, the court found: (1) the city may adopt a reasonable general moratorium, but the procedure required by 76-2-306 must be followed; (2) the discretion of the City Commission to approve, modify, or deny the recommendation of the Zoning Commission cannot be controlled by Writ of Mandate, prohibition, or by declaratory judgment; and (3) a Writ of Mandate requiring the city to act on Diehl's application within a reasonable time is proper under the circumstances in this case. State ex rel. Diehl Co. v. Helena, 181 M 306, 593 P2d 458 (1979).

Agency Regulation Conflicting With Occasional Sale Exemption: Court upheld issuance of a Writ of Mandate to compel the lifting of sanitary restrictions, the filing of a certificate of survey, and an award of relator's attorney fees because the Montana Subdivision and Platting Act (Title 76, ch. 3) clearly and unambiguously exempts occasional sales in resubdivisions, and Department of Consumer Affairs regulations were in direct conflict with the Act and exceeded delegated authority. State ex rel. Swart v. Casne, 172 M 302, 564 P2d 983 (1977).

Claim of Justice's Court for Unbudgeted Actual and Necessary Expenses: Where Justice of Peace filed claim to pay necessary extra clerical assistance and County Commissioners disallowed claim, a Writ of Mandate is an appropriate remedy and not a declaratory judgment action or an appeal of the Commissioners' decision because a declaratory judgment would not get the claim paid, as a declaratory judgment is an inept procedure for recovery of a fee for services performed. State ex rel. Browman v. Wood, 168 M 341, 543 P2d 184 (1975). (Annotator's Comment: In this case Supreme Court exercised supervisory powers to provide a procedure to prevent future actual or potential conflict between the Board of County Commissioners and Justice's Court.)

Public Retirement Administration: Where the Board of Administration of the retirement system had made a determination as to the incapacity of a claimant for retirement compensation but did not provide the hearing as contemplated by statute and required by due process, the relator in a mandamus proceeding is entitled to an order commanding the Board to grant a hearing. State ex rel. Morgan v. White, 136 M 470, 348 P2d 991 (1960).

Criminal Prosecutions:

An original proceeding for a Writ of Mandamus directed to the Judge of a District Court was proper in a case where it was sought to compel the court to allow the filing of a new information in a prosecution against three juvenile defendants for robbery. State ex rel. Keast v. District Court, 136 M 367, 348 P2d 135 (1959).

Where a criminal cause is removed from one county to another for trial, it is the duty of the county to which it is transferred to furnish a prosecuting officer, and mandamus will not issue to compel the county from which the change of venue was had to pay special counsel appointed by the District Court to represent the state. State ex rel. Cascade County v. Lewis & Clark County, 34 M 351, 86 P 419 (1906).

Public Assistance Administration: A peremptory Writ of Mandate was proper to compel the Department of Public Welfare to rescind a general order providing that members of a striking union were to receive less general relief assistance than other general relief recipients in the same class. State ex rel. Int'l Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers v. Dept. of Pub. Welfare, 136 M 283, 347 P2d 727 (1959).

Public Employment:

Where nonunion schoolteachers were offered a salary increase only if they signed a contract which contained a union security clause, they were entitled to bring a mandamus action against the school district to obtain a judgment declaring that they could not be discriminated against, compelling the district to enter into contracts with them, and ruling that the union security provision was void. Benson v. School District, 136 M 77, 344 P2d 117 (1959).

Where an employee of the Fish and Game Commission (now Fish, Wildlife, and Parks Commission) was summarily dismissed by the Commission without sufficient notice, he was entitled to relief by way of mandamus even though, subsequent to the discharge, he was given notice that a hearing on his dismissal would be held. State ex rel. Opheim v. St. Fish & Game Comm'n, 133 M 362, 323 P2d 1116 (1958), distinguished in State ex rel. Hollibaugh v. St. Fish & Game Comm'n, 139 M 384, 365 P2d 942 (1961).

Mandamus lies to reinstate an officer or employee who has been discharged in violation of the civil service laws. State ex rel. Driffill v. Anaconda, 41 M 577, 111 P 345 (1910).

Supreme Court Writ:

Mandamus is properly issued to carry into effect the judgment of the Supreme Court where the District Court fails for any reason to execute its mandate from the Supreme Court. State ex rel. Kitchens v. District Court, 130 M 57, 294 P2d 907 (1956).

Where the Supreme Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction awards a peremptory Writ of Mandate, the proper method of review thereof is by motion for new trial, not by motion for rehearing. State ex rel. Lynch v. Batani, 103 M 353, 62 P2d 565 (1936).

The Supreme Court may construe its own judgments and orders, and where the District Court has misconstrued its order in remanding a case or has acted beyond its power in construing it, mandamus will issue to review and correct its action. State ex rel. USF&G Co. v. District Court, 77 M 594, 251 P 1061 (1926), distinguished in Hansen v. Hansen, 130 M 496, 304 P2d 1107 (1956).

If it is necessary that two Justices of the Supreme Court concur in the issuance of an alternative Writ of Mandamus, where the application is made to two Justices, and the order directing the clerk to issue the Writ is signed by only one of them, the other concurring, the Writ is properly issued. State ex rel. Lambert v. Coad, 23 M 131, 57 P 1092 (1899).

Motor Vehicle Regulation: Mandamus will lie to compel issuance of license for logging trailer under 61-3-321. State ex rel. Sharp v. Cross, 123 M 261, 211 P2d 760 (1949).

Bias — District Judge's Failure to Call Another Judge: Mandamus is the proper remedy where a District Judge fails to call in another District Judge after an affidavit of bias has been filed under 93-901, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed). State ex rel. Coleman v. District Court, 120 M 372, 186 P2d 91 (1947).

District Court Action:

Where defendant in a proceeding for a Writ of Certiorari after return filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings, which motion was argued by the parties and submitted for decision, and the court instead of rendering judgment as required by 27-25-304, made an order, nonappealable in character, dismissing the proceeding, the Writ of Mandate compelling it to render judgment is the proper remedy. State ex rel. Altop v. District Court, 72 M 49, 231 P 99 (1924).

Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel the District Court to dismiss a case against a defaulted defendant where a long time has elapsed without the default having been demanded or entered. State ex rel. Stiefel v. District Court, 37 M 298, 96 P 337 (1908).

Where, after defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings had been argued and submitted, the District Court dismissed the action without prejudice on plaintiff's motion, mandamus will lie to require the court to reinstate the cause and determine defendant's motion. State ex rel. Mont. Cent. Ry. v. District Court, 32 M 37, 79 P 546 (1905), distinguished in St. v. District Court, 102 M 503, 59 P2d 45 (1936).

Tax Levy and Assessment:

A principle of assessment which, as a settled policy, omits the assessment of a large portion of assessable property is fundamentally wrong; hence where the State Board of Equalization (now the Department of Revenue) has adopted such a principle, mandamus lies to compel assessment of the omitted property. State ex rel. Snidow v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 93 M 19, 17 P2d 68 (1932).

There being no provision of law authorizing a county holding city property under tax deed to pay delinquent special assessments against it, mandamus does not lie to compel the County Treasurer, acting as collector of taxes for the city, to collect them. State ex rel. Billings v. Osten, 91 M 76, 5 P2d 562 (1931).

The Writ of Mandate does not lie to compel the State Board of Equalization (now the Department of Revenue) to consent to the transfer of shares of stock on the books of a foreign corporation doing business in the state and to return an inheritance tax paid under protest to the executor of the nonresident owner of the stock, the law not making it the specific duty of the Board to do so. State ex rel. Bankers' Trust Co. v. Walker, 70 M 484, 226 P 894 (1924).

Mandamus was the remedy to compel a city to levy a special tax to pay ascertained water rentals due under a valid contract for a water supply, the city having repudiated the contract. A command in the writ that the city levy sufficient taxes to pay the rentals due and those that will become due for the remaining 6 months of the year is proper. State ex rel. Great Falls Water Works Co. v. Great Falls City Council, 19 M 518, 49 P 15 (1897).

Assume Jurisdiction: While mandamus does not lie to compel a subordinate court to reverse a conclusion once reached or correct an erroneous decision or direct it how it shall decide a question, it does lie to compel it to assume jurisdiction and determine the merits of a cause where it erroneously decides, as a matter of law, that it has no jurisdiction or refuses to proceed, unless there is an adequate remedy by appeal or other method of review. State ex rel. Musselshell County v. District Court, 89 M 531, 300 P 235, 82 ALR 1158 (1931).

Municipal Officers: Upon the resignation of a Town Clerk, the Mayor appointed a successor whom the Council would not confirm; the town books were delivered by the former to the latter and held by her at the Mayor's direction. Members of the Council brought a proceeding in mandamus to compel the Mayor to deliver the books to them for inspection. While the books being held by the appointee under his direction might be said to be in the Mayor's possession under his duty to care for and preserve them, the law did not impose upon him any duty that he may be coerced to perform with relation to them, and therefore the writ does not lie to compel action on his part. State ex rel. Peterson v. Peck, 91 M 5, 4 P2d 1086 (1931).

Payment of Public Funds: While mandamus is a proper remedy to compel the County Treasurer to pay interest coupons upon county bonds if he then has funds out of which to make payment, where there was no showing that the county was in funds at the time the action was commenced, the District Court could properly entertain an action on interest coupons rather than a mandamus proceeding. Kalman v. Treasure County, 84 M 285, 275 P 743 (1929).

Prison Officials: An attorney whose client is imprisoned in the state penitentiary may in his own behalf bring mandamus proceedings to compel the prison authorities to permit him to consult his client in private. State ex rel. Casleton v. Bd. of Prison Comm'rs, 84 M 14, 273 P 1044 (1929).

Franchise Operation:

Failure or neglect of the Railroad Commission (now the Public Service Commission) to act promptly upon an application for permission to operate a bus line is no justification for the applicant to operate without the requisite certificate, his remedy being to compel action by mandamus. N. Pac. Ry. v. Bennett, 83 M 483, 272 P 987 (1928).

An ordinance granting a street railway company the right to construct and operate lines in certain streets and providing that if the company does not construct and operate a certain portion of the line within a certain time, the right shall be forfeited as to the parts where the failure occurs, does not impose on the company the duty to continue the operation of any portion of the line, and mandamus cannot issue to compel it to do so. State ex rel. Knight v. Helena Power & Light Co., 22 M 391, 56 P 685 (1899).

Territorial Operation of Writ: The District Court of one district or county has jurisdiction to issue a Writ of Mandate directed to an officer of another district or county to compel him to perform a ministerial act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from his office. State ex rel. Carroll v. District Court, 69 M 415, 222 P 444 (1924).

Motion to Quash: Since the alternative Writ of Mandate and the affidavit upon which it is issued together constitute the first pleading of the applicant, a motion to quash challenges the sufficiency of both. State ex rel. Duggan v. District Court, 65 M 197, 210 P 1062 (1922).

To Adjust Indebtedness Between New and Old Counties: Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel commissioners appointed to adjust county indebtedness between an old and a new county to reassemble and correctly apportion such indebtedness. State ex rel. Furnish v. Mullendore, 53 M 109, 161 P 949 (1916).

Extent of Relief: The character of the duty measures the extent of the relief which can be afforded by mandamus. State ex rel. Stuewe v. Hindson, 44 M 429, 120 P 485 (1912).

Claim and Delivery — Sheriff's Duty: When it becomes the Sheriff's duty to deliver possession of the property in controversy to the plaintiff, in an action of claim and delivery, the performance of that duty may be compelled by mandamus. State ex rel. Johnson v. Collins, 41 M 526, 110 P 526 (1910).

Highways, Roads, and Bridges: A telephone company, having the absolute right to use the streets of a city for the erection of its poles and construction of its lines, subject only to such reasonable regulations by the city as to where in the streets the poles and other appliances should be placed, cannot compel the city by mandamus to designate the streets, avenues, and alleys upon which to place its necessary appliances. State ex rel. Rocky Mtn. Bell Tel. Co. v. Red Lodge, 33 M 345, 83 P 642 (1905).

Anticipatory Writ: Where an officer's duty is a simple, defined duty, purely ministerial, arising under circumstances admitted or proved to exist and imposed by law, and he refuses performance in advance of the time fixed by law therefor, mandamus will at once lie to compel a performance at the proper time; and the court will not wait to determine whether or not he should perform until some future time when litigation arises and it is too late to require the performance of the defined duty. State ex rel. Lloyd v. Rotwitt, 15 M 29, 37 P 845 (1894).

CLEAR LEGAL DUTY

Petition for Writ of Mandamus Properly Denied — No Clear Legal Duty to Issue License. Yellowstone Disposal, LLC v. Dept. of Environmental Quality, 2022 MT 26, 407 Mont. 316, 503 P.3d 1097.

No Violation of Clear Legal Duty to Consult With County Under MEPA — Writ of Mandamus and Injunction Improper — Action Against DEQ Dismissed: After an exchange of information between the Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) and Jefferson County about the Mountain States Transmission Intertie (MSTI), a proposed electric transmission line that would transect Jefferson County, the county filed a petition for a writ of mandamus and injunctive relief seeking to compel DEQ to satisfy its legal duty under the Montana Environmental Protection Act (MEPA) to consult with local government prior to issuing a draft Environmental Impact Statement (EIS) and to enjoin DEQ from issuing the draft EIS until after it had complied with its duty to consult. After a series of evidentiary hearings, the District Court concluded that DEQ had not satisfied its duty to consult with the county under MEPA and enjoined it from issuing a draft EIS on the MSTI project until DEQ had more thoroughly consulted with the county, and DEQ appealed. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court had erred in issuing a writ of mandamus to compel DEQ to more thoroughly consult with the county because MEPA does not establish a clear legal duty for DEQ to consult with a local government to any specified degree. It also ruled that the writ of mandamus was improper because the county had other remedies available to it once DEQ rendered a final decision on the project. Because neither MEPA nor related regulations define the word “consult,” DEQ is afforded some discretion in determining the extent to which it consults with a local government under 75-1-104. Because MEPA allows for some discretion on the part of DEQ on how to consult with local government, the Supreme Court held the requirement to consult was not ministerial and therefore did not establish a clear legal duty under MEPA. Accordingly, the Supreme Court remanded the matter to the District Court with instructions to dismiss without prejudice. Jefferson County v. Dept. of Environmental Quality, 2011 MT 265, 362 Mont. 311, 264 P.3d 715.

Writ of Mandamus Denied — No Clear Legal Duty: An indigent defendant was represented at trial by a public defender but, using funds provided by friends, hired a private attorney to appeal his conviction. The Office of the Appellate Defender (OAD) filed an emergency petition for a writ of mandamus directing the defendant’s private attorney to file the defendant’s notice of appeal. The defendant’s private attorney cross-petitioned for a writ of mandamus directing the OAD to provide services to the defendant. The Supreme Court denied the OAD’s emergency petition, concluding that the OAD lacked standing to petition for a writ of mandamus because the defendant’s private attorney owed no clear legal duty to the OAD with regard to the defendant’s appeal. Although the defendant’s private attorney had standing to petition for a writ of mandamus, the Supreme Court denied the writ because the OAD had no legal duty to continue to provide services to an indigent defendant once the defendant was represented by a private attorney. Office of the Appellate Defender v. Engel, 2010 MT 168, 357 Mont. 182, 236 P.3d 609.

Erroneous Grant of Writ of Mandate After Statement Issued That Statutory Water Permit Criteria Not Satisfied — Remand: In December 2005, plaintiff filed an application for a water use permit for construction of a municipal water system in a subdivision. In February 2007, the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) issued a document directing that public notice be given of plaintiff’s application. At this point in the application process, plaintiff’s application was considered correct and complete. Parties objected to the application, but plaintiff settled with those parties. DNRC then sent plaintiff another application review form, and plaintiff provided additional requested information. By August 2007, more than 180 days had elapsed since the application was filed, but DNRC had still not taken action on it. In December 2007, plaintiff filed for a writ of mandate to require DNRC to issue a water use permit. Shortly after the petition for a writ was filed, DNRC issued a statement of opinion stating the plaintiff had failed to satisfy certain criteria under 85-2-311, and moved to quash the petition for a writ. Nevertheless, in May 2008, the District Court concluded that once DNRC made the decision that plaintiff’s application was correct and complete and took no further action, the only remaining option was the ministerial option of granting the permit. Therefore, the writ of mandate was issued directing DNRC to grant the permit to plaintiff. DNRC appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. The District Court erroneously granted the writ of mandate because the writ was issued after DNRC had already issued a statement that plaintiff failed to satisfy the statutory application criteria by a preponderance of the evidence. Because the statement of opinion was issued, even if in error, that action could not be undone by a writ of mandate regardless of the writ’s propriety or whether DNRC had statutory or jurisdictional authority to issue the opinion.

Additionally, the District Court erred in concluding that DNRC had a legal duty to issue a permit in this case. Once plaintiff's application was correct and complete, DNRC had a clear legal duty to process the application in a timely manner. DNRC failed to process the application and could have been commanded to make a decision one way or the other as soon as the timeframes lapsed, but issuance of the permit does not become a clear legal duty until objections are resolved and the applicant has proven all 85-2-311 criteria by a preponderance of the evidence. As set out in the statement of opinion, plaintiff had not satisfied all the criteria, so DNRC was under no legal duty to issue the permit. Thus, the writ of mandate was reversed and the case was remanded for further proceedings to allow plaintiff to request a hearing with DNRC regarding the application. Bostwick Properties, Inc. v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2009 MT 181, 351 M 26, 208 P3d 868 (2009), following Beasley v. Flathead County Bd. of Adjustment, 2009 MT 120, 350 M 171, 205 P3d 812 (2009). Issuance of Writ of Mandamus Based on Existence of Clear Legal Duty Involving Discretionary Act Properly Denied: Plaintiff sought a writ of mandamus as the appropriate mechanism to compel a County Board of Adjustments to transfer a conditional use permit to plaintiff to allow a gravel pit on property plaintiff purchased. Plaintiff contended that all available administrative remedies had been exhausted and that no remedy existed in the course of law other than the remedies sought by the writ. The Board argued that plaintiff incorrectly used the writ for relief and that a mandamus petition did not lie to correct a previously made Board decision or to control Board discretion. The District Court agreed with the Board and pointed out that plaintiff had a remedy under 76-2-227 to have the court review an alleged previous illegal board decision, rendering a writ of mandamus inapplicable. The writ was therefore dismissed, and plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. A writ of mandamus must be granted if a clear legal duty exists and no speedy and adequate legal remedy is available, but the clear legal duty must involve a ministerial act. Here, the Board's decision to deny transfer of the conditional use permit constituted a discretionary, not ministerial, act. Thus, the Board's decision constituted a completed act that was not reviewable under a writ of mandamus. Plaintiff had an adequate remedy under 76-2-227, despite the fact that the Board failed to issue findings of fact or a written decision. Beasley v. Flathead County Bd. of Adjustment, 2009 MT 120, 350 M 171, 205 P3d 812 (2009), followed in Bostwick Properties, Inc. v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2009 MT 181, 351 M 26, 208 P3d 868 (2009), and Deer Lodge v. Chilcott, 2012 MT 165, 365 Mont. 497, 285 P.3d 418. See also Smith v. Missoula County, 1999 MT 330, 297 M 368, 992 P2d 834 (1999), and Flathead Citizens for Quality Growth, Inc. v. Flathead County Bd. of Adjustment, 2008 MT 1, 341 M 1, 175 P3d 282 (2008).

Writ of Mandate Proper to Compel Arbitration of Collective Bargaining Agreement: Plaintiffs sought a writ of mandate to compel defendants to arbitrate an employee grievance, but the District Court denied the writ. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that plaintiffs established a clear legal duty to arbitrate, and absent a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy to compel arbitration, issuance of the writ of mandate was appropriate. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded for further proceedings. Belgrade Educ. Ass'n v. Belgrade School District No. 44, 2004 MT 318, 324 M 50, 102 P3d 517 (2004).

No Clear Legal Duty of Police Based on District Court Ruling Regarding Search and Seizure Procedures — Writ of Mandate Properly Denied: Best moved to suppress evidence obtained after a vehicle stop on grounds that the evidence was obtained in an unconstitutional search and seizure. The District Court found that the use of a drug-sniffing dog without a particularized suspicion of criminal activity was improper and suppressed the evidence. The day after the ruling, Best was again stopped and the police again used a drug-sniffing dog. Without regard to Best's allegations, another District Court Judge issued a search warrant authorizing the impoundment and search of Best's vehicle without requiring the particularized suspicion discussed in the suppression order of the day before. The police chief stated publicly that he would not direct his officers to change their procedures to conform to the earlier ruling on the motion to suppress. Shortly thereafter, several citizens sought a writ of mandate to compel the police chief to comply with the ruling. The writ was denied, and the citizens appealed, citing Boung Jae Jang v. Brown, 560 NYS 2d 307 (A.D. 2 Dept. 1990), for the proposition that a duty compelled by mandate may be in the form of a judicial determination and contending that the suppression order determined that the police practice of using drug-sniffing dogs without particularized suspicion was unconstitutional and that the police chief had a clear legal duty to discontinue the practice. The Supreme Court noted that whether a particularized suspicion exists depends on the factual nuances of each case, but nothing in the language of the suppression order specifically directed discontinuation of the practice or imposed a clear legal duty on the police chief. Although the citizens might understandably question whether the intended deterrent effect of the ruling would be achieved, their concerns did not transform a fact-specific suppression order into a prospective clear legal duty. Having failed to establish the first prong of the test for issuance of a writ of mandate, the Supreme Court affirmed the denial of the writ. Best v. Billings Police Dept., 2000 MT 97, 299 M 247, 999 P2d 334, 57 St. Rep. 396 (2000).

Statute Requiring "Necessary" Rules Requires Rulemaking Hearing — Mandamus Proper Remedy: Pursuant to 2-4-315 and 5-7-111, Common Cause submitted a petition to the Commissioner of Political Practices requesting the adoption of a definition of "lobbying". When the Commissioner denied the petition, Common Cause brought a petition for mandamus. The District Court dismissed pursuant to former Rule 12(b)(6), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court reversed, citing Commonwealth of Pa. v. Nat'l Ass'n of Flood Insurers, 520 F2d 11 (3d Cir. 1975), and holding that the language in 5-7-111 requiring rules "necessary" to implement the statute mandated the Commissioner to hold a hearing to determine whether rules were necessary. The Supreme Court held that the discretionary authority contained in 2-4-315 to adopt or not adopt a particular rule does not give the Commissioner the authority to avoid altogether the rulemaking required by 5-7-111. For this reason, the Supreme Court also held that mandamus was a proper remedy because the Commissioner had a clear legal duty to conduct rulemaking procedures to determine what rules were necessary. Common Cause of Mont. v. Argenbright, 276 M 382, 917 P2d 425, 53 St. Rep. 386 (1996).

No Clear Legal Duty to Issue Gambling Licenses and Permits — Activity Unlawful Under Federal Law — Writ of Mandamus Properly Denied: The Department of Justice, Gambling Control Division, denied gambling licenses and permits to the plaintiffs, business owners who operate within the boundaries of the Flathead Indian Reservation. The denial of licenses was based on the determination of the U.S. Attorney that the operation of video gambling machines would no longer be lawful on Indian lands absent a tribal-state compact. The plaintiffs filed a petition for a writ of mandamus ordering the state to issue the licenses and permits. The writ was denied. The plaintiffs appealed on the grounds that the state had a clear legal duty under state law to issue the licenses and permits. On appeal, the Supreme Court rejected the state's contention that state gambling laws specifically authorize it to refuse to process the plaintiffs' applications. However, because the plaintiffs seek to conduct gambling operations on the Flathead Indian Reservation, federal statutes must be considered in conjunction with state law. State law that conflicts with the purpose and operation of a federal statute, regulation, or policy is preempted by the federal law. State licensure of Class III gaming under the facts of this case would frustrate the federal policy underlying the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act (IGRA). The Supreme Court concluded that absent a ruling of a federal court as to the applicability of IGRA to non-Indians, such as the plaintiffs in this case, and given the apparent conflict between Montana licensing statutes and federal statutes regulating gambling on Indian lands, there is no clear legal duty requiring the state to issue gambling licenses and permits to the plaintiffs. The District Court did not err in denying the petition for a writ of mandamus. Larson v. St., 275 M 314, 912 P2d 783, 53 St. Rep. 158 (1996).

Mandamus Appropriate Remedy to Require City Commission to Hold Employee Discharge Hearing — Employee Entitled to Reinstatement: Phillips was terminated from his employment as a full-time firefighter for the city of Livingston. Before his termination, the city manager held a termination hearing. Phillips argued that the hearing was held in violation of 7-33-4124, requiring the hearing to be held before the City Commission. The Supreme Court found that the hearing should have been held by the City Commission. The court also held that mandamus was the proper remedy to require the City Commission to hold the discharge hearing and that because there was a clear statutory duty for the City Commission to hold the hearing, there was no obligation on Phillips' part to exhaust grievance remedies contained in the firefighters' collective bargaining agreement. Finally, the Supreme Court held that because Phillips did not have a plain, adequate, and speedy remedy at law, under 7-33-4124(2), he was entitled to reinstatement and backpay. Phillips v. Livingston, 268 M 156, 885 P2d 528, 51 St. Rep. 1227 (1994), distinguished in Smith v. Missoula County, 1999 MT 330, 297 M 368, 992 P2d 834, 56 St. Rep. 1318 (1999).

Writ of Mandamus Ordering State Agency to Pay Highway Patrol Benefits to Ex-Wife Improper: The petitioner obtained a writ of mandamus from the lower court directing the Department of Administration to pay one-half of her ex-husband's highway patrol retirement benefits to her as required by the couple's divorce decree. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the agency had no legal duty to pay the benefits to the petitioner because she was not a beneficiary under the applicable law. State ex rel. Neuhausen v. Nachtsheim, 253 M 296, 833 P2d 201, 49 St. Rep. 559 (1992).

No Duty of County to Collect Delinquent Water and Sewer Charges — Mandamus Denied: A water and sewer district sought a writ of mandamus to compel a county to collect delinquent assessment owed by an individual. Title 7, ch. 13, part 23, does not set forth a clear legal duty on the part of the county to collect the delinquent charges. The county can assess taxes sufficient to cover both bonded indebtedness payments and operating expenses, but only after advance notice required by 7-13-2304 through 7-13-2307. Delinquent water and sewer assessments levied against an individual are different from taxes levied against all district property under 7-13-2302. Absent a clear legal duty, mandamus was properly denied. RAE Subdivision County Water & Sewer District v. Gallatin County, 233 M 456, 760 P2d 755, 45 St. Rep. 1631 (1988).

Clerk Under No Clear Duty to Record Deed — Mandamus Erroneously Granted: Where the plaintiff attempted to record a deed to a 5-acre parcel of land without the removal or approval of sanitary restrictions by the county health department (which the court held was estopped from withholding its approval of a disposal permit) but was refused by the Clerk and Recorder, the District Court erred in granting a Writ of Mandamus ordering the Clerk to file a certificate of survey and record the warranty deed. The Clerk and Recorder was statutorily required to refuse to file the survey and record the deed and lacked any discretion to accept a survey absent compliance with the requirements of 76-4-122. Huttinga v. Pringle, 205 M 482, 668 P2d 1068, 40 St. Rep. 1444 (1983).

Department Under No Clear Legal Duty to Approve Subdivision — Mandamus Erroneously Granted: Where the plaintiff applied to the county health department for a disposal permit and was not informed by the county for a period of 6 years whether the permit would be issued, the District Court erred in granting a Writ of Mandamus directing the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Department of Environmental Quality) to certify that the deeded property was not subject to sanitary restrictions. No application for such certification had ever been submitted to the Department, and it therefore had no official knowledge of the plaintiff's disposal system. Absent an appropriate application to the Department, there is no factual or statutory basis for holding that the Department had violated a clear legal duty. Huttinga v. Pringle, 205 M 482, 668 P2d 1068, 40 St. Rep. 1444 (1983).

Mandate a Proper Remedy — Return of Mining Permit: Writ of Mandate is a proper remedy because the Department of State Lands (now Department of Natural Resources and Conservation) had a clear legal duty to return the permit application as incomplete and inadequate. Because the application was not returned, Permit 41A was void and Anaconda may not continue mining activities on the Permit 41A area until a valid permit is granted by the Department. Kadillak v. The Anaconda Co., 184 M 127, 602 P2d 147 (1979).

County Officers: District Court may issue Writ of Mandate compelling County Commissioners to pay necessary clerical expenses of Justice of the Peace when statute is directed to the financial needs of Justices of the Peace. State ex rel. Browman v. Wood, 168 M 341, 543 P2d 184 (1975).

Accounting to County Commissioners: Board of County Commissioners was properly denied Writ of Mandate requiring Sheriff to provide detailed itemized accounting of county funds received for furnishing board to prisoners of county jail since Sheriff has no clear legal duty to provide such an accounting. State ex rel. Lucier v. Murphy, 156 M 186, 478 P2d 273 (1970). (Decision prior to 1971 amendment of 7-32-2205.)

Must Show Affirmative Duty: On appeal from a mandamus proceeding to force state Water Conservation Board (now the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation) to repair and rebuild bridges over ditch, owned by the Board where it crosses city streets, before the Supreme Court could affirm the judgment of the District Court it had to be shown that some law enjoined upon Board an affirmative duty to repair the bridges in question. State ex rel. Livingston v. St. Water Conservation Bd., 134 M 403, 332 P2d 913 (1958).

Brand Registration: Where the holder of a registered brand died and thereafter the brand expired without being reregistered, the brand was then open to record by anyone; hence, mandamus brought by the administrator of the deceased person at a later date would not lie to require the recorder of marks and brands to record the brand in the administrator's name as there is no clear legal duty upon the recorder to do what the administrator required by his complaint. Benolken v. Miracle, 129 M 495, 289 P2d 953 (1955).

Compel Performance of Clear Legal Duty:
The Writ of Mandate lies only to compel the performance of an act that the law specifically enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station and therefore will not issue to do a thing beyond the power or duty of the person sought to be compelled. State ex rel. Judith Basin County v. Poland, 61 M 600, 203 P 352 (1921).

Unless an act, performance of which by a Board of County Commissioners is sought to be compelled by mandamus, is one which the law specifically enjoins upon it as a duty resulting from the office, the writ does not lie. State ex rel. Koefod v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 56 M 355, 185 P 147 (1919).

Mandamus lies only to compel the performance of a clear legal duty. State ex rel. Boulware v. Porter, 55 M 471, 178 P 832 (1919); State ex rel. Donlan v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 49 M 517, 143 P 984 (1914); State ex rel. Breen v. Toole, 32 M 4, 79 P 403 (1905).

Need to Establish Legal Right and Violation of Duty: To obtain the aid of a court by mandamus, relator must establish a clear legal right in himself to the relief prayed for and a violation of duty by the person or officer sought to be coerced. State ex rel. Cutts v. Hart, 56 M 571, 185 P 769 (1919); State ex rel. Beach v. District Court, 29 M 265, 74 P 498 (1903).

Duty Not Disclosed in Affidavit: Where the affidavit for the Writ of Mandamus does not disclose a clear legal duty on the part of a Board of County Commissioners to issue warrants in a certain amount in payment of a bridge voluntarily erected by relator upon a public highway, a demurrer (demurrer abolished, former Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., now superseded) for want of substance is properly sustained. State ex rel. Donlan v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 49 M 517, 143 P 984 (1914).

Writ Not to Compel Idle or Useless Things: The Writ of Mandate will not issue to compel the doing of an idle or useless thing but only to compel the performance of a clear legal duty. State ex rel. Culbertson Ferry Co. v. District Court, 49 M 595, 144 P 159 (1914).

Petition — Duty of Commissioners to Act: When the petition for the removal of a county seat is signed by a majority of the ad valorem taxpayers of the county, all of the signers being qualified voters, it is the ministerial duty of the Board of Commissioners to act upon the petition and submit the question of removal to a vote; and, if it declines to act, mandamus lies to compel it to act. State ex rel. Stringfellow v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 42 M 62, 111 P 144 (1910). See also State ex rel. Arthurs v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 44 M 51, 118 P 804 (1911).

Court Stenographer: Mandamus lies to compel the court stenographer to write out and file a list of the objections, rulings, and exceptions occurring on the trial of a cause. State ex rel. Kranich v. Supple, 22 M 184, 56 P 20 (1899), explained in State ex rel. Donovan v. Ledwidge, 27 M 197, 70 P 511 (1902).

CLEAR LEGAL RIGHT

Pretrial Detainees Entitled to Visitation With Counsel — Precautions to Protect Public Health Allowed: The Office of State Public Defender sought a writ of mandamus requiring Missoula County to vacate its visitation policy at the county detention center that suspended contact visits during flu season. The Supreme Court noted that pretrial detainees have an undisputed constitutional right to access to the courts, which includes contact visitation with counsel, and that the right may not be arbitrarily abridged. The public defender's office established that the visitation policy precluded pretrial detainees from exercising their constitutional rights, and because the detainees lacked a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy to protect that right, a writ of mandamus was appropriate. The court ordered that the detention facility immediately allow attorneys representing pretrial detainees to conduct private, confidential visits with their clients but also held that the detention facility could impose reasonable precautions related to public health, such as masking and hand sanitizing to reduce the risk of infection. Office of St. Public Defender v. McMeekin, 2009 MT 439, 354 M 130, 224 P3d 616 (2009).

Standing for Mandamus: Petitioner, an engineering survey group seeking a Writ of Mandamus to compel County Commissioners to act on five minor subdivisions, has no stated legal interest in any of the subdivisions. Some form of ownership in the land is necessary to impart standing to bring a mandamus action. St. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 181 M 177, 592 P2d 945 (1979).

Right to Have Defendant Perform Duty: A person seeking a Writ of Mandamus must be entitled to have the defendant perform a clear legal duty. Sullivan v. Treasurer, 140 M 609, 370 P2d 762 (1962).

Tax Deed — Quiet Title Action Pending: Writ of Mandamus to require County Treasurer to cancel tax deeds upon certain real property to which petitioners asserted ownership was denied, it being apparent that the County Treasurer had no clear legal duty to cancel the tax deeds since the petitioners were involved in a quiet title action, to which county and tax debtors were parties, touching the gist of their petition for a Writ of Mandamus. Sullivan v. Treasurer, 140 M 609, 370 P2d 762 (1962).

Establishing Right — Violation of Duty: The applicant must establish a clear legal right to the writ in his application therefor and a violation of duty by the person sought to be coerced. Stewart v. St., 135 M 323, 340 P2d 151 (1959).

Other Remedy Available:

The writ lies only when the person seeking it is entitled to have the defendant perform a clear legal duty, and then only when there is no speedy or adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. State ex rel. Kennedy v. District Court, 121 M 320, 194 P2d 256, 2 ALR 2d 1050 (1948).

To secure the aid of a court by mandamus the relator must establish a clear legal right in himself and a clear violation of a legal duty by the person or officer sought to be coerced into action; if there is any other adequate remedy to which he can resort to enforce his right, the writ does not lie. State ex rel. Peterson v. Peck, 91 M 5, 4 P2d 1086 (1931).

The Writ of Mandate should go whenever there is no speedy or adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, and the person seeking it is entitled to have the defendant perform a clear legal duty. State ex rel. Furnish v. Mullendore, 53 M 109, 161 P 949 (1916); State ex rel. Stuewe v. Hindson, 44 M 429, 120 P 485 (1912); State ex rel. Bean v. Lyons, 37 M 354, 96 P 922 (1908); Raleigh v. District Court, 24 M 306, 61 P 991 (1900), distinguished in State ex rel. Finlen v. District Court, 26 M 372, 68 P 465 (1902).

Pleadings: Mandamus is an extraordinary remedy to be obtained only in those rare cases wherein there is not any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, and therefore the applicant must disclose the facts which establish his clear legal right to the relief sought. State ex rel. Duggan v. District Court, 65 M 197, 210 P 1062 (1922).

Payment of Public Funds: In a proceeding by mandamus against the State Treasurer to compel that official to pay a member of the Legislature the compensation due him by law, the petitioner must show a legal right in himself to the relief prayed for and a violation of his duty on the part of the State Treasurer, and the court has nothing to do in such a proceeding with the question of a quantum meruit for the value of the services rendered by the petitioner. State ex rel. Cutts v. Hart, 56 M 571, 185 P 769 (1919).

MANDAMUS NOT TO COMPEL DISCRETIONARY ACT

Declaratory Judgment, Mandamus, and Judicial Review Inappropriate Remedies for Discretionary Decision of Commissioner of Political Practices: Doty, a political candidate, filed a complaint with the Commissioner of Political Practices, alleging that an opponent violated Montana's political civil libel statute and the false swearing statute when the opponent filed a complaint with the Commissioner, alleging that Doty was unqualified for office. The Commissioner found insufficient evidence that the opponent violated the law and decided not to prosecute the opponent, so Doty sought a declaratory judgment, mandamus, and judicial review in District Court challenging the Commissioner's decision. The Commissioner moved to dismiss on grounds that: (1) Doty lacked standing to request a declaratory judgment because Doty's rights, status, or other legal relations were not affected by the Commissioner's decision not to pursue legal action; (2) the decision was not subject to mandamus because it was discretionary; and (3) the decision was not subject to judicial review because it was not a contested case and because Doty's rights were not prejudiced. The District Court agreed and dismissed the complaint, and Doty appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The court first noted that the Commissioner's authority to enforce campaign laws is discretionary and that the laws are for the benefit of the public at large. Pursuant to Jeppeson v. St., 205 M 282, 667 P2d 428 (1983), a writ of mandamus will not issue to compel performance of a discretionary function. Also, Doty himself was not prosecuted or threatened with prosecution for violating campaign laws, so his legal rights were unaffected by the Commissioner's decision. Thus, neither a declaratory judgment action nor judicial review was appropriate. Doty v. Comm'r of Political Practices, 2007 MT 341, 340 M 276, 173 P3d 700 (2007).

Refusal to Record Deeds Perceived to Be in Violation of County Subdivision Law — Mandamus Not Proper: In an action to compel county officers to accept for recording a deed and certificate of survey, the trial court properly denied a Writ of Mandamus. The county officers' refusal was based on a belief that appellant was attempting to evade county subdivision regulations. When the act sought to be compelled is discretionary, as in this case, a Writ of Mandamus will be issued only if the failure to act is such an abuse of discretion that it amounts to no exercise of discretion at all. The evidence in this case indicates no abuse of discretion. Withers v. Beaverhead County, 218 M 447, 710 P2d 1339, 42 St. Rep. 1730 (1985), distinguished in State ex rel. Leach v. Visser, 234 M 438, 767 P2d 858, 45 St. Rep. 2035 (1988), and followed in Smith v. Missoula County, 1999 MT 330, 297 M 368, 992 P2d 834, 56 St. Rep. 1318 (1999).

Writ of Mandate Not Proper to Prevent Appropriation of In-Lieu Funds: When the County Commission appropriated in-lieu park funds to a project not specifically authorized in the county outdoor recreation and open space plan, a Writ of Mandate did not lie because the appropriation of the in-lieu funds is a discretionary act. Burgess v. Gallatin County Comm'n, 215 M 503, 698 P2d 862, 42 St. Rep. 585 (1985).

Variance Decision Not Subject to Mandamus: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to issue a Writ of Mandamus to compel the city to issue a building permit so plaintiff could remodel its building for a prerelease center. There was no legal duty requiring the City Commission to approve any variance from the urban renewal plan, which prohibited such a land use in a high density business district. The City Commission's refusal of a variance was purely discretionary and cannot be controlled by mandamus. State ex rel. Galloway v. Great Falls, 211 M 354, 684 P2d 495, 41 St. Rep. 1410 (1984).

Mandamus Against Those Determining Qualifications of Public Contract Bidders: The Department of Administration and Board of Examiners, in determining whether bidders for the construction of a public building are qualified and will perform the contract in conformity with the specifications and terms of the solicitation for bids, as required by 18-2-103, are acting in a discretionary manner, and mandamus may not be used to control their discretion. Martel Constr., Inc. v. Bd. of Examiners, 205 M 332, 668 P2d 222, 40 St. Rep. 1340 (1983).

Discretionary Actions:

The Department of State Lands (now Department of Natural Resources and Conservation) is under a fiduciary duty to manage the school lands according to the highest standards. Therefore, the Department's power when administering the trust is discretionary, and a Writ of Mandamus may not be issued to compel the Department to approve an assignment of a lease. Jeppeson v. St., 205 M 282, 667 P2d 428, 40 St. Rep. 1272 (1983), followed in N. Fork Preservation Ass'n v. Dept. of State Lands, 238 M 451, 778 P2d 862, 46 St. Rep. 1409 (1989).

Mandamus lies to compel action where the act sought to be compelled is one which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station, but not to control discretion. State ex rel. Musselshell County v. District Court, 89 M 531, 300 P 235, 82 ALR 1158 (1931).

Mandamus lies to compel action but not to control discretion. State ex rel. Scollard v. Bd. of Examiners, 52 M 91, 156 P 124 (1916); State ex rel. Stuewe v. Hindson, 44 M 429, 120 P 485 (1912).

The question whether state lands lying within 3 miles of the limits of a city or town shall be leased or sold, being one addressed to the sound discretion of the State Board of Land Commissioners, mandamus does not lie to compel such Board to entertain an application to lease. State ex rel. Gibson v. Stewart, 50 M 404, 147 P 276 (1915).

No Mandamus to Certify Signatures on Petition for Ballot Issue: A Writ of Mandate may not be issued to control discretion, absent an abuse thereof. The function of the County Clerk and Recorder in deciding if signatures on a petition for a ballot issue are "signed in substantially the same manner" as the signatures on the voter registry cards involves the exercise of discretion. Therefore, the District Court properly refused to issue a Writ to compel the certification of certain signatures. St. v. Murray, 183 M 499, 600 P2d 1174 (1979).

Board of Personnel Appeals — Discretionary Power — Decertification Election: When unfair labor practices charges were pending against an employer, it was within statutory discretionary boundaries for the Board of Personnel Appeals (BPA) to refuse to hold a bargaining representative decertification election until the charges were no longer pending. A Writ of Mandamus to conduct a decertification election need not be obeyed by BPA under these conditions. Without a clear legal duty, mandamus does not lie. State ex rel. Bd. of Personnel Appeals v. District Court, 183 M 223, 598 P2d 1117 (1979).

Clear Legal Duty — Exhaustion of Remedies: Mandamus will not lie to compel performance of a discretionary function, and when a private organization was unable to present a statute, regulation, or other evidence of a clear legal duty on the part of a state drug program to apply for a waiver of a federal prohibition against the payment of funds by two federal agencies, mandamus was not a proper remedy. When the petitioner is unable to demonstrate that it does not have an adequate remedy at law and when it appears that it is relying on contractual obligations to establish the clear legal duty necessary for a Writ of Mandate, the petitioner has an adequate remedy at law for breach of contract or in equity for specific performance. State ex rel. Butte Youth Serv. Center v. Murray, 170 M 171, 551 P2d 1017 (1976).

Requiring City to Condemn Private Land: Trial court properly denied Writ of Mandate, sought pursuant to this section, to require city to condemn private lands for use as public streets, since this section provides for performance of ministerial duty and not duty or power that requires exercise of discretion. State ex rel. Wiedman v. Kalispell, 154 M 31, 459 P2d 694 (1969).

Substitution of Court's Judgment: When a Board of County Commissioners has acted in awarding a contract for county printing, its discretion cannot be controlled by mandamus and the court is not authorized to substitute its judgment for that of the Board. State ex rel. Bowler v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 106 M 251, 76 P2d 648 (1938).

School Administration: Mandamus does not lie to compel school trustees to rescind their action in closing schools, taken on the ground of the unfavorable financial condition of the district and the removal of many families from the vicinity, since the matter of maintaining or closing of any particular schools, as well as the transportation of children to another school, is within the discretion of the Board. State ex rel. Robinson v. Desonia, 67 M 201, 215 P 220 (1923).

ABUSE OF DISCRETION

Department Administration of School Lands — Canceled Lease — No Abuse: In 1950, the Department of State Lands (now Department of Natural Resources and Conservation) leased a parcel of grazing land to Jeppeson's father. The lease was renewed to the father's estate in 1960. In 1970, the lease was changed to Jeppeson's name. Jeppeson paid his lease rent late in 1973 and not at all in 1974. The lease was canceled for nonpayment, and the land remained unleased for 2 years. In 1976, the Department leased to someone who assigned the lease to Jeppeson. Jeppeson was late in his payment in 1977 and in 1978 lost the lease temporarily for paying late. In 1980, no rent was paid and the lease was canceled. The parcel was not re-leased until 1981 when Hawks leased it. Hawks agreed with Jeppeson to assign the lease to him. Application for approval of the assignment was made to the Department on January 29, 1982. The Department wrote to Jeppeson in late March stating that it was hesitant to approve the assignment due to Jeppeson's poor paying record. No one paid the 1982 payment that was due on April 1, 1982, and on April 22, 1982, the Department notified Hawks that the lease was canceled. The Supreme Court ruled that there was no evidence of arbitrary and capricious action on the part of the Department so as to justify mandatory relief. Jeppeson v. St., 205 M 282, 667 P2d 428, 40 St. Rep. 1272 (1983).

License for Mobile Home Court — No Abuse: Action of Town Council in refusing to issue a mobile home court license until petitioner had removed a house which encroached onto a public alley was not an abuse of discretion, and mandamus will not lie to compel the issuance of the license. State ex rel. Barnes v. Belgrade, 164 M 467, 524 P2d 1112 (1974).

County Officers — Fraud: Mandamus does not lie to control the discretion lodged in a Board of County Commissioners in the matter of awarding a public contract, but where fraud has entered into the transaction, it cannot be said that discretion has been exercised, and the writ is available to compel the Board to act. State ex rel. Stuewe v. Hindson, 44 M 429, 120 P 485 (1912); State ex rel. Robert Mitchell Furniture Co. v. Toole, 26 M 22, 66 P 496 (1901).

School Administration: Mandamus is the proper remedy to require the trustees of a school district to determine the location of a site for a schoolhouse, where they arbitrarily remove a school to a site selected by themselves, without consulting the electors. State ex rel. Bean v. Lyons, 37 M 354, 96 P 922 (1908), distinguished in State ex rel. Robinson v. Desonia, 67 M 201, 215 P 220 (1923).

MINISTERIAL ACT

Encroachment Permit Process Discretionary Act — Not Subject to Writ of Mandate. Kageco Orchards, LLC v. Dept. of Transportation, 2023 MT 71, 412 Mont. 45, 528 P.3d 1097.

Executors and Administrators: Under 91-3019, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), requiring an executor, after the District Court sitting in probate makes an order confirming a sale of estate real property, to execute a conveyance to the purchaser, execution of the conveyance is a mere ministerial act, performance of which may be compelled by mandamus. State ex rel. Brink v. McCracken, 91 M 157, 6 P2d 869 (1931).

Mandamus — Proper Remedy: Mandamus is a proper remedy to compel the performance of a ministerial act or duty. State ex rel. Brink v. McCracken, 91 M 157, 6 P2d 869 (1931).

ADEQUACY OF OTHER REMEDY

Extraordinary Remedy Not Required: When a certified garbage hauler protested another company's application for certification from the Public Service Commission (PSC) to haul garbage, the PSC appointed a staff lawyer to resolve discovery disputes for the PSC proceeding. The lawyer herself propounded discovery and engaged in ex parte communication with the applicant. Petitioners sought and received a writ of mandamus in the District Court removing the matter from the PSC and assigning it to an independent hearing examiner. Reviewing for correctness, the Supreme Court applied its questions from State ex rel. Thomas v. District Court, 224 Mont. 441, 731 P.2d 324 (1986), and concluded the case did not require an extraordinary remedy, noting the discovery request was withdrawn and the lawyer no longer worked for the PSC. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded. Allied Waste Serv. of N. Am., LLC v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 2019 MT 199, 397 Mont. 85, 447 P.3d 463.

De Novo Appeal From City Court to District Court as Adequate Remedy: Maloney was convicted in City Court of speeding and driving under the influence of alcohol. Maloney appealed his conviction de novo for a trial in District Court and, at the same time, filed a petition for a writ of review, mandamus, and supervisory control, asking the District Court to direct the City Court to dismiss the charges. The District Court denied the petition. The Supreme Court held that the de novo appeal to the District Court constituted an adequate legal remedy. Maloney v. Gordon, 254 M 314, 837 P2d 1341, 49 St. Rep. 834 (1992).

Petition for Mandamus Premature Remedy: The plaintiffs' petition for mandamus to compel public officers to declare property adjacent to plaintiffs' a public nuisance and abate same was premature, as the plaintiffs failed to show they had asked officers to abate the alleged nuisance before filing petition for a Writ of Mandamus. Generally, before mandamus will issue to a public officer, a demand for performance of the act sought to be compelled is required. Liebman v. Brunell, 212 M 459, 689 P2d 248, 41 St. Rep. 1863 (1984).

Mandamus Most Adequate Remedy Directed to Public Officer or Body: Defendant filed a mandamus action against Gallatin County to compel the Sheriff to issue licenses to operate keno games. A Writ of Mandamus against a public officer or body is a more adequate remedy than a declaratory judgment because mandamus commands performance, while a declaratory judgment simply pronounces the duty to perform. In this case, mandamus was the most adequate remedy available. Gallatin County v. D & R Music & Vending, Inc., 201 M 409, 654 P2d 998, 39 St. Rep. 2197 (1982).

Lack of Speedy or Adequate Remedy a Prerequisite: A Writ of Mandate can be used to compel the performance of an act that the law requires as a duty resulting from a state office, but the Writ will issue only where there has been a showing that a clear legal duty exists and that there is no speedy or adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. State ex rel. Intake Water Co. v. Bd. of Natural Resources & Conservation, 197 M 482, 645 P2d 383, 39 St. Rep. 717 (1982), followed in State ex rel. Chisholm v. District Court, 224 M 441, 731 P2d 324, 43 St. Rep. 2317 (1986), and Franchi v. Jefferson County, 274 M 272, 908 P2d 210, 52 St. Rep. 1229 (1995). Chisholm and Franchi were followed in Common Cause of Mont. v. Argenbright, 276 M 382, 917 P2d 425, 53 St. Rep. 386 (1996).

Appeal to Zoning Board of Adjustment Available — Writ of Mandate Improper: Where builders had invested approximately $114,000 and work was one-third completed, city was estopped from revoking building permit, after builders relied on it to their detriment, to meet setback requirements of city zoning ordinance. Writ of Mandate brought by residents to command builders to conform to setback requirements could not lie, as 76-2-326 provides residents with a speedy and adequate remedy at law, since a Writ of Mandate is an extraordinary remedy to be permitted only when no other adequate remedy lies. State ex rel. May v. Hartson, 167 M 441, 539 P2d 376 (1975).

Adequate Remedy at Law: To deny mandamus on the ground of a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law available to the petitioner, the remedy must be one that can be pursued to compel the performance of the act imposed as a duty on the respondent and not a remedy to secure other relief. Burgess v. Softich, 167 M 70, 535 P2d 178 (1975).

Labor Standards Division: Petitioner's right to file action at law against employer for nonpayment of wages was not an alternative remedy to a mandamus petition to compel Commissioner of Labor to hold a hearing, since the alternative, plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law must be one which can be pursued by petitioner to compel the performance of the official duty. Burgess v. Softich, 167 M 70, 535 P2d 178 (1975).

Mandamus to Compel Disqualification of Justice of the Peace: Since 46-17-311, by providing for a trial de novo in the District Court, provided a plain, adequate, and speedy remedy at law, mandamus did not lie to compel Justice of the Peace to honor motion for disqualification. Bailey v. St., 163 M 380, 517 P2d 708 (1974).

No Certain, Plain, Adequate, or Speedy Remedy:

A petitioner is not entitled to a writ of mandate when an alternative action provides the opportunity to raise and develop the issues in a speedy and adequate manner. O'Brien v. Krantz, 2018 MT 191, 392 Mont. 265, 423 P.3d 572.

Where subsequent tax sale certificates purchaser gave notice of intention to apply for tax deed on certain date and prior certificates purchaser tendered payment to County Treasurer for redemption of such subsequent certificates but his tender was refused, Writ of Mandate was proper remedy to effect his redemption, since no other available remedies would be certain, plain, adequate, or speedy. State ex rel. Burkhartsmeier Bros. v. McCormick, 162 M 234, 510 P2d 266 (1973).

Mandamus may be granted when neither appeal nor other proceeding in the ordinary course of law affords a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. Sullivan v. Treasurer, 140 M 609, 370 P2d 762 (1962); State ex rel. King v. District Court, 24 M 494, 62 P 820 (1900).

A Writ of Mandate will issue only where there is no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. Moran v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 139 M 351, 363 P2d 1073 (1961); McConnell v. District Court, 120 M 253, 182 P2d 846 (1947).

The Writ of Mandamus is available only where there is no speedy or adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. Stewart v. St., 135 M 323, 340 P2d 151 (1959).

Mandamus is a proper remedy where there is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, and the writ lies to compel the performance of an act which the law specifically enjoins as a duty. State ex rel. N. Am. Life Ins. Co. v. District Court, 97 M 523, 37 P2d 329 (1934); State ex rel. Fed. Land Bank v. Hays, 86 M 58, 282 P 32 (1929).

Appealable Matters: Engineer seeking registration from state Board had no right to a Writ of Mandamus where discretion of the Board was subject to review under section 66-2345, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed). Heldenbrand v. St. Bd. of Registration for Professional Eng'rs & Land Surveyors, 147 M 271, 411 P2d 744 (1966).

Termination of Annexation Proceedings: Where a majority of the resident freeholders of a first-class city validly protested proposed annexation under 7-2-4313 but City Council instead of terminating the annexation proceedings took arbitrary action, mandamus was proper to compel Council to terminate the process. The Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act, Title 27, ch. 8, did not furnish the protestants a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. State ex rel. Konen v. Butte, 144 M 95, 394 P2d 753 (1964).

County Claims:

District Court properly quashed Writ of Mandate to compel County Commissioners to allow claim of hospital since there existed a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law under 7-6-2424, which provides for an appeal to the District Court from a disallowed claim. State ex rel. Mont. Hosp. Ass'n v. Pitch, 140 M 349, 372 P2d 90 (1962).

Judgment of District Court quashing Writ of Mandate was well founded where property owner, who brought action in mandamus to compel County Commissioners to refund sum paid to redeem land on ground that taxes had been erroneously collected, had adequate remedy at law to recover taxes under 15-16-601 (now repealed). Moran v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 139 M 351, 363 P2d 1073 (1961).

Inadequate Right of Appeal:

The mere existence of a right of appeal, where it is inadequate, does not preclude the issuance of a Writ of Mandate. State ex rel. Penhale v. St. Highway Patrol, 133 M 162, 321 P2d 612 (1958).

The existence of an inadequate right of appeal is not a bar to the issuance of a Writ of Mandamus. State ex rel. Musselshell County v. District Court, 89 M 531, 300 P 235, 82 ALR 1158 (1931).

Other Remedy — Relator Returned to Status Quo: To supersede the remedy by mandamus, the party seeking the writ must not only have a specific, adequate, legal remedy but one competent to afford relief upon the very subject matter of his application; it must be a remedy which will place the relator in status quo, i.e., in the same position he would have been had the duty, performance of which is sought to be compelled, been performed. State ex rel. Brink v. McCracken, 91 M 157, 6 P2d 869 (1931).

Injunction Available: The Writ of Mandate will not issue where the applicant has a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in equity, as by the issuance of an injunction, and the court in the exercise of its discretion may refuse the Writ. State ex rel. Larsen v. District Court, 78 M 435, 254 P 414 (1927).

License Denial: Mandamus will not lie to compel the Board of Medical Examiners to issue a certificate to practice medicine to an applicant whose demand has been refused, where the statute creating such Board has provided a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law in such case in an appeal to the District Court. State ex rel. Narcross v. Bd. of Medical Examiners, 10 M 162, 25 P 440 (1890).

MANDAMUS NOT TO CORRECT ACTION TAKEN

Action by City on Day-Care Center: In the instant case the city has acted. It summarily approved a day-care center as a permissible use. The questions of whether this was an erroneous decision and whether it was accomplished through an erroneous procedure involve past and completed acts not reviewable by a Writ of Mandate. State ex rel. Popham v. Hamilton, 185 M 26, 604 P2d 312 (1979), following Melton v. Oleson, 165 M 424, 530 P2d 466 (1974).

Equitable Relief: Although Writ of Mandamus was not a permissible remedy to correct or undo action already taken, plaintiff who was disqualified from voting because of violation of federal liquor laws was entitled to equitable relief and adjudication of his rights. Melton v. Oleson, 165 M 424, 530 P2d 466 (1974).

State Board of Land Commissioners — Discretionary Actions: Mandamus lies only to compel performance of an act, not to correct action already done, so that where State Board of Land Commissioners exercised discretion in awarding lease of land to lowest bidder, mandamus was not the proper writ to pursue in seeking a remedy. State ex rel. Thompson v. Babcock, 147 M 46, 409 P2d 808 (1966).

District Court Action: While ordinarily mandamus does not lie to correct an error of the District Court, yet where its erroneous action was tantamount to refusal to act (as where, on motion, it struck a petition for letters of administration from the files without affording an opportunity to petitioner to be heard on the merits, a duty specially enjoined upon it by law) mandamus is the proper remedy to compel restoration of the petition to the files. State ex rel. Peel v. District Court, 59 M 505, 197 P 741 (1921).

No Correction of Judgment of the District Court: Mandamus may not be invoked to correct a judgment entered by the District Court or where the remedy by appeal is plain, speedy, and adequate. State ex rel. Centennial Brewing Co. v. District Court, 47 M 547, 133 P 679 (1913).

WRIT ISSUED AT DISCRETION OF COURT

Delay in Applying for Writ:

The District Court may, in its discretion, deny an application for a Writ of Mandate, notwithstanding the statutory limitation, if there has been long delay in making it, in the absence of excuse or explanation, each case depending on its own facts; but if it is apparent that delay in making application has not resulted in prejudice to the rights of the adverse party and that the relief sought does not depend upon the determination of doubtful and disputed questions of fact, the Writ may run. State ex rel. Phillips v. Ford, 116 M 190, 151 P2d 171 (1944).

Mandamus, like injunction, is an emergency writ, and its purpose is to furnish a speedy remedy for some apparent wrong. The writ will not be issued to compel the performance of an act which would be useless, ineffectual, or unavailing as a remedy and may be refused if long delay or laches in making the application appears and there is no showing to explain or excuse its existence. State ex rel. Beach v. District Court, 29 M 265, 74 P 498 (1903). See also State ex rel. Bailey v. Edwards, 40 M 313, 106 P 703 (1910); State ex rel. Bennetts v. Duncan, 47 M 447, 133 P 109 (1913), distinguished in State ex rel. Boorman v. St. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 109 M 127, 94 P2d 201 (1939).

Not a Writ of Right: Mandamus is not a writ of right; it issues only in the discretion of the court and will only be allowed in furtherance of justice in a proper case. In determining whether it shall issue or not, the court is not bound to take the case as the applicant presents it; it may consider defendant's rights, the interests of third persons, the importance or unimportance of the case, and the applicant's conduct. State ex rel. Larsen v. District Court, 78 M 435, 254 P 414 (1927).

Case Notes

Standing for Mandamus:

Petitioner, an engineering survey group seeking a Writ of Mandamus to compel County Commissioners to act on five minor subdivisions, has no stated legal interest in any of the subdivisions. Some form of ownership in the land is necessary to impart standing to bring a mandamus action. St. v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 181 M 177, 592 P2d 945 (1979).

An attorney whose client is imprisoned in the state penitentiary may in his own behalf bring mandamus proceedings to compel the prison authorities to permit him to consult his client in private. State ex rel. Casleton v. Bd. of Prison Comm'rs, 84 M 14, 273 P 1044 (1929).

A resident and taxpayer of a school district who sought by mandamus to compel a school board to submit the question of the removal of a school to the electors of the district was a party beneficially interested, within the meaning of this section, and entitled to make the application for the writ. State ex rel. Bean v. Lyons, 37 M 354, 96 P 922 (1908).

An elector of the state is beneficially interested in legal proceedings to compel the state's officers to perform their duties and is the proper party to apply for the Writ of Mandate to secure this result. Chumasero v. Potts, 2 M 242 (1875). See also State ex rel. Buck v. Bd. of County Comm'rs, 21 M 469, 54 P 939 (1898); State ex rel. Stuewe v. Hindson, 44 M 429, 120 P 485 (1912); Milligan v. Miles City, 51 M 374, 153 P 276 (1915); Poe v. Sheridan County, 52 M 279, 157 P 185 (1916); Hill v. Rae, 52 M 378, 158 P 826 (1916).

Claim of Justice's Court for Unbudgeted Actual and Necessary Expenses: Where Justice of Peace filed claim to pay necessary extra clerical assistance and County Commissioners disallowed claim, a Writ of Mandate is an appropriate remedy and not a declaratory judgment action or an appeal of the Commissioners' decision because a declaratory judgment would not get the claim paid, as a declaratory judgment is an inept procedure for recovery of a fee for services performed. State ex rel. Browman v. Wood, 168 M 341, 543 P2d 184 (1975). (Annotator's Comment: In this case Supreme Court exercised supervisory powers to provide a procedure to prevent future actual or potential conflict between the Board of County Commissioners and Justice's Court.)

County Claims: District Court correctly issued Writ of Mandate to compel County Commissioners to pay necessary clerical expenses of Justice of the Peace, and remedy of appeal from denial of claim was not adequate when secretary had right to appeal. State ex rel. Browman v. Wood, 168 M 341, 543 P2d 184 (1975).

Writ of Mandate Improper Where Other Adequate Remedy Lies:

Where builders had invested approximately $114,000 and the work was one-third completed, city was estopped from revoking building permit, after builders relied on it to their detriment, to meet setback requirements of city zoning ordinance. Writ of Mandate brought by residents to command builders to conform to setback requirements could not lie, as 76-2-326 provides residents with a speedy and adequate remedy at law, since a Writ of Mandate is an extraordinary remedy to be permitted only when no other adequate remedy lies. State ex rel. May v. Hartson, 167 M 441, 539 P2d 376 (1975).

To deny mandamus on the ground of a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law available to the petitioner, the remedy must be one which can be pursued to compel the performance of the act imposed as a duty on the respondent and not a remedy to secure other relief. Burgess v. Softich, 167 M 70, 535 P2d 178 (1975).

Case Notes

Moot Question After Compliance: Where the Liquor Control Board (now the Department of Revenue) issued a license in compliance with District Court mandate in lieu of applying for supersedeas from Supreme Court, the question whether the mandate was proper did not present a justiciable controversy for the Supreme Court. Gill v. Rafn, 133 M 505, 326 P2d 974 (1958), distinguished in State ex rel. Ronish v. School District, 136 M 453, 348 P2d 797 (1960).

Return to Peremptory Writ: This section contemplates that, after service of a peremptory Writ of Mandate, a return shall be made by the party upon whom the Writ is served; and while the Code does not specify what the return shall contain, the general rule is that it should contain a certificate of compliance, unless something impossible or unlawful is commanded or such a change of conditions has taken place as to make compliance improper, in which case the facts should be stated. State ex rel. Edwards v. District Court, 41 M 369, 109 P 434 (1910).

Motion to Quash: The sufficiency of the affidavit on which an alternative Writ of Mandate is based may be tested by a motion to quash the Writ; and such motion performs the same office as a general demurrer (demurrer abolished, former Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., now superseded) and brings the law of the case before the court. State ex rel. St. Publishing Co. v. Hogan, 22 M 384, 56 P 818 (1899).

Contents of Alternative Writ: An alternative Writ of Mandate which states generally the acts which the parties have omitted to do and which they are required to perform is sufficient under this section. State ex rel. Leech v. Bd. of Canvassers, 13 M 23, 31 P 879 (1892).

Case Notes

Admissibility of Evidence From Earlier Related Lawsuit in Mandamus Proceeding: In a proceeding for a Writ of Mandamus compelling county officers to accept for recording a deed and certificate of survey, it was proper for the trial court to admit into evidence exhibits and testimony from an earlier lawsuit concerning similar issues and the same property. The applicant's conduct is a proper consideration in a mandamus action. Further, the evidence is relevant under Rule 401, Montana Rules of Evidence. Withers v. Beaverhead County, 218 M 447, 710 P2d 1339, 42 St. Rep. 1730 (1985).

Pleadings: The rule that essential facts constituting a defense in mandamus proceedings and raising questions triable by jury or court must be pleaded by answer applies only when such facts are not disclosed upon the face of the petition or affidavit. State ex rel. Powell v. St. Bank of Moore, 90 M 539, 4 P2d 717, 80 ALR 1494 (1931).

Trial Without Jury: Any and all of the questions arising in a mandamus proceeding, whether of law or of fact, may be tried by the District Court without a jury, with or without a reference. Bailey v. Edwards, 47 M 363, 133 P 1095 (1913); Chumasero v. Potts, 2 M 242 (1875).

27-26-304. Applicant's response to answer.

Case Notes

Contradiction of Answer: On application for Writ of Prohibition made in the Supreme Court, the applicant may, under this section, made applicable to such Writs by 27-27-104, contradict the allegations of the answer by proof, and where no such proof is made or offered, the allegations must be taken as true. State ex rel. Fisher v. District Court, 110 M 61, 99 P2d 211 (1940).

27-26-305. Motion for new trial.

Case Notes

Motion Not Required: This section does not require motion for new trial in order to appeal from a grant of mandamus but merely sets out the place of filing for a motion for new trial. State ex rel. Bennett v. Dowdall, 157 M 11, 482 P2d 572 (1971).

27-26-307. Procedure when there is no answer or no material issue of fact.

Case Notes

Questions of Law: It is no ground for the refusal of a Writ of Mandate that certain specific facts alleged in the respondent's answer were not denied in the relator's replication, where the pleadings raised the questions of law only and where relator relied upon the facts alleged in his affidavit and expressly admitted by respondent's answer, as ground for the relief which he prayed for. State ex rel. Thompson v. Kenney, 9 M 223, 23 P 733 (1890).

Damages Incidental to Proceeding	1308
Attorney Fees	1309

DAMAGES INCIDENTAL TO PROCEEDING

Mandamus — Litigation Expenses Awardable: In a prior decision, this case was remanded for a hearing on attorney fees. The District Court awarded fees, and plaintiffs appealed. Plaintiffs contended the District Court erred in refusing to award as damages, under 27-26-402, certain out-of-pocket litigation expenses. The District Court concluded that 27-26-402 does not contemplate the awarding of litigation expenses not itemized in 25-10-201. "Damages" is defined in 27-1-202, and "detriment" is defined in 27-1-201. The detriment suffered by plaintiffs with regard to these litigation expenses was caused by the Department of State Lands' (now Department of Environmental Quality) failure to perform a clear legal duty. Plaintiffs are entitled to be compensated for the reasonable litigation expenses related to the mandamus issue regardless of whether those expenses are awardable as "costs" within the meaning of 25-10-201. Kadillak v. Dept. of State Lands, 198 M 70, 643 P2d 1178, 39 St. Rep. 773 (1982).

Failure by County to Follow Procedures: After repeated refusals by county to follow assessment procedures prescribed by State Board of Equalization (now the Department of Revenue) and after other delays and hindrances by the county, including the filing of sham pleadings, Supreme Court will, if there is further delay in complying with Writ of Mandamus, consider assessing costs and damages under this section. State ex rel. St. Bd. of Equalization v. Price, 157 M 134, 483 P2d 284 (1971).

Cost of Travel Inappropriate — Not Allowed: Where counsel for relatrix made several trips to consult with a judge who had been disqualified about calling in another judge and then later instituted mandamus proceedings to compel the appointment of another judge, such expense of travel is not a proper item of costs incident to the institution of the mandamus proceeding. It was a matter that should have been attended to by letter or telephone. State ex rel. O'Sullivan v. District Court, 127 M 32, 256 P2d 1076 (1953).

Order Issued Next Day — Cost Allowed: Where the judge issued the order sought 1 day after the relatrix instituted mandamus proceedings to compel the action, the relatrix could still recover reasonable attorneys' fees, costs, and damages for instituting and prosecuting the mandamus proceedings. State ex rel. O'Sullivan v. District Court, 127 M 32, 256 P2d 1076 (1953).

Damages Not Pledged: Where the pleadings of plaintiff in a mandamus proceeding contained no claim for damages he had sustained on account of attorneys' fees and incidental expenses paid or to be paid by him in his endeavor to be reinstated on the university faculty and he did not ask leave to amend his petition after objection by defendants to his offered evidence to show such damages, the trial court erred in allowing them. State ex rel. Phillips v. Ford, 116 M 190, 151 P2d 171 (1944), distinguished in Mueller v. Todd, 117 M 80, 158 P2d 299 (1945).

Lost Earnings — Evidence Not Admissible: Evidence of the amount plaintiff would have earned as professor at the state university during the time he was precluded from serving as such by failure of the State Board of Education to reinstate him was inadmissible. State ex rel. Phillips v. Ford, 116 M 190, 151 P2d 171 (1944).

Cost of Printing Briefs: Under this section, the successful relators in a mandamus proceeding against the State Board of Equalization (now the Department of Revenue) to compel reassessment of gross proceeds of mines for taxation purposes were entitled to recover as damages their reasonable attorneys' fees and expenses incurred in bringing and prosecuting the action, including printing of briefs, such sums being a proper charge against the state represented by respondent Board. State ex rel. Snidow v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 93 M 19, 17 P2d 68 (1932).

Defendant Prevailing — Cost Not Allowed: A mining company made a party respondent with the State Board of Equalization (now the Department of Revenue) in a mandamus proceeding to compel reassessment of gross proceeds of mining taxes but dismissed from the action after hearing was not entitled to attorneys' fees or its expense incident to printing briefs, the statutes not so providing. State ex rel. Snidow v. St. Bd. of Equalization, 93 M 49, 17 P2d 68 (1932), distinguished in Smith v. Fergus County, 98 M 377, 39 P2d 193 (1934).

Must Plead Damages:

Damages in a mandamus proceeding resting upon contract, express or implied, should be pleaded in the complaint or petition, otherwise they should not be allowed. State ex rel. Phillips v. Ford, 116 M 190, 151 P2d 171 (1944), overruling State ex rel. Golden Valley County v. District Court, 75 M 122, 242 P 421 (1925), distinguished in Mueller v. Todd, 117 M 80, 158 P2d 299 (1945).

Under this section, where the applicant for a Writ of Mandate claims damages, he must allege them in his application or file a bill of particulars in the proceeding before conclusion of the hearing and submit proof; otherwise, damages are considered waived and the District Court after final judgment entered is without jurisdiction to make award thereof in the proceeding. State ex rel. Golden Valley County v. District Court, 75 M 122, 242 P 421 (1925), overruled in part by Phillips v. Ford, 116 M 190, 151 P2d 171 (1944).

Incidental Damages Defined: The damages allowable under this section, in a mandamus proceeding, are such as are incidental to the proceeding itself and not those arising out of the transaction that the writ was invoked to redress. Bailey v. Edwards, 47 M 363, 133 P 1095 (1913).

ATTORNEY FEES

Partial Attorney Fees: Party allowed to intervene in mandamus action is entitled to award of partial attorney fees and costs because applicant for Writ of Mandamus made an untimely appeal and caused expense and delay to intervenor. Christopherson v. St., 226 M 350, 735 P2d 524, 44 St. Rep. 712 (1987), followed in Roche v. Sabo, 259 M 76, 853 P2d 1258, 50 St. Rep. 689 (1993).

Good Faith Defense by Public Officer: If pleaded, an attorney fee award is allowable as an item of damages in a prohibition case. Further, attorney fees may be awarded against a local government body if the government officers appear and defend the proceeding in good faith. Allen v. Madison County Comm'n, 211 M 79, 684 P2d 1095, 41 St. Rep. 1226 (1984).

Estimate of Fees in Complex Case — Award on One Issue Only: The original trial in this case lasted for 13 days and involved 6 defendants and 14 separate counts. Plaintiffs prevailed only on the mandamus issue. Since the attorney fee award upon remand was to be based only on the hours spent on the mandamus issue and since the elements of proof were so intertwined, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in basing the award on an estimate given by an experienced trial attorney as to the number of hours necessary to prevail on the mandamus issue. Kadillak v. Dept. of State Lands, 198 M 70, 643 P2d 1178, 39 St. Rep. 773 (1982).

No Authority for Prejudgment Interest on Discretionary Attorney Fees in Mandamus: In a prior decision, this case was remanded for a hearing on attorney fees. The District Court awarded fees, and plaintiffs appealed. Plaintiffs contend that the District Court should have awarded prejudgment interest on the award of attorney fees. In this case, the award of attorney fees is an award of damages under 27-26-402. The determination of reasonable attorney fees was within the discretion of the District Court, and the amount was not definite or capable of being calculated with certainty prior to judgment. Therefore, 27-1-211 did not provide authority for awarding interest. Interest was not properly awardable under 27-1-212 either because it does not authorize a discretionary award of prejudgment interest since the award of attorney fees is itself discretionary. In this case, plaintiffs entered into a contingent fee agreement with their attorneys. No attorney fees were owing prior to judgment; therefore, plaintiffs suffered no detriment in the nature of prejudgment interest on attorney fees since no prejudgment interest was owing. The Supreme Court held that there is no authority in Montana for an award of prejudgment interest on the discretionary award of attorney fees arising from a mandamus action. Kadillak v. Dept. of State Lands, 198 M 70, 643 P2d 1178, 39 St. Rep. 773 (1982).

Attorney Fees Available: Attorney fees are available to plaintiffs under 27-26-402. Kadillak v. The Anaconda Co., 184 M 127, 602 P2d 147 (1979), followed in Kelleher v. Bd. of Social Work Examiners & Professional Counselors, 283 M 188, 939 P2d 1003, 54 St. Rep. 556 (1997) (holding that laches did not apply when the Board knew that applicant had a pending statutory right to attorney fees despite a delay in asserting the right).

Decision Based on Equitable Relief — Attorney Fees Set Aside: Although Writ of Mandate was issued by District Court, since it was not a permissible remedy and the decision in favor of the plaintiff was made on the basis of equitable relief and adjudication of his rights, the award of attorney fees will be set aside. Melton v. Oleson, 165 M 424, 530 P2d 466 (1974).

Proof of Attorney Fees:

In a mandamus and declaratory judgment action by schoolteachers against a school district, the judge, who had observed the extent of the services rendered by counsel for the plaintiffs, could properly award attorneys' fees to schoolteachers who had properly pleaded their right to such award. Benson v. School District, 136 M 77, 344 P2d 117 (1959).

Under this section a successful relator in a mandamus proceeding is entitled to recover a reasonable attorney's fee as damages, and Supreme Court in such proceeding heard by it may fix such fee without hearing proof as to the services performed by the attorney therein. State ex rel. Lynch v. Batani, 103 M 353, 62 P2d 565 (1936).

Case of First Impression — Conservative Attorney Fees: Where a mandamus proceeding involved the validity of a corporation's bylaw abolishing cumulative voting and the matter was one of first impression and there were no existing precedents to guide the respondents, and where the petitioner was a party to the effort to abolish cumulative voting in the first instance, the allowance of attorney fees to the petitioner should be conservative. State ex rel. Lawin v. Polson Plywood Co., 135 M 559, 342 P2d 1070 (1959).

Attorney Fees as Damages:

The damages that the applicant for a Writ of Mandamus is entitled to recover in case judgment is given in his favor include the expense to which he was put in paying for the services of an attorney to bring the proceeding. State ex rel. O'Sullivan v. District Court, 127 M 32, 256 P2d 1076 (1953); State ex rel. Gebhardt v. City Council, 102 M 27, 55 P2d 671 (1936); State ex rel. Shea v. Cocking, 66 M 169, 213 P 594, 28 ALR 772 (1923).

Successful applicant for peremptory Writ of Mandate requiring state Liquor Control Board (now the Department of Revenue) to issue to him retail beer and liquor licenses was entitled to recover the damages which he sustained by reason of having to employ an attorney to prosecute such proceeding. State ex rel. McCarten v. Corwin, 119 M 520, 177 P2d 189 (1947).

Attorney Fees as Incidental Damages: Under this section, a successful applicant for a Writ of Mandamus may be awarded damages and costs; the damages contemplated are such as are incidental to the proceeding itself and not those which arose out of the prior preclusion and deprivation which the Writ was invoked in part to redress; such damages include the expense incurred by relator in payment of services of an attorney rendered in bringing the proceeding. State ex rel. Barry v. O'Leary, 83 M 445, 272 P 677 (1928).

No Opportunity for Parties to Address Issues — Award of Attorney Fees Premature: An award of attorney fees based on this section is premature unless and until an appropriate record is created and the parties have a full and fair opportunity to address the issues. Clark v. Dussault, 265 M 479, 878 P2d 239, 51 St. Rep. 642 (1994).

Good Faith Defense by Public Officer:

If pleaded, an attorney fee award is allowable as an item of damages in a prohibition case. Further, attorney fees may be awarded against a local government body if the government officers appear and defend the proceeding in good faith. Allen v. Madison County Comm'n, 211 M 79, 684 P2d 1095, 41 St. Rep. 1226 (1984).

Where relator applied for a Writ of Mandamus requiring the court to set a case for trial and return was made and alternate Writ issued, and return and answer showed that the cause had been set for trial, the relator was entitled to recover attorney fees from the county upon the court's finding that the respondents appeared in the action and made defense in the proceeding in good faith. State ex rel. Haegg v. District Court, 130 M 530, 304 P2d 1116 (1956).

Where the good faith of town officials joined in a mandamus proceeding to compel payment of the town's past due bonded indebtedness in making defense is not questioned and the judgment in their favor is reversed on appeal, the costs and damages allowable under this section are assessable against the municipality, the amount thereof being primarily a matter for the trial court to pass upon. State ex rel. Mueller v. Todd, 114 M 35, 132 P2d 154 (1942).

Where defendant members of a City Council defended a mandamus proceeding to compel them to act in the matter of the creation of a housing authority so as to bring the project to completion in good faith but failed, the costs were properly taxable against the city, under this section. State ex rel. Great Falls Housing Authority v. Great Falls, 110 M 318, 100 P2d 915 (1940).

While the general rule is that public officers are personally liable for the costs incurred in mandamus proceedings to compel them to perform their duties, since the enactment of this section, where a state, county, or municipal officer is respondent in such a proceeding, all damages and costs awarded to relator are recoverable from the body represented by the officer, if the court finds that he made his defense in good faith. State ex rel. O'Conner v. McCarthy, 86 M 100, 282 P 1045 (1929).

CHAPTER 27

WRIT OF PROHIBITION

Chapter Case Notes

County Government in Transition Period After Vote to Change Form of Government Not Empowered to Order Special Election: In November 1982, the voters in a county voted to change the county form of government from a charter government, provided for in Title 7, ch. 3, part 7, to a commission government, provided for in Title 7, ch. 3, part 4. The new commission government was to take effect in June 1983, after election of new county officers. During the transition period, the existing charter government, in response to a petition filed under 7-3-125, authorized a special election on the question of returning to a charter government. This special election was then challenged in an action for a Writ of Prohibition under Title 27, ch. 27. The Supreme Court upheld the District Court's issuance of the Writ, ruling that placing on the ballot the question of changing the form of county government was in excess of the charter government's jurisdiction. Allen v. Madison County Comm'n, 211 M 79, 684 P2d 1095, 41 St. Rep. 1226 (1984).

Adequacy of Other Remedy	1316
Ministerial Acts	1317

GENERAL

Lack of District Court Jurisdiction Over Child Custody Proceedings — Writ of Prohibition Proper Remedy: When a Montana District Court lacked jurisdiction over parenting plan and child custody matters regarding children of tender ages whose home state was Arkansas, the Supreme Court granted a writ of prohibition restricting the District Court from hearing, enforcing, or deciding any parenting issues concerning the minor children. Stephens v. District Court, 2006 MT 21, 331 M 40, 128 P3d 1026 (2006).

Form of Complaint Not Critical to Investigation of Judicial Misconduct — Dismissal of Writ of Prohibition Proper When Judicial Standards Commission Acting Within Authority: A Justice of the Peace obtained a writ of prohibition barring further proceedings by the Judicial Standards Commission based on an unverified complaint. The complaint was subsequently verified, and the District Court dismissed the writ. The Justice of the Peace objected that his formal verified complaint was not submitted on the standardized form set forth in the Commission's rules, was drafted by the Commission's attorney, and did not identify the specific sections of the Canons of Judicial Ethics that were allegedly violated. The Justice of the Peace also maintained that the Commission violated its authority in investigating the complaint, so dismissal of the writ was in error. The Supreme Court disagreed. The form of a complaint is not critical to the Commission's fulfilling of its constitutional mandate, and nothing in policy, statute, or Commission rules was abrogated by the Commission's attorney by assisting in the drafting of the complaint. Further, a writ of prohibition is an extraordinary remedy available to enjoin a judicial entity from an inappropriate exercise of jurisdiction when no other plain, speedy, and adequate legal remedy exists. Thus, the District Court did not err in dismissing the writ because the Commission acted within its jurisdiction throughout the investigation. State ex rel. Smartt v. Judicial Standards Comm'n, 2002 MT 148, 310 M 295, 50 P3d 150 (2002).

Judicial Standards Commission Authority to Institute Investigation — Investigation Based on Report of Criminal Investigation Within Commission Authority: A written, unverified complaint was filed with the Judicial Standards Commission against a Justice of the Peace, alleging judicial misconduct. The Justice of the Peace obtained a writ of prohibition barring further proceedings based on an unverified complaint. Subsequently, a report was obtained from a Department of Justice investigation of criminal charges against the Justice of the Peace. The Justice of the Peace claimed that the Commission overstepped its authority by obtaining a copy of the report and further investigating the allegations when no complaint had been filed with the Commission regarding the allegations in the report. Under 3-1-1106, a written complaint by any Montana citizen may initiate an investigation of judicial misconduct, and only when the initial investigation indicates that additional proceedings are warranted must the complaining citizen sign a verified complaint. Further, Commission rules provide that a complaint is not a prerequisite to Commission action. The Commission may act on its own motion as well, so the Commission did not exceed its jurisdiction in obtaining a copy of the report by court order and undertaking its own investigation of the subsequently verified allegations. State ex rel. Smartt v. Judicial Standards Comm'n, 2002 MT 148, 310 M 295, 50 P3d 150 (2002).

Recall Act — When Attorney Fees Available: Section 2-16-615 of the Montana Recall Act provides two procedural remedies, depending on the relief sought. If an official refuses to accept a proper recall petition, relief is by mandamus and attorney fees may be recoverable. If a legally insufficient recall petition has been accepted for filing, relief is by injunction and attorney fees are not available. Thus, the right to attorney fees depends on the underlying action and is not reciprocal. Further, the statute does not provide for relief by writ of prohibition. Braach v. Graybeal, 1999 MT 234, 296 M 138, 988 P2d 761, 56 St. Rep. 919 (1999), affirming Sheehy v. Ferda, 235 M 63, 765 P2d 722, 45 St. Rep. 2162 (1988).

Writ Denied Based on Mootness: A citizens' group applied for a writ of prohibition to prevent a school district Board of Trustees from purchasing property without submitting the purchase to the voters. The District Court properly dismissed the application based on mootness because the property had already been purchased at the time of hearing, forestalling the prospect for meaningful relief. Awareness Group v. Bd. of Trustees, 243 M 469, 795 P2d 447, 47 St. Rep. 1333 (1990).

Demonstration of Unlawful Acts by Public Officials Required: Before a writ of prohibition may be granted, parties seeking the writ must demonstrate that the acts of public officials are clearly unlawful. The District Court correctly held a writ of prohibition was not the proper remedy after finding that public officials had not acted in excess of their authority. Kimble Properties, Inc. v. St., 231 M 54, 750 P2d 1095, 45 St. Rep. 425 (1988).

Department of Health Grant of Water Quality Certification — Board of Health Jurisdiction to Reconsider — Writ of Prohibition Inappropriate: Three entities competing for the right to construct a hydroelectric generation facility at a federal site applied for and received "401 certification" from the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Department of Environmental Quality) to allow application for a federal permit under section 401 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act amendments of 1972, 33 U.S.C. 1341(a). One of the entities, Montana Renewable Resources (MRR), questioned whether its competitors' projects complied with state water quality standards and requested Department reconsideration of the other two entities' "401 certification". The Department refused to modify its decision, so MRR formally petitioned the Board of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Board of Environmental Review) for an appeal or declaratory ruling. The other two entities filed applications for Writs of Prohibition to halt further Board proceedings with respect to their certifications. The Supreme Court affirmed District Court dismissal of the applications, finding that the Board was acting within its jurisdiction under Montana water quality law and that since a speedy and adequate remedy of judicial appeal from any Board decisions was available, a Writ of Prohibition was inappropriate. Malta Irrigation District v. Mont. Bd. of Health & Environmental Sciences, 224 M 376, 729 P2d 1323, 43 St. Rep. 2264 (1986).

Defrauding Creditor — Elements of Sale Necessary to Establish Ownership: A judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff, Kovach, because of failure of Norgaard to make payments for the purchase of farm machinery. Kovach made an attempt to levy against a truck owned by Norgaard, who, upon learning the truck was going to be seized, removed it from a consignment lot and sold it to McNair, a close friend. McNair did not register the truck in his name or purchase insurance for it. The Department of Justice verified that the truck was registered to Norgaard, and thereafter a Writ of Execution was issued, pursuant to which the truck was seized. Norgaard obtained a Writ of Prohibition preventing sale of the truck. After a hearing, the District Court set aside the Writ of Prohibition, allowing Kovacich to proceed with the sale, and Norgaard appealed, contending District Court error in allowing the sale. The Supreme Court found that resolution of the issue turned on whether the transaction between Norgaard and McNair was an attempt by Norgaard to defraud his creditor. The court held that under 31-2-315 (now repealed), unless the transfer from Norgaard to McNair was accompanied by immediate delivery and followed by an actual and continued change of possession, the transfer "is conclusively presumed to be fraudulent and therefore void against those who are his creditors while he remains in possession". Finding no evidence of immediate delivery or of any actual change of possession, the District Court order allowing sale was upheld. Kovacich v. Norgaard, 221 M 26, 716 P2d 633, 43 St. Rep. 608 (1986).

Attorney Fees: If pleaded, an attorney fee award is allowable as an item of damages in a prohibition case. Further, attorney fees may be awarded against a local government body if the government officers appear and defend the proceeding in good faith. Allen v. Madison County Comm'n, 211 M 79, 684 P2d 1095, 41 St. Rep. 1226 (1984).

Calling of Special Election — Quasi-Judicial Act: The calling by the County Commission of a special election on the issue of changing the form of county government is an act involving discretionary determinations and is therefore a quasi-judicial rather than a ministerial act. Allen v. Madison County Comm'n, 211 M 79, 684 P2d 1095, 41 St. Rep. 1226 (1984).

No Issuance by District Court Against City Court: In an action in City Court, the defendant requested the District Court to issue a Writ of Prohibition to prevent the City Judge from presiding over the action. Because the defendant was entitled to a trial de novo on appeal to District Court, a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law existed. The defendant was not entitled to a Writ of Prohibition. Joslyn v. City Court, 198 M 223, 645 P2d 428, 39 St. Rep. 884 (1982).

Supreme Court Jurisdiction Over Actions of Judicial Standards Committee: Despite the constitutional status of the Judicial Standards Commission, the Supreme Court has power to issue a Writ of Prohibition to enjoin the Commission when acting in excess of its authority, where relator's remedy by appeal is inadequate and he has no other plain, speedy, or adequate remedy. State ex rel. Shea v. Judicial Standards Comm'n, 198 M 15, 643 P2d 210, 39 St. Rep. 521 (1982).

Availability of Writ of Prohibition — Drunk Driving: Plaintiff was cited for driving while intoxicated. The Justice's Court did not hear the case although a trial had been scheduled. The defendant then sought a Writ of Prohibition against the Justice's Court to stop further proceedings in the prosecution of the D.W.I. charge. On appeal, the sole issue was whether the District Court judgment for the defendant Justice's Court, denying relief to the plaintiff and granting the motion to quash the Writ of Prohibition, was justified under the state of the record. The Supreme Court held that a Writ of Prohibition was not the appropriate remedy in the case. A Writ of Prohibition is available only when there is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. It is not issued as a matter of right but only in the exercise of sound judicial discretion when there is no other remedy. In this case, the plaintiff did not show why he could not assert his jurisdictional defense in the Justice's Court directly or by Writ of Certiorari in the District Court. State ex rel. Morse v. Justice Court, 192 M 95, 626 P2d 836, 38 St. Rep. 542 (1981).

Administrative Action — Prohibition Not Remedy: A Writ of Prohibition will not lie as a remedy to restrain an administrative action. Knox v. School District, 171 M 521, 559 P2d 1179 (1977).

Prohibiting Unlawful Acts: The District Court properly declined to prohibit a city from revoking a building permit when the permit was void ab initio as being in violation of ordinances regulating building permits. State ex rel. Russell Center v. Missoula, 166 M 385, 533 P2d 1087 (1975).

Not Issued as Matter of Course: The Writ of Prohibition will not be issued as of course or because it may be the most convenient remedy, nor will it be allowed to take the place of an appeal or perform the offices of a Writ of Review. State ex rel. Lee v. Mont. Livestock Sanitary Bd., 135 M 202, 339 P2d 487 (1959).

Discretion of Court: Prohibition does not properly issue as a writ of right but only in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion to arrest the proceedings of courts or tribunals or officers exercising judicial functions but acting at the time without or in excess of jurisdiction. State ex rel. Adamson v. District Court, 128 M 538, 279 P2d 691 (1955).

Grand Jury Proceedings: Supreme Court had jurisdiction to grant Writ of Prohibition to prevent payment of grand jury illegally in session. State ex rel. Adami v. Lewis & Clark County, 124 M 282, 220 P2d 1052 (1950).

Termination of Litigation:

The Writ of Prohibition may be issued to end litigation and save expense. State ex rel. Adami v. Lewis & Clark County, 124 M 282, 220 P2d 1052 (1950).

While this section limits the Writ of Prohibition to cases in which there is no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, if the District Court cannot render a valid judgment because of lack of jurisdiction, the Writ may run to end litigation and save expense. State ex rel. King v. District Court, 107 M 476, 86 P2d 755 (1939), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Supervisory Control by Supreme Court:

Refusal of District Court to set aside indictments on grounds set forth in Title 25, ch. 31, part 2, may be reviewed under the authority granted the Supreme Court by Art. VIII, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. VII, sec. 2, 1972 Mont. Const.), giving it superintending control over the courts. State ex rel. Porter v. District Court, 124 M 249, 220 P2d 1035 (1950), distinguished in St. v. Cockrell, 131 M 254, 309 P2d 316 (1957).

Where a petition for a Writ of Supervisory Control (a Writ which lies only where the lower tribunal has committed error within jurisdiction) also prays for any other appropriate relief and it appears that the lower court has acted without or in excess of jurisdiction, the Supreme Court will treat the petition as one for a Writ of Prohibition. State ex rel. Stewart v. District Court, 103 M 487, 63 P2d 141 (1936).

Nature of Writ:

The Writ of Prohibition arrests proceedings when the court, corporation, board, or person sought to be prohibited is proceeding without or in excess of jurisdiction; it is preventive rather than remedial and cannot take the place of an appeal or undo that which has been done. State ex rel. Hauswirth v. Beadle, 90 M 24, 300 P 197 (1931).

The character of the Writ of Prohibition is not changed by the Code; nor can any question be inquired into except that of jurisdiction in the proceeding inaugurated by it. It is preventive rather than remedial and cannot take the place of an appeal. State ex rel. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. District Court, 22 M 220, 56 P 219 (1899).

The provision making a Writ of Prohibition "the counterpart of a Writ of Mandate", does not enlarge the class of cases in which the Writ may be resorted to in view of the clause providing that the Writ is to arrest the proceedings of any tribunal that are without or in excess of jurisdiction. State ex rel. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. District Court, 22 M 220, 56 P 219 (1899).

Disqualify Member of Police Board: Where a policeman under charges for misconduct seeks to disqualify a member of the Police Board from participating in the hearing for bias and prejudice but the state does not provide for such disqualification, leaving the question of jurisdiction unaffected, the writ does not lie. State ex rel. Mueller v. District Court, 87 M 108, 285 P 928 (1930), distinguished in Stewart v. District Court, 103 M 487, 63 P2d 141 (1936).

Writ to Be Used Sparingly: The Writ of Prohibition is to be used sparingly for the furtherance of justice and to secure order and regularity in the inferior tribunals; it arrests proceedings of a judicial character when they are without or in excess of jurisdiction; but it issues only when there is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. State ex rel. Myersick v. District Court, 53 M 450, 164 P 546 (1917).

EXCESS OF JURISDICTION

Lease Rental Affected by Land Reclassification — Writ of Prohibition Proper: Lessees developed a water spreading project on a portion of their state grazing lease, and the Department of State Lands (now Department of Natural Resources and Conservation) reclassified 32 acres of the lease as agricultural. Lessees later concluded that the project was inadequate for producing a profitable crop at the higher agricultural rental rates. They negotiated to pay back a loan for the project and reverted the land to grazing. After the loan was repaid, there were no other agreements supplementing the original lease. However, the Department subsequently determined that the 32 acres should retain the agricultural classification, sought rental at the agricultural rate, and canceled the lease upon nonpayment. The District Court properly filed a writ of prohibition restraining the Department from canceling the lease, re-leasing the property to other parties, and taking action against lessees for trespass after finding the Department was in excess of its jurisdiction for canceling the lease for nonpayment of agricultural rental when the property was leased for grazing only. Winchell v. Dept. of State Lands, 235 M 10, 764 P2d 1267, 45 St. Rep. 2121 (1988).

County Wrongfully Authorizing Open Burning: When the Board of County Commissioners authorizes open burning without a permit in violation of a rule of the state Board of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Board of Environmental Review), a Writ of Prohibition is the proper remedy. State ex rel. Dept. of Health & Environmental Sciences v. Lincoln County, 178 M 410, 584 P2d 1293 (1978). (Decided prior to 1985 amendment of 27-27-101.)

Public Service Commission — Acting Within Jurisdiction: Since federal price-freeze order did not prevent rate hearings by the Public Service Commission, though it did prevent putting increases into effect, Commission had jurisdiction to hold hearings and Writ of Prohibition was improper. State ex rel. Dept. of Public Service Regulation v. District Court, 158 M 88, 488 P2d 1147 (1971). (Decided prior to 1985 amendment of 27-27-101.)

District Court Acting Beyond Jurisdiction: Writ of Prohibition was issued, pursuant to this section, where District Court had acted beyond its jurisdiction by enjoining Board of Equalization (now the Department of Revenue) from revising grading and valuation on nonirrigated farmland pursuant to Title 15, ch. 7, parts 1 and 2. State ex rel. Lord v. District Court, 154 M 269, 463 P2d 323 (1969).

City Acting Within Jurisdiction: Lower court properly refused petition for Writ of Prohibition against city acting within jurisdiction since Writ lies only when municipal corporation acts without or in excess of jurisdiction. State ex rel. Pat Griffin Co. v. Butte, 151 M 546, 445 P2d 739 (1968).

District Court — No Jurisdiction to Issue Writ: District Court had no jurisdiction to issue an alternative Writ of Prohibition to restrain Board of Equalization (now the Department of Revenue) from enforcing amendments to regulations relating to corporation license tax allegedly due on patronage dividends of farm cooperatives until after hearing before said court, where tax could be paid under protest and action brought to recover the taxes under Title 15 or an action for declaratory judgment could be brought under Title 27, ch. 8. State ex rel. Fulton v. District Court, 139 M 573, 366 P2d 435 (1961).

Jurisdiction Defined: The term "jurisdiction", as used in this section, means the power to hear and determine the particular case. State ex rel. Yuhas v. Bd. of Medical Examiners, 135 M 381, 339 P2d 981 (1959).

Disqualified Judge: Where during the course of a divorce proceeding a judge is disqualified and another judge assumes jurisdiction and commits the husband to jail for contempt, on a habeas corpus petition brought by the jailed husband the disqualified judge would not be authorized to act and a Writ of Prohibition will lie to prohibit such judge from proceeding further in the habeas corpus matter. State ex rel. Middlemas v. District Court, 130 M 73, 295 P2d 233 (1956).

Mistaken Exercise of Existing Jurisdiction:

The Writ of Prohibition lies when a court is proceeding in excess of jurisdiction; but where it has jurisdiction, a mistaken exercise of it does not justify a resort to the Writ. State ex rel. Sands v. District Court, 95 M 427, 26 P2d 970 (1933).

If the District Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter in controversy, a mistaken exercise of that jurisdiction or of its acknowledged powers will not justify a resort to the extraordinary remedy by prohibition. State ex rel. Heinze v. District Court, 32 M 394, 80 P 673 (1905), distinguished in Stewart v. District Court, 103 M 487, 63 P2d 141 (1936).

Excess of Jurisdiction and No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy: The Writ of Prohibition is appropriate only when the lower court is acting without or in excess of jurisdiction and when the relator has no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law. Boucher v. St. George, 88 M 162, 293 P 315 (1930).

Excess of Jurisdiction — What May Be Considered: In considering the question whether the District Court was without jurisdiction in making an order granting alimony and suit money to defend against an appeal from an order granting alimony and suit money, the Supreme Court may examine not only the pleadings but the evidence before the lower court in order to determine whether the lower court is about to exceed its jurisdiction. State ex rel. Wooten v. District Court, 57 M 517, 189 P 233, 9 ALR 1212 (1920).

Presumption of Regularity of Action: On an application for a Writ of Prohibition to arrest the proceedings of a District Court in a pending suit in equity, it will be presumed, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that the court will not exceed the limitations of its jurisdiction, though it has no jurisdiction to grant a part of the relief asked for. State ex rel. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. District Court, 22 M 220, 56 P 219 (1899).

Proof of Excess of Jurisdiction: In order to ascertain whether a necessity exists for granting a Writ of Prohibition, a superior court may determine by all that appears upon the face of the proceedings, and in rare cases even by evidence aliunde the record, whether it is clearly apparent that the inferior court is about to exceed its jurisdiction. State ex rel. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. District Court, 22 M 220, 56 P 219 (1899).

Jurisdictional Error Required: A Writ of Prohibition will not lie to arrest the proceedings of an inferior court in the administration of an estate unless it clearly appears that such proceedings are without or in excess of the jurisdiction of such inferior court. State ex rel. Spalding v. Benton, 12 M 66, 29 P 425 (1892).

ADEQUACY OF OTHER REMEDY

Scope of Writ of Prohibition — Writ Inappropriate to Stop Conservation District From Making Initial Determination of Whether Body of Water Considered Natural Perennial Flowing Stream When Other Remedies Exist: After unsuccessfully attempting to have the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation, the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks, and the Department of Environmental Quality make the determination as to whether a slough east of Victor was a perennial flowing stream and thus subject to The Natural Streambed and Land Preservation Act of 1975, the county conservation district decided to use a public hearing process to make the determination. Plaintiffs sought a writ of prohibition to stop the conservation district from determining the status of the slough. After the writ was denied in District Court, plaintiffs submitted it to the Supreme Court. A writ of prohibition serves to stop an entity exercising judicial functions from acting when the proceedings are beyond that entity's jurisdiction and are clearly unlawful, but should not replace an appeal or perform the function of a writ of review. A writ of prohibition is justified only by extreme necessity when the grievance cannot be redressed by ordinary proceedings at law, in equity, or by appeal. The existence of another remedy, even if inconvenient or indirect, prevents a party from seeking a writ of prohibition. In the interest of both judicial economy and agency efficiency, an exhaustion of administrative remedies allows a governmental agency to make a factual record and to correct its own errors within its specific expertise before a court interferes. After noting that the Act does not specifically authorize a conservation district or any other entity with the power to classify bodies of water as streams, the Supreme Court found that the conservation district was simply attempting to apply the Legislature's articulated requirement of a natural perennial flowing stream and declined to interfere with the conservation district's ability to initially determine the scope of its jurisdiction and exercise its expertise to decide whether the slough was in fact a stream. Further, once the status of the slough was determined, there was nothing to prevent plaintiffs from seeking judicial review of the conservation district's declaratory rulings. Because extreme necessity and lack of redress did not exist, a writ of prohibition was inappropriate to stop the conservation district from making the initial ruling on the status of the slough, so the writ was denied. Bitterroot River Protection Ass'n, Inc. v. Bitterroot Conserv. District, 2002 MT 66, 309 M 207, 45 P3d 24 (2002).

No Other Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy:

In an appeal of the District Court's issuance of a Writ of Prohibition prohibiting the County Commission and the County Recorder from placing on an election ballot the question of retaining the charter form of county government, appellants claimed that prohibition did not lie because there were other plain, speedy, and adequate remedies available to petitioners. The Supreme Court affirmed the Writ's issuance, ruling that a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy was not afforded by: (1) the judicial review procedure set forth in 7-3-154; (2) the injunction procedure set forth in Title 27, ch. 19; or (3) the declaratory judgment procedure set forth in Title 27, ch. 8. Allen v. Madison County Comm'n, 211 M 79, 684 P2d 1095, 41 St. Rep. 1226 (1984).

The Writ of Prohibition lies when there is no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, even though appeal is available, if appeal is inadequate. State ex rel. Taylor v. District Court, 131 M 397, 310 P2d 779, 64 ALR 2d 1324 (1957).

If the District Court and Judge were proceeding within the jurisdiction given them by the constitution and statutes of this state, they may not be restrained by this Writ out of the Supreme Court. Moreover, even though the District Court at some point exceeded its jurisdiction, the Writ of Prohibition must be denied if the person has another plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. State ex rel. Adamson v. District Court, 128 M 538, 279 P2d 691 (1955).

Adequate Remedy Available — Gambling Commission: Writ of Prohibition did not lie to arrest the proceedings of a countywide gambling commission in enforcement of a city ordinance regulating gambling because appellant had a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. Bradbrook v. Billings, 174 M 27, 568 P2d 527 (1977).

Child Custody Order: Where an order of the District Court, issued without notice and without a hearing, was to deprive a mother of the custody of her child and there were two modifications of the original custody decree which would require separate appeals, an appeal would not be adequate to protect the best interests of the child and a Writ of Prohibition was the proper remedy. State ex rel. Taylor v. District Court, 131 M 397, 310 P2d 779, 64 ALR 2d 1324 (1957).

Right to Appeal — Adequate Remedy: Where plaintiff had an appeal from a final judgment of the District Court declaring forfeited liquors claimed by him and seized under the former Prohibition Enforcement Act, he was not entitled to the writ to stay further action in the proceeding. State ex rel. Barnes v. District Court, 59 M 491, 197 P 565 (1921).

MINISTERIAL ACTS

Judicial Standards Commission Investigation of Justice of the Peace — Writ of Prohibition Properly Modified to Cure Ministerial Defects: A written, unverified complaint was filed with the Judicial Standards Commission against a Justice of the Peace, alleging judicial misconduct. The Justice of the Peace obtained a writ of prohibition barring further proceedings based on an unverified complaint. Subsequently, information was obtained from a Department of Justice investigation of criminal charges against the Justice of the Peace. The Commission sought to vacate the writ. By the time that the hearing was held, the complaint was verified, so the District Court modified the writ, allowing the Commission to proceed on the basis of the verified complaint. The Justice of the Peace appealed the modification that allowed the Commission to cure defects before commencing formal proceedings. The Supreme Court affirmed. The function of a writ of prohibition is to halt proceedings that are “without or in excess of the jurisdiction” of the entity exercising judicial functions. The writ here was to continue in force only until verified complaints were received. A procedural error, such as the failure to verify a complaint, will not be allowed to subvert the constitutional mandate of the Commission to investigate judicial misconduct. Because the complaint was verified by the time that the District Court considered modification of the writ, the court did not err in modifying the writ and allowing the Commission to proceed based on the verified complaint. State ex rel. Smartt v. Judicial Standards Comm’n, 2002 MT 148, 310 M 295, 50 P3d 150 (2002).

Arresting Termination of Police Judge: The issuance of a Writ of Prohibition arresting termination of a Police Judge at will of the City Commission (which is not a ministerial act done in furtherance of legal authority) is a proper remedy. State ex rel. Morales v. City Comm’n, 174 M 237, 570 P2d 887 (1977).

Not to Restrain Ministerial Function: The Writ of Prohibition will not restrain a ministerial, executive, or administrative function, no matter how illegal the act thereunder may be, so long as the tribunal sought to be restrained has jurisdiction of the subject matter in controversy; a mistaken exercise of such tribunal’s acknowledged powers will not justify the issuance of the Writ. State ex rel. Lee v. Mont. Livestock Sanitary Bd., 135 M 202, 339 P2d 487 (1959).

Outside Scope of Writ at Time Constitution Adopted: The provision of this section purporting to authorize the issuance of a Writ of Prohibition to arrest the ministerial functions of an administrative body is invalid as applied to an order of inspection of cattle by the state Livestock Sanitary Board (now the Board of Livestock) pursuant to 81-2-301, such power being outside the scope of the Writ as known at the time Art. VIII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const., was adopted. State ex rel. Lee v. Mont. Livestock Sanitary Bd., 135 M 202, 339 P2d 487 (1959).

Not to Arrest Exercise of Functions by Ministerial Officer: An application for a Writ of Prohibition to prevent a County Clerk from printing certain names on the official ballot will be dismissed on the ground that the Supreme Court does not have jurisdiction under this section to arrest the exercise of functions by a mere ministerial officer. State ex rel. Scharnikow v. Hogan, 24 M 379, 62 P 493 (1900), explained in State ex rel. Lee v. Mont. Livestock Sanitary Bd., 135 M 202, 339 P2d 487 (1959).

1993 Amendment: Chapter 10 in first sentence, at beginning, substituted “A writ of prohibition” for “The same” and substituted “lower tribunal” for “inferior tribunal”; and made minor changes in style.

Case Notes

Lack of District Court Jurisdiction Over Child Custody Proceedings — Writ of Prohibition Proper Remedy: When a Montana District Court lacked jurisdiction over parenting plan and child custody matters regarding children of tender ages whose home state was Arkansas, the Supreme Court granted a writ of prohibition restricting the District Court from hearing, enforcing, or deciding any parenting issues concerning the minor children. Stephens v. District Court, 2006 MT 21, 331 M 40, 128 P3d 1026 (2006).

Scope of Writ of Prohibition — Writ Inappropriate to Stop Conservation District From Making Initial Determination of Whether Body of Water Considered Natural Perennial Flowing Stream When Other Remedies Exist: After unsuccessfully attempting to have the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation, the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks, and the Department of Environmental Quality make the determination as to whether a slough east of Victor was a perennial flowing stream and thus subject to The Natural Streambed and Land Preservation Act of 1975, the county conservation district decided to use a public hearing process to make the determination. Plaintiffs sought a writ of prohibition to stop the conservation district from determining the status of the slough. After the writ was denied in District Court, plaintiffs submitted it to the Supreme Court. A writ of prohibition serves to stop an entity exercising judicial functions from acting when the proceedings are beyond that entity's jurisdiction and are clearly unlawful, but should not replace an appeal or perform the function of a writ of review. A writ of prohibition is justified only by extreme necessity when the grievance cannot be redressed by ordinary proceedings at law, in equity, or by appeal. The existence of another remedy, even if inconvenient or indirect, prevents a party from seeking a writ of prohibition. In the interest of both judicial economy and agency efficiency, an exhaustion of administrative remedies allows a governmental agency to make a factual record and to correct its own errors within its specific expertise before a court interferes. Further, once the status of the slough was determined, there was nothing to prevent plaintiffs from seeking judicial review of the conservation district's declaratory rulings. Because extreme necessity and lack of redress did not exist, a writ of prohibition was inappropriate to stop the conservation district from making the initial ruling on the status of the slough, so the writ was denied. Bitterroot River Protection Ass'n, Inc. v. Bitterroot Conserv. District, 2002 MT 66, 309 M 207, 45 P3d 24 (2002).

Mandamus Denied — Failure to Exhaust Administrative Remedies: Applicant who was denied transfer of a liquor license had plain, adequate, and speedy remedy in law under 16-4-411; therefore, the court properly denied his application for alternative Writ of Mandamus or Prohibition. Applicant failed to exhaust his administrative remedies and did not show that the Department of Revenue or State Tax Appeal Board (now Montana Tax Appeal Board) was acting contrary to law. Christopherson v. St., 226 M 350, 735 P2d 524, 44 St. Rep. 712 (1987).

No Issuance by District Court Against City Court: In an action in City Court, the defendant requested the District Court to issue a Writ of Prohibition to prevent the City Judge from presiding over the action. Because the defendant was entitled to a trial de novo on appeal to District Court, a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law existed. The defendant was not entitled to a Writ of Prohibition. Joslyn v. City Court, 198 M 223, 645 P2d 428, 39 St. Rep. 884 (1982).

Moratorium on Conditional-Use Permits — Zoning — Mandamus — Prohibition — Declaratory Judgment: Diehl requested a conditional-use permit for a planned shopping center. In response, the city of Helena established a 1-year moratorium on the granting of all conditional-use permits. Diehl then filed his complaint and petition for a declaratory judgment, Writ of Mandate, and order to show cause. On appeal, the court found: (1) the city may adopt a reasonable general moratorium, but the procedure required by 76-2-306 must be followed; (2) the discretion of the City Commission to approve, modify, or deny the recommendation of the Zoning Commission cannot be controlled by Writ of Mandate, prohibition, or by declaratory judgment; (3) a Writ of Mandate requiring the city to act on Diehl's application within a reasonable time is proper under the circumstances in this case. State ex rel. Diehl Co. v. Helena, 181 M 306, 593 P2d 458 (1979).

Arresting Termination of Police Judge: The issuance of a Writ of Prohibition arresting termination of a police judge at will of the City Commission (which is not a ministerial act done in furtherance of legal authority) is a proper remedy. State ex rel. Morales v. City Comm'n, 174 M 237, 570 P2d 887 (1977).

Standing — Witness Before Grand Jury: A witness subject to a grand jury subpoena does not have standing for a Writ of Prohibition because he is not entitled, as a witness, to notice and a hearing and has no legal interest in the grand jury composition or operation. Kelly v. Grand Jury, 170 M 284, 552 P2d 1339 (1976).

Disqualified Judge: Where Supreme Court issued an alternative Writ of Prohibition against a District Court Judge and before the return date the District Judge conceded that he was disqualified and would take no further part in the case in the District Court, the alternate Writ will be dissolved as there is no purpose for it. State ex rel. Miller v. District Court, 130 M 65, 294 P2d 903 (1956).

Person Beneficially Interested:

The judgment creditor whose attorney secured Sheriff's deed on assigned certificate of sale is the party "beneficially interested" and as such is entitled to petition for Writ of Prohibition to restrain the court from further proceeding in the cause after vacating the default judgment. State ex rel. Redle v. District Court, 102 M 541, 59 P2d 58 (1936).

Since the court will look to the allegations of fact rather than to the legal conclusions that relators are beneficially interested, an application or affidavit for Writ of Prohibition by the Mayor of a city whose interest he seeks to protect in litigation for the reinstatement of a policeman will be held sufficient, without stating that he is beneficially interested. State ex rel. Examining & Trial Bd. v. Jackson, 58 M 90, 190 P 295 (1920).

Appealable Matters:

Where it is apparent that the District Court cannot under any conceivable circumstances render a valid judgment in a cause pending before it and an appeal would be neither speedy nor adequate, the Writ of Prohibition lies to prevent it from proceeding further. State ex rel. Thibodeau v. District Court, 70 M 202, 224 P 866 (1924), distinguished in State ex rel. Putnam v. District Court, 109 M 223, 95 P2d 441 (1939).

The Writ of Prohibition may issue where it clearly appears that the District Court has acted without jurisdiction and the remedy afforded by appeal is not sufficiently speedy or adequate to grant relief. State ex rel. McLeod v. District Court, 67 M 164, 215 P 240 (1923).

Where plaintiff had an appeal from a final judgment of the District Court declaring forfeited liquors claimed by him and seized under the former Prohibition Enforcement Act, he was not entitled to the prohibition to stay further action in the proceeding. State ex rel. Barnes v. District Court, 59 M 491, 197 P 565 (1921).

Where the remedy by appeal from an order allowing alimony pendente lite, attorney's fees, and suit money is not adequate or speedy, the fact that an appeal lies is not sufficient reason for denying the Writ of Prohibition against the enforcement of the order. State ex rel. Wooten v. District Court, 57 M 517, 189 P 233, 9 ALR 1212 (1920).

The right to a Writ of Prohibition is not, like the right to a Writ of Certiorari, defeated by the existence of the remedy by appeal, unless this remedy is plain, speedy, and adequate. An application for prohibition is addressed to the sound discretion of the Supreme Court; and whenever it is made to appear that under no conceivable circumstances can the District Court render a valid judgment because of a lack of jurisdiction, the discretion should be exercised in favor of issuing the Writ. State ex rel. Lane v. District Court, 51 M 503, 154 P 200 (1915), distinguished in State ex rel. Putnam v. District Court, 109 M 223, 95 P2d 441 (1939).

The existence of a remedy by appeal is not of itself a bar to a Writ of Prohibition, unless such remedy be plain, speedy, and adequate. A remedy is speedy when, having in mind the subject matter involved, it can be pursued with expedition and without essential detriment to the party aggrieved; and it is neither speedy nor adequate if its slowness is likely to product immediate injury or mischief. State ex rel. Marshall v. District Court, 50 M 289, 146 P 743 (1915).

Where immediate injury or mischief might follow an attempt to exercise the right of appeal in a proceeding in which the District Court, in alleged excess of jurisdiction, is about to enter a decree awarding a peremptory Writ of Mandate, the remedy is neither so speedy nor adequate as to bar the granting of a Writ of Prohibition under this section. State ex rel. Marshall v. District Court, 50 M 289, 146 P 743 (1915).

Prohibition does not lie to prevent further prosecution of an action in a police court to punish relator for a violation of a city ordinance alleged by him to be void, since the remedy by appeal or by Writ of Habeas Corpus is thorough and complete. State ex rel. Browne v. Booher, 43 M 569, 118 P 271 (1911).

Evidence Illegally Obtained: Where personal property seized under an illegal search warrant was about to be used as evidence in a prosecution against its owner for a violation of the liquor law and a petition to suppress its use had been denied, the Writ of Prohibition lies to prevent the threatened use of the property as evidence, since a judgment of conviction based thereon would be void and the remedy by appeal would be neither speedy nor adequate. State ex rel. Thibodeau v. District Court, 70 M 202, 224 P 866 (1924), distinguished in State ex rel. Putnam v. District Court, 109 M 223, 95 P2d 441 (1939).

Alimony Pending Appeal: Where the court made an order allowing alimony and suit money to defendant to defend against an appeal from an order granting alimony and suit money pendente lite, the fact that an appeal lies from the first mentioned order will not oust the Supreme Court of jurisdiction to entertain a Writ of Prohibition restraining the enforcement of such an order, since upon each appeal a new order would be made and the action would be disposed of on its merits before the appeal could be heard and therefore an appeal would not be adequate or speedy. State ex rel. Wooten v. District Court, 57 M 517, 189 P 233, 9 ALR 1212 (1920).

Inadequacy of Other Remedies: Prohibition may be granted when neither appeal nor other proceeding in the ordinary course of law affords a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. State ex rel. King v. District Court, 24 M 494, 62 P 820 (1900).

Case Notes

Person Seeking Quo Warranto Not Entitled to Public Office — Attorney General Required to Commence Action: It did not appear that petitioner was entitled to the position he claimed was unlawfully held by another, so petitioner did not come within the statutory requirement that authorized him to bring a quo warranto action in the name of the state. The petition should have been brought for the state by the Attorney General and not by the private person. State ex rel. Paugh v. Bradley 231 M 46, 753 P2d 857, 45 St. Rep. 419 (1988).

Restoration to Office Lawfully Held — Quo Warranto Improper: Quo warranto is not a proper remedy if an appellant is seeking restoration to an office which he lawfully held at the institution of the action. State ex rel. Morales v. City Comm'n, 174 M 237, 570 P2d 887 (1977).

Public Employees:

In an action to test the right of defendant to occupy office of clerk of school district board of trustees, application for leave to file a complaint in quo warranto was properly denied by the District Court, the clerk being only an employee and the rule for removal of public officers being inapplicable. State ex rel. Running v. Jacobson, 140 M 221, 370 P2d 483 (1962).

A proceeding in quo warranto, when directed against a person alleged to be usurping, intruding into, or exercising an office, is proper only in the case where defendant is a public officer, not in the case of one who is a mere state employee. State ex rel. Nagle v. Page, 98 M 14, 37 P2d 575 (1934).

Election Contest: Where an election contest involving the office of County Commissioner was commenced before the contestee had assumed office, he may not be said to have usurped, intruded into, unlawfully held, or exercised the office, within the meaning of this section. Snyder v. Boulware, 109 M 427, 96 P2d 913 (1939).

Alternative Remedies: Where a newly elected treasurer of a Firemen's Relief Association petitioned for a Writ of Mandate to compel the former treasurer to turn over the funds and property to him and an alternative Writ was issued but later substitution of parties was made, injecting the question of title to the office and thus warranting quo warranto, the cause should have been disposed of on its merits, rather than dismissed. State ex rel. Casey v. Brewer, 107 M 550, 88 P2d 49 (1939).

Ferry Franchise Forfeited: Complaint in an action of the nature of quo warranto brought by the Attorney General in behalf of the state to have a ferry franchise declared forfeited for failure of the ferryman to provide a safe and suitable ferryboat for the accommodation of travelers was sufficient to state a cause of action under this chapter. Misuse of Franchise: Complaint in an action of the nature of quo warranto brought by the Attorney General in behalf of the state to have a ferry franchise declared forfeited for failure of the ferryman to provide a safe and suitable ferryboat for the accommodation of travelers was sufficient to state a cause of action under this section. State ex rel. Wallace v. Callow, 78 M 308, 254 P 187 (1927).

Part 2 Procedure in General

27-28-204. Pleadings.

Inconsistent Defenses: Under this section, the pleadings of both parties to a proceeding in quo warranto fall within the rules relating to pleadings in ordinary civil actions, and under them the defendant may interpose as many defenses as he has, even though they be inconsistent, provided they are not so incompatible as to render the one or the other absolutely false, the test of their propriety being whether or not the proof of one necessarily disproves the other. State ex rel. Nagle v. Stafford, 97 M 275, 34 P2d 372 (1934).

Sufficiency of Complaint: A complaint in an action for usurpation of office, which alleges the election of the relator to the office in question, the making and subscribing of an oath of office, the execution, approval, acceptance, and filing of his official bond, the usurpation and intrusion of the defendant, and the refusal of the County Attorney to institute the action and prays that defendant be excluded from holding and exercising the duties of the office and that the relator be adjudged entitled to hold the same and be installed therein, is good on demurrer (demurrer abolished, former Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., now superseded). Abandonment of Office: County School Superintendent who left note on desk wishing her opponent success, left her the key to the office, and accepted a teaching position elsewhere, under the mistaken belief that the latter was qualified and elected as her rightful successor, the latter having received the highest number of votes, been duly issued a certificate of election, and filed her oath and bond within time, abandons the office and is estopped to inquire into the validity of such election, for the purpose of having herself reinstated in the office on the ground that her opponent did not hold the requisite certificate to teach. CHAPTER 30
NUISANCES

Chapter Case Notes

Classification of Nuisances — Per Se or Per Accidens — Absolute or Qualified: A nuisance action may be based upon conduct of a defendant that is either intentional, negligent, reckless, or ultrahazardous. Thus, negligence is merely one type of conduct upon which liability for nuisance may be based. In general, a nuisance may be classified as either a nuisance per se or at law or as a nuisance per accidens or in fact. A nuisance per se is an inherently injurious act, occupation, or structure that is a nuisance at all times and under any circumstances, without regard to location or surroundings. A nuisance per accidens is one that becomes a nuisance by virtue of circumstances and surroundings. In turn, nuisances may be classified as either absolute or qualified. An absolute nuisance, similar to a nuisance per se, is a nuisance the substance of which is not negligence and that obviously exposes a person to probable injury. A qualified nuisance is a nuisance dependent on negligence that consists of anything done lawfully but so negligently or carelessly done or permitted as to create a potential and unreasonable risk of harm, which in due course results in injury to another. When determining how a plaintiff can bring a nuisance action against a defendant who is engaged in a statutorily authorized endeavor, when 27-30-101(2) indicates that authorized activities may not be considered a nuisance, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff must show, pursuant to a particularized assessment of the authorizing statute, that: (1) the defendant completely exceeded its statutory authority, resulting in a nuisance; or (2) the defendant was negligent in carrying out its statutory authority, resulting in a qualified nuisance. In the present case, the city of Thompson Falls was statutorily authorized to construct the city's storm and sewer drain system, which Barnes alleged to be a nuisance. Given a verdict of no negligence, the city was not negligent in its operation or maintenance of the storm drain behind Barnes's duplex and thus would not have been liable for a qualified nuisance because of the incidental flooding of Barnes's property. Therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing Barnes's proposed instructions on nuisance because the instructions constituted a misstatement of the law. Barnes v. Thompson Falls, 1999 MT 77, 294 M 76, 979 P2d 1275, 56 St. Rep. 321 (1999), citing 58 Am. Jur. 2d Nuisances § 9 and 66 C.J.S. Nuisances §§ 3, 5. The Barnes criteria for consideration of unequivocal legislative intent and whether a defendant's activity falls outside statutory authority were applied to shooting ranges in Tally Bissell Neighbors, Inc. v. Eyrie Shotgun Ranch, LLC, 2010 MT 63, 355 Mont. 387, 228 P.3d 1134.

Nuisance Action — Contributory Negligence as Defense: The Supreme Court cited 58 Am. Jur. 2d Nuisances 221 in holding that contributory negligence can be a defense in a nuisance action. Wilhelm v. Great Falls, 225 M 251, 732 P2d 1315, 44 St. Rep. 211 (1987), clarified, with regard to the distinction between an absolute nuisance and a qualified nuisance, in Barnes v. Thompson Falls, 1999 MT 77, 294 M 76, 979 P2d 1275, 56 St. Rep. 321 (1999).

Attractive Nuisance Not Applicable to Certain Artificial Streams or Bodies of Water: The degree of care of one who maintains on his land an artificial stream or body of water for a useful purpose, where the stream or body of water has natural characteristics, is no greater than the degree of care required of one through whose land flows a natural stream or whose land contains a natural body of water. The owner or user of an artificial stream or body of water having natural characteristics is bound to no special duty of care or precaution for the protection of children who may enter therein, unless there is in or about the artificial stream or body of water some peculiar danger, in the nature of a hidden peril or trap for the unwary, of which the owner or user has or ought to have notice. The doctrine of attractive nuisance as such does not apply to such artificial streams or bodies of water any more than it applies to natural streams or bodies of water. Limberhand v. Big Ditch Co., 218 M 132, 706 P2d 491, 42 St. Rep. 1460 (1985).

Limitations of Actions — Nuisances: If a nuisance is abatable, it cannot be considered a permanent nuisance. Therefore the nuisance is of a temporary and continuous character and gives rise to a separate cause of action each time it causes damage. The applicable Statute of Limitations is 2 years. Haugen v. Warner, 204 M 508, 665 P2d 1132, 40 St. Rep. 1036 (1983). In Burley v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2012 MT 28, 364 Mont. 77, 273 P.3d 825, the Supreme Court, relying upon Restatement (Second) of Torts 839, adopted a reasonably abatable standard for continuing torts. See also Christian v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2015 MT 255, 380 Mont. 495, 358 P.3d 131.

Highway Not an Attractive Nuisance — Summary Judgment Properly Granted: In an action for the wrongful death of the plaintiff's son which occurred when the decedent was struck by an automobile on a controlled-access highway, the District Court did not err in granting the State's motion for summary judgment. As one of the conditions of declaring an object an attractive nuisance, the plaintiff must prove that children are unable to discover or appreciate the dangerous condition of the object. Because there is nothing in the record to prove that a 5-year-old child would not appreciate the dangerous condition of the highway, the highway cannot be found to be an attractive nuisance. Big Man v. St., 192 M 29, 626 P2d 235, 38 St. Rep. 362 (1981).

Nuisance Claim Demonstrating Interference With Enjoyment of Property — Award of Parasitic Emotional Distress Damages Supported. Rubin v. Hughes, 2022 MT 74, 408 Mont. 219, 507 P.3d 1169.

Nuisance Action Based on Negligence — Elements of Claim: A woman used hanging bird feeders, ground feeding, and a heated bird bath to attract birds to her property. Her neighbor supplied evidence that the birds congregated on their shared property line and created a high level of excrement, feathers, carcasses, and noise. The Justice Court concluded that although the woman's activities may not have created a nuisance in different surroundings, the close proximity of the properties, the power line running between the yards, the distribution of trees, and the manner of feeding created a nuisance under the circumstances. The Supreme Court upheld the Justice Court's conclusion that the elements of nuisance were satisfied in this situation. The Supreme Court noted that a nuisance action based on negligence consists of something done lawfully but so carelessly or negligently as to create a potential for harm to another, and all persons have a general duty of care to abstain from injuring the person or property of another. The Supreme Court found that the remedy imposed by the Justice Court was overly broad and substituted a narrower injunction in order to avoid depriving the woman of the enjoyment of her property. Simpkins v. Speck, 2019 MT 120, 395 Mont. 509, 443 P.3d 428.

Application of Continuing Tort Doctrine — Reasonable Abatement of Nuisance or Trespass Determinative, Not Migration — Prospect of Abatement — Issue of Fact: The plaintiffs were property owners in Opportunity, located close to a former copper smelter. They sued the successor in interest to the original smelter operator for damages for the cost of restoring their properties to their original state and made claims of nuisance and trespass, among others. The District Court granted the defendant summary judgment based, in part, on the fact that the plaintiffs could not offer evidence of continued migration of the contaminants. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the feasibility of reasonable abatement of the property determines whether a nuisance or trespass is temporary or permanent, not the continuing migration of contaminants. The Supreme Court also concluded that whether abatement is reasonable is an issue of fact. Because there were material issues of genuine fact as to whether abatement was reasonable, the Supreme Court reversed the grant of summary judgment and remanded the case. Christian v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2015 MT 255, 380 Mont. 495, 358 P.3d 131.

Nine-Foot Wall Adjacent to Neighbors' Property — Claims of Nuisance and Violation of Covenants — Summary Judgment in Favor of Defendants Improper: The defendants built a 9-foot-tall wall along a portion of their golf course, adjacent to the plaintiffs' homes. The plaintiffs sued the defendants for nuisance and for building the wall in violation of restrictive covenants. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants, finding that there was no issue of material fact that the wall served a reasonable purpose and had a beneficial, nonspite use, given that it prevented trash and trespassers from entering the golf course. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that the District Court had erred by not considering the testimony in the light most favorable to the plaintiffs, and remanded the matter for further proceedings. Bennett v. Hill, 2015 MT 30, 378 Mont. 141, 342 P.3d 691.

Naturally Growing Tree — No Claim for Nuisance: The plaintiff alleged that a neighbor's tree constituted a nuisance by blocking a substantial portion of his view of the surrounding area, but the District Court did not err by dismissing the nuisance claim for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted since a naturally growing tree does not, as a matter of law, satisfy the elements of a nuisance in Montana. Martin v. Artis, 2012 MT 249, 366 Mont. 513, 290 P.3d 687.

Certified Question — Statute of Limitations Tolled When Pollution Continues to Migrate and Is Reasonably Abatable: On a certified question from federal District Court, the Supreme Court was asked to consider whether, with respect to the continuing tort doctrine, the statute of limitations is tolled for property damage claims for nuisance and trespass resulting from contamination that has stabilized, continues to migrate, and is not readily or easily abatable. The Supreme Court concluded that contamination that has stabilized but continues to migrate will toll the statute of limitations until the harm can no longer be reasonably abated. An injury is permanent once it can no longer be reasonably abated. Burley v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2012 MT 28, 364 Mont. 77, 273 P.3d 825. See also Christian v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2015 MT 255, 380 Mont. 495, 358 P.3d 131.

Improper Limitation of Definition of Nuisance in Jury Instruction Warranting Reversal: After complaining about their neighbor's yard lights, defendants erected a 26-foot-high fence between the properties and covered the fence with two layers of dark material, ostensibly to block the glare from plaintiffs' yard lights. Plaintiffs brought an action asserting that the fence was a nuisance that destroyed the aesthetic beauty of their property, reduced the property's value, destroyed plaintiffs' view, and was an eyesore. At trial, the District Court gave defendants' proposed jury instruction stating that generally a structure or condition cannot constitute a nuisance merely because it is considered unsightly or because it obstructs a party's view. Following judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appealed on grounds that the jury instruction was an improper statement of the definition of nuisance as set out in this section, warranting reversal and a new trial. The Supreme Court agreed. There is no statutory or case law authority for including such a statement limiting the definition of nuisance on the basis of unsightliness or view obstruction. The definition of nuisance is expansive and, except for limitations on farming operations and certain activities authorized by statute, there are no limitations on what may constitute a nuisance, which by definition may include anything that is injurious to health, indecent or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property. Thus, the jury instruction was an inaccurate statement of law that unfairly prejudiced plaintiffs and did not fairly and fully instruct the jury, and the District Court erred in including the limiting language on unsightliness and view obstruction, warranting reversal. Tarlton v. Kaufman, 2008 MT 462, 348 M 178, 199 P3d 263 (2008), distinguishing McCullum v. Kolokotronis, 131 M 438, 311 P2d 780 (1957).

Permanent Injunction Inappropriate Limitation of Lawful Irrigation Practices: The Wellses built a home on property adjacent to land that had been flood irrigated by the Youngs for generations. Between 1994 and 1998, the Youngs' land was irrigated three times, and on each occasion, the Wellses experienced flooding in the crawl space of their home. The Wellses sought damages in excess of $80,000 based on tort theories of negligence, nuisance, and trespass. The District Court reasoned that because the irrigation practices predated the construction of the Wellses' home, they could not recover damages or recover on their trespass claim under 85-7-2212. The court also concluded that the nuisance claim was barred by this section. The court held that the Youngs breached the general obligation imposed by 28-1-201 because their irrigation practices caused immediate, irreparable, and substantial harm to the Wellses' home, but the negligence claim was disposed of because the Wellses failed to establish that the irrigation practiced breached the standard of care of a reasonable farm irrigator engaged in flood irrigation. Nevertheless, the District Court permanently enjoined the Youngs from irrigating their property because future irrigation without modification of the head ditch would result in an unreasonable and substantial risk of continuing harm and irreparable injury to the Wellses' property. The Youngs moved to vacate the injunction based on the determination that their irrigation practices were lawful, but the motion was denied, so the Youngs appealed. The Supreme Court examined the record for abuse of discretion, noting that a District Court must find a breach of an obligation by the party sought to be enjoined before imposing a permanent injunction. The District Court's general finding that the Youngs breached the duty imposed under 28-1-201 conflicted with the specific findings that the Youngs did not trespass or create a nuisance and conformed to the applicable standard of care. Absent a specific breach of obligation, the District Court abused its discretion in issuing a permanent injunction enjoining the Youngs from engaging in lawful flood irrigation practices. Wells v. Young, 2002 MT 102, 309 M 419, 47 P3d 809 (2002), distinguishing Madison Fork Ranch v. L&B Lodge Pole Timber Prod., 189 M 292, 615 P2d 900 (1980).

Classification of Nuisances — Per Se or Per Accidens — Absolute or Qualified: A nuisance action may be based upon conduct of a defendant that is either intentional, negligent, reckless, or ultrahazardous. Thus, negligence is merely one type of conduct upon which liability for nuisance may be based. In general, a nuisance may be classified as either a nuisance per se or at law or as a nuisance per accidens or in fact. A qualified nuisance is a nuisance dependent on negligence that consists of anything done lawfully but so negligently or carelessly done or permitted as to create a potential and unreasonable risk of harm, which in due course results in injury to another. When determining how a plaintiff can bring a nuisance action against a defendant who is engaged in a statutorily authorized endeavor, when subsection (2) of this section indicates that authorized activities may not be considered a nuisance, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff must show, pursuant to a particularized assessment of the authorizing statute, that: (1) the defendant completely exceeded its statutory authority, resulting in a nuisance; or (2) the defendant was negligent in carrying out its statutory authority, resulting in a qualified nuisance. Given a verdict of no negligence, the city was not negligent in its operation or maintenance of the storm drain behind Barnes's duplex and thus would not have been liable for a qualified nuisance because of the incidental flooding of Barnes's property. Therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing Barnes's proposed instructions on nuisance because the instructions constituted a misstatement of the law. Barnes v. Thompson Falls, 1999 MT 77, 294 M 76, 979 P2d 1275, 56 St. Rep. 321 (1999), citing 58 Am. Jur. 2d Nuisances § 9 and 66 C.J.S. Nuisances §§ 3, 5. The Barnes criteria for consideration of unequivocal legislative intent and whether a defendant's activity falls outside statutory authority were applied to shooting ranges in Tally Bissell Neighbors, Inc. v. Eyrie Shotgun Ranch, LLC, 2010 MT 63, 355 Mont. 387, 228 P.3d 1134.

Lead Batteries Causing Livestock Deaths — Nuisance: The presence of exposed lead batteries on defendants' property that resulted in a series of livestock deaths is potentially injurious to health and sufficiently interferes with plaintiff's use of his property for grazing purposes that it constitutes a nuisance under this section. Whether or not the 2-year statute of limitations can be tolled in a nuisance case depends upon whether it is a permanent, temporary, or continuous nuisance. In this case, the nuisance is continuing and temporary, justifying a tolling of the time limitation. Once the nuisance is removed, the statute of limitations will bar any action that is commenced the latter of 2 years after abatement of the nuisance or discovery of the cause of the injury. Graveley Ranch v. Scherping, 240 M 20, 782 P2d 371, 46 St. Rep. 1908 (1989). However, when it was later discovered that plaintiffs had constructed a fence around the nuisance site within 6 days of initial discovery, effectively cutting the livestock off from the source of the poison, the nuisance was abated as far as the livestock were concerned and the statute of limitations could run. Because the suit was filed more than 2 years after both discovery of the injury and abatement of the nuisance, the filing exceeded the statutory limit and was properly dismissed by summary judgment. Graveley Ranch v. Scherping, 247 M 310, 806 P2d 29, 48 St. Rep. 211 (1991), distinguished in Country Estates Homeowners Ass'n, Inc. v. McMillan, 276 M 100, 915 P2d 806, 53 St. Rep. 297 (1996).

Fence Along Property Boundary — Private Nuisance: Landowner's previous uses of her property were restricted by neighbor's placement of fence and gate along property boundary. As fence interfered with owner's use of her property, it was a private nuisance. Stamm v. Kehr, 222 M 167, 720 P2d 1194, 43 St. Rep. 1143 (1986).

Slag Pile — No Evidence of Nuisance: A slag pile started burning prior to 1950. For several years red embers were visible, but in later years the embers disappeared. In 1961, when a highway was built through a portion of the pile, the fire was apparently dead. In 1979, during a windstorm, a fire started near the slag pile and spread onto the plaintiff's land. The court found that there was no showing that the slag pile had ever previously caused fires in the area and there was no showing that the pile was ever considered a hazard to neighboring property owners. The court concluded that the slag pile was not a nuisance. Belue v. St., 199 M 451, 649 P2d 752, 39 St. Rep. 1516 (1982).

Power to Prohibit Door-to-Door Solicitation: The city of Billings enacted an ordinance declaring uninvited door-to-door solicitation a nuisance punishable as a misdemeanor. It was argued that a state statute regulating itinerant vendors did not empower a city to prohibit their activities, therefore precluding the ordinance. The Supreme Court disagreed. Under the expanded powers of local self-government provided by Montana's 1972 Constitution, a city possessing those powers may exercise any power not prohibited by the Constitution or state statute. A city possessing self-government powers may prohibit uninvited door-to-door solicitation by itinerant vendors, and a licensing statute does not legalize an activity otherwise prohibited. Any statements to the contrary contained in DeLong v. Downes, 175 M 152, 573 P2d 160 (1977), are expressly overruled. Tipco Corp. v. Billings, 197 M 339, 642 P2d 1074, 39 St. Rep. 600 (1982).

Dog Not a Public Nuisance: In the absence of a statute, the keeping of a domestic animal, a dog, confined by a chain on one's own unfenced premises cannot be declared a public nuisance. State ex rel. Fields v. District Court, 168 M 126, 541 P2d 66 (1975).

Sufficiency of Complaint — Negligence:

Where negligence is an element of nuisance, the fact that plaintiff pleads both negligence and nuisance as independent causes of action does not make pleading a sham. Ekworth v. Parker, 156 M 477, 482 P2d 559 (1971).

Complaint in action to enjoin maintenance and operation of storage reservoir, authorized by law and under 27-30-101, used for generating electric power, on the ground that it constituted a nuisance by flooding plaintiff's property, did not state a cause of action in the absence of an allegation of negligence. Jeffers v. Mont. Power Co., 68 M 114, 217 P 652 (1923).

Sports Activities: "Pee wee" baseball league conducted on empty lot in residential district was not nuisance under statute, notwithstanding evidence that: field was brightly illuminated, crowds were noisy, traffic was heavy, field was dusty, some children used foul language, balls were hit into neighboring yards damaging lawns and flowers, and games were played after 10 p.m.; nuisance, if any, was private and arose out of particular manner of operation of legitimate enterprise, and lower court should have done no more than point out nuisance and decree methods calculated to eliminate it. Kasala v. Kalispell Pee Wee Baseball League, 151 M 109, 439 P2d 65 (1968).

Sale of Milk at Less Than Minimum Price: Sale of milk at price less than minimum prescribed by Milk Control Board under 81-23-302 was a nuisance, being an activity which was injurious to health. Mont. Milk Control Bd. v. Rehberg, 141 M 149, 376 P2d 508 (1962).

Gambling: Premises wherein punchboards are operated may be abated as a nuisance inasmuch as it constitutes gambling. State ex rel. Harrison v. Deniff, 126 M 109, 245 P2d 140 (1952).

Unlicensed Photographers: Activities of unlicensed photographers could not be enjoined since taking of pictures either with or without a license was not a nuisance. St. Bd. of Examiners v. Keller, 120 M 364, 185 P2d 503 (1947).

Adverse Possession — Prescriptive Right Limited by Enjoyment — Water: Adverse possession and exercise of right of diverting water for statutory period is sufficient to raise presumption of a grant and to defeat an action for an injunction against a private nuisance; the extent of the prescriptive right, however, must be limited by the actual enjoyment and must be commensurate with that enjoyment. Gibbs v. Gardner, 107 M 76, 80 P2d 370 (1938).

Sale of Intoxicating Liquor Not Nuisance in Itself: Sale of intoxicating liquor is not made a nuisance by the general definition of that term in this section. State ex rel. Nagle v. Naughton, 103 M 306, 63 P2d 123 (1936).

Construction: This section must be given a common-sense construction so as not to suppress a legitimate business on account of some imaginary or trifling annoyance which offends the supersensitive nerves of a fastidious person. However, a home owner may not be compelled to live in positive discomfort so as to accommodate another in pursuit of business offensive to mind and taste of average individual. Purcell v. Davis, 100 M 480, 50 P2d 255 (1935).

Nature of Proof Required — Injunction: In seeking to enjoin erection of oil refinery in residential section because, inter alia, of anticipated reduction in market value of nearby property, plaintiff must show injury is practically certain, not merely probable, and that it cannot be compensated by damages in an action at law. Purcell v. Davis, 100 M 480, 50 P2d 255 (1935).

Waters and Watercourses:

Since a railroad is authorized by law to maintain embankments across waterways and nothing maintained under authority of law can be considered a nuisance, an embankment constructed and maintained so as not to constitute a nuisance per se may not be held to have been negligently constructed. Heckaman v. N. Pac. Ry., 93 M 363, 20 P2d 258 (1933).

A complaint to enjoin the maintenance and operation of a storage reservoir used for generating electric power, on the ground that it constituted a nuisance during the winter months when water was released for power development purposes causing an unnatural fluctuation of several feet in the level of the river below which caused ice to break and jam, flooding plaintiff's property, did not state a cause of action in the absence of an allegation of negligence, the operation of the reservoir being authorized by law. Jeffers v. Mont. Power Co., 68 M 114, 217 P 652 (1923).

Use of water by an upper appropriator in such a way as to carry sand, gravel, and mining debris over land of a lower proprietor, rendering it valueless, constitutes a nuisance, both at common law and under this section. Chessman v. Hale, 31 M 577, 79 P 254, 68 LRA 410, 3 Ann. Cas. 1038 (1905), distinguished in St. v. Mercier, 70 M 333, 225 P 802 (1924).

Grant of Power as a Defense to a Nuisance: In grants of authority to municipal corporations, authority to commit a nuisance will not be implied but must be expressed; when the use and enjoyment of a legislative grant does not necessarily and naturally create a nuisance but the nuisance results from the method of the use and enjoyment, the grant constitutes no defense. Lennon v. Butte, 67 M 101, 214 P 1101 (1923).

Defense in General: Where mining operations constitute a nuisance, it is no defense that they were carried on according to approved methods, that due care was exercised, or that mining is necessary to the industrial life of the particular district. Cavanaugh v. Corbin Copper Co., 55 M 173, 174 P 184 (1918).

Labor Union Activities:

Labor union's peaceful picketing of theater owned by person alleged to be unfair to organized labor was not a nuisance, and injunction was denied. Empire Theater Co. v. Cloke, 53 M 183, 163 P 107 (1917).

Conduct of labor union members and their sympathizers in congregating in large numbers in immediate vicinity of property of a person whom they deem unfair to organized labor, impeding travel on the sidewalk in front of such property, and interfering with the business there carried on and with the customers at such place, constitutes a nuisance and can be enjoined. Iverson v. Dilno, 44 M 270, 119 P 719 (1911).

Railroads — Failure to Remove Horse Killed by Train: Railroad that allowed carcass of horse killed by one of its trains to remain on its right-of-way near a railroad crossing, emitting offensive odors, was liable for damages occasioned by the nuisance, including the frightening of passing teams. Great N. Ry. v. Ennis, 236 F 17 (1916).

Sufficiency of Complaint — Sewer: The complaint against the city sufficiently stated a cause of action for maintaining a sewer in such a manner as to be a nuisance causing injury to the plaintiff. Murray v. Butte, 35 M 161, 88 P 789 (1907).

27-30-102. Distinction between public and private nuisances.

Case Notes

Evidence of Contamination to Specific Individuals From Site Required: Although the District Court characterized a contaminated site as an imminent and substantial endangerment to the public health and welfare and some threat to neighboring wells, it did not err by not declaring the site a public nuisance because no evidence was presented to show any specific individual was affected by contamination. State ex rel. Dept. of Environmental Quality v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2010 MT 267, 358 Mont. 368, 246 P.3d 1037.

Civil, Private, and Attractive Nuisance and Trespass Claims Against Shooting Range — Opportunity to Further Develop Certain Claims Allowed on Remand: After an individual defendant transferred property to defendant ranch company and helped the ranch develop a shooting range on the property, plaintiff neighbors brought multiple claims alleging that operation of the shooting range in close proximity to a subdivision and elementary school constituted a public nuisance, private nuisance, attractive nuisance, trespass, and a violation of various constitutional provisions. The District Court dismissed all claims and plaintiffs appealed. Citing Barnes v. Thompson Falls, 1999 MT 77, 294 Mont. 76, 979 P.2d 1275, the Supreme Court noted that the Legislature explicitly exempted shooting ranges from civil nuisance liability, so plaintiffs' public nuisance claims were properly dismissed. Regarding the private nuisance claims, the District Court should have focused on injury to specific plaintiffs rather than dismissing the claims as related to all plaintiffs. The trespass claims concerned noise from the shooting range invading plaintiffs' property and thus took the form of intangible trespass. The District Court prematurely dismissed the trespass claims by failing to recognize that an intangible invasion supported by actual damages may support a trespass action, and plaintiffs should have been allowed to develop evidence and facts demonstrating actual damages. Plaintiffs should also have been allowed to develop facts of an actual threat of irreparable injury in support of the attractive nuisance claims. Lastly, plaintiffs failed to show how common law or statutory remedies would not adequately address any potential damages or to demonstrate how the constitutional provisions in question directly addressed the conduct of private parties, so the constitutional claims were properly dismissed. The case was remanded to allow plaintiffs the opportunity to develop their trespass and public, private, and attractive nuisance claims. Tally Bissell Neighbors, Inc. v. Eyrie Shotgun Ranch, LLC, 2010 MT 63, 355 Mont. 387, 228 P.3d 1134.

Dog Not a Public Nuisance: In the absence of a statute, the keeping of a domestic animal, a dog, confined by a chain on one's own unfenced premises cannot be declared a public nuisance. State ex rel. Fields v. District Court, 168 M 126, 541 P2d 66 (1975).

Chicken-Raising Business: Chicken-raising business was not a public nuisance. McCollum v. Kolokotronis, 131 M 438, 311 P2d 780 (1957).

When Public or Private: A nuisance is common or public where it affects rights to which every citizen is entitled; it is private where it affects a single individual or a determinate number of persons in the enjoyment of some private right not common to the public. Gibbs v. Gardner, 107 M 76, 80 P2d 370 (1938).

Obstructing Streets: Under rule that private person may maintain action to abate public nuisance if it causes special or peculiar injury to him, substantial in its nature, complaint by owners of residential property on streets facing a lake against lumber company which had caused large quantities of lumber to be piled across the street ends and along the lakefront between high and low watermark, thus cutting off access to the lake, alleging that defendant's acts made their property less desirable and less valuable for residential purposes, prevented them from reaching the water's edge, etc., stated a cause of action. Faucett v. Dewey Lumber Co., 82 M 250, 266 P 646 (1928).

Possession of Intoxicating Liquor: The possession of a pint of moonshine liquor by defendant in his dwelling house did not constitute a public nuisance where no proof was made showing a single sale or attempted sale; the liquor was discovered by a search of the premises made without information that it was there; and possession of such a small amount of liquor could not endanger the public health, safety, peace, or comfort of the whole community or a considerable number of people. Bozeman v. Merrell, 81 M 19, 261 P 876 (1927).

What Constitutes a Public Nuisance Generally: Under this section, a public nuisance is one which affects an entire neighborhood or community or any considerable number of persons. Bozeman v. Merrell, 81 M 19, 261 P 876 (1927).

Bawdyhouse: A bawdyhouse is a public nuisance under this section. State ex rel. Ford v. Young, 54 M 401, 170 P 947 (1918), explained in St. v. P.S.C., 129 M 106, 283 P2d 594 (1955).

27-30-103. Action for nuisance.

Case Notes

Baseball Park: "Pee wee" baseball league conducted on empty lot in residential district was not nuisance under statute, notwithstanding evidence that: field was brightly illuminated, crowds were noisy, traffic was heavy, field was dusty, some children used foul language, balls were hit into neighboring yards damaging lawns and flowers, and games were played after 10 p.m.; nuisance, if any, was private and arose out of particular manner of operation of legitimate enterprise, and lower court should merely have entered decree calculated to eliminate injurious features. Kasala v. Kalispell Pee Wee Baseball League, 151 M 109, 439 P2d 65, 32 ALR 3d 1120 (1968).

Damages Action:

Nuisance may be abated and damages recovered in the same action. Midland Empire Packing Co. v. Yale Oil Corp., 119 M 36, 169 P2d 732 (1946).

Under this section, plaintiff in an action for damages for the maintenance of a nuisance is entitled to a trial by jury of his right to damages, although he also asks for the equitable relief of injunction to restrain the continuance of the acts complained of. Chessman v. Hale, 31 M 577, 79 P 254 (1904), distinguished in St. v. Mercier, 70 M 333, 225 P 802 (1924), explained in Moore v. Capitol Gas Corp., 117 M 148, 158 P2d 302 (1945).

Dumping Grounds: Where a city gives a lease to land owned by it but reserves the use thereof for the burial of dead animals and for the dumping of garbage and contracts with the lessee to superintend the proper disposition of garbage and the burying of dead animals but the lessee fails to do so and the city, having no other place to make proper disposition of its garbage and dead animals, brings an action for unlawful detainer, it is entitled to a temporary injunction, pendente lite, restraining the lessee from interfering with the city's use of the property, as the result of the lessee's course is the maintenance of a public nuisance. Bozeman v. Bohart, 42 M 290, 112 P 388 (1910).

27-30-104. Right to recover damages unaffected by abatement.

Case Notes

Action Against City for Expenses in Abating Nuisance: Where city maintained private nuisance that a party abated at his own expense, he might recover from city such damages as he sustained by reason of the maintenance of such nuisance and could recover the necessary expense in abating it as an element of such damages. Murray v. Butte, 35 M 161, 88 P 789 (1907).

27-30-105. Successive owners liable for nuisance.

Case Notes

Liability of Successive Property Owner for Continuing Nuisance: Every successive owner of property who neglects to abate a continuing nuisance on or in the use of the property is liable in the same manner as a former owner who created the nuisance. Tally Bissell Neighbors, Inc. v. Eyrie Shotgun Ranch, LLC, 2010 MT 63, 355 Mont. 387, 228 P.3d 1134.

Nuisance Created by Structure: This section is limited to nuisances that are created by erection of a structure and that may be termed nuisances per se and does not comprehend a nuisance arising because of manner of using property or a structure whose mere creation did not constitute a nuisance. Midland Empire Packing Co. v. Yale Oil Corp., 119 M 36, 169 P2d 732 (1946).

Oil Refinery: An oil refinery is not harmful per se, whether it is a nuisance in a given case depending upon how it is operated, and hence former owner and operator of oil refinery was not liable for damage to adjacent slaughterhouse premises after sale of refinery to another company, though similar injury to slaughterhouse occurred while refinery was under operation of former owner. Midland Empire Packing Co. v. Yale Oil Corp., 119 M 36, 169 P2d 732 (1946).

Notice: It is not necessary to give notice to abate to one who continues a nuisance before bringing suit for damages. Watson v. Colusa-Parrot Min. & Smelting Co., 31 M 513, 79 P 14 (1905).

27-30-201. Public nuisance not legalized by time.

Compiler's Comments

Department Ruling: In a declaratory ruling, the Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) held that there is no authority for the Department to remove unlawful advertising under this section. The Department must comply with the specific statutory provisions of 75-15-131.

27-30-202. Remedies for public nuisances.

Case Notes

Requirement That Defendant Remove Indoor Pets From County as Sentencing Condition for Public Nuisance Affirmed: As a condition of deferred sentencing for maintaining a public nuisance, Zimmerman was ordered to remove his indoor house pets from a dilapidated house he looked after in Dutton. Each day, Zimmerman drove from Great Falls to Dutton to feed his indoor pets; he had been feeding a clowder of feral cats in and around Dutton as well, and neighbors complained about the proliferation of cats in town. The jury returned a guilty verdict, and Zimmerman was forbidden to feed the feral cats. At sentencing, the state recommended a $500 fine and a 2-year deferred sentence, which included a condition that Zimmerman also remove his house pets from the county. Zimmerman appealed this condition on grounds that his house pets were his personal property, that their removal would cause irreparable harm, and that the condition had no nexus to him or to the crime of maintaining a public nuisance. The Supreme Court disagreed. Even though the pets were not the basis of the charge, they were an integral part of Zimmerman's established feeding routine for more than 3 years. By ordering that the indoor pets be removed, the District Court minimized the likelihood that Zimmerman would bring cat food to Dutton, which in turn reduced the likelihood that Zimmerman would return to feeding feral cats, so it was plausible that removal of the indoor pets was reasonably related to protecting the citizens of Dutton from further nuisances. Further, Zimmerman was not deprived of his personal pets, but only required to remove them from the county. The sentencing requirement had a nexus to the crime and was not so unduly punitive that it amounted to an abuse of the sentencing court's discretion, so the District Court was affirmed. St. v. Zimmerman, 2010 MT 44, 355 Mont. 286, 228 P.3d 1109.

Duty of City to Inspect City Property for Hazards: Plaintiff was injured after tripping on a fence wire while walking her dog at night in an unmaintained grassy area on city right-of-way next to a city street. Plaintiff contended that the city was negligent in allowing a dangerous and hazardous condition to exist on a public right-of-way and guilty of negligence per se under 81-4-105 for allowing a public nuisance. The District Court granted summary judgment, determining as a matter of law that the city owed plaintiff no duty of care because: (1) she was not walking on a sidewalk, street, or path of any kind; (2) the city did not invite her to travel in that area; and (3) there were no city lights or signs in the vicinity. On appeal, plaintiff cited Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748 (1997), contending that the city ignored its duty to maintain the public streets, sidewalks, and rights-of-way within corporate limits in a reasonably safe condition for public travel by never going onto the premises, mowing it, raking it, or removing debris and that if routine maintenance had been done, the wire would have been found and removed. The Supreme Court agreed. The city's contention that it did not owe a duty of care in this case, because there was nothing in the area suggesting that it was a walkway or inviting the public to use it as such, failed under the Richardson test because of the city's neglect in exercising ordinary care or skill in the management of its property. Reasonable minds could differ on whether the city should have taken some action to inspect or maintain the property, so summary judgment was improper and thus reversed for a jury determination of negligence, including possible contributory negligence. Dobrocke v. Columbia Falls, 2000 MT 179, 300 M 348, 8 P3d 71, 57 St. Rep. 718 (2000).

Classification of Nuisances — Per Se or Per Accidens — Absolute or Qualified: A nuisance action may be based upon conduct of a defendant that is either intentional, negligent, reckless, or ultrahazardous. Thus, negligence is merely one type of conduct upon which liability for nuisance may be based. In general, a nuisance may be classified as either a nuisance per se or at law or as a nuisance per accidens or in fact. A nuisance per se is an inherently injurious act, occupation, or structure that is a nuisance at all times and under any circumstances, without regard to location or surroundings. A nuisance per accidens is one that becomes a nuisance by virtue of circumstances and surroundings. In turn, nuisances may be classified as either absolute or qualified. An absolute nuisance, similar to a nuisance per se, is a nuisance the substance of which is not negligence and that obviously exposes a person to probable injury. A qualified nuisance is a nuisance dependent on negligence that consists of anything done lawfully but so negligently or carelessly done or permitted as to create a potential and unreasonable risk of harm, which in due course results in injury to another. When determining how a plaintiff can bring a nuisance action against a defendant who is engaged in a statutorily authorized endeavor, when 27-30-101(2) indicates that authorized activities may not be considered a nuisance, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff must show, pursuant to a particularized assessment of the authorizing statute, that: (1) the defendant completely exceeded its statutory authority, resulting in a nuisance; or (2) the defendant was negligent in carrying out its statutory authority, resulting in a qualified nuisance. In the present case, the city of Thompson Falls was statutorily authorized to construct the city's storm and sewer drain system, which Barnes alleged to be a nuisance. Given a verdict of no negligence, the city was not negligent in its operation or maintenance of the storm drain behind Barnes's duplex and thus would not have been liable for a qualified nuisance because of the incidental flooding of Barnes's property. Therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing Barnes's proposed instructions on nuisance because the instructions constituted a misstatement of the law. Barnes v. Thompson Falls, 1999 MT 77, 294 M 76, 979 P2d 1275, 56 St. Rep. 321 (1999), citing 58 Am. Jur. 2d Nuisances § 9 and 66 C.J.S. Nuisances §§ 3, 5. The Barnes criteria for consideration of unequivocal legislative intent and whether a defendant's activity falls outside statutory authority were applied to shooting ranges in Tally Bissell Neighbors, Inc. v. Eyrie Shotgun Ranch, LLC, 2010 MT 63, 355 Mont. 387, 228 P.3d 1134.

Remedy for Criminal Prosecution of Public Nuisance: Panasuk, convicted in City Court of misdemeanor criminal public nuisance charges under 45-8-111, contended that because 3-10-301, 25-31-102, and former Rule 4(B), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), preclude a nonrecord court from hearing actions involving the title to or possession of real property, jurisdiction for prosecution of the public nuisance charge must lie with the District Court. He cited 45-8-112 as authority that any action to abate a nuisance must be brought in the name of the state and that because abatement is a form of injunctive relief, the District Court has exclusive jurisdiction. He also argued that this section provides the exclusive civil and criminal remedies for public nuisance. His claims were dismissed for the following reasons: (1) charges filed under 45-8-111 were criminal rather than related to a civil action involving title to or possession of real property, which is regulated by the sections cited by Panasuk; (2) the remedy created by this section has been supplemented by subsequent legislative action regarding a City Court's jurisdiction over misdemeanors and by the enactment of 46-17-101, which requires that all prosecutions brought in City Court be commenced by a sworn complaint; and (3) because Panasuk's interpretation would result in a direct contradiction between this section and statutes subsequently enacted, the argument that this section provides the exclusive remedies for public nuisance is erroneous. Billings v. Panasuk, 253 M 403, 833 P2d 1050, 49 St. Rep. 499 (1992).

Nuisance Action — Contributory Negligence as Defense: The Supreme Court cited 58 Am. Jur. 2d Nuisances 221 in holding that contributory negligence can be a defense in a nuisance action. Wilhelm v. Great Falls, 225 M 251, 732 P2d 1315, 44 St. Rep. 211 (1987), clarified, with regard to the distinction between an absolute nuisance and a qualified nuisance, in Barnes v. Thompson Falls, 1999 MT 77, 294 M 76, 979 P2d 1275, 56 St. Rep. 321 (1999).

Petition for Mandamus Premature Remedy: The plaintiffs' petition for mandamus to compel public officers to declare property adjacent to plaintiffs' a public nuisance and abate same was premature, as the plaintiffs failed to show they had asked officers to abate the alleged nuisance before filing petition for a Writ of Mandamus. Generally, before mandamus will issue to a public officer, a demand for performance of the act sought to be compelled is required. Liebman v. Brunell, 212 M 459, 689 P2d 248, 41 St. Rep. 1863 (1984).

Operation and Effect: The Attorney General has power, by injunction, to obtain the suppression of a bawdyhouse as a nuisance. State ex rel. Ford v. Young, 54 M 401, 170 P 947 (1918), explained in St. v. P.S.C., 129 M 106, 283 P2d 594 (1955).

Case Notes

Chicken-Raising Business: Chicken-raising business did not constitute a nuisance where defendants kept their property clean and conducted their enterprise in a reasonable and proper manner, none of structures or chickens or use thereof had damaged the plaintiff or the neighborhood, and structures did not constitute a fire hazard. McCollum v. Kolokotronis, 131 M 438, 311 P2d 780 (1957).

Special Damage: Where owner of tourist camp sought to have chicken-raising business on nearby property declared a public nuisance and abated, it was incumbent upon the owner to prove special damage, in other words, damage distinct from that unto the public at large. McCollum v. Kolokotronis, 131 M 438, 311 P2d 780 (1957).

Obstructing Streets: Complaint by owners of residential property on streets facing a lake against a lumber company which had caused large quantities of lumber to be piled across the street ends and along the lakefront between high and low watermark, thus cutting off access to the lake, alleging that defendant's acts made their property less desirable and less valuable for residential purposes, prevented them from reaching the water's edge, etc., stated a cause of action. Faucett v. Dewey Lumber Co., 82 M 250, 266 P 646 (1928).

Operation and Effect: Since private person may maintain action for public nuisance if it is specially injurious to himself, fact that conduct constituted public nuisance did not defeat right to injunction. Iverson v. Dilno, 44 M 270, 119 P 719 (1911).

27-30-204. Abatement of public nuisance by public body or officer or injured party.

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Case Notes

Administrative Remedy Exhaustion: Fact that nonconforming signs are defined as public nuisances does not per se authorize County Attorney to abate in circumvention of administrative remedies within Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) because judicial relief may not be sought until administrative remedies provided by statute have first been exhausted. State ex rel. Jones v. Giles, 168 M 130, 541 P2d 355 (1975).

Operation and Effect as to Private Person:

The right given a person by this section to abate a nuisance which is especially injurious to him may be exercised "only under those circumstances which necessity indulges in cases of extremity or great emergency wherein the ordinary remedy by legal proceedings is ineffectual". Quong v. McEvoy, 70 M 99, 224 P 266 (1924).

In absence of provision in lease requiring tenant to keep premises in condition fit for occupation, landlord has duty to do so, and where by his failure in that respect a nuisance is created, its presence is not a justification for evicting the tenant on theory that the nuisance is thereby being abated. Quong v. McEvoy, 70 M 99, 224 P 266 (1924).

Part 3

Private Nuisances

27-30-301. Remedies for private nuisances.

Case Notes

Classification of Nuisances — Per Se or Per Accidens — Absolute or Qualified: A nuisance action may be based upon conduct of a defendant that is either intentional, negligent, reckless, or ultrahazardous. Thus, negligence is merely one type of conduct upon which liability for nuisance may be based. In general, a nuisance may be classified as either a nuisance per se or at law or as a nuisance per accidens or in fact. A nuisance per se is an inherently injurious act, occupation, or structure that is a nuisance at all times and under any circumstances, without regard to location or surroundings. A nuisance per accidens is one that becomes a nuisance by virtue of circumstances and surroundings. In turn, nuisances may be classified as either absolute or qualified. An absolute nuisance, similar to a nuisance per se, is a nuisance the substance of which is not negligence and that obviously exposes a person to probable injury. A qualified nuisance is a nuisance dependent on negligence that consists of anything done lawfully but so negligently or carelessly done or permitted as to create a potential and unreasonable risk of harm, which in due course results in injury to another. When determining how a plaintiff can bring a nuisance action against a defendant who is engaged in a statutorily authorized endeavor, when 27-30-101(2) indicates that authorized activities may not be considered a nuisance, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff must show, pursuant to a particularized assessment of the authorizing statute, that: (1) the defendant completely exceeded its statutory authority, resulting in a nuisance; or (2) the defendant was negligent in carrying out its statutory authority, resulting in a qualified nuisance. In the present case, the city of Thompson Falls was statutorily authorized to construct the city's storm and sewer drain system, which Barnes alleged to be a nuisance. Given a verdict of no negligence, the city was not negligent in its operation or maintenance of the storm drain behind Barnes's duplex and thus would not have been liable for a qualified nuisance because of the incidental flooding of Barnes's property. Therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing Barnes's proposed instructions on nuisance because the instructions constituted a misstatement of the law. Barnes v. Thompson Falls, 1999 MT 77, 294 M 76, 979 P2d 1275, 56 St. Rep. 321 (1999), citing 58 Am. Jur. 2d Nuisances § 9 and 66 C.J.S. Nuisances §§ 3, 5. The Barnes criteria for consideration of unequivocal legislative intent and whether a defendant's activity falls outside statutory authority were applied to shooting ranges in Tally Bissell Neighbors, Inc. v. Eyrie Shotgun Ranch, LLC, 2010 MT 63, 355 Mont. 387, 228 P.3d 1134.

Nuisance Action — Contributory Negligence as Defense: The Supreme Court cited 58 Am. Jur. 2d Nuisances 221 in holding that contributory negligence can be a defense in a nuisance action. Wilhelm v. Great Falls, 225 M 251, 732 P2d 1315, 44 St. Rep. 211 (1987), clarified, with regard to the distinction between an absolute nuisance and a qualified nuisance, in Barnes v. Thompson Falls, 1999 MT 77, 294 M 76, 979 P2d 1275, 56 St. Rep. 321 (1999).

Action Within Reasonable Time: One seeking to abate a private nuisance must act within reasonable time, since court of equity will refuse its aid where the complainant has slept upon his rights for a considerable time by acquiescing in the alleged nuisance. Gibbs v. Gardner, 107 M 76, 80 P2d 370 (1938).

Maintenance of Headgate in Ditch: In action to enjoin owner of water right in ditch from operating a headgate in the ditch in an unlawful manner and to abate a nuisance resulting therefrom, owner had acquired a prescriptive right in headgate's use by virtue of his use of headgate in like manner since 1911, and plaintiff lost his right to relief through laches. Gibbs v. Gardner, 107 M 76, 80 P2d 370 (1938).

Case Notes

Reasonable Notice: There can be no question but that in the ordinary case of this nature, a 5- to 10-day notice given a local resident would be “reasonable”; it is the usual time fixed in orders to show cause and the only requirement in this state as to notice for the abatement of any nuisance is that the notice be reasonable. State ex rel. Brooks v. Cook, 84 M 478, 276 P 958 (1929).

Sewer as Nuisance — Sufficiency of Complaint: Complaint alleging facts sufficient to show that sewer was a nuisance, that it was maintained by defendant city to plaintiff's detriment, that plaintiff was compelled to abate it, and that amount expended by him was reasonable, stated a cause of action for recovery of expenditures. The second count, seeking recovery of property damage, was insufficient. Murray v. Butte, 35 M 161, 88 P 789 (1907).

CHAPTER 31 CHANGE OF NAME

Chapter Case Notes

Statute Not so Rigid as to Preclude Expression of Consent: The mother sought to have her children's surname changed to that of the stepfather, which was granted. The biological father sought to have the judgment set aside, arguing that the children had not signed the petition as required under 27-31-101. The Supreme Court held that although the formal requirements of 27-31-101 require the children to sign the name change petition, that requirement is not so rigid as to preclude a reliable expression of consent, which the children manifested. Tucker v. Tucker, 2014 MT 115, 375 Mont. 24, 326 P.3d 413.

Use of Mother's Surname in Best Interests of Child: The selection of a child's surname is a matter of choice, not law, and in determining whether to change a child's surname, a District Court must be guided by a child's best interests. In this case, the court correctly applied the best interests of the child standard in a nonsexist, nonpaternalistic manner, focusing on the child's interests rather than the wishes of a parent, such as the father's desire that his surname be carried on into future generations, in determining that the child would best carry the mother's surname. In re Custody of J.C.O., 1999 MT 325, 297 M 327, 993 P2d 667, 56 St. Rep. 1298 (1999).

Consideration of Child's Best Interests in Name Change — Parental Interest in Child: Mother and father were not married at the time a child was born, but as the result of a promise to marry, mother gave the child the father's surname. When the engagement subsequently fell through, mother sought to change the child's name to the maternal surname. The District Court properly found a change of name was not in the child's best interests in light of father's acknowledged paternity, his provision of regular child support, and his efforts to gain visitation rights. In re Petition for Change of Name of Iverson, 241 M 140, 786 P2d 1, 47 St. Rep. 146 (1990), followed in In re Custody of J.C.O., 1999 MT 325, 297 M 327, 993 P2d 667, 56 St. Rep. 1298 (1999).

Statutes in Aid of Common Law: Title 27, ch. 31, parts 1 and 2, are in affirmance and aid of common law and do not abrogate it. In re the Marriage of Firman, 187 M 465, 610 P2d 178 (1980).

Use of Father's Surname in Best Interest of Child: The District Court erred in allowing the children to use the surname of their stepfather. Under the circumstances presented, it is in the best interest of the children to use the father's surname until the children reach an age when they can fully understand the circumstances of their parents' dissolution. In re the Marriage of Firman, 187 M 465, 610 P2d 178 (1980), followed, in deciding that use of the mother's surname was in the child's best interests, in In re Custody of J.C.O., 1999 MT 325, 297 M 327, 993 P2d 667, 56 St. Rep. 1298 (1999).

Changing Child's Name to Father's After Divorce: After divorcing child's father, mother gave birth to the child and gave it mother's last name. It was not a violation of Art. II, sec. 4, Mont. Const., for court to order the child's last name to be changed to that of the father. The findings and conclusions did not state the husband had any preference or natural right to have the child bear his name; they stressed the best interests of the child, and the child's best interests did not involve the equality of the sexes in this instance. Overton v. Overton, 207 M 292, 674 P2d 1089, 40 St. Rep. 2047 (1983). See also In re Custody of J.C.O., 1999 MT 325, 297 M 327, 993 P2d 667, 56 St. Rep. 1298 (1999).

Effective Date: Section 8, Ch. 276, L. 2021, provided: “[This act] is effective on passage and approval.” Approved April 22, 2021.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 276, L. 2021, provided: “WHEREAS, in Employment Division v. Smith, 494 U.S. 872 (1990), the United States Supreme Court significantly curtailed the requirement that laws and other state action burdening the free exercise of religion be justified by a compelling interest; and

WHEREAS, Gonzales v. O Centro Espirita Beneficente Uniao do Vegetal, 546 U.S. 418 (2006), interprets the Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993, which requires that federal laws and other actions by the federal government burdening the free exercise of religion must be justified by a compelling governmental interest; and

WHEREAS, the Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993 was passed in response to the Employment Division v. Smith decision and only applies to federal laws; and

WHEREAS, following the Gonzales decision favorably applying the Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993, many states have responded by passing laws similar to this act.”

Severability: Section 7, Ch. 276, L. 2021, was a severability clause.
